7. In the course of an article headed "New Chains," the Hindusthán refers to the order recently issued by the Government of Madras, prohibiting students from taking part in political meetings and discussions of an objectionable character, and remarks:—What epithets should be applied to this order depends upon the discretion of the public. Truly, this order is nothing but hasty and unjust. No sane man will say that students should be allowed to waste their time in taking part in unprofitable movements; but an order prohibiting participation in political discussions should be placed in a different category altogether. It is doubtful if the Madras Government have carefully considered the matter before issuing this order. It is the guardians who are the proper persons to take care of the character of the students, and the responsibility of shaping their character rests with them. Orders like the one above referred to, instead of accomplishing the object Government have in view, only lead to undesirable results. In the present condition of things in India a student who keeps aloof from political movements can never make a good citizen. The sentiments expressed by His Excellency Lord Chelmsford in the course of his Calcutta University Convocation address and the advice he gave to students to try to become useful citizens, seem to have escaped the notice of the Madras Government. Every student has a right to take part in political discussions, meetings and movements of an unexceptionable character and the Madras Government have no right to interfere with it. It is not an act of great wisdom to transform educational departments and universities into detective departments. [The Praja Mitra and Parsi, on the other hand, writes in justification of the Madras Government's order. It remarks that those who consider this subject in a dispassionate manner and from the view point of students' welfare will have no cause to complain against the order in question. The paper, however, believes that the order is defective inasmuch as no provision is made for starting debating societies in High Schools and Colleges, as is being done in other civilized countries, where students can take part in the discussion of current public questions and can be thus saved from the perils of participating in mischievous political propaganda. It hopes that Government will soon take steps to remedy this defect.]

Kesari (92), 15th May.

8. To deny the students political education and to prohibit them from attending political meetings is to starve them in all ways. We have discussed the question on many an occasion. People thought that the Madras Government would not trouble themselves about it after the experience of the Risley Circular, but the bureaucracy does not care to learn any lesson from the past experience of others. Students may enter grogshops, they may witness tamashas, but they should not attend political meetings. This is a curious example of moral education. Many Civil Servants do not want political agitation and they are absolutely against the Home Rule agitation. These bureaucrats will uphold the 'freedom of drinking', but they will have nothing to do with the liberty of the people, and if possible they will prohibit others from having anything to do with it. There is no doubt that students will acquire indirectly the knowledge denied to them by the bureaucracy; for in the end, the prohibition will come to nothing! We warn the Madras Government that the political health of the students will be impaired by the ill-digested opinions acquired stealthily by them.

A plea for the revival of village Panchayats.
Sandesh (100), 19th May.

9. In the course of a long article the Sandesh remarks that although the British Government has infused new life into India and has created a yearning for popular government it has practically obliterated the Village Punchayat system which was the basis of all political, social and economic progress. Indians, it says, have secured admission into the Executive Councils and have even been able of late to make their voice heard in the councils of the Empire. The paper considers these reforms incapable of being appreciated by the masses, although eminently satisfactory in themselves, and it pleads, therefore, for the revival of the defunct Village Punchayat system.

Application of the term Mlechcha to the Moslem religion in a Gujarati publication.
Political Bhomiyo (65), 4th and 5th May.

10. Under the heading "Advocates of Swarājya and Mlechhas (infidels)" the Political Bhomiyo publishes a letter from a Moslem correspondent in which the writer takes exception to the term Mlechha having been applied to Islam in a book entitled "Chhatrapati Rajaram" being one of the Cheap Reading Series published by Mr. Dayabhai Ramchandra Mehta. He observes that writings such as these cannot but excite Moslem feelings. Is the object aimed at in publishing these Cheap books, inquires the correspondent, to degrade the Muhammadans and create bad blood between community and community? He observes that when terms like Yavan and Mlechcha are applied to the Muhammadans now, the latter pause to consider what men of the community of the author of the book in question would not do to harass the Muhammadans if they secured Swarājya and enjoyed the ruling power. He asks the author and men of his ways of thinking to let the Muhammadans alone, for, observes he, once the latter are enraged they will be difficult to control and in that case the consequences might be far from desirable. [Elsewhere in the same issue the paper publishes a contribution from one "Sayalakar", a Hindu correspondent, in which the writer deprecates with reference to the same book the use of the term Mlechha in connection with Muhammadans as, in his view, it is likely to wound Moslem feelings. He remarks that at a time like the present when the Indians are busy making appeals for the grant of Swarájya and advocating national unity writings which are calculated to wound the religious feelings of others tend to prove detrimental to public harmony. A supplement to the paper dated the 5th instant, however, contains an explanation of the publisher of the Cheap Reading series wherein he writes to say that by the term Mlechha Dharma he only means an alien religion, that while going through the manuscript the term escaped his notice through oversight, that he never meant, nor does he now mean, to injure the feelings of the Muhammadans and that he is sorry if their feelings have actually been hurt. He further promises that he will strike out the objectionable word from the copies of the book remaining unsold with him and that he will also expunge it from future editions. The Editor of the Political Bhomiyo expresses his gratification at the above explanation and remarks that after this there remains no cause for anybody to be dissatisfied.]

Comments on His Highness the Maharaja of Bikaner's letter to the London Times on India's future.

Bombay Samáchár (53), 16th May; Sánj Vartamán (28), 14th May; Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 14th May; Jám-e-Jamshed (19), 14th May; Dnyán Prakásh (33), 15th May.

11. The Bombay Samáchár expresses, at great length, its appreciation of the letter written by His Highness the Maharaja of Bikanir to The Times and believes it will be a good rejoinder to the hasty criticisms passed by certain newspapers on the Maharaja's recent pronouncement to the effect that India was not fit for full self-government, and that it will convince them that he is in full sympathy with the aims and aspirations of the Congress. The paper lays special stress on the suggestion made by the Maharaja for the early grant of some measure of political reform to India and expresses a hope that British statesmen will now see their way to make an early instalment of political reforms on the lines suggested by the non-official members of the Viceregal Legislative Council. [The Sánj Vartamán is of opinion that the Maharaja has rendered valuable service to India by giving a clear idea of the aims and aspirations of the Indian people to the British public. The Praja Mitra and Pársi expresses its gratification at the Maharaja's openly identifying himself with the aspirations of the Congress and the Moslem League and expresses a hope that British statesmen will not fail to be prompt in giving some measure of political reform to India in a broad and ungrudging spirit. The Jám-e-Jamshed endorses the Maharaja's suggestion for an authoritative declaration with regard to British policy in India and hopes that the authorities will act in accordance with all the suggestions embodied in His Highness' letter to the Times. The Dnyán Prakásh writes:—Our detractors say that the fad of swarájya is confined to the educated classes and that the rest of the population keeps aloof from the movement. His Highness' speeches and particularly his letter to the Times furnish an effective reply to this assertion. No one can accuse His Highness of being an agitator, nor can it be said that he has lost the balance of his mind by reading Burke and Milton. His Highness cannot be called an irresponsible critic, an epithet usually applied to men who criticise the actions of the authorities. Like other popular leaders he only calls for an immediate declaration of the policy to be adopted towards India. Who would disagree with His Highness that over-cautiousness in this respect is as bad as undue haste?

Young India (10), 16th May.

12. "We believe the statement which His Highness the Maharaja of Bikaner is reported to have communicated to the Times is intended to clear the misunderstandings and misconceptions which exist in this country in regard to His Highness' views. We had thought that the Maharaja's views had suffered considerably by Reuter's genius for reporting or misreporting. The views which were attributed to him in his Manchester and London speeches were otherwise so difficult to reconcile with those to which he had given expression in Bombay at the Taj Mahal Banquet. The statement which is now made comes as a great relief and will be welcomed by the people in this country.......... We are glad that the Maharaja has taken the earliest opportunity of clearing the misunderstanding to which the singularly ill-digested report of Reuter had given rise in the minds of many of his sincere well-wishers in this country."

How India will lose on account of having representation on the Imperial Conference.
New Times (New), 8th May.

13. "The exact powers of the Imperial Cabinet have not been strictly defined, but it is not difficult to see that whatever its theoretical powers be, such a powerful and authoritative body, backed as it is by such an overwhelming body of public opinion in the white portions of the Empire, its recommendations will have almost the validity of the laws of an all-powerful legislature. So far as India is concerned, we cannot but view this prospect with serious misgivings.......... Nominated as the present Indian delegates have been, by the all-powerful Secretary of State, to perform the harmless function of advising and assisting him in 'representing' Indian interests, no one can seriously regard them as genuine representatives of the life and interests of India. It still remains to be seen whether the Secretary of State and the Dominion Premiers will treat India fairly when it has no real representatives of its own amongst them. Experience up to this time has not tended to encourage belief in this direction. Beyond some polite platitudes on the part of the Dominion delegates expressing pleasure at the participation of India we have not heard anything of the nature of a redress of the innumerable Imperial grievances of India. It might have been expected that in a fit of Imperial enthusiasm, the Imperial Cabinet would have removed some of the disabilities under which Indians suffer in the Colonies, but we are not aware that such a generous measure has been contemplated. Without a satisfactory measure of self-government and effective guarantees of genuine representation, India will look very much like a poor dependent invited to swell the marriage procession of a rich personage. Without any equivalent advantage it will be faced with that Colonial domination against which the whole of India has protested."

Comments of His Highness the Maharaja of Bikanir's speech at the Empire Parliamentary Association's luncheon.
Kesari (92), 15th May.

14. Discussing the Maharaja of Bikanir's speech at the luncheon given in his honour by the Empire Parliamentary Association, the Kesari says :—How will the British public realise the nice point involved in the fact that the Maharaja of Bikanir is a nominated member and that he voices the opinions of Government and that he has no right to give out anything as the opinion of the people? It is but in consonance with the wisdom of Government that they should try to gain their ends by making the Maharaja confess that India is not hungering for swarájya and that it will remain contented with mere crumbs. But we do not know how to characterise the wisdom of the Congress that has not yet sent a single representative to lay before the British public its demands though four months have elapsed since the acceptance of the swarájya resolution by the Lucknow Congress. We cannot make out how the Government of India may send a despatch on Indian Reforms even during war-time and how propriety is offended only if the Congress sends a deputation to England and informs the public that India will not be satisfied except with swarájya. The English people may be deep in cares, but confusion does not reign in their minds. They may be engrossed in thought, but they have not become irrational. They have not lost their selfish instinct because they are thinking about the welfare of others. Though their tongue is wagging freely about gratitude for India's help, they never commit the mistake even once of saying anything about the grant of swarájya to India. It is but natural for the Maharaja to speak against Indian swarájya. Our Indian Chiefs, to speak the truth, are younger brothers of the Tsar. They have not yet forgotten the old doctrine of the divine character of rulers.

Unfortunately the British Government has followed a policy regarding them that confirms them in their views. We do not know whether Government have kept them from giving any rights to their subjects, on the principle that though you may keep your own house clean, it does not matter if there is a dung heap near about as it would be useful to throw your rubbish on. Government are forced unwillingly to allow some liberties to the people because of the persistence of British Indian subjects and of public opinion in England. Hence they are not enthusiastic about getting things done by others which they themselves allow unwillingly. Indian Chiefs are born amidst traditions of absolute government and they are not controlled by public opinion or by Government. It is not surprising therefore that the freedom of the people in the States is lagging behind that allowed to British subjects. We have to protest against the Chiefs when they repress not only the liberties of their own subjects but also try to hold down the freedom of British subjects. When the Maharaja said the other day that the time for granting swarájya to India had not yet come, it was an uncalled-for interference with things that do not concern him. If Indians are not fit for swarájya how is the Maharaja fit to rule over lakhs of people and to conduct the administration of his State? We both have sprung from the same mine. Just as he gained in capacity by experience, why cannot the British subjects become fit by experience? But how can they get the experience if they are not given the opportunity? Like Government, the Chiefs have gathered all power in their own hands. These are the Bourbons, Romanoffs and Hohenzollerns of India. The eyes of the Chiefs are not opened by Government; their subjects are unable to open them. No wonder then that even an educated Chief like the Maharaja of Bikanir should decline to give a certificate of fitness for swarájya to the Indian people.

Reflections on the Revolution in Russia and the political changes that must take place in the Empire and in India after the war.

Gujaráti (12), 13th May.

15. The whole world is subject to the law of change and the British Empire cannot possibly escape its operation. With what ovations was the news of the Russian Revolution received by the British public as a triumph of the principles of justice and equality! If, according to Lord Chelmsford's views, such wonderful political changes are harmful, he should warn the British public against expressing their delight at such revolutions! Those who ask Indians to keep quiet should bear in mind that the Indians do not fail to institute a comparison between the attitude of British public leaders and their opinions on the current world events and the treatment meted out to the Indians. In spite of all that may be said to the contrary, India will not fail to be influenced by the spirit of change that has come over the British Empire. The Prime Minister is prepared to give the go-bye to the old ideals and principles. But will the Anglo-Indian officials still continue to cling to antiquated superstitions and principles? Certainly not. When the officials cease to wield the powers they at present enjoy, the unfitness of Indians for Swarajya will disappear......... While the Czar has been dethroned in Russia England has deposed from authority ministers who followed the old and worn out paths and has thrown overboard old theories, broken assunder the hide-bound rules of custom and has betaken herself to new paths. Just as uncertainty prevails in the matter of the form the Russian Government will assume, no one can guess what shape political reform will take in the British Empire. But some change will certainly take place in the Government of India with the reorganisation of the Empire and matters will be looked at through new glasses. What the Indians want is not an efficient government or good government; they do not want government by officials; they want government by Indians, government in the interest of India and government responsible to the Indians. If political changes are effected in India on the lines indicated above India's ties with the Empire will be strengthened and its loyalty to the Throne will be intensified, its love for England will increase and its admiration for her principles of justice and equality will be stimulated.

16. Commenting upon rumours of a separate peace by Russia, the Gujarati writes:—The Czar was not deposed for bringing the war to a close. The socialists in Russia and Germany may prate about peace, but it is not in their power to make one. Germany might be willing to restore Poland to Russia in order to curtail her battle front but Russia would not get any special advantage by it. Russia wants the Dardanelles and Constantinople and it is not likely that Germany would induce Turkey to concede them. Russia is not likely to make peace at present, but at the same time it will not be able to prosecute the war vigorously owing to its unstable domestic condition. Perhaps there will be a grand conflagration in Russia like the one that occurred in France about one hundred and twenty-five years ago owing to the high-handedness of those in authority. There is some probability of the provisional Government of Russia being tempted by advantageous terms to conclude peace, for in that case it would be able to gain popularity. [The Gujarati Punch considers it a pity that Russia should be internally divided at a time when a supreme effort is required on her part to face the threatened German advance towards Petrograd and when the Allies are about to inflict a defeat upon the enemy. The Hindusthán writes:—The fear expressed in certain quarters about Russia making a separate peace has no foundation. Russia will carefully consider the question before taking any step in the direction of peace. Circumstances, however, lead us to believe that there is a great probability of peace conditions being restored at an early date. The message sent by the Socialists in Russia to those in Germany leads Praja Mitra and Parsi to believe that German machinations have achieved some measure of success in Russia and it expresses a hope that Russia will be able to see through the deceit of the enemy and frustrate its nefarious plans. In the subsequent issue the paper regards the resignations of the Russian War Minister and Foreign Minister as an ominous sign of Russia being led to conclude a separate peace with Germany.]

Will Russia make a separate peace?
Gujaráti (12), 13th May; Gujaráti Punch (14), 13th May; Hindusthán (16), 17th May; Prajá Mitra and Pársi (25), 17th and 18th May.

17. "It is nothing short of a tragedy that even England—and England under a democratic leader like Mr. Lloyd Geroge—should see her liberty restrained and checked. It seems almost inconceivable that such well-known and respectable journals like the Cambridge Magazine and the Nation should be attacked by the Government, simply because in these days of deadened thought they have had the courage of their conviction, and ventured to speak out what appeared true to them in a bold and fearless manner. We cannot say that the reputation of Mr. Lloyd George has at all been enhanced by these measures which would have been worthy of Prince Bismarck or Lord Curzon. It speaks volumes for the spirit of English freedom that Englishmen of various creeds and classes still exist who have had the strength of character to protest against an abuse of power."

Comments on the action taken against the Cambridge Magazine and the Nation.
Kaiser-i-Hind (20), 20th May, Eng. cols.

18. A thorny hedge is no doubt troublesome to others, but sometimes the owner himself is its victim and then it makes him bleed too. Once the thorns of repression are spread there is no knowing whom they will pierce. Many Englishmen had no exact idea of the sufferings of Indians under the action of the Press Act and the Defence Act. As if to give them a taste of repression the Defence of the Realm Act was ushered into existence in England. However well framed a law may be, if its execution depends not on evidence tested in the law courts but on the will of the officials, it is bound to tend towards repression. The Nation has been asked to stop its foreign circulation under the Defence of the Realm Act. In one way what is happening is for the best. Unless the repressive laws turn against the framers their days will not be numbered. [The Dnyán Prakásh writes:—Generally Indians respect very much the Nation and they are grateful to it for its advocacy of the proper rights of Indians. It is our misfortune that many articles in the Nation other than those on war that are conducive to the spread of the ideas of equality and liberty should be prohibited here because its criticism of the conduct of the war has been considered to be improper. The prohibition is not surely in keeping with the love of freedom of the English officials.]

Kesari (92), 15th May; Dnyán Prakásh (33), 18th May.

Unfortunately the British Government has followed a policy regarding them that confirms them in their views. We do not know whether Government have kept them from giving any rights to their subjects, on the principle that though you may keep your own house clean, it does not matter if there is a dung heap near about as it would be useful to throw your rubbish on. Government are forced unwillingly to allow some liberties to the people because of the persistence of British Indian subjects and of public opinion in England. Hence they are not enthusiastic about getting things done by others which they themselves allow unwillingly. Indian Chiefs are born amidst traditions of absolute government and they are not controlled by public opinion or by Government. It is not surprising therefore that the freedom of the people in the States is lagging behind that allowed to British subjects. We have to protest against the Chiefs when they repress not only the liberties of their own subjects but also try to hold down the freedom of British subjects. When the Maharaja said the other day that the time for granting swarájya to India had not yet come, it was an uncalled-for interference with things that do not concern him. If Indians are not fit for swarájya how is the Maharaja fit to rule over lakhs of people and to conduct the administration of his State? We both have sprung from the same mine. Just as he gained in capacity by experience, why cannot the British subjects become fit by experience? But how can they get the experience if they are not given the opportunity? Like Government, the Chiefs have gathered all power in their own hands. These are the Bourbons, Romanoffs and Hohenzollerns of India. The eyes of the Chiefs are not opened by Government; their subjects are unable to open them. No wonder then that even an educated Chief like the Maharaja of Bikanir should decline to give a certificate of fitness for swarájya to the Indian people.

Reflections on the Revolution in Russia and the political changes that must take place in the Empire and in India after the war.

Gujaráti (12), 13th May.

15. The whole world is subject to the law of change and the British Empire cannot possibly escape its operation. With what ovations was the news of the Russian Revolution received by the British public as a triumph of the principles of justice and equality! If, according to Lord Chelmsford's views, such wonderful political changes are harmful, he should warn the British public against expressing their delight at such revolutions! Those who ask Indians to keep quiet should bear in mind that the Indians do not fail to institute a comparison between the attitude of British public leaders and their opinions on the current world events and the treatment meted out to the Indians. In spite of all that may be said to the contrary, India will not fail to be influenced by the spirit of change that has come over the British Empire. The Prime Minister is prepared to give the go-bye to the old ideals and principles. But will the Anglo-Indian officials still continue to cling to antiquated superstitions and principles? Certainly not. When the officials cease to wield the powers they at present enjoy, the unfitness of Indians for Swarajya will disappear......... While the Czar has been dethroned in Russia England has deposed from authority ministers who followed the old and worn out paths and has thrown overboard old theories, broken assunder the hide-bound rules of custom and has betaken herself to new paths. Just as uncertainty prevails in the matter of the form the Russian Government will assume, no one can guess what shape political reform will take in the British Empire. But some change will certainly take place in the Government of India with the reorganisation of the Empire and matters will be looked at through new glasses. What the Indians want is not an efficient government or good government; they do not want government by officials; they want government by Indians, government in the interest of India and government responsible to the Indians. If political changes are effected in India on the lines indicated above India's ties with the Empire will be strengthened and its loyalty to the Throne will be intensified, its love for England will increase and its admiration for her principles of justice and equality will be stimulated.

Will Russia make a separate peace?

Gujarâti (12), 13th May; Gujarâti Punch (14), 13th May; Hindusthân (16), 17th May; Prajâ Mitra and Pârsi (25), 17th and 18th May.

16. Commenting upon rumours of a separate peace by Russia, the Gujarâti writes:—The Czar was not deposed for bringing the war to a close. The socialists in Russia and Germany may prate about peace, but it is not in their power to make one. Germany might be willing to restore Poland to Russia in order to curtail her battle front but Russia would not get any special advantage by it. Russia wants the Dardanelles and Constantinople and it is not likely that Germany would induce Turkey to concede them. Russia is not likely to make peace at present, but at the same time it will not be able to prosecute the war vigorously owing to its unstable domestic condition. Perhaps there will be a grand conflagration in Russia like the one that occurred in France about one hundred and twenty-five years ago owing to the high-handedness of those in authority. There is some probability of the provisional Government of Russia being tempted by advantageous terms to conclude peace, for in that case it would be able to gain popularity. [The Gujarâti Punch considers it a pity that Russia should be internally divided at a time when a supreme effort is required on her part to face the threatened German advance towards Petrograd and when the Allies are about to inflict a defeat upon the enemy. The Hindusthân writes:—The fear expressed in certain quarters about Russia making a separate peace has no foundation. Russia will carefully consider the question before taking any step in the direction of peace. Circumstances, however, lead us to believe that there is a great probability of peace conditions being restored at an early date. The message sent by the Socialists in Russia to those in Germany leads Prajâ Mitra and Pârsi to believe that German machinations have achieved some measure of success in Russia and it expresses a hope that Russia will be able to see through the deceit of the enemy and frustrate its nefarious plans. In the subsequent issue the paper regards the resignations of the Russian War Minister and Foreign Minister as an ominous sign of Russia being led to conclude a separate peace with Germany.]

Comments on the action taken against the Cambridge Magazine and the Nation.

Kaiser-i-Hind (20), 20th May, Eng. cols.

17. "It is nothing short of a tragedy that even England—and England under a democratic leader like Mr. Lloyd Geroge—should see her liberty restrained and checked. It seems almost inconceivable that such well-known and respectable journals like the Cambridge Magazine and the Nation should be attacked by the Government, simply because in these days of deadened thought they have had the courage of their conviction, and ventured to speak out what appeared true to them in a bold and fearless manner. We cannot say that the reputation of Mr. Lloyd George has at all been enhanced by these measures which would have been worthy of Prince Bismarck or Lord Curzon. It speaks volumes for the spirit of English freedom that Englishmen of various creeds and classes still exist who have had the strength of character to protest against an abuse of power."

Kesari (92), 15th May; Dnyân Prakâsh (33), 18th May.

18. A thorny hedge is no doubt troublesome to others, but sometimes the owner himself is its victim and then it makes him bleed too. Once the thorns of repression are spread there is no knowing whom they will pierce. Many Englishmen had no exact idea of the sufferings of Indians under the action of the Press Act and the Defence Act. As if to give them a taste of repression the Defence of the Realm Act was ushered into existence in England. However well framed a law may be, if its execution depends not on evidence tested in the law courts but on the will of the officials, it is bound to tend towards repression. The Nation has been asked to stop its foreign circulation under the Defence of the Realm Act. In one way what is happening is for the best. Unless the repressive laws turn against the framers their days will not be numbered. [The Dnyân Prakâsh writes:—Generally Indians respect very much the Nation and they are grateful to it for its advocacy of the proper rights of Indians. It is our misfortune that many articles in the Nation other than those on war that are conducive to the spread of the ideas of equality and liberty should be prohibited here because its criticism of the conduct of the war has been considered to be improper. The prohibition is not surely in keeping with the love of freedom of the English officials.]

The rules made under the Indian Defence Force Act.

Young India (10), 16th May.

19. "The rules which have been framed under the Act are an overwhelming testimony to the spirit of jealousy and distrust of the people on the part of bureaucratic officials and Anglo-Indian vested interests. In ordinary circumstances, as the Honourable Mr. Jinnah said at a recent public meeting, we would have spurned the measure with the contempt which it so richly deserves, as an insult offered to the great body of public opinion, now offered in the guise of a great boon. But having regard to the fact that the bureaucracy is interested in keeping us out of the Defence Force, it is and ought to be our aim to baffle its desires and this aim cannot be better achieved than by enlisting forthwith in the Defence Force. We trust that the leaders will take serious note of the suggestion which has been so widely made and enable deserving young men to join the Foce by helping them, whenever they deserve, financially and otherwise."

Some reasons why Indians have failed to join the Indian Defence Force.

Gujarâti (12), 20th May, Eng. cols.

*20. Commenting on the Honourable Mr. Sastri's presidential address at the Nasik Conference, the Gujarâti writes:—"We think Mr. Sastri took a somewhat alarming view of the consequences that would ensue from the failure of the Indian people to join the Indian Defence force. We heartily endorse his appeal to young Indians to respond to the call made upon them even under disadvantageous circumstances. But the fact is significant that whilst the whole official world in India has thrown its influence on the side of the Indian War Loan, it has studiously kept itself aloof from the movement for raising Indian units. Whilst Governors and Lieutenant-Governors have presided at meetings for encouraging people to subscribe to the Indian War Loan and made eloquent appeals to them in this behalf, they have done scarcely anything to rouse the same spirit of enthusiasm in favour of the other movement. Besides, Government could have easily modified some of the needless restrictions and obstacles that have been thrown in the way of Indian youths. Moreover, it is no use losing sight of the grave consequences upon national character that have resulted from the unjust policy adopted by Government during the last 75 years with regard to the military training and advancement of the Indian people."

Offer of military service made by Indians should not be spurned.

Message (5), 13th May.

21. "Mr. Chhotu Ram, B.A., LL.B., of Rohtak, begins his note, in a recent issue of the Tribune, as follows:—'The other day an Arya Samajist offered himself for enlistment in the army. He was asked to put off his sacred thread as a condition precedent. He refused to comply with this demand and was rejected in consequence.' If these allegations be true, then it is surely imperative for the bureaucracy to ponder over its actions for a while. It is nothing short of criminal folly to kick out an enthusiastic and loyal subject rushing to the front to serve the King and Country in this time of crisis simply because he has a spiritual reverance for his 'sacred thread'. We suspected this much of mischief long before, when the conditions for service were made known, and lo! it has already begun to work out its wonders. May we, in the name of loyalty to our Emperor, ask what this sort of behaviour means? We hope the Government of India will not be so very insensible to the devout feelings of His Majesty's subjects to allow their offers to be spurned with scorn or trifling excuses."

Appreciation of Her Excellency Lady Willingdon's services in the cause of wounded and disabled soldiers.

Bombay Samâchâr (53), 14th and 19th May.

22. Her Excellency Lady Willingdon has been evincing a very keen interest in the welfare of the people in this Presidency ever since she landed in India and scarcely a day passes in which she does not do some useful and philanthropic work. The good work Lady Willingdon has been doing for the wounded soldiers, both Indian and British, will be written in letters of gold in the annals of history. We would now take this opportunity to express our thanks to Lady Willingdon for the initiative she has taken in the matter of organising a technical school for disabled Indian soldiers which will enable them to earn a livelihood without being a burden to their families. We hope all classes of people will come forward to help the school in the way it deserves and to make it a success. [In a subsequent issue the paper hopes that the appeal made by His Excellency Lord Willingdon for help at the opening of the school will be responded to in a hearty manner by the people.]

Alleged partiality shown in replying to European and Indian telegrams of sympathy sent to His Excellency the Viceroy.

Message (5), 13th May.

23. "Surely, it is calculated to do much harm whenever an impartial administrator looks or seems to look upon two classes of subjects under him with two different eyes. On the 5th May, in the year of dis-grace 1917, Mr. J. H. Abbot, Jhansi, sent a telegram of sympathy to the Private Secretary to the Viceroy asking him to convey on behalf of the 'Domiciled Anglo-Indian Community of India,' to His Excellency, his deepest sympathies in their sad bereavement. To this His Excellency personally replied on the 7th instant as follows, "We are both most grateful for your kind message—Viceroy." But when the Indian Merchants Chamber of Bombay sent a similar message, alas! they got a reply only from His Excellency's Private Secretary, 'Their Excellencies are most grateful for your kind message of sympathy.'"

Comments on the Honourable Mr. Sastri's presidential address at the Násik Provincial Conference.

Young India (10), 16th May.

24. "Mr Sastri's presidential address at Násik was a welcome departure from the oft-trodden path of yore and in every way remarkable for its thorough grasp of the question, clearness of judgment, depth of feeling and passionate patriotism. The main theme of his address was that question of questions which has at the present moment engrossed the deep and abiding interest of all thoughtful Indinas: 'self-government under the British flag, equal partnership in the British Confederation with the United Kingdom and the overseas Dominions.' The last few months have opened altogether new chapters. The old prejudices and the party spirit among English statesmen have been swept away and a better and nobler polity has taken hold of men's minds, under which everyone, however small or humble, is eager to share in the great principles of freedom and opportunity for unhindered self-expression, which are being reconquered at terrible cost to human civilisation. Under this renewed impulse Indians no longer dream but look upon the ultimate issue to-day as a matter of practical politics. The admission of India into the inner Councils of the Empire on terms of perfect equality with the Dominions has revitalised her interest in Imperial affairs and made her heart throb with renewed hope and faith in the statesmanship of the Empire. The practinal recogntion of India's legitimate place in the Empire has lifted the weight of dependency from her fair brows.......... This view of the matter has gained considerable support in the last few days from His Highness the Maharaja of Bikanir, who has endorsed the suggestion of the Times for such a declaration.......... Mr. Sastry has clearly indicated in his address the utter untenability and illogicality of those who advocate 'a position of equality for India in the federation of the Empire, but resist the movement for internal freedom'. The Anglo-Indian bureaucrat who is guilty of this illogicality may not perceive the absurdity and incongruity of telling Indians to grow from top downwards instead of growing in the natural direction of from bottom upwards. On the contrary, Mr. Sastry stated most unequivocally that the self-governing status is almost a sine qua non of India becoming an equal partner in the Empire."

Indu Prakásh (35), 14th May, Eng. cols.

25. "No man—not even the writer of "Indian Unrest"—could manage now to believe implicitly and to preach dogmatically that it is the divine dispensation that a few Englishmen should eternally rule over millions of Indians. India must be given something and so certain politicians have been busy in drawing up some alluring schemes. So we find that the Imperial Conference resolved that 'India as well as the Dominions should have an adequate voice in the determination of foreign policy and foreign relations.' We also find it resolved that 'the Dominions must be recognised as autonomous nations of the Imperial Commonwealth and India an important portion thereof." All this sounds very nice and we must congratulate ourselves over the success......... You leave India to be ruled by the bureaucracy and still you give India a voice in foreign relations. Not to India indeed, but to the bureaucracy which rules over India......... So long as the Secretary of State for India occupies that undesirable office, so long as most vital problems could be dismissed from India's councils without the least scruple, as long, in short, as we have not come to own our own, conferences will be held, sham representatives will receive honours and distinctions and India will know what all this means. So comes it that we are so very serious over the Home Rule. Mr. Curtis dreams that if India should be adequately represented in a Federal Parliament, she will have a voice in the determination of the steps and the pace at which she should advance towards full responsible government in internal affairs. This means, as the Honourable Mr. Sastri happily expressed, 'that the Federation movement outside India will reach consummation sooner than the Home Rule movement inside India' and that 'India is to wait on such a chance as the former may have of success.' Why this beating about the bush? Why not come forward and boldly assert that we do not want to give India self-government, but in order that she should be satisfied in some way or other, we mean to give a sham representation in foreign policy?"

Indian Social Reformer (2), 20th May.

26. "Mr. Sastri's address is remarkable for its many apt quotations, but the best of them all is that from a recent speech of Mr. Bonar Law. 'I do not agree,' said the Chancellor of the Exchequer, 'that the only thing you have to think of with respect to the government of Ireland is to set up a Government that will govern in the best way. I do not think so at all. I think that very often a very bad form of government, if it is with the consent and goodwill of the people governed, will work infinitely better than a much better system without that consent and goodwill.' We do not know if any of the opponents of the Congress scheme will be prepared to hold that the consent and the goodwill of the people of India will be detrimental to the good government of the country. We think that their position is that the present system has that consent and goodwill. If that were so, why have you been passing so many repressive measures within the last few years? Why have you been demanding more powers for the executive? The answer, of course, is that these are aimed at the handful of agitators who are bent on making mischief. But how can the agitators make mischief if you have really and truly the goodwill of the governed? 'O,' you say, 'they are very ignorant?' But why are they ignorant? Why have you not taken steps during the century and a half of your system to relieve them of their ignorance. There can be no answer to that question. The recent order of the Madras Government prohibiting students from attending meetings except such as may be addressed by officially approved orators, what is it but a confession that your teachers and professors are utterly without influence on their students? That is the fact. And why is this the fact? Because, notwithstanding profuse professions, any display of active, heartfelt sympathy with the students is discouraged and even penalised."

Dnyán Prakásh (33), 13th May; Sandesh (100), 13th May; Indu Prakásh (35), 15th May.

27. All advocates of self-government will find the Honourable Mr. Sastri's address as President of the Provincial Conference to be most inspiring. Indians at any rate no longer need any proof regarding the necessity of self-government. It has been universally recognised that it is unjust to enslave a nation on the strength of military power. People also feel that the principles in defence of which they are fighting against Germany with all their resources should triumph throughout the Emire. The movement for self-government aims at securing for India the benefit of this remarkable revolution in ideas and no far-seeing statesman can oppose it. The British nation cannot possibly view with approval the action of a few of the narrow-minded officials who try to suppress this movement. We shall undoubtedly enlist the sympathy of responsible British statesmen if we put forth our demands before them heedless of the persecution of these officials. There have been instances, although very rare, of a free nation conferring freedom on another nation under its domination. The Americans recently conferred autonomy on the Philippines and the Russians emancipated the Poles immediately they got rid of their autocratic government. There is nothing wrong in India expecting similar treatment at the hands of England. British statesmen no doubt will admit the resonableness of our demands. But we must be prepared to submit to the persecution of some short-sighted officials whose interests lie in the continuance of the present system of government. This period will of necessity entail much hardship on men striving to obtain swarájya. But they must be prepared to pass through this ordeal if they wish to see their political ambitions fructify in the end. [The Sandesh remarks:—The Honourable Mr. Sastri's speech was accompanied neither with the theatrical gestures of Mr. Surendranath Bannerjee nor was it tame like the utterances of Sir S. P. Sinha. His speech clearly shows that if there is any politician capable of filling the void created by the death of the late Mr. Gokhale it is he. If he continues as he has begun people will realise that the Servants of India Society is an useful popular institution and not a mere appendage of an irresponsible administration. Mr. Sastri has given an effective reply to the wicked libel that the Servants of India Society has taken Mr. Lionel Curtis into partnership. The Indu Prakásh writes:—Our representatives are admitted into the Imperial Conferences whereas we have no voice in the internal administration of our country. The Honourable Mr. Sastri aptly remarks that the right of representation at Imperial Conferences will not mean much for us unless it is supplemented by the right to govern ourselves.]

Bombay Samáchár (53), 15th and 16th May; Hindusthán (16), 14th May; Sanj Vartamán (28), 12th May.

28. The Bombay Samáchár regards the speech recently delivered at Násik by the Honourable Mr. Srinivas Sastri as President of the 17th Bombay Provincial Conference as being learned, instructive and full of sober views. It remarks that its special feature is its tone of moderation and asks those who are in a hurry to obtain large political rights to study it patiently. The paper maintains that the Honourable Mr. Sastri has made it clear how India is not in the same position as the colonies in being allowed to send as her representatives to Imperial Conferences men elected by the Indian Government on account of her not being self-governing like the colonies. It, accordingly, expresses the hope that Government will be kind enough to accede to the just demand of the people of India to allow the elected members of the Imperial Legislative Council to nominate a man of their own choice to act as India's representative at the next Imperial Conference in which will be determined India's position in the Empire. Further, the paper hopes that Indian youths will make a generous response to the appeal made to them by Mr. Sastri to join the Defence of India Force in large numbers. It maintains that the British Government are not slow to appreciate merit wherever it is found and referring to the grant of the Victoria Cross and other decorations to Indian soldiers, remarks that the difficulties at present confronting the Indians in joining that Force will, in all probability, be removed soon after they have rendered service to their country in a loyal and devoted spirit. [In the subsequent issue the paper endorses the views in favour of a wider spread of education in India. It approves of the resolution passed at the Conference urging Government to amend the present law so as to enable the Bombay and District Municipalities to make primary education free and compulsory, within their jurisdiction. If Government are not in a position, opines the paper, to make education free and compulsory throughout the country the experiment suggested by the abovementioned resolution, if it is permitted to be made, will be found useful by them. The paper winds up by making an humble appeal to His Excellency Lord Willingdon to undertake legislation for making education free and compulsory in this Presidency before he lays down the reins of his office. The Hindusthán regards the presidential speech delivered by Mr. Sastri as a learned, manly, weighty and courageous utterance. It considers his observations in favour of the grant of internal autonomy to India to be irrefutable and remarks that until it can be so arranged that Indian representatives may command greater weight and respect in the country's internal affairs and in the Legislative Councils, it would be folly and presumption on the part of Indians to send representatives to take part in Imperial Conferences in the discussion of matters affecting the whole Empire. For this reason the paper prays to Great Britain forthwith to grant swarájya to India. The Sánj Vartamán observes that Mr. Sastri has shown that the political reforms suggested by the Indian National Congress, All-India Moslem League and the 19 elected members of the Imperial Legislative Council are in no way revolutionary. It writes:—In spite of declarations to the contrary made in the past in the matter of high posts the ruling race still enjoy the monopoly. The Indian nation has remained patient for 85 years and yet we are told that we ask for revolutionary and catastrophic reforms. The people of India have never made any such unjust demands. They only want their birthright and the present is the time to grant it.]

Comments on Mr. V. P. Madhav Rao's presidential address at the Cuddalore (Madras) Provincial Conference.

Indian Social Reformer (2), 20th May.

29. "When it is suggested that an existing institution should undergo more or less radical changes, the man in the street naturally wants to know if and how it has failed to fulfil the functions which it was intended to perform. Mr. Madhav Rao applies this crucial test to the administration, and states the result in simple and straightforward language. 'The bureaucracy,' he says, 'has been tried and been found wanting. The bureaucracy has neglected and mismanaged things so badly that, when a crisis like the present war arises, India in spite of her earnest desire for giving every support to the mother country, finds herself unable to do all she can in helping England in men and material.' This is evident from the particular instance he fastens upon as conclusive proof of the failure of the Indian bureaucracy. 'If the bureaucracy had discharged its trust properly', he says, 'and endeavoured to carry out the policy of the British nation........., we should have the expedition to Mesopotamia entrusted to an Indian, say, a man like the Maharaja of Bikanir, and Indians made largely responsible for the mobilization of resources in money and material which the Viceroy has so graphically described in his speech at Lahore.' And, again, 'The war has shown that the Government still acts as a foreign garrison in military occupation of the country. The people are not trusted, and the protection of the country against internal disorder is not entrusted to them. The people have remained disarmed. There is unrest in two large provinces, one of which supplies fighting material to the Government and the other inhabited by one of the most intelligent and sensitive races of India, and Government have not yet succeeded in allaying discontent in them.' These are not the criticisms of the academic politician but of the trained administrator whose instincts are affronted by the opportunities lost, the materials misused. If more proof were wanted of the failure of the present system, we may point to the appalling illiteracy of the population, the yearly increasing expenditure on the agency for the investigation of political offences, the series of repressive laws which have been enacted within the last few years."

A Muhammadan should be appointed to succeed the Honourable Mr. Chaubal as member of the Bombay Executive Council.

Akhbár-e-Islám (50), 14th May.

30. Speculating as to who would be appointed to succeed the Honourable Mr. Chaubal on his forthcoming retirement from the Bombay Executive Council, the Akhbár-e-Islám remarks:—We would raise our voice as a Moslem organ and declare that the Government of Lord Willingdon should not fail to appoint a Muhammadan as the successor of the Honourable Mr. Chaubal. We could easily point out half a dozen Muhammadans of Bombay who are competent to fill the post. Men like the Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtulla, Sir Fazulbhai Karimbhai, the Honourable Mr. Jinnah and Mr. Justice Kajiji are likely to adorn the chair occupied by the Honourable Mr. Chaubal with greater ability, greater courage and greater independence of spirit. While Mr. Chaubal has not succeeded, on the whole, in acquitting himself of his responsible duties in a satisfactory manner, we have every hope that the abovementioned gentlemen, whom we regard as the most independent persons among the Moslem community and as the deadliest enemies of the policy of submissiveness to high Government officials, are likely to cut a much better figure in the Executive Council than the Honourable Mr. Chaubal. The names we have mentioned above are those of men who enjoy the confidence, affection and esteem both of Government and the people. In view of the creditable manner in which competent Moslems have discharged their duties as member and Vice-President of the Imperial Executive Council and as member of the India Council, we can unhesitatingly count upon the appointment of a Muhammadan in the local Executive Council proving a success. We shall not, however, wonder if the choice of Lord Willingdon's government falls upon Mr. Abbas Ali Baig, member of the Secretary of State's Council, who is shortly expected to return to India.

EDUCATION.

Complaint about insulting terms being applied to the Prophet of the Muhammadans in the Arabic paper set for the B. A. Examination of the Allahabad University.
Sind Moslem (New), 5th May; Akhbár-e-Islám (50), 12th May.

31. "The Arabic paper set for the B. A. Examination of the Allahabad University has aroused the greatest indignation in the whole of the country by reason of its containing phrases that no Muhammadan would use or allow another to use for their Prophet; and we cannot compliment the authorities for appointing such examiners, devoid of all common-sense and decency. It is only natural, therefore, for the Musalman candidates to tear it there and then and nothing we suppose would have prevented them, excited as they were, from throwing the pieces into the face of the Examiner had he been near them. It is not unoften that one sees very objectionable attacks in text-books on Islam and though they have been subsequently erased or put mildly on the representation of the Musalmans, yet the wrongdoers are left untouched; but the mischief done at Allahabad is by far too grave to be allowed to rest uninvestigated and unpunished. Surely His Honour Mr. Holmes is not going to pat Musalmans into silence; nor will they be satisfied with that. We hope and trust His Honour's Government will inflict substantial punishment on this mischief-monger." [In connection with the above incident the Akhbár-e-Islám inquires of those who protested against the line in the Third Book of the Gujaráti Readers Series which ran, "Oh Lord, you are my mother and father" and of the Honourable Mr. Syed Ali El Edrus who made an interpellation in the Bombay Legislative Council about that line, whether Moslem feeling has been really wounded by that line, which was of Hindu authorship, or by their own co-religionists who set and acted as moderators of the Arabic paper above referred to and who style themselves learned and educated men. While remarking that the explanation published by the Syndicate of the Allahabad University, to the effect that the Examiner and the two moderators were all Muhammadans, has to some extent quieted down the Moslem feeling, and, expressing its gratification at that result, the paper declares that, in view of the ignorance these three Muhammadans have displayed in allowing Islam to be insulted by their present action, they would not be considered as having proved true to the duty entrusted to them.]

RAILWAYS.

Complaint about overcrowding of third class passengers at the Poona Railway Station.
Sandesh (100), 18th May.

32. Mr. V. G. Javdekar writes to the Sandesh:—I was travelling by the Madras Mail on the 7th instant. At the Poona Railway Station the carriage, including the latrine, was crowded with passengers. The guard could occasionally be seen walking on the platform but he would only enjoy the sight and pass on as is usual with these callous functionaries. A man by name Lala Vrindavan had once written to the Kesari that he was made to carry on his head buckets of nightsoil while working on a sugar plantation (in Mauritius). Well, that man after all was an indentured coolie. But is it not extremely degrading to men supposed to be free to be compelled to submit to the noxious stench from a latrine when they have every right to expect better treatment from the Railway Company in return for their money?

Comments on the measures taken by the East India Railway for the protection of first and second class lady passengers.

Bombay Samáchár (53), 17th May.; Jám-e-Jamshed (19), 17th May; Kaiser-i-Hind* (20), 20th May, Eng. cols.

33. The Bombay Samáchár approves of the steps taken by the East India Railway at the instance of the Railway Board to introduce certain devices by which ladies travelling in the first and second classes can close the doors of their compartments from inside which the guard and station master alone can open from outside for the ingress of passengers, and suggests that a similar devise should be introduced by the other railways not only for the first and second class lady passengers but for the third class female passengers as well. The paper suggests that in order to obviate the possibility of the recurrence of assaults on female passengers by railway guards all the railways should appoint female guards or inspectors in order to ensure the safety and safeguard the honour and interests of third class female passengers. [The Jám-e-Jamshed suggests that steps should be taken to guard against the misuse of the powers given to the guard in the matter of opening the doors of female compartments. While approving of the measures taken for the protection of first and second class lady passengers on Indian Railways, the Kaiser-i-Hind remarks:—"There is one thing which we cannot but criticise. There is no reason why this protection should be extended only to first and second class lady passengers. Women travelling by the third class are as much entitled to the protection of their virtue and property as their more fortunate sisters. Here at least any sort of such invidious distinction is most misplaced, and the Railway Board will be well advised if they rise above distinctions too petty to be considered by any Government department".]

MUNICIPALITIES.

The presidentship of the Belgaum District Local Board.

Chandrodaya (30), 14th May; Din Mitra (86), 16th May.

34. The Chandrodaya, in a leading article, refers to the protest made by a correspondent of the Sandesh of the 5th May 1917 (vide paragraph No. 45 of Weekly Report No. 18 of 1917) against the appointment of Rao Bahadur Artal as the President of the Belgaum District Local Board, and stigmatizes it as the outcome of communal hatred. The correspondent's allegation that the Rao Bahadur is a man of ordinary intelligence, is, it says, ridiculous as his abilities have won him the admiration even of his enemies, and the other allegation that he is full of class hatred is dismissed as the outcome of his unpopularity with a certain section of the Belgaum public due to his having sentenced certain Kulkarnis for bribery and caused a Mamlatdar to be punished by the High Court for a similar offence when he was District Deputy Collector of Belgaum. The paper then goes on to recount the various qualifications of Rao Bahadur Artal, chief among which are, it says, the experience he has acquired about the working of the Local Boards during the tenure of his office as District Deputy Collector, and the first-hand knowledge he has gained from the evidence of the various witnesses examined by the Local Self-government Committee of which he was a member. Finally the paper asserts that of late there has been a great change in the ideas that Rao Bahadur Artal held concerning national unity and co-operation and earnestly prays that Goveenment may be pleased to appoint him as the President of the District Local Board of Belgaum. [The Din Mitra expresses similar views.]

Affairs of the Surat Municipality.

Deshi Mitra (57), 17th May.

35. The Deshi Mitra expresses the opinion that the powers at present exercised by the Municipal Commissioner of Surat are very wide. In its view the Municipal Councillors err in believing that they have no right to interfere with what that officer does in the exercise of those powers. It remarks that the Municipal Commissioner is a public servant and is in a way a trustee of the public money and that the Councillors and the President should have the power of supervision over his acts. The paper also refers to the discontent which the present policy of nominating outsiders to various posts under the Municipality is alleged to have created among the old Municipal servants. It further deprecates the existing state of things under which men of the same community hold the principal post in each of the municipal departments. The paper concludes thus:—Though Government have at present set aside the resolution passed by our Municipality against the continuance of the appointment of a Municipal Commissioner under a trivial pretext, yet, in order to remove that trivial cause people of different municipal wards should meet in large numbers and the Councillors also should in an overwhelmingly large majority make endeavours to bring about the desired result. It is also necessary for the Surat Corporation to show the City's sympathy towards and agreement with the Poona Municipality by passing a resolution similar to the one passed by the latter in favour of having all Municipal Councillors on its board elected by the people. The question of the powers with which the Municipal Commissioner is invested should also be taken in hand.

The Surat District Local Board and the right of having a non-official president.

Kaiser-i-Hind (20), 13th May.

36. The Kaiser-i-Hind writes in a tone of ridicule about the resolution passed by the Surat District Board in favour of continuing the present system of appointing an official President. It remarks that the said resolution constitutes a slur upon the lofty name of local self-government and only betrays the cowardly weakness of those who passed it. It futher maintains that the resolution has exposed the whole of India to ridicule, and has, as it were, proved the truth of the comparison made by Mr. Curtis between the Indians and the African people. The paper is also of opinion that the resolution passed by the Surat Board is not an independent resolution but that it was influenced by the remarks made by the Collector as President of the meeting which arrived at such a decision. It expresses the wish that His Excellency Lord Willingdon should ignore the resolution and should either give the Surat District Board the right to elect its own President or ask it to reconsider the matter, in which latter case, suggests the paper, the votes should be collected by ballot.

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 24th May 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

B 60—5 CON

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 21 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 26th May 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British Rule:

Adverse comments on the proposed grant of Jágirs in the Punjab as a reward for loyalty 31
Comments on a case of dacoity and rape in Bengal 32
Comments on Lord Pentland's recent speech in the Madras Legislative Council 21
Comments on orders passed by the Madras and Central Provinces Governments prohibiting students from taking part in politics . 22—25
Comments on the Home Rule League Conference held at Násik . . 26
Comparison between the Irish and Indian question 27
Defence of the Pathans against the allegation that they are usurers and brothel-keepers 33
How Muhammadans would suffer at the hands of the Hindus if India were granted swarajya at the present juncture 29
If the ignorance of the masses has not kept the people in Russia or elsewhere from self-government, it should not in India also . . 28
Protest against the alleged misapplication of the King Edward Memorial Fund at Násik 30
Comments on the Bombay Pilgrim Committee's Report for 1916 . . 39
His Excellency the Governor of Bombay: Proposed public movement in favour of the extension of His Excellency Lord Willingdon's term of office 34
Indians in the Colonies: Comments on Sir Robert Borden's statement regarding reciprocity in admitting Indians into Canada 36
Judicial matters: Comments on the judgment of the Acting Third Presidency Magistrate in the defamation case of Anantram vs. Patwardhan . . . . . 37 & 38
Provincial Conference: Comments on the Honourable Mr. Sastri's address at the Bombay — at Násik 35

Sind:

Are Muhammadans in — really less fit for Government service than the Hindus? 41
Complaint about inordinate delay in the publication of the Report of the — Land Settlement Committee 42
The Commissioner in — and the principalship of the D. J. Sind College, Karáchi 40

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

War :

Appreciation of Her Excellency Lady Willingdon's efforts on behalf of wounded and disabled soldiers 16

Comments on the Government decision to have fortnightly sailings of mail steamers between England and India 20

Comments on the Government Resolution on the unsatisfactory recruiting for the Indian Defence Force . . . . 1—11

Comments on the present situation in Russia . . . . . . 18 & 19

Government should issue orders to stop the activities of officials in connection with the — Loan 13

Suggestion that Government should formulate for the benefit of Government servants a scheme similar to the one adopted by the Bombay Municipality for assisting its employees to contribute to the — Loan 15

The fullest information should be given about the labourers sent out of India for — purposes 17

The Government of India should explain why confidential — work cannot be entrusted to Indian clerks 12

What should be done and what avoided to ensure the complete success of the — Loan 14

MUNICIPALITIES—

Comments on the orders alleged to have been issued to Local Boards and Municipalities in Sind to have their printing work done at the Government Press, Karáchi 45

Poona :

A Committee should be appointed to inquire into the affairs of the — City Municipality 44

Protest against the attitude of Government towards the — Municipality 43

NATIVE STATES—

Comments on measures taken by Her Highness the Begum of Bhopál to check the drink evil in her State 47

His Highness the Nizam should be permitted to prefix the words His Majesty to his name 46

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Comments on the Government Resolution on the unsatisfactory recruiting for the Indian Defence Force.

Young India (10), 23rd May.

1. "The expected has happened, though the end is not yet in sight. Politicians in England and super-journalists in India had begun to wonder why in this terrible war India's colossal man-power was not being better utilized, and critics were not wanting in India who suggested that what the Anglo-Indian would term the 'Bhadr-log' class should be given a chance to defend their own country. Yielding to this insistent cry, the Government of India began with vague promises and ended with the publication of a set of rules for entry into a Defence Force, which chilled the enthusiasm of that Bhadr-log class. So the first stage was to offer something which Government should have known would be distasteful, the second to read a homily to those who cannot accept the conditions offered and the third, in which the reactionary press will play the leading part, will be the inevitable one of labelling those who refused to accept such conditions as persons unfit for self-government. The Government of India in their latest resolution on the Indian Defence Force have achieved the second stage.......... We have no hesitation in repeating again with all the emphasis at our command that the conditions of service in the Defence Force have been very rightly represented 'as being such as to deter volunteers from coming forward.' If the Government of India were anxious that middle-class Indian youths of some education should receive their scheme with enthusiasm, why did they not take leaders of Indian opinion of all shades of political thought into their counsel on such a vital matter? If the European is considered efficient for military service at 41, why should the Indian be considered unfit for being trained in the defence of his own land if he is just over 30? The Government of India were perfectly aware that among educated Indians, among the class they wanted for the Defence Force, those between 30 and 35 would have been the most able to come forward for enrolment.......... The reasons the Government of India give in their public lament over the failure of the scheme they have suggested are as lame as they are inopportune. It is, as a matter of fact, too early to say that the youth of India have not responded to the call. They have not been enthusiastic over the conditions of the service imposed, because they rightly consider that a distinction should be made between the middle class Indian joining the Defence Force, and the Indian joining the regular Indian army as a profession.......... There is another point to be considered. Did the Government of India instruct the teachers of Indian youth for whose untarnished name they seem to be so anxious, to give every encouragement to their pupils in this matter of enlistment? Our impression has been that the mentors of Indian youth had all their energies spent up in popularising the war loan and that they looked on rather coldly at the efforts of their pupils in trying to understand what the conditions of recruitment really were. It was alleged that the Principal of a professional college in Poona went out of his way to make some offensive remarks while dealing with the question of Indian enrolment in the Defence of India Force. Has this official been severely reprimanded by the authorities? Further, may we not ask what steps the various Government departments have been instructed to take in order to facilitate the enlistment of eligible Indians? For aught we know, the European heads have not only viewed the question with indifference but positively discouraged any effort being made in the direction. Employees in European mercantile houses have fared even worse, because these great employers are unwilling to extend to their Indian employees at least some of the concessions that were extended to the European employees who have volunteered. We agree that the scheme with its 'modest dimensions' should not prove a 'hopeless failure' as it would 'create an impression throughout the Empire prejudicial to the good name of India', but we may also point out that if the Government of India persist in enforcing a scheme which alienates the sympathy of the educated classes, the blame of the failure, if failure there is, will rest on them and not on the people of India.......... Fine words butter no parsnips, and mere sentimental appeals to leaders of public opinion cannot make good the deliberate shortcomings of 'a scheme conceived in the general interests of Imperial Defence'. It has further been urged in the resolution that the Territorials in England have not been accorded any differential treatment in respect of pay, status, etc., from men in the regular army.......... All this is unquestionably true. Even Indians of position and means would have done the same under similar conditions.......... In the first place, it is false analogy to place the British Territorials in relation to the British Army on the same footing as Indian Volunteers in relation to the Indian Army. The conditions of the two are entirely different from each other. While a Territorial by reason of merit and attainments has the prospect of rising to the highest office open to a private in the army, Indians as such are debarred from aspiring to any high office.......... We are surprised that this sort of reasoning should have found a place in what purports to be a serious document. In this connection, the observation of Mr. Yusuf Ali, I.C. S. (retired), is, we think, very apposite. He says:—'The principle is capable of great extension, and a direct increase in the man-power available from India for the war is possible, provided the people of India are trusted, they are made eligible for the King's commissions, and a special Indian Volunteer force for war service is raised on conditions which will bear comparison with the terms offered to fighting units in Great Britain and the Dominions.' We commend this to the Government of India." [Elsewhere the paper says:—"The resolution is injudicious and premature. We have a more than ordinary suspicion that it was resorted to not for any disinterested ends, as one might be led to imagine from it."]

Mahratta (4), 27th May.

*2. "Government apparently regret the failure of the Act to evoke a thrilling response.......... Where is the root of this failure? It must be in the conditions of service or the general conditions of the country. What are the general conditions? The Governments, Local and Supreme, are exhibiting the utmost distrust of the popular leaders. Those whose appeal to the rising generation counts most, are treated by the authorities as 'undesirables'. Mrs. Besant, Mr. Bepin Pal and Mr. Tilak have received such attentions from the powers that be, as are ill-calculated to rouse enthusiasm in those who look up to them as their First Guardians—and these are legion. There has not been any reservation in the appeals made by Mrs. Besant and others to the student population and to the general public. The unfortunate conditions of service, which are based on hateful race distinctions, have had to be clearly explained in the course of the appeals. But we are of opinion that it is not so much these galling distinctions as the general atmosphere of distrust which is responsible for making the appeals of leaders futile....... There is not in the Resolution, beyond assurances of sympathy, any sign of Government having realised that their own conduct is responsible for the ill-success of their scheme of 'modest dimensions'. They ought in the first instance to remove the political embargo on our revered leaders. They ought to frame an all-India policy in educational matters, specially laying down the principle that students in no province shall be prohibited from attending or taking a reasonable part in political meetings. These are the first steps necessary to re-create the atmosphere of hope in which alone the call for the defence of the Empire can make an impression on the youthful Indian hearts.......... Government have sermonised us on the subject of 'pay and conditions'. Does not the Governor-General know that the general conditions in the 'United Kingdom and distant parts of the Empire' differ radically from those obtaining here? Englishmen and Colonials are not in bondage. Englishmen own their country and an Empire besides. The Colonials are practically independent in their several lands and derive immense profit by their membership of the British Empire. What are we in our country or in the Empire? Mere hewers of wood and drawers of water. Does that not sufficiently account for the difference with which the call to enrol in the interests of Imperial defence has been received in India and in the self-governing parts of the Empire? Let an assurance of a trustworthy nature (i. e., accompanied by the immediate grant of certain primary rights such as the carrying of arms) go forth that India will receive full self-government within say 15 years from now, the Congress-League Reforms to be granted immediately after the War. If such an assurance goes forth, and India's response still remains only a hesitating one, then there will be some reason for comparing the English or the Colonial response with the Indian with a view to putting us to shame. In conditions as they are to-day the comparison indulged in only serves to bring into bold relief the fact that the shell of supercilious vanities within which the authorities have imprisoned themselves has not yet burst. We must make it clear that we wish and have been wishing all success to the scheme, ill-conceived as it is. We have appealed to our young men to go forward and help Government in their need—but as events show, we have failed to penetrate the thick encrustation of gloomy anger which envelops the youthful hearts. Let us hope that Government will ease the situation materially—if they really care to make the Defence Force scheme a success. We believe that if Government take into confidence the popular leaders and entrust to them the task of recruitment much disappointment will be saved. So far there has been no commendable interest displayed by Government in the recruitment for the Indian Defence Force. They have devoted themselves heart and soul to the recruiting of the money of India. Indian money-power would seem to be more attractive in the eyes of Government than Indian man-power."

Message (5), 22nd, 23rd and 24th May.

3. "It has been more than once reiterated by the highest authority in the land that the Defence of India Force was intended to do away with the invidious racial distinctions which obtained in the Indian Army between the European and Indian units............ But this ultimately proved to be merely illusory and in this case there was a great divergence between promise and performance.......... The promise of future remedy, however tempting it may be, does not make amends for the present shortcomings.......... Try as we may, we cannot help thinking that the whole question was one of willingness and as one of our local contemporaries put it, the action of Government argues an utter want of such willingness on its part. Where there is a will there is a way.......... There is another circumstance which has apparently escaped notice, but which demolishes this carefully constructed emergency argument. It will be recalled that when the definition of 'European British subject' was being evolved, the committee of the Imperial Council insidiously introduced a far-reaching change in the term and the Government of India acquiesced in the change. We refer to the inclusion in the term of everyone from a born and bread European to the mixed progeny of an undefinable class, which would not be tolerated by the Europeans themselves. It was then said that they could not afford to forego the services of men who had been trained at the expense of the State. All the same, a change such as this which would have provoked the bitterest opposition in other circumstances was permitted and the Government of India could not see any difficulties in regard to it. But when it is a question of according similarly liberal treatment to Indians at least in respect of their own ranks, the bogey of the emergencies of a great war is trotted out. Indians, for all we know, have been extremely reasonable. They have demanded no revolutionary concessions. They have simply asked for those opportunities of distinguishing themselves, which have been accorded to other communities. These opportunities have been consistently denied to them, and it passes our comprehension how the Government of India would feel disappointed at the failure of a half-hearted attempt, which was still further hedged round by hundred and one other limitations.......... Although we do regret as much as Government do the paucity of recruits, we think the blame rests with Government themselves and not with the people. If Government mean seriously, they should lose no time in removing the galling restrictions imposed on Indians." [In the next issue the paper writes:—"If the Government of India are anxious to obtain the man-power, pious resolutions expressing disappointment at the failure of faulty measures will not certainly assist. The anomalies of the Indian Army Act will have to be removed first and the Indian Act placed on the same level as the English Act, before Indians with any sense of self-respect can be expected to submit themselves to the Indian Act. We shall only refer here to one provision of this Act in order to show how the offer is grievously unsatisfactory. The Indian Army Act, which is considered to be a model one by the Government of India and its champions in the Anglo-Indian Press, provides for flogging the men for certain offences. A provision of this nature is enough to scare away from the Army the respectable elements of the Indian population. Is there any counter-balancing advantage? 'Ask not for advantage.' Such is one of the commandments to Indians. As a certain Captain Guest is reported to have said in the House of Commons, white troops will do all the soldiering and the niggers—the gallant captain said 'coloured men'—will do the work of coolies behind the fighting lines. That is, we believe, another of the great reasons why Indians should volunteer to serve. Whatever the principle of the present Act, the provisions or the rules made under it are such as are not at all conducive to enlist the sympathies of respectable men in the land. The object of the present resolution seems to be to discredit Indians in the eyes of other peoples by presenting to them an exaggerated and one-sided picture. If the advisers of the Government of India wish to persist in such an attitude, we feel no responsible patriots would be justified in advising young men to join the Defence Force as volunteers" The same paper writes in its next issue:—"It is painful to see the Government of India and the Anglo-Indian papers abusing the imperfect analogy between the British Territorials and the Indian Defence Force. We are told in a tone of scolding that the British Territorials did not complain about the terms but did their duty and that Indian youths ought to have done the same thing. Now, we know that the Territorials did not complain about the pay, but the reason was that there was no racial discrimination to be complained of. Had, for instance, the English Territorials been paid only one-third of what the Scotch or Irish regulars were paid, or again, had the English Territorials been denied eligibility to commissions in an English army, serving in England and had they seen that these commissions were however open to the Irish or the Scotch or the naturalised Germans, we do not know how far they would have refrained from complaints about the humiliating discriminations.......... If the Government of India and the Anglo-Indian world generally be unwilling at present to give the opportunities which Indians ask for, they are welcome to act upon their convictions, based upon their prejudices and self-interest. But we could wish that they refrained from talking humbug. The injustice which they are doing will not, we may assure them, be much relieved by false analogies and crocodile tears."]

Gujarāti (12), 27th May, Eng. cols.

4. "We confess we cannot congratulate the Government of India on either the contents or the general tenour of the Resolution they have issued with reference to the failure of the Indian people to enrol themselves for service in the Indian Defence Force, and the criticism the conditions of that service have evoked throughout the country.......... Has His Excellency the Viceroy realised how much irritation the unjust and anomalous state of things, under which the sons of the soil have been excluded from the advantages of higher military training in institutions maintained at the expense of the Indian people for the benefit of Europeans and their exclusion from the commissioned ranks of the army, has produced in this country for the last thirty years and more? Does His Excellency's Government really wish to win the good-will and co-operation of the various races in India as the British Government are anxious to secure the active support of the Irish race? ...... Any one, who wishes to appreciate the true significance of the situation in India, has only to compare Mr. Lloyd George's generous attitude and fervid language with the cold phraseology of the Resolution, the desire it shows to rebuke and depreciate the people without understanding the history of the question and their difficulties in undertaking novel duties under disadvantageous circumstances......... His Excellency the Viceroy well knows that even in England and the Colonies the schemes of voluntary enlistment failed and the compulsory system had in consequence to be introduced for securing the required number of recruits. It needs no special gift of imagination to realise that a people who have for more than two generations been unjustly excluded from the benefits of higher military training and prevented from possessing arms even for defensive purposes cannot be expected to enrol themselves for military service with enthusiasm and quietly accept conditions of service that are anything but fair. Besides His Excellency the Viceroy has not borne in mind the fact that if the leaders of public opinion have not realised their full responsibilities, neither has His Excellency nor the heads of provincial administrations. ...... Whilst the latter and their subordinate officials have thoroughly officialised the movement for raising the Indian War Loan with commendable motives, they have studiously kept themselves aloof from the companion movement for making the Defence of India Act a success. Why have they ardently supported the first measure and deliberately fought shy of the second? .... Surely it would not have been derogatory to the dignity of the Viceroy to have presided at a public meeting and done everything to induce Indians to enlist themselves in large numbers. His Excellency has done nothing of the kind and thinks it justifiable and fair to take the leaders of public opinion to task for not having fully realised their responsibilities in this matter.......... From one's seat of exalted authority and position it is, it seems, as easy to rebuke others with an air of superiority as to forget one's own duties and responsibilities towards those who are made the victims of undeserved rebuke. There is one notable passage in the Resolution which requires to be specially considered, because it is calculated to mislead not only the Indian and Anglo-Indian but also the British public. 'The leaders of Indian opinion' are told that the pay of the Territorial force in England is the same as that of the regular army and that men of means and position do not think it derogatory to join the ranks both of the Territorials and of the new army and to serve as private soldiers shoulder to shoulder with those of other classes. They are further informed that the 'men of position and means asked no questions as to pay or other conditions, they put forward no pretensions or demands.' This, however, does not represent the whole truth. In the first place, the conditions of military service in England and India for British troops are much more satisfactory than those for the Indian army. Whilst it is a matter of notoriety that the British soldier in India is more costly than any other soldier in the world, the Indian soldier has not been adequately paid and his surroundings are anything but cheerful. Moreover, the Indian Government in making the comparison has lost sight of the crucial fact that a British recruit or soldier suffers under no racial disabilities whatsoever and no one will venture to tell him that military schools and colleges maintained by the British taxpayer are not available for him but for the people of Timbuktoo only. Such a scandal is impossible in Great Britain or in any self-governing and self-respecting country in the world. What is the frame of mind, what are the hopes and aspirations with which a British recruit enters upon a military career, whether of short-lived or long-lived duration, and what blank disappointment is there before an Indian recruit? If the respective conditions of service are to be compared, let there be a fair, honest and straightforward comparison from all standpoints. The implication conveyed in the above comparison that the demands of the Indians are mere pretensions is needlessly offensive and altogether baseless. The claims of the educated classes to higher military training and to equality of treatment with Europeans in all other respects are not mere pretensions but solid, substantial and unassailable claims of His Majesty's loyal Indian subjects and they cannot be allowed to be belittled or ridiculed in the style of Curzonic insolence and aggressiveness.......... The resolution with its rebuke to the Indian leaders and its reference to Indian 'pretensions and aspirations' is, we hope, not meant as a reply to the programme of reforms that has been put forward by the Congress.......... The 'leaders of public opinion' who have been unjustly taken to task cannot and ought not to sit silent in view of the attitude taken up in the resolution and of the grave situation created by it."

Indian Social Reformer
(2), 27th May.

*5. "The Government of India have issued a resolution expressing keen disappointment at the small number of Indians who have applied to be enrolled in the Indian Defence Force, and appealing to Indian leaders to use their influence to get the prescribed number of 6,000 men enrolled within the four months which yet remain. We cordially support the appeal. We wish that the Government of India had stopped at that, and not attempted to make out a case against Indian leaders of having aroused expectations which have not been realised. It was nearly a month after the enactment of the law that the regulations were published, and when the regulations were published the Colleges, from which a considerable proportion of recruits were expected, had closed for the summer vacation, and the students had dispersed to their homes in the districts. We have also to recognise that, though the Government of India and the heads of the Provincial Governments, notably His Excellency Lord Willingdon, have been anxious to see the experiment succeed, there was not the same anxiety exhibited by some officers who, unforunately, are more immediately in contact with the classes concerned; and that not a little of the meagre response hitherto made is due to the cold water which they have thrown on the project. There can be no doubt that the enthusiasm first aroused by His Excellency the Viceroy's announcement that Indians were to be enrolled in the Indian Defence Force was considerably mitigated when the Commander-in-Chief introduced his Bill, and it became clear that the disabilities under which Indians have been smarting all these years were to be reproduced in the new Force. Even before the Bill was published there were rumours that the position of Indian in the new Force will be no better than in the regular Army.......... The non-official Indian members of the Council implored Government to enlarge the scope of the Bill so as to remove some of these disabilities, but were rebuked by the Commander-in-Chief for presuming to talk of matters of which they knew nothing. The event shows that His Excellency, to whose authority on military strategy we should bow, had totally miscalculated Indian feeling in respect of the provisions of the Bill. The Government of India in their resolution recognise that the defects of the measure are to some extent responsible for the poor response to their proposals, but they do not seem to be able to understand why they should have come in the way of the success of their well-meant scheme. Their great argument is that when Englishmen have evinced no reluctance to join the Territorials on the same terms as men of the Regular Army it is inconceivable why Indians should not feel similarly. The answer is obvious and it is strange that the Government of India should require to be told what it is. The English Army is a microcosm of the English people. From top to bottom it is manned by Englishmen who understand the ways of the men under them and are understood by them. May we suggest that if the British Army were officered exclusively by Indians, it is just possible that there might not be the same readiness for Englishmen to flock to its standards? We are told that the present emergency is not suitable for raising the question of the admission of Indians to commissioned ranks. With great respect, we do not see the force of the argument. When you create a new army, you cannot but think of new ways of officering it. The officers are part of the army, and the question of recruiting men is closely intertwined with the question of their admission to the higher ranks.......... The Government of India's present resolution has been put to a use to which we are sure that Government never intended that it should be put. We are sure that the only object His Excellency's Government had in mind in framing this resolution was to rouse our leaders to increased activity. They had not the least idea that it would be used principally as a means of discrediting Indian public men."

Kesari (92), 22nd May; Sandesh (100), 23rd and 26th May.

6. The public leaders tried their best and advised young men to join the Indian Defence Force. But they could not hide it from them at the same time that the conditions of service were not satisfactory and that they were rather calculated to damp the enthusiasm of young men. Government officials did not give the required information in time and they did not supply the forms. It was proposed by some respectable people to raise a Bombay University Corps, but they were not allowed to do so. People thought somehow that Government did not show the same amount of zeal and interest in recruiting as they did in floating the war loan. Both the war loan and the number of recruits are not to be valued at their exact figure but they are to be prized as an index of the devotion of India to England.

It is not strange that some feel it a mystery that Government should offer tempting concessions in the matter of the war loan and that they should place impediments and show indifference in the matter of recruiting. Government have made an innuendo in their resolution that the loyalty and desire for military service of Indians are only formal, but we think that people have these qualities but that Government have not created the atmosphere that would rouse the requisite enthusiasm in the people to take up actual work. People do not like the present administration and do not feel that it is their own Government wholly. Government have themselves admitted almost that the conditions of service are unsatisfactory. Government say that the question of commissions cannot be discussed at the present time. But they themselves are responsible for delaying the question so long. People in England may have come forth to work as privates but they are politically free, and they can bring in the Government or turn it out, and they were consulted through their representatives before the war. They will again be consulted after the war. They are the fountain-head of all power. Which of these things have Indians got that they should feel any enthusiasm to enter the military service on any conditions? If Government are willing to give us an assurance of swarájya, educated bhádra log will be ready to do military service without any pay, or rather they would even pay something to do so. Formerly when the saranjam system was in force in the Mahárásthtra though everyone was not the ruler on the gadi, he felt that the gadi was his. The present rule is not considered to be swarájya. If instead of the old saranjam, swarájya is given, soldiers would be forthcoming from the houses that supplied them in former times. But our Government want, on the plea of loyalty, to get things done by the people without any proper remuneration. It is necessary to place some food even before the poor cow when it is to be milked; then what of the Mahárásthtra that is nurtured in glorious historical traditions, that has enjoyed swarájya and that to-day cherishes a burning aspiration for swarájya? Why should Government hope to mesmerise it only by the barren plea of loyalty? To put the fact of the poor response to the call of military service in official language, "this matter is separataly under consideration and it is engaging the earnest and sympathetic consideration of the people". [The Sandesh says:—It is not that Indians do not join because they are offered poor pay. It is not a question of pay but a question of principle. They have a natural right to expect the same pay and prospects as the Europeans enjoy. We do not know about other provinces, but in our province Lokamanya Tilak has outdone the officials in supporting recruiting. He has asked people to join unconditionally and freely. The fact is that the martial spirit of the people beyond the military castes has been killed during the last two generations. It may be difficult, but it is not impossible to raise the number of men required. Government do not utilise the services of Mr. Tilak in inducing the people to join and they do not take the public leaders into confidence. Why should not Government appoint a committee of Messrs. Tilak, Jinnah, Baptista and others to get recruits? In another issue the same paper remarks:—Government are trying to blame the people for the poor result, but people confidently hold that Government is responsible for it. Those who wanted to volunteer but could not make out the law on the subject did not know where to get the information and could not get the forms. A few forms could be had with great difficulty after the students had gone home for the summer vacation.]

Indu Prakásh (35), 24th May; Dnyán Prakásh (33), 22nd May.

7. Voluntarism was not a success even in England where the war was raging before the very eyes of the people. The shoals of applications before the Exemption Tribunals in India also tell the same tale. In the face of this apathy of Englishmen towards the Defence Force it is not very surprising that the disarmed and ignorant population of India should not feel very enthusiastic over the struggles in far off countries. Besides, a young man trained to arms would particularly attract the attention of the C. I. D. and might also be viewed with distrust by Government. It is natural, therefore, that our young men should keep aloof from military service. They also fight shy of the Defence Force as the remuneration is not sufficient to attract even a labourer who earns a rupee a day. To be plain there must be a clear understanding between the rulers and the ruled. It is the basic principle of present-day politics that the people's voice should predominate in the administration of a country. People must be ruled in their own interests. The idea that people exist for the king has been banished from the world. We believe there will be a more satisfactory response to the call of Government to enlist in the Defence Force if they will give at least honorary commissions to capable men and prescribe a more liberal scale of pay for privates. [The Dnyán Prakásh writes:—While admitting that our young men should have given a better response to the call of Government, we are bound to point out that the policy of Government is not as liberal as it is shown to be. Compared to the zeal displayed by Government in collecting subscriptions to the War Loan they are practically indifferent about getting recruits for the Defence Force. Do they suppose that Indians will feel encouraged by their telling them that they are admitted to the Defence Force although there was no need for the step? We believe that the policy hitherto adopted by Government is apt to create an impression that Government are not very particular about Indians joining military service.]

Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 20th and 24th; 25th and 23rd May (Eng. cols.).

8. The Praja Mitra and Pársi deplores the poor enlistment in the Defence of India Force and ascribes it partly to the apathy of officials and partly to the ignorance of the general public. It is of opinion that the publication of a scheme of political reforms as suggested by the Maharaja of Bikanir will appeal to the imagination of the people and secure enlistment in the Defence Force in such large numbers as will strike terror in the heart of the enemy. [In its issue of 24th May the paper asks Government officials from Governors downwards to convene public meetings for enlistment in the Defence Force and to remove all the difficulties in the way of enlistment by consulting popular leaders and enlisting their co-operation. In its issue of 25th May the paper, while commenting upon the Government of India's Resolution on the subject of the poor response to the call for Indian recruits for the Indian Defence Force, remarks:—"We recommend the Government Resolution to the careful study of all patriotic sons of India. It is an important State document; it is free from bitterness, it is restrained and, therefore, it is all the more effective. Let the reader recall all the demands made at the Congress and Moslem League at Lucknow as well as in the memorandum of the nineteen elected members of the Imperial Legislative Council. Is it to be expected that those 'demands' will be ever complied with if there is such a rooted reluctance on our part to undertake the first duty of every nation—the defence of the country? No matter how hard or unacceptable the conditions, the real work that only 6,000 of us are called upon to do is to be prepared to undertake the defence of the country for a short time.......... There is just one other contingency which we must point out to the public with all the emphasis we can command, and that is the likelihood of a limited conscription for 6,000 or more men. What has been done in the case of Europeans will certainly be done in that of Indians and the Goverement will not hesitate should the need arise. But we shall be shamed in the eyes of the whole world and all our boasted patriotism will be a bye-word and a mockery, for now and for ever it will be flung in our faces that out of the millions that call this ancient country their Motherland not 6,000 would come forward voluntarily to defend her in her need." In its issue of the 23rd May, however, the paper writes:—"The conditions of service in the Defence Force are, no doubt, not such as to fill Indian youths with an irrepressible desire to join the ranks of the army. But among the crores of Indian manhood, surely there are 6,000 men to step forward to the call of duty regardless of nice calculations of pay, and prestige, and prospect.......... Nor is it just to assume that the leaders of public opinion in this country have failed to realise their full responsibilities in this matter. Both the Indian leaders and the press, while they could not altogether refrain from criticising the scheme—and it will be conceded that it provokingly invites criticism—did not grudge to give it their cordial support; and we have in most responsible quarters seen appeals made to the young men to join the ranks, in scorn of consequence. If the appeal has fallen flat, and the young men have not responded as they should, we do not think the leaders and the press are to blame. The real reason of the fiasco appears to us to be that the project has for one reason or another failed altogether to strike the imagination of the Indian youth. In the first place, the proposal came too late and haltingly......... We do not think that the proposal for an Indian unit in the Defence of India Force came at just the right psychological moment. Nor did it come in such a form as to rouse any particular enthusiasm. Apart from the disabilities impressed, and its unattractiveness from a political point of view, the scale on which it was conceived was anything but calculated to strike the imagination. The Government of India complain that the response has not been 'worthy of the name and aspirations of India'. But can it be said that raising a force of 6,000 Indians out of the teeming millions of India, is a proposition 'worthy of the name and aspirations' of India? It hardly looked as if Government were serious about the military value of Indian volunteer units. It looked like offering a plum to a naughty child clamouring for something much more important.......... Next, we do not think sufficient efforts have been made to advertise the scheme. Look at the attempts made to popularise the war loan! Every conceivable effort is made to captivate the popular imagination; and the response has been correspondingly gratifying. High Government officials have worked hard to get subscriptions for the loan. We are not aware of government officials generally having gone out of their way to encourage voluntary enlistment of Indians.......... The tone of the Government Resolution is by no means complimentary. But on the whole, we think it was a wise step to have told the public the plain truth in round terms."]

Kaiser-i-Hind (20), 27th May, Eng. cols.; Rást Goftár (27), 27th May, Eng. cols.

*9. "The Government of India deplore the numerous criticisms passed against the regulations regarding the Force, and seem to suggest that the poor response to the appeal for enlistment is due to all that criticism. This is hardly doing justice to the spirit in which criticism has been offered. Whatever the deficiencies of the measure, the Indian Press and the Indian leaders alike have been exhorting Indians not to think of their rights at the present moment, but only of the splendid opportunity afforded them of displaying their manhood to the world and serving the cause of their country and the Empire. Indians will be the first to admit that hitherto at least the Force has proved a pathetic failure.......... The call has come, the wish of the Indians has been granted. It rests with the Indians to fulfil the vision of Indian patriots despite all historic handicaps. On them rests the future military prestige of India. Let not a single Anglo-Indian say that India has been found wanting in the spirit of self sacrifice. It is not yet too late to retrieve the failure of the past two months." [The Rást Goftár remarks:—"One per million of the population is the ratio, they say, to which the enlistment works up so far. Nothing certainly can be more disappointing. We devoutly wish that the few months that are now left of the scheme will witness a wholesome spurt in recruiting.... ..... To those who ascribe the cause of the failure of the scheme to a tacit protest on the part of Indians against the disability described, we must frankly and honestly say that we cannot participate in their opinion. Soldiering makes no immediate appeal to classes which have long been debarred the use of arms. And critics who are apt to indulge in jokes and jeers must take note of the fact that the past military policy of Government has a good deal to do with the poor response which the scheme has met with in this country. The spirit of voluntary service which has been left undeveloped so far cannot be raised 'to order' in a day.......... The leaders of public opinion owe it to the country to spare it from any degrading humiliation; and we trust that they will leave no stone unturned to get for Government the number of men they need. Since writing the above, we must in all conscience draw the attention of our readers to the remarkable complaint vouched for and advanced by two correspondents in the Bombay Chronicle of the 26th instant. According to them the 'Hopeless failure' of recruitment under the Indian Defence Force Act is due firstly to the inherent defects in the Act and secondly to the unsympathetic attitude of the officials in its administration and that 'Our public leaders' are in no way responsible for the same."]

Hindusthán (16), 21st May.

10. The failure of the Defence Force movement is due to other causes than the criticism of the Press about the pay and the prospects of promotion. The Defence Force Act was hailed with delight throughout India and young men were eagar to avail themselves of the privilege of bearing arms. But the rules issued under the Act damped the enthusiasm of the people and their hopes of getting commissioned posts were frustrated. Besides, officials and heads of educational institutions discouraged young men from joining the force. We have not forgotten the words used by the Principal of the Engineering College, Poona, in the matter of enlistment. The Principal of the Wilson College forbade his students from attending the recruiting meeting which was presided over by Mr. Tilak and some of the students residing in the hostel were fined for attending the meeting. No special facilities were given to school and College students to join the force, as requested. Had College students secured some facilities before the summar vacation many young men would have joined the force. People are not prepared to accept the rules under the Defence Force Act. Government should cease to look with suspicion and distrust upon the peopls and take them into their confidence to ensure the success of their scheme. However, we would appeal to young men to respond to the call to duty issued by Government and would ask them to come forward in large numbers in the service of their country.

Bombay Samáchár (53), 23rd May; Sánj Vartamán (28), 19th May; Jám-e-Jamshed (19), 21st May; Shri Venkateshwar (72), 22nd May; Akhbár-e-Islám (50), 22nd May; Political Bhomiyo (65), 25th May; Indian Loyalist (18), 24th May.

11. The Bombay Samáchár thanks Government for issuing the Resolution relating to the Indian Defence Act and for pointing out the disappointing response which has been made to the opportunity afforded to the people for enrolling themselves in the Indian Defence Force. It believes the Resolution will rouse the people from their lethargy and convince them of the ill effects their poor response to the opportunity offered to them will produce and how in consequence of it Indians will be considered incapable of managing their own affairs. It appeals to young men to disregard all considerations of remuneration and prospects of promotion and to enlist in the Force. It endorses Mr. Sastri's opinion that the failure of the Defence Force movement would be a terrible blow to the national movement and that Indians would have to repent for it all their lives. [The Sánj Vartamán asks popular leaders to concentrate their energies on making the Defence Force scheme a success and thus save India from the stigma that would be cast upon it if the movement ended in failure. The Jám-e-Jamshed is of opinion that the poor response to the movement is largely due to the insufficient remuneration and the distinctions observed between the European and Indian sections of the Force. It asks popular leaders to issue a manifesto so that the Government Resolution may not go unchallenged and create a wrong impression about educated India in other parts of the world. The Shri Venkateshwar ascribes the failure of the Defence Force scheme partly to the nature of the rules under the Act and partly to the indifference of the people. It asks Government to attend to the difficulties of the people and appeals to young men to do their duty to the country by enlisting in the Force. The Akhbár-e-Islám ascribes the poor response to the Defence Force Act to the poverty of the people who cannot afford to give up their ordinary avocations to serve in the Force at a very great sacrifice. It asks rich men to institute a fund to enable those who would join the Force to make adequate provision for the support of their families. The Political Bhomiyo is of opinion that the failure of the scheme has proved the falsity of the boast of the political agitators who want Home Rule and swarajya and has shown them up in their true colours. It appeals to young men to respond to the appeal issued by Government. The Indian Loyalist also strongly urges upon young men the necessity of enlisting in the Defence Force.]

The Government of India should explain why confidential war work cannot be entrusted to Indian clerks.

Indian Social Reformer* (2), 27th May; Message (5), 26th May.

12. "The proceedings before the several Exemption Tribunals, now sitting to dispose of applications from European British subjects to be exempted partially or wholly from compulsory military training, furnish informing reading. On the 23rd instant the Simla Tribunal disposed of, among others, a number of applications from the Military Secretary to the Viceroy for exemption of members on the Viceregal staff. One of these concerned an official, said to be a tour clerk, doing confidential war work. The report states that 'Captain Verney, the Tribunal was informed, had considered the alternative of emplying an Indian, but decided that the duties could not be entrusted to Indians in view of the confidential nature of the work.' We take this passage from the report in the Bombay Cronicle. The Times of India's report does not contain it. We take it that the Times omits the passage because it disapproves of such a flagrant declaration of Viceregal distrust of Indians. It is certainly astonishing that, in the whole establishment of the Government of India, a single Indian could not be found trustworthy enough to be employed as the Viceroy's tour clerk. Successive Finance Members of the Government of India have warmly testified to the absolute secrecy maintained about their proposals of taxation, and we recall particularly Sir Guy Fleetwood Wilson's tribute in connection with the duty on silver which he imposed. We find it difficult to believe that the Military Secretary would have taken it upon himself to urge this most offensive plea, and yet it goes against all that we have learnt to believe of His Excellency that he would have sanctioned it. Nowadays we hear much of psychology, and it is an elementary psychological law that confidence begets confidence. We hope an explanation of the incident will be soon forthcoming." [The Message writes:—" In spite of all the sweet phrases about Indo-British relations, we have never flattered ourselves with the idea that the officials in India look upon Indians with any degree of confidence or trust. Indians may be admitted to Executive Councils, to the Council of the Secretary of State and Empire War Councils and War Cabinets. But Indians, forsooth, cannot be trusted to be confidential clerks! And yet Indians hold a good many 'confidential' posts. Does the Military Secretary, in the plenitude of his superlative wisdom, believe that only the tour clerkship on his establishment could not be filled by an Indian? "]

Government should issue orders to stop the activities of officials in connection with the War Loan.

Mahrátta (4), 27th May.

13. "The War Loan is being 'collected' with a zeal which is praiseworthy, but the methods employed are not always above censure and condemnation. Some days ago we reproduced a letter from a village in Gujarat which first appeared in the Chrcnicle. The Amrita Bazar Patrika of the 23rd instant has brought to the notice of the public the injustice that is being done in Bengal by the War Loan zealots. The Patrika rightly points out that if the loan cannot be pushed without many a ryot suffering cruelties at the hands of the subordinate officials of Government it would be well to stop pushing the Loan. The Finance Minister did not expect to have more than 15 crores from his war loan scheme. That limit has long been overpassed. We do think that the officials all over India should now be asked to stop their war loan activities altogether. Voluntary subscriptions would still be coming in from those who can afford them. We cannot hope that even formal orders of Government requiring officials to abstain from using force or irregular pressure will go far to stop the abuse of authority in this war loan collection business. The ryots and even moneyed men in the mofussil are afraid of the 'men on the spot'. They will tell you in private what 'pressure' they were subjected to—but will never consent to publishing their grievances over their signatures. It is a disappointing state of affairs. But there it is. They will curse the officials who tyrannise over them and will appeal to Heaven with folded hands to look to the Government which keeps such officials in its service! But beyond this they will not go! Will the curses and the appeals go in vain? Government owe it to the suffering ryots—on whose labour they live and thrive—that they should use all possible means to save them from the tyrannies of their underlings. And is it not a duty of the leaders of every district that they should establish a Vigilance Committee with members in every Taluka to collect authentic information of official zulum and to act upon it? A strong Vigilance Committee well advertised even in the nooks and corners of the district is likely to put courage into the villagers, and to 'save' the officials from sinning. A spirit of resistance to tyranny must be cultivated. Disorganised villagers with their little internecine feuds cannot combine to expose the tyrannies of the official zealot. Their disorganisation and their feuds must somehow be put an end to. Every effort that the district leaders will make to compose village feuds and to organise Mutual Help Societies in the villages will serve to raise the character of the villager. The Mutual Help Societies should work in co-operation with the District Vigilance Committee. They may have many well-defined objects as parts of their constitution, but one of these should invariably be the exposure of official zulum."

What should be done and what avoided to ensure the complete success of the War Loan.

Kaiser-i-Hind (20), 20th May.

14. The Kaiser-i-Hind regards the steady flow of subscriptions to the Indian War Loan as an unmistakable proof of the increasing enthusiasm of the different War Loan Committees and of the growing sense of duty and loyalty on the part of the people. It remarks that the rate at which subscriptions have come in latterly, as compared to the rate at the beginning, proves that the loan movement only requires time to spread itself in a satisfactory manner among the uneducated masses of this vast country. In view of the enthusiastic response the people have only of late commenced to make in the matter of the War Loan and also in view of the fact that sufficient efforts have not yet been made in the Native States and British territory outside big towns, the paper entertains the belief that the time now left for closing the subscriptions to the Loan is not long enough to give the public an opportunity to demonstrate their loyalty in its fullest measure. It, accordingly, hopes that the authorities will think over the necessity of extending the period for accepting applications for War Loan subscriptions. [Elsewhere the paper publishes a letter over the signature of "A Villager" in course of which the writer, after expressing his gratification at rich men and big commercial firms subscribing extensively to the War Loan, refers in a somewhat dissatisfied tone to the alleged practice of making poor menials and clerks employed in public offices in British India and the Native States subscribe to the Loan. He also refers to the compulsion alleged to have been brought to bear upon poor cultivators in some of the Native States to subscribe to the Loan though they find it difficult barely to maintain themselves in the present successive bad seasons. The writer further inquires how the poor and uneducated cultivating classes can subscribe to the War Loan when a majority of them have never seen even a currency note in all their lives. He condemns the alleged practice of compulsion above referred to and suggests that it should be soon stopped.]

Suggestion that Government should formulate for the benefits of Government servants a scheme similar to the one adopted by the Bombay Municipality for assisting its employees to contribute to the War Loan.

Hindi Punch (15), 20th May, Eng. cols.

15. Approving of the scheme of the Bombay Municipality for reserving Rs. 3 lakhs for helping its employés to contribute to the war loan, the money advanced to them being recoverable in easy instalments spread over a period of 3 years, the Hindi Punch remarks:—"Will the Bombay Government take a leaf out of this municipal arrangement? I am told they have formulated a scheme for assisting Government servants to invest in the loan and have kept the period of the instalments within narrow limits—a very narrow-minded policy which will hardly be found successful. They should formulate a more generous scheme, so that a Government servant of moderate means and a large family, with all his willingness to assist Government in the present war, may not be forced to keep himself back because a goodly portion of his monthly salary would be cut off owing to the short period in which he would have to return the money taken from Government for the loan."

Appreciation of Her Excellency Lady Willingdon's efforts on behalf of wounded and disabled soldiers.

Islámic Mail (3), 20th May, Eng. edition.

16. After dwelling upon Her Excellency Lady Willingdon's philanthropic efforts and her services in connection with the War Relief Fund, the War Hospitals and the War Loan, the Islámic Mail remarks:—"Lady Willingdon has now taken the first steps towards providing a livelihood for disabled soldiers and the Willingdon Technical School which was opened by the Governor on Wednesday last, is perhaps the first school of its kind in India.......... We had a talk with some of them and they appeared to be extremely happy and hopeful. 'The work we learn here' said one of them 'will fully requite us for our bodily loss'. Every one appeared to be grateful to Her Excellency for her personal attention and solicitude for their welfare. We hope it will be taken up by other provinces in India where the disabled soldiers are flocking in large numbers. The best thing would be to give plots of ground to them for cultivation as most of them belong to the agricultural class."

The fullest information should be given about the labourers sent out of India for war purposes.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 24th May, Eng. cols.

17. "Is there any reason why information should not be regularly published about the number of labourers being sent out of India on account of the war? There need not be any censorship of such information. What is the total number of labourers sent to Mesopotamia? What is the total number of convicts sent to the same country from India? What is the nature of the work on which they are employed and what are the terms on which they have been taken away from the prisons? Then there are 50,000 labourers to be sent to France. How many have been sent so far and how many from each Province? Have they all reached France safely? What are their wages? All this information could be easily given in an official communiqué published from time to time. The employment of Indian labour out of India is a matter of vital interest to the country and the fullest information on this subject should be made available to the public."

Comments on the present situation in Russia.

Gujaráti (12), 20th May.

18. What are we to understand about Russia? Why have the chief Ministers of the Provisional Government resigned? Why has the Commander of the Army and Naval Forces resigned? In his resignation he has stated as his reason for resigning that the control exercised by the Provisional Government over the forces is unstable! We cannot make anything out of this. Is it to be understood that the Provisional Government cannot enforce its orders on the army and the navy? It is said that the army interprets freedom to mean that the war should be conducted in accordance with its wishes! This means that in Russia there is nothing like discipline and power of control. Perhaps the Russian Commanders have gone to Petrograd to consider the situation. The Foreign Minister who took a prominent part in bringing about the revolution and in the organisation of the Provisional Government has also resigned! How can the war be prosecuted and victory achieved when Ministers resign one after another at such a critical juncture? In the absence of definite news people are led to believe that something serious must be in the air. We are not surprised at the resignations of ministers. They may be due to rivalry in the revolutionary party. In Russia the rivalry between the King and the people has come to an end, but now there will be rivalry between the various parties. The revolution has been effected but difficulty has now arisen in the matter of knowing the public opinion through the constitutional Assembly. The Proclamations declare that the war will be vigorously prosecuted and no separate peace will be concluded. But where is the guarantee for putting these intentions in practice? Anybody may come in power in a democracy and we cannot say for certain what may happen at any time.

Bombay Samáchár (53), 21st May; Sánj Vartamán (28), 25th May; Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 23rd May; Akhbár-e-Islám (50), 24th May.

19. The Bombay Samáchár, while inclined to the belief that the internal condition of Russia is not very satisfactory on the whole and is such as to give rise to anxious speculations as to the ultimate attitude the Provisional Government will take with respect to the war, hopes that the loan raised by the United States for Russia and the help given to it in other directions by America will tend to stimulate the enthusiasm of those who want to prosecute the war and to weaken the strength of the peace party. It is of opinion that America must not have offered help to Russia without making sure that Russia will not conclude a separate peace with Germany. [The manifesto issued by the Foreign Minister in Russia leads the Sánj Vartamán to the opinion that in spite of difference of opinion and internal quarrels Russia will not conclude a separate peace. It believes the manifesto will tend to allay the general fears with respect to the attitude of Russia towards the war. The Praja Mitra and Pársi declares that the situation in Russia is very grave and expresses fear that the great influence wielded by socialists in that country might lead to its making a separate peace with Germany. The Akhbár-e-Islám writes in a similar strain.]

Comments on the Government decision to have fortnightly sailings of mail steamers between England and India.

Sind Observer (9), 15th May.

20. Commenting upon the decision of the Government of India to have fortnightly sailings of mail steamers between England and India, the Sind Observer remarks:—"This decision has been arrived at rather late in the day, and we cannot understand why in order to reduce the quantity of mails to be carried action has not been taken to exclude bulky parcels of magazines and other unnecessary literature and articles. The question of shortage of tonnage must be met by drastic measures, and it is up to India to make some sacrifice to assist the Empire in facing a situation the solution of which is of prime national importance. We cannot see the need for maintaining a service of great liners between India and England viá the Mediterranean for the convenience of the few passengers who now make the voyage. No ladies, with very few exceptions, are permitted to travel, and we think the time has arrived to restrict the sailings of passenger vessels to a minimum. Men should be obliged to take their chance in transports not utilised for the conveyance of troops. In this way the Shipping Controller would be able to take over several hundred tons of shipping to assist in wiping out the Germans."

Comments on Lord Pentland's recent speech in the Madras Legislative Council.

Mahrátta (4), 27th May.

*21. "Lord Pentland has thrown a veritable bomb into our midst. The speech which he made in winding up the business of the Madras Legislative Council on the 24th instant warned all concerned to take note of His Excellency's desire that 'in the interests of progress as well as of order all thoughts of the early grant of responsible government should be put entirely out of mind'. His Excellency closed his harangue with the following words:—'On behalf of my Government I call upon all who hear me or read these words for their support in any action which the Government may be forced to take to discourage these unwise and dangerous methods, and the extravagant aims which they are designed to further.' So we are asked to expect a compaign of repression in Madras. Does Lord Chelmsford side with Lord Pentland? Lord Pentland declared that the Home Rule agitation was initiated and persisted in 'against all advice and warning'. He repeated the platitude that this was 'a most unsuitable time' for such an agitation. He stated his high opinion that Home Rule 'if it means nothing less than at a very early date the placing of the executive Government in all its departments under the direct and full control of Legislative Councils containing a large majority of elected members' was not 'within the range of practical politics.' The expressions 'early' and 'very early' do not convey any definite idea. What does Lord Pentland mean by them? Again does he understand by his 'Home Rule' or 'Responsible Government' the reforms embodied in the Congress-League scheme? As he must know, these Reforms fall far short of real 'Home Rule' or 'Responsible Government'. He must also be aware that only the Congress-League Reforms are demanded by the Home Rule 'agitators' at an 'early' or 'very early' date, i. e., after the termination of the war. When the Irish Home Rule question is sought to be solved immediately, is it 'unwise' and 'dangerous' for Indians to ask for an humble instalment of Home Rule after the close of hostilities? May it be that Lord Pentland is sure of the support of the Government of India in his new policy? If His Excellency the Viceroy is on the side of Lord Pentland, India will have some exciting days to pass through. Repression has a place in the Divine Scheme of political development. Russia bears eloquent testimony to this fact. Nothing will frighten true patriots. Let what may, come, Freedom must triumph. As Lord Pentland said, 'the British Empire stands or falls on self-government!' Let the officials of the Empire beware, therefore, how they 'discourage' our self-government propaganda. The Empire shall fall, if India is not allowed to stand on her own feet at an early date."

Comments on orders passed by the Madras and Central Provinces Governments prohibiting students from taking part in politics.

Hindusthán (16), 19th May; Jám-e-Jamshed (19), 21st May.

22. In continuation of its remarks on the order of the Madras Government prohibiting high school and college students from taking part in political meetings and discussions of an objectionable character, noticed in paragraph 7 of Weekly Report No. 20 of 1917, the Hindusthán observes that the publication of such hasty and improper orders by Provincial Governments are calculated to diminish the faith which the public have in them. It alludes to similar orders passed by the Central Provinces Government and, referring to the correspondence between the Inspector of Schools and Head Masters in those Provinces in that connection, observes:—One more duty has been added to the existing duties of the Head Masters. They have now to detect offenders. They have secretly to follow students taking part in political movements and catch them by the ear. Other teachers have to help the Head Masters in the discharge of this duty. We do not understand whether we should pity these teachers or congratulate them. An increase should be made in their pay if that has not been done already. Hereafter they will act both as teachers and detectives. The additional pay to be drawn by them should be defrayed by the Criminal Investigation Department. [The paper here refers to the active encouragement given by teachers in England to the students to take interest in political matters and, remarking that these same English people adopt a different policy on arriving in India either through the effects of the salt air of the ocean they have to cross or through intoxication of power, proceeds thus:—]Educational institutions in this country will be conducted in accordance with popular wishes only when other institutions (also) come to be governed by the people of India enjoying swarájya. The whole of the expenditure incidental to education comes from the pockets of the people and yet they have no right to determine their educational policy. Does this not constitute one more argument in favour of swarájya? The Central Provinces Inspector has declared that those parents who did not approve of the policy governing the working of schools (under the control of Government) were at liberty to remove their children from those schools. It should not be forgotten that such a position has been taken in opposition to the united opinion of the public. Such a reply is not creditable and is destructive of public independence. It is necessary for the public to raise a serious protest against such an attitude on the part of the authorities. The latter set no value on public opinion. We hope that efforts to place such restrictions upon Indian citizens will be stopped in future. [The Jám-e-Jamshed regards the order of the Madras Government as somewhat extraordinary. About the order as affecting school boys it has nothing to say, but it cannot approve of the action of the Madras Government in prohibiting undergraduates from attending political meetings where they can learn many useful things. The paper expresses the hope that the Government of India will deem it fit to make the Madras Government soon withdraw it.]

Hindusthán (16), 20th May, Eng. cols.; Gujaráti Punch (14), 20th May, Eng. cols.

23. "All the Provincial Governments in this country have periodical attacks of hallucination under whose effects they all indulge in strange and unstatesmanlike policy to the detriment of the progress and development of India. The latest victim of these attacks is, it seems, the Madras Government which, according to The South of India Observer, has issued a circular in connection with the students and politics. The circular for its utter lack of statesmanship and for its amazing shortsightedness, is a unique example of its kind. .... Mr. Joseph Baptista has well said in his letter to the Bombay Chronicle that all attempts at artificial restraints on the political tendencies of students are futile. They must be led, not driven or enchained. All views will receive a fair hearing from them. But to gag them is to attempt the impossible. The wave of patriotism is more irresistible than the waves of the sea." [The Gujaráti Punch writes:—"It is surprising and painful to note that the Madras Government has thought itself called upon to issue an order prohibiting the students to participate in political meetings and movements. The reason stated in the order is that in the interests of educational advance it is unwholesome for the students to involve themselves in such discussion. Such a reason can be put forth only by ignoring the chief end of education. .... The knowledge of everything which is intended to be forbidden to them will come to them through the public libraries and the conversation of their parents and friends. So instead of making such fruitless attempts to keep the students away from politics, the Government will, with advantage to itself and to the country, guide them with a sympathetic spirit. We hope that the Madras Government will, before long, see its way to withdraw the order by taking a broad and generous view of the matter as His Excellency Lord Willingdon did in case of the Government servants by clearly expressing in the Legislative Council that there was no objection under the Government Servants Conduct Rules for the Government servants simply attending political meetings."]

Kesari (92), 22nd May; Dnyán Prakásh (33), 24th May.

24. Political education is given to the students in all free countries and we are surprised that quite the contrary policy is followed in India. It appears that Government intend to train us for political work without giving us political education! Who will not laugh at the Government policy that turns topsy turvy the doctrine that fitness cannot be had without training? Government say that they will give us swarájya when we are fit. At the same time they enjoin that we should become fit without any training! If training is not needed for political fitness, if on the contrary such training is forbidden, then why should the question of fitness be brought in while granting swarájya? But our Madras Government want to make the students fit without such training, and when they are fit they are to be given certificates of fitness for swarájya! An extraordinary experiment indeed! [The Dnyán Prakásh says:—The Madras Government have introduced the tutorial system in colleges. The system itself is good, but coming as it does soon after the recent order prohibiting students from participation in politics, we are not glad at its introduction as there are reasons to be suspicious about the intentions of the Madras Government. If there is to be an attempt to suppress patriotic feelings and political aspirations, it will fail in its object or rather it will be a new source of ill-feeling between students and teachers. No doubt there is the need of controlling the waywardness of students, but the work should be undertaken only by those who fully sympathise with the students, and European teachers generally are unfit for the work. We have grave doubts as to how far the system would be successful in Government colleges which are largely staffed by European professors.]

Indian Social Reformer (2), 27th May.

25. "In his speech bringing the proceedings of the meeting of the Madras Legislative Council held last week to a close, His Excellency Lord Pentland referred to the extraordinary order recently issued by his Government prohibiting students from attending political meetings. We are bound to say that His Excellency's explanation makes the action of his Government even more unaccountable than it seemed without it. We have no doubt that the object of his Government in issuing these orders is just what he said it was in his speech. At the same time, we cannot help thinking that it is most strange that the Government of Madras could not understand that the actual effect of their orders is likely to be something altogether different from what they intended it to be. Where such a vital question as the future of students is concerned, plain speaking is a duty which cannot be evaded. Our deliberate view is that the effect of these orders of the Madras Government is likely to promote in the Southern Presidency a situation similar to that which is baffling the best brains of Bengal. To cut off Indian students from the influence of responsible Indian leaders is to drive them directly into the path of perdition."

Comments on the Home Rule League Conference held at Násik.
Kesari (92), 22nd May.

26. The Nasik officials tried their utmost to prevent the meeting of the Home Rule League Conference in Násik which gave an enthusiastic impetus to the League to carry on its work throughout the new year. But fortunately they were not successful in their game. The Police officials, though they had no authority to do so, demanded the right of entry for their reporters and they began to threaten that they would obstruct the meeting in some way or other if their request was not acceded to. The conductors of the Conference know full well that the Police demand is illegal. They are ready to fight legally and win their case, if there was scope for an open inquiry. But a struggle between the Police and the popular party is at the beginning at least like the conflict between an earthen pot and a brass vessel. The Police are able to-day to restrict the freedom of any individual by using their powers. And what is more strange, they have become so brazen-faced as not to feel any shame even if the law courts hold them guilty. Now every word of the proceedings of the Conference must be before Government and they themselves will realise what a mistake they are committing in raising a false alarm about the League, and we hope that they will change their policy of distrust towards that body. We hope similarly that the Congress officials will abandon their suspicious attitude after reading the reports of the Home Rule League. It is never possible for Government to feel happy over the work of the League. If at all, they will feel sorry. We have nothing to do with Government and we need not care for them beyond convincing them that everything is plain and above board with us. The relations between the Congress and the League are of quite a different nature and the League feels confident that it will convince even those who are in the sulks that it is but doing the work of the Congress indirectly.

Comparison between the Irish and Indian question.
Indu Prakásh (35), 23rd May; Dnyán Prakásh (33), 26th May.

27. The Indu Prakásh suggests that Government should entrust the several political parties in India with the task of drawing up a scheme of self-government for India just as Great Britain has called upon the Irish leaders to frame a constitution for Ireland. It says that Government should finally decide this question if all the parties come to a unanimous decision and are also able to satisfy the representatives of Government. The time for taking some such step, it declares, is fast approaching if it has not already come. In the opinion of the paper there will be no danger of this body framing hasty legislation as it will have the co-operation of British representatives. [The Dnyán Prakásh writes :—It is unnecessary to dilate upon the moral of Lord Curzon's admission that Great Britain would not have conferred Home Rule on Ireland if she had not been compelled to do so by force of circumstances. The moral is that no one should expect rulers to confer any rights upon the people unless they are forced to do so. This moral cannot be very encouraging to India which relies on constitutional agitation only, while Ireland had recourse to lawful as well as unlawful means in gaining her object. We are naturally a law-abiding people and will adopt none but lawful methods. We must, however, bear in mind that we shall not get swarajya unless we compel our rulers to give it to us by adopting all legitimate means in our power.]

If the ignorance of the masses has not kept the people in Russia or elsewhere from self-government, it should not in India also.

Kesari (92), 22nd May.

28. Many autocratic Englishmen like Lord Sydenham have lately got into the habit of raising a cry that Indians are unfit for Swarájya as they are uneducated and that it is useless to grant Swarájya unless the people are fit. But the Russian revolution has given them a good slap in the face. The masses of Russia are more uneducated and superstitious than those of India, and yet there was no dearth of educated Russians ready to acquire and carry on Swarájya. The reins of administration are in the hands of the educated in every country and they are always capable of running the administration. That nation which has a sufficient number of educated men to conduct the administration must be considered fit for Swarájya. England itself did not suspend the work of obtaining Swarájya till every cook in the country became a second Lloyd George; and in fact no nation has ever said it would be unfit till it reached this pitch of efficiency. Then why should India alone be given this advice? After the Crimean war the Russian educated classes abolished serfdom. The Duma was established after the Russo-Japanese war. The Tsar was dethroned and democratic government established during the present war. On no occasion did the leaders find the unfitness of uneducated Russians an impediment in the way. Many self-seeking people will advance henceforward, as they have done till now, this argument of unfitness, but like the skilful leaders of Russia our people also should understand their covert purpose.

How Muhammadans would suffer at the hands of the Hindus if India were granted swarájya at the present juncture.

Political Bhomiyo (65), 25th May.

29. The Political Bhomiyo publishes a contribution from an anonymous Muhammadan writer in which the latter, without entering into the question whether the arguments advanced in favour of swarájya for India are weighty or not, raises the question whether its grant will prove to be of any benefit to the Muhammadans. He goes on to argue that the Moslems being immeasurably more backward than the Hindus in the matter of education, if swarájya were granted to India just now the higher posts in the administration of the country would, almost in their entirety, go to the Hindus and consequently in the grant of such a form of government the Muhammadans would secure only a mirage. The writer believes that the condition of Muhammadans would be worse than what it is now if swarájya were granted to India at the present juncture and supports that view by asking to what lengths the Hindus would not go after obtaining swarájya when even now they publicly call them yavanas, mlechhas, butchers and barbarians and do not fail to condemn their holy religion, Islam, as the mlechha Dharma. The writer proceeds thus:—Will the Muhammadans be able to enjoy the same measure of liberty that they now enjoy after India has been granted swarájya? Will the Hindus who, at the time they drink water, do not allow the Muhammadans to sit on the same carpet on which they are sitting, permit the latter to make at the Bakr-id festival, the sacrifices enjoined by their religion? Will these same Hindus, who apply to the Muhammadans the epithets "Musalla" and Bándá (circumcised) and look at them with an eye of contempt, allow them to go along the roads which run close to their temples after obtaining swarájya?

Protest against the alleged misapplication of the King Edward Memorial Fund at Násik.

Young India (10), 23rd May.

30. "The people of Násik seem to have a real cause of grievance against the arbitrary manner in which funds raised from the public are disposed of. About the year 1912, in the tide of a general movement which was abroad to suitably commemorate the late King Edward VII, the people of Násik town and district decided to raise a fund and utilise it for constructing hospital wards, as they deemed it a suitable memorial to His Majesty, whose efforts in the direction of peace and human relief are so well-known. Excepting important headquarter towns, subscriptions were collected on a scientific basis of revenue assessments and about Rs. 45,000 was realised in all. Subsequently, the then Collector summoned a special meeting of the subscribers, to which only the approved pattern of people seem to have been invited, and got it to resolve that about Rs. 30,000 should be utilised to provide the town of Násik with a bureaucratic club, to bear the revered name of His late Majesty. Out of the residue, about ten to fifteen thousand rupees was devoted to providing some hospital wards at Násik. We do not want to say here anything about the club itself except that it is the most exclusive and officialised institution, a small appanage of the Collector's charge. It is thus easily seen how far the district authorities were justified in diverting the funds to a purpose which was never contemplated in the original objects and which is not agreeable to the donors and subscribers of the fund.......... This is not the only case of abusing public funds; and of them (others ?) by and by. We would suggest to the subscribers that it is open to them to go to the High Court for an injunction."

Adverse comments on the proposed grant of Jágirs in the Punjab as a reward for loyalty.

Dnyán Prakásh (33), 20th May.

31. The question naturally arises as to why it is found necessary to reward loyalty in the Punjab by conferring jagirs although the practice does not obtain in any other country in the world. The reason advanced by Sir Michael O'Dwyer that people in England understand their civic duties and are ever ready to perform them without expecting any remuneration, whereas our sense of duty has to be sharpened by the bait of a pecuniary reward, does not appear to be satisfactory. We do not consider our loyalty to be a commercial commodity and are not prepared, therefore, to accept Sir Michael's estimate of our character. The policy adopted by the Punjab Government will only yield spurious loyalty. Flattery of Government officials sometimes passes for loyalty, and this sort of loyalty will be very much in evidence everywhere. If Government begin to grant jagirs on the recommendation of subordinate officials honest men will keep in the background and only the sycophants will benefit. It is most undesirable from the point of view of Government themselves that such loyalty should prevail everywhere.

Comments on a case of dacoity and rape in Bengal.

Hindusthán (16), 21st May.

32. Commenting upon a case of rape and dacoity by armed hooligans that is being tried by the Deputy Magistrate of Hooghli, the Hindusthán writes :—Loyal and peace-loving people are subjected to such miserable treatment owing to the British Government having disarmed their subjects. The dacoits, however, procure arms by some means or other and freely molest peace-loving citizens. Since Government have not been able to protect the citizens from the depredations of armed dacoits in Bengal for years past the people have come to lose faith in the power of Government to protect them in every respect. Under the circumstances Government would do well to allow the people to carry arms for self-protection.

Defence of the Pathans against the allegation that they are usurers and brothel-keepers.

Islámic Mail (3), 20th May, Eng. edition.

33. "We have not come across a grosser libel than the one which has appeared in the Chronicle under the heading 'The Pathan terror,' and we desire to draw the particular attention of the authorities concerned to it. If it is criminal to bring into contempt any class of His Majesty's loyal subjects then our contemporary is guilty of it. It is only the valiant editor of the Chronicle who can stigmatise a noble race as brothel-keepers and usurers. No decent person would indulge in such a hazardous generalisation. Does it stand to reason to condemn the whole Pathan community because one of them figured in an ugly case in the criminal courts ?......... Pathans are a God-fearing and law-abiding people who pursue honest trades and earn their bread in approved ways......... They are mostly labourers who pass their days in the docks or mills and their nights in their rooms. They have been seldom seen in undesirable quarters which are the haunts of Purdesis. A few men who come from Pishin do money lending, but not many of them, and no Pathan keeps brothels. Those who have figured in courts are not Pathans but yaghistanis who are a set of lawless people living close to the Frontier and many of them are Hindus. Ever since Inspector Obaidulla Khan has come to Bombay these Punjabis have been brought to [illegible] and there are few complaints. The people in Bombay know [illegible] better than these journalists and they have very seldom had [illegible]."

Proposed public movement in favour of the extension of His Excellency Lord Willingdon's term of office.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 25th May; Kaiser-i-Hind* (20), 27th May, Eng. cols.

34. The Praja Mitra and Pársi hopes that the suggestion made by Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy for calling public meetings in order to request the higher authorities to extend the term of Lord Willingdon's office as Governor of Bombay will receive support from the general public. It remarks that Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Willingdon, and particularly the latter, have won the hearts of the people by their sympathetic attitude and have made sanitary and other movements successful by personally participating in them. It, however, declares that, unfortunately, His Excellency has not thus far accomplished anything noteworthy in the direction of political and economic reforms. The paper attributes this to His Excellency's anxiety not to take in hand any controversial matters during the continuance of the war. It entertains strong hopes that His Excellency will follow the example of the Home Government who have been making bold and revolutionary changes and have continued to sanction increased expenditure on education and in other matters affecting the economic and moral well-being of the people in spite of the present staggering war expenditure, and take in hand without delay reforms the tackling of which he has postponed at present. The paper maintains that the people wish for the extension of His Excellency's Governorship, feeling confident that all these reforms will be carried out during the extended period of his régime. [The Kaiser-i-Hind, in its English columns, fully endorses Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy's suggestion for a public movement in favour of the extension of His Excellency Lord Willingdon's term of office.]

Comments on the Honourable Mr. Sástri's address at the Bombay Provincial Conference at Násiks.

Gujaráti (12), 20th May.

35. The Gujaráti regards the presidential address delivered by the Honourable Mr. Sastri at the recent session of the 17th Bombay Provincial Conference as a pronouncement fit to be read and pondered over not only by the people of this Presidency but by the whole of the Indian public. In its opinion the address is an effective rejoinder to those officials who try to throw cold water on the political activities of the people. Referring in an appreciative manner to Mr. Sastri's remarks in favour of the grant of Self-government to India, the paper observes:—When revolutionary changes are taking place everywhere on the earth, should India remain confined in a pit? No. India does not desire for good administration or perfect administration. She wants her own administration. [Here the paper refers to Mr. Sastri's remarks to the effect that no one in India intended to subvert by force the authority established in the country and that there was no cause for believing that the protagonists of any such revolutionary change in India would, if successful, receive a congratulatory message from the British Premier and the House of Commons, and proceeds:—] Such congratulations can be given by England to Russia alone! Some historians maintain that the glory and greatness of empires in the past were hollow because in those times slavery prevailed. Those old republics were not imbued with any love for liberty because hundreds of thousands of men lived as slaves! The British Empire is founded on the basis of equality and personal liberty. There is no slavery in it and yet a big nation forming an important portion of the Empire has been kept confined within political bounds. Only those can be said to possess true love for liberty who give to others liberty of the kind enjoyed by themselves. In India it is urged that the people should maintain silence because their affairs are being considered in England! What sort of love for liberty is this? The grant of self-government to the Poles in Russia will be regarded as a piece of political self-interest, but what self-interest is there in the grant of self-government by America to the people of the Philippines? The Times of India urges people not to compare the Indians with the people of the Philippines on the ground that civilisation in India is centuries old! Does it then mean that India is unfit (for self-government) because her civilisation is centuries old while the Filipinos are fit because their civilisation is of a shorter duration? India should at once be granted independence of the kind enjoyed by the Colonies if the Empire is to be built on the foundations of true love for liberty.

Comments on Sir Robert Borden's statement regarding reciprocity in admitting Indians into Canada.

Indu Prakásh (35), 22nd May, Eng. cols.

36. "All-India will unreservedly welcome the declaration made by Sir Robert Borden in the Canadian House of Commons 'that as a result of the fairness and moderateness of India's representations the Government have decided that the regulations regarding the immigration of Indians into Canada should be on the same basis as Indian regulations on Canadians'. This can only mean reciprocity on equal terms and will meet with universal approval throughout the country. It was Lord Hardinge who had suggested reciprocity as a means of the solution of the Indo-Colonial problem, a suggestion which was heartily supported by Indian public opinion on condition that the reciprocity should be on equal terms. Sir Robert Borden's statement, referred to above, favours that idea and we hope it will materialise at an early date in the form of a legislative enactment."

Comments on the judgment of the Acting Third Presidency Magistrate in the defamation case of Anantaram vs. Patwardhan.

Young India (10), 23rd May.

37. "We doubt whether any magisterial judgment delivered in our city police courts has ever caused greater astonishment to the public than that delivered in the case in which Mr. Anantram Vaikantram prosecuted Inspector Patwardhan, C. I. D., for defamation. It appears to us that such a decision opens up a fresh avenue of danger to the public, in addition to that already involved in the very large powers enjoyed by the officers of this Department. Apart from this it seems very clear, as has been pointed out in the admirable criticism of the judgment which appeared in the Bombay Chronicle that the acquittal was based on a wholly erroneous interpretation of the law. However, as the case will no doubt be the subject of further proceedings in the High Court, we have no desire to enter into any detailed criticism of the judgment. We have only one thing more to say at present. In the course of his judgment the Magistrate said he had no hesitation in saying that the complainant was a person who should be 'shunned by all respectable people.' To utter such a ban of ex-communication on even the most hardened criminal would be wrong; it is an outrage when it is uttered in regard to a man who has been convicted of no crime, and is based on such weak and uncorroborated evidence as was offered against the complainant in this case. It appears to us as an abuse of magisterial license to have incorporated such a remark in a judgment. It is all the more deplorable since it comes from a gentleman who professes the religion of Christ."

Kaiser-i-Hind (20), 27th May, Eng. cols.

*38. "An efficient administration of justice requires a free and independent Bar, and we welcome with unfeigned delight the rare but noble courage displayed by two barristers and three pleaders in openly criticising in the columns of the Chronicle the surprising and inexplicable 'somersault', of the learned Acting Third Presidency Magistrate, Mr. Athavle, in his judgment in that now famous case of the ill-starred busy-body Mr. Anantram Vaikuntram. Surprises and sudden developments are exceedingly interesting and well-placed in a novel drama or cinema film, but are most pernicious in the sober atmosphere of our courts of justice......... It will be an evil day for India when Magistrates display more rhetoric than reason in their work. Consistently with their dignity they ought strictly to observe a dignified and impartial attitude during the trial of a case, lest the relation of their attitude to their 'considered judgment' remind one of a lapse from the sublime to the ridiculous."

Comments on the Bombay Pilgrim Committee's Report for 1916.

Bombay Samáchár (53), 22nd May; Jám-e-Jamshed (19), 22nd May.

39. Commenting upon the Bombay Pilgrim Committee's Report for 1916, the Bombay Samáchár, in view of the finding of the Committee to the effect that insanitary conditions in railway trains and a few hours' stay in overcrowded trains are factors which may directly influence the health of the pilgrims, expresses a hope that Government will take steps to ask the Railways to put a stop to overcrowding in railway trains. It expresses satisfaction with the improvement recently made in the matter of storing eatables at the Railway stalls in fly-proof boxes. The paper considers the proposal for building six waiting rooms as inadequate for the needs of the pilgrims and suggests that some arrangement may be made to erect temporary structures to meet the requirements of the passengers during the pilgrim season. It endorses the suggestion of the Committee for erecting water closets on the flush system in all pilgrim centres whose population approximates or exceeds 20,000 and hopes that Government will take steps to carry out the suggestion. [The Jám-e-Jamshed believes that the steps Government are now taking for safeguarding the interests of the pilgrims will put an end at an early date to the ever increasing complaints about the hardships to which the pilgrims are subjected.]

The Commissioner in Sind and the principalship of the D. J. Sind College, Karáchi.

New Times (New), 10th May.

40. Referring to the decision of the Sind College Board not to accept the Government offer of the services of Mr. Hampden, an English and Logic man, in the place of the late Principal Farrel, who was a History and Economics man, an anonymous correspondent in the New Times writes:—"On this meeting the President of the Board, Mr. Lawrence, the Commissioner-in-Sind, was not present. He has been trying to go behind this decision of the Board, by addressing a letter to each of the absentee members of the Board, therein expressing his personal disapproval of this decision and inviting the addressees to give their personal opinions on the point, and in the end of the letter, he throws in a threatening suggestion to the members that even if they did not agree with him as president of the Board, he, as Commissioner-in-Sind, would ask the Government of Bombay not to accept the decision of the Board, as the University Commission which visited the College last, recommended that the College needed one more in English and Logic and as Mr. Hampden was a man in these subjects, the College Board should accept him. Mr. Editor, I ask you, is it fair to the Board and to the public, that a high official like Mr. Lawrence, the Commissioner-in-Sind, should flout the opinion of the Board and that also in this unconstitutionl way of working? I might also state that Mr. Lawrence forgets that the Commission's report was about the days when Mr. Farrel was alive and they recommended an extra man in English and Logic taking it as a fact that Mr. Farrel was there as a man in History. Now that Mr. Farrel's place is to be filled in, it is simply absurd to argue that his place should be filled in by a man in English and Logic, when the need for a History man is much greater than for a man in English and Logic as the commission recommended."

Are Muhammadans in Sind really less fit for Government service than the Hindus?

Sindh Moslem (New), 12th May.

41. In the course of a lengthy article the Sindh Moslem strongly contests the position that Muhammadans are less qualified for Government service than Hindus and that they get into Government service only through favour and remarks:—"For every mediocre Muhammadan or Christian there are 50 Hindus of the kind in service and the service had been so packed with the Hindus that all the Europeans in Sind will not be able to sift any point if Hindus do not wish it or oppose it. For instance let us take the case of a district. The Dafterdar, Huzur Deputy Collector, Head Clerk, Head Munshi, Sheristedar, Mukhtyarkar, Taluka Head Munshi, District Deputy Collector and his staff are all Hindus. Now who—European or Indian—would be able to get any correct opinion about anything or anybody from these channels? If it is about a Hindu question or person it is bound to be favourable and if it is about a Muhammadan or Christian or Jew it is bound to be damning.......... The Hindus can never talk of supersessions whereas every other class in service has reason to most emphatically complain of most cruel supersessions. There are five treasuries in Sind and four of them are managed by Hindus. These four Huzur Deputy Collectors have neither experience nor qualifications nor are they senior or in any way better than others.......... Go to any of these four treasuries on any business and go straight to the treasury officer, you cannot get your work done until the treasury officer consults about a dozen clerks, without whom he is perfectly helpless and he is a veritable curse. If Collector or other European officer did work in this fashion the British Administration might have had to shut up long ago and yet these ways among Hindus are allowed to continue simply because every other class is oppressed and no one can raise even a whisper about the inefficiency and general unfitness of the Hindus."

Complaint about inordinate delay in the publication of the report of the Sind Land Settlement Committee.

New Times (New), 15th May.

42. "We cannot understand the inordinate delay made in the publication of the report of the Sind Land Settlement Committee appointed as long ago as July 1915. The Committee finished taking evidence in the beginning of October 1915 but took about a year in submitting its report to Government. Thereafter, although the Honourable Mr. Bhurgri has been interpellating Government at almost every session of the Bombay Legislative Council, the only reply vouchsafed to him is that the report is under consideration. It is reported that the recommendations of the Committee are very disappointing, the period of settlement being extended from 10 to 15 years as the ordinary rule. That Government should take one year to consider a brief report which promises the people so little is, to say the least, irritating, particularly when we know that if Government so chooses it could be more expeditious.......... The Public Services Commission was a large mountain in labour and we know the mouse it brought forth. The Industrial Commission, now in the middle of its peripatetic investigation, will, we apprehend, be another mountain in a similar predicament. People will have reason to class the Sind Settlement Committee with these two commissions, unless its recommendations and the Government orders thereon are published at an early date."

MUNICIPALITIES.

Protest against the attitude of Government towards the Poona Municipality.

Dnyán Prakásh (33), 22nd May.

43. Government have threatened the Poona Municipality with drastic measures giving it a year within which to mend its ways. We wonder whether His Excellency Lord Willingdon and his Councillors suppose that by suppressing the larger Municipalities on flimsy pretexts they can get an excuse for stifling popular demands for more extended local self-government. The Honourable Mr. Curtis is in charge of the portfolio of Municipalities. Those who are acquainted with the career and temper of this gentleman are well aware that he is a prince of bureaucrats favouring a policy of utter repression. He is against the Poonaites and we understand he has vowed to suppress the Poona Municipality. There is a rumour that Government intend appointing a commission to inquire into the condition of our roads and the expenditure incurred on them during the last three years. The Superintending Engineer, Mr. Framji, and Mr. Mandy, the well-known friend of the Poona Municipality, are to be members of this commission! Mr. Mandy's appointment is tantamount to inviting an accused to be his own judge. There was considerable agitation some time ago that Mr. Mandy had spoilt the city roads while he was in charge of the drainage work. To appoint him to inquire into the condition of the same roads is to give him an opportunity to throw the blame on the Municipality which rightly attaches to himself. If any inquiry is needed at all it is about Mr. Mandy's work in connection with the drainage.

A Committee should be appointed to inquire into the affairs of the Poona City Municipality.

Jám-e-Jamshed (19), 24th May.

44. Referring to the resolution published by Government in connection with the administration of the Poona City Municipality, containing statements pointing to the grave financial condition of the Municipality, to its long-standing failure to increase its income and to various other defects connected with its affairs, the Jám-e-Jamshed thinks that the fact that such a condition of things should exist at a place which for a portion of [illegible] year forms the seat of the Local Government is a startling revelation with respect to Local Self-Government. It refers to the Committee appointed by the citizens of Bandra some time ago to make an inquiry and report on the Municipal mismanagement of that place which led to a gradual improvement of the affairs of that Municipality and suggests that Government should likewise appoint a mixed Committee of officials and non-officials of an independent frame of mind and enjoying the confidence of the public to inquire into the administration of the Poona Municipality. The paper believes that such action is likely to prove most effective in throwing the proper light upon the affairs of the said Municipality and in facilitating the taking of steps necessary to bring about a removal of the present mismanagement in its administration.

Comments on orders alleged to have been issued to Local Boards and Municipalities in Sind to have their printing work done at the Government Press, Karáchi.

Sind Patrika (44), 12th May, Eng. cols.

45. Referring to the orders alleged to have been issued to Local Boards and Municipalities in Sind not to get printing work done at private presses but to have it done at the Government Press, Karáchi, the Sind Patrika remarks:—"The matter may look trivial but it involves a great principle. If the Municipalities are not allowed a free hand in petty matters as these, and if they are not allowed to look to their own convenience, etc., themselves, we do not know what is the meaning of this blessed local self-government? Or whether these Municipalities are considered as children, and unable to use their discretion wisely and well, so that the loving authorities are exhibiting over-anxiety of directing them to the right way and the right place. Thus we are at a loss to understand whether we are moving backward or forward? Will some Honourable Member kindly take up this matter?"

NATIVE STATES.

His Highness the Nizam should be permitted to prefix the words His Majesty to his name.

Muslim Herald (118), 25th May.

46. Apropos of the birthday celebrations of His Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad when he bestowed titles and gifts on Sir Far-e-doon Jung and others, the Muslim Herald suggests that the style and designation of His Majesty may be permitted to be used by the Nizam whose premier position among the Chiefs in India fully entitles him to the proposed appellation.

Comments on measure taken by Her Highness the Begum of Bhopál to check the drink evil in her State.

Islámic Mail (116), Urdu edition, 21st May.

47. The Islámic Mail reports that Her Highness the Begum of Bhopál has laid down that any Muhammadan subject of the Bhopál State who drinks wine will be punished according to the State Laws. The paper commends Her Highness' Notification, and ascribes it to a desire to make her subjects virtuous in every respect. It congratulates the subjects of the Bhopál State on their having such a ruler as the Begum and it draws the attention of the rulers of other Muhammadan States, particularly that of the Nizam, to Her Highness' order with a view to their issuing a similar edict in their own States.

M. K. SHAIKH,

Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 31st May 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 22 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 2nd June 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

Arms Act: People should be allowed to carry arms in order to protect themselves against anarchist outrages 1

British Rule:

- A review of the work and qualifications of Muhammadan leaders . 3
- Anarchy is not the necessary concomitant of a love of independence . 2
- Comments on a public speech at Karáchi in which the English in India are alleged to have been compared to robbers 4
- Comments on His Excellency Lord Pentland's speech in the Madras Legislative Council . . . . 7—12
- Comments on His Highness the Maharaja of Bikáner's utterances in England 6
- Comments on Mr. Chamberlain's statement regarding the representation of India on future Imperial Conferences 5
- Comments on the circular issued by the Madras Government prohibiting students from attending political meetings . . . . . 13 & 14
- The Bureaucracy is purposely misrepresentating the swarájya movement 15
- The Irish and Indian problems compared 16

Haj: Muhammadans should not go on the — this year . . . . . 17 & 18

His Excellency the Governor of Bombay: Proposed public movement in favour of the extension of His Excellency Lord Willingdon's term of office . . . . 19—21

Home Rule League: Criticism of the work done by the — . . . . 22 & 23

Indians in the Colonies: How "reciprocity" between India and the Dominions should be interpreted . . . . 24 & 25

Madras Legislative Council: Comments on the regulation passed in the — requiring members to obtain the sanction of Government before bringing in the Council a motion for permission to introduce a Bill . 26

Police: Nuisance of rabid dogs at Surat 27

Provincial Conference: Comments on the action of certain Muhammadans in first agreeing to join the Reception Committee of the Násik — and then withdrawing their names 28

Public Services Commission: The Bombay Government should invite the opinions of public bodies on the report of the — 29

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

Sind:

Alleged evils of the Hindu domination of Government service in— . 30
Alleged official highhandedness in — regarding the selection of the Principal of the D. J. — College 31
Appeal to Government to grant a special allowance to low-paid employés in — to compensate them for the abnormal rise in prices caused by the war 32

War:

Adverse comments on the raising of the Indian Labour Corps for — service in France and elsewhere 46
Comments on Government Resolution on the failure of the Indian section of the Indian Defence Force scheme . . . . . . 39—45
Comments on the alleged armistice between Russia and Germany . 36
Comments on the alleged new Russian policy of "No indemnities and no annexations" 37
Comments on the alleged removal by British Officers of the sacred thread of Jat recruits in the Rohtak District 34
Comments on the letter written by the Collector in the United Provinces on the subject of contribution to the — Loan . . . . 47 & 48
How Mesopotamia and German East Africa are necessary for the safety and expansion of India 33
India and the Imperial Conference 38
Indian Press representatives in Mesopotamia 35

EDUCATION—

Alleged repression of "National" schools by the Government . . . 49

NATIVE STATES—

Complaint about robberies and armed dacoities in Káthiáwár. Alleged need of repealing the Arms Act 50

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

People should be allowed to carry arms in order to protect themselves against anarchist outrages.

Kalpataru and Anand-vritta (90), 27th May.

1. Commenting on the Armenian Street tragedy in Calcutta in which a gang of ruffians raided a jeweller's shop and after murdering the owner's two sons made away with valuable property, the Kalpataru remarks:—The dacoits carry modern arms of precision and are emboldened by the knowledge that their victims are unarmed. They do not hesitate, therefore, to attack and kill people even in broad day-light and in thickly populated areas. We request Government, therefore, to stop the experiment of protecting the lives and property of people through the police and to allow them to carry arms in self-defence. It is poor consolation to bring the offenders to justice after they have already murdered people.

Anarchy is not the necessary concomitant of a love of independence.

Indu Prakásh (35), 29th May.

2. Thoughtful Englishmen are puzzled to see that Indians are disaffected in spite of the many blessings of British rule. According to a retired Civilian anarchy owes its origin and spread to want of religious instruction. We do not think that religious instruction alone can allay our thirst for more political rights. The knowledge that Englishmen have absolutely no sympathy with our religion, philosophy and political ambitions fosters discontent among the educated classes. Some officials behave very badly towards young educated Indians who shake off their usual servile manners and claim equality with Europeans. This causes intense anger. But this anger also is not the cause of anarchy. Just as there are thieves, etc., in all societies, so also are there anarchists. It is not that an educated man never turns out a thief. It must not be thought that religious education will put a check on political aspirations. We are now fully awake and will attain full political manhood in giving social, economic and religious freedom to every individual in the community. But all this will happen when the English people fully understand it. The services of the C. I. D. are not necessary to ascertain our ambitions; they can be known by actual communion. Moreover, is not friendship with the educated on a footing of equality to be preferred to the flattery of sycophants?

A review of the work and qualifications of Muhammadan leaders.

Islámic Mail (3), 27th May.

3. "A prominent gentleman writes us from Poona to ask what our own leaders are doing in discharge of their public duties. .... Sir Fazulbhoy is champion of education and never tires of harping upon the subject. But what he has done practically to help that cause is unknown to us. His proposed school at Poona is still in the embryo and apparently he thinks that having made a donation he has finished his responsibilty. Then there is Sir Ibrahim, another grand leader whose carriage was unhorsed and dragged by enthusiastic youths at Agra. He advocated the cause of education with great fervour and pointed it out as the stepping stone for self-government, so dear to us all. But evidently he reached the zenith of his ambition on that occasion and has taken no practical part to foster his favourite theme. His name appears again in connection with the Moslem League Committee which is to fight for Home Rule. But we wonder how he is going to win it when he has done nothing to prepare people (educationally) for it. It is to be regretted that his praiseworthy efforts to wrest a college from the Government on the strength of Sir Yusuf Soudagar's donation proved futile.......... Mr. Jinnah has got all for which a candidate for leadership works. By joining the Opposition he has earned a named and fame for himself. He was given the honour to sit at the head of the council of the League in Lucknow and he is going in company with all the men of India to England as accredited representative of the Moselm Community. What more is there for him to work for?......... After these great captains of the unfortunate ship upon which the community is drifting to unknown waters, come the smaller fry-members of the local council and other luminaries who are desirous of shining on the political firmament with the lustre of leadership,—men like Moulana Yusuf Sobani, Sirdar Suleman Mitha, Kazi Kabiruddin and a host of other grandees with or without the prefix of 'honourable'. Some of them are very well meaning men, fired with a genuine desire to earn fame by serving the community. For instance Sirdar Suleman Mitha will give place to no one in his zeal and devotion to the cause of the community. He is straight and sincere. Some of them are energetic men, capable of doing much good; but unfortunately they are themselves unfamiliar with the thing which they are expected give their shoulder to. They have all the attributes of great men minus education. Even those who have secured the title of 'honourable' either through official favour or through their own efforts at election, are sadly lacking in education. Nowhere in the whole of India is the Muhammadan cause entrusted to the keeping of men like the Mussalman members of the Bombay Council. They have had no university career, no academical qualifications, no training for public life, no culture, no education, and yet they are there to fight the battles of the community against the ablest and best public men that modern education and culture have produced in this Presidency. They have not received as much education as an ordinary office clerk, yet they are there to give advice and guidance to distinguished statesmen, members of Executive Council, and Secretaries to Government. We have never been able to fathom the principles which governs their appointment, or to solve the problem how they help the deliberations of the learned Council. If they were there as ornamental figureheads, to decorate the gilded council, then why fasten them upon the heads of Mussalmans who need strenuous workers? There are honorary captains and honorary Magistrates; why not have honorary members of Council to satisfy their vanity? They have their weight in public—the weight of their gold, but nothing more. Punch would not have been able to conceive all the jokes that are spun in the public about their capacity for work in the Council and their fitness for representing the great community which prides upon its political importance. We often hear complaints that the Moslem community does not receive quite as much attention at the hands of officials as the rival communities, and we must say the complaint is not quite groundless. But could it be otherwise? Could those statemen who come to govern us be held to blame by judging of the Moslem community by the quality of its leaders? Is it a wonder that the authorities look down upon a community whose best men are nothing better than the most ignorant Britisher?......... They come across such people as we have just described and think all Muhammadans are alike......... Are the present Moslem leaders any way better than Sir Syed Ahmed, Mohsinulmulk and others of the same galaxy who served the community with their heart and soul? Were not the most distinguished leaders of to-day such as Messrs. Rasul, Mazharul Haq, Jinnah, &c., regarded as out-castes in those days? Let us produce leaders of that type, men of character and intelligence and our salvation would be achieved. The Muhammadans are uneducated but they are a cultured people. They are highly impressionable and whatever impression is cast upon their hearts they treasure it up as a sacred thing. With conscientious, intelligent and sincere lead they can still rise up and dispel the fog of suspicion and mistrust that surrounds them. But unfortunately wealth and intellect seldom go hand in hand, and our Government have not yet risen above the aristocratic atmosphere of India to worship intellect and not Mammon. But we need not despair. Things are changing and their angle of vision may change."

Comments on a public speech at Karáchi in which the English in India are alleged to have been compared to robbers.

Sind Observer (9), 18th and 22nd May.

4. Referring to the views expressed by the Honourable Mr. Sastri in the course of his presidential address at the Nasik Provincial Conference to the effect that action of Government in giving publicity to American opinion of the benefits of British Rule in India was unnecessary, because few realise and understand the full measure of those benefits better than the educated classes in India, the Sind Observer remarks:—"Let us refer to a recent speech at a public meeting in the Khalikdina Hall. The speaker was Mr. Nihalchand U. Vasvani. He told the audience that the English in India are like robbers who have taken possession of the property of persons legally entitled to it, and he dilated on the poverty and illiteracy of the people under British rule. Mr. Jamshed N. R. Mehta, who presided at that meeting, observed at the conclusion of the speech that he concurred in all Mr. Nihalchand had said. Is this an appreciation of British rule? Both Mr. Nihalchand and Mr. Jamshed Mehta are educated Indians and little stars in the petty political firmament of Sind. Have they realised the 'full measure' which Mr. Sastri refers to? They spoke to educated Indians, many of them students. Were they impressing on the audience the benefits of British rule when they described the English as robbers? Is a robber regarded as a benefactor by the persons he despoils? According to Mr. Nihalchand and Mr. Mehta, they, the audience before them, and all Indians have been robbed by the British. This is the proposition in plain English." [In the next issue the paper writes:—"We publish in another column a lengthy communication which we have received from Mr. Nihalchand U. Vaswani who is apparently very indignant at our reference to him in an article on British Rule on Friday last. It is a pity Mr. Vaswani did not consider it necessary to quote the very words he used in his simile of one's house being forced upon by strangers and taken possession by them. It would have enabled the public to decide if the word robbery or robbers was used, as he claims, in a restricted sense. From what he does say in his letter, however, it is clear that he admits having told his audience that the English in India are like robbers, and that he described the English as robbers, which is what we said.......... Persons who have not heard the beautiful things Mr. Vaswani has said about British Rule and who are not aware of his loyalty to the British Crown listening to his lecture in the Khalikdina Hall must have taken away a very wrong impression of British rule, and when one considers that the audience were mostly students, the unwisdom of his language becomes more evident." Elsewhere the paper publishes a lengthy communication from Mr. Vaswani, in the course of which he observes:—"I have nowhere called the English 'robbers'. If I had done so, how could it possibly be reconciled to the sentiments expressed in the extracts given above? Robbers are to be driven away absolutely, whereas I have welcomed the stay of the British in this country. I have only sought to prove how Home Rule is our birth-right and for this I have given the simile of one's house being forced upon by strangers and taken possession of by them. I have sought to show that we are the owners of our country as an individual can be the owner of his house. The word 'robbery' has been used in this restricted sense and nothing beyond it, and I mean no offence by it. The word should be taken with reference to the context and not by itself."]

Comments on Mr. Chamberlain's statement regarding the representation of India on future Imperial Conferences.

Young India (10), 30th May.

5. "According to a statement made by Mr. Chamberlain in the House of Commons, the altered status of India is comprised in her admission to the Imperial War Conference. India is to be represented 'at the annual session of the Imperial Cabinet by a nominee of the Indian Government besides the Secretary of State'. Mr. Chamberlain emphasised, as he has been doing all this time, that this decision marked an advance, certainly not 'immense' as he says, in the position of India in the Empire. Further also, the Indian representatives are in future to be Indians except in peculiar circumtances, Mr. Chamberlian alone knowing what they are. If, however, this is all the alteration in India's status, India has no reason to be proud of it. The change, as we remarked on a past occation, signifies no more than the change from Tweedledum to Tweedledee. Speaking for the educated opinion of the country we beg to point out that this change alone will never satisfy the people of this country. On the other hand, such declarations as these from high places have a tendency to sap the confidence of the people in the promises and pledges of their rulers. Mr. Chamberlain may have other substantial changes in view and the Government of India may be considering very seriously indeed the Memoranndum of the famous Nineteen. But all this does not certainly go far to reassure the public mind that either the India Office or the bureaucracy-ridden Government of India mean well by the people at the close of the war. Everywhere there are signs of pessimism, and unless a definite and unequivocal pronouncement is made as to British policy in this country during and after the war, we are very much afraid that disjointed statements like these will merely sour public feeling."

Comments on His Highness the Maharaja of Bikaner's utterances in England.

Sind Advocate (7), 17th May; New Times (New), 16th May.

6. Referring to His Highness the Maharaja of Bikaner's doings in England the Sind Advocate remarks:—" The kindness and consideration with which he was treated seems to have carried him off his legs. At the Imperial Conference Dinner he said that India was not yet fit for Home Rule, and again latterly when Mr. Wells, an alien, gave expressions to the view that India must get swaraj, the Maharaja went out of his way to contradict Mr. Wells and to declare that Mr. Well's view was not that of the Indian people. Though the Maharaja is Indian born, he has been surpassed by an alien as regards sympathetic understanding of Indian aspiration and claims. Let the Maharaja by all means rejoice in the precedence which was given him at the Buckingham Palace Dinner over even the Prime Minister and the Secretary of the Colonies; it is characteristic that while the Maharaja would keep British Indians down he wants more power for native chiefs by all means. And yet it is notorious that native chiefs are less enlightened as a class than the British Indian political leaders and even many of their followers." [Elsewhere the paper adds: " While the utterances of the Maharaja have hitherto been unfortunate, in his letter to the London Times he has to a certain extent set himself right before public by supporting the Indian political aspirations—in short, that of swaraj."] The New Times writes:—" The conduct of the Maharaja has been so peculiar, and the number of honours which have been heaped upon him have been so numerous, that an uneasy suspicion crosses our mind whether he is not being made, by the astute and clever politicians of Whitehall, to serve the same purpose which Mr. Hughes served during his famous visit to England on behalf of Australia. The Maharaja of Bikanir was never known in India for his enlightenment or progressive views and it comes to us somewhat as a surprise to hear the Maharaja speaking volubly on liberty, civilisation and the rights of humanity. It seems to us that the British Government trots out the Maharaja whenever it is in a difficulty with regard to any measure English or Indian.......... In matters affecting India in the Imperial War Conference the Maharaja acted as docility personified, and signed away the dearest rights of India without getting anything substantial in return. After the innumerable sacrifes made by India, one would have thought that it would get something more than the reciprocity which even Lord Hardinge thought to be insufficient for removing Indian grievances. The last use to which the Maharaja seems to have been put by the Secretary of State is in connection with the reforms which, it is feared, the Times and the British Government propose to rush through, without giving the Congress and Moslem League deputations an opportunity to lay the real views of India before the British people.......... The Maharaja endorses the suggestion of the Times that an authoritative declaration on British policy in India should be made and suggests that the advances to be made should be conceived with breadth and generosity. We would welcome this declaration if we but knew what is meant by the Maharaja's breadth and generosity. If our ideas of them are to be derived from our experience of them in the past, we would do well to do without them."

Comments on His Excellency Lord Pentland's speech in the Madras Legislative Council.

Young India (10), 30th May.

7. " Will England allow it to be said of her hour of trial and tribulation that she invited the gallant sons of India to shed their blood in defence of her flag on alien fields, in defence of the freedom of Belgium, Servia and Poland and in return denied it to their revered Motherland? It is impossible to think, as Lord Curzon said in reference to Ireland, that England will fail to do for those who are living under the rule of an alien bureaucracy within the Empire what she has succeeded in doing for others. Can it be said of her that she regards Belgium, Servia and Poland worthy of freedom and justice and denies it to Ireland or India? These are questions to which a definite answer has yet to be framed. Meanwhile, it fills us and all those who are interested in the higher destiny of the Empire with deep sorrow to behold men, who ought to know better of their duties and responsibilities, spurning with contempt the innumerable opportunities for cementing still more closely the ties that bind this country to the Empire. Surely we do not flatter ourselves with false hopes; but we do earnestly believe that a less inglorious destiny than false prophets like Lord Pentland have been able to conceive, awaits India at the close of the war. India cannot and will not remain content to be tied to the apron-strings of the bureaucracy. The time for it even as a continued possibility has gone by. And unless British statesmanship has become bankrupt, which we are glad to note from Lord Curzon's speech it is not yet, we hope to achieve, if not full and immediate Self-government, at least a large and substantial measure of it to start with with a view to the attainment of complete autonomy on the basis outlined in General Smuts' most recent speech within a definite time.......... This is not the time for soft words or pious sentimentalisms, for people in high positions to proclaim their general sympathy with Indian aspirations as a distant ideal, to be attained 'step by step'.......... 'To ignore facts is,' even as Lord Pentland thought, 'to deceive ourselves. To ignore warnings from such sources is to court disappointment and humiliation.' We had sincerely hoped that His Excellency the Governor of Madras had applied this inexorable truth in the case of his own Government. It seems to us from His Excellency's profoundly narrow, ill-tempered and ill-tuned speech that his Government has not only ignored the hard facts but also their plain, unmistakable warnings.......... It has been written as an outcome of this war that all differences of superiority or inferiority arising from caste, colour, creed or nationality shall be obliterated and once more man shall be deemed equal in the eyes of God and man. Such is the writing on the wall. Will Lord Pentland shut his eyes to it, as the ostrich is said to bury its head in the sand in the belief of eluding pursuit? It is no doubt hard for those who have been accustomed to the exercise of absolute power, to look in the face the stern reality of facts. But is not harsher still the denouement? Hitherto His Excellency Lord Willingdon had alone been conspicuous by the sermon he read to political agitators; now, His Excellency Lord Pentland aspires to share even more largely in the glory by his invective against those who are demanding Home Rule for India........... 'Throughout the whole British Empire,' said he, 'the utmost efforts and the best brains are focussed upon the immediate tasks of the war, and it is futile to expect men in high office or leaders of public opinion anywhere to concentrate their attention at such a time upon the subject of Indian Government.'' Indeed! The same was said of Ireland until not very many months ago. 'The immediate task' was boomed in the face of the Irish Nationalists, but notwithstanding it, they went into opposition. And now to turn to what Lord Curzon says: 'The settlement of the Irish question emerges as a world-factor of capital importance'; 'when the war was over and we commenced the task of reconstruction which would not be less difficult and anxious than the conduct of the war itself, who could doubt that a contented Ireland would be an asset of immeasurable value to the future settlement of the interests of the British Empire?' Substitute India for Ireland and we obtain the key to the solution of the problem. Truly has Mr. Philip Snowden remarked in New India:—'India has a special interest in the Irish Home Rule question.' In both the cases, old antagonisms remain 'more embittered than ever'. But if the Irish question has come to be regarded as an urgent war question, it is because other forces have been at work, which have stilled the bureaucratic opposition. The only difference in this respect between the two countries is that those forces operating in favour of Ireland are absent in the case of India, and this disadvantage is further strengthened by distance, ignorance and interested misrepresentation that all is well with India. Lord Pentland, like Lord Willingdon, says that the Home Rule movement is an 'untimely and ill-judged departure,' far more likely to shake the confidence of its friends in the fitness of Indians for Self-government. We quite endorse these remarks. If Indian Home Rulers had conducted themselves on the lines of Irish Home Rulers, clamant and aggressive, their case had a chance of being heard at Westminster......... Lord Pentland is quite right when he says that an agitation conducted so feebly is far more likely to shake the confidence of our friends in our fitness for Self-government. We hope Home Rulers will realise the meainng of this valuable advice, valuable because it is prompted by the long experience of Lord Pentland in English public life, and conduct their agitation in such a way as to secure the confidence of all true friends of India."

Sunday Tatler (new), 27th May.

8. "We welcome Lord Pentland's remarkable speech of remonstrance and warning. If we may say so without disrespect, we have not latterly come across a more straightforward and statesmanlike utterance than that in which the Governor of the Southern Presidency exposes (1) the utter impracticability of the demand for Home Rule for India, that is, at once handing over the administration to elective Legislative Councils, and (2) the gravely objectionable methods of agitation and criticism indulged in by the Home Rule party. .... The net result is that the Home Rulers not only cherish utterly impracticable ideals of government in the near future, but they are also doing their level best to render government in the present impossible. That is the charge the Home Rulers must meet. If they cannot meet the charge in sober mood, but only indulge in fresh vituperation, they must take the consequences, and Lord Pentland has very plainly indicated their nature."

Praja Mitra and Parsi (25), 31st May and 2nd June, Eng. cols.

9. "We may feel disposed to give credit to Lord Pentland for the candour that he claims, but we are afraid we cannot give him much credit for tact.......... We ourselves have not much sympathy with the Home Rule movement in all its aspects; nor do we approve of all the methods pursued and persisted in by some of its most notorious advocates and exponents. But Lord Pentland has in terms far exceeded a castigation of these objectionable aspects and methods of agitation. He has not taken care to exclude from his sweeping and wholesale condemnation the perfectly loyal and legitimate propaganda of moderate and highly accredited public bodies, like the National Congress. The effect of his outburst, therefore, is calculated to be most unfortunate and mischievous......... Nor was it more wise in its prognostications upon the future of the Indian political situation. .... A provincial Governor, to whom these aspirations are not addressed, has no call to express an opinion on this point......... Where is the harm if the people are left to dream their dreams? Of course, Lord Pentland's motive is to spare the people a violent disillusionment. But is it so very certain that all the dreams of India are impracticable? Does Lord Pentland know? Does anybody know? Why then create unnecessary bitterness and heart-burning at this stage, by speaking in terms of uncompromising pessimism? .... On the whole, we do not think any candid friend of England or India can congratulate Lord Pentland on his singularly ill-timed and tactless speech. Its only effect can be to make people grow violent and acrimonious in their agitation. Nor are threats of repressive measures the best method of putting down undesirable agitation. The best means of dealing with it, next to sympathetic consideration, is to ignore it and say nothing." [In a subsequent issue the paper writes:—"We tremble to think what would have happened had Lord Pentland been appointed Governor of Bengal five years ago.......... Let us sincerely hope that Lord Pentland will be well advised and will not drive Madras to the same state that Lord Curzon drove Bengal."]

Message (5), 29th May.

10. "We congratulate His Excellency Lord Pentland upon having practically realised that the question of Home Rule has reached the region of practical politics. It must be remembered that, though His Excellency speaks of the question as outside practical politics, he would not have delivered a political sermon to the Legislative Council, taking the question of Home Rule as his text, had he really thought in his innermost heart that the question was countenanced by no influential or responsible public opinion, or that it was a mere chimera bound to hover for long outside the sacred regions of practical politics.......... His Excellency tells us that this is not the time to discuss questions of political reforms for India. Strangely enough, on the same day as that on which the papers reported His Excellency's speech, preaching the above truth among others, we read on another side of the same papers that the British Cabinet seriously proposed to consider the revolutionary question of the reform of the House of Lords. Again, in another column of the papers of the same date we read that Sir Edward Carson said that, in spite of the war, he spent six hours daily on the consideration of the Irish question and that it was foolish to expect that, while all the rest of the world was undergoing revolutionary changes, the United Kingdom alone should be the exception. His Excellency assumes that, if some steps be taken by him to discourage the Home Rule propaganda, his Council would support him. The assertion practically means a threat to the Home Rulers. Such veiled threats may conceivably lead, or rather mislead, some youthful spirits into acts of violence which the Home Rulers no less than the Government deprecate. But whether they contribute to such ill results or not, they cannot make the many body of Home Rulers swerve a whit from the right path, dictated to them by enlightened loyalty and patriotism.......... His Excellency's chief objection against discussion of Home Rule proposals is that it is one-sided. We admit that the discussion is publicly carried on by one side only, but the right remedy is for the other party to leave its present attitude and participate in the discussion. If the latter chooses to avoid publicity and prefers sending confidential despatches, or conferring privately with Round Table knights re Imperial reconstruction—if the other party, we say, prefers these methods to those of public discussion, it is welcome to follow them. But then they should not complain that the discussion is one-sided. Mr. Lloyd George and his Cabinet do not shirk the consideration of the Irish question and then make it a grievance that all discussion is only one-sided. Such tactics are repugnant to the British sense of fair play, but somehow or other the British traditions of fair play, liberty and other estimable virtues are not conspicuous in India as they are elsewhere."

Bombay Samáchár (53), 30th May; Sánj Vartamán (28), 26th May.

11. The Bombay Samáchár expresses its satisfaction with the explanation given, in the course of his Council speech, by Lord Penland for his recent orders in the matter of students and politics and believes it will convince the people of Madras that the orders were issued with a good motive. It believes, however, that it is open to question whether the students will be really benefited by refraining from politics. Discussing Lord Pentland's views about Home Rule it expresses the opinion that those persons who at the present critical time place unattainable ideals before the Indian people do harm to India and to the cause espoused by the Congress. It expresses a hope that the persons referred to will take the advice of Lord Pentland to heart and refrain from misleading the public and that the public will take care to see that the cause of the Congress does not suffer by its affairs being placed in the hands of such persons. [The Sánj Vartamán writes :—Lord Pentland's pronouncement will be received with disappointment throughout India and we are afraid it will tend to throw cold water on the enthusiasm of Indians for co-operating with Government in the prosecution of the war. We wish Lord Pentland had postponed giving vent to his feelings till the close of the war. Lord Pentland is quite in the wrong if he is under the impression that the demands made by the nineteen non-official members of the Imperial Legislative Council are of an impracticable nature. These demands reflect the opinion of educated India and are supported by the Moslem League and the Congress. Official bureaucrats being short-sighted, we never expected them to accept the reasonableness of these demands; but we have hopes that the British public will give careful consideration to them. Now that Lord Pentland has officially announced his opinion, the question naturally arises as to whether he has been authorised by the Viceroy or the Secretary of State to do so. If the Secretary of State has authorised Lord Pentland to express his opinion in the manner he has done, the necessity of sending a deputation to England to enlighten public opinion on Indian questions in that country becomes very imperative. Great changes have been expected in the opinions of British Politicians and it is a matter for regret that our rulers should still continue to cling to the old orthodox views. We do not think they render any service to the Empire by their present policy.]

Hindusthán (16), 26th and 30th May; Jám-e-Jamshed (19), 28th May.

12. Lord Pentland has declared war on the Home Rule movement in India. At a time when Russia and Poland have received Home Rule and Ireland is on the way to it Lord Pentland wants Indians to keep quiet and to refrain from participating in political movements and threatens them with repression if they do not act according to his wishes. Lord Pentland indirectly charges those who take part in political movements with disloyalty. We wonder who has authorised Lord Pentland to announce the policy foreshadowed in his speech. Is he on his own responsibility going to put down the Home Rule movement? If the higher authorities disapprove of Lord Pentland's views they should make a declaration to that effect to allay public doubts. We do not think Lord Pentland has any right to say that India will not get Swarájya. Suffice it to say that Lord Pentland has taken a very indiscreet and ill-advised step in making the speech. [In a subsequent issue the paper expresses hope that Lord Pentland will be reprimanded for his indiscretion in making the objectionable speech. The Jám-e-Jamshed is afraid that the speech will stimulate political agitation and give rise to discontent and that it will tend to strengthen the hands of the Extremist party and to weaken the influence of the Moderates.]

Comments on the circular issued by the Madras Government prohibiting students from attending political meetings.

Indu Prakásh (35), 28th May; Subodh Patrika (38), 27th May.

13. Commenting on the Circular of the Madras Government prohibiting students from attending political meetings the Indu Prakásh writes:—Government object to students taking part in political meetings. They have no objection, however, to their participating in religious or social gatherings where Indian customs and religious beliefs are freely ridiculed. It is evident, therefore, that Government desire the students to keep aloof from a movement that might possibly clash with their authority and are in no way concerned with the formation of their character. They should be impartial and either rule that students can take part in political meetings or that they should have nothing to do with any meeting whatsoever. Generally, nowadays all speeches are reported in newspapers which all students read. Where is the harm then to hear a speech which is reproduced in a newspaper? Again, are teachers and parents expected to perform the functions of the C. I. D. and report to the authorities the names of students who attended political meetings? Man always wants to do what he is specially told not to do. It is human nature. Public opinion is gaining in strength and the days of autocratic rule are numbered. If Government will take the people into their confidence the question of students taking part in politics will automatically be solved. [The Subodh Patrika remarks:—The students have come under the displeasure of the Madras Government, who intend giving them a lesson in loyalty by means of a circular. To prohibit students from attending meetings is to stunt their political growth. Students read newspapers and are acquainted with current topics. Hence to refuse them permission to attend political meetings is to specially attract their attention to politics. What good can the young graduates do to their country who know nothing about the views of well-known popular leaders such as the Honourable Mr. Shastri, the late Mr. Gokhale and others?]

Gujrát Mitra (13), 27th May.

14. The Gujrát Mitra remarks that the order recently issued by the Madras Government prohibiting students attending High Schools and Colleges from attending political meetings will not be regarded as a step commendable on the part of Government. It feels surprised that when students in Europe are given a regular training in politics in India attempts are being made to keep them aloof from that sort of training which they can acquire in this country only by attending political meetings. The paper expresses surprise that Government should have never placed any restrictions upon the students going to liquor shops or visiting objectionable shows, but that their attendance at political meetings should horrify Government. It holds the opinion that the circular of the Madras Government instead of producing any good effect upon students will produce harm by exciting their curiosity about political matters and making them acquire an imperfect knowledge about them in a secret manner.

The Bureaucracy is purposely misrepresenting the swardjya movement.
Kalpataru and Anand-vritta (90), 27th May.

15. There is nothing wrong in our constitutional agitation for self-government. The success of this movement, however, will ultimately impose a check on the autocratic powers of the bureaucracy. The officials, accustomed to exercise unrestricted authority, are not likely to brook any such check. They misrepresent, therefore, the swardjya movement as seditious.

The Irish and Indian problems compared.
Gujarati (12), 27th May; Sánj Vartmán (28), 29th May.

16. After passing in review the recent history of the Irish problem, the Gujarati refers to the proposed convention, representative of all shades of Irish life, which is going to be formed to formulate proposals for a new constitution for Ireland, and remarks:—It is to be seen in what manner the convention solves the whole question. England has freed herself (from all responsibility) by placing the whole burden of the matter upon the Irish Nationalists and the Ulstermen. The Indians, however, have to learn a lesson from this. All the Indian communities should firmly and with one voice make a demand for the grant to India of internal autonomy on the basis of that prevailing in the Colonies. It is also necessary to show that this demand has emanated from the very hearts of the people. Until it is shown that this demand is the result of anxious solicitude on the part of the people and that they are anxious to have it conceded at any cost the agitation is not likely to produce any effect upon England. Just as Ireland is asked to determine for herself what sort of Home Rule should be given to her, it has been settled to convene a conference composed of (the representatives of) the House of Lords and the House of Commons to determine the position of the House of Lords in the political constitution of the country. It is strange that while British statesmen are not afraid to tackle this one more controversial question during the period of the war the authorities in India are afraid to act likewise. After the war many questions will require consideration and they will evoke sharp criticism. It is not wrong to dispose of big questions now instead of discussing them on that occasion. If the Government of India look at Indian matters from this standpoint and if the demands now being made by the Indians are dealt with in consultation with the leaders of the people, their action will be greatly welcomed and the sacrifices which the Indians have made in the war, directly and indirectly, will not have been made in vain. [The Sánj Vartamán writes:—While a world of change has come over the views held in the past by the bitterest opponents of the grant of Home Rule to Ireland, rulers in this country, far from granting anything like swardjya, crush the just and legitimate aspirations of the people by characterising even their reasonable demands for reforms in the administration of the country as 'catastrophic', 'rash' and 'impracticable'. But that need not disappoint the people. Ireland has borne many such disappointments and there are still men who would cause her disappointment; but when persons like Lord Curzon and Sir Edward Carson have to bow down before the force of the public wish and the voice of the people, a day will come for India when statesmen like Lord Pentland and Lord Sydenham will see their mistakes, and if they will look at things in a catholic spirit they will recognise the necessity of gratifying the legitimate hopes of the Indian people. Putting despondency aside, we should persist in laying before the authorities and the British public our demands for our sacred rights in a constitutional manner, and, just as the Irish people have, for decades, borne criticism, sarcasm and rebuke, we should also make ourselves thick-skinned and be prepared for all such opposition.

Muhammadans should not go on the Haj this year.

Akhbár-e-Islam (50), 31st May.

17. Dwelling upon the perils of the seas due to enemy submarines and referring to the unsafe situation in Arabia brought about by the outbreak of hostilities in the Hedjaz, the Akhbár-e-Islam persuades those Muhammadans who are thinking of performing the Haj this year to give up that idea. It appeals to the members of the different Haj Committees established in the mofussil and of other Moslem associations to follow the advice of the Bombay Haj Committee and by means of resolutions passed at meetings, handbills, etc., urge Muhammadans to postpone going on the pilgrimage this year. The paper maintains that it is the duty of all Muhammadans intending to perform the Haj to follow the advice and suggestions made to them by the members of the various Haj Committees who are all Muhammadans. It remarks that even the Holy Koran does not enjoin upon the followers of Islam the performance of the Haj at the risk of their person and property and that, therefore, those who will postpone their intention to perform the Haj will be only following a course which is righteous in the eyes of the Almighty.

Islámic Mail (3), 27th May.

18. "It is highly improbable that the shipping companies will be able to find steamers for the Pilgrim traffic to Jeddah. Every big and small vessel is in the service of Government and such is their demand for military purposes that we do not think Government can spare them even if they so desired. Intending pilgrims should postpone their departure till favourable times are restored and the Haj Committee in Bombay recently passed a resolution to that effect.......... Our kind Government did their best to maintain the Haj traffic so far as they could. They maintained it during all the trying times of the war and even at some expense to themselves. If they cannot provide ships for it, it is because it is absolutely impossible to do so. Our people will, therefore, be well advised to put off the Hadj for the next season."

Proposed public movement in favour of the extension of His Excellency Lord Willingdon's term of office.

Bombay Samáchár (53), 29th May.

19. The Bombay Samáchár remarks that the people of the Bombay city as well as the Presidency should take up Sir Jamsetjee's suggestion advocating a public movement in favour of the extension of Lord Willingdon's term of office. It believes that such a request on the part of the public will not fail to receive sympathetic attention from His Majesty and the Secretary of State for India. It dwells on His Excellency's policy of taking public leaders into his confidence by inviting them as his guests at the Government House and on his sympathy for the aspirations of the people. It attributes the absence of any substantial practical benefits resulting from his sympathetic policy to the existence of the war. The paper, however, observes that the public entertain the hope that during the few remaining months of his Governorship His Excellency will follow the traditions of the Liberal Party to which he belongs and will guide the local Legislative Council in such a manner that it would deal sympathetically with the Bills which are going to be brought before that assembly in connection with the subjects of local self-government and primary education.

Hindusthán (16), 1st June.

20. The Hindusthán writes generally in strong terms about the movements advocating the extension of the terms of office of retiring Governors and Viceroys, which, it thinks, have now-a-days become too common in this country. It remarks that this mad craze for demanding these extensions should stop soon. It cannot understand what special reason Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy had to set on foot the movement for the extension of Lord Willingdon's term of office. In view of Lord Hardinge's Viceroyalty being extended only for six months and in view of the term of Lord Carmichael's Governorship not being extended at all in spite of the Bengal public having agitated for it, the paper does not hope that His Excellency Lord Willingdon's term of office will be extended in pursuance of the present movement. It further maintains that the prayers for the extension of Lords Hardinge and Carmichael's terms of office were justifiable, for they had made many endeavours for promoting the welfare of India and helping the Indians in the direction of realising their aspirations, while, it adds, the general public do not endorse or have any sympathy with the present movement in favour of the extension of Lord Willingdon's term. The paper then goes on to remark:—We cannot remember any liberal act thus far having been done during Lord Willingdon's régime. The present times may be difficult and extraordinary, but we believe that in such or even slightly worse times a ruler who has got the good of the subjects at heart can do much. We must declare that Lord Willingdon has not done anything of this kind. Whatever Lord Willingdon has done he has done under the strong pressure of the public opinion that was brought to bear upon him in the local Legislative Council. Of course the members of his Executive Council should be held partly responsible for that, but a large portion of our criticism must fall to Lord Willingdon's share, he being the head of the local Government. [The paper in conclusion remarks that serious and important movements which have for their object the extension of the terms of office of Governors and Viceroys should not be set on foot merely for the sake of flattery or for other trifling reasons without there being any concurrence in them on the part of the public or any sound reasons to support them.]

Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 28th May, Eng. cols.

21. "The appeal made to the public of the Bombay Presidency to demand an extension of His Excellency Lord Willingdon's term of office as Governor of Bombay deserves cordial support; and we have no doubt it will receive that support from all public bodies and the people generally.......... With regard to Lord Willingdon there is no doubt that the desire to keep him among us longer is both general and genuine. And the people would be glad and grateful if His Majesty's Government can make that concession to popular wish. There is no question as to the immense personal popularity of Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Willingdon. They have both worked hard for the people of Bombay and also for war relief. It is true that His Excellency's term of office is not marked by any outstanding measure of liberal statesmanship; and he has been occasionally led into somewhat unpopular situations. But there is no doubt that on the whole His Excellency has governed the province with tact and sympathy.......... His term of office has been one of unusual difficulty; and we believe that along with the late Viceroy, he too deserves some measure of credit for the loyal and gratifying response of India to the Empire's call for war service. In easier times probably His Excellency would have seen his way to initiate a more liberal and courageous policy of progress and practical reform. Whatever the shortcomings of his administration, he has not distrusted the people's chosen leaders, and has not been distrusted by them.......... We cannot be too sure in these days that a successor endowed with such qualities can be easily found. Nor can the place be easily supplied of His Excellency's peerless lady, to whose credit there stand in our midst scores of monuments of true womanly sympathy and practical philanthropy."

Criticism of the work done by the Home Rule League.

Dnyán Prakásh (33), 31st May.

22. We trust we shall not be accused of willfully minimising the value of the work of the Home Rule League during the past year. We would only invite attention to the actual amount of work done because that alone will justify the existence of this body. The extent of its membership or the amount of subscription it has been able to collect is no criterion of its necessity or desirability. There is no special merit in becoming a member of the Home Rule League as the idea of that body is the same as that of the National Congress. Indeed all educated and thoughtful men are advocates of self-government. The League need not, therefore, congratulate itself on the extent of its membership. The speeches made by the Home Rulers were generally poor; their tracts are worse. We would have had nothing to say if the supporters of this movement had the courage to disregard the displeasure of Government in the pursuit of their ideals. But men who are easily cowed down by the police have no right even to talk of establishing a rival institution to the Congress. We are frankly of opinion that the amount of work hitherto done by the body, which aims at obtaining Swardjya within two or three years is quite insignificant. Mr. Tilak had the temerity to say that the National Congress would not have passed the resolution on Swardjya if the League had not been in existence. His courage in declaring that the Home Rule torch which he lighted at Belgaum is giving light to the whole of India is simply admirable! As a matter of fact the National Congress even before Mr. Tilak and his followers were readmitted into its fold, had drawn up a scheme for self-government in co-operation with the Moslem League. There is no antagonism between ourselves and the Home Rule League. We would welcome all assistance from whatever source it comes. We loyally abide by the decision of the Congress to co-operate with all bodies that strive to obtain swardjya. But we cannot honestly say that the behaviour and mentality of the promoters of the League are such as to prove the necessity for any such institution.

Kesari (92), 29th May; Hindusthán (16), 31st May; Dnyán Prakásh (33), 29th May; Prakásh (99), 30th May; Karnátak Vaibhav (74), 29th May; Indu Prakásh (35), 30th May; Sandesh (100), 31st May.

23. An index of the spread of any movement is the attention bestowed upon it by Government officials. Judged according to this standard it must be said that the swardjya movement has attained great progress. A few days ago Lord Willingdon condemned it indirectly and mildly, but he was not heeded much by the swardjya party. They went on working ceaselessly and the Honourable Mr. Sastri delivered a Home Rule speech such as would rarely be made even by the strongest Home Ruler. Evidently Lord Morley's advice of rallying the Moderates has not been very successful in Bombay. Lord Pentland delivered a violent speech at the close of the Madras Legislative Council that reminds us of the harsh speech made by Sir George Clarke in 1908 before wholesale repression was resorted to in our Presidency. But the Madras Home Rulers do not seem to be flurried in any way as repression needs must follow the national movement. Every part of India has to jump through the circle of fire of repression. It is the turn of Madras now to do so. Mrs. Besant has won the position of a political guru in Madras and her loyalty is unquestionable. She has spoken so strongly and so often against anarchy that she has incurred the displeasure of anarchists. The only fault Lord Pentland could find with her was that by her agitation public opinion is turned against the officials in all departments! The Madras Government harassed the New India relying on similar weak grounds, and on the same tottering grounds the Madras Government wants, it appers, to harass the Home Rule movement. We cannot but feel despondent when we see the effect of war on politics in Europe and in India. The Russian revolution was effected in the very midst of the tumult of war, and in England also the question of Ireland is being solved now. These difficult political problems are undertaken in order that war may end soon. But as soon as the question of political reform is started in India we are asked to observe silence because war is going on. The contentment of Ireland helps in the prosecution of the war; does not the contentment of India act as a help too? The help rendered byIndia has some value, but the contentment of India has none. Even Sinn Feinners are admitted into the Irish Convention. But Government in India are not willing to consult any one however high placed and responsible he may be. Either they have no arguments on their side, or they must be so proud and drunk with the intoxication of power that they feel it below their dignity to consult anybody. Lord Pentland thinks that the agitation for Home Rule should be stopped so that the people may not be disappointed. What solicitude for the welfare of the people! People will become more discontented if the agitation is stopped. Lord Pentland says that we are quite innocent of practical wisdom in making a demand for Home Rule. But what reform is there that has not been dubbed impracticable by the officials? Poor officials in India! As their eyes have been covered by the two opaque blinkers of lust of power and an exaggerated notion of their wisdom they can see only straight in front of them, like horses harnessed to a carriage. They cannot look about and see the world. Though Indians also have been yoked to the administration, their eyes have not been covered with blinkers. They see about them the land of independence where grows the green grass of happiness of national rule. They also see other people roaming about freely therein. Therefore though the reins of law are still in their mouths, they cannot help trying to go towards that land! It lies with God to reward them with success or not. [The Hindusthán reproduces the article in Gujarati. The Dnyán Prakásh remarks:—We can infer from Sir Michael O'Dwyer's and Lord Pentland's speeches that Provincial officials will try all possible means to stop the swarájya movement. We have not the least doubt that the attempt will be unsuccessful. Indian leaders do not want to create any ill-feeling between Government and the people but if high officials oppose the movement in this manner it might produce ill-feeling between the two. We cannot but say that the attempt of Lord Pentland to throw the responsibility on the leaders in this eventuality, is improper and unworthy. People are determined not to step beyond constitutional means and they need not care for the growling of Government. The Prakásh echoes the Kesari's sentiments. The Karnátak Vaibhav remarks:—The Home Rule movement now being carried on vigorously has become an eyesore to Lord Pentland and he is very angry because day by day it is becoming more successful. Days are gone by when speeches of the type of Lord Pentand's produced any effect on the people. All parties and creeds in India are in love with Swarájya and Indians will not be satisfied unless at least a big instalment of Swarájya in the shape of reforms suggested by the Nineteen is given, if not full Swarájya. The Indu Prakásh says that Lord Pentland has dishonoured by his speech the Morley-Minto reforms and the Indian members elected under them and Parliament that sanctioned them and asks:—'Is there no one to call Lord Pentland to account? Some officials may be angry because their powers are being diminished. But what cause is there for noblemen, who come here for five years to conduct an impartial administration, to be angry? Educated classes are the leaders of the nation and opposition to them will not be beneficial to the British Government. If England wants contentment in her Empire and if it is her duty to fulfil pledges, how can she perform this duty by opposing the educated classes? England will lose nothing: on the contrary she will gain the glory of uplifting a nation from the mire of dependence and of purifying it. Why should it oppose the educated classes in a way that will diminish this glory? How long can this opposition last? Then why persist in this insulting opposition? The Sandesh says that Lord Pentland has charged the Indian members with irresponsibility and unpracticalness and yet he asks for their sympathy and co-operation. The truculent way of first calling a man a fool to his face and then asking for his help becomes only the ruling class. The Honourable Mr. K. T. Rangasawami Iyengar has already protested agaist the speech of Lord Pentland as an insult to the members of Council. We hope the other Honourable members from Madras will not quietly submit but protest in writing against Lord Pentland's speech.]

How "reciprocity" between India and the Dominions should be interpreted.
Message (5), 30th May.

24. "The news is published by the Government of India that Canada has extended the period during which artisans and labourers from India would be debarred from landing in that Colony. Now, how does this act fit in with the cabled attitude of overseas representatives at the Imperial Conference in regard to the treatment of Indians in their several countries? We were told that the Indian representatives came to an understanding with those of the Colonies on the basis of 'reciprocity.' We can understand that the exclusion of Indian artisans and labourers from the Colonies may not conflict with the readiness of the Colonials to have reciprocal treatment in the matter, for they may be quite willing to allow the Indian Government to exclude,

Canadian artisans or labourers, for the simple reason that they do not anticipate any emigration of 'artisans and labourers' from Canada to India .... We wonder, however, if such an interpretation of 'reciprocity' was thought of by the Indian representatives in the Imperial conference, when they made an understanding with the Colonies on the matter. For ourselves, we think that if the Canadian Government persists in excluding certain honest Indians from Canada, India should reciprocate by insisting on a form of reciprocal treatment, which will open the eyes of the Canadian Government to the unadvisability of its action.......... If Canada for 'economic reasons' thinks it impossible to admit Indian atisans and labourers, the proper thing for India is not to declare a similar bar on Canadian artisans and labourers immigrating into India, for there are none such, but to declare the Indian Civil Service and the Indian trade debarred to Canadians in India. This bar, it must be understood, will not be justified on racial grounds, but on economic grounds. India wants her money for her own people, just as Canadians want their land and industries for their own use, and if Canadians can rightly exclude Indian artisans and labourers, Indians may well exclude Canadians from deriving advantages in India, which are detrimental to the interests of Indians. Such an understanding would be real reciprocity."

25. It appears that the principle of reciprocity can be adopted by us regarding colonials only if more restrictive conditions are imposed upon us than on the Japanese. It is not clear how Canada would be affected if Canadian labourers are refused admission into India. Even now they do not come to India. We do not think Indians will be satisfied if the demands of Indian representatives are complied with. It appears from the Blue-book that the demands are incomplete. It is but natural in these circumstances that the Colonial representatives should praise the Indian representatives for their moderation.

Dnydn Prakásh (34), 30th May.

26. The Jám-e-Jamshed expresses its disapprobation of the regulation passed at one of the recent sittings of the Madras Legislative Council, rendering it necessary for an elected member to obtain the sanction of the Governor before bringing a motion in the Council asking for permission to introduce a Bill in it. It regards this rule as an undesirable encroachment upon the rights of the elected members of the Council because it believes that it will only tend to prevent an Indian member of the Council from bringing before it any Bill which is not likely to prove palatable to Government. The paper remarks that this encroachment is all the more regrettable since it has been followed by an unstatesmanlike speech from His Excellency Lord Pentland wherein he has run down the moderate and constitutional agitation on the part of the Indians for bringing about administrative reforms in their country. It expresses the opinion that if the example of Madras were to be followed by other Provincial Legislative Councils and the Imperial Council, no elected member would be able to bring any bill before these Councils and, consequently, the public could have very little voice in them. It remarks that people will not be surprised if the regulation above referred to will be followed by another placing restrictions upon the right of interpellations at present enjoyed by the members of the Madras Legislative Council. The paper exhorts the people of other presidencies cordially to support the protest raised by the Madras public against the invidious regulation passed by the local Council.

Comments on a regulation passed in the Madras Legislative Council requiring members to obtain the sanction of Government before bringing in the Council a motion for permission to introduce a Bill.

Jám-e-Jamshed (19), 30th May.

27. A correspondent writes to the Gujarat Mitra complaining of the ever-increasing nuisance of rabid dogs at Surat and alleging that the measures so far adopted by the authorities to get rid of the evil have failed to achieve any success inasmuch as many people have recently fallen victims to mad dogs. The writer suggests that the lethal chamber be used by the Municipality to Nuisance of rabid dogs at Surat.

Gujarat Mitra (13), 27th May.

destroy stray dogs and asks the people not to be sentimental in this respect. He concludes by paying a tribute to the good work being done by the Pasteur Institute, Kasauli.

Comments on the action of certain Muhammadans in first agreeing to join the Reception Committee of the Násik Provincial Conference and then withdrawing their names.
New Times (new), 16th May.

28. "It is unfortunate that certain Muhammandan gentlemen, who had agreed to join the Reception Committee (of the Nasik Provincial Conference) withdrew at the last moment. They gave a very curious reason for their withdrawal. They said that 'the Government was doing everything for them, and so they did not want to have anything to do with the Conference' and asked for a refund of their subscriptions. One Muhammadan gentleman said he was a Khan Sahib and so could not join the Reception Committee! We do not wish to read a little sermon to these Muhammadan gentlemen on the value of self-help, nor do we wish to shake their touching faith in the fatherly benevolence of Government by pointing out the state of Muhammadan education in Sind, because it will be taking their objections too seriously. What we are interested in is the frank view taken by one of them that his title of Khan Sahib prevented him from taking part in deliberations intended to serve his country. We wonder if a betrayal of his duty towards his country was one of the express conditions of the grant of the title. Perhaps some of the many Rai Sahibs and Khan Sahibs who are in Sind might throw some light on the matter. If the view taken by the Khan Sahib of his title is untrue, we hope Government will take early steps to counteract such an impression, as it tends to lower the value of Government honours in the eyes of the public."

The Bombay Government should invite the opinions of public bodies on the Report of the Public Services Commission.
Kesari (92), 29th May.

29. The Madras Government have asked the local public bodies and leaders to inform them before the 31st of August 1917 of their opinions on the Report of the Public Services Commission. We need not tell the Bombay Government that the question is a very important one. The point naturally arises as to why they have not yet called for the views of our political bodies and leaders. Is the report among the things that have been shelved aside on account of the war? If not, it is very necessary for our Government to consult our leaders on the question.

Alleged evils of the Hindu domination of Government service in Sind.
Sind Moslim (new), 19th May.

30. After describing the ways in which Hindu subordinates try to bring into trouble Muhammadan and other non-Hindu employes in Government service, the Sind Moslim remarks:—"These are some of the methods practised to keep the other creeds and classes out of the Government service. The co-operation among the Hindus is so strong that if an enquiry is held as to the men who are the favourites in each district—possessing best certificates and no merit and getting undue promotions—it will be found that these favourites are connected with the Daftardars and Deputy Collectors or Gazetted officers of other departments in other districts, and this mutual help which has been going on unchecked for years past has been the inefficiency of Government service and ruin to other classes in service. In course of time this co-operation will take firm hold of Sind and nothing short of serious troubles will be the result. In a province where 80 per cent. of the population is Muhammadan and where Zamindars are all Muhammadans the administration should in our opinion not be placed in the hands of persons who are not well disposed towards the Muhammadans. How the Hindus help themselves will be best illustrated by the recent fiasco of the Shikarpur Municipality.........." [Here the paper narrates the incident about the appointment of a Hindu L. C. E. as Chief Officer of this Municipality, and continues:—] "The Hindus have carried their point in broad day light in defiance of the Collector's and Commissioner's wishes and popular opinion in needs (?). Now what can we expect in Government service where every avenue is checked by the Hindu element and where everything is carried on underhand personal or confidential report. Woeful Sind! How will the Home Rule be managed then?"

Alleged official high-handedness in Sind regarding the selection of the Principal of the D. J. Sind College.

Young India (10), 30th May.

31. "A special meeting of the Dayaram Jethmal Sind College Board, summoned by the Commissioner in Sind, who is president of the Board, for the consideration of the question of appointment of the Principal of the College, came off at Karáchi on 19th instant. As the procedure adopted by certain high officials with regard to this matter has been throughout extraordinary and typically bureaucratic, considerable public interest had been aroused in the special meeting of the 19th.......... A meeting of the Board was regularly called on 10th February 1917 to consider the question and where Mr. Pratt, the Judicial Commissioner, presided......... The Board decided, in terms of a resolution drafted by Mr. Pratt, that it could not accept Mr. Hampton, as he was only 26 years old and of only three years' experience, as he lacked the requisite professorial competence and could only teach Logic and English, subjects for which the College had already adequate staff, and could not teach History and Political Economy, in which subjects the College required additional provision. This resolution of the College Board, passed on 10th February 1917, was curiously enough not forwarded to the Bombay Government by the President of the Board, i.e., the Commissioner in Sind, who subsequently took the very questionable course of writing letters to the absentee members arguing therein against the decision of the Board and inviting them to say if they agreed with him or not and suggesting that he would either ask the Board to reconsider the question or advise the Bombay Government not to accept the decision of the Board. Leading members of the Board, like the Honourable Mr. Bhurgri and Rao Bahadur Bulchand Dayaram, upheld the resolution passed by the Board, although some jo-hukums thought it convenient to say that they agreed with him. In the meanwhile, the elections to constitute a new Board for a fresh triennial term were held and by some mysterious process an influential and popular man like Honourable Mr. Bhurgri was not elected by the Thar and Parkar District Local Board as its representative on the College Board, although he was the only candidate in the field at that time. Afterwards an official was proposed in his place by the Collector himself and elected. As soon as the new Board was constituted, the President called the above-mentioned special meeting for 19th May. Notices of the meeting were not issued as usual through the Principal, who is the Secretary of the Board, but by the Collector of Karáchi, who is the Chairman of the Standing Committee of the College, and were served on several members through Collectors and Mamlatdars of the various districts. Some members wrote for the agenda of the meeting or for information about the proposals to be put forward at the special meeting, but very evasive replies were given yielding no information. On the night before the meeting, several official members and other members representing District Local Boards happened to have been invited by the Commissioner to dinner and happened to be on the same side with him when the votes were taken on the resolution the next day. At the meeting the remarkably large number of 22 members attended out of 24, although the average attendance all these years has been only about 10. Several members representing Local Boards, some of them even ignorant of English, who had rarely attended before, somehow were present. The meeting lasted over two hours and there was very heated discussion. Several independent members questioned the most extraordinary procedure adopted for summoning the meeting and not giving notice of the proposals, although specifically asked for previously by some members, but the objections were overruled. They then proposed that the consideration of the question should be deferred until all the papers relating to the question had been circulated, but the resolution was lost. Another resolution moved by them that the previous resolution of the Board rejecting Mr. Hampton, should be adhered to, was also lost. A third one suggesting that Mr. Anderson of the Indian Educational Service or some other member of the Indian Educational Service teaching History and Political Economy should be appointed, was also lost. But the resolution moved by the Commissioner's supporters that Mr. Hampton be appointed, if Mr. Anderson be not available (although knowing, as Mr. Hesketh, the Educational Inspector told them from personal knowledge, that Mr. Anderson would not be available) was carried by 13 votes against 8. On each resolution the voting was the same, the minority being all elected members, men of education and position, and the majority being seven officials, one retired official nominated on the Board by the Commissioner and five elected by District Local Boards, of whom two were ignorant of English and unable to follow the discussion. The Commissioner will forward to the Bombay Government the last resolution thus carried by a packed majority in the teeth of strenuous opposition from leading men connected with the College for many years, as the opinion of the Board on Government's reference made over three months ago, the resolution of 10th February being thus quietly passed over. The New Times of Karāchi in its issue of 19th, has rightly condemned the whole procedure as 'extraordinary'."

Appeal to Government to grant a special allowance to low-paid employés in Sind to compensate them for the abnormal rise in prices caused by the war.

New Times (New), 21st May.

32. Referring to the action taken by the Karachi Port Trust and the Karachi Municipality to compensate their employés for the abnormal rise in prices caused by the war the New Times remarks:—"We do not see why the Government which found no difficulty in giving a war allowance to its highly paid Civil Service on the flimsy ground that in war time, the officers would not to be able to get their usual share of temporary posts, allowance, etc., should not follow the example of these bodies. One would have thought that a war allowance was more necessary for the poorly paid clerks than for the highly paid officers. We hope that Government would not find it too late to take up the matter and relieve Government servants all over Sind of an undoubted hardship."

How Mesopotamia and German East Africa are necessary for the safety and expansion of India.

New Times (New), 27th May.

33. "The disappearance of Russia as a menacing power on our North West Frontier has not removed our fears of a European invasion of India and thus eased our military burden. Formerly the question of our land frontiers was merely an issue between Great Britain and Russia. But with the establishment of German influence in Constantinople which has become complete as a result of the war and the advent of Germany in the Persian Gulf, the direction of our foreign policy has been completely changed. The issue is no longer between India and Russia, but is essentially one between India and Germany. As it is, Germany threatens India from two directions. Before the war she was strongly entrenched in Mesopotamia and German East Africa. Happily she has been ousted from this position by the gallantry of our brave troops. A reversion to the status quo ante bellum as has been suggested by many pacifists in Germany and England would be nothing short of a disaster for India. Instead of reducing her military expenditure to enable her to carry out certain necessary domestic reforms, she will be compelled to increase it to guard herself against German ambitions. India like Australia cannot afford to tolerate the existence of a European power in positions which might be made the basis of military designs, inimical to her interests. But the need of Mesopotamia and German East Africa to India, can be justified on other grounds than that of mere military necessity. She wants more room under the sun for the surplus population than is afforded to her under the present conditions. The whole world has been occupied by the white races and all its parts including those in the British Empire have shut their doors against us. We are welcomed only as coolies and labourers and that also for limited periods of time......... For our free development we require additional land, and as Sir Harry Johnstone has pointed out, nothing would suit us better than Mesopotamia and German East Africa."

7

Comments on the alleged removal by British officers of the sacred thread of Jat recruits in the Rohtak District.

Hindusthán (16), 31st May.

34. Referring to the alleged action on the part of some British officers of making Jats in the Rohtak District, Punjáb, remove their sacred thread before admitting them into the army, the Hindusthán remarks that it cannot comprehend who is responsible for such an unprecedented order. It observes that the matter has been brought to the notice of higher authorities and that if the said order is due to the arbitrariness of one or two officers the whole matter will soon be set right. The paper then goes on to observe that various explanations of the incident have emanated from various quarters, one of them being the belief that the Jats being Arya Samajists, the removal of the sacred thread will make them cease to belong to that communion. It proceeds thus :—Admitting for argument's sake that they will thus cease to be Arya Samajists (we ask) why is such hostility being shown against the Arya Samáj ? It is strange to note that the officials have not yet ceased to entertain apprehensions about that body. They have not come to their senses in spite of the fact that one of their own countrymen, Mr. J. Ramsay MacDonald, has described the Arya Samáj as a "purely religious body" in his book entitled "The Awakening of India". By making the Jats remove their sacred thread they have not only insulted the Arya Samaj, but the whole Arya community. The sacred thread is the religious emblem of the entire Arya race. These officers have broken the pledge about freedom of religion given in the Queen's Proclamation of 1858, and they deserve to be punished on that account. The general public should not quietly bear such insults, but they should raise their voice for the sake of preserving their religious freedom.

Indian press representatives in Mesopotamia.

Jám-e-Jamshed (19), 2nd June.

35. The Jám-e-Jamshed publishes in short an account of the recent interview given by Mr. N. M. Joshi, who had gone to Mesopotamia along with the press deputation as a representative of the Bombay press, and remarks that the hopes built by the public upon the press "mission" sent to Mesopotamia have not been realised. It maintains that the account of the interview with Mr. Joshi is calculated to cause disappointment to the Bombay press. The paper observes that when representatives of the press in India were taken all the way to Mesopotamia at the special invitation of the Government of India, they ought to have been in possession of such news with respect to the war conditions as would gratify the eagerness of the public in the matter of learning the interesting aspects and events of the war. It attributes the absence of this to the limits set by the military authorities upon the liberty of these press representatives.

Comments on the alleged armistice between Russia and Germany.

Praja Mitra and Parsi (25), 28th May, Eng. cols.

36. Under the heading "The Trend of the War", the Prajá Mitra and Parsi writes :—"The confusion in Russia, the breakdown of discipline in the Russian army was Germany's opportunity. In the confusion that must have existed in the Russian lines the German troops might have pierced them and advanced towards Petrograd. Why did not the German commanders press the advantage home when they saw the state of things in the Russian lines ? Why did they agree to an armistice and why did the German High Command approve of it ? It does not require much penetration nor any great acumen to understand the object of Germany. She has been trying all along to detach Russia from the Alliance.......... We do not know whether the Russian Provisional Government consulted the Allies before the armistice, or indeed whether the Government had sufficient authority over the Russian army to prevent it from making an armistice on its own account. Whether it is truce or an armistice will depend on the length of the period it has been in existence, and the nature of the negotiations, if any, that may be going on between the German and Russian Governments.......... Of the real position in Russia it is possible that even the Allies have not full knowledge. Any responsible Russian Government, temporary or permanent, would recognise the wisdom of not breaking away from the Alliance, for a separate peace with Germany means ultimate subservience to the Prussian military caste, and being dragged at the chariot wheels of the German High Command just like Austria. On the other hand, it is quite possible that there may be a general feeling in Russia for peace, which is quite to be expected. If the Provisional Government has to give way to this feeling no one can say what may happen. The ability of that Government to do their duty by the Allies will depend on their strength to resist successfully German overtures and the Russian popular demand. Therefore, the Allies will be well advised if, while hoping for the best, they are fully prepared for the worst." [Elsewhere the paper writes:—"It has never been explained how it happens, but it is nevertheless true that bazzar rumours of events happening at a great distance often prove to be correct or to have a substratum of truth. For instance, there are persistent rumours in the Bombay bazaars that separate peace has been concluded between Russia and Germany. This is of course untrue, but at the same time it is true that there is not much fighting on the eastern front in Europe. In fact, there is an armistice at the present moment as stated by Prince Lvoff, the Russian Premier, only a few days ago.......... The remarkable fact is that although the telegram about the armistice was received only a few days ago, the rumour about the peace has been current in the bazaar for several days. Even an armistice, however, is bad news for it will give the Germans breathing time and also time to re-arrange their fronts. It is annouced that the armistice will now cease and fighting will be resumed. The sooner this happens the better for Free Russia must fall in line with the Allies, who are fighting for Freedom. .... The attitude of Russia is of the greatest importance to the Allies, and if she repudiates or disclaims part of the Allies' programme, the situation will become grave indeed. As already stated, there is a temporary cessation of fighting on the eastern front and if the nature of the peace to be made is discussed now the most sinister rumours will get abroad. It is being earnestly hoped everywhere that Russia will fulfil her obligations to the Allies unhesitatingly."

Comments on the alleged new Russian policy of "No indemnities and no annexation".

New Times (new), 19th May.

37. "For the first time in its history the world feels that Russia has changed the spirit as well as the form of its government and that it intends to live on friendly relations with the neighbouring nations and means to devote itself to the arts of peace. In the past Russian designs have been responsible for disturbances and alarms throughout the East and the Balkan, and it was only a happy accident that Russia found herself fighting on the side of justice and liberty. To the Eastern nations, the new Russian policy of 'No indemnities and no annexation' is fraught with enormous significance. To our Muslim brothers it will come as a relief to learn that Turkey and Persia will no longer be exposed to the encroachments of an agressive Russian policy, but will be allowed to work out their destiny in peace. India also, which has suffered in the past from the fear of a Russian invasion, will be free to divert her money from useless military purposes to the solution of the many social, economic and educational problems which await her after the successful end of the war."

India and the Imperial Conference.

Jám-e-Jamshed (19), 28th May; Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 27th May.

38. The Jám-e-Jamshed welcomes the recommendation made by the Imperial War Conference for allowing India to be represented at future Imperial Conferences by two persons, one of them being the Secretary of State for India and the other a representative to be nominated by the Indian Government, who would mostly be an Indian. Remarking, however, that this arrangement is not likely to gratify the over-enthusiastic among the Indian politicians, who urge that the Indian representative on the Imperial Conferences should be a person chosen by the elected members of the Imperial Legislative Council, the paper advises the Indians to receive the present recommendation in a spirit of satisfaction. It does not, however, regard as sufficiently satisfactory the recommendation of the Imperial War Conference which urges that the Indian immigrants should be allowed to enjoy in the Colonies at least the same rights as those enjoyed by the Japanese and observes that instead of thus placing the Indians on the same footing as foreigners they should be allowed the enjoyment of equal rights with other British subjects in all parts of the Empire. The paper approves of the arrangement recommended by the War Conference which would permit India to enact the same restrictive laws with regard to colonial immigration into India as may be in force against Indian immigrants in the Colonies. [The Praja Mitra and Pársi expresses its high sense of gratification at the two recommendations of the War Conference with respect to the Indian representatives in future Imperial Conferences and with respect to the rights of the Indian immigrants in the colonies. It regards the news about these recommendations not only as gladdening to India, but as doing her justice and as calculated to increase her prestige. The paper remarks that the Indian public will thank His Majesty's Government as well as the Colonies for such welcome news.]

Comments on Government Resolution on the failure of the Indian section of the Indian Defence Force scheme.

Young India (10), 30th May.

39. "The hasty resolution of the Government of India on the Indian Defence Force has provoked quite a storm of opposition from all quarters. Indians have condemned it root and branch, because it represents in their view a certainly undesirable attempt to hold up the people of this country to the ridicule of those who cannot understand the world of difference contained in the formula: 'what the regular British army is to the British Territorials, the Indian army is to the Indian Volunteer.' The difference between the two is as wide as between the two poles of the earth and we ask what, in the name of commonsense, Government meant by hurrying with the publication of this ill-considered resolution. Government had before it quite four months to see whether people were volunteering in sufficient numbers, and if it had then been found that it was a 'hopeless failure' there was time enough to raise lamentations over it. As it is, the impression has rightly or wrongly gained ground widely that Government had something else in view. We hope a sufficient explanation of the causes leading to this judgment before hearing will soon be forthcoming. Enough has been said on the disadvantages and disabilities. Without repeating them here, we should like to know, why Government itself has not set the example by releasing eligible men in its service. There are many, as we know, who could be conveniently spared for volunteering. Why then has no attempt been made to induce a sufficient number from among the army of clerks and babus and other subordinate officials, to join the force. Long before conscription was resorted to in India, we all know that the European and Eurasian employees of Government were freely encouraged to volunteer, on promise of keeping their berths safe until they come back and holding out other inducements. Something of this nature could have been easily done in regard to Indian employees also. The Universities could have been scoured for eligible men, where business was meant and further, no objection need have been taken to maintain identity and continuity of interest among various units that had offered or were about to offer themselves......... The Home-Rulers being in disfavour at the military headquarters, it is reasonable to think that their offer for one or more H. R. L. Corps should have been declined, although even here there was no such necessity. If the Sinn Feiners and other turbulent elements of the Irish population could be permitted to choose their own corps, why not Indians, even if they be Home-Rulers? .... In this connection the letter which the Secretaries of the Indian Home Rule League, Bombay Branch, have addressed to the press furnishes a sad commentary on the mental attitude of the bureaucracy towards that body. As a political movement the bureaucracy might look down upon it. But if in the face of a common danger and common necessity, the favoured of God —the Orangeman from the North—could embrace the Sinn-Feiner from the South, why should the bureaucracy spurn aside the proffered aid of the Indian Home Rulers? When the Secretaries of the H. R. L. approached the military authorities, they were politely told their assistance was not wanted! In regard to the number also, there is some apparent discrepancy, which has not been explained. In the Madras Legislative Council, it was stated on the authority of the G. O. C., 9th Division, Secunderabad, that up to and including May 12th, 357 applications had been received from the Southern Presidency alone. Our contemporary the New India says that through it 418 applications were submitted. There were other centres also such as Bombay, Bengal, United Provinces and the Punjab. The total number of applications from all these places must have been considerable. It is inconceivable in these circumstances to believe the accuracy of the Government return, unless we are to presume that all those applications received through other bodies such as the Home Rule Leagues or the New India, were not even taken into account. The matter has to be further elucidated before we can believe that for the whole of India only 300 applications had been received up to the date of the resolution."

Sunday Tatler (new), 27th May.

40. "The Government called for 6,000 recruits for the Indian section of the Indian Defence Force, which works out, roughly, to two per 50,000 of the population. The actual enrolment totals 300, or one per million of the population! The bare statement of the fact constitutes a damning indictment of the patriotism that talks—and knows not how to act.......... The Empire, in and out of India, has been schooled into the conviction that war measures, whatever their imperfections, must be accepted. The sober mind of India recognises that the only suitable time for considering the general principle applicable to Indian recruitment to a volunteer or territorial force is after the war. The entire system of European volunteering in this country has been revolutionised by the passing of the Indian Defence Force Act, and obviously so, for this is war time. Europeans accepted the revolution, as far as it affected them. For the first time, Indians were given the opportunity, hedged round, it is true, by limitations imposed by the exigencies of the war, to voluntarily undertake a work of self-sacrifice which has been compulsorily imposed upon Europeans. Why are Indians sulking? They are sulking because they have not yet learned the true quality of discipline, of self-sacrifice. Government and citizenship are to them mere abstractions—words, words, words! They have not yet found leaders who have acquired the right to lead except by the pursuit of the most flagrant demagogy.......... The note of controversy,—the note of challenge,—the note of ultimatum was predominant throughout; and the note, with all the familiar variations, was struck on 'the conditions of service'!......... Mr. B. G. Tilak publicly declared that if Indians did not enlist in the Home Defence Force, he would abandon the Home Rule propaganda. He wouldn't of course.......... The attempt to import political prejudice into the matter was childish. Indeed, it was apparent from the first that the Indian Defence Force was to be regarded as the forerunner of political concessions eventuating in the grant of Home Rule. Meanwhile, the rules framed under the Indian Defence Force Act were used as a scourge against the bureaucracy. The leaders were astute enough to foresee that the recruitment would not come up to the mark, and hence the frenzied attacks on the bureaucracy for the 'humiliations' it had inflicted upon the manhood of India!......... The moral of the story is altogether damaging to the character and reputations of the leaders. Either the leaders do not give honest lead, or they have no following."

Kaiser-i-Hind (20), 27th May; Gujaráti Punch (14), 27th May, Eng. cols.

41. Commenting upon the Government Resolution on the subject of the poor response made by Indians in the matter of enlistment in the Indian Defence Force, the Kaiser-i-Hind writes:—"While admitting that Indians deserve to be blamed for the poor response to the opportunities given to them, we cannot lose sight of the fact that the policy pursued by our rules for years past has served to act as a deterrent to the Indian people. It is political reforms given in a liberal spirit that will tend to infuse enthusiasm in the drooping hearts of the Indian people. Government should take steps to induce employers to give 50 per cent. of their salaries to their employees during the time they serve in the Indian Defence Force. Had England also introduced conscription as suggested by Lord Roberts Germany would not have dared to display that arrogance towards England which it has shown by waging war against it. France has earned the praises of the whole world by the manner it has met the attacks of the enemy. France was able to withstand Germany in the manner it has done because it had given compulsory military training to its citizens. Were Indians ever given training for discharging the duties of citizens of the Empire? Were their rights as citizens of the Empire ever acknowledged? On the contrary the martial races were compelled to take to agriculture and trade and every means adopted to break their spirit. The question, therefore, is how far they are to be blamed now." [The Gujaráti Punch writes:—"We hope that the timely resolution issued by the Government of India will awaken among the people a sense of their duty to their country, and make them alive to their responsibilities......... We have no doubt that if the new measure is made sufficiently attractive by throwing open to Indians the commissions in the army, the response would be, if not quite enthusiastic, at least adequate. We therefore suggest to the Government of India, the advisability of admitting Indians into the privileged class of commissioned officers. So far as the leaders of the people are concerned, we admit they have tried their level best to persuade the youths of the country to enrol themselves in the Defence of India Force; but unfortunately their appeal has not met with the success it deserved and the principal reason of their failure is not the loss of their influence with the people but the want of attractiveness in the conditions governing the new force.......... If Indians do not join in large numbers now, we are afraid that the contention of those who seek to obstruct the path of India's progress will derive strength."]

Praja Bandhu (24), 27th May; Gujarát Mitra (13), 27th May; Hindi Punch (15), 27th May; Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 29th May.

42. The Praja Bandhu is of opinion that the poor response to the Indian Defence Act was mainly due to the indifference of Government. In support of its statement it cites the case of the proposed Bombay University Corps to which Government withheld their sanction and for the reconsideration of which a deputation recently waited upon His Excellency the Governor. It asks Government to make some provision for the families of the volunteers and to actively encourage enlistment if they are serious about ensuring the success of the scheme. [The Gujarát Mitra exhorts popular leaders to use their influence to secure adequate enlistment in the Defence Force with a view to saving India from the stigma that would otherwise be attached if the scheme proved a failure. It expresses surprise why Government officials should not have convened public meetings for enlistment in the Defence Force as they did in the case of the War Loan. The Hindi Punch considers it a shame that India should not be able to raise a Defence Force of 6,000 men. It appeals to the people to rouse themselves and to help to raise the required force and thus save India from disgrace. The Praja Mitra and Pársi asks Government to open the commissioned ranks to the Indians and to give to the Indian members of the Defence Force remuneration on the same scale as is sanctioned for Europeans.]

Gujarati (12), 27th May.

43. The Gujarati in its vernacular columns reiterates the views on the Government Resolution on the question of enlistment in the Indian Defence Force expressed by it in its English columns (vide paragraph 4 of the Weekly Report No. 21 of 1917) and lays special stress on the fact that educated Indians are not eligible for Commissions on a footing of equality with Europeans. It asserts that the Resolution has been deliberately issued with the object of escaping the blame the Home Government might have thrown upon the Government of India for not taking steps to secure adequate enlistment of Indians in the Defence Force, and of hoodwinking certain critics in Parliament who hold the Government of India responsible for not adequately utilising the man-power of India. It concludes:—Instead of thus publicly casting blame upon the Indians, Government should have gathered together the leaders of the people and found a way out of the difficulty. Should Government, however, be of opinion that the fitness of Indians for swarajya is to be determined by the success or failure of the scheme, let them make an announcement to that effect.

Kesari (92), 29th May; Prakásh (99), 30th May; Shetkari (37), 27th May; Shubhodaya (New), 25th May; Karnátak Vritt (75), 29th May; Karnátak Vaibhav (74), 29th May; Chandrodaya (30), 28th May.

44. Details are to hand now regarding the resolution issued by Government to put the people to shame, that go to show that the officials themselves have to hang down their heads in shame for the mistakes committed by them. They took a month to issue the regulations and then forms were not available. The number of recruits required could not raise any enthusiasm. Government did not take as much interest in recruiting as they did in raising the war loan and they were distrustful of the public leaders like Tilak Mrs. Besant and Pal. All these things led to the popular belief that Government were not so much interested in recruiting. People were already discouraged as they did not get commissions, even a sufficient number of forms were not supplied and the help of the public leaders even where offered was refused. Is it not a perverted view then to turn against the people because recruits in sufficient numbers cannot be had? The figures quoted by Government are also mistaken as Madras and Calcutta have already received 457 offers. We have heard something in this connection. Some have received no replies as yet though two months have elapsed since their application. Many students are helpless because the University has not given any concessions. We hope the officials will consider all these things and admit their former mistakes and announce that they would follow a liberal policy in future in order that the people may be contented. [The Prakásh says:—The lowering of the age limit to 30 is responsible for the small number of recruts. The suspicious attitude of Government also may have been responsible for the result. The time is not yet lost if Government would give up their suspicions and not blame needlessly the people. The Shetkari says:—We are of opinion that people should join unconditionally without any consideration of self-respect, etc. The letter of the Secretaries of the Bombay Home Rule League shows how the enthusiasm of the people was damped by the contempt and indifference exhibited by responsible officials. It is not surprising that Government were disappointed in these circumstances. What can the people do when every preparation had been made for such disappointment? The Shubhodaya says:—Can it be said we are not loyal? We are mad after loyalty. Can it be said that we are indifferent? We ourselves carried on the agitation for volunteering. Are we cowards? The battle-fields are our witnesses. Government may ask us then: Where is your army? But they themselves know the answer. Our respectable, daring and educated young men want honour, position and concessions in the army. Government say that they should not be troubled in these times and they call upon us to join the Force. If the Defence of India Force has been created as a temporary measure why have not commissions been given to us for the time being? Our young men are not fighting so much for power as for the military training they would acquire as officers. We shall not at all feel any enthusiasm for the war if the feeling that this is our country and that we are responsible for its defence is not born in our hearts. If we had swarájya like Canada there would have been no need for Lord Chelmsford to awaken us to the necessity of the defence of our country. We do not insist upon swarájya being given to us before we fight. But we want a declaration that swarájya would be granted to us if not to-day at least to-morrow. It does not cost anything. But still we advise the people to join. Duty should be performed first before we can aspire after anything. The Karnátak Vritt remarks:—The difference between the Indian and European is maintained in every department but still we have not shunned Government service. What is it but cowardice that makes us unwilling to join the Force? We hope the opportunity of getting military training offered would not be lost by our people. The Karnátak Vaibhav holds that unsatisfactory conditions and the indifference of Government are responsible for the poor result, but it advises young men to join unconditionally. The Chandrodaya argues that the military spirit cannot be had all in a day. It requests Government to repeal the Arms Act and give military education to the people and also to declare that special rights on the lines of Swarájya would be given to the people.]

Phœnix (6), 26th May; Rást Goftár (27), 27th May.

45. In the course of a lengthy article on the Government Resolution on the poor response made to the call for recruits for the Indian Defence Force, the Phœnix remarks:—"Excessive talk and captious criticism seem to be the besetting sin of a considerable number of our politicians. Can they lay their hands upon their hearts and honestly assert that they have done all that could be done in the matter of recruitment of our young men to the Indian Defence Force? The conditions of the service involve a sacrifice on the part of those who go in for it. Here is an occasion for proving that we are prepared to make sacrifices. What is now wanted is that a supreme effort should be made to make the enrolment of Indians in the Defence Force a great success. We may disapprove of the tone of the Government of India Resolution, but we should in no way lose sight of the stubborn fact that we have failed to make an adequate response to this clarion-call for home defence. .... However that may be, let us now close in and work hard at making the recruitment of Indians to the Defence Force a great success.......... It is no use sulking over the unfavourable conditions of the service. It is no use fretting over the rebuke which the Government of India have rightly or wrongly administered to the leaders of Indian opinion. It is of paramount importance to the cause of India that we should work with might and main for getting an overwhelming number of recruits for the Indian Defence Force which bids fair to be the future Citizen Army of India." [The Rást Goftár writes:—We are one with the Amrit Bazar Patrika in saying that the poor result is due to Government not having issued more liberal rules under the Defence of India Force Act. Be it is it may, attempts should be made to enable India to discharge its duty towards the Empire at the present critical juncture with due deference to the explanation given by Government in the matter of reconsidering the question of commissions, etc., after the war. We are constrained to say that in framing the rules Government have not looked to the interests of the Indian people as they ought to have done. Besides they have not taken any steps in consonance with the higher status accorded to India in the Imperial Conference. We are surprised at the attitude of indifference assumed by the Government of India towards Indian affairs. In order to ensure the success of the Indian Defence Force Government should take steps to provide for the families of those who come forward to enlist themselves. Elsewhere in humorous paragraphs contributed by "Peabody", the paper writes in a jeering tone about the popular leaders who are ever ready to criticise Government but who have not been able to secure adequate enlistment to the Defence Force.]

Adverse comments on the raising of Indian Labour Corps for war service in France and elsewhere.

New Times (new), 19th May.

46. "The policy of the Whites doing the fighting and the Blacks doing the digging in this war which was theoretically stated by Captain Guest in the House of Commons was such an insult to the manhood of India that few Indians believed that it would be carried out in this country. Nevertheless it has been practically put into effect by raising large numbers of Indian coolies from the United Provinces, Assam and Burma for war service in Europe and Mesopotamia on the one hand, and confining the Indian Section of the Defence Force to the small number of 6,000 on the other. If Government had shown one hundredth of the enthusiasm and energy which it has shown in raising these labour units in encouraging Indian recruits to the Defence Force it would have under its orders lacs and lacs of young Indians ready to sacrifice their lives for the Empire. The terms on which our offers to help the Empire are accepted are so humiliating that foreigners who do not know the deeply spiritual view point of India wonder why she should persist in continuing her offers. The most objectionable feature of these labour corps is that the status of the labourers will not be an inch better for their serving the cause of the Empire in war. They will not be allowed to live and labour in the country which they go to defend, but will be repatriated as soon as the war is over. They will be carefully prevented from competing with the European workmen by a strict military discipline which will perhaps lead to worse abuses than those resulting from the Indentured Labour system against which we have complained. They will go as coolies and return as coolies. We do not know the rules governing the working conditions of the recruits, but the system appears to be the old Indenture system in an official and warlike disguise."

Comments on the letter written by a Collector in the United Provinces in the matter of the War Loan.

Sánj Vartamán (28), 1st June.

47. Commenting upon the letter on the subject of contribution to the War Loan, addressed by Mr. L. M. Stubbs, I.C.S., Magistrate and Collector of Bijnor (United Provinces) to a number of Vaishya gentlemen of that district, the Sánj Vartamán writes:—This short tempered European officer has read a homily to the people for having fallen short of his expectations in their War Loan contributions and he goes the length of calling them timid, stupid and avaricious! The letter shows such lack of the sense of responsibility in the writer as to make people think that he is fit to be an inmate of the lunatic asylum. The letter furnishes an example of the undue pressure exercised by District officials, against the instructions of the Government of India, in the matter of contributions to the War Loan. We hope Government will not be backward in taking such officers to task.

Kesari (92), 29th May; Dnyán Prakásh (33), 30th May; Loka Bandhu (76), 27th May; Raj Hansa (77), 27th May.

48. Many complaints have repeatedly been lodged with various provincial Governments that though officials do not actually force the people, they press them in various ways and extract from them amounts for the war loan beyond their means and against their will. The Bengal Government have re-issued their circular prohibiting officials from forcing the people to subscribe to the war loan. This reiteration only shows that the officials must have ignored the former orders of Government. We can explain the conduct of the officials in benefiting Government by ways deemed undesirable by Government only on the ground that they are ultra-loyal and ultra-selfish. What wonder if the people feel that the officials do not feel the restraining power of the order sufficiently inasmuch as they set it aside. The Bengal Government haved admitted by issuing this circular that the officials have used some unjust means. But the Bombay Government have not given any explanation though they have been informed by the Bombay Chronicle and by ourselves of the improper things resorted to in this connection. The silence of the Bombay Government has caused the people to distrust and despair, and the officials to feel triumphant. We request the Bombay Government to win the confidence of the people by issuing orders that would take severely to task the overzealous officials, after full enquiry. [The Dnyán Prakásh remarks:—Officials may take the assistance of volunteers in raising the War Loan, but it is very harmful if the rayats are allowed to be under the impression that they are being forced to pay. We do not think it possible that the higher officials want to force the rayats to pay and it is necessary to take prompt measures if the lower officials misuse their powers ever so little in the matter. If the Bombay Government have not already taken precautions, they should strictly warn the officials against committing any oppression in the matter of subscriptions. The Finance Minister expected only 15 crores and now the Loan has amounted upto 25 crores. As there is such a satisfactory progress it is necessary to see that nobody is forced to pay. India would be benefited in proportion as it pays more to the War Loan, but it is equally desirable to see that wrong measures are not taken to swell it. The Loka Bandhu writes:—How much can be had by troubling those who have no means to pay? If there is oppression, it is possible that even those who want to pay, may not pay. Those who collect the War Loan should only advise the people. If other Governments also like the Bengal Government issue a circular and publish it in every village that people will not in any way be forced to pay to the War Loan, money would be collected of its own accord. We think the officials need not go about and worry themselves. The Raj Hansa also writes in the same strain.]

EDUCATION.

Alleged repression of "National" Schools by the Government.

Message (5), 31st May.

49. A. S. Rao writes in the Message:—"The Madras Government do not alone come forth as the guardian-angels of students. The Central Provinces Administration also think it their duty to do so, and we hear that Managers of Schools are to keep a watch on the students. Commenting on this the New India of 18th May, in its editorial entitled 'School Boys and Politics in Central Provinces', has thrown a hint to the effect that National Schools and Colleges should be widely opened. The suggestion is an excellent one and ought to be taken up and put into practice. But we are afraid, the venture might meet with the same fate as that of others in the past, as the authorities, who are bent upon excluding the student population from every healthy influence necessary, nay indispensable, for their growth, would, under the powers vested in them, thwart these noble attempts. This apprehension is not a play of imagination let loose, but is founded on experience dearly purchased. We have only to go back to the dark period following the 'Partition of Bengal'. National Schools came into being in Bengal, Central Provinces and Maharashtra. But the authorities would not view with a good eye these institutions and tried to make short work of them as opportunity arose.......... Similar was the case with the National Institution of Talegaon, I mean the Samartha Vidyalaya, conducted by self-sacrificing patriots on purely national lines. No arguments prevailed with the powers that be. They would not stand to reason. They suspected the Institution to be a nursery of seditionists and bomb-throwers. They would not stop here. They issued a mandate that no other school—Government or a private one recognised by the Universities—shall admit a student who may have been studying in the Samartha Vidyalaya, of Talegaon. I know the case of such a student who had been studying in the 'Samartha Vidyalaya' who was debarred from being admitted into any other school. This unfortunate student sought admission into a local Night School, some three or four years back, but could not be admitted because of the seal of boycott the Government had put upon the inmates of that institution.......... But did the Government ever take the trouble of enquiring what the aims and objects of the institutions were or on what lines was the training conducted? The Samartha Vidyalaya had issued a pamphlet embodying all the information about the institution. Yet perversity knows no bounds nor stands to argument.......... Such, I hope, should not be the fate of the new ventures that may be the outcome of the Government policy. It is patent to those who have kept their eyes open and observe what is going on at present that the Government has embarked upon a career of repression and one is inclined to suspect that, as days pass by, repression will be on an ascending scale. The situation is really of a more serious nature than one can imagine and a great responsibility lies upon the heads of leaders and parents to steer clear through the critical and troublous times through which we are passing."

NATIVE STATES.

Complaint about robberies and armed dacoities in Káthiáwár. Alleged need of repealing the Arms Act.

Deshi Mitra (57), 31st May.

50. The people living in villages in Kathiawar are of late being made victims of robberies and armed dacoities. It is a pity that Government are not able to check the evil. The people have been disarmed by the Arms Act and so they are not in a position to defend themselves. While on account of the Arms Act the law-abiding citizens cannot keep arms the lawless ruffians procure them by some means or other and harass the poor people and commit outrages upon them with impunity. Government should repeal the Arms Act to enable the people to protect themselves against armed dacoits and to infuse a martial spirit in them.

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Governmen .

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 8th June 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 23 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 9th June 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British Rule:

Adverse comments on a recent speech of the Lord Bishop of Bombay. 17
Alleged intellectual and moral enslavement of Indians . . . 7
Alleged lack of a consistent policy on the part of the rulers of India . 8
Alleged malicious attack on Mr. Gandhi by a Bihar planter . . 13 & 14
Alleged unsatisfacory position of India in the Empire and the Colonies. 9
Comments on His Excellency Lord Pentland's last speech in the Madras Legislative Council . . . . 1—5
Comments on Mr. Gandhi's activities among the coolies of the Champaran District, Behar 12
Comments on the steps being taken to grant Home Rule to Ireland . 11
Mr. Lloyd George's and Lord Pentland's views about India's future contrasted 6
Protest against the proposed changes in the criminal law of the Punjáb 16
Reckless agitators err in the good company of Shivaji and Washington. 10
The mistaken educational policy of the Madras Government . . 15

His Excellency the Governor of Bombay:

Comments on the proposed extension of His Excellency Lord Willingdon's term of office . . . . 29—32
Defence of His Excellency Lord Willingdon against the attack of the Bengalee 33
Honours List: Comments on the Birth-day — . . . . . . 35—39
Indians in the Colonies: Indians in South Africa 34
Madras Legislative Council: Comments on the new rule of the — regarding introduction of private Bills 40
Sind: Alleged highhandedness in the selection of the Principal of the D. J. — College (Karáchi) . . . . 41—42

War:

Comments on the Government Press Note on alleged oppression by certain officials in making people subscribe to the—Loan . . 18—21
Comments on the Government Press Note regarding number of applications for enrolment in the Indian Defence Force . . 26

H 85—a CON

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

War :—concluded.

Comments on the Government Resolution on the unsatisfactory recruiting for the Indian Defence Force . . . . . . 23—25
Comments on the letter written by the District Magistrate, Bijnor, to certain Banias in connection with the — Loan 22
Comments on the memorandum of the Indian representatives on the Imperial — Conference regarding Indian emigration to Colonies . 27
Comments on the statement of the Japanese Ambassador in London that the Japanese fleet had guarded the coasts of India . . . 28

EDUCATION—

Comments on the increase of fees in the Gujarat College, Ahmedabad . 43

NATIVE STATES—

Proposed memorial to His Majesty the King-Emperor against certain acts of His Highness the Gaekwar of Baroda 44

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Comments on His Excellency Lord Pentland's last speech in the Madras Legislative Council.

Mahrātta (4), 3rd June.

1. "He says: 'these orders are intended to do justice to students, to secure to them their rights as students and the same opportunities as are enjoyed by students in other countries—rights and opportunities which no wise parent and no true lover of his country will grudge or deny to the rising generation'. By other countries Lord Pentland must be evidently taken to speak of countries which are in advance of India. And what is the fact in these countries? The students there are sons and daughters of freemen. The Governments of their lands are not alien and irresponsible, but national and responsible to the people, i. e., to the parents and guardians of students. The educational courses in these countries are laid down by men who have not the slightest temptation to keep from the students such facts of history as are calculated to foster an intense pride in and love of their mother-country, which make one impatient of Other Rule......... These times of acute political feeling are ill-suited to the promulgation of drastic orders which can only add bitterness to acuteness......... His Excellency's idea of the life-work which an Indian student of to-day has to enter upon at the end of his student days, is evidently at variance with the popular idea. We need helpers in our National Home Rule cause. Lord Pentland, as he made clear further on in his speech, wishes us to put entirely out of our mind any idea of responsible Government at an early date. This difference in the final aims of education accounts for the difference in the methods of education acceptable to Government on the one hand and to the people on the other. The character and equipment that we want to see our students in possession of is 'undesirable' in the eyes of those who differ from us in final aims. Hence the preposterous order. Lord Pentland says in ill-concealed wrath that the leaders of the agitation and all who support and sympathise with them, will be directly responsible for any difficulties that may arise out of it. But how could the agitation have been avoided? How can it be stopped even now? The agitation is largely the result of the bureaucratic tyrannies which India is labouring under. Following the style of His Lordship, we may say with truth, that 'against all advice and warning the bureaucracy has chosen to initiate and persist in oppressive and controversial legislation (followed by unsympathetic administration) at a most unsuitable time'."

Gujarāti (12), 3rd June, Eng. cols.

2. "The speech which His Excellency Lord Pentland made in winding up the business of the recent session of the Madras Legislative Council, has been correctly characterized as a challenge and a threat to Indian people carrying on a thoroughly constitutional, peaceful and responsible agitation for the grant of a substantial instalment of reforms on the termination of the war.......... He clearly spoke the mind of Anglo-India, which cannot bring itself to believe that the executive can be allowed to be controlled by the people through their representatives for generations to come.......... Lord Pentland's speech is only a foretaste of the opposition which Indian leaders will have to encounter in their peaceful agitation for the satisfaction of their legitimate aspirations. It shows how the official and Anglo-Indian wind is blowing and demonstrates how the war has not in the slightest degree affected the illiberal and unsympathetic attitude of the official world towards Indian demands.......... It is not a merely innocent coincidence that the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab and the Governor of the Madras Presidency have spoken on the question of self-government for India as formulated by the distinguished leaders of Indian opinion, in alarmist and unfriendly hostile terms. There is a profound significance behind it. We doubt if these self-complacent and self-admiring satraps would have spoken in the spirit or the language in which they have addressed their gratuitous homilies to the Indian people and their leaders, if Lord Hardinge had been at the head of the administration in India.......... We feel persuaded to believe that the currents of the political atmosphere at Simla and Delhi are gradually spreading themselves out in different provinces......... In Bombay Lord Willingdon persuaded himself as early as 1915 that political agitation and political conferences and meetings were not desirable. He repeated his advice in a more emphatic and authoritative manner in his last speech at the Town Hall in connection with the Indian War Loan. The public of this presidency have differed from His Excellency in toto in this matter, but so far with his innate good sense and noble impulses His Excellency has not yet allowed himself to give offensive expression to the reactionary views and alarmist sentiments of his two brother satraps in the South and in the North. We do hope His Excellency will do nothing of the kind."

Indian Social Reformer (2), 3rd June; Phœnix (6), 2nd June.

3. "We will only say here that Lord Pentland was exceedingly ill-informed in his statement that his Government has the support not only of the educationists but of the general body of public opinion, if by 'educationists' and 'public opinion', His Excellency meant Indian educationists and Indian public opinion. Of course, Englishmen, who form the bulk of the Indian Educational Service, are bound, whatever their private opinion may be, to endorse the action of Government, and they can also foster among their Indian subordinates a sort of public opinion in favour of such action. But if there is any appreciable number of Indians, educationists or public men, who regard the order of the Madras Government as anything but a dangerous and provocative measure, we should be glad to know their names and standing in educational and in public life." [The Phœnix remarks :—" We can understand His Excellency looking askance at Mrs. Besant's Home Rule talk. But what has he to say to the moderate scheme of reforms formulated and adopted by the two responsible and accredited bodies of India? Lord Pentland's speech is susceptible of leading us to believe that he is opposed even to the moderate demands adopted by the Congress and the League. We regret that His Excellency should have broken out in language calculated to show him as a sun-dried bureaucrat."]

Bakul (81), 3rd June; Satya Shodhak (101), 3rd June; Prakásh (99), 6th June; Shetkari (37), 3rd June; Subhodaya (New), 1st June.

4. The idea of swarajya has taken such a deep root in our minds that even a higher official than Lord Pentland would be powerless to eradicate it. We know quite well that our demand for swarajya will in all probability be given the go-by after the war. We are also aware what efforts Ireland has had to make to secure swarajya although only a narrow channel separates that country from England. British statesmen could not apply compulsory service to Ireland owing to the discontent among the people. Why should not our Government recognize that failure to grant our demands would perhaps engender similar discontent among us? We should not only ignore Lord Pentland's advice to abandon the Home Rule movement, but carry it on with greater vigour. Our demands would have been conceded ere this if it were possible to get anything without agitating for it. Our constitutional agitation for swarajya is due to our not getting what we are entitled to. It is useless, therefore, for Lord Pentland to prate about giving us good advice under the guise of outspokenness. [The Satya Shodhak writes :—The recent utterances of high officials of Government indicate that they are about to give a quietus to our cherished ambition to obtain swarajya. Lord Pentland's disapprobation of this movement is very irritating and has provoked hot discussion everywhere. His Excellency's speech, owing to its violence, will not fail to create much discontent among the people. Our readers can imagine the effects of such venomous utterances of responsible officials at a time when people are offering their all for the successful prosecution of the war and are eagerly awaiting the moment when their desires would be fulfilled. The views expressed by the Provincial Governments show that the Home Rule movement will one day be disposed of under the Defence of India Act. It is a moot point, however, whether the deep seated desire for swarajya can be entirely effaced from the minds of the people. The Prakásh writes :—Mr. Balfour stands up for popular government. Lord Pentland, a countryman of his, however, views it with disfavour and is advising people to abandon the ideal of swarajya. Perhaps he considers the bureaucratic form of government to be the best! Mr. Balfour's speeches (in America), however, show that responsible British statesmen are against a system of government under which people's money is spent without their consent and obnoxious laws are enacted in the teeth of the opposition of the elected representatives of the people. Why should a body working constitutionally to establish a popular form of government be an eyesore to a Governor who is deputed by these statesmen? Perhaps this is due to the bureaucratic atmosphere of the country. Whatever the reason may be, Lord Pentland's advice is inopportune and stale and is politically unpractical as it conflicts with the expressed views of responsible British statesmen. The Shetkari remarks:—Can the officials explain why the argument, that a satisfactory solution of the Irish problem at this time would secure the hearty co-operation of Ireland, should not apply with equal force to India? Lord Pentland's speech fully proves the contention of Mr. Tilak and other Indian leaders that the bureaucracy thwarts our legitimate aspirations. The Subhodaya remarks:—Those who can grant us the rights of swarájya are in England. What has Lord Pentland to do with them? Lord Pentland cannot either grant us the rights to-day or come in the way if the Imperial Government mean to give them. It is quite absurd to argue that the most intelligent leaders of the public in India pass venomous criticism against officials. Who has told Lord Pentland that our aspirations are but 'Castles in the air'? Is it Mr. Lloyd George? If Parliament has decided that we should not be given rights of swarájya, of whom is it afraid that it should not tell us so plainly? When the Governor of Madras is not afraid, is the Prime Minister of England afraid? Of course it is an invention of Lord Pentland himself.]

Gujaráti (12), 3rd June; Kaiser-i-Hind (20), 3rd June; Gujaráti Punch (14), 3rd June.

*5. Commenting upon Lord Pentland's speech the Gujaráti writes:—Lord Pentland has needlessly adopted a short-sighted policy at the end of his tenure of office. He has not the power of getting anything effected either at a slow or rapid pace. It is a matter for regret that the Honourable Members of the Legislative Council had as usual no opportunity of making a reply. The falsity of the advice given by Lord Pentland is proved by the sudden political change effected in Russia which is mostly inhabited by ignorant peasants. Lord Pentland's advice will put Indians on their guard and prompt them to persevere in their legitimate political agitation with confidence of success. [The Kaiser-i-Hind writes:—We cannot say how far Lord Pentland was justified in making a speech that has given rise to needless agitation in different parts of the country. Leaders of political opinion in this country so far hoped for some sympathy from official quarters in their agitation for Home Rule; but Lord Pentland has frustrated their hopes and has made a public announcement that repressive measures would be adopted to put down the movement. The policy followed by officials in India offers a strange contrast to that adopted by England towards Ireland. The Gujaráti Punch writes:—We do not think that there is anything objectionable in the perfectly legitimate movement that the Indians are making for securing Home Rule. It seems strange that Lord Pentland should announce his intention of putting down the movement and at the same time ask public leaders to co-operate with him. Lord Pentland will never get the sympathy of the Indian people in his crusade against Home Rule. Mr. Lloyd George is a great protagonist of democracy and we feel sure that India will not be disappointed if an appeal is made to England to give Home Rule to India.]

Mr. Lloyd George's and Lord Pentland's views about India's future contrasted.

Sánj Vartamán (28), 7th June; Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 8th June.

6. The Sánj Vartamán quotes that portion of the speech, delivered by Mr. Lloyd George at the time when the Freedom of the City of London was conferred upon him, wherein the Premier observes that the "loyal myriads" of India "should feel not that they were subject races of the Empire but partner nations" and wherein he deprecated timidity, timorousness and faintheartedness in the time of war, and remarks:—While these words of Mr. Lloyd George create new hopes and enthusiasm in our hearts, the views of narrow-minded and timorous statesmen like Lord Pentland chill them and fill the people with disappointment. Mr. Lloyd George appeals to the British public to settle the questions of Ireland and India with courage and statesmanship instead of getting nervous over them, as Lord Pentland has done. These wise sentiments expressed by the Prime Minister will spread great satisfaction among the Indian people, who will find comfort from the belief that India can rely entirely upon Great Britain as long as statesmen like Mr. Lloyd George are at the helm of the Empire. [The Praja Mitra and Pársi also contrasts Mr. Lloyd George's speech with that delivered by Lord Pentland in the Madras Legislative Council and remarks that not only political but also all leading commercial bodies in India should, by way of strengthening the hands of the Premier, hold public meetings to raise a strong protest against the speech of Lord Pentland and pass resolutions urging Government to put into practice without delay the scheme of reforms formulated by the joint committee of the Indian National Congress and the Moslem League, as the first instalment of political reforms to be introduced in India.]

Alleged intellectual and moral enslavement of Indians.
Mahrátta (4), 3rd June.

7. "Dr. Page, the United State Ambassador, speaking at a dinner given in honour of the entry of the United State into the war, said :—'Our creed is the simple and immortal creed of democracy, which means Government set up by the governed; for this alone can prevent physical, or intellectual, or moral enslavement'.......... Have not Indians any claim on the sympathy of the Governments and peoples who talk profusely of the creed of democracy and declare in season and out of season that a free Government, 'a Government set up by the governed' alone can prevent physical or intellectual or moral enslavement? The intellectual and moral enslavement of Indians—against which the New Spirit is working energetically—is evidenced in the anti-Home Rule agitation carried on by Indians (!)......... 'Free Government' is the ideal, Dr. Page said, towards which the whole world is now moving along bloody paths. And if the whole world is moving towards the ideal, India may well hope to find many a sympathiser in the world in her march towards this Ideal. Shall her march be 'bloody' in any of its stages? Who can tell?"

Alleged lack of a consistent policy on the part of the rulers of India.
Kesari (92), 5th June.

8. Quite the opposite of what happens in England takes place in India. The ministry itself agitates for Swarajya for Ireland, but India cannot digest even the Swarajya movement. Sinn Feiners are patted in England, but Mrs. Besant who is following the loyal and constitutional path in India is threatened. Lord Pentland tells us that England does not like sudden revolutions, but England sings the glory of the Russian revolution. Lord Pentland terrifies us, and says that the defamation of the bureaucracy will not be tolerated, when we say that the prevailing system should be abolished. But nothing wrong is smelt in England if Mr. Asquith's Ministry is turned out. We do not know what to make of these two contrasts. Who is the wise man among the English? The energetic minister of England or the plodding Governors in India? But the Governors of India should have at least had a consistent policy. Lord Pentland tells us that no one will attach any importance to the demand for Swarájya in these times, while Lord Chelmsford sends a despatch to England asking for concessions! A nice thing it is that the Viceroy may make some demands, but we must not! He says that the concessions should be given after the war; we also say the same thing. Where is then our fault? Why are they so angry if we ask for our rights? We have heard uptil now of black confusion; but this confusion of 'white' officials seems to be quite extraordinary!

Alleged unsatisfactory position of India in the Empire and the Colonies.
New Times (New), 29th May.

9. "If the position of India in the central organisation of the Empire has not improved, it has not become very much better in the self-governing Colonies. Now that the terms of the famous Reciprocity agreement are before us, we confess to a sense of bitter disappointment. They concede nothing which Indians as full members of the Empire have a right to expect and which is not already conceded to other Asiatic races. Our representatives have betrayed India and it is only after reading the terms of the agreement that we are able to understand Sir Robert Borden's enthusiasm at their 'fairness and moderation'.......... It may be asked why India should go on undertaking additional Imperial responsibilities if her position in the Empire is in no way better than that of any foreign nation, unless Imperial partnership means that India is to bear all the burdens and the Colonies to enjoy all the rights.......... It is nothing short of a cruel mockery to ask India to mete out a similar treatment to Dominion emigrants when we know that the Colonies have no men to spare for labour or settlement under the hot climatic conditions of India. It would be perhaps more to the point if India were allowed to exclude the residents of the offending Dominion from all share in its administrative and commercial life for which the Dominions have such a powerful attraction. But the Colonies have taken care to provide for their interests in this direction by stipulating that full facilities should be granted for the admission of tourists, students and the like (including, of course, merchants and public officers) and for business visits entailing temporary residence, so long as this residence was not for labour purposes or for permanent settlement."

Reckless agitators err in the good company of Shivaji and Washington.
Mahrátta (4), 10th June.

*10. "George Washington would certainly have rejoiced to co-operate with British statesmen in putting down 'Despotism'. But George Washington—the child of Liberty—would have been ashamed of associating with these statesmen in their policy of neglecting India. Washington heartily hated the heel of the despot.......... It must be remembered that Washington was 'a rebel'—when he fought for freedom. He is now wreathed by the British Mission as 'a patriot'. Values change with times. The many sons and lovers of India who have been and who will be made to suffer for their devotion to this suffering country, being given the names of reckless 'agitators' and so forth, err in good company. They are humble workers in the field of Liberty, recognising in the British-worshipped Washington, one of their Elder Comrades of the Past. To err in one's own humble way with Washington of America or Shivaji of the Maharashtra—is it not a matter for just pride?"

Comments on the steps being taken to grant Home Rule to Ireland.
Praja Bandhu (24), 3rd June; Kaira Vartamán (61), 6th June.

11. The Praja Bandhu refers to the proposed convention representative of all classes and interests in Ireland which is going to be formed for formulating a new constitution for Ireland and remarks:—Ireland after many futile attempts is going to be given Home Rule. No one will say that India must necessarily pass through all the difficulties that Ireland has had to encounter in order to be considered fit for Home Rule. Bitter feelings and difficulties would have been almost completely obviated if Ireland had been given Home Rule a little earlier. The legitimate aspirations of a country engendered in peace should be satisfied in a peaceful and amicable manner. The British Empire is gaining fresh experiences day by day and Indians cannot, therefore, be said to entertain impossible hopes if they believe that the experience gained by England in giving Home Rule to South Africa and Ireland will be helpful in placing India on the same footing. [The Kaira Vartamán reproduces the above without acknowledgment.]

Comments on Mr. Gandhi's activities among the coolies of the Champaran District, Behar.
Hindusthán (16), 6th June; Political Bhomiyo (65), 8th June; New Times (new), 25th May.

12. Referring to the telegram published some time ago by the Associated Press, wherein the destruction of a factory by fire in the Champaran District, Behar, was attributed to the excitement said to have been created among the Indian labourers by the presence of Mr. M. K. Gandhi and also referring to Mr. Irwin's letter appearing in the Pioneer, wherein the writer has declared to the effect that the jute planters will have to take measures by way of self-defence if Government will not interfere in the matter, the Hindusthán remarks that the planters have been thus making endeavours to drive Mr. Gandhi out of the district, through fear lest Mr. Gandhi's inquiry might lead to the disclosure and removal of the grievances of the oppressed rayats and would prejudically affect their material advancement. The paper observes that even if Mr. Gandhi's presence among the coolies of the Champaran District has produced exitement among them, as alleged, which according to its belief it has not produced, it is really attributable to the oppression and maltreatment to which they were subjected by the planters. It declares that Mr. Gandhi has been actuated to undertake his present inquiry by the sole motive of removing the hardships of the coolies. [The Political Bhomiyo, on the other hand, while not endorsing the belief entertained in some quarters that the excitement among the Behar coolies was engineered by Mr. Gandhi, does not view favourably the taking of steps which would tend to create disaffection among the subjects at the present times when peace is very much needed. It accordingly advises Mr. Gandhi to give up taking part in political matters and busy himself with pursuits which have for their object the removal of social evils. The New Times writes:—"We publish elsewhere an account of the inquiries of Mr. Gandhi about the conditions of labour on the plantations in Champaran in Behar published by the Hindi paper Pratap. The condition of things, if it is true, is shocking beyond description. It recalls the old days of the Company's rule in Bengal when Indian weavers used to do forced labour and be compelled to buy and sell things at prices fixed by the Company's Gumashtas."]

Alleged malicious attack on Mr. Gandhi by a Bihar planter.

Young India (10), 6th June.

13. "The Allahabad journal contains a malicious and vituperative attack on Mr. Gandhi by a certain Mr. Irwin, manager of one of the factories. Mr. Irwin has not hesitated to lay the trouble which was recenty reported at Mr. Gandhi's doors and is so far emboldened as to assume a bullying tone. He declares that 'unless Government can see its way to protecting' the planters by the removal of Mr. Gandhi from the Champaran district, as suggested by him, the planters will 'unavoidably be forced into taking steps necessary for their own protection.' It is all very well for Mr. Irwin to prate as he thinks. But the question is whether the Behar Government will put up with this impertinent factory manager, who has chosen an impudent way of telling the Government what it should or should not do. We know what would be the consequence of a similar declaration, from one of a less favoured race. It would be construed as tantamount to a declaration of war againt His Majesty's Government established by law and the person suitably dealt with according to bureaucracy-made law. But then does not Mr. Irwin belong to a favoured race of indigo planters? He can intimidate Government and prey upon the poor, ignorant ryots of Bihar. There is no higher law than him. Mr. Irwin may well think that his bravado will succeed in the long run, with the Government by his own countrymen. But public opinion in India is now fully enlightened. The recent burning down of a portion of some factory office was, we have reason to believe, part and parcel of a conspiracy on the part of selfish interested planters themselves with a view to discredit Mr. Gandhi and his mission among them. We do not wonder if some of the planters are capable of such wiles."

Mahrátta (4), 10th June.

14. "It will have been noticed by our readers that Mr. Irwin's letter closes with a most impudent threat to the authorities of Behar. The white and white-black community of India has been fondled by the Indian authorities beyond all bounds of commonsense not to speak of justice and equity. The result is the overwhelming sense of self-importance which almost every 'whiter' and 'semi-whiter' has developed. In India which belongs rightfully to the ryots of India, these people talk as if the ryots had no business to exist except for the welfare of these 'gods'! How long is this state of things to last? When will these gods be dethroned and made to realise that they are no better than any ryot of India? In other werds, when shall we have Home Rule with complete equality of rights for all the citizens of India? Things are becoming absolutely unbearable!"

The mistaken educational policy of the Madras Government.
Subodh Patrika (38), 3rd June.

15. We are of opinion that the Government of Madras never made a greater mistake than in their handling of the student problem. Where was the need for restricting the liberties of the students of Madras as they were not proved to be particularly troublesome? Bengal knows to its cost the evil effects of trying to keep the students under needless and excessive control. We only hope Madras may not have the same bitter experience. The Government of Madras seem ignorant of the established fact that the desired object can be easily attained by trusting the students and treating them kindly, whereas intimidation proves unfruitful.

Protest against the proposed changes in the criminal law of the Punjáb.
Dnyán Prakásh (33), 2nd June.

16. A Bill has been framed by the Punjab Government on the lines of the law of crimes in force in the North-Western Frontier Province. It creates the new offence of abstention from helping in Police investigations. It also throws the burden of proving their innocence on the villagers who will in the first instance be held reponsible if any offence is committed in the village. In many cases the inefficiency of the Police is the cause of the non-detection of crime. Why should the villagers suffer if the Police are not able to do their work? A special responsibility of helping in investigation has been thrown on title holders and Inamdars, which also is against the principles of justice. It is an insult to the Punjáb to rank it along with the backward North-Western Frontier Province, and the Lahore Municipal Council has unanimously protested against the comtemplated legislation. We hope other bodies also will follow the example of the Lahore Municipality. Whatever may be the difficulties of the Punjab Government, they will not be removed by revolutionary changes in the system of dispensing justice.

Adverse comments on a recent speech of the Lord Bishop of Bombay.
Message (5), 6th June.

17. Referring to a speech delivered by the Lord Bishop of Bombay, in which he said that "India cannot truly be called loyal till all the required loan has been subscribed", the Message writes:—"The Lord Bishop of Bombay is supposed to be a man of some responsibility. At any rate, he is not one of those irresponsible and irreconcilable people who publicly parade their nonsense from time to time. He presided lately at the prize distribution of a children's school, and after the prizes were given away by Mrs. Palmer, he is reported to have addressed the children in language which is not at all commendatory of His Lordship's wisdom and commonsense."

Comments on the Government Press Note on the alleged oppression by certain officials in making people subscribe to the War Loan.
Young India (10), 6th June.

18. "His Excellency Lord Willingdon's Government has come to the conclusion that the three principal allegations made out by our contemporary are either entirely false or are not borne out by facts. We have no mind to quarrel with the Government in its finding. Even if the allegations fail, as a result of a one-sided inquiry conducted under circumstances which effectually barred the possibilities of independent testimony, the facts elicited by the Talukdari Settlement Officer go to show that there was more than polite persuasion resorted to by the misguided and over-zealous Deputy Manager of the Rampura village. The Government has generously placed its seal of commendation on the conduct of the officer concerned, and we are not at all sorry to leave it at that. We would, however, remind the Government, for future use only, of such a small circumstance as that local officials are not the best persons for undertaking inquiries of this nature. By the very nature of the case, the villagers were precluded from giving evidence freely or impartially, lest by their conduct they should call down upon their own heads the wrath of the mighty. If they could have been assured that they would not be exposed to the mercy of disappointed or prejudiced officials, with whom they have to live in perpetual contact, it appears to us that there was some chance of obtaining more conclusive evidence."

Mahratta* (4), 10th June; Kesari (92), 5th June; Mantri (new), 3rd June.

19. "Readers will remember that the letter in the Chronicle contained the following observation: 'The leaders of the village dare not expose the Manager because matters like income-tax, land assessment are wholly in his power.' Here in this observation lies the explanation, in our opinion, of the wonderful results of the Government enquiry into the Rampura troubles. If the Deputy Manager is a bug-bear of a formidable kind, the Talukdari Settlement Officer must be an infinitely more formidable bug-bear to the Rampura people......... Will Government publish the original report of the enquiry? Government's report on the report made by the Settlement Officer interspersed with Government inferences is not likely to give any satisfaction to the public. It has been vociferously claimed on behalf of the bureaucrats that they are more in touch and sympathy with the hopes and fears of the ryots and their surroundings than the educated Indians are. The observation of our Government condoning, nay, almost eulogising the official zealot who strongly uses the pressure of 'argument' in the matter of the war loan clearly proves either that the ryots are a sealed book to the bureaucracy or that the bureaucracy have little sympathy with them in their sufferings caused by 'strong' official pressure......... Why is Government so keen about pressing money out of even poor ryots?......... 'Here is a marked proof of our noble work in India. We estimated that the war loan subscription would not go beyond Rs. 15 crores,......... This noble figure points to the loyal enthusiasm of the people—and this loyal enthusiasm is the result of peace and order and contentment and prosperity, etc., etc., which we—the much-maligned bureaucracy—have brought to the people of India and preserved for them through times of stress and difficulty'. This is the sort of appeal that the Indian bureaucracy seems tempted to make to the Ministers at Home......... The press note of our local Government condones the use of such pressure and therefore deserves to be strongly condemned......... We are sorry that His Excellency has not found it convenient to discourage the idea of official pressure. He has, on the contrary, given it an indirect sanction in saying that so long as this pressure does not mean threats, intimidation and violence, it is not a matter of which Government can take notice. As we have said above, this attitude supplies a lucid commentary on the professions of bureaucratic affection for the ryots of the country." The Kesari says:—The policy unfortunately adopted by Government in the Note will not lessen the high-handedness of officials; if anything, it will gain in strength and the panic of the people will be doubled. People will attach no value to the ex parte inquiry conducted by Government officials and the inferences drawn therefrom by Government. If Government really meant what they say in the Press Note in beautiful language that people should not pay beyond their means, they would have conveyed their intentions in unmistakable terms to the officials at the very beginning of the movement, and Government would not have incurred the blame consequent on these ruffianly acts of their officials. The lower officials carry the orders of Government to the utmost limit with the intention of gaining credit and it is unpardonable ignorance if Government plead that they do not know it, and it is an unpardonable crime if Government know it and still permit officials to collect money by using pressure and force. Government say in the Note that the publication of the incident in big headlines would affect the collection of money. Even admitting it, why should not such complaints appear in the Press? Why should the independence of India suffer while striving to make Belgium free? Why should Peter be robbed to pay Paul? Why should Government in the first instance trouble themselves with the collection of money? It depends on the sweet will of the people to subscribe or not. If the rayats are forced they would be scared away and they would be filled with distrust. It is a misfortune that officials do not possess even the necessary intelligence to realise this. Government were never under the delusion that they would be able to raise 150 crores in India. Sir W. Meyer expected at the most 15 crores. Government have taken up the burden of 9 crores per annum and those who do not subscribe to the loan will have to pay in the form of new taxes, etc., that would be imposed to raise the sum. They would not escape any way. The amount collected by means of pressure can be but very trifling. What wisdom is it to lose honour for such a petty thing? [The Mantri says that Government have admitted in a way that pressure has been used in collecting money. Lord Willingdon and the Secretariat folks may not see much in it, but in the villages, it continues, even the request of the officials is regarded as an order by the ignorant. It holds that Government would have done well if they had instructed the officials not to use pressure.]

Indian Social Reformer (2), 10th June; Rást Goftár (27), 10th June, Eng. cols.

20. "The first comment which occurs to us to make is that, if the tone and tenour of this document is to be taken to represent the general attitude of Government to the Press, the hope of friendly co-operation between the two agencies in the interests of good government must be set aside.......... What is the good of placing such complaints in the hands of Government, if the outcome of it is merely a hasty departmental enquiry, a Press Note full of "seems" and "appears" and the rest of the tribe of tentative expletives of which the English vocabulary is so full, and a gratuitious lecture to the Editor?......... Our second comment is the utter inutility of the present administrative system for any task which depends for its success on the enthusiastic co-operation of the people. The only emotion to which it can appeal is fear.......... We would respectfully suggest to the Governor-in-Council that it is what the people think, and not what His Excellency thinks of the ways of the officials, that really matters......... Then, again, where was the need for framing an estimate of the amount of money which each individual, village, or district should loan? Investing in the loan is a purely voluntary matter.......... The Central Provinces' Government have issued a Press Note complaining that mischief-makers are inducing pepole to sell the war loan bonds at a discount. In India, even the operation of economic laws, when it is not to the liking of officials, is put down to the work of mischief-mongers. The inevitable result of forcing people to invest in the war loan beyond their means or against their wishes is to lower its market value. A very prominent citizen and financier of Bombay, who has been working hard to popularise the war loan, was telling us the other day that this was what was happening even in Bombay city. People who invest in the loan under pressure, argumentative or other, naturally take the earliest opportunity to sell under the relentless pressure of economic conditions. We are sorry, therefore, that the Government of Bombay's Press Note seems to regard such pressure as legitimate." [The Rást Goftár writes:—"We congratulate the Government of Bombay on their prompt and expeditious inquiry into the allegations which were recently made by the Bombay Chronicle against some petty officers of a village in the Ahmedabad District.......... It was a departmental inquiry, pure and simple; and in cases of this character no investigation gives so much satisfaction to the public as that in which the personnel of the inquiry committee is a mixed board of officials and non-officials. But without straining this point and upon examining the findings of the Government Resolution, it appears to us that the inquiry in spite of its departmental character goes to substantiate in a general though not an assertive manner the allegation of the Chronicle that pressure of a sort had been used on the villagers.......... Apart, however, from inaccuracies as to details, we find that there is only the barest difference between the allegations in the main of the Chronicle and the findings in general of the Government."]

Sánj Vartamán (28), 2nd June; Hindusthán (16), 5th June; Bombay Samáchár (53), 5th June; Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 4th June; Indian Loyalist (18), 7th June.

21. Commenting upon the Press Note issued by the Bombay Government in reply to the allegations appearing in the Bombay Chronicle in connection with the collection of subscriptions to the War Loan, the Sánj Vartamán writes:—With due deference to Government we beg to differ from the conclusions arrived at by them. The loan is to be subscribed to voluntarily and it is quite improper that Government officials should use pressure or persuasion in connection with it. A very bad effect is produced on the minds of the ignorant public by the pressure brought to bear upon them by the Executive officers of Government, who exercise such vast powers in the districts and villages. The people have been willingly subscribing crores of rupees to the War Loan and we fail to understand why any pressure should have been used in an insignificant village. We think that the War Loan would not have been such a huge success if persuasion alone had been brought to bear upon the people. [The Hindusthán quotes extracts from the Press Note and proceeds to show that Government practically admit the allegations made in the complaints referred to. It then adds :—Government themselves admit that 'the pressure of arguments was strongly used', but do Government know the interpretation put by the people on the strong pressure of arguments used by the officials? In the mofussil the word of an official is law to the people. We would venture to suggest that officials should never resort to such kind of pressure. We wish the Press Note had not given indirect encouragement to the pressure of arguments exercised by officials. Government should have taken care to see that no undue influence had been brought upon the people in the matter of subscribing to the War Loan. They would have done well to appoint an independent committee to inquire into the allegations in question, and we feel sure that the finding of such a committee would have had a better impression upon the public mind. The Bombay Samáchár on the other hand expresses gratification that the allegations of pressure in connection with the War Loan have not been able to stand the test of investigation and that the Press Note has been able to show that the notable contribution made by the Bombay Presidency to the Loan is due to its loyal enthusiasm for the British Raj. The Praja Mitra and Pársi thanks Government for the prompt enquiry they instituted in the case and congratulates them on the finding of the enquiry which absolves Government servants from the serious allegations made against them. It believes the enquiry will greatly redound to the credit of Lord Willingdon. The Indian Loyalist writes in a similar strain and asks Government to take steps against the persons who published false complaints and thus excited public opinion against Government.]

Comments on the letter written by the District Magistrate, Bijnor, to certain Banias in connection with the War Loan.

Mahrátta (4), 3rd June.

22. Commenting on the letter of Mr. Stubbs, District Magistrate, Bijnor, the Mahrattá writes :—"Mr. Stubbs, we believe, cannot claim to be 'alone' in his enthusiasm. The war-loan has muddled the brains of many another official high and low. It is high time to stop this official fanaticism. If the Vaishya community of India had a proper esprit de corps, all subscription to the War Loan would stop all over India as a protest against this cold-blooded insult offered to the whole of that community by a district official of no mean standing. We are not sure whether or not Mr. Stubbs is free from Cupidity and Timidity. But we are certain that he is well stuffed with Stupidity and Ingratitude.......... Let us remember that Mr. Stubbs is an M.A. of a British university and has eaten the salt of India since 1898. We have had a sample of the manner of Mr. Wood, the principal of the Thomason Engineering College. Now we have this Mr. Stubbs. Mr. Wood keeps his place, despite the demands of the scandalised public that he should go. Mr. Stubbs—he will also keep his place, for aught we know! And are these merely black sheep in a white flock. Or are they 'types'?"

Comments on the Government Resolution on the unsatisfactory recruiting for the Indian Defence Force.

Kesari (92), 5th June.

23. The Kesari returns to the subject of the Indian Defence Force and complains of the figure 300 mentioned in the resolution and argues that if public leaders are encouraged the number of recruits increases and that it is diminished if they are discouraged. Thus, only two recruits have joined from Belgaum, may be because Mr. Khadilkar was not allowed to make a speech on recruiting in Belgaum. It further remarks that no forms could be had at first at Trichinopoly. If more recruits are wanted, it continues, the only way is to encourage the public leaders and censure officials like the Trichinopoly ones. It adds :—There is one more strong reason for the indifference of the people. However great, intelligent and brave a person may be, he will have to remain but a sepoy all his life if he joins the British Army. But if he joins the French forces, there is no objection to his being appointed to high posts. It is published that some Bengalees have already got these posts in the French Army. Babu Dheerendra Nath Sen publishes in the Amrita Bazar Patrika that Bengalees can find entrance even into the machine gun section of the French Army. It is not surprising if people feel no enthusiasm for joining the British force when they find that instruction in all branches and full rights are given on one side of the latitude near Calcutta and that little education and no rights are afforded on the other side of it. Glory to our Bengalee brothers who are putting the shortsighted policy of the British to shame by joining the army under such discouraging conditions! [In another connection the paper says:—There is nothing more disgraceful than the fact that the British Government is not as liberal towards Indians as the French are in every connection, and that it should only content itself by giving mere expression to high principles.]

New Times (new), 29th May.

24. Mr. Durgadas B. Advani writes as follows in the New Times with regard to the Resolution of the Government of India on the poor response to recruitment for the Indian Defence Force:—"With regard to the resolution itself, its tone is hopelessly unsympathetic. Unconsciously perhaps, the Government of India has here disclosed its truly un-Indian character. In self-ruling countries, whenever the people display want of patriotism, of martial spirit or any other desirable national characteristic the Governments of such countries study the causes that have led to the defects, and devise means for remedying them. In such countries the men at the head of the Government are themselves the 'leaders of public opinion'. But in British-ruled India the Government distinguishes itself from such leaders, it stands aside and calls upon them to take up in right earnest a matter which primarily falls within the sphere of its own responsibilities to the nation. Had the Government, however, been content merely with an exhortation on the subject, it might have passed. But its resolution amounts to a virtual condemnation of a country which has been completely damped, by the most iniquitous Arms Act known to the civilized world and by the most partially worked Arms Act, and whose patriotism has been chilled by a system of unnational education.......... If we contrast the apathy displayed by Government in this matter with the energy with which the labour corps are now being raised, and the interest which the official community is showing in the War-Loan, we will find one more convincing proof of the necessity for self-government for India! And it will teach us to become self-reliant, and to take to the work of recruitment with redoubled vigour."

Kaiser-i-Hind (20), 3rd June, Eng. cols.

25. "We have been surprised by the startling disclosures made by Mr. D. D. Sathaye and Mr. M. B. Velkar, Joint Honorary Secretaries, The Indian Home Rule League, Bombay Branch.......... The allegations, it need hardly be said, are most serious. If they are true, it only exemplifies the time-honoured device on the part of officials to bring to nothing the finest generosity of statesmen in England.......... It is clear that the idea of having Indians as soldiers is distasteful to our bureaucrats, and they exert their expert ingenuity to nullify the generous intentions of the Government. Be this as it may, it will hardly do even for the Government of India to have credit both ways: of enabling Indians to serve their country, and after allowing its officials to thwart and damp the enthusiasm of the applicants, to read a homily to Indian leaders."

Comments on the Government Press Note regarding number of applications for enrolment in the Indian Defence Force.

Young India (10), 6th June.

26. Commenting on the Press Communique issued by the Bombay Government regarding the number of applications for enrolment in the Indian section of the I. D. F., Young India writes:—"In the interests of clearness and accuracy, it is highly desirable that statistics should be secured for the various provinces showing the number of applications, the number passed and the number rejected, as also the principal reasons for such rejection. Information in our possession goes to shows that even in the consideration of applications for enrolment, political reasons have influenced the judgment of local authorities in some places and applications of people with a known proclivity for Home Rule have been passed over as not worthy of consideration!"

Comments on the Memorandum of the Indian representatives on the Imperial Conference regarding Indian emigration to Colonies.

Mahrdtta (4), 10th June.

*27. If membership of the British Empire carries with it no privileges for Indians, which any other Asiatic race does not possess in the Colonies of the Empire, the Indians may as well think of resigning this membership. .... The Indian people have had no representation in the War Conference or in the War Cabinet and are promised none for the future. The Imperial War Cabinet which it decided should hold its sessions every year will have the Secretary of State for India and India Government nominees to represent 'India'. Future Imperial Conferences will give a similar 'representation' to India. These 'favours' are only a mockery. The status of the Indian people remains unchanged. It is that which we must work energetically to raise. Our Home Rule agitation is the only way to raise it. We must impress it upon the Britishers that the recent tamasha of the Imperial War Conference and Cabinet has given us no satisfaction, for the simple reason that it has given us nothing, nay more, it has put its seal on a policy of 'Preference' which will be our ruin, unless an early grant of responsible Government makes it possible for us to counteract its effects by inaugurating a 'national' policy, such as may properly fit in with 'Imperial preference'."

Comments on the statement of the Japanese Ambassador in London that the Japanese fleet had guarded the coasts of India.

Gujarâti (12), 3rd June.

28. Commenting upon the speech delivered by the Japanese Ambassador in London before his departure to take part in the Economic Conference at Rome which appeared in the Times, dated the 19th April, the Gujarâti writes :—The Japanese Consul has told the English people in London that the Japanese fleet has guarded the coasts of India! Why should not India thank the Japanse fleet instead of the British? Is it not strange that a country inhabited by thousands of British subjects under the suzerainty of Britian should be protected by the Japanese fleet? Should such a thing come to pass after a century and a half of British rule? The British people may derive pleasure from the speech of the Japanese Consul, but it will fail to give satisfaction to the Indian peaple.

Comments on the proposed extension of His Excellency Lord Willingdon's term of office.

Young India (10), 6th June.

29. "Some days ago, the Times of India gave publicity to a letter from Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy. In his letter Sir Jamsetjee took upon himself the pleasant duty of giving expression to a feeling 'that an extension of Lord Willingdon's term of office would ensure for the Presidency the continuance of a liberal and sympathetic administration which would deal in a statesmanlike spirit with the many complex problems which will arise after the war.'......... In his letter, Sir Jamsetjee has pleaded that the 'time has not yet come to pronounce a verdict upon the administration that is now drawing to a close', and even when the inevitable time comes for such verdict, he thinks that the greater portion of it has been covered by a period which may be called an 'exceptional' one. We agree with Sir Jamsetjee, for reasons other than those he has given. Lord Willingdon's administration has been 'exceptional' not only for the war but also for the distinct tone of backwardness that he has imparted to the administration. Sir Jamsetjee thinks there are one or two 'outstanding features of Lord Willingdon's tenure of office, 'which have earned for it a wide popularity and which deserve to be singled out'. He mentions only one outstanding feature when he says: 'No Governor has personally come in contact with so many and such varied elements of the population entrusted to his charge'. We have no desire to read between the lines of this portion of the letter. But Sir Jamsetjee, perhaps by a happy instinct, glossed over the other 'outstanding feature' of Lord Willingdon's tenure of office—a feature which affected the public for weal or woe. Sir Jamsetjee has chosen to remain in commendable ignorance of the ill-conceived criminal proceedings launched against Mr. Tilak, the order of prohibition passed against Mrs. Besant, the laconic manner in which the question of free and compulsory education has been dealt with, and last but not least, the unsympathetic spirit of the entire administration, if not of His Excellency himself, towards Local Self-government, to mention only a few which can be set to the credit of Lord Willingdon's 'liberal and sympathetic' administration. Of course, we do not claim to have, as Sir Jamsetjee does, 'intimate relations' with Lord Willingdon. Personally, we have the greatest respect and admiration for His Excellency as a nobleman of amiable parts. As an administrator, however, we must honestly say, that we have never been able to flatter ourselves that in our Governor we have that perfect type of statesmanship which Sir Jamsetjee seems to have discovered somehow. Somebody has once described to us His Excellency as a well meaning but weak-minded autocrat, whose autocracy has been considerably diluted with bureaucratic sympathies.......... Sir Jamsetjee has remarked that such extension would 'ensure for the Presidency the continuance of a liberal and sympathetic administration'. Sir Jamsetjee may be right in this view, he may be wrong—our own opinion is that he is thoroughly wrong in holding such a view. But the question is whether 'the India Office which denied an extension of Lord Hardinge and Lord Carmichael' would give it to Lord Willingdon.......... In the case of Lord Hardinge and Lord Carmichael, things were different. Both had brilliant achievements or deeply pro-Indian sympathies to their credit, whereas Lord Willingdon has neither. At least he has shown no such weakness. But then, has he not an acute tenderness for bureaucratic ways? And these ways being now in high favour at the India Office, we shall not be surprised if Lord Willingdon's tenure of office is extended in the manner suggested. But whether it would be agreeable to the people,—people other than those voiced by Sir Jamsetjee and the Anglo-Indian scribe,—will have to remain an open question and is a matter of perfect unconcern to the 'Great Mogul'. We are, however, emphatically opposed to Sir Jamsetjee's suggesion of holding public meetings in Bombay and other important centres, for advocating the extension of Lord Willingdon's term of office. We know, and His Excellency knows too, that there is no such 'general desire', as Sir Jamsetjee alleges, and it would be unfair to force on the mass of timid people a situation, in which they dare not speak their mind openly. We are constrained to write against the proposal in the general interests of the Presidency. The times that lie ahead are full of portent to India and they need a fresh mind, free from the bureaucratic prejudices and sentiments. Himself a Liberal in politics, His Excellency has been unable to give expression to his liberal tendencies and to restrain his bureaucratic counsellors from hastening the administration on the downward course.......... If the next choice falls on a liberal-minded ruler, well and good, and if it falls on a reactionary of Lord Pentland's type, the choice would not certainly be bad. Both extreme liberalism and extreme despotism have their special value in the uplift of the nation. And in the stirring times through which we are passing we cannot afford to rest content with the milk and water liberalism of Lord Willingdon."

Gujaráti (12), 3rd June; Kaiser-i-Hind (20), 3rd June; Rást Goftár (27), 3rd June.

30. The Gujaráti expresses its disapprobation at what it calls the new "fashion" of making demands for the extension of the terms of office of Governors and Viceroys. It remarks that few dare to speak against movements set on foot for urging such extensions, because the names of those who do not favour such movements are sure to be included in the list of opponents of Government. It expresses surprise that Governors themselves do not discourage such movements. The paper then goes on to refer to a similar movement recently started for the extension of His Excellency Lord Willingdon's term of office as Governor and in that connection observes:—Apart from the question as to what mark Lord Willingdon has made during the four years of his régime on the administration of the Bombay Presidency, we do not think it proper, from the standpoint of the advisability of the extension of the terms of office of provincial rulers, to support the present movement. It is during the continuance of the war that Lord Chelmsford has been appointed in succession to Lord Hardinge, Lord Ronaldshay has been made to succeed Lord Carmichael and another Governor is going to come in the place of Lord Pentland. It, therefore, cannot be believed that the Home Government will find any difficulty in nominating a successor to Lord Willingdon. It is also doubtful if movements of this kind increase the prestige either of the people of this country or of the Governors concerned in the eyes of the Government of England. The people of England know very well that there are always persons ready to come forward to make such movements in favour of those who are in the possession of ruling authority, but that they do not echo the voice of the public. Public opinion on such matters always remains concealed. [The Kaiser-i-Hind, on the other hand, supports the movement for the extension of Lord Willingdon's term of office. It remarks that though some of the views expressed by His Excellency on political matters are opposed to public opinion, their Excellencies Lord and Lady Willingdon have furnished striking proofs of their deep sympathy for the people in all public movements. The paper writes:—On the whole their Excellencies' rule has proved to be very popular. The presence of such a sympathetic ruler and of his consort, who has rightly earned from the public the title of "the Lady of the Golden Heart", is very necessary in the Bombay Presidency during the continuance of the war. The Rást Goftár observes that Bombay wants a Governor of the type of Lord Willingdon. It prays that His Majesty's Government will accede to the public demand for the extension of his Governorship.]

Indian Social Reformer (2), 10th June.

31. While associating itself with Sir Jamsetji Jejeebhoy's proposal regarding extension of His Excellency's term of office, the Indian Social Reformer writes:—"The fact is that there can be no greater condemnation of the present system than that it is almost impossible for a Governor of Lord Willindon's almost obtrusively liberal views to give effect to them except in very minor matters. What could he have not done if he had with him and behind him the articulate voice of a representative National Council through which he could have appealed to the people when his policy was attempted to be thwarted or diverted or delayed by the inveterate conservatism of the bureaucracy? It is a most irrational arrangement which provides an English public man of broad and liberal sympathies to govern India and then, delivers him over bound hand and foot to his permanent officials."

Rást Goftar (27), 3rd June, Eng. cols.

32. "We endorse with the greatest pleasure the welcome suggestion of Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy's for an appeal from the public of the Western Presidency for an extension of His Excellency Lord Willingdon's term of office as Governor of Bombay........ Lord Willingdon's tenure is drawing fast to a close. But the war is raging still. We cannot, under the circumstances, afford to lose or miss our pilot. It is our humble opinion that His Lordship's presence with us for a longer period is almost dictated by the war itself......... and indeed the matter is rendered more serious still when we come to think of Her Excellency. For Bombay with one voice acclaims her as perhaps the most truly and deservedly popular of gubernatorial consorts—the queenliest of women—who ever graced these shores, and with her genial and gracious presence honoured every public call and social function."

Defence of His Excellency Lord Willingdon againt the attack of the Bengalee.

Hindi Punch (15), 3rd June, Eng. cols.

33. "Lord Willindon's career as Governor of Bombay is not without its faults. His Excelleny has committed some mistakes, but nobody can ever accuse him, as the Bengalee has done, of having caused 'racial bitterness to run high' and strained 'the relation between the rulers and the ruled'. On the contrary, His Excellency the Governor has during his career tried his best to make the relations between the rulers and the ruled very harmonious and cordial, and has succeeded in the attempt as no other Governor has. There has never been any racial bitterness visible in the Presidency, and the public and the Press acknowledge with gratitude the high ideals or harmony, cordiality and reconciliation His Excellency has always kept before him during the last four years. Not only that His Excellency has always encouraged racial harmony, but he has been ever ready to give his services in private and in public to smooth down all racial animosity whenever any instances have been brought to his knowledge."

Indians in South Africa.
Dnyán Prakásh, (33), 6th June.

34. General Smuts is talking of liberty and equality in London whereas his compatriots do not appear to be imbued with any such lofty ideals. In spite of their numerous disabilities in South Africa Indians were allowed, so far, to become members of municipalities and to vote at municipal elections. An attempt is now being made to deprive them of this right too. Under a draft resolution of the Union Government it is proposed to confine the municipal franchise to European British subjects only. We are often told that our services in the present war have brought about a change in the attitude of the Colonials towards India. Our experience in South Africa, however, does not support this view. It is most depressing that, at a time when the war is entering on a decisive phase, instead of conferring any new rights on Indians an attempt should be made to deprive them of those that they already enjoy. The Natal Municipal Association discussed at length the provisions of this Bill. The debate on that occcasion revealed the extreme intolerance of the Colonials. We often hear that the war has engendered devotion for the Empire in the minds of the Colonials. Are we to suppose this is a proof of that devotion?

Comments on the Birthday Honours List.
Sánj Vartamán (28), 4th June; Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 5th June; Akhbár-e-Islám (50), 6th June; Shri Sayáji Vijay (68), 7th June.

35. Commenting on the Birthday Honours List and remarking that the honours have this time been distributed with a freer hand than hithertofore because the services rendered by various persons during the present war had to be recognised, the Sánj Vartamán writes:—No other change is observable in the present List beyond this liberal distribution of honours. The most prominent feature in these lists, which is not absent in the present one, is that a very large portion of these honours goes to Government servants. It is the wish of the Indian public that those who serve the people should receive recognition from Government just in the same manner that services rendered by Government servants are appreciated. These Honours Lists will continue to appear unsatisfactory in the eyes of the public so long as services rendered to the cause of the people are not freely and liberally appreciated. [The Praja Mitra and Pársi expresses gratification at the honour of Knighthood being conferred upon the Honourable Messrs. Wacha and Rághav Vijyachàryar. It remarks that by conferring the honour upon these two gentlemen His Majesty's Government have effectively removed the sting from Lord Pentland's last speech in the Madras Legislative Council. The paper believes that by honouring them Government have honoured the Indian National Congress and the moderate sections of the Indian public. The Shri Sayáji Vijay remarks that the public of the Baroda State will rejoice to note that the honours of Diwan Bahadur and Rao Bahadur have been conferred upon Naib Diwan Ganpatrao Gaekwar and Mr. Ambegaokar respectively. It expresses the hope that, in the future, higher honours and on a more liberal scale will be conferred upon the rulers as well as the able officers and public leaders of this and other Native States of Gujrat and Káthiáwár, who have rendered help to the British Government in the present war.]

Kaiser-i-Hind (20), 10th June, Eng. cols.; Rást Goftár (27), 10th June, Eng. cols.

36. "The Honours List published on the King's Birthday is an unusually fine one in the sense that the recipients of titles are mostly deserving men. Pre-eminent among them stands the name of the redoubtable Mr. Dinshaw Wacha, who will henceforth be known as Sir Dinshaw .... Next to Sir Dinshaw Wacha the most arresting name among the new Knights is undoubtedly that of the Honourable Mr. Justice F. C. O. Beaman. Bombay possesses no more scholarly and intrepid thinker.......... Year after year his name has been passed over with studied care in Honours Lists. But at last the ultra-orthodox and the ultra-conventional notwithstanding, Lord Willingdon's vigilant eye has appreciated his real worth and remedied a long-standing defect. The Knighthoods conferred on the Honourable Mr. Chaubal and Mr. Abbas Ali Baig are a recognition of their work as officials. More interesting to us and the Parsee community is the C. I. E. conferred on our veteran scholar Shamsululma Dr. Jivanji Jamshedji Modi.......... High titles rarely fall to the lot of men who unostentiously pass their lives in deciphering the mysteries of dead languages. We trust now a new departure is made, and Oriental scholarship will henceforth be duly appreciated." [The Rást Goftár also welcoms the honours conferred on Messrs. Wacha, Beaman, Chaubal and Dr. Jivanji J. Modi.]

Indu Prakásh (35), 5th June, Eng. cols.

37. "May we venture to make a suggestion to Government? It is in fact a repetition of the suggestion we have been making every year. It is that eminent Indians, who have been serving the cause of general progress, whether in the field of education or politics, should be included in the Honours List in a greater degree than is the case at present. Never mind if they have been honest, uncompromising critics of Government. By honouring such men, Government would be proving their recognition of the identity of interests between the Government and the Opposition. We use the word Opposition in the sense in which it is understood in British public life. Government recognition in this respect has been extremely tardy."

Young India (10), 6th June.

38. "The bureaucratic fates have at last smiled on Mr. Chaubal of the Bombay Executive Council and he has now become the Hon'ble Sir M. B. Chaubal, K.C.I.E., C.S.I. Those who have carefully followed the proceedings in the Bombay Legislative Council have long anticipated some such honour for him. Sir M. B. Chaubal has, of course, earned his right to distinction by outdoing the bureaucracy in its bureaucratic methods, and our only regret is that his reward was delayed so long."

Message (5), 5th June.

39. "No less among his services is his signing of the Majority Report of the Public Services Commission, to which we have referred in these columns rather frequently. Then, there are his services to the Local Government on various occasions by gallantly undertaking to champion its interests against those of the public. His speech on Mr. Patel's resolution on Free and Compulsory Education last year is still too fresh to be recalled. A towering monument to Mr. Chaubal's illogic, that speech helped to win for the Government a victory at the division and we do not think a mere K. C. I. E. is an adequate compensation. Now that the much coveted title has been conferred on Mr. Chaubal, we humbly recommend that a purse be also voted to him."

Comments on the new rule of the Madras Legislative Council regarding introduction of private Bills.

Kaiser-i-Hind (20), 3rd June, Eng. cols.

40. "While all the world is progressing, the Madras Government seems bent upon prosecuting a campaign of repression. Apart from the speech of Lord Pentland which has displayed his firm faith in mere repression despite all historical evidence against it, the last meeting of the Madras Legislative Council saw yet another nail driven in the spirit of the Morley-Minto Reforms. Hitherto the non-official members possessed the right of moving for leave to introduce a Bill without the sanction of the Governor. Henceforth such sanction is to be necessary, which will enable the Governor—who is more often than not a mere mouthpiece of officials—to nip in the bud even a discussion of the desirability of introducing a bill. Lord Pentland, in spite of the long record of liberalism behind him, has proved anything but a liberal Governor of Madras. Somehow the generous praises and promises made in England by English statesmen with reference to India do not tally with the repressive policy so wholeheartedly followed in different parts of India. Some sort of reconciliation between English statesmanship and Anglo-Indian distrust is urgently needed. We ourselves are not at all whole-hearted supporters of the Home Rule propaganda, but we cannot be blind to the fact that repression popularises even an unworthy cause at the same time that it causes a breach of harmony between the Government and the governed."

Alleged high-handedness in the selection of the Principal of the D. J. Sind College (Karáchi).

Indu Prakásh (35), 8th June.

41. The Indu Prakásh gives from New India the details about the meetings of the D. J. Sind College Board, (Vide Weekly Report No. 22, paragraph 31) and remarks:—This is one more instance of official high-handedness if the facts mentioned above are true. We trust the matter will be fully sifted at the ensuing meeting of the Legislative Council and the officiousness of the Commissioner publicly brought to the notice of Government.

Sind Moslem (new), 26th May.

42. Commenting upon the resolution of the Sind College Board, requesting Government to lend them the services of Mr. Hampton as principal if Mr. Anderson could not be spared, the Sind Moslem remarks:—"We are glad to note that our suggestion as well as that of the Al-haq for the appointment of a European Principal met with the approval of all the Muhammadan members of the board and consequently they voted for the appointment of Mr. Anderson or Mr. Hampton.......... Some of our Hindu contemporaries seem to think that the College is a property of the Hindu community as it bears the name of a Hindu. But they are miserably wrong, as the College is maintained from the Government, Municipal and the Local Board grants, in which the share of the Muhammadan contribution is the greatest. We are indeed grateful to our Muhammadan members who have voted for a European Principal as suggested by us.......... If the Muhammadans do not accept a Hyderabadi Amil for the post, it shows they are alive to the educational needs of our community. In the days of the late Principal Farrel there were about 50 Moslems in the Sind College, while in the days of Professor Shahani they have been not more than 25. Sind Muhammadans left their province for reasons apparent to every thinking mind, and went and joined the Bahauddin College. Sind Muhammadans are not yet ready to rely on the promises of sympathy and support advanced by some sects of our Hindu brethren. At present though the Educational Inspector is a European, yet we have not made satisfactory progress in education which is due to the fact that the Educational Department is chiefly manned by the Hindus. But we are glad our leaders have awakened and now are able to see where the fault really lies."

EDUCATION.

Comments on the increase of fees in the Gujarat College, Ahmedabad.

Hindusthán (16), 4th June.

43. Referring to the recently announced increase of fees from Rs. 34½ to Rs. 44½ per term at the Gujarat College, Ahmedabad, the Hindusthán remarks:—When the College came under the control of Government an understanding was arrived at that the College fees should not be enhanced. It will not, therefore, be a matter for wonder if the public will feel somewhat aggrieved to note that that promise has been broken within four years. We will not be surprised if, as a result of the present increase of fees, some poor students of Gujarát will have to do without higher education. We feel regret mingled with surprise to see that efforts are being made to decrease the scope of education instead of increasing its spread. We still wish that the now increased fees may be reduced to what they were before and a new obstacle thus placed in the path of poor students removed.

NATIVE STATES.

Proposed memorial to His Majesty the King Emperor against certain acts of His Highness the Gaekwar of Baroda.

Gujarâti (12), 10th June, Eng. cols.

*44. Nanubhai B. Desai writes in the Gujarâti:—"His Highness the Gaekwar has already exercised the Divine right of kings in appointing a Shankaracharya against the usage of the past and the will of the public concerned. His Highness is going, as it appears, may God forbid it, to pass the draft Bill for carrying out certain caste-reforms, which in my opinion aims at nothing but the demolition of the caste system, handed down from generation to generation from times immemorial, into a law, with the assistance of the same instrument, viz., this Divine right of kings. If His Highness is pleased to use that right, crushing public opinion, why should not the British subjects concerned send in a memorial through His Excellency the Viceroy to His Majesty the King Emperor of India to arrive at a satisfactory solution of the question?"

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 15th June 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 24 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 16th June 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British Rule:

Alleged terrorism practised by military units stationed at Dadar (Bombay) 20
Comments on the Bombay Government's Circular regarding students and politics . . . . 1—5
Comments on the Burma Government's Press Note regarding the death of Chandi Charan Nag 19
Comments on the committee appointed by the Behar Government to investigate into the relations between the indigo planters and their employees . . . . 13—16
Comparison between the political situations in Ireland and India . . 11
How intolerant rulers like Lord Pentland and Mr. Hailey, Chief Commissioner of Delhi, are likely to do harm 6
How the future of German East Africa and Central Africa will affect India 21
Proposed "National" education scheme of Mrs. Besant 12
To obey a law that ceases to appeal to the conscience of a citizen is immoral 8
The ethics of repression 7
The Home Rule Leagues do not ask for anything more than the demands of the National Congress . . . . 9 & 10
Treatment of Indians in Burma . . . . 17 & 18
Excise: Increasing the duty on liquor is no check on drunkenness . . 31
Hajis: Advisability of postponing the Haj this year 34
Honours List: Comments on the Birthday — . . . . 32 & 33
Indian Press: Comments on the policy of the alleged officially patronised Sunday Tatler 30
Public Works Department: Dangerous condition of the Mahábleshwar-Váthár road 35
Sind: Alleged rudeness of a European to Indians at Hyderabad (—) . 36

War:

Comments on the abdication of King Constantine of Greece . . . 29
Comments on the Bombay Government's Press Note regarding pressure in connection with the — Loan . . . . . . 22—24
Comments on the impressions of Mr. N. M. Joshi, one of the press representatives sent by Government to Mesopotamia . . . 27
Comments on the submarine peril 28

H 103—a CON

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

War :—concluded.

How the Resolution on Imperial Preference passed by the Imperial — Conference has alienated the sympathies of India 26

The success of the — Loan in the Bombay Presidency is due to Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Willingdon 25

EDUCATION—

Comments on the increase in the fees of the Gujarat College, Ahmedabad . . 37

RAILWAYS—

Complaint about cheating by booking clerks at Railway Stations . . . 39

If special trains are not to be run for the next Ashadhi Fair the fact should be made public 38

MUNICIPALITIES—

Ahmedabad: Alleged strained relations between the Municipal Commissioner and the — Municipality 41

Bombay: Comments on the proposals of the Municipal Commissioner, Bombay, to economise by effecting a reduction in the salaries and number of low-paid employés 40

Hyderabad: The — (Sind) Municipal Committee of Management . . 42

Shikárpur: The Commissioner in Sind and the — Municipality . . . 43

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Comments on the Bombay Government's Circular regarding students and politics.

Mahrátta (4), 17th June.

*1. "Back to 1908! is the War-cry of the Bombay Bureaucracy. We say, Amen! Out of the tribulations which 1908 brought down upon us slowly grew the Spirit which culminated lately in proclaiming from the platform of our National Assembly that the Indian people demands that India should be granted Self-government at an early date. All hail, therefore, to the re-incarnation of the Government soul of that year in the Government Body of 1917! 'Government particularly desire that school and college students should not be permitted to attend meetings which are organised by Home Rule Leagues or at which Home Rule is to be advocated.' We are frankly in opposition to Government on this point and particularly desire that the unholy desire of Government expressed in the above words should never be permitted to attain fulfilment.......... It is for parents and guardians to judge in the case of their 'minor' children, and it is for grown up students in consultation with their elders to judge for themselves whether it is in the interest of the Motherland that boys and girls, even the grown up among them, should be strictly prevented from inhaling the atmosphere of public meetings.......... In order that there should be attempts on a large scale at organising Independent National Schools and Colleges, a thorough distrust of Government's educational policy in a good proportion of the intellectual and monied classes of the country is a necessary preliminary.......... Let us remember that now in the year 1917, resolutions passed in 1908 have been thrown at us in the hope that these missiles will serve to stunt the growth of the rising generation and thus to prejudice the National cause of Self-government. This digging up of old measures to counteract a most indispensable National Movement is a clear proof of the incorrigibility of our Bureaucracy and of its innermost determination to keep us 'hewers of wood and drawers of water' as long as may be. Let us, therefore, strictly avoid the temptation of being 'led away' by 'noble' sentiments now and then interspersed in gubernatorial utterances. Let our policy—in Educational and other National matters—be framed on the well-defined ground that we cannot trust the Bureaucracy. We hope that the unmasking of the Bureaucracy effected by the 'digging up' tactics referred to above will move a great many of our brethren to join the movement of 'National Education under National control,' so that a good proportion of our boys now condemned by recently promulgated orders to live and move and have their being in Regulation Atmosphere of a very dangerous character may soon have a place to go to where they may receive an education that will make them fit not only for maintaining themselves honourably but also for taking an honourable part in completely shattering the dominion of the Bureaucracy in India and enthroning in its place 'Responsible self-government' of the most suitable type." [Elsewhere the paper writes:—"'There is no obligation to contribute to the support of institutions which are not rendering effective service to the people'; thus concludes paragraph 8 of the Resolution of 1908. If the people acted on this principle where would our Government be?......... 'No representation, no taxation' is but a corollary of the axiomatic truth that 'effective service to the people' cannot possibly be rendered by any institutions which are not responsible to the people and have no full representation of the people on them. The Indian Home Rule Movement is based on the realisation that our Governmental institutions of the present day are not rendering effective service to the people. It is true, to use the words of the Government Resolution, that there is no obligation to contribute to the support of such institutions. But the Indian people are contributing, and will continue to contribute—until Government make it impossible for them to exercise their generosity."]

Gujaráti (13), 17th June, Eng. cols.

*2. "What is a public meeting? That was not defined and if the prohibition had been rigidly carried out, it would have prevented school-boys and college students from attending lectures even on literary, educational or scientific subjects delivered at public meetings. The absurdity of such a prohibition is too plain to need any further comment......... Are students to be prevented from attending a public meeting at which a lecture is to be delivered on the present war or an appeal is to be made for contributions to a Relief Fund or the War Loan? Is it permssible for them to attend a public meeting convened for the purpose of commemorating the reign of a popular or unpopular Viceroy or Governor?........ But the authorities have not taken the trouble to meet the difficulties that we have pointed out. It is no use ignoring them, if serious complications are to be avoided......... Government will by the adoption of such an extreme position verging on absurdity alienate the sympathy and support even of those parents and guardians who are as strongly in favour of the cause of discipline, obedience and well ordered conduct on the part of schoolboys and college students as any Director of Public Instruction or any Member of Government......... The use of the expression 'Home Rule' in the Circular under notice is of a dubious and misleading character. What does it mean? So far as the Congress is concerned, 'Home Rule' does not extend beyond the programme of reforms it has specifically formulated. That is a perfectly legitimate programme of constitutional reforms. But according to the direction in the Circular, a meeting convened by the Bombay Provincial Congress Committee for propagandist purposes in connection with the Congress scheme of self-government would probably be as much under a ban as any meeting organized by the Home Rule Leagues. The Congress organisations like the Bombay Provincial Congress Committee in this city and the District Congress Committees and the affiliated associations will, therefore, do well to consider if any reflection upon them is involved in the Circular. The present Circular, and the original rules to which it refers are not carefully and accurately worded and the question that arises is whether it has placed the programme of the Congress also under any cloud of suspicion. The Home Rule Leagues are distinctly placed under a ban. But though the Congress and its organisations are not specifically mentioned, the ban may extend to their meetings also at which self-government or Home Rule may be advocated whithin the limits of the Congress scheme. In this connection the Principals of colleges will have no discretion whatsoever, as in the case of other public meetings. Very probably their adherence to the expression 'Home Rule' has brought the present trouble upon the Home Rule Leagues, and therefore it is necessary for them to obtain a definite expression of opinion from Government upon the subject."

Indian Social Reformer (2), 17th June.

3. "We are not sure that Government took the trouble of perusing these documents to which they refer with such pious veneration. If they had, they would have seen that the most important of them is an essay on the duties of parents to their children, which, in utter ignorance of the teachings of their religion and 'from the fatal Oriental habit of yielding to importunity', Indian parents are supposed to neglect, necessitating the concoction of this Clarke-Enthoven encyclical.......... We doubt if Government perused these documents which they commend to the attention of teachers, because the present circular travels beyond the terms of the older circular, in that it lays down that 'school and college students should not be permitted to attend meetings which are organised by Home Rule Leagues or at which Home Rule is advocated.'......... We do not see why Home Rule Leagues should be singled out for this special ban, and how the advocacy of Home Rule is more subversive of students' discipline than the advocacy of the Colonial type of self-government which is a far more absolute kind of self-government than Home Rule. If Government expect to carry with them the moral sense of the community, they should limit their prohibition to propaganda advocating violation of the law. It has been admitted that no law is violated by the advocacy of Home Rule, and it seems to us to be highly arbitrary to single it out for official censure in this oblique manner."

Hindusthán* (16), 13th and 14th June; Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 14th June; Akhbár-e-Islám (50), 15th June; Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 16th June, Eng. cols.

4. The Hindusthán remarks that this step on the part of the Local Government is undesirable, It inquires what arrangements would be made for controlling the entire body of students if Home Rule were to be advocated in every house. It believes that the very principle on which such circulars are based is wrong. [In the subsequent issue the paper observes:—The present circular of the Bombay Government is not likely to cause any surprise because it is in keeping with the policy of that Government which had, in the past, issued an order against Mrs. Besant (under the Defence of India Act) and which prosecuted Mr. Tilak in a court of law. The present Government have clearly shown how they are inclined and it is, therefore, futile to hope for liberality from them.......... We will at least say this much that the public should not remain silent. They have every right to raise a protest if their birth rights are encroached upon and they should not be backward in exercising this right of theirs. We must say plainly that the present order of the Bombay Government is useless and inopportune. The very fact that other circulars are appended to the present one completely demonstrates its uselessness. There is only one new thing in the present circular, and that is the subject of Home Rule. We cannot understand what harm the Home Rule League and the swardjya movement have done to Government. It is erroneous to suppose that the present prohibition will operate as a real check on students. The complaint with regard to the students will cease automatically if its root cause, viz., the Home Rule League and its agitation for Home Rule are stopped. At present the Home Rule movement is the life and soul of the Indian nation. How can the attempts to stop it be tolerated? In spite of thousands of such endeavours it will continue and the youthful classes will also take part in it. Government have not been able to do anything in the past with regard to the transgression of their orders (in this connection) and the same state of things will continue in the present as well as in the future. In view of the present circumstances the Praja Mitra and Pársi does not approve of the Government circular. It, at the same time, believes that the circular is directed against the Home Rule League and opines that an indirect attempt has been made therein to counteract the effects of the misunderstanding created by the recent hasty speech delivered by Lord Pentland. The Akhbár-e-Islám supports the action of Government in issuing the circular. It regards the circular of 30th September 1908, appended to the present circular, as worth its weight in gold for the present generation, in spite of the loud protests that might be raised by other papers against it. The Bombay Samáchár commends the motive underlying the present Government circular, namely, that of preserving discipline and ensuring the formation of good character among students and opines that the public will be only doing their duty by the rising generation if they support Government and the heads of educational institutions in carrying out the measures adopted by them for the above purpose. It remarks that those who control the Home Rule movement are neither in the confidence of Government, nor of the Indian National Congress, nor of a very large portion of the Indian public; and since the Bombay Government have openly directed their present circular against their activities, the public should have no cause for apprehension with regard to their political progress on moderate and right lines. [In its English columns in a subsequent issue, the Praja Mitra and Pársi writes :—" Apart from a certain healthy political enthusiasm, aroused in the people by the great events of recent years, we do not see that there is anything in the political atmosphere to cause disquiet to anybody. On the contrary, the people all over the country have shown themselves to be most loyal, and cordial and eager supporters of England and her cause. Even the suspicion of sedition and disaffection which existed in 1908-09, and which probably inspired the orders of Lord Sydenham, does not now exist. It seems, therefore, that the present orders are mainly suggested by, and are directed against, the Home Rule propaganda. Government have not attempted to disguise their motives, for they particularly condemn meetings organised by Home Rule Leagues, or at which Home Rule is to be advocated.......... Taken by itself, and if intended merely to put some check upon the unrestrained association of school and college boys with political affairs, especially the Home Rule League, the circular may not be open to comment. What we are concerned about is to see how far it is part of a regular campaign of reaction and repression. It comes at a disquieting moment. Lord Pentland purported to issue a similar measure in the interest of discipline, and for the protection of students. But even while explaining and supporting that measure, he betrayed himself and his policy by condemning all constitutional agitation, by discrediting such perfectly legal national institutions like the Congress and the Moslem League, and by ordering loftily, on threats of penalties, that 'all thoughts of the early grant of responsible self-government should be put entirely out of mind.' We hope this students' circular is not to be the precursor of a similar policy of repression here in Bombay."]

Dnyán Prakásh (33), 15th June.

5. The orders issued by the Bombay Government prohibiting students from attending political meetings strengthen the impression that the repressive policy introduced by the Madras Government is not a local, but an Imperial one. College students were under no restrictions in the Madras Presidency and the local Government issued, therefore, a circular and prohibited them. But fortunately our Government are under no necessity of issuing a similar circular. Already a prohibition of all students from attending political meetings is in existence, and Government have only ordered a strict enforcement of the same. It is quite impossible to defend the order, specially the prohibition of students from meetings where they can form an acquaintance with the ideal of self-government. Government are welcome to follow any policy they please about swarájya. The popular party will follow any lawful method of resistance it thinks proper. But a strong protest is necessary if Government think that movement will be killed by the prohibition of students from political meetings. A strong condemnation is necessary if Government confuse the issues and visit their wrath at the political agitation on the students.

How intolerant rulers like Lord Pentland and Mr. Hailey, Chief Commissioner of Delhi, are likely to do harm.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 15th June, Eng. cols.

6. "Now, Lord Pentland shot his bolt some time ago. It was a bolt from the blue, but so far it has not proved more terrible than stage thunder. In Madras all sorts of rumours are afloat and the most drastic steps are anticipated. All offices of the Home Rule League are to be closed, Home Rulers are to be interned, and so on, and so forth. So far as Lord Pentland himself is concerned, no one will be surprised if he is guilty of any indiscretion, but it will be for the Government of India very seriously to consider whether there will be any justification for making trouble where none exists. Sir S. Subramania Iyer, for instance, is a Home Ruler and he has publicly announced his decision to remain one. What will Lord Pentland's Government do to him ?....... [Here the paper refers to action alleged to have been taken by the Chief Commissioner of Delhi against the Indra Prastha girls' school at Delhi on account of the connection of its Lady Superintendent with the Home Rule movement, and then continues:—] Officials like Lord Pentland and the Honourable Mr. Hailey forget that the sense of self-respect is growing and not diminishing in India. There is no place and no community in India which gives the least cause for any anxiety ; but if we have some more rulers like Lord Pentland, in a few years India will become a very different country from what it is now, and all that we have been hearing of India's services during the war will be forgotten."

The ethics of repression.

Kaiser-i-Hind (20), 17th June, Eng. cols.

*7. Under the heading "The ethics of repression," the Kaiser-i-Hind writes :—"It is impossible to appreciate the frame of official mind hurling thunderbolts of threats and execrations at Home Rulers. These may be insane for ought we know, but their propaganda is thoroughly constitutional, their aims thoroughly pro-British. Now the question is : if the movement is constitutional, is any English statesman justified in repressing it ? Assuming—nay, let us take it as a matter of fact, that the demand for immediate Home Rule is unwisdom personified—assuming that India will not be fit for Home Rule for another thousand years as many I. C. S.'s think, for reasons best known to themselves, even then is it advisable to repress the Home Rule cry now ?......... If self-government be her aim, it becomes her duty to train herself for it, and in the Home Rule movement, apart from the extravagancies of its leaders, we see nothing but an attempt to educate people politically and render them ultimately fit for Home Rule. So far as we can see, this is the real significance of the movement, and if the like of Lord Pentland refuse to acknowledge the right of India to educate herself politically, the future of India is darker than ever, and the British dominance in India will be justly branded as a colossal failure. If we are told that Home Rulers themselves demand a good deal more than what we represent, we may ask if the public opinion is on their side. If it is not, is it statesmanship on the part of Government to evoke popular sympathy for the movement by an unjust repression of it? Whatever the effect that the grandiloquent and ill-timed threats of Lord Pentland might have been expected to be by His Excellency himself, so far as we can see, they have advertised the movement as nothing else can ever have done. Crushing retorts to him have been forthcoming from the press and leaders of public opinion alike in this country. The veteran Sir Subramania Iyer, who can be declared a seditionist only by a fanatic if not a lunatic, has had the courage to declare: 'I cannot retrace my steps. I will not resign my office even if the League be declared unlawful. I am ready to face any penalties which may follow on my decision.'......... So much for the studied threats of His Excellency Lord Pentland. What is to follow now? We trust by now His Excellency is convinced that repression has the desired effect only amongst illiterate peoples, whose opinions are in a fluid condition, and that it is most misplaced where strong convictions have grown up in the minds of educated people."

To obey a law that ceases to appeal to the conscience of a citizen is immoral.

Mahratta (4), 17th June.

*8. "Lord Pentland's oration cannot be interpreted as making an exception in favour of 'Self-governmenters' and threatening only 'Home Rulers'. Nor does our local circular lend itself, in our humble opinion, to a similar interpretation. We are loth to believe that there will be any defections of respectable Congressmen from the Self-government or Home Rule Camp because the knout is being flourished in the air by our autocrats. We are loth to believe that like 1908 'astute' statesmanship will succeed in arranging a 'separate peace' with any important section of our countrymen......... Sir Subramania has declared that he will not resign his office even if the League be declared unlawful. This declaration, we learn, has frightened some people.......... When a law or an executive order seriously threatens to upset the order of things which is the sine qua non of the steady and continuous progress of the people and their Government towards the 'perfect' state, that law or order ceases to appeal to the good citizen's conscience as a law or order that must be obeyed. He readily comes to be convinced that to obey such a law or order is not only inexpedient but also immoral.......... To people who have vowed to fight the Motherland's cause entirely in the open by constitutional means and by none other, Sir Subramania Iyer's declaration must appeal as the only right thing under the circumstances. We trust that before long we shall have quite a giant list of men of weight from all parts of India publicly sworn to back up Sir Subramania in his most righteous and constitutional stand. We trust that any attempt on the part of our opponents to create a division in the camp of Aspiring India and to arrange 'a separate peace' will fail ignominiously. We trust that 'No Separate Peace' will be our universal National Cry and that whatever little differences still serve to classify us into parties A, B, C, we shall all join up and present a united front to the Bureaucracy, between which and any of our 'parties' there surely is an infinitely greater opposition of interests than there can possibly be between any one Indian party and any other Indian party. Vande Mataram!"

The Home Rule Leagues do not ask for anything more than the demands of the National Congress.

Sandesh (100), 14th June.

9. It is given out that Lord Pentland is trying privately to explain to some leaders that in his speech he did not intend to attack the Memorandum of the Nineteen or the Congress Scheme. It would be better if he publishes the fact openly instead of trying privately to convince some people. What does Lord Pentland want to object to? The time has gone by when a difference was made between the Congress views and the views held by people obnoxious to Government. It is admitted on all hands that nothing beyond what is stated in the Memorandum and the Congress Scheme is to be demanded at present. The Home Rule Leagues have accepted in toto the Congress Scheme and in view of their adherence they have been asked by the Congress to support it. General objections against the movement cannot be raised; only particular statements of individual writers and speakers may be objected to. The usual game of differentiating between men belonging to the popular party cannot be played without objecting to the Congress Scheme. We do not want to write anything about the repressive policy of Lord Pentland till it is actually enforced. If he wants to put down only the Home Rule Leagues, we have nothing to say. It is a matter of his own convenience. But there is no use in raising a cry that the demand of the Home Rule League differs from, and is more revolutionary than, that of other people.

Indu Prakdsh (35), 9th June.

10. In the course of a long article, the Indu Prakdsh says:—Certain recent events in England make us believe that our misfortune is at an end. The views of Sir Satyendra Sinha, as expressed when interviewed by one of the correspondents of the Englishman, create many hopes. Mr. Chamberlain has almost pledged himself to do good to us. The apparently adverse speeches of officials like Lord Pentland are favourable to us. Lord Pentland clearly says that the aspirations of those that go beyond the memorandum forwarded unanimously by our delegates are quite impracticable. It is but natural that we should become very much enraged at the speech of the Governor of Madras. But we must realise that our demands are beyond our capacity. It is undesirable as well as impossible to expect anything to happen at once. France which became suddenly independent had to pass through a severe ordeal and had to suffer for its sins for nearly 75 years.

Comparison between the political situations in Ireland and India.

Kesari (92), 12th June.

11. England has got to-day three voices. With one voice it is singing in concert with America the glory of full independence. With another it is requesting Ireland, be it under pressure, to choose the particular kind of Home Rule it likes. With the third it is growling at Home Rulers in India and threatening them with dire punishment if they continue the movement. How are we to make out which voice represents the real heart of England? From the day the Great War began England has set up the cry that the war has been undertaken for justice, independence and the rights of nations. But no one has yet come forward to tell it plainly to set its own house in order. England has not spoken a word about the beam in its own eye, but it has made strenuous efforts to find out the mote in the eyes of others. England has taken up the question of Irish Home Rule because it has received a plain hint from America to that effect. It explains the difference in the attitude of British statesmen who speak generously about European nations and Ireland and that of the local officials who speak ungenerously, contemptuously and indifferently about India. The sympathetic and generous words about Ireland now uttered by Mr. Lloyd George and Lord Curzon are not their own but they have been forced out of them at the bidding of America. When circumstances become similarly favourable to India the sweet song of Home Rule will be heard in India also. India must try hard to change the circumstances and find out a protector. But it is necessary to remember that Ireland has not entirely depended only on American sympathy. Its own efforts in that direction have been great. A deputation from India will not only draw the attention of America but also of the whole world.

Proposed "National" education scheme of Mrs. Besant.

Young India (10), 13th June.

12. Commenting on Mrs. Besant's recent scheme of "National" education Young India writes:—"The object of the Society will be to secure for the youth of India such education as will enable them to grow up as citizens of a Free India, 'not mere clerks whose value lies in their servility and whose aim is to become petty tyrants in their turn.'......... The fear seems to be entertained in some quarters that the movement would be viewed with apprehension by officials and like its precursor of the Partition days, it may even be suppressed.......... Government may disapprove of the movement in so far as the curricula of the schools and colleges will be adapted to the real needs of the country. But at best, they may not recognize our institutions nor give them aids, though to missionary and evangelical institutions they may. But that they will venture to suppress the movement is beyond a possibility at this time of the day. Lord Chelmsford has himself openly recognized that the halting and debased method of pursuing education must cease to exist."

Comments on the committee appointed by the Behar Government to investigate into the relations between the indigo planters and their employees.

Jám-e-Jamshed (19), 12th June; Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 13th June; Hindusthán (16), 13th June.

13. The Jám-e-Jamshed expresses gratification at the decision of the Government of Bihar and Orissa to appoint a committee to enquire into the grievances of the coolies employed on the indigo plantations in the Champaran District and suggests that either Mr. Gandhi or Mr. Polak may be appointed on the committee. [The Praja Mitra and Pársi congratulates the Government of Bihar and Orissa on their having appointed a committee fully representative of all interests and opines that the Government have taken a really wise step in asking the committee to investigate the question thoroughly and to submit their report within three months. The Hindusthán on the other hand expresses itself dissatisfied with the personnel of the committee on the ground of its having no popular representative except Mr. Gandhi. It is afraid the report of the committee will not help to solve the question.]

Mahrátta (4), 17th June.

14. "The only feature that strikes us as a commendable one is the appointment of Mr. Gandhi on the Committee. An ideal Committee in such a case would be one composed of impartial non-officials, unconnected either with landlords or tenants, before whom the official view, the landlords' and planters' view, and the view of the ryots represented by men like Mr. Gandhi should be placed. In the case of the present Champaran troubles, facts show that official sympathy is in a great measure on the side of the planters. Hence the constitution of the Committee justifies our fears that the result of the inquiry will not be satisfactory."

Kesari (92), 12th June.

15. Commenting on Mr. Irwin's letter to the Pioneer about Mr. Gandhi, the Kesari says:—It is very shameful to Government to allow such an attempt to be made openly. The weakness and subserviance of Government are unimaginable. That a planter should openly dare to threaten Government themselves and that Government should sit quiet would mean that planters and not Government rule the country there. Every local Government begins to growl at the Home Rulers who say that they will persist in their constitutional agitation if an instalment of swarájya is not given. Are we to understand that anything said by the favoured planters is to be allowed?

Dnyán Prakásh (33), 14th June.

16. The appointment of Mr. Gandhi, by the Bihar Government, on the committee appointed to inquire into the nature of the dealings of the indigo-farm owners with their tenants, is satisfactory. As the other Indian member of this committee represents the landowners, it is doubtful whether he would prove to be of any use. It was essential that Mr. Gandhi should have represented the tenants; and, therefore, it is necessary to thank the Bihar Government for his appointment. We may not criticise the Bihar Government for appointing only two Indian numbers on a committee of six; for, Mr. Gandhi being there to look after the interests of the tenants, it does not matter how many Europeans there are.

Treatment of Indians in Burma.

Young India (10), 13th June.

17. "We have received a copy of the representation submitted to the Burma Government by the Secretaries of the Provincial Congress Committee. The representation refers to the 'treatment of Indians coming by sea to Burma or travelling in the country itself, by the Police, the Customs and the Port Health authorities' of that blessed Province. If things before the war were bad enough, thanks to the Lieutenant-Governorship of Sir Harvey Adamson, they have become worse under Sir Harcourt Butler's 'able and zealous' stewardship of the Province. An intimate friend of ours, who had been to Burma about a year and a half ago, on his return to this country, described to us in an intimate way, not intended for publication, some particulars regarding the parochial rule of Sir Harcourt, under which every police constable exercised considerable authority over the person, property and liberty of every Indian, anarchist or no anarchist, visiting or moving about the Province. The authoritative document which has now been submitted fully bears out the statement made by our friend a year ago that Indians are subjected to every conceivable annoyance, hardship and humiliation because they are Indians. People wearing European clothes were comparatively free to do as they pleased and even travel on the Burma railways without possessing tickets.......... Nowhere has the administration so far failed to obtain fair treatment for Indians as the Burma Government."

Mahrátta (4), 17th June; Kaiser-i-Hind (20), 17th June, Eng. cols.

18. "We would direct our readers' attention to the representation of the Burma Provincial Congress Committee printed elsewhere. A perusal of this representation will give the reader an idea of what an Indian is to expect from the Freedom-loving British authorities, unless he in co-operation with his kith and kin and his countrymen makes it impossible for these authorities to continue in the enjoyment of irresponsible power. We refuse to believe that the desire of the Government of Burma is that Indian citizens should receive the treatment which a European receives. The lower officials, stupid as they may be in some particular cases, indulge in regularly humiliating and harassing Indians—solely on their own responsibility. It is the spirit of the Government orders that guides them.......... The British have indeed imported into the East quite a novel breed of germs—these germs induce in the carrier the preposterous idea that Indians may be subjected to any 'experiments' of quacks in the various branches of human activity, including politics and medicine. We have helped to aggravate this British disease by our passive submission, varied (to the amusement of the celestials) by our halting wordy protests !......... Where is the remedy for all this ? Not in mere representation undoubtedly.......... The humiliations and the sufferings depicted in the representation are such that a little taste of the same forced on a Britisher will rouse him to rebellion. The Burma Provincial Congress Committee, if they are serious about getting the grievances properly attended to, must make up their minds to organise themselves and members of the general public for something more solid than pen and paper protests." [The Kaiser-i-Hind remarks :—"Things must have come to a pretty pass, since the Burma Provincial Congress Committee have been forced to submit to the Lieutenant-Governor a representation, recounting the humiliations to which Indians in Burma have been subjected, and which ought to fill every self-respecting Indian with a profound sense of shame. Every Government as a matter of duty sees that abkári regulations are duly observed, that sedition and anarchy are speedily and effectually repressed, and that sanitary requirements are carried out in a reasonable manner. But only a police-ridden state can allow respectable and loyal citizens to be treated like seditionists, and harassed as can only be done by police whether under the mask of the health of the people or the safety of the people."]

Comments on the Burma Government's Press Note regarding the death of Chand Charan Nag.
Message (5), 15th June.

19. Commenting on the Press Note issued by the Burma Government regarding the death of Chandi Charan Nag, the Message writes :—"We confess we are not at all convinced by the account given in the press note. The political character of an offence committed might conceivably justify anything which the executive might choose to do, but can we believe that suspicions by certain individuals of some possible guilt about which nothing very substantial is proved are in India allowed such a consideration as to justify incarceration of an individual for months together witout any definite charge against him being framed in the law courts, and under circumstances which, in spite of all the care of officials concerned, might be attended with fatal results?”

Alleged terrorism practised by military units stationed at Dádar (Bombay).
Message (5), 12th June.

20. “Several complaints have been reaching from Dádar that the military units stationed there have been terrorising the poor, peaceful inhabitants of the place......... A certain correspondent, whose veracity we have no reason to doubt, writes of a low caste young woman having been forcibly carried off by some of the members of the Pathan units the other day with a view to outrage her modesty. The woman seems to have been ultimately let off at the intercession and we believe supplication too of a number of the humbler residents of the locality......... We know from personal knowledge of the Police refusing to assist the public in apprehending culprits who happen to wear a semi-military dress. That is a thing which is by no means unusual. In these circumstances, it appears to us that there is urgent need for the military authorities to look into the matter.”

How the future of German East Africa and Central Africa will affect India.
New Times (new), 31st May.

21. “The annexation of German East Africa to the Indian Empire is so necessary for the safety and well being of India and the Empire that we have always believed that our sacrifices in this great war would be vain if this object is not attained. If India is to provide herself with a near outlet for her surplus population (the Dominions have just slammed their doors in her face) and to reduce her military burden after the war, it is necessary that she should be the absolute master of the Indian Ocean. She should on no account allow any European power, much less Germany, to remain in a position of military vantage on the Indian Ocean whence her safety could be threatened with any appreciable chance of success. Therefore any plan which Germany may have with regard to Central Africa which stands just opposite on the other side of the Indian Ocean cannot but be an object of interest to her......... The Empire will be committing a fatal mistake if it sacrifices the advantages which General Smuts rightly claims for the retention of German East Africa.”

Comments on the Bombay Government's Press Note regarding pressure in connection with the War Loan.
Sind Journal (8), 7th June.

22. Commenting upon the Bombay Government's Press Note regarding pressure in connection with the War Loan in the village of Rampur, the Sind Journal remarks:—“We come across the following amazing remarks in the above Press Note:—‘It is possible, and indeed, even probable, in the circumstances that the pressure of argument was strongly used and that people were pressed to invest larger amounts than they felt inclined to. Similar pressure and persuasion had been exercised in all classes of society, but so long as threats, intimidations or violence are not used, this does not amount to a matter of which Government can take notice.’ The Bombay Chronicle rightly objects to these remarks. .... In a recent Press Note issued by the Bengal Government we read that some cases of undue influence and pressure used by officials having come to the notice of the Government, fresh instructions have been issued against the adoption of these methods. We are, therefore, surprised to find the Bombay Government giving a latitude to its officers which is liable to be abused in some cases at least. No doubt, people should be exhorted to invest in the War Loan as much as they can, but the work had better be left in the hands of a non-official agency.”

Jám-e-Jamshed (19), 14th June.

23. Commenting on the Press Note issued by Government in connection with allegations made in the Bombay Chronicle about pressure used by Government officials in connection with the War Loan, the Jám-e-Jamshed writes:—The Press Note brings out the fact that the revenue officials had prepared an estimate of the amount each village was capable of subscribing. The enquiry instituted by Government seems to have been conducted in a perfunctory manner, and it, moreover, did not investigate all the complaints published by the Bombay Chronicle. We do not think there was any necessity for Government officials to suggest the amounts people should subscribe to the Loan. People of their own accord have subscribed beyond the expectations of Government and officials in the mofussil have erred in interfering with the people in respect of the War Loan. The result of people being made to subscribe to the War Loan beyond their means will be that they will be compelled to sell their Loans to others and thus cause a depreciation in the market value of the War Loan. We would ask Government to institute enquiries into all complaints received by them from various quarters and grant redress to such people as are deserving of such consideration at their hands.

Sandesh (100), 10th June; Kesari (92), 12th June; Indu Prakásh (35), 11th June.

24. The Sandesh publishes an interview with Mr. Horniman, editor of the Bombay Chronicle, about the War Loan Ramp case, in which Mr. Horniman, has adversely criticised the Press Note on the subject. [The Kesari commenting on the above says that the Chronicle took all possible precautions before publishing the complaint, and remarks :—What public inquiry has been held by Government also leaving no room for any doubt? Mr. Horniman has asked for the papers and if Government do not supply them the inference is clear. We shall revert to the subject, if they do. Government make a guileless assertion in the resolution that no one need pay beyond his means. But what a differnce between speech and action! A leading Inamdar of Poona has received letters from different Mamlatdars asking him to pay one year's income of lands situate in their respective jurisdictions. What then about his maintenance during the year? Indians have not yet learnt the art of living on air! The higher and lower officials who issue such notices or cause them to be issued should publicly declare whether they have subscribed a year's income to the War Loan. Any one can dispose of the property belonging to others! The Indu Prakásh on the other hand says that there is no complaint whatsoever in the Maharashtra about any pressure being used in raising the War Loan. Much is made of a stray case or two which often is the result again of the ignorance of villagers.]

The success of the War Loan in the Bombay Presidency is due to Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Willingdon.

Gujaráti (13), 17th June, Eng. cols.

25. While expressing gratification at the success of the War Loan, the Gujaráti writes :—"It was a fortunate circumstance that this presidency had at its head a Governor who knew how to make the movement a success by inspiring public confidence and seeking cordial co-operation in a manner that deserves high praise. It was an equally fortunate coincidence thar his wife happened to be a resourceful and magnetic personality who has met with success in every undertaking to which she has put her hands."

How the Resolution on Imperial Preference passed by the Imperial War Conference has alienated the sympathies of India.

New Times (New), 11th May.

26. Commenting upon the Resolution on Imperial Preference passed by the Imperial War Conference, the New Times remarks :—"It means that India while paying fully the higher prices which will prevail when German, American and Japanese competition against British goods is removed by a Preferential Tariff, will continue as usual to face the American, Russian and Argentine competition against the largest part of her exports to England. It is nothing short of a cruel mockery to invite India to an Imperial partnership on such injurious and humiliating conditions. It will be preference, but preference for England and against India. Against her best interests India is being asked to buy dear and sell cheap.......... We do not mean to suggest that no preference should be given to England. We may have preference, but the preference must be confined to things like machinery, etc., which India itself cannot produce. We believe that preference to be genuinely imperial must be beneficial to all concerned.......... It is painful to think that there should be so much stupid shortsightedness in dealing with Imperial questions. The resolution has completely alienated the sympathies of India. It was irrelevant and uncalled for, since a conference summoned for War objects had no business to discuss questions which did not expressly pertain to it."

Comments on the impressions of Mr. N. M. Joshi, one of the press representatives sent by Government to Mesopotamia.

Akhbár-e-Islám (50), 11th June; Bombay Samáchár (53), 11th June.

27. Referring to the account given, in the course of a lecture recently delivered, under the presidentship of Sir D. E. Wacha, by Mr. N. M. Joshi, one of the Indian press representatives sent to Mesopotamia by Government, of the situation there, the Akhbár-e-Islám remarks :—Though the picture Mr. Joshi gave on last Friday of the present situation in Mesopotamia was incomplete in many ways, yet on the strength of it anybody could declare that there was not the slightest amount of truth in the many rumours that were spread in connection with that country. Mesopotamia is a very old country and if we were only to peep into its history of eight thousand years ago we would at once know that great empires were founded in it. This country is as fertile as it is old. Unfortunately such a country could not remain in the hands of the Turks, the reason for this being (the nature of) their internal political administration. In this country the Armenians and the Jews could not rest in peace. If Turkey had ruled it well it would have turned out to be a great country. But it was not so destined for the Turks. Mesopotamia has been freed from the hands of the Turks in the present war and has come into the possession of the British and it is a matter of history what great sacrifices the latter have had to make before this could happen. Though the British have conquered Mesopotamia, they have undoubtedly had to suffer exceedingly in doing so. The Bombay Samáchár remarks that the account given by Mr. Joshi must convince the most illiterate among the people of the brilliant nature of the victories won by Indian soldiers in Mesopotamia. Referring to Mr. Joshi's contradiction of the rumour that Indian soldiers are more exposed to the enemy's fire than British soldiers in fields of battle, the paper observes that such conduct is contrary to the very nature of the British who have not hesitated to spill their blood profusely in the present war in defending others against the Huns. It supports Mr. Wacha's suggestion to Mr. Joshi to publish his experiences in Mesopotamia in book form and dwells on the necessity on the part of Government of circulating among the people as widely as possible translations of such a book in all the principal languages of the Presidency.]

Comments on the submarine peril.

Sind Observer (9), 8th May.

28. In the course of a lengthy article on the submarine peril and the harm done thereby to the food supply of England, the Sind Observer remarks :—"Over two months ago the British Parliament was assured that, given a free hand for six weeks longer, Admiral Sir John Jellicoe might be trusted to have the situation well in grasp. The stipulated period of grace has elapsed, but the number of boats sunk has risen rather than diminished, and this in defiance of additional experience in such methods of warfare and the tireless devotion to duty of the first navy in the world.......... Nothwithstanding the vigilance of the navy and the self-sacrifice of the Merchant Service, it cannot be denied that Germany is steadily pursuing her avowed project of starving England by sinking all and any ship bound for British ports. With consummate skill the enemy has turned the seeming advantage of England's isolation into the gravest peril this country has yet had to face. This could not have happened had not Great British for many years neglected her agricultural resources...... Secure in her navy, her isolated position, and the carrying power of her many merchant ships, Great Britain paid no heed to this gradual abandonment of the soil......... Such was the state of affairs when war broke out on August 4th, 1914.......... True, politicians made a great many speeches urging economy in order to invest the more liberally in war loan and to assist in financing the Government. No extra land was put under cultivation. German prisoners and interned aliens generally were not set to work to reclaim swamps, such, for instance, as the Norfolk Broads. Germany, on the other hand, lost no time after the declaration of hostilities. Bread and meat tickets were issued and care was taken that one man should not grow fat at another's expense. Every available foot of land was placed under cultivation.......... While all this was going on behind the enemies' lines, the other nations pointed the finger of scorn and cried: Germany is starving! A pity, the nations in question had not digested the moral of La Fontaine's fable. The ant and the Grass-hopper.......... The bitter lesson which approaching winter taught the grass-hopper, the war has taught the people of Great Britain. The submarine peril has brought the vital question of food supplies home to the nation in a manner that nothing less drastic than the wholesale sinking of ships could have done.......... The danger now threatening the British Isles is not likely to be limited to that country, nor yet to Europe.

Comments on the abdication of King Constantine of Greece.
Sánj Vartamán (28), 16th June; Akhbár-e-Islám (50), 16th June.

29. The Sánj Vartamán believes that the political troubles in Greece will come to an end with the abdication of King Constantine and remarks:—Germany has received a fresh blow by this abdication. The enemy's plans of cutting off the allied troops in the Balkans have been frustrated. He will not doubt do his worst to put hitches in the way of the new Greecian Government by instigating such partizans of his as might still be in that country. But we might rely upon the Allies to take strong and timely measures to prevent the new King from falling into the German snares. [The Akhbár-e-Islám expresses the hope that the new King will be able to help the Allies to crush German militarism.]

Comments on the policy of the alleged officially patronised Sunday Tatler.
Message (5), 12th June.

30. "In these days when independence is at a discount and when it is risky to be outspoken in regard to men and things official, it would pay no doubt to play the role of dittoing the official world, pace the official patronage extended to the tag-rag-journalism of the Sunday Tatler.......... The objects and the methods do not deceive anybody as to what is behind all the nonsense which is poured forth in its columns, and the way in which it is encouraged in certain quarters to tread its appointed course of vilification, for certainly no higher ends, would lead one to think that behind the outward forces, there are others at work. Whatever these forces behind the scenes, the Sunday Tatler's tattling will do no good to those whose cause it is expected to serve, may be loyally and even faithfully, except to lower them in the public estimation."

Increasing the duty on liquor is no check on drunkenness.
Message (5), 10th June.

31. Commenting on a recent resolution of Government on consumption of liquor, the Message writes:—"In their sapience, the authorities think that if they gradually increase the duties on liquor, they will gradually check consumption. But, as the late Honourable Mr. Gokhale pointed out in a speech in the Council, a gradual and step-by-step method is altogether ineffectual in the matter. Not only that, as the same great man emphatically stated, the method makes the poor ryot doubly poor, for it deprives him of more money without in any way removing temptations to vice.......... The increase of the pice or two only robs his wife or his children of their food to that extent. We are entirely opposed to slight increases of duty. If increases are to be made, they should be heroically made.......... But perhaps action which will make liquor prohibitively dear is to be condemned, for will it not have the 'catastrophic' effect of suddenly making a man desist from his usual habits of life? Are not 'catastrophic' changes to be avoided at all costs?"

Comments on the Birthday Honours List.
Muslim Herald (118), 8th June.

32. Referring to the honours conferred on His Majesty's birthday, which the paper compares to a shower of rain, the Muslim Herald observes that they have been mainly awarded for war service, and that the present list, like its predecessors, is not free from the defect of having ignored many persons who occupy a prominent position in public life. It maintains that the practice of awarding titles on the strength of the reports of Government officers only is apt to lower the estimation in which they are held, for though the number of persons getting the titles is large, still many who are more deserving are left out, with the result that the public values the titles as much as it does the title-holders. It concludes by hoping that Government officers would employ greater discretion in making recommendations in future.

Gujaráti (12), 10th June.

33. Everywhere the advisability of increasing the prestige of the teacher is being talked about; Government officials are also talking about the same subject and yet nothing is done to increase the prestige of teachers. In the recent distribution of honours no teacher figures as a recipient of any honour. On the other hand many are the occasions on which the prestige of the Police is observed to have been magnified. Moreover, while those who serve the public and the Empire independently, without taking up state service, hardly share in these honours. We have no objection if Government appreciate the worth of their servants; but we think that those who serve the public should fare better than Government officials in the matter of these honours, that flatterers should be kept at arm's length and that the value of these honours should not be lowered by conferring them upon those who help particular institutions. Haphazard and indiscriminate distribution of honours lowers their value in the eyes of the people and it is the duty of the advisers of Government to see that such a thing is not allowed to take place. [The paper then goes on to remark that Government are the proper party to know whether the bestowal of a K.C.I.E. upon the Honourable Mr. Chaubal is the reward he has received for co-operating with the majority in the work of the Public Services Commission or is a prize for his work in the Executive Council. Referring to the titles of Rao Saheb and Khan Saheb conferred upon Messrs. Raghunathrao Tavde and Obaidullakhan, Inspectors of Police, respectively, the paper observes that a list of the recipients of titles belonging to the Police Department would be a noteworthy document.]

Advisability of postponing the Haj this year.
Bombay Samáchár (53), 11th June.

34. The Bombay Samáchár publishes a contribution under the signature of "Momin" in the course of which the writer, after referring to the measures taken, in the past, by Government for the health and well being of those Muhammadans who proceeded to the Hedjaz for the performance of the Haj and for providing them with facilities during their voyage, etc., remarks that the fact that Government have drawn the attention of persons intending to go on the Haj this year to the paucity of steamers, in order to warn them against the inconveniences they might have to experience as a result of it, furnishes an unmistakable proof of the solicitude of Government for their Moslem subjects. From the view point of military exigencies the writer regards the present want of transport facilities for the Hajis as quite natural and considers the action of Government in warning those who intend to go on the pilgrimage even under the present circumstances of the possible delays they might have to experience in Bombay this year before starting on their voyage, to be quite appropriate. He regrets that such difficulties should have arisen at a time when the ruler of the Hedjaz has made all possible satisfactory arrangements for the Hajis, but observes that there is no other alternative for the latter but to submit to the inevitable.

Dangerous condition of the Mahábleshwar-Váthár road.
Dnyán Prakásh (33), 10th June.

35. Mr. Jivaraj Gautamchand Sholapurkar invites attention to a recent accident which his bullock cart met with at one of the dangerous places on the Váthár-Mahábleshwar Road, which is characterised by steep slopes on either side and is also dangerous at places where it is crossed by bridges. He states that there have been many such accidents in the past and many more are likely to occur in future. He, therefore, suggests that proper precautions should promptly be taken by Government by putting up boundary-stones, etc., at such places all along the road.

The Hyderabad (Sind) Municipal Committee of Management.

Sind Journal (8), 7th June.

42. "The Committee of Management, Hyderabad, in its zeal to screw up its income has, since its installation, been devising new forms of taxation, some of which are novel and startling. The public of Hyderabad has of late been agitating over the new rules for the levy of general water rate and private water service fees which are quite harsh and anomalous. The regime of the Committee of Management has been marked by several indignant protests by the public on questions of principle. The last occasion was the public meeting held on the 28th ultimo when resolutions were passed condemning the new private water service rules which are ultra vires and the general water rate rules, and protesting against the closing of the water service during the hottest part of the day and at night time. The meeting was a large and representative one, but it appears that it has not yet had its desired effect.......... The Committee of Management owes, or rather owns, no responsibility to the public. The complaint about the insufficiency of water-supply also remains unredressed.......... The Commissioner in Sind has already been approached by the people to annul the harsh rules of the Committee of Management regarding private water service fees and a fresh opportunity has now been offered him to do bare justice to the people."

The Commissioner in Sind and the Shikarpur Municipality.

New Times (New), 9th May.

43. Referring to the condition, alleged to have been imposed by the Commissioner in Sind upon the Shikarpur Municipality at the time of granting it increased powers, that he would exercise the right of confirming the appointment of a permanent incumbent to the post of Chief Officer, the New Times remarks:—"We doubt if such an agreement can under any circumstances be considered valid and therefore binding on the Municipality. The grant to a Municipality of increased powers for which it becomes qualified on account of various conditions cannot be made subject to reservations by which the Municipality would not under ordinary circumstances be bound. All that the Commissioner can do is to withhold the new powers if he thinks the Municipality unfit to exercise them. He cannot give a privilege and stultify it at the same time by taking away another which is perhaps equally important. For otherwise by this neat little device all privileges which are legally due can be nullified by conditions which some interested members might choose to accept. Once this dangerous principle is conceded its abuse will lead to serious consequences."

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 22nd June 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 25 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 23rd June 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British Rule:

Alleged attacks on the Muhammadan religion in the first Gujarati edition of the Satyártha Prakásh 33
Appeal to Indians to subscribe to the Besant fund started by Sir Subramaniam Aiyar 11
Arguments in favour of Swarájya 22
Comments on a Central Provinces Circular regarding students and politics 30
Comments on Lord Pentland's speech in the Madras Legislative Council 14
Comments on the Bombay Government's Circular on the subject of students and political propaganda . . . . 27—29
Comments on the gift of one lakh of rupees by Mr. S. R. Bomanji to the Home Rule League 20
Comments on the internment of Mrs. Besant and her two assitants . 1—9
Comments on the interview between Lord Pentland and Mrs. Besant . 10
Comments on the Madras Government's Press Note explaining their attitude towards current political discussion . . . . . . 15 & 16
Comments on the personnel of the Committee of Inquiry regarding Behar indigo plantations 31
Comments on the prohibition of lotteries by Government . . . 32
Comparison between the treatment given to Irish Nationalists and Indian Home Rulers . . . . 25 & 26
Condemnation of Lord Pentland's alleged repressive policy . . . 12 & 13
England should adopt a consistent policy towards Indian affairs . . 24
Had Mr. Lloyd George been in Madras now he would have been interned 19
The power of the Anglo-Indian officials is doomed . . 18
Three reasons for Home Rule in India 21
What the Government of India should do to neutralise the effects of the recent acts of the Madras Government 17
What the Home Rule League wants 23
Judicial matters: Comments on the judgment in the criminal case filed by Mr. Durgadas B. Advani against two Railway officials of Karáchi . 39

H 191—a CON

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

Police :

Alleged insult to His Highness the Maharaja of Bikáner by a police officer in Bombay 36

Alleged staging of a play at Surat calculated to hurt the feelings of the Muhammadans 37

Public Service : Why Indians are unwilling to join the I. M. S. . . 38

War :

How is it that Englishmen who could raise a large Territorial Force in Great Britain cannot raise even 6,000 men in India . . . 34

Protest against primary school children being made to subscribe on the — Loan Day 35

EDUCATION—

Alleged collusion between the University authorities and Examiners to keep down the passes at the Matriculation Examination 41

Comments on the amalgamation of the Bombay University Matriculation Examination and the School Final 40

MUNICIPALITIES—

Ahmedabad : The — Municipality and its Municipal Commissioner . . 43

Bombay : Proposed reconstitution of the — Municipal Corporation . . 42

Karjat : Protest against declaring — (district Kolába) to be a Notified Area. 44

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Comments on the internment of Mrs. Besant and her two assistants.

Mahrátta (4), 24th June.

*1. "Mrs. Besant is interned. Her colleagues, Mr. G. S. Arundale and Mr. B. P. Wadia, are also interned. Rumours are in the air that our local Government is going to copy the Madras Government. The names which Dame Rumour whispers in a confidential yet confident tone are Mr. Tilak, Mr. B. G. Horniman, Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas, etc. Whatever truth there may be in these fresh rumours, this much is certain that the Indian Bureaucracy has now girded up its loins to test the strength of the Home Rule movement in India.......... Our opponents, the bureaucrats, realise the danger to their luxurious existence which the success of our Home Rule propaganda necessarily involves. We are, however, no longer in a position to consult the good of the Bureaucracy in precedence to the good of the Motherland. Our country is suffering grievously in many ways and the only efficacious remedy for much of our acute suffering is Home Rule.......... This is a most critical hour. We have now before us a clear proof of the determination of the Bureaucracy to employ every means in their power to thwart us in our National work. This proof thrown defiantly before the Indian Nation at a time when every British Statesman is at great pains to persuade the Allies of Britain that England is fighting Germany, wholly and solely to safeguard the rights of every nation to have a voice in its own destiny, has a peculiar and painful significance. It shows either that the Bureaucracy in India has or relies on the support of the British Government or that it has made up its mind to religiously do its best to suppress as far as may be the movement which spells no profit to their caste, regardless of what the Imperial authorities may say of their War against Liberty carried on in India simultaneously with the so-called War for Liberty which is being fought in Europe.......... The mettle that we may be able to show at this hour will determine in a large measure how soon or late we may be blessed with Home Rule.......... To the challenge of the Bureaucracy there must emerge from us a counter-challenge. There is afoot a serious attempt to create a split in the National camp.......... Will 'our Congressmen and intelligent Home Rulers' (whom the Times would see taken under the deceptive wing of the Government of India) allow themselves to be drawn into the old net and to betray the National Cause? We shall see. Meantime, we must press that every Congressman worth the name will do well to join the Home Rule League....... But for leading Indians to become Home Rule Leaguers and to endeavour to increase the membership of the League to some lakhs before the next Congress is not the only thing that may be done in answer to the bureaucratic challenge. It will be useful to employ, if only temporarily and with the definite purpose of securing the reversal of the internment orders served on Mrs. Besant and her associates, the constitutional weapon of Boycott as far as may be.......... The National Education Scheme which Mrs. Besant has been obliged to leave in an incomplete state might be seriously taken up and pushed forward as speedily as may be. The cause of swaráj or Home Rule depends for its sure and speedy and effective progress on the wise employment of the Triad, Swadeshi-Boycott-National Education. And let us remember, further, that no cause can triumph without comprehensive and compact organisation....... .. Our much talked of spirituality is now on trial. The Bureaucracy holds in its raised hand—the 'knout'; in the other, we may be certain, it is holding, concealed as yet from our physical vision, 'sops to Cerberus'. This is an old, old game. If we are to triumph at an early date, we must press vigorously on with our programme in spite of the knout and the sops."

Young India (10), 20th June.

2. Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas writes in Young India:—"Lord Pentland has made himself famous by an act of official high-handedness which, since Lord Curzon's days, is unparalleled for its short-sightedness and its arbitrary, almost defiant, disregard of public opinion and of the proprieties of official responsibility and executive power. He has struck a blow at Constitutionalism in this country, and in doing so has selected a victim who happens to be, perhaps, the most highly venerated individual in India.......... The comprehensive restraint that will be imposed on her action, utterance, writing and movement constitutes a situation, in respect of her vast following, of grave delicacy and strain. The executive order of the Madras Government, however unwittingly, impinges upon the religious susceptibilities of large numbers of law-abiding subjects of the King-Emperor who must resent the harsh injustice of her treatment at the hands of Lord Pentland with intense emotion......... We believe, and we hope, having regard to the truly grave solemnity of the crisis that is rapidly developing,—a crisis of Lord Pentland's own unaided creation,—that the Government of India will not be found to share the blind obsession that has characterised the Government of Madras. There are occasions when unimaginative apathy or obduracy may easily involve disastrous results. In our solemn belief this is such a one. We are uttering words of warning—based upon knowledge and upon the belief that the Government have not yet quite realized the spirit and the range of the reaction which Mrs. Besant's internment, if carried out, will arouse......... As a spiritual influence and as the religious leader of a considerable following, elementary prudence and commonsense demand that the order of internment against her,—an order that should never have been passed,—should be forthwith cancelled." [Elsewhere L. G. Khare writes in the same paper:—"The little tin gods want our money, which they have bartered away without our previous sanction to the proposal, but they do not want us to bear arms for the Empire, though they do not seem to have the courage to say so. They leave it to their attorneys, the Valentine Chirols and the Lionel Curtises; but just as they have their apologists, we have our fighters, and our fighters must now be hit below the belt, so that they may not gain in time the ear of the British Democracy......... The only conclusion is that the present masters of India are afraid of the attitude of courage, of self-less devotion which Mrs. Besant and her adherents have exhibited. They think that their careers point out a way to young Indians which the citizens of a Dependency ought not to tread, so the most un-British method of interfering with individual liberty of speech and action has been applied in the case of persons whom the Indians trust most......... It (Indian youth) will have to choose between the advice of its experienced elders, and the advice of those who are imported at so much per month, to see that it remains slavish and docile. It is, however, rapidly realising the fact that it is not the Indian who is unfit to rule himself, it is the British bureaucrat who is unfit to rule the Indian. But is it really to be believed that Madras and Simla have not realised where things will drift if government by internment is to succeed the good work of Lord Hardinge?......... Is the British Government in India able to exclude a knowledge of European history from Indian minds which already possess it? The history of Poland, that long tale of the sorrow of a brave people, is eagerly read in India......... Mrs. Besant is interned, the Indian youth is to be guarded from 'obnoxious political influences'. No wonder the youth of India will continue to read the history of Poland with a bitter interest. One of the greatest of Polish poets, Adam Mickieuiez, composed the following prayer for his countrymen, when hope was nearly dying out of dismembered Poland, and the era not only of internments but of wholesale expulsions was embittering the whole nation:—'God the son, who dost rise from the dead, raise our country from the dead.' 'From Russian, Austrian and Prussian bondage deliver us, O Lord.' 'They cry to Thee from the depths of the mines of Siberia and from the snows of Kamschatka.' 'By the wounds, tears and sufferings of all Polish prisoners, exiles and pilgrims, deliver us, O Lord.'"]

*3. In the course of a lengthy article, the Indian Social Reformer writes:—"The Government of Madras having receded in their press communiqué from the untenable position taken up in Lord Pentland's speech, namely, that the carrying on of a movement for the early securing of self-government was by itself an objectionable course, the only question which remains to be considered is: Was there anything in Mrs. Besant's methods of advocating it which could be reasonably said to be 'prejudicial to public safety'......... It is but fair to bear in mind that, though Mrs. Besant's propaganda has been carried on for some years past—New India has been in existence three years—nothing has happened in the Madras Presidency to warrant the presumption that they would lead to consequences prejudicial to public safety. There have been no bombs, no dacoities, no conspiracies. On the other hand, there has been throughout the whole country a distinct revulsion from secret methods, which were beginning to exercise a sinister fascination on immature minds. Open criticism, open attack and exposure of evils in the press and in public speeches, open challenge of the excesses of authority, occasionally verging, it may be, on violent attacks on individual officials, have replaced the incipient tendency to underground propaganda. This change is not due wholly to Mrs. Besant, but her example undoubtedly has greatly fostered it. Between secret methods and open challenge, we need hardly say that the latter is by far perferable. To that exent, if no more, Mrs. Besant's influence must be allowed to have told on the right side. Unfortunately, we have to face the fact that the one or the other is inevitable in the present circumstances of the country, having regard, on the one hand, to the greatly increased sensitiveness of Indian public opinion to distinctions and disabilities which have been till recently borne as a matter of course and, on the other, to the evident incapacity or indisposition of Government to visualise anything which lies outside the competence of the Criminal Investigation Department to discover.......... How many times recently have we not heard from veteran public men that it is hopeless for them to attempt anything in the face of the apathy of Government to anything outside the pre-occupations of the passing moment! Their advice is not asked till things come to a crisis. They are expected to conserve their influence with the public in some mysterious way, though the measures and policy of Government prove to everyone that they are regarded as tame dogs whose barking need not be regarded as of any account.......... What can be more astonishingly inept than that, when the whole world is ringing with the praise of freedom and democracy, our phlegmatic Government expect us to be satisfied with their occasional assurance that they are hatching some extraordinary scheme of reform which will not err on the side of excess—it does not matter if it errs on the other side—in the recesses of their ancient, ramshackle bureaux?......... We are forced by all these considerations to conclude that Mrs. Annie Besant is punished not because she has done anything to endanger the public safety, but because she has offended against the 'herd instinct' of Europeans in India to look down upon Indians as an inferior race, socially and politically.......... In our considered judgment the internment—so dreadfully suggestive, verbally and actually, of a burial, not, however, of a dead person but of a living one,—of Mrs. Besant and her lieutenants is impolitic, unnecessary and unjust."

Indian Social Reformer (2), 24th June.

Kesari (92), 19th June; Dnyán Prakásh (33), 19th and 22nd June; Indu Prakásh (35), 18th and 21st June; Sandesh (100), 19th June.

4. The Kesari writes:—We inferred from the way in which Government dealt with the Memorandum of the Nineteen that they were not favourably disposed, but we did not suppose that the policy of pure repression now followed thoughtlessly in Madras would be shamelessly adopted at least during war time. The repressive policy of 1908 has been again revived. The present policy must have been followed with the assent of the Government of India. The first act of war was to remove the young students from the fight. This is not the place to discuss how unlawful and tyrannical this order is. The next step was to swoop over the prominent Home Rule leaders of Madras and specially Mrs. Besant. The Defence of India Act is a war measure and the Madras Government has not published any information that Mrs. Besant was dealing with the enemy. The real reason is that Mrs. Besant is working very vigorously for Home Rule. Is it possible that the British Empire would be ever imperilled by Home Rule agitation? The line of argument adopted by the Madras Government is weak and false. We are firmly convinced that there is no other alternative but to take the management of internal affairs into our own hands though it is necessary to maintain an Imperial connection in our own interests. No one asks for an immediate grant of Home Rule. Only we want Government to take a definite step towards the goal after the war. Judging from Lord Pentland's speech, we think that the bureaucracy is resolved that India should not get even the rights of Swarájya according to the Congress scheme; but we do not know whether the Imperial Government are also of the same opinion. But we do not think that the Government of India (sic) would be much willing when once the bureaucracy makes up its mind as the local officials always threaten the people of England that India would be lost if their counsel is not adopted. If Government are willing to favour the Congress scheme, let them declare so. What is it but injustice to praise one party to their face and to repress another, dubbing it seditious? By such an attempt the local white bureaucracy will disgrace the principles of equality and liberty and the morality, generosity and goodness of the English race. The fresh example of Russia again shows to the world that it is impossible to put down the aspirations of Swarájya by repression. [The Dnyán Prakásh remarks:—The order will create universal sorrow and anger. The Defence of India Act has been misused on many occasions, but the misuse of it against Mrs. Besant beats all others. The attempt of Government to stop Home Rule agitation indirectly by using a war measure deserves all censure and the people of India will never tolerate it. It is evident that the Madras Government have taken this move with the consent of the Government of India. It is our holy duty to continue our agitation ceaselessly without minding the present stern policy of Government. In another issue the paper remarks:—The right answer to the policy of repression has been given by the people and it has been resolved by the nation to continue Mrs. Besant's agitation. The Indu Prakásh takes objection to the word "Home Rule" and is opposed to any campaign of calumny, but it remarks:—Why should the Madras Government be so much upset? Mrs. Besant does not want to preach a policy of violence. Why should the Madras Government be so very much agitated? The measure excites sympathy for the sufferer. The masses do not consider carefully and they see persecution everywhere. It is not desirable that the idea that there is persecution under British rule should spread in the country. In a subsequent issue the paper says that the Madras Government has committed a blunder and that Mrs. Besant's internment has united the Moderates and the Extremists. It also remarks:—The Madras Government could not see the right way, being flurried by the word "Home Rule". It is a delusion to think, as some Englishmen do, that Home Rule would be strangled by silencing Mrs. Besant. If Mrs. Besant is interned someone else will continue the agitation. The Sandesh says:—So long as it rests entirely with Government to grant Home Rule or not, they need not be under any anxiety. A calm and peaceful attitude is necessary now more than ever, and we request Lord Willingdon not to resort to any special measures until he is convinced that the advocates of Home Rule encourage illegal acts.]

Gujaráti (12), 24th June, Eng. cols.

5. "In Ireland there was a rebellion and every effort is being made to conciliate her. The Premier proclaims from his seat in Parliament that Government want the goodwill and co-operation of the Irish people, and the British Government have gone the length of releasing Irish political prisoners with a view to inaugurate the proceedings of the Irish Convention in an atmosphere of cordial understanding and perfect harmony. The Irish have been asked to arrive at a settlement for themselves and every effort is being made to secure their goodwill and friendship. What have the people of India done?......... How are they being rewarded? One well-meaning Governor does not want them to go in for any political agitation whatsoever! Another administrator thinks that their programme of reforms would be an incitement to crime! Still another comes upon the political arena to preach homilies to the leaders of the Indian public and holds out threats of penalties for cherishing and propagating ideals, the offspring of his own imagination.

.... Great Empires and Little Minds ill go together. So said the philosophic Burke, and the recent occurrences are an apt illustration of his profoundly sagacious observation. India now presents a most lamentable spectacle. The entire Indian community with its press is ranged on one side and Government with its officialised organs on the other. If this extraordinary phenomenon of intense racial and political cleavage is the glorious fruit of statesmanship, the less we have of the latter, the better for the Indian people, the British Government and the British Empire."

Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 20th June, Eng. cols.; and 17th June.

6. "We are not in a position to say whether the Madras Government are now satisfied or whether other internments will follow. The Madras Government have done what they thought was necessary for the safety of the Presidency. It is not quite clear what danger was really apprehended.......... Will the internments of Mrs. Besant and her fellow-workers give the quietus to the national movement in India? It is not the Home Rule League or any particular form of activity that we have in mind, but the soul-awakening of India, and the clearly outlined goal of her aspiration, namely, self-government within the Empire. The lesson of every page of history would be falsified if repression could stifle the normal and natural aspiration of a nation to attain to the full stature of nationhood. We are reluctant to make a comparison between the Irish Home Rule movement and the Indian Home Rule League, though neither ever sought to repudiate the British connection; but the British Government at one time adopted the same attitude towards the Irish Home Rule party as the Madras and other Governments are doing to-day towards the Indian Home Rule League.......... And so history goes on repeating itself. Given a righteous cause, its ultimate triumph is certain in spite of persistent opposition and repression. The internment of Mrs. Besant will be a powerful stimulus to the national cause .... A widespread agitation will follow. Having full faith in the righteousness of their cause, sincerely loyal to the Crown and to the British connection, people throughout India will refuse to abate one jot of their demands. What the bureaucracy in India is vainly seeking to suppress is not due to the writings or preachings of this leader or that, but it is in the air, it is heard in the thunder of the guns in Europe, it is pounding in the pulse of national life......... She has now made the supreme sacrifice of her liberty and public service. Her enforced silence will not put an end to her work." [The paper thus concludes a vernacular article on the same subject in its issue of the 17th June:—We pray that before a more deplorable state of things arises, the Viceroy and the Secretary of State will win the blessings of the people by boldly cancelling the order of the Madras Government and thereby spreading peace and quiet all over the country.]

Sánj Vartamán (28), 19th and 20th June; Hindusthán (16), 18th and 19th June; Shri Sayáji Vijaya (68), 21st June; Shri Venkateshwar (72), 23rd June; Jám-e Jamshed (19), 20th June.

7. The Sánj Vartamán writes:—The news of Mrs. Besant's internment has come as a bolt from the blue and has been received with sorrow throughout the country. Mrs. Besant has been conducting political agitation in a legitimate manner and has done her best to give proper guidance to the youth of the country and kept them from taking the wrong path. She is not a leader of any secret movement and has never advocated or favoured the anarchist movement. She has been exerting herself for the welfare of this country by following an open and above-board policy. If Government are of opinion that she has done anything that is reprehensible they should take legal steps against her. But they have deprived her of her freedom by internment under the Defence of India Act. The Government of Madras are wrong in thinking that the Swarájya movement will be crushed by the internment of Mrs. Besant. The movement has taken such firm root that instead of receiving any harm it will be stimulated by the step Government have taken and many people who have held aloof from the movement so far will join it in great numbers. Mrs Besant is famous throughout the world as a theosophist and we feel sure that not only India but the other parts of the British Empire will protest against the momentous step taken by the Madras Government. Lord Pentland has erred in taking a step that will tend to create unrest and disaffection in this country at a time when it has stood loyal to the British Raj. We hope he will now set about correcting his mistake. [In the subsequent issue the paper points out that protests are being made throughout the country against the action of the Madras Government and asks the Indian National Congress and the Moslem League to convene extraordinary meetings to protest against Mrs. Besant's internment and to send a petition signed by thousands of people to His Majesty the King-Emperor with a view to drawing the attention of the Ministers to the action of the Madras Government. The Hindusthán considers the step taken by the Madras Government as short-sighted and as one that would give rise to unrest amongst the people instead of pacifying them. It calls upon the people to keep their heads cool under the trying circumstances and to refrain from taking any hasty step, and asks the popular leaders to guide their followers with tact and discretion. In the subsequent issue the paper refers to the universal protest with which the country has received Mrs. Besant's internment and the opinions it has evoked from various quarters favourable to the Home Rule League and opines that no official repression would be able to put down the political aspirations to which the war has given rise in the hearts of the people of India. It suggests that a joint deputation of the Congress and the Moslem League should immediately proceed to England to enlighten the British public on the state of affairs in India. The Shri Sayáji Vijaya considers it a short-sighted step on the part of the Madras Government to have interned a lady who is worshipped throughout India for having brought about an awakening in the youth of the country. It hopes petitions will be sent from different provinces to the Government of India for getting the order of the Madras Government annulled. The Shri Venkateshwar expresses its disapproval of the action taken by the Government of Madras and wishes that Lord Pentland had on the contrary asked the Government of India to publish a draft of the political reforms that would be introduced after the termination of the war, as suggested by the Times of India. The Jám-e-Jamshed recounts the various services rendered to India by Mrs. Besant and believes the Government of Madras must have had strong reasons for interning her. It believes that if these grounds had been made known to the public Mrs. Besant would have had an opportunity of clearing her character and public sympathy would not have been drawn towards her. It is of opinion that if Government thought her speeches and writings to be inflammatory they would have done well to institute legal proceedings against her. It asks the Members of the Imperial Legislative Council to draw the attention of Government to the public opinion in the matter of Mrs. Besant's internment.]

Indu Prakásh (35), 20th June, Eng. cols.

8. "The hearts of the Indian people go out in fullest sympathy to Mrs. Besant in her present trouble just because she has been a vigorous, but absolutely law-abiding and constitutional, standard-bearer of Indian demands and aspirations. The leading responsible men of Madras, men some of whom Government have honoured with high distinctions, resent the action of Lord Pentland......... Allahabad has followed suit; and her influential leaders have joined the Home Rule League as a protest against the action of the Madras Government. The Honourable Mr. Sastri, President of the Servants of India Society, has already published a strong letter, protesting against the action of the Government of Lord Pentland. The Council of the Bombay Presidency Association at their meeting held on Monday last entered an equally emphatic protest against the reactionary attitude of Lord Pentland......... We call upon the highest British statesmanship to judge aright this remarkable, unprecedented unanimity of opinion brought out by the action of Lord Pentland and restrain the reactionary forces that threaten to let themselves loose in India and mar the harmony of heart and feeling that common sacrifices in the present war have established between the rulers and the ruled."

Kaiser-i-Hind (20), 24th June, Eng. cols.

9. "As loyal subjects of the British Government, we cannot but bemoan the suicidal policy of the Madras Government. It might have been expected that the disastrous results of the Aurangzebian régime would teach our rulers the folly of an unreasonable repression. The variest tyro knows to-day that Lord Curzon was the one man to awaken the national consciousness of Bengal and even of India. Lord Pentland has added himself to the number of the unconscious benefactors of India, for such an administrative blunder as he has committed does far more to close up the ranks of Indians than anything that Mrs. Besant can say or do......... The ridiculous tactics of the Delhi C. I. D. against the Home Rule League, Delhi Branch; the infamous persecution of the Indra Prastha Hindu Girls' High School and its Lady Superintendent; the illiberal utterances and deeds of Lord Pentland, show what a failure British statesmanship in India to-day has proved to be." [Elsewhere, however, the paper publishes a contributed article by Mr. K. P. Malbari, in the course of which the writer dwells on the dangerous character of the Home Rule League and emphatically declares that India is not yet fit for self-government. He also remarks: "Had only all our administrators been as strightforward and as unequivocal in their political utterances as Lord Pentland had been in the present instance, there would have been less number of political agitators and less number of political organisations in the country."]

Comments on the interview between Lord Pentland and Mrs. Besant.

Praja Mitra amd Pársi (25), 22nd June, Eng. cols.

10. In the course of its comments on the interview between Lord Pentland and Mrs. Besant, the Praja Mitra and Pársi writes:—"Has the compulsory cessation of Mrs. Besant's activities, religious, educational and political, brought complete tranquillity to Madras or India? Let the happenings of day after day answer this question.......... If she has served India greatly by the written and the spoken word, by the matchless gift of eloquence with which she is endowed, it seems she will render India still greater service by the silence which has been imposed on her by arbitrary executive authority.......... Lord Pentland specified no charges against her so that there was nothing which she could explain. But the country understands why she has suffered and it is acting accordingly. The internment of Mrs. Besant is nothing more or less than a determined attempt to suppress lawful, constitutional agitation for the establishment of self-government within the Empire in India.......... [The paper here refers to the recent accessions to the ranks of the Home Rule League and the various funds started to aid Mrs. Besant and forward the Home Rule movement, and concludes:—] What is happening to-day in India is nothing but a repetition of the history of constitutional struggles everywhere, and we shall win through to our goal soon or late, and it looks as if it will be rather soon than late."

Appeal to Indians to subscribe to the Besant Fund started by Sir Subramaniam Aiyar.

Dnyán Prakásh (33), 21st June.

11. We earnestly hope that all advocates of self-government will respond wholeheartedly to the appeal of Sir Subramaniam Aiyar for funds in aid of Mrs. Besant. Not only her followers but every lover of this country should consider it his sacred duty to contribute to this fund as much as he possibly can. Mrs. Besant's extraordinary self-sacrifice alone is the cause of her present miserable plight. We feel sure, therefore, that every man who has the least regard for his country will not fail to contribute his quota to this fund. The Irish had collected a very large sum of money for the benefit of Daniel O'Connell in similar circumstances. It is the duty of Indians to collect similarly a large fund for Mrs. Besant to repay at least partially her splendid services. At the same time we cannot help remarking that the Government of Madras has displayed the most reprehensible lowness of mind by forbidding the sale of books already punished by her and thus rendering her wholly destitute.

Condemnation of Lord Pentland's alleged repressive policy.

New Times (new), 12th June.

12. "If the policy of coercive legislation is going to be followed, as we learn from Mrs. Besant's article on the 'Coming Storm' in New India, Lord Pentland will be responsible before posterity for having inaugurated an era of discontent and unrest in the Presidency. It is still a psychological problem to us to understand how a representative of the British Democracy and a member of the liberal party speaks so frankly about repression and in a manner that has far exceeded the traditions of bureaucratic absolutism in this country.......... The demand for self-government is the demand of illiterate India—the demand of the masses of this country. His Excellency refuses to take a view of the political upheavals going on in the world and stands resolutely for a rigid, soulless machinery of administration without any responsibility to the governed. His 'bold bid for reaction' is absolutely out of tune with the new spirit in India. His Excellency is perfectly justified in condemning unlawful propaganda and the forces leading to disorder. The propaganda of Home Rule or self-government is forwarded by strictly constitutional means and does not in any case mean the severance of the British connection. We acknowledge the benefits of British Rule and believe that India's political salvation lies in her continued connection with Great Britain, but we also believe that self-government is the natural consummation of the spirit of British Imperialism."

Indu Prakásh (35), 18th June, Eng. cols.

13. "As an earnest of good faith and good will, England has by one stroke of the pen unconditionally released all Irish political prisoners. There is a grim humour in the news of the Madras internments following on the very heel of the release of all Irish political prisoners. The Madras internments are a further proof the Executive overriding the Judiciary. The High Courts in the land have declared self-government as a legitimate political aspiration. All writings and speeches directed towards the attainment of this goal are, therefore, lawful and legitimate. While the whole world is in process of reconstruction, poor and helpless India, with whom no race of men could be compared in respect of national innocence, ought to be allowed all legitimate freedom to work out her destiny, whether in politics or economics, or national education. The effusions of Anglo-Indian newspapers could be ignored as those of confirmed reactionaries. But when a provincial ruler ushers in an era of repression, it is the clearest duty of the leaders of the nation to approach the highest authorities responsible for the good government of this country with a prayer that they should not allow the 'man on the spot' to deny legitimate freedom to people within the British Empire, when the Empire is fighting the battles of freedom or humanity at large."

Comments on Lord Pentland's speech in the Madras Legislative Council.

Gujaráti (12), 17th June.

14. Commenting upon Lord Pentland's last speech in the Madras Legislative Council, the Gujaráti writes:—The Congress and the Moslem League want self-government or swarájya. Lord Pentland and other officials believe that they would be able to check the swarájya movement by the force of their authority, but they will certainly not be able to accomplish their purpose. Indians have fully imbibed the principle on which England has been waging a just war and they fully understand the significance of such terms as independence of nations, rights of the people, and voice of the people in the administration of their country. The Indian people want responsible self-government on Colonial lines. What does Lord Pentland mean by asking the people not to expect the Legislative Council to have full control over the Executive? Has Lord Pentland been authorised by the Government of India to say what India will or will not get? The right of granting political reforms is vested in the Government of England. The Indians want their Government to be responsible to the people and they will continue to agitate so long as their object is not gained. People naturally ask why there should not be a popular majority in the Provincial Legislative Councils and why local self-government should not be freed from official control. It seems to us that Lord Pentland has messed matters through the intoxication of power long enjoyed. He expected the members of the Legislative Council to dance to his tune; but they are one by one repudiating his statements and public meetings are being held to protest against Lord Pentland's views. The Government of India should pacify public opinion by dissociating themselves from Lord Pentland, or Lord Pentland should take upon himself the full responsibility for his personal opinions. Mr. Lloyd George declares that India is to be regarded as a partner and not as a dependency of the Empire. People lose faith in official pronouncements when those in authority make contradictory statements. If India is not to be ruled on liberal lines, let it be announced that the principles for which England is fighting the present war are not suitable for India, but are only applicable to Europe and America, and let all telegrams reporting speeches of Mr. Lloyd George, Mr. Asquith and President Wilson, containing generous sentiments, be stopped from coming to India. It is dangerous to throw cold water on high aspirations after helping to create them. [Elsewhere the paper expresses its gratification at the bold attitude taken by Sir Subramaniam Iyer in declaring his preparedness to suffer all that he might be called upon to suffer for being the President of the Home Rule League.]

Comments on the Madras Government's Press Note explaining their attitude towards current political discussion.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 20th June, Eng. cols.

15. "We do not think we can say that Lord Pentland's Government have been well advised to issue a Press Communiqué explaining their attitude towards 'current political discussion'. We are afraid the Madras Government have not learnt the wisdom of silence. It is not clear to us what practical purpose is served by communications of this kind. Take the original outburst of Lord Pentland in the Legislative Council, which has, in a sense, necessitated the issue of the present communiqué...... Which agitator has given up agitating since that ill-advised speech was made, we should like to know. It has, as far as we can see, merely stiffened these agitators in their determination. It has led persons of position and good sense to adopt an attitude of defiance. It has aroused bitterness, resentment, and suspicion in the whole country.......... It is quite clear from the communiqué that the present Government of Madras cannot bring themselves to a quite wholehearted sympathy with the recent aspirations of India.......... We ourselves have never been very much impressed by some of the more violent aspects of the Home Rule agitation. Nor are we admirers of Mrs. Besant in her sensational flights. But it is a very unwise policy on the part of individuals and Governments to express their disapprobation of these in terms which extend far beyond the objectionable aspects of political discussion, and condemn movements which are perfectly legitimate, and sanctioned by the whole spirit, temper, and tradition of the British constitution."

Bombay Samáchár (53), 22nd and 23rd June; Sánj Vartamán (28), 16th June; Hindusthán (16), 16th June; Shri Venkateshwar (72), 23rd June.

16. The Bombay Samáchár writes:—There will be difference of opinion as to how far the opinions of the Madras Government are true. However, they cannot be said to be opposed to political progress in India or that the Madras Government are prepared to gag the mouths of those who conduct political movements in a legitimate manner. To draw such an inference would be doing injustice to the Government of Madras and the Moderate party in the Congress. Those who now differ from the opinion of the Madras Government will scarcely have any cause for complaint when the dust of controversy is laid. [In the subsequent issue the paper expresses the opinion that the Madras Government has committed a mistake in giving undue importance to the opinion of a small minority who advocate the immediate grant of Swarájya to India. It blames some of the Moderates who have recently become members of the Home Rule League as in its opinion such action on their part is likely to hinder the cause of the steady political progress of India. The Sánj

Vartamán, on the other hand, considers Lord Pentland's explanation as unsatisfactory and adds :—Educated India fully supports the demands made by the nineteen members of the Imperial Legislative Council and Lord Pentland's policy of repression will result in serious consequences. No one has a right to put down the Swarájya propaganda as long as it is considered a lawful movement. The officials are entitled to have their own opinion as to when India should be given Swarájya, but they should not force their opinions upon the people. The Hindusthán considers it a triumph for the popular party that the Madras Government should have expressed sympathy with the movement for self-government. It is of opinion that the Government while agreeing in principle have expressed their determination to oppose the Swarájya movement owing to their faulty notions as to the time required by India to go through the intermediate stages necessary to reach the goal. It calls upon the people to adhere to their purpose and to continue their exertions for the attainment of their goal. The Shri Venkateshwar is of opinion that Lord Pentland is needlessly alarmed by the Home Rule movement. It believes his personal opinions will have no weight in the ultimate decision of Parliament in the matter of carrying out political reforms in India.]

What the Government of India should do to neutralise the effects of the recent acts of the Madras Government.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 19th and 21st June.

17. Lord Pentland's speech and his orders in connection with Mrs. Besant and her colleagues have, as it were, created a panic among those who held moderate views. They have preferred to join the Home Rule League to remaining aloof from it because they entertain apprehensions lest farsighted measures might not be taken immediately to neutralise the effects of the speech and orders and lest the failure to take such measures might spread in the whole country unrest and disaffection of a kind worse than that which existed in the régime of Lord Curzon and might tarnish the reputation which the people of India have earned for themselves during the present war. [The paper then goes on to refer to the amnesty granted to political prisoners in Ireland and to the organisation of the Irish Convention to settle the Irish Home Rule question, and as a means to wipe out the effects of the actions of the Madras Government above referred to suggests that the Government of India should follow the example of the Home Government and should cancel the recent internment order issued by the Madras Government, should grant pardon to political prisoners, and should convoke a convention representing all sections of the Indian public, on the lines of the Irish Convention, and should, in co-operation with that convention, prepare a scheme for introducing political and economic reforms in India. In the subsequent issue the paper remarks that true statesmanship on the part of the Government of India will not consist in remaining indifferent to the situation created in the country by the acts of the Madras Government. It suggests that they should call an extraordinary meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council not later than the first week of the next month and allowing full discussion to take place in it on the present situation, should publish an explanation calculated to pacify the minds of the public.]

The power of the Anglo-Indian officials is doomed.

Indu Prakásh (35), 22nd June.

18. Even the blind man sees that the days of officials, who are not responsible to any one, are nearing their end. England assumed the reins of the administration of India not for the good of India but for the economic and political prosperity of England. From 1819 to 1875, India was under the guardianship of England. National patriotism was awakened by the study of English history. Self-respect drove out the cringing spirit. Officials, who at first said that India was a trust placed in their hands, began afterwards to claim the ownership of India. The differential treatment of whites and blacks became intolerable. The knowledge that though capable we are excluded from high offices because we are Indians became unbearable. Some officials could not tolerate this agitation. They could not put up with the principle of equality introduced by Indians. Who will do more good to the nation: Indians knowing the needs and aspirations of their countrymen, or English officials who know khánsámás, tailors, Naiks and Dafedars and who have got a passing acquaintance with Zamindars and Deshmukhs and who occasionally see educated Indians for a few minutes? If the fact is that Indians alone can do more good than the English, is not the power of those officials who say that they should manage also the internal affairs of India doomed?

Had Mr. Lloyd George been in Madras now he would have been interned.

Kaiser-i-Hind (20), 24th June, Eng. cols.

*19. The Kaiser-i-Hind thus concludes its comments on Mr. Lloyd George's reply to the deputation of the Labour Party that waited on him to present to him the resolutions dealing with the labour-problems after the war carried at the annual conference at Manchester:—"We congratulate Mr. Lloyd George on the lucky accident that he is not in Madras now, else for a speech like this he might have been interned under the Defence of India Act and given the alternative of confining either in the Andaman or Nicobar Islands if not in far-off St. Helena. We wonder what the C. I. D. in England have been doing! If a few of our ingenious eminent C. I. D. men were exported to England, it would be beneficial to both countries."

Comments on the gift of one lakh of rupees by Mr. S. R. Bomanji to the Home Rule League.

Mahrátta (4), 24th June.

*20. "In the Chronicle of the 21st instant appears a most inspiring letter of Mr. S. R. Bomanji, a Life Member of the Home Rule League (Madras), Bombay Branch. The letter is addressed to the Honourable Mr. Jinnah who has been approached to accept the presidentship of the Branch League. Mr. Bomanji says in this letter that he is prepared to place the sum of a lakh of rupees at the disposal of the League for its future activities.......... Mr. Bomanji's offer at the present time is indicative of the spirit that is slowly but surely possessing the mind of the people. 'The suffering of the people is the concern of the people' is, as we have seen, the formula of the true-born Bureaucrat who cares only for his own caste. It is but reasonable that from amongst the people should come forward their saviours. Money is the sinews of war. And we have so much work before us that we can never have enough of money. Our Home Rule War is to be a peaceful war, but not for that reason an inexpensive one. Crores of money are required and lakhs of brave souls. For the sake of the success of the Empire our people have, under official pressure or of their free will, so far contributed over 41 crores to the War Loan alone! And of men they have supplied regiments upon regiments that have made India's name respected on the foreign battlefields. What is the Empire to us, if the Motherland is not to have in it, at an early date, a place worthy of her 'importance'? As long as we are not under Home Rule, we are but hewers of wood and drawers of water for our alien masters. But 'Home Rule at an early date' is anathema to the Bureaucrat, who feels no scruples, with all his hatred of our Home Rule programme, in 'recruiting' our money and our men for his Empire—his ideal empire in which we are to have no rights if he can help it."

Three reasons for Home Rule in India.

Young India (10), 20th June.

21. Mr. Bepin Chandra Pal writes in Young India:—"I advocate Home Rule or Swarájya for India for three great reasons. These are:—(I) It is absolutely necessary for the highest realisation of our National Life and Destiny, or what may be called Jateeya Parama Purusharta. (II) It is absolutely necessary for the perpetuation of the British connection with India. (III) It is essential for the preservation of World-Peace......... We desire Home Rule or Swarájya to secure freedom of development of our National Life and through it the freedom of development of our individual lives also......... Our national character and culture is a complex and composite thing, and therefore more developed than what passes as national character or culture in Europe. And we want Swarájya or Home Rule for the fullest and freest development of this composite and complex National Life in India. Europe has no experience of this National type; and no European Nation, however clever or well-meaning, can therefore guide or control it and educate and lead it to its highest self-realisation and self-fulfilment......... It is, therefore, essential that we should be freed from all outside control of our National Life and placed upon our own feet to manage our own affairs in our own way, in the best manner we can....... (II) But this Swarájya does not mean that we must be separated from the Empire to which we now belong......... At present the Empire does not belong to us, but we belong to the Empire. With a self-governing India admitted into full and free partnership with the other self-governing members of the Empire including the United Kingdom, the Empire shall as much belong to us as we shall belong to the Empire......... No one, whether Indian or Britisher, ever believes that India will continue to be a permanent Dependency of Great Britain or her Dominions. Everybody thinks and admits that 'some day' the present rulers, who are only trustee, of the Indian people, will deliver their trust to the latter and let them live and grow as a free nation among free nations. The Indian Home Ruler sees in this attitude and policy a very great danger to the perpetuation of the British connection......... The Indian Home Ruler does not desire the isolated Sovereign Independence for his country, for two very great reasons, one practical, and the other affecting his ideal. To maintain her position of isolated sovereignty, even if she should get it as a kindly gift from her present masters, India will have to command a modern army and a powerful navy. How is she to get these?......... But it is inconceivable that they (i.e., her present masters) will, or, humanly thinking, they really can, grant her these opportunities except on the clear understanding and in the firm conviction that India will never use these against the British Empire......... And this understanding and conviction can never be arrived at or grown, as long as India is kept in her present state of complete helplessness and political and financial dependence of Great Britain. Home Rule is, therefore, the only condition under which India can fully develop her military and naval strength to the extent necessary for her self-protection against the ambitions of her lustful neighbours......... And lastly, India as an equal co-partner with the United Kingdom and her Overseas Dominions of the Empire now known as the British Empire, will offer a surer guarantee of coming world-peace than what is likely to be secured by any other alliance or groupings of the existing world powers........., The real cause of modern European rivalries is not in Europe, but outside in the weaker and unprotected countries of Africa and Asia. And unless the European concert agrees to set these countries free from the dominion of the foreigner, these European rivalries for the appropriation of these far Asiatic and African carcasses will continue to rage as fiercely as ever."

Arguments in favour of Swarájya.

Dnyán Prakásh (33), 21st June; Mantri (new), 9th June; Indu Prakásh (35), 16th June; Shubhodaya (new), 15th June.

22. After giving extracts from the speech of Sir Michael O'Dwyer and the communiqué of the Madras Government, the Dnyán Prakásh remarks:—The striking similarity in the views expressed by the heads of the two Governments supports the general belief that the recent measures for the suppression of the swarájya movement are being adopted at the instance of the Government of India. This similarity is observable not only in the views but also in the phraseology of the two pronouncements. There is absolutely no room, therefore, for doubt that the policy pursued by the local Governments is not their own, but is dictated by the higher authorities. We shall not at all be surprised if the despatch of the Government of India to the Secretary of State on post-war reforms reveals the same views as those expressed by the two provincial Governments. Thus in the opinion of the Government of India advance towards self-government should be made (1) as education spreads, (2) as causes of disunion diminish and (3) as large numbers of the vast population gain political experience. Although we admit that some progress is necessary in all these directions, we hold that every nation has a right to govern itself and no alien nation can deprive it of this right. If there is any reason why education is not universal in India it is because the educated classes have no power. Another condition laid down by Government to test our fitness for Swarájya, viz., that causes for disunion should diminish, can hardly be called just as it is very easy to sow discord and hostility among the different classes of a subject population. Besides, what other proof of our unity do Government require in the face of the existing harmonious relations between the Hindus and the Muhammadans? We are also quite unable to understand how the large numbers of our population are to gain political experience unless the rights of swardjya are conferred upon us. Indeed we ask for swardjya in order that our people may have an opportunity of gaining that experience. [The Mantri remarks:—We do not think the views of the popular party differ much from those of the Madras Government. Our responsible leaders do not claim full self-government directly the war is over. They only ask for reforms as an earnest of swardjya and a declaration by His Majesty the King-Emperor that swardjya would ultimately be given. The Government of Madras are in favour of giving this earnest and as they, as His Majesty's representatives, have conceded the principle of swardjya it is immaterial whether an assurance is given by His Majesty himself. The Indu Prakásh remarks:—The party of progress desire Government to clearly indicate the several stages between the present form of government and swardjya. They also want Government to make an authoritative declaration that swardjya would ultimately be given to India. Indeed we are tired of promises. We keenly feel that we have no voice in the affairs of our country and are unable to bear our humiliating condition although we are fit. The Shubhodaya writes:—How and under what law can Government suppress Home Rule agitation if it is legal? Is there no one to redress our grievances, if the Bureaucracy attempts to suppress Home Rulers? When Government have undertaken this war in order that no country on the face of the earth should be in a state of dependence we do not think that Lord Chelmsford or Lord Pentland will create discontent by tyrannising over Indians who are dear to the Emperor.]

What the Home Rule League wants.
Sandesh (100), 17th June.

23. The Sandesh declares that the time for ease and indifference has past and Indian politics have assumed a grave and stern aspect. In stating the aims of the Home Rule League it writes:—We wish for peace in the country. We also wish that there should be no discord between the rulers and the people. Our efforts are directed towards averting the conflagration the fearful signs of which are now visible. We earnestly pray Government, therefore, not to misunderstand the Home Rule movement. The ways of the revolutionaries are quite different. The Home Rulers have never countenanced these and they pin their faith to the British sense of justice.

England should adopt a consistent policy towards Indian affairs.
Mantri (new), 19th June.

24. India appears of late to have assumed the character of duality in that she is differently looked upon in India and in England. In England her praises are being sung by every one from the Premier down to the man in the street and it is even declared that her status ought to be raised from a dependency to that of an ally. In India, however, the Anglo-Indian newspapers frown at the responsible leaders of the people and, while characterising the swardjya movement as unpractical, demand that the mouths of all these men be gagged at once. This will be a puzzle to the simple-minded Indians, but there is nothing strange in all this. The ways of state-craft are always crooked. We only request that both in England and in India an identical policy be pursued even if we do not gain anything thereby.

Comparison between the treatment given to Irish Nationalists and Indian Home Rulers.
Message (5), 19th June.

25. "The irony of it all is that almost simultaneously with this act of liberal statesmanship on the part of H. E. Lord Pentland, news should reach the country of the Imperial Government's decision to release all the prisoners now in confinement in connection with the recent rebellion in Ireland.......... The lesson of the failure of Irish government by the English bureaucracy is fraught with great meaning, and that lesson cannot be reversed in India. Repression might succeed in driving under ground the popular discontent; but it cannot kill the movement, which it is the cherished aim of the short-sighted authors of a policy of repression to accomplish......... To treat the Congress-Muslim League Scheme of reforms as an 'extravagaut aim' is a sort of mental aberration, which is irreconcilable with the times we are living in."

Mahrátta (4), 24th June.

*26. "On Saturday the 16th instant news came to India of Mr. Bonar Law's announcement in the House of Commons regarding the release without reservation of the Irish rebel prisoners.......... It is a singular coincidence that while an 'earnest' of one kind was being given to the Irishmen by the British Government, an 'earnest' of quite the opposite kind was ready for being given to Indians. And the sad 'earnest' was actually given us on the day on which the glad news of Mr. Bonar Law's announcement was in our hands! A question was asked in the House of Commons regarding the 'earnest' of the Madras Government—the internment measures—to which Mr. Chamberlain replied that he had no doubt that the measures were necessary. May it be that England is waiting for India to become an 'Ireland' before she stoops to consider the Indian demands in the proper spirit?"

Comments on the Bombay Government's Circular on the subject of students and political propaganda.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 17th June, Eng. cols.

27. "We can understand a straight course, whether right or wrong, being taken. Is the Home Rule movement unlawful, is it dangerous? Then why is it not prohibited? Evidently, up to the present Government are not prepared to go so far, but the tortuous methods that have been adopted to discourage and discredit the movement will merely produce bitterness and indignation. The circular just issued is a reflection not only upon students, but on their parents. .... The students of to-day are the citizens of to-morrow. Is it wise, is it statesmanlike, to embitter their feelings without sufficient cause? It is not the Home Rule League alone that is being looked at askance in official circles. Before the last Congress met at Lucknow the United Provinces Government sent a letter of warning to the Reception Committee against intemperate speeches. The result was that the boldest speeches ever made at the Congress and Muslim League were heard at Lucknow. Against Lord Pentland's fulmination in the Madras Legislative Council Sir Subramania Iyer and the Honourable Mr. Rangaswami Ayyangar have taken a bold stand. Even the meek and inoffensive citizens of Delhi have refused to be brow-beaten. That is the temper of the country. It is perfectly loyal, but dignified and firm. Is this the time for wise rulers to sow the wind in India?"

Kesari (92), 19th June; Prakásh (99), 20th June; Subodh Patrika (38), 17th June; Dnyán Prakásh (33), 19th June; Shubhodaya (new), 15th June.

28. Government have recently revived the orders of 1908 prohibiting students from attending meetings. They have gone a step further and absolutely prohibited students from attending Home Rule meetings, whereas formerly it was within the discretion of Principals to allow college students to attend political meetings or not. Government themselves say that students have of late been attending political meetings, and yet nothing harmful seems to have resulted. Why then should political meetings be decried needlessly and students deprived of their freedom, thus maiming one part of their education? Are students prohibited from witnessing dramas treating of love and vulgar tamashas? Have Government who boast of their vigilant attention to the good of the students taken the precaution of examining whether the text-books prescribed for examinations contain any obscene passages? Then why this insistence on prohibition of attendance at public meetings? Perhaps the reason is that the bureaucracy does not lose a pie if the morals of the students are ruined, but if students begin to attend Home Rule meetings one day the powers of the bureaucracy itself might be curtailed. [The Prakásh says that it has been constrained to protest against the Circular as it mentions Home Rule Leagues by name and as the policy adopted by Government ignores Home Rule. Now it remains only for Government, it continues, to avow like Lord Pentland that the ideal of Home Rule is an impracticable one. The Subodh Patrika remarks:—The big Government officials advise people not to make any agitation in these critical times, but will the people remain contented when such Circulars are issued after declaring once that the Home Rule agitation is not unlawful? The Dnyán Prakásh says that the present Circular is much more severe than the old one. It further remarks:—The old Circular did not affect unaided schools as the present one does. Formerly some difference was made between school and college students. Now the Principals have been deprived of their discretion. How can Government sit quiet trusting the Principals of private or Government colleges when such a dangerous subject like Home Rule is likely to be discussed? The Shubhodaya remarks:—It is not for the authorities of the schools to sit in judgment upon the orders. We hope both the teachers and students will abide by them and see that their schools are not endangered. It is questionable whether Government should thus divorce students from politics. We do not urge that they should be allowed to attend Home Rule meetings which are not countenanced by Government, but it would not be just to prohibit them from attending any political meeting. When attendance at the theatre is allowed, why should the students be asked to abstain from lectures?]

Gujaráti (12), 17th June; Gujaráti Punch (14), 17th June.

29. After pointing out how the bark of administration in India is at present sailing on troubled waters, how the people on the one hand are anxious to make for the port of Home Rule or Swarájya, while those at the helm are busy making attempts to keep them away from that port, the Gujaráti refers to the circular rently issued by the Bombay Government on the subject of the attendance of students at political meetings and particularly those organised by the Home Rule League and its branches and sarcastically observes that Government perhaps do not like that the future generation should acquire training in these meetings which might enable them to become good citizens and to know how to serve the State and the people. It then proceeds:—Will the hearts of truth-loving Indian students submit to this (Government) order? Will those parents, who aspire to seeing their sons become patriotic servants of the State and the people, be prepared to accept the position of their rising sons being prohibited even from having a mere taste of the desire for their country's liberty and independence? What interpretation will the hearts of curious young men put upon the present Government order? What is the meaning of saying that the rules made in the past as regards the discipline of students should be strictly enforced at present? What misconduct have the students now been guilty of? Does at present mean till the close of the war? Where is the harm in the students listening to the discussions about Home Rule when Government themselves and courts of law have recognised the legitimacy of the Home Rule agitation? Have Government apprehensions about the words "Home Rule" or about what they connote? Will the word "self-government" be acceptable to Government if it is used in the place of "Home Rule"? If Government are desirous of ascertaining by issuing such circulars how far people are anxious for Home Rule or self-government or Swarájya, it will soon become known to them from the adoption of passive resistance by the people; and if that happens, will Government close all schools and colleges? We do not think that the action of the Bombay Government in issuing the order at the present juncture bespeaks high statesmanship or far-sightedness. [Gujaráti Punch also writes in disapprobation of the Bombay Government circular. It asks Government why they do not stop the Home Rule Leagues themselves if they think that the activities of those bodies turn the heads of students. It expresses the hope that the Government of Lord Willingdon will reconsider the matter and will ask the Director of Public Instruction to withdraw the present circular.]

Comment on a Central Provinces circular regarding students and politics.

Subodh Patrika (38), 17th June, Eng. cols.

30. "The Government of Lord Pentland has been outdone by that of the Central Provinces, the Director of Public Instruction of which has issued a circular prohibiting school-boys from attending all public meetings.......... His circular practically forbids students to be present at religious and social meetings of which there are so many held everywhere. This is an unwarrantable interference on the part of the Educational Department with the natural rights of parents and guardians of students. The circular, as it is worded, is altogether unjustifiable and is likely to defeat its own end. We are afraid there is something wrong somewhere, as the recent actions of the Governments of Madras and the Central Provinces show. We are going back to the times when in 1906 and onwards repression under the name of discipline held supreme sway in educational matters. We sincerely trust that the Government of India will not fail to realise the futility of such acts and that it will not fail to put them down, if need be, with a firm hand."

Comments on the personnel of the Committee of Inquiry regarding the Bihar indigo plantations.
Kesari (92), 19th June.

31. The Kesari expresses dissatisfaction at the constitution of the Bihar inquiry committee and is of opinion that the appointment of Mr. Gandhi as a member of the committee was not desirable. It holds that Mr. Gandhi should have been left free to represent the cause of the coolies. The paper thinks that the terms of reference need not have included the question of the general relations between Zamindars and their tenants. It further requests the Bihar Government to deal promptly with the Champaran grievances that have come to their notice without waiting for the submission of the report of the committee. Mr. Lloyd George, in a similar case, promised an immediate redress of labour grievances, it continues; but to expect similar things in India would be to hold that Government are responsible to public opinion. It further remarks that India has not yet got a swardjya of that type.

Comments on the prohibition of lotteries by Government.
Kaiser-i-Hind (20), 24th June, Eng. cols.

32. Commenting upon the prohibition of lotteries by Government the Kaiser-i-Hind remarks:—"We readily admit that scoundrels can make a profession of lotteries, and in such cases Government interference is absolutely essential. But to penalise lotteries altogether does not appear to be quite a wise policy. Nor can it be said to be just and fair, when Viceroys and Governors openly encourage racing, which is always the exhibition of gambling on a scale so colossal that lakhs, and even perhaps crores, change hands in the short space of a few hours. So long as racing is allowed, the penalising of lotteries will always remain an injustice, pure and simple. What is legal for the rich cannot be illegal for the poor. We have a right to expect equitable equality from Government; either let racing be abolished or let lotteries for public purposes be fully allowed."

Alleged attacks on the Muhammadan religion in the first Gujarati edition of the Satydrth Prakdsh.
Akhbdr-e-Isldm (50), 19th June.

33. One Pirzada Saiyad Sadruddin H. Dargawala, Navsári, addresses a letter to the Akhbdr-e-Isldm in the course of which he observes that in the 14th chapter of the first Gujarati edition of a book entitled Satydrth Prakdsh, printed at the Jagdishwar Press, Bombay, in Samvat 1961, extremely unjustifiable attacks have been made upon the holy Koran and the Prophet Muhammad and that the attacks are couched in language calculated to wound the religious susceptibilities of the Muhammadans. He then goes on to take exception to the following sentences and passages occurring in the said chapter, viz., "Does God belong to the Muhammadans only and not to others? Did not the voice of God exist before thirteen hundred years ago? It, therefore, follows that the Koran is not the work of God, but is the work of some person who was not of an impartial mind (page 509, line 19)." "It is proved that Muhammad Saheb's heart was not pure and it becomes evident that it is for this reason that he wrote the Koran to serve his own ends (page 510, line 10)." "Such things cannot find place in God's revelations (page 512, line 3)." "It becomes manifest that the Koran is not written by one individual, but is written by many." "It becomes clear that Muhammad Saheb has served his own ends in the name of God (page 514, lines 6 and 8)." "The Koran is not revealed by God. It must have been written by some malicious trickster; or else how could such extraordinary things have appeared in it (page 510, line 5)?" "The Koran can on no account be called the word of God (page 519, line 7)." "What is this Koran? It is a big farce (page 520, line 4)." "It points to the fact that this Book must have been written by savage people who did not know God (page 521, line 9)." The writer holds that the abovementioned sentiments cannot but wound the feelings of the Moslem community generally. He observes that the original Satydrth Prakdsh which was written by Swámi Dayánand Saraswati and published in Benares in 1875 A. D. does not contain any such sentiments as are incorporated in its present Gujarati edition and that the 14th chapter in the latter has been interpolated by some spiteful and designing person. He concludes with remarking that all Moslem bodies, writers and newspapers should raise an agitation on constitutional lines in connection with that chapter and should appeal to Government to get it expunged from the book.

How is it that Englishmen who could raise a large Territorial Force in Great Britain cannot raise even 6,000 men in India.

Sind Journal (8), 14th June.

34. Referring to the Government of India's Resolution on the poor response made to recruitment for the Defence of India Force, "H. R.", in the course of a letter to the Sind Journal remarks:—"While reading this Resolution one is forcibly reminded of the words of Raja Rampal Singh who, speaking from the Congress platform as long back as 1885 at the second Congress in Calcutta, foresaw the situation that faces us today and uttered the following memorable words:—'Then will England regret that, instead of having millions of brave Indians trained to arms to fling back invaders, she only has scanty legions to oppose to them, and from her timid subjects can only look at most for good wishes—good wishes, truly good things in their way, but poor bulwarks against Berdan rifles and steel ordinance.' Oh, Englishmen! free and brave, do you not realise the moral of this lamentable spectacle of millions of Indians emasculated and unarmed, devoid of all martial spirit and vigour, who cannot easily produce 6,000 men even for the defence of their country and the Empire? Does not a pang of remorse pass across your hearts? Have you asked yourselves why it is that you could raise a large Territorial Force from forty-five millions only in Great Britain, whereas you cannot get six thousand men out of the millions of educated Indians? Is it not that a foreign Bureaucracy, too jealous of its power, has failed to place its trust in the people and has kept most of them ignorant of the use of arms and has thus crushed all martial spirit out of them? Trust them, and grant them self-government, which is their due, and instead of six thousand men that you want, six million soldiers, valiant and brave, will answer to your call. What is wanted is a little more of statesmanship, a little more of foresight, a little more of imagination. Mr. Lloyd George is said to possess all these. Let him then show these in the case of India as he is showing in the case of Ireland, and India, instead of a weak point in the Empire, shall be the greatest bulwark of the Empire."

Protest against primary schools children being made to subscribe on the War Loan Day.

Subodh Patrika (38), 17th June, Eng. cols.

35. "The 14th of this month was observed as a 'Bombay War Loan Day'. All the schools in the Presidency including even primary and indigenous ones were given a holiday and the boys and girls in them were given an opportunity to contribute to the War Loan. There is no question as to the absolute necessity of making the Loan a success, but whether litttle children from six to twelve, as most of those who attend the primary schools are, should have been asked to contribute to is a question which we have no hesitation to answer in the negative. The contributions, however little they may be, tell heavily, especially on poor parents who in most cases, in addition to what they have to give on behalf of their children in schools, have to contribute to funds started in their offices and factories." [The paper adds in its vernacular columns:—It is different with those who have plenty of money. But should those who cannot make two ends meet, and who have even four or five children at school, pinch themselves and contribute to the War Loan in order that their children might not be disappointed, masters might not be displeased, and the Director of Public Instruction might not be wroth with the school?]

Alleged insult to His Highness the Maharaja of Bikanir by a police officer in Bombay.

Gujaráti (12), 17th June.

36. Referring to the rumour published in the Rást Goftár of the 3rd instant about the insult alleged to have been given to the Maharaja of Bikanir on account of his being asked by an Indian police officer to show his passport on his arrival at the Bombay harbour, to which rumour that paper was not prepared to attach any importance till the true facts in connection with that incident were published, the Gujaráti, while not considering the demand for showing a passport as constituting an insult to anybody, does not regard it as possible that the police were unaware of the expected arrival of the Maharaja of Bikanir. It then goes on to narrate the rumour according to which the Maharaja on landing was asked to show his passport while His Highness' secretaries and Sir S. P. Sinha were not asked to do so, and that when the Maharaja inquired of the police officer how it was that one of his secretaries and Sir S. P. Sinha who were Indians were not asked to show their passports the police officer in reply pointed out that they were dressed in English costume; and that on His Highness demanding the name of the police officer the latter refused to give it and said that in doing what he had done he was carrying out the orders of his superiors; that the Maharaja is thereupon reported to have remarked to Sir James Meston that no such distinction was made in his connection during the time he was in England but that he had become a 'native' on account of his Indian costume even before landing in his own country, India. The paper remarks that in India there should be no distinction in the eye of law or in the execution of it between Europeans and Indians; and it expresses the hope that, if the rumour reported above be true, Government will take steps to remove such distinction and, teaching their officers to use more discretion, will give His Highness the Maharaja of Bikanir ample satisfaction.

Alleged staging of a play at Surat calculated to hurt the feelings of the Muhammadans.

Political Bhomiyo (65), 22nd June.

37. A writer styling himself "a lover of peace" addresses a letter to the Political Bhomiyo wherein he refers to advertisements appearing in newspapers about the staging of a play entitled "Dara Aurangzeb" at Surat by the "Shri Vankaner Arya Hitvardhak Dramatic Company" and remarks that to represent the Emperor Aurangzeb, who was of a religious bent of mind and who got a book like Fatwá Alamgiri, which was a collection of decisions based on religious tenets, published, as playing antics on the stage is tantamount to insulting the whole Islamic world and is calculated to injure the feelings of the Moslems. The writer cannot understand how the Vankaner Dramatic Company has been able to secure sanction from the authorities to stage this play at Surat when one bearing the title "Aurangzeb" and staged by a company at Ahmedabad was stopped by Government in the year 1911 in response to a protest raised by the Muhammadans against its being staged. He inquires if the company promotes the interests of India, as its name implies, by thus displeasing the Muhammadans. He does not consider it to be an exaggeration in the slightest degree to say that the Vankaner Dramatic Company incurs the heavy responsibility of paining the hearts of Moslems in being prepared to stage the play in question. The correspondent remarks that the object of Government is to see that nobody's religious feelings are wounded and adds that the proprietors of dramatic companies as also the authorities at Surat should adopt such an attitude that the object of Government which is one of preservation of peace may be attained.

Why Indians are unwilling to join the I.M.S.

Kaiser-i-Hind (20), 24th June, Eng. cols.

*38. Commenting upon the letter of 'Izzatwalla' criticising the terms offered by the Secretary of State to Indian doctors enrolled in the I. M. S., etc., appearing in the Bombay Chronicle, the Kaiser-i-Hind remarks:—"The shortage of doctors even in England is notorious, so much so that in some quarters compulsory service in the case of doctors has been freely advocated. In circumstances such as these it would be most reasonable to encourage Indian doctors to volunteer for service in the army. The Secretary of State for India evidently desires to have them, as is clear from his offer of 'improved' terms. 'Izzatwalla,' however, shows how specious these improved terms are. We have every sympathy with him in his wish to de-Prussianise some of the senior officers, who are often so notoriously rude to Indians. Indians generally, and Indian doctors in particular, are perfectly willing to help the Government and are loyal to the core. But even loyalty has limits, and many an Izzatwalla will hesitate long before they accept humiliating conditions, and will never sacrifice their Izzat even on the altar of humanity."

Comments on the judgment in the criminal case filed by Mr. Durgadas B. Advani against two Railway officials of Karáchi.

Sind Journal (8), 14th June.

39. Commenting upon the judgment in the criminal case filed by Mr. Durgadas B. Advani against two Railway officials of Karáchi, the Sind Journal writes:—"The learned Magistrate has made light of the words 'get out' uttered by the Station Master in asking Mr. Durgadas to come out of the compartment reserved for Europeans and Anglo-Indians without considering the tone adopted by the Station Master which was highly improper specially when addressing a gentleman of Mr. Durgadas' position. The decision of the Judicial Commissioner's Court in Mr. Mathradas Ramchand's case is not like the laws of the Medes and Persians, and the fact that Mr. Durgadas was aware of it does not preclude him from asserting his rights as a British subject. Mr. Durgadas was perfectly justified in insisting upon remaining in the compartment as the reserving of compartments on racial grounds is abhorrent to the minds of educated Indians. The following sentence from the judgment in the case shows the bent of the Magistrate's mind which has failed to grasp the real significance of Mr. Durgadas' action which is anything but courting notoriety: 'His (Mr. Durgadas') intention was to get a handle and an opportunity to go to a criminal court and then get an order which whether in his favour or otherwise would obtain him notoriety and at the same time give him occasion to take up a point—though once decided, yet a sore point—among some stiff-necked Indian politicians.' The learned Magistrate seems to forget that the Judicial Commissioner's Court is not infallible, and instances are not wanting in which High Court Judges have reversed their own decisions when the matter has been put in a different light before them."

EDUCATION.

Comments on the amalgamation of the Bombay University Matriculation Examination and the School Final.

Rást Goftár (27), 24th June, Eng. cols.

40. Referring to the amalgamation of the Matriculation and School Final Examinations, the Rást Goftár writes:—"The arrangement though not altogether satisfactory in so far as it involves a loss to the University of undisturbed control of the Matriculation is by way of a makeshift as convenient a compromise as can be effected between the two examinations which by their rivalry have long set up a stumbling block in the way of the reform of secondary education. The worst outcome of this dual system of examination was reached when Government refused to recognise the Matriculation as a qualifying standard for the lower grades of public service. Students, school-masters and the Government were losers alike by that decision.......... A set of conditions arose out of the rivalry between the two examinations which was thus detrimental to every one concerned.......... The arrangement that has been arrived at would obviate at least for five years the anomaly of this dual system of examination and the public will have the opportunity in the meanwhile of judging of the relative merits of the present and the past systems."

Alleged collusion between the University authorities and Examiners to keep down the number of passes at the Matriculation Examination.

Message (5), 19th June.

41. "A rumour is strongly current in the city, which we sincerely hope is not true. It is somehow stated and is largely believed that the large percentage of failures at the recent Matriculation Examination of the Bombay University was not due to the incompetence of the candidates. But the rumour says that it is the result of collaboration and collusion on the part of certain very high University officers and the various examiners were prevailed upon at the last moment to cut down the percentage of successes to 30. Although the actual results are slightly in excess of that limit, great consternation has been caused by the rumour now current. If there is an iota of truth in it, it threatens to sap the very foundations of our University life and its independence."

MUNICIPALITIES.

Proposed reconstitution of the Bombay Municipal Corporation.

Sánj Vartamán (28), 22nd June; Jám-e-Jamshed (19), 23rd June; Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 23rd June.

42. Apropos of the resolution brought by Dr. Sukhia in a recent meeting of the Bombay Municipal Corporation whereby he sought to deprive the Justices of the Peace of the right to elect members to the Corporation the Sánj Vartamán remarks that in view of the existence of a caucus among the Justices which has robbed their election of its independent character and in view of the great advance in education, in public spirit and the general capacity of the people, it has become necessary that the election by the J. P.'s should cease so that the Municipal franchise may be further extended among the rate-paying public. The paper also suggests the abolition of nomination of members by Government and believes that a city like Bombay should have received the fullest measure of freedom in the matter of Local Self-government as long as a decade ago. It is also of opinion that the graduates of the Bombay University should now have the right to return four representatives instead of two as hitherto and that, like the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, the Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau should also have the right to return their own representatives. It remarks that the citizens of the different wards should hold meetings for demanding these rights. [The Jám-e-Jamshed suggests that if the election by the Justices cannot be completely abolished, they may be allowed to return only five members instead of 16 as at present and the remaining eleven seats so made free may be distributed among the different wards and that tenants having a monthly income of Rs. 100 and above should be allowed the exercise of the municipal franchise. The paper characterises the present system of municipal election in Bombay as antiquated and of a retrograde character. The Praja Mitra and Pársi also favours the reservation of the right of returning four-fifths of the total number of members to the rate-payers and the extension of the municipal franchise to the tenant class. It, however, advocates the retention of the right of election by the J. P.'s observing that those who cry loud against the existence of the caucus among the Justices outdo those whom they condemn by their own excessive "canvassing". The paper endorses the suggestion made in certain quarters for abolishing the system of nomination by Government.]

The Ahmedabad Municipality and its Municipal Commissioner.

Praja Bandhu (24), 17th June, Eng. cols.; Gujaráti Punch (14), 17th June, Eng. cols.

43. The Praja Bandhu quotes at length the Resolution passed by the Ahmedabad Municipality declaring that Mr. Shillidy should not continue as Municipal Commissioner, and remarks :—"The wording of the Resolution is pretty strong, but we think it is well warranted in view of the inexplicably defiant and uncompromising attitude of the Municipal Commissioner. This must be regarded as reprehensible in the case of any public servant, but it is the more so in the case of one who belongs to the Indian Civil Service, and whose official rank in British service entitles him to be put in charge of a whole sub-division comprising two, three or even more talukas......... It need hardly be said that Mr. Patel's Resolution is a significant sign of the times, inasmuch as it is for the first time since the appointment of Municipal Commissioners that a Resolution like this is passed by a Municipal Board with reference to its highest executive officer......... The Resolution will in due course reach the Bombay Government, and we shall await with interest to learn what action, if any, they propose to take in connection with it. As for the Municipal Commissioner, we have no means of knowing what he proposes to do after the Board has passed the above Resolution. It is, however, quite obvious that it is getting hot for him, and if he wishes to stick to the present post he will have to mend his ways and be more vigilant in safeguarding the interests of the Municipality, which presumably is one of his prime duties. On the other hand if he desires to throw up the job we have nothing more to say except that the sooner he does so the better for the Municipality as well as for himself." [The Gujaráti Punch writes:—"The Resolution requests Government to remove the present Commissioner. We do not think that merely replacing him by another person will mend everything. The present Commissioner is a strong man and one who knows how to keep his house in order. His only fault is that he thinks himself to be above the General Board. If we get as his successor a person who takes things easily, we do not think we will have made a change for the better. What we want is a strong executive head like the present Commissioner, but one who keeps within his own bounds and does not transgress upon the powers of the General Board."]

44. A resident of Karjat (district Kolába) complains in the columns of the Kesari that the notifications about the house-tax and conservancy cess were not properly advertised at Karjat and that the people had no opportunities to present their objections against them and that numerous applications were forwarded to the authorities and that in reply a memorandum was received from the Collector stating that the applications afforded no sufficient grounds for negativing the proposals. He states that the residents of Karjat are much harassed and he draws the attention of the Honourable Member representing the division to the question hoping that he will take it up.

Protest against declaring Karjat (district Kolába) to be a Notified Area.

Kesari (92), 19th June.

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 28th June 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

H 191—6 CON

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 26 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 30th June 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British Rule:

Are the Government of India placing themselves at the head of the best national forces in India as advised by the Times of India? . 4

Comments on Mr. Chamberlain's statement in the House of Commons on the Madras internments . . . . 9 & 10

Comments on Miss Hamabai Petit's donation to the Home Rule League 13

Comments on the Bombay Government's circular about keeping students aloof from politics 14

Comments on the cancellation by certain United Provinces leaders of a meeting in connection with the Indian Defence Force as a protest against the Madras internments. . . . . . . 19—21

Comments on the decision of the Government of India accepting the principle involved in the Honourable Mr. V. J. Patel's Bill for the conditional introduction of free and compulsory education within Municipal areas in the Bombay Presidency 29

Comments on the internment of Mrs. Besant and her two assistants . 5—8

Comments on the proposed retaliatory measures against the alleged repressive policy of Government 16

Comparison between freedom of speech in South Africa and India . 25

Condemnation of the proposal to erect a temple of Shivaji at Poona . 28

Death of Dr. Dadabhai Naoroji . . . . 26 & 27

Government and Indian industries 22

India is bound to get Swarájya under British suzerainty . . . 3

It is not by co-operation with the British that Indians can get what they want 1

Lord Pentland and the students working as volunteers at the Cuddalore Conference 15

Muhammadan attitude towards the Home Rule ideal 23

Resolve of members of the Tilak Home Rule League not to recant even if the League is declared unlawful by Government . . 11

Suggested adoption of "boycott" as a weapon against repressive measures 18

The favour shown recently to Ireland by the British Government is due to pressure from the United States: Alleged similarity between the positions of Ireland and India . . . 24

The potent weapon of "Swadeshi-at-a-sacrifice" 17

What should be India's programme of agitation against the bureaucracy 2

Why Mr. B. C. Pal advocates Home Rule for India 12

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

Hajis: Appeal to Government and the Bombay Haj Committee to arrange to provide the few steamers necessary for the Haj traffic this year . 44

His Excellency the Governor of Bombay: Comments on the proposed public movement for securing an extension of the term of His Excellency Lord Willingdon . . . . 33—35

India Council: Comments on the new appointments of Indian members to the— . . . . 36—39

Indians in the Colonies: Treatment of Indians in South Africa . . . 40

Judicial matters: Comments on the case filed by Mr. Durgadas B. Advani against two railway officials at Karáchi. 42

Police: Alleged grossly insulting behaviour of a policeman towards Mr. Lele (of Wái) during a religious meeting 41

Sind: The — Muhammadans are not so badly treated in the matter of Government service as has been made out by the Sind Moslem . 45

Vaccination: Comments on the conviction of two school-masters of Karáchi for refusing to have their children vaccinated 43

War:

- Comments on the Report of the Mesopotamia Commission . . . 31
- The situation in Russia 32
- There are a lot of officers in civil employ in India who could be released for service at the Front 30

MUNICIPALITIES—

Bombay: The reform of the — Municipal Corporation . . . . . 46 & 47

Shikárpur: Alleged Municipal neglect at — (Sind) in connection with fires 48

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

It is not by co-operation with the British that Indians can get what they want.

Mahratta (4), 1st July.

1*. "In the Commonweal of the 22nd instant is published the talk of St. Nihal Singh with Sir Satyendra Prasanna Sinha. In this talk occurs the following :—' .... In spite of all that has happened, we of the older generation have unshaken faith in British integrity, fairplay and justice. The case is very different with young Indians. We of the older generation are, therefore, taunted by the younger men for our faith in Britain.........' We would like to know if Sir Satyendra's robust faith in British integrity, fairplay and justice is still absolutely unshaken. The rulers here are Britishers. Lord Chelmsford, Sir Michael O'Dwyar, Lord Willingdon, Lord Pentland, Mr. Chamberlain are Britishers..........Britain in her relations with Belgians and Boers and her own kith and kin may be an ideal Nation. But that is nothing to us. Belgians and Boers and those who derive profit from Britain's integrity and other virtues may and will praise her to the skies. But all that is extraneous to us. How are we treated. That is what ought to determine and will determine our estimate of Britain. At this hour, no sane Indian can take it upon himself to counsel his brethren, young or old, to hug tightly the superstition of 'British integrity, fairplay, justice,' and quietly 'co-operate' with the agents of Britain in all their schemes. It is not thus that we can ever get what we want, namely, 'Free institutions'. Will Sir Satyendra speak out at this critical hour and give the people the benefit of his sober advice ?"

What should be India's programme of agitation against the bureaucracy.

Young India (10), 27th June.

2. "Vande Mataram" writes in the Young India :—"Everyone knows that the bureaucracy must have anticipated and must be prepared to withstand any amount of our agitation conducted in our usual way—meetings and protests. There must be something which may go home to them. Here is the programme of work which, if taken up in right earnest, will bring arrogant bureaucrats to their knees. (1) All the members of the Home Rule League over the country should demand immediate emergency meetings of 'The Indian National Congress' and 'The Moslem League,' I mean not the Committees only but full meetings with delegates from all parts of India. (1) That both the bodies should pass resolutions to the following effect :—(1) That the elected non-official members of the Imperial and Provincial Legislative Councils should be called upon to resign in a body as a protest against the action of the Government of Madras. (2) That no Indian should stand for election till (a) Lord Pentland is removed : (b) Mrs. Besant and Messrs. Arundale and Wadia are released. (c) A proclamation is issued announcing the intention of the Imperial Government in the matter of an early grant of self-government to India as outlined in the scheme framed by the Congress and the Moslem League. (d) All provincial governments are ordered not to take any action under the Defence of India Act or any other emergency measure against political agitation, except under the ordinary law of the land. (3) That a petition be submitted in the name of all India to the House of Commons, praying for an order to sue Lord Pentland for damages on his return to England. (4) That all people in the principal towns and cities of India be asked to strike work till Mrs. Besant and others are released and Lord Pentland removed. (5) That strong and influential deputations in thousands proceed to Delhi to wait upon the Viceroy, asking him at once to remedy this wrong and refuse to take food and drink or to leave Delhi till all the demands are satisfied."

India is bound to get swarájya under British suzerainty.

Gujaráti (12), 24th June.

3. In the course of a lengthy article, the Gujaráti writes :—The Morleyan reforms were bestowed upon India as a direct result of the awakening caused by the policy adopted by Lord Curzon and we hope that good will result from the blow Lord Pentland has dealt to public opinion in India. What India regarded as a distant goal a few years ago has now come within the pale of practical politics. It seems we are going to realise the truth of the dictum of Mr. Lloyd George about one year accomplishing the work of a century. The suppression of Mrs. Besant's Home Rule movement will lead to that result. There can be no guarantee that Government will not object to the propaganda and aims of the Indian National Congress. If Government object to the goal of Home Rule, Self-government or swarájya, they should have declared their opposition to it when Dadabhai Naoroji announced it as the goal of Indian aspirations from the Congress platform in the year 1907. The more the Indian public pondered upon this goal, the more did they realise the low status they occupy in the British Empire, and the more they realised their situation the more did they strive to secure swarájya. They thought of swarájya as a panacea against the evil of Indians being disregarded and neglected abroad. Mrs. Besant has taught the Indian people how to cherish the goal of swarájya under the Empire and to carry on the agitation after the manner of the British. Her agitation was carried on openly and there was nothing of secrecy or underhand dealing in it such as could require the services of the C. I. D. to prove. She has acted as a guide in showing the path of political progress to the Indian people. Indian public opinion has been flouted by the internment of Mrs. Besant and her two associates. It may be a divine dispensation that these persons have been interned so that the Indian people may be stirred to strive the harder for the attainment of their goal. Providence is determined to give to the Indians swarájya within the British Empire and they will attain it the earlier the more the officials talk of postponing its realisation. At such a critical juncture who would fail to serve his motherland?

Are the Government of India placing themselves at the head of the best national forces in India, as advised by the Times of India?

Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 26th June.

4. The Praja Mitra and Pársi thus concludes an article in which it discusses the present political situation and refers to the advice of the Times of India to Government to place itself at the head of the best national forces in India, etc.:—"If Governments like those of Madras and the Punjáb, with the approval of higher authority, confound anarchists with constitutionalists, if students are forbidden to attend meetings of which the proceedings cannot by any conceivable means be kept secret from them, if grown-up people are threatened with persecution for joining the Home Rule League or for persistently demanding self-government within the Empire, then it can be hardly said that the Government of India is placing itself at the head of the best national forces in India; what the Government is really doing is to array against itself those very forces which should be found ranged on its side. No Government can be congratulated upon actively working to bring about such a political situation at the present time."

Comments on the internment of Mrs. Besant and her two assistants.

Rást Goftár (27), 24th June; Kaiser-i-Hind (20), 24th June; Gujarát Mitra (13), 24th June; Hind Vijaya (new), 27th June.

5. Commenting upon Mrs. Besant's internment, the Rást Goftár writes:—We are sorry to see that the Governments of Bombay and Madras have given offence to public opinion by their recent actions. Lord Pentland's measure has spread consternation throughout the country. It would be unjust to say that Government have acted without any rhyme or reason. However, we are constrained to say that Lord Pentland's order is inopportune and hasty. We wish Government had adhered to their determination not to take in hand any controversial subject during the period of the war. We would like Lord Pentland to withdraw the order and to institute legal proceedings against Mrs. Besant and her two assistants if in his opinion they have been guilty of any crime. We hope the Indian people will keep their heads cool and not be exasperated by the step the Madras Government have taken. They would do well to refrain from giving any direct or indirect threats as no good is likely to result from them. [Kaiser-i-Hind writes:—No Indian can help expressing his disapproval of the hasty step taken by the Madras Government. If Government believe that the Swarájya movement is being conducted in a hasty and improper manner they should have pointed out the mistake of popular leaders and given them advice instead of trying to suppress the movement. We fail to understand why the Indian Government should flout public opinion at a time when attempts are being made to conciliate Irish opinion in the matter of Home Rule. We have no sympathy with those who advocate the immediate grant of swarájya to India, but we would like to see the Government of India using tact and discretion in their relations with the popular movements. The Gujaráti Mitra writes:—It is to be regretted that a reasonable man like Lord Pentland should take a step that is likely to stir up a commotion throughout India. This is the age of liberty and Lord Pentland's step is bound to cause a reaction. India has proved its fitness for Swarájya and Government officials should rather help the people than throw impediments in their way. The Hind Vijaya writes:—Lord Pentland's step has not tended to suppress the swarájya movement; nay, rather, it has given a stimulus to it and has spread discontent among the people. It is needless to say that the step is indiscreet.]

Praja Bandhu (24), 24th June, Eng. cols.; Gujaráti Punch (14), 24th June, Eng. cols.

6. The Praja Bandhu thus concludes its article on the Madras internments:—"By issuing the orders Lord Pentland has not only created a hornets' nest around him, but has seriously disturbed the even tenor of life in this country without any justification for it. Under these circumstances we think His Excellency the Viceroy ought to fully and impartially inquire into this matter, and if he finds that there is no justification for the step he ought to lose no time in revoking the orders of internment passed by the Governor of Madras. It will, indeed, be an act of statesmanship, which while redounding to his credit will suffice to restore calm in place of strong resentment and keen disappointment in consequence of the orders which the Governor of Madras has thought it advisable to issue." [The Gujaráti Punch writes:—"The action of Government is ultra vires and the confinement of Mrs. Besant and others is an illegal confinement and we think an application to the Madras High Court for a writ of Habeas Corpus will be a proper step to take."]

Kesari (92), 26th June; Shri Sháhu (104), 27th June; Prakásh (99), 27th June; Shubhodaya (new), 22nd June; Karnátak Vritt (75), 26th June; Karnátak Vaibhav (74), 26th June; Loka Bandhu (76), 24th June; Raja Hansa (77), 28th June.

7. Why are respectable Hindu and Muhammadan gentlemen like Messrs. Jinnah, Bhurgri and Surendranath rushing to join the Home Rule Leagues and announcing their intention to stick to it whatever be the consequences? Is it not because Mrs. Besant, who is determined to get Home Rule for India and who works wholeheartedly for the cause, is persecuted? Very few people are fated to undergo the persecution that leads to such results. We think Lord Pentland has earned the glory of a Pilate by persecuting Mrs. Besant. The conversation between Mrs. Besant and Lord Pentland resembles that between Christ and Pilate. Lord Pentland has given proof of his wisdom and policy by applying to Mrs. Besant the law that is meant for disloyal persons. The time has now come when it will be decided whether the power of the bureaucracy will be on the decline or whether the Home Rulers will be completely crushed and whether the uncontrolled sway of the bureaucrats will be proudly maintained in India for centuries more. The bureaucracy which rules over us absolutely does not desire that we should get swarájya for centuries or even at any time. Lord Pentland has made it clear to what lengths it will go to maintain its rule. [The Shri Sháhu says:—People are not afraid of the threats of Government. We request Government to retrace their steps after careful deliberation about their thoughtless action. The Prakásh remarks that the blood of the martyr is the seed of the Church and thinks that the Madras Government would not have issued such short-sighted orders had they any idea as to what they would lead to. The Shubhodaya says that Mrs. Besant's advocacy of Home Rule is responsible for her internment and that the Defence of India Act has been misapplied in her case. It further remarks that it is regrettable that Anglo-Indian newspapers that are as a rule against Indian aspirations are overjoyed at Lord Pentland's action. The Karnátak Vritt, the Karnátak Vaibhav and the Loka Bandhu write in a similar strain. The Rája Hansa writes:—The Home Rule movement has not been broken up by Mrs. Besant and Mr. Tilak being put down. On the contrary, it has gained in enthusiasm and spirit. It is man's natural right to demand Home Rule and we shall commit a sin if we do not ask for it. Discontent will be surely created by the application of the Defence of India Act to Home Rule.]

Sind Journal (8) 21st June.

8. "Mrs. Besant has never preached violence, nor have her two co-workers condemned by the Madras Government done so. But simply because they have the courage of their convictions and can call a spade a spade they have been muzzled. Such is the wisdom of the bureaucracy which does not see what mischief it is doing in its zeal to prolong the tenure of its life indefinitely. The whole country resents the injustice done to Mrs. Besant and her two worthy lieutenants whose only fault is that they love India more than their own persons. The threats of Lord Pentland, instead of driving people into despair, have nerved them to carry on the constitutional agitation for self-government within the Empire with even greater vigour than before.......... Shall India alone be tongue-tied and shall her revered leaders be punished for advocating the cause of the Motherland? Mrs. Besant and her two devoted colleagues are suffering for a just and noble cause and their sufferings will not be in vain. It is easy to silence individuals, but who can muzzle a whole nation?"

Comments on Mr. Chamberlain's statement in the House of Commons on the Madras internments.

Young India (10), 27th June.

9. "Mr. Chamberlain's statement completely unmasks the attitude of Government towards the aspirations of the people. The policy of repression, which has now been inaugurated, is only the beginning of the end, and after all, poor Lord Pentland is not the instrument of his own will. It is part of a concerted plan of action to put down popular demands and grant only such as might appeal to the bureaucrats.......... Anyway, the frank avowal of Mr. Chamberlain ought to set at rest all speculation regarding the future of British policy in India. The infallible bureaucrats have completely got the ears both of the Viceroy and the Great Mogul of the India Office, and they are not prepared to part with the least fraction of real power to other hands, however legitimate those hands may be. Without going out of their way, they will try to throw some small crumbs from their luxurious tables. If you want you may pick them up and be grateful in return."

Dnyán Prakásh (33), 30th June.

10. Mr. Chamberlain's statement in the House of Commons that he approves of the internment orders of the Government of Madras leaves no room for hope that the Home Government will check the repressive policy of our Government. This will only strengthen our determination to ceaselessly carry on the agitation for swarájya. People realise now the necessity of sinking all their differences and working in harmony at this time.

Resolve of members of the Tilak Home Rule League not to recant even if the League is declared unlawful by Government.

Mahratta* (4), 1st July; Kesari (92), 26th June.

11. "More than 800 members of the Tilak Home Rule League have intimated in writing to the Secretary of the League that they have resolved not to retrace their steps even if the demand for Home Rule as defined in the Congress Resolution of last year be declared unlawful and that they are prepared to face any penalties this their decision may result in." [The Kesari publishes a list of Home Rulers who have given the intimation referred to in the Mahrátta.]

Why Mr. B. C. Pal advocates Home Rule for India.

Young India (10), 27th June.

12. Mr. Bepin Chandra Pal contributes to Young India the first instalment of an article headed "Why I advocate Home Rule for India", in the course of which he remarks:—"I am an advocate of Home Rule because, among other things, I desire the PERPETUATION OF THE BRITISH CONNECTION. I use the word Perpetuation deliberately, in preference to the word continuance, because continuance implies that the thing or condition to be continued already exists......... So far as the people of India are concerned, the present British authority in the country is as despotic as the authority of the Tsar in Russia before the latest Revolution. This is the real character of the present British connection with India. This connection is based upon the Overlord-and-Dependent relation.......... There is, however, no room for any kind of foreign suzerainty in the Home Ruler's scheme or vision of the future government of his country. Home Rule and foreign suzerainty are mutually exclusive and destructive concepts. There is, however, one view of this suzerainty to which the Home Ruler can have no manner of objection. If by British suzerainty is meant the acceptance of the British sovereign as the constitutional Head of the composite Empire which will include both Great Britain, her Overseas Dominions, India and Egypt, the existence of this sovereignty will not necessarily kill or cripple the full and complete rights of free citizenship implied by Home Rule.......... The present system of British connection, with India as a helpless Dependant on the one side, and Great Britain as her supreme and absolute Lord and Master on the other, hinders the natural growth of her honest allegiance to the King-Emperor, and chills our loyalty to the Empire of which he is the Sovereign Head, and consequently, no Home Ruler, indeed no Indian who loves his own country, is proud of the noble heritage of his race, and conscious of the great possibilities before his people, can honestly desire the continuation of this system."

Comments on Miss Hamabai Petit's donation to the Home Rule League.

Kaisar-i-Sind* (20), 1st July, Eng., cols.

13. "'Divide and Rule' has always been the policy of our Anglo-Indian Press. Notwithstanding the fact that a Naoroji, a Mehta, and a Wacha made every sacrifice for the regeneration of mother India it used to be urged that the Parsees as a class had no permanent interest in the political advancement of our country. What shall our Anglo-Indian Press say of the munificent gift made by Miss Hamabai F. Petit amounting to Rs. 15,000 for 'advancing the cause of the Home Rule League'? Is it not an undisguised indication of the fact that even Indian womanhood has come to realize that India's political salvation lies in securing self-government within the Empire?"

Comments on the Bombay Government's circular about keeping students aloof from politics.

New Times (new), 16th June.

14. "His Excellency Lord Willingdon has chosen to follow the fatal policy of Lord Pentland. If the two orders in Madras and Bombay declare the policy of the Government of India, it augurs ill for the peaceful progress of our country. The policy of repression in India has not succeeded before. It cannot succeed now. The latest threats of repressive measures from responsible officials of high standing have come as a surprise upon the Indian people. The Government of India must rise to a higher vision of statesmanship and must in no way try to oppose a movement that represents the cherished aim and conviction of the people of this country......... Failure is writ large upon all policies of repression. If repression has failed everywhere in the world why should it succeed in India? Is India not a part of the world where nations claim to preserve their own rights? We are not yet free from the evil effects of the Curzonian policy when a new storm is abrewing and we do not know if this is merely the beginning of a series of repressive measures.......... The result of His Excellency's order would merely be to inspire discontent and distrust.......... Right association is the first principle of all true education and nothing will excite the curiosity of students to attend political meetings more than the Government order for prohibition.......... Again if further coercive measures follow the results will be much worse. The thing is, and the truth must be told in clear terms, that it is no longer possible to keep students away from the new currents of thought and life in India."

Lord Pentland and the students working as volunteers at the Cuddalore Conference.

Sind Advocate (7), 31st May.

15. "Lord Pentland of Madras seems to have been seized by the ambition to outdo Curzon and Sydenham. He has done what no satrap or Viceroy thought of doing heretofore—the forbidding of students serving as volunteers at National movements where their function consists merely in receiving, honouring and waiting upon the guests from different parts of the country. .... Lord Pentland not only forbade this, but he rose to the height of unfairness and impudence by getting the volunteers of the Cuddalore Conference disbanded by the police (Schools and Colleges being closed, and, therefore, action by the Principals being out of the question), and what is still perhaps worse, he did this just on the eve of the Conference, thereby putting the organisers and the numerous guests to a great trouble. As a gentleman at least, he would have seen that this was a very wrong step."

Comments on the proposed retaliatory measures against the alleged repressive policy of Government.

Dnyán Prakásh (33), 26th and 29th June; Sandesh (100), 28th June; Mantri (new), 24th, 27th and 29th June; Subodh Patrika (38), 24th June; Shetkari (37), 24th June.

16. Every one will be glad that the policy of repression pursued by the Government of Madras is being universally condemned. The proceedings of the crowded meetings held at Madras and other places must have convinced Government that people will not submit tamely to coercion. It is, however, necessary to sound a note of warning against the various measures of retaliation that are being suggested. The heavy and unjust blow struck by Government in interning Mrs. Besant and her co-workers has naturally upset us all and tempted some of us to suggest steps the unwisdom of which they would recognise in their sober moments. The Committee of the leading citizens of the United Provinces adopted a mistaken course in declining to encourage recruiting for the Defence Force in order to mark their disapprobation of the repressive policy of Government. We must not join the Defence Force with the idea of helping Government, but to secure our own good. Governmeut put forth tremendous efforts to collect subscriptions for the War Loan; what does, then, their apathy towards the question of recruitment for the Defence Force signify? We shall suffer infinitely more than Government if the United Provinces Committee dissociate themselves from the recruiting campaign. Another suggestion, that the elected members of the Legislative Councils should resign their seats, is equally short-sighted. We fail to understand the wisdom of forfeiting an effective weapon of expressing our views before the authorities in this country. [In a subsequent issue the paper remarks:—To take the vow of swadeshi to mark our disapprobation of the policy of Government is to misuse the swadeshi movement. It assumes in that case the character of boycott. We think it highly improper, however, to inaugurate boycott under the name of swadeshi. The Sandesh, on the other hand, says that the country should push forward the swadeshi movement with the utmost vigour. The Mantri considers that the Allahabad leaders were not well-advised in cancelling the recruiting meeting as the Defenee Force is meant to defend our own country. It exhorts its readers to take the vow of swadeshi, and in a subsequent issue it comments with satisfaction on the decision arrived at at a ladies' meeting held at Madras to encourage swadeshi. The Subodh Patrika disapproves of the action of the Allahabad leaders in the matter of the recruiting meeting. The Shetkari says that swadeshi and passive resistance are two of the legitimate weapons in the hands of unarmed people to bring the authorities to a more reasonable frame of mind. It is absolutely necessary, it declares, for the uplift of India that every one should adopt swadeshi in its entirety.]

The potent weapon of "Swadeshi-at-a-sacrifice".

Message (5), 26th June.

17. V. B. Kirtikar writes in the Message:—"The bureaucrat says that it is an extravagant, nay, an impossible, dream for Indians to aspire for Home Rule at an early date, etc. The Indian patriot declares that he would prefer extinction to the vegetating life that is his to-day, under the iron sway of bureaucracy. The matter has come to a pass. Apparently this is going to be an unequal fight between the bureaucracy, having all the resources of the State at its command, and our defenceless people.......... Truce to your petitioning, memorialising and protesting. We have had enough of this soul-harrowing business! Why make unnecessary noise when nobody seems to be in a mood to listen to it? Why hold yourselves up to the ridicule of the pratical matter-of-fact world, by raising a din over a trifle? .... Not remaining content with expressing our impotent rage in equally impotent ways, we should employ the only potent weapon which has a great potentiality for good and which no bureaucracy on earth, so hide-bound, can deprive a subject people of. That weapon and the only weapon in the armoury of an unarmed people is the weapon of 'Swadeshi-at-a-sacrifice.' Its power has been tested and found to be of no mean merit in the service of those who employ it.......... Just give it one more trial please, and your victory is assured."

Suggested adoption of "boycott" as a weapon against repressive measures.

Message (5), 28th June.

18. "It will certainly not be an ideal situation, in which Indians will be forced to resort to boycotting British goods, in order to attract the attention of the British people to the conditions here.......... The late Mr. Gokhale accepted boycott as a legitimate weapon and in a speech at Allahabad he went so far as to say that even refusal to pay taxes was legitimate—under certain circumstances. The younger generation knows all this and will be tempted to take to the last resource of constitutional agitation, unless Pentlandism is stopped and people are assured as to the Government's intention of taking definite and substantial measures, heralding self-government at an early date."

Comments on the cancellation by certain United Provinces leaders of a meeting in connection with the Indian Defence Force as a protest against the Madras internments.

Young India (10), 27th June.

19. "We must congratulate Pandit Motilal Nehru, Dr. Tej Bahadur and their colleagues on the excellent example of public spirit they have set to their countrymen. We had never flattered ourselves before that the so-called concession to Indians to volunteer for the Indian Defence Force was an indication of the trust of the bureaucracy in the people. And if we were eager to help them to raise a sufficient number of recruits it was certainly not because we were enamoured of the humiliations to which we and our young men are exposed in our own country. We wanted to make it a success because we looked primarily at the cause we were asked to serve. It was not the cause of the Bureaucracy; it was the cause of the Motherland and of the Empire. In view of the regimé of repression inaugurated by the Government of Madras, the United Provinces leaders cancelled the meeting called for last Saturday and rightly abstained from doing anything to encourage recruiting."

Mahrâtta (4), 1st July.

*20. "There is no doubt that the form taken by the resentment of the Allahabad leaders is a justifiable one. What could they say at a recruiting meeting? 'The Bureaucracy seems to be determined that you shall have no rights in this country and seems to be resolved to strike down with a heavy hand all agitation for Home Rule—which is a matter of honour with every true-born Indian. And, yet, boys, we exhort you to join the Defence Force, for advantages a, b, c are going to follow from your joining this Force.' To this possible argument at a recruiting meeting it may be replied: 'If the Bureaucracy is not going to help us it is best for us not to help the Bureaucracy—whatever the consequences. Whatever the advantages in helping the Defence Force movement, the great disadvantage is that you will give the Bureaucracy room for representing to the higher authorities and the British public that Indian leaders are not very serious about their Home Rule movement, since not the greatest strokes against the movement rouse them to retaliatory action, such as the Irish and other people would take on a much lighter provocation. By outward act is the inward feeling known. It is, therefore, the right policy to give your resentment the most effective form possible in order that it may be rightly appreciated by the people who are not amenable to appeals of a chivalrous nature.' In fine, there is, in our humble opinion, ample justification for the attitude taken by the leaders of Allahabad."

Message (5), 29th June.

21. "We have always understood the conduct of the United Provinces people in dissociating themselves from the Defence Force as a protest against executive high-handedness and arbitrary conduct. It cannot have been a secret that the bureaucracy do not want our men, and the too many humiliating conditions and disqualifications which accompanied what Dr. Mullick in the height of his foolishness regards as the greatest privilege conferred on his race by a paternal bureaucracy are an overbearing testimony in the matter. People with a sense of national self-respect and conscience were not much in need, though the bureacrats with due considerateness spared the people the pain of telling them so openly. In these circumstances, no self-respecting people could enthuse over finding men for the Force. The bureaucrats are capable of helping themselves, and if they want the men they will find them. When they are making it clear in innumerable ways that they do not need our co-operation in this matter, should people be so solicitous to officiously offer it against their own self-respect?"

Government and Indian industries.

New Times (new), 14th June.

22. In the course of an article headed "the industrial outlook in India", the New Times writes:—"Now, India is industrially dependent on foreign nations and agriculture has become its main industry. This dependence on one industry is responsible to a great extent for the increasing poverty of India. Forty years ago the Famine Commission appointed to investigate the causes of famines in India insisted strongly on reducing the large percentage of the population dependent entirely on agriculture. But the Government has as usual slept over the matter and has neglected to provide for the necessary diversification of employment by a systematic encouragement of industries.......... When Bombay with its own unaided exertions began to develop its cotton industry, it was sharply reminded by Lancashire that India had no fiscal independence. Since the agitation for the repeal of the iniquitous Cotton Excise duties was naturally carried on by men who demanded justice for Indians in the no less important sphere of politics, all movements for the industrial regeneration of India were treated by the Government as seditious. Even now many Anglo-Indians do not hesitate to confound Swadeshism with Sinn Feinism. For a time, therefore, Indian industries instead of getting any help from the Government had to face its active opposition. The war has, however, come as an eye-opener to the Government.......... In its anxiety to exploit the resources of the country for England's benefit, it has pursued a fiscal policy which has only placed the country in economic bondage to Japan and Germany. The extent of the helplessness of India before the competition of these countries has been only revealed by the war.......... As a result of this changed attitude and the increasing strength of public opinion, the economic autocracy of Lancashire has been to some extent mitigated and the Government has seen its way to appoint a Commission to investigate the methods of encouraging Indian industries. Various Governments have appointed industrial advisers, but that the Government could have done much more than appoint a Commission and engage local industrial advisers is only too obvious. Failing to utilise the man-power of India for fighting purposes, it could have easily utilised it for the industrial needs of the army. India could easily have started new factories to manufacture cloth, boots and many other things which are necessary for a successful prosecution of the war. As it is Indians are only asked to do the work of digging trenches in spite of their martial valour and their inherited technical skill. This continued suspicion of India is one of the greatest disappointments of the war and its removal after it is over, if not earlier, will be the greatest guarantee of a disinterested attitude on the part of England towards Indian interests."

Muhammadan attitude towards the Home Rule ideal.

Akhbár-e-Islám (50), 25th, 26th, 28th, 29th and 30th June.

23. In the course of the first instalment of an article under the heading "Extraordinary haste for obtaining swarájya and Home Rule for India," the Akhbár-e-Islám, while recognising the justifiability of a demand for swarájya to be granted in due course, condemns the foolish impatience displayed in that connection by a section of the Indian public during the continuance of the war. It dwells on the evil results that might follow from the objectionable conduct of those who carry on Home Rule agitation among the youth of the country. The paper remarks that if the people allow Government to think, as a result of the impatience displayed by them during the present crisis, that they do not rely upon the promises made by the responsible authorities with regard to the political status of India after the war, it would not be too much if Government took whatever measures they thought fit to control the public. It does not believe that the British Government which is fighting in the present war for the liberty of other nations will play false with India by withholding from her the boon of swarájya. It observes that the population of India is chiefly composed of Hindus and Muhammadans, and that an overwhelmingly large bulk of the latter are so steeped in ignorance that they do not know the very meaning of swarájya and Home Rule. The paper further adds that a number of Muhammadans, who have been reading the exciting writings on the subject of swarájya and Home Rule appearing in several of the Extremist Gujaráti organs, have been coming to it and putting the following questions :—(1) What is the meaning of swarájya or "Home Rule"? (2) Do the Hindus want to take the Government of India in their own hands and keep the Muhammadans in servitude under themselves? (3) Have the Englishmen been defeated in the war that the Hindus are impatient to turn them out of India? (4) Will there be a (civil) war in India between the Hindus and the Muhammadans? If so, (5) Which party will the British Government help? (6) Is the rumour which is rife among the Hindus, that there will shortly be a rebellion against the Englishmen, true? (7) What is the object of the British Government in giving arms to the Hindus and the Muhammadans? (Do they want that) the Hindus and the Muhammadans should fight among themselves and they might make over the administration of India to the winning side? etc., etc. The paper then goes on to lament the ignorance of the Moslems and observes that its pen refuses to move at the thought of the domestic troubles that would follow the grant of swarájya to the Indian people in the present condition of the country. [In its issue of the 26th June the paper observes that Lord Pentland's advice to the Indian leaders not to try to rush forward on the path of political progress at a breakneck speed does not constitute an infringement of the promises made by the higher authorities to raise the political status of India. It advises the Indian people to possess their souls in patience till the end of the war. The paper, however, suggests that in order to allay the public feeling aroused at the present juncture the Viceroy would do well to invite popular leaders before himself and pacify their minds in some measure as well as exhort them on the advisability of maintaining peace and quiet during the present crisis. In its issue of the 28th June the paper disapproves of the adverse criticism against the Madras internments and observes that the people are not competent to probe the mysterious reasons which at times prompt Government to take a particular measure. The paper does not believe that Government will be terrified by the popular agitation. In its issue of the 29th June the paper remarks that the Congressmen are perhaps dreaming vain dreams in supposing that Moslems in India will follow in the wake of the leaders of the Moslem League whom they have managed to drag within the pale of their influence during the last two years and upon whose strength they have been gloating in carrying on their present agitation. It regrets that a section of the Hindu community has failed to appreciate the depth of the loyalty of the Moslems and adds that it will be surprised if that section succeeds in disturbing the peace and silence of the Muhammadans who, though their hearts are wounded on the spiritual side at Turkey being involved in the war, have stood loyally by the Empire and the Indian Government. In its issue dated the 30th June the paper exhorts those persons who have been crying out for swárajya and Home Rule to have faith in Government and to co-operate with them in bringing the present war to a successful close and expresses its confidence that if they act in that manner they will not have occasion to find their faith betrayed by Government.]

The favour shown recently to Ireland by the British Government is due to pressure from the United States: Alleged similarity between the positions of Ireland and India.

New Times (new), 30th May.

24. "It would seem that America was reluctant to give any active help unless the Allies at the same time swept away the dirt of injustice which disfigures their houses as well as that of Germany. It is American pressure more than the Unionist good-will which seems to have been responsible for Mr. Lloyd George's proposal to summon a convention to settle the Irish question. It is not a mere coincidence that the Irish proposals should have been made just at the time when Mr. Balfour was carrying on his negotiations for American help in Washington. We can now understand better the references of Mr. Lloyd George and Lord Curzon to the necessity of giving freedom to Ireland if we are to win the war. Lord Curzon made the significant statement that the Government proposals about Ireland were as much a war measure as any act which had been passed........ If this sort of argument is true for Ireland, it is true for India. A united and reconciled India would do much more than Ireland. It would be interesting to know if Dr. Wilson in pointing out the necessity of giving Home Rule to Ireland discussed the need of granting self-government to India if England is to emerge successful out of this war. Perhaps the American President has different categories of judgment when the freedom of an Asiatic country is in question."

Comparison between freedom of speech in South Africa and India.

Kesari (92), 26th June.

25. Referring to the discussion on the republican movement in South Africa in the local Parliament, the Kesari says:—We do not find much in the discussion. The point worth noting is that the question could be moved in the South African Parliament even when the war is raging and Mr. Hertzog and his followers who voted against the resolution and who did not consent to the cessation of the agitation were not interned. It is only in India that there occurs the extraordinary miracle of a man being interned for saying that 4/5th of the Legislative Council members should be elected and that they should control the Executive Council so far as internal affairs are concerned.

Death of Dr. Dadabhai Naoroji.

Mahrátta (4), 1st July.

26. "Dadabhai's name will ever be remembered by Indians as it is indissolubly associated with the political goal of India, viz., self-government or Swarajya. It is he who undauntedly placed that goal before the present generation, and adhered steadfastly to it when some of his pliant followers were wavering to stand by it in times of repression. That ideal has now been ingrained into the minds of the Indians and all honour to the leader who did it.......... Neither smiles nor frowns, neither cruel repression nor kind-seeming concession can impose upon wakeful Self-respect. Home Rule is a matter of Self-respect with the true-born Indian. We do hope that every Congressman and every member of the Moslem League will see his way to enrol himself as a Home Rule Leaguer and stick to the Congress-League scheme as the minimum that India must get soon after the termination of the war."

Rást Goftár (27), 1st July, Eng. cols.

27. Expressing regret for the death of Dr. Dadabhai Naoroji, the Rást Goftár remarks:—"A sincere patriot and a great statesman who laid the foundation of the national movement in India, Mr. Dadabhai has done more than any Indian to advance the cause of his country's good. He dedicated to his life's great mission the devotion of a saint and leaves his name to posterity as the modern Rishi of India. The work which he has accomplished will live for ever in the history of this country and his memory cherished with the love and affection which a people entertain for a great national hero."

Condemnation of the proposal to erect a temple of Shivaji at Poona.

Arya Prakásh (11), 24th June.

28. The Arya Prakásh strongly objects to the deification of Shivaji by a temple being built in his honour at Poona out of a sum of Rs. 15,000 given by a pleader of Nágpur who has appointed Messrs. Tilak and Kelkar as trustees. The paper regards Shivaji a freebooter and suggests that if the people of the Maharashtra hold him in high honour they might either erect a statue in his honour or found scholarships in his name. It adds:—The inspiration of the movement must have come from Mr. Tilak who originated a similar fad in the shape of the Ganpati festival many years ago. We would not be so uncharitable as to suggest that Mr. Tilak has started the movement of deifying Shivaji so that he might one day come to be similarly treated, though his enemies will not place any other interpretation upon the matter. Idolatry is a superstition and the temple in course of time is sure to fall into disuse as happened in the case of the temple of Wanraj Chawada. We hope the trustees will find out some better way of utilising the money.

Comments on decision of the Government of India accepting the principle involved in the Honourable Mr. V. J. Patel's Bill for the conditional introduction of free and compulsory education within municipal areas in the Bombay Presidency.

Bombay Samáchár (53), 28th June; Hindusthán (16), 27th June; Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 27th June.

29. The Bombay Samáchár greatly rejoices at the announcement of Government of India to the effect that they have no objection to the principle involved in the Bill drafted by the Honourable V. J. Patel, under which it is proposed to authorise Municipalities in the Presidency to introduce, under certain conditions, free and compulsory primary education within their respective local areas. It regards this as a welcome decision on the part of Government and hopes that it will be appreciated not only by the people of this Presidency, but by the whole of the Indian public. The paper wishes that the Bill may at once be taken in hand in the local Legislative Council for the first reading and might be passed during the régime of His Excellency Lord Willingdon. It remarks that municipal bodies in other parts of the country should at once come forward to take the benefit of the decision of the Government of India in this connection. [According to the Hindusthán every Indian will be filled with joy at this decision of the Government of India. It at the same time expresses its dissatisfaction at the work thus far done by Government in the field of education and remarks that not only have Government efforts in the direction of the spread of education not kept pace with the steadily increasing efforts made by private individuals and bodies, but in some cases there has been retrogression on the part of Government. The paper inquires if the Government of India will see their way to applying the principle involved in the system of free and compulsory primary education to the whole of India since they have accepted it so far as the Bombay Presidency is concerned. The Praja Mitra and Pársi also expresses its gratification at the decision of Government. It attributes the great illiteracy of the Indian masses to the apathy of Government in the past towards the demands made by the people for the spread of education on a larger scale and remarks that those who adversely criticise India's fitness for swarájya on the ground of the ignorance of the people are themselves responsible for the perpetuation of such a condition of things.]

There are a lot of officers in civil employ in India who could be released for service at the Front.

Sind Observer (9), 1st June.

30. "The absurd allegations that members of the Indian Civil Services are shirking military service have again been revived in England, and Mr. Chamberlain's notice was drawn to these unmerited aspersions on men whom Government will not permit to take up military duty. It is of course ridiculous to attack these men, as Mr. Chamberlain pointed out in his spirited defence of the services but we think Government are in a measure to blame for retaining more officers than necessary. For instance, the Public Works Department can surely spare some men now that work has been reduced considerably. People in England and out here looking at the long list of officials whom Government keeps in civil employ when the army is calling out for more officers naturally conclude that it is due to the officers themselves that they do not respond. Too much attention appears to be bestowed on civilians and little regard to the number of military officers, many of them young and active, who are kept by the Army Department in appointments in the Censor's office and similar billets which could be equally well and perhaps better filled by superannuated servants of Government. If the Civil Services need combing, we believe the Military Departments require the same process more."

Comments on Report of the Mesopotamia Commission.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 30th June, Eng. cols.; Sánj Vartamán (28), 29th June.

31. Commenting upon Reuter's summary of the Mesopotamia Commission's Report, the Praja Mitra and Pársi remarks:—"As it is, Mr. Bonar Law has stated in the House of Commons that it was obviously the Government's duty to take immediate action regarding those specially accused of culpability.......... We presume that some of those who constituted the War Committee then are still members of the Government, Mr. Lloyd George for one. Mr. Austen Chamberlain is still Secretary of State for India. We are afraid it will not be quite easy or pleasant for Government to take 'immediate action' regarding all those 'specially accused of culpability.'......... The Commissioners find that the division of responsibility between the India Office and the Indian Government in connexion with it was unworkable. As a matter of fact, this division of authority and responsibility between the India Office and Simla is answerable for not a few errors in the general administration of India; and it is not bad that the unworkableness of the system has been so emphatically demonstrated in this conspicuous case.......... Of those mentioned here as primarily responsible, all, except Mr. Chamberlain, have now vacated the offices they held.......... So, perhaps, in spite of Mr. Bonar Law's threat, we should not be surprised if the Report arouses merely academic interest in the Parliament and the country." [The Sánj Vartamán remarks:—This Report of the Mesopotamia Commission exposes grave defects in the Military administration of the Government of India. The fact that such grave defects do exist owes its existence to the practice of vesting all authority in the hands of the official class. In order to put an end to this system, official administration should be made responsible to the public opinion.]

The situation in Russia.

New Times (new), 15th June.

32. It seems the Provisional Government in Russia has still very serious obstacles to face. The Council of Soldiers and Worksmen's Committee at Kronstadt and Reval have revolted and declared the independence of their Government. The main workers for the revolution originally desired merely a constitutional monarchy, but as the irony of fate would have it Russia is tending to a state of anarchy. The hope that the conservative influence in the new Government of Russia would be powerful, has been blasted and we are face to face with a new internal rebellion which requires a mighty hand to put it down. The Provincial Government requires the help of the army in putting down the two centres and one of the most unfortunate incidents in the Russian Revolution has been the disorder in the army. Kronstadt is a strong fortress and a great naval base and will afford facilites to the mutineers to hold out and defy. And if this centre presists in its defiance it might rouse others to revolt. This creates a serious situation which will not only absorb the engergies of Russia but will seriously engage the attention of the Allies. If the present situation in Russia continues it may prove to be a bar to an early victory."

Comments on the proposed public movement for securing an extension of the term of His Excellency Lord Willingdon.

Hindusthán (16), 28th June; Pársi Sansár (23), 2nd June.

33. The Hindusthán approves of the resolution passed at a meeting recently held at Bombay in the local Municipal Hall urging the postponement, at present, of the consideration of the subject of the extension of His Excellency Lord Willingdon's term of office as Governor of Bombay. It remarks that such a movement creates a bad precedent and that, every Governor being in a position to make friends in small or large numbers, if Lord Willingdon's term of office were sought to be extended now, a similar demand would be made in the future for another Governor by those making up his obsequious following. The paper observes that His Excellency's attitude in connection with certain political matters has proved to be unpopular and that His Excellency himself would be placed in an awkward situation if a counter movement were made by those who disapprove of the present movement for extension. It wishes that a curtain would now be dropped over the matter and remarks that His Excellency must now be exclaiming "save me from my friends". [The Pársi Sansár, on the contrary, dwells on Their Excellencies' solicitude for the welfare of the people in public matters and remarks that there cannot be two opinions on a subject like the extension of the term of office of a sympathetic Governor like Lord Willingdon. It, however, observes that His Excellency's constant appeal to the people not to discuss political matters during the continuance of the war has created disappointment among the public. It winds up with remarking that if His Excellency, who has won the hearts of the people of the Bombay Presidency, had encouraged political movements he would have been adored by the public.]

Young India (10), 27th June.

34. "A meeting of certain 'leading citizens' of Bombay has been called for to-day at the Corporation Hall. We feel we must protest strongly against this new move on the part of certain clannish people who no longer command the public confidence or its loyal adherence. Satisfactory or unsatisfactory, Lord Willingdon's regimé is fast drawing to a close and it is advisable His Lordship should leave these shores before the star of his glory as an administrator sets down completely and when he has still left some friends and admirers to count upon. We understand an influentially signed protest is to be presented to the Chairman of to-day's meeting.... .... We have previously commented on Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy's suggestion regarding the extension of Lord Willingdon's term of office."

Message (5), 28th June 1917.

35. "The coldness of feeling with which Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy's suggestion regarding the extension of Lord Willingdon's term of office was received by the public ought to have made that gentleman think long and deep before he again attempted to bring about a meeting today of some so-called 'leading' citizens. We suppose Sir Jamsetjee regards only those who frequently dance their attendance at the Government House or on high-placed officials as the leading lights of the City of Bombay, and at such a solemn meeting these wiseacres of the city will be resolving upon obtaining for Lord Willingdon an extension of his term of office. Whatever one's own feelings may be towards His Excellency, there is no manner of doubt that the whole Presidency views with disapprobation his administration. Far from being a success, we must frankly confess that that administration has been more a failure than a success. To say this is not, we hope, to throw a damper on His Excellency's enthusiasm for varied social service. From a social point of view there is no doubt that Lord Willingdon's tenure at the Government House has been an unprecedented success. But that alone does not justify a movement of this kind."

Comments on the new appointments of Indian members to the India Council.

Message (5), 28th June.

36. "The new nominations to the India Council should serve as sufficient eye-openers to the public.......... The number of Indians is now increased to three. But how will it help the course of political progress in India? It is an essential part of the popular demand that this irresponsible council of timeworn autocrats and bureaucrats, which now acts as a dead weight, should once for all be given the go by and the Indian Secretary placed on the same footing as the Colonial Secretary in England. In spite of that, throwing a crumb here, throwing a crumb there, is to be strongly discountenanced if it is to serve the purpose of silencing political agitation in this country. At any rate the time is now gone when people can regard this as a substantial advance towards the goal of India's political aspirations. On the other hand, there is a strong suspicion that the object underlying the new nominations is to draw off from the side of Indian nationalism the timid, unwary or time-serving patriots and thus weaken the cause of Indian agitation. In our own opinion, it is a mistake to regard the present nominations as an earnest of greater constitutional changes at the close of the war. We have outlived the stage of tinkering with our political hopes by this sort of timid, half-hearted concession."

Dnyán Prakásh (34), 28th June; Indu Prakásh (35), 27th June; Mantri (new), 28th June.

37. It is an agreeable surprise that the Secretary of State has decided to appoint an additional Indian member on his Council. Mr. Chamberlain could not have found a man better acquainted with India's aspirations than the Honourable Mr. Basu. Indeed, his appointment is a triumph of the Indian National Congress. We are constrained to say, however, that he should not have accepted the post as he would have been of more use to the people at this time. As a member of the India Council he will not be able to do for India a tithe of what he could have done as an Indian leader. He will no doubt do as much good to India as an Indian member can possibly do. He suffers pecuniarily also by accepting the post. The appointment of Sir Prabhashankar Pattani will help to curb somewhat the reactionary policy of the India Office. [The Indu Prakásh remarks:—Whether the India Council should continue to exist and whether its expenses should be borne by India are important questions. The Congress has rightly been contending that the expenses of the India Office are unreasonably thrown on India. However, so long as the Council exists it is desirable that it should include Indians. But instead of Government appointing them they should be elected by the people. The Mantri connects the Honourable Mr. Basu's appointment with the postponement of the Congress deputation to England which was to include him and insinuates that the remuneration attached to the post induced Mr. Basu to accept it.]

Gujaráti (12), 1st July, Eng. cols.

38. "We have no doubt that the nominations announced this week will be received with wide-spread approval in the country. That approval casts heavy responsibilities upon the Honourable Sir Prabhashankar Pattani and the Honourable Mr. Bhupendranath Basu in view of the momentous problems in the settlement of which they will be called upon to assist. What their countrymen expect from them is courage and independence, candour and outspokenness and a full appreciation of the forces and influences that have been stirring the country. The fossilised members of the India Council require to be galvanised into new life and activity. That is not an easy operation to perform, but that is what India expects the three nominees to achieve.......... We would have been more glad if Sir Prabhashankár Pattani, the Honourable Mr. Bhupendranath and Mr. Aftab Ahmed Khan had been elected on the India Council by the elected members of the Indian Councils, and we feel they themselves would have cordially welcomed such a distinguished status and such an honour at the hands of their countrymen."

Bombay Samáchár (53), 29th June; Praja Mitra and Pársi (25), 27th and 29th June; Jám-e-Jamshed (19), 27th and 30th June; Indian Loyalist (18), 28th June; Hindusthán (16), 27th June; Kaiser-i-Hind* (20), 1st July, Eng. cols.

39. Expressing its appreciation of the India Council appointments, the Bombay Samáchár writes:—Mr. Basu is popular throughout India. He has rendered valuable services to India as a Congress leader. Mr. Chamberlain should be considered fortunate in having secured the services of such a popular leader on the India Council. We feel sure Mr. Basu will be able to throw new light on many problems dealt with in the India Office. Sir Prabhashankar Pattani's appointment will be equally welcome to the Indian public. He has risen from a petty school master to a high position by the sheer force of his abilities. He is remembered as a capable Dewan in the Bhávnagar State. The three Indian gentlemen in the India Council will be of great use to the Secretary of State for India in giving India its proper place and status in the re-organisation of the Empire after the termination of the war. [The Praja Mitra and Pársi thanks the Secretary of State for increasing the number of Indians on the India Council to three and believes it to be a good augury for the political reforms that will soon be introduced in India. It is satisfied with the three gentlemen appointed and trusts that their appointment will not fail to give satisfaction to the Congress and the Moslem League and the Native States as each one will now have a representative of their own on the India Council. In a subsequent issue the paper says that nominees to the India Council should be Congressmen or members of the Moslem League or men having administrative experience in Native States and that they should be appointed after being approved of by a large majority of non-official members of the Viceregal Legislative Council. The Jám-e-Jamshed, while approving of the new appointments to the India Council, suggests that non-official members of the Legislative Council should be given the right of electing at least two condidates for seats in the India Council. It is of opinion that the India Office should be reorganised on the lines suggested by the Bombay Provincial Congress Committee. In a subsequent issue it declares that the Times is wrong in thinking that unrest in India will be quelled by the additional appointment of an Indian to the India Council. It is of opinion that early steps should be taken to remove the ignorance prevailing in England about India. The Indian Loyalist expresses approval of the appointment of Mr. Basu and Sir Prabhashankar. The Hindusthán writes :—It can scarcely be hoped that Sir Prabhashankar will raise his voice in the India Council as a true representative of India. He has done nothing notable as a member of the Executive or Legislative Council of Bombay or in the Viceregal Legislative Council. It must, however, be said that Mr. Basu's appointment will be hailed with delight by the Indian public. We hope men of Mr. Basu's type will always be appointed to the India Council.] [The Kaiser-i-Hind writes :—" Mr. Pattani, who made Kathiawar a model state and who acted as executive member of the Government of Bombay for some time is sure to prove a very valuable addition to the Council. Mr. Basu who is a staunch Congressman is an Indian patriot of the first magnitude.......... We are sure that Mr. Pattani and Mr. Basu will prove themselves worthy of the selection made by the Secretary of State."]

Treatment of Indians in South Africa.
Mahratta* (4), 1st July; Indian Social Reformer* (2), 2nd July; Kesari (92), 26th June.

40. In an article headed " the European Brute " the Mahratta says :—" Indian Opinion of the 11th May has the following : ' On the 30th ultimo a young Indian gentleman of education was travelling on a Johannesburg tram-car when a European who resented his appearance there, threw him off the car, while it was in motion, and the poor fellow was left in the road unconscious, the car going on, and died without regaining consciousness. The individual responsible for this act of brutaliy remained at large, and the community is going to know no rest until he is brought to justice.' What shall we say of this exhibition of racial feeling ?......... It would be interesting to know exactly the number of those who looked on in a let-alone spirit while the cowardly deed was being done. In any case, the news of this crime cannot engender in the Indian mind any love for the tribe to which the perpetrator belongs." [The Indian Social Reformer writes :—" We referred in the last issue to the sad case of an Indian who was violently pushed out of a tram-car by a European, and died from the effects of the fall. We should like to have a very small fraction of the admiration expressed by General Smuts of the conduct of Indian troops under him, translated into practice in the attitude of South African white men towards the countrymen of these gallant men." The Kesari remarks :—The white person who performed such a heroic deed was not even arrested ; let alone the question of punishment for his sin. Indians in South Africa are greatly excited by the incident. So long as brutes, who recklessly kill their brother-subjects of the same Empire, go unpunished and move freely in society, what right have we to blame Germans who commit outrages ?]

Alleged grossly insulting behaviour of a policeman towards Mr. Lele (of Wái) during a religious meeting.

Vrittasár (108), 25th June.

41. The Vrittasár publishes the complaint made by Mr. Kashinath Waman Lele of Wái to the District Superintendent of Police, Sátára, to the following effect:—On the 21st of June I was discoursing on a religious subject on the verandah of a temple. One of my hearers who was listening to me for a long time suddenly asked me to stop and on my inquiring who he was he informed me that he was a policeman. I desired him to show me the order prohibiting a purely religious speech. At this the man became excited and threw his shoe at me and defied me to prosecute him. I have subsequently learnt that the name of this man is Mahadik. I request you to inquire into this matter and take suitable notice of this man's conduct.

Comments on the case filed by Mr. Durgadas B. Advani against two railway officials at Karáchi.

New Times (new), 15th June.

42. Commenting upon the Magistrate's judgment in the case filed by Mr. Durgadas B. Advani against two railway officials at Karáchi, the New Times writes:—"The treatment of Indian passengers is generally so scandalous and disgraceful to the Railway administration that there is a strong necessity for starting a society for the prevention of cruelty to passengers. The Magistrate's argument about the vexatious and frivolous character of the case is too ingenious to be convincing. Because the highest judicial authority in the land has given an unsatisfactory judgment on a point of law, therefore any subsequent bonâ fide attempt to get it quashed or modified is frivolous and vexatious.......... Is the learned Magistrate quite sure that the Judicial Commissioner's Court is not in an altered frame of mind as a result of a new attitude towards Indians during the war? Cannot a court go back on its own previous judgment? How can a complaint about a wrong which Indians feel as the sign of an alien Government, the symbol of racial humiliation as degrading as the infamous Indentured System and which stirs our deepest resentment and acts as an obstacle to all good relations between the two races whom Providence has brought together for an unknown destiny, how can such a complaint be termed frivolous and vexatious, is what we fail to see.......... The magistrate calls Indians who resent this differential treatment 'stiff-necked politicians', but we prefer to call them self-respecting gentlemen who have the honour of the country at heart. Unworthy motives have been attributed by a local paper and the public prosecutor to Mr. Durgadas in filing this prosecution, but the insinuations are too contemptible to engage our attention. The magistrate's question whether Mr. Durgadas was ashamed to hear his learned judgment, reported in a previous issue, is highly objectionable.......... Mr. Durgadas has done a public service the value of which cannot be over-estimated. It is possible he will fail; but the moral victory will be his.......... Let there be a few more attempts like those of Mr. Durgadas and the fate of the reserved intermediate compartment for Europeans will also be sealed."

Comments on the conviction of two school-masters of Karáchi for refusing to have their children vaccinated.

Message (5), 26th June.

43. Commenting on the conviction of two school-masters at Karáchi for refusing to have their children vaccinated, the Message writes:—"We congratulate Mr. Tarachand, Head Master of the Karáchi New High School, and his Assistant for standing up boldly for their conscience and subjecting themselves to penalties.......... We have nothing to say against the action of the Magistrate himself, who has disposed of the law according to his lights. But we do enter our emphatic protest against a law which makes such things possible. After all, even in European countries where vaccination was first discovered, people have no implicit faith in it and their conscience is respected. Why should it be different in this country alone? The Indian, particularly the Hindu, looks with horror and repugnance on vaccination because in the first place it violates the first principle of the Hindus, Ahimsa, and, secondly, on physiological grounds vaccination is not a panacea against small-box."

Appeal to Government and the Bombay Haj Committee to arrange to provide the few steamers necessary for the Haj traffic this year.

Sind Moslem (new), 16th June.

44. In the course of a lengthy article, the Sind Moslem quotes the communique of the Bombay Haj Committee regarding the advisability of postponing this year's Haj. It dwells on the obligatory character of the pilgrimage and after giving the personnel of the Haj Committee remarks:—"We believe many of those gentlemen (who are all Justices of the Peace and who are all residents of Bombay) may not be unaware of the fact that the Haj is compulsory on all those Muhammadans who are able to go, and that Moslems are ordained to go there even on 'foot' and 'lean camel', and therefore great care is to be taken before giving them advice to postpone their going to the Haj. Our contemporary the Hamdam of Lucknow has rightly remarked that 'many staunch followers of Islam, taking life to be untrustworthy, would consider the Haj to be compulsory on them this year and would not care for any hardships that would come in their way'. The members of the Haj Committee may not be unaware of another fact also, that last year only 2,430 pilgrims could proceed to Haj, whereas in the year 1909 not less than 27,000 pilgrims left the port of Bombay for performing the sacred ceremony. And we believe the number of the pilgrims this year too would be very small. For such a small number only two steamers would suffice. It is, therefore, a matter of regret that a Committee consisting of so many influential Muhammadans (all Justices of the Peace) cannot arrange to procure even two steamers from the shipping companies to which the pilgrim traffic has been a paying concern since years past.......... We are indeed grateful to the Government of India who 'have been considering the arrangements' for the forthcoming pilgrimage to Mecca, as will appear from an Associated Press telegram dated Simla, June 5th, published elsewhere. We learn that 'it will only be possible to arrange this year for a very reduced pilgrim traffic'. As we have expressed above, the number of the intending pilgrims will surely be within the 'narrowest limits' this year too, and it will not be impossible for the Government of India to obtain the required steamers for the purpose. We, therefore, request the Government of India in the interest of both the pilgrims and Government, to issue orders to the Haj Committee, Bombay, to procure the required steamers and earn an everlasting bliss."

The Sind Muhammadans are not so badly treated in the matter of Government service as has been made out by the Sind Moslem.

Sind Advocate (7), 31st May.

45. Replying to the complaints about favouritism shown to Hindus in Government service in Sind and the hard lot of Muhammadans, the Sind Advocate writes:—"Equally bold and imaginative are our contemporary's statements of about 'One Muhammadan amongst forty Hindus' in Government offices, and the few Muhammadans who do get in being victims of persecutions. Because a particular individual has had to resign—he may be a crank for aught we know—therefore Muhammadans are in general being hunted out of the service as if there are not any more Hindus being dismissed or otherwise ejected. As a matter of fact, taking Sind as a whole, there are more Muhammadans now in the Public Service than have a right to be there, and persecution? No! No! On the contrary incompetent and lazy Muhammadans have to be tolerated and humoured and dicated (sic) by Hindu officers because the higher officials are too much disposed to patronise Muhammadans. Let the Sind Moslem try and study things a bit and let it try and ascertain facts impartially and not take the mere word of an individual, an aggrieved, perhaps guilty, individual here and there."

MUNICIPALITIES.

The reform of the Bombay Municipal Corporation.

Rást Goftár (27), 1st July, Eng. cols.

46. Writing with approval of the success of Dr. Sukhia's resolution in the Municipal Corporation about the reform of the Bombay Municipality, the Rást Goftár remarks:—"The seats usurped by the Justices must now go to the rate-payers, and the city must keep itself abreast of the times. Bombay has lagged behind the District Municipalities with their right to two-thirds of their bodies being constituted out of elective members.......... The constitution of the Corporation must, therefore, be overhauled and the reform accompanied with the total extinction of the Justices' right to a distinct electorate. The Justices must thank themselves for hastening events to that end. They have formed themselves into caucuses of late years and with the aid and support which they have never lacked from the nominees of Government they have in the last few years often carried things in their own way. Whenever elections of any importance occur within the Corporation the caucus manifests its baneful activities and over-rides the independent part of the House. Such things cannot be tolerated any longer, and the Justices must now be dispossessed of their long exercised right to special election and separate franchise."

Sánj Vartamán (28), 26th June; Bombay Samáchár (53), 25th June.

47. Alluding to the resolution passed in the Bombay Municipal Corporation referring the consideration of the question of the reconstitution of the Municipality to the Election Committee of the Corporation, the Sánj Vartamán dwells upon the undesirable condition of things obtaining in that body as a result of the caucus existing therein. It remarks that the caucus is responsible for intelligent and capable members being debarred from the presidentship and enables persons with scarcely two years' municipal experience to be pitchforked as Chairmen of the Standing Committee. The paper seriously doubts if the Bombay Municipality can lay claim to be the premier institution of its kind in India regard being had to the way in which resolutions are passed or rejected in accordance with signs made in municipal meetings. It is of opinion that local self-government will degenerate into a ridiculous farce within a decade if matters continue in the Corporation in their present state. As a means to remedy the existing condition of things it suggests that election by the J. P.'s should be done away with and the present number of members, which is 72 and which is inadequate for a population of 10 lakhs, should be increased to 100 to be elected wholly by the public. [The Bombay Samáchár regards as anomalous the present system of municipal elections which permits landlords paying taxes up to a particular minimum limit the exercise of the municipal franchise while it debars from that right tenants paying rent on a scale higher than that minimum limit. It also does not favour the system of election by the Justices of the Peace and advocates the extension of direct representation of the people in the Corporation.]

Alleged Municipal neglect at Shikárpur (Sind) in connection with fires.
New Times (new), 14th June.

48. "So many fires break out in Shikárpur and on every occasion such a scandalous mismanagement is shown in extinguishing them, that one would think that the Municipality had a secret design of burning down the whole city with a view to confer on it the blessing of new and clean houses which was supposed to be conferred by the Great Fire on London. Not a single year passes without a great fire breaking out, the disastrous effects of which are always enhanced by the negligence of the Municipality. A fire in the uninsured houses of Shikárpur brings ruin and desolation to their occupants. In the recent fire it is said that the acting Chief Officer and nearly all the Municipal Councillors either did not turn up or appeared only in time to see the work of extinguishing the fire finished."

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 5th July 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

O [illegible]
re[illegible]
ress, [illegible]
een [illegible]

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 27 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 7th July 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British Rule:

Alleged evil effects of the present policy of Government against Home Rule on the public mind . . . . 2 & 3
Alleged use of disrespectful language in connection with the Prophet Muhammad in a certain Gujaráti almanac 35
Appeal to the Bombay Government not to prevent students from serving as volunteers at the Congress and the League and at Conferences 25
Comments on Mr. Chamberlain's opinion about Mrs. Besant's Home Rule movement . . . . 16 & 17
Comments on the alleged absence of Europeans in the funeral procession of the late Dr. Dadabhai Naoroji 32
Comments on the extension of terms of Their Excellencies the Governors of Bombay and Madras . . . . 28—31
Comments on the internment of Mrs. Besant . . . . . . 11—13
Comments on the order of the Punjáb Government prohibiting the publication of accounts of a public meeting at Láhore . . . 18 & 19
Comments on the orders of the Chief Commissioner of Delhi prohibiting protest meetings against the internment of Mrs. Besant . 20
Comparison between the activities of General Hertzog and Mrs. Besant 14
Condemnation of certain Home Rulers for advocating boycott against English goods, without consulting other Indian leaders 8
Condemnation of the agitation of the Home Ruler party 6
Controversy about the application of the term mlechcha to Muhammadans 34
Criticism of the working of the Defence of India Act 21
Death of Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji 33
England's policy in Ireland and India contrasted 5
Government and protest meetings against Mrs. Besant's internment . 15
Government's duty in the present political situation 4
Government's own educational policy is influenced by politics . . 26
How would Muhammadans fare if India obtained Home Rule? . . . 10
Indians are more fitted for Swardjya than Arabs, Turks and Afghans . 1
Suggestion that Mrs. Besant should be elected president of the next Indian National Congress . . . . 22—24
The evil effects of separate representation granted to the Muhammadans 27

H 130—a CON

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

British Rule—concluded—
- The loyalty of educated Indians is greatly strained by the repressive measures of the authorities . . . 7
- The Swadeshi vow . . . 9.

Forest Department: Complaints about insufficiency of fuel at Bhatkal (Kárwár) . . . 56
Honours List: The Birthday — and Bombay Muhammadans . . . 54
India Council: Comments on the new appointments to the — . . . 45—47

Indians in the Colonies:
- Comments on the Draft Local Government Ordinance of the Natal Government . . . 52
- Comments on the reported death of an Indian in South Africa by being thrown out of a tram-car by a European . . . 51

Passport: Suggestion that Pardanashin ladies should be exempted from the obligation to attach copies of their photographs to applications for — . . . 50
Police: Alleged insult to His Highness the Maharaja of Bikanir by a — officer in Bombay . . . 53

Press Act:
- Comments on the security taken from the Hindu Missionary newspaper . . . 49
- Comments on the security taken from the New Times of Karáchi . . . 48

Public Works Department: Alleged dilapidated condition of the road between Kasarkod and Bhatkal (Kárwár) . . . 55
Sind: The — College principalship . . . 58
Vaccination: Alleged inconsistency of Government in dealing with people who have conscientions objections to — . . . 57

War:
- Comments on a recent speech of General Smuts . . . 36
- Comments on the Mesopotamia Commission's Report . . . 37 & 38
- Complaint about the tender treatment accorded to interned Germans at Belgaum . . . 44
- Complaint that subjects of Native States are refused admission in the Indian Defence Force . . . 40
- Frauds in the Supply and Transport Corps . . . 39
- Japan and the — . . . 42
- Retraction by the Islámic Mail of its opinion that Anglo-Indians were unwilling to fight for their country . . . 41
- The situation in Russia . . . 43

MUNICIPALITIES—

Bombay: Comments on the intention of the — City Improvement Trust to take in hand the improvement of slums . . . 59

NATIVE STATES—

Baroda: Complaint that a likeness of the Prophet Muhammad at Kamati Bág, —, is injuring the feelings of the Muhammadans . . . 60

LIST OF NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS.

(As it stood on the 1st July 1917.)

No.	Name of Publication.	Where Published.	Edition.	Name, caste and age of Editor.	Circulation.
	ENGLISH.
1	Bombay East Indian	Bombay	Weekly	J. L. Britt ; East Indian ; 70	300
2	Commercial Gazette	Sukkur	Do.	Abdul Aziz Shaikh Mahomed Suleman ; Muhammadan ; 41.	200
3	Indian Social Reformer	Bombay	Do.	Kámákshi Natarájan, B.A. ; Hindu (Madrási Bráhmin) ; 46.	525
4	Islámic Mail	Do.	Do.	Saiyad Mohomed Abdulla Khan ; Muhammadan (Sunni) ; 33.	1,500
5	Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	Narsinh Chintaman Kelkar, B.A., LL.B. ; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman) ; 44.	700
6	Message	Bombay	Daily	Achyut Balwant Kolhatkar, B.A., LL.B. ; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman) ; 38.	2,000
7	New Times	Karáchi	Do.	Tikamdas Khemchand Jeswani, M.A. ; Hindu (Lohána) ; 23.	400
8	Phœnix	Do.	Bi-weekly	Jáffar Faddu ; Muhammadan (Khoja) ; 63	425
9	Sind Advocate	Sukkur	Weekly	Pribhdas Kodanmal Gogia, Hindu ; 42	500
10	Sind Journal	Hyderabad	Do.	Karamchand Gurumukhsing Mirchandani ; 35.	500
11	Sind Moslem	Sukkur	Do.	Abdul Aziz Sheikh Mahomed Suleman ; Muhammadan ; 41.	800
12	Sind Observer	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	J. Leonard ; Anglo-Indian ; 50	375
13	Sunday Tatler	Bombay	Weekly	C. S. Menon ; Hindu ; 60.	1,000
14	Young India	Do.	Do.	Jamnadas Dwarkadas Dharamsi ; Hindu (Bhátia) ; 27.	750
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
15	A'ryă Prakásh	Baroda	Weekly	Motilál Tribhovandás, B.A., LL.B. ; Hindu (Bania) ; 46.	1,000
16	Gujaráti	Bombay	Do.	Manilál Ichchhárám Desái ; Hindu (Bania) ; 34.	16,000
17	Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	Uttamram Umedram Reshamwala ; Hindu (Deolad Bania) ; 41.	1,200
18	Gujaráti Punch	Ahmedabad	Do.	Somálál Mangaldás Sháh ; Hindu (Mesri Bania) ; 40.	3,600
19	Hindi Punch	Bombay	Do.	Burjorji Navroji Apakhtyár ; Pársi ; 59	550
20	Hindusthán	Do.	Do.	Ratanlál Atmárám Sháh ; Modh Bania ; 36.	1,500
21	Hindusthán and Akhbár-e-Soudágar.	Do.	Daily	Do. do.	2,000
22	Indian Loyalist	Wadhwán	Weekly	Ganeshji Jethábhái ; Hindu (Khatri) ; 64	575
23	Jám-e-Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	Phirozsháh Jehángir Marzbán, M.A., Pársi ; 41.	5,000
24	Kaiser-i-Hind	Do.	Weekly	Erachshaw Rustomji Hirji Behedin ; Pársi ; 34.	5,000
25	Káthiáwár Times	Rájkot	Bi-weekly	Trikamji Govindji Kotak ; Hindu (Lohána) ; 37.	800
26	Pársi-Sansár	Karáchi	Weekly	Rustomji Kharsedji Sidhwa ; Pársi ; 32	500
27	Praja Bandhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	Jagjivandas S. Trivedi ; Hindu (Shrimáli Bráhman) ; 38.	2,700
28	Praja Mitra and Pársi	Bombay	Daily	Mihirjibhai Palanji Madon ; Pársi ; 57	3,000
29	Praja Mitra and Pársi	Do.	Weekly	Do. do.	1,700

No.	Name of Publication.	Where Published.	Edition.	Name, caste and age of Editor.	Circulation.
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI—concluded.
30	Rást Goftár	Bombay	Weekly	Dhanjibhái Jiváji Dhondi ; Pársi ; 48	825
31	Sánj Vartamán	Do.	Daily	Rustamji N. Vátcha-Gándhi ; Pársi ; 51	7,000
32	Suryá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly	Nagindás Dáyábhái ; Hindu (Nágar Bania) ; 71.	550
	ANGLO-KANARESE.
33	Chandrodayá	Dhárwár	Weekly	G. H. Honnapurmath ; Hindu (Lingáyat); 47.	475
	ENGLISH, KANARESE AND MARA'THI.
34	Kanara News	Kumta (Kanara)	Fortnightly	Krishna Keshav Shenvi ; Hindu (Goud Sáraswat Brahmin); 46.	400
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
35	Dnyánodayá	Bombay	Weekly	Alden Hyde Clark ; Christain ; 38	550
36	Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Daily	Gopál Krishna Deodhar, M.A. ; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman) ; 45.	3,000
37	Dnyán Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	Do. do.	4,000
38	Hindu Missionary	Bombay	Do.	Gajanan Bhaskar Vaidya, B.A. ; Pátháre Prabhu ; 48.	100
39	Indu Prakásh	Do.	Daily	Dámodar Sávalárám Yande ; Hindu ; (Marátha); 55.	2,000
40	Pragati and Jinvijay	Belgaum	Fortnightly	Anna Babaji Latthe ; Jain ; 31.	300
41	Shetkari	Ahmednagar	Weekly	Ganesh Krishná Chitale, B.A., LL.B. ; Hindu (Chitpáwan Brahman) ; 48.	200
42	Subodh Patrika	Bombay	Do.	Dwárkánáth G. Vaidya ; Hindu (Goldsmith) ; 41.	500
	ANGLO-PORTUGUESE.
43	O Anglo-Lusitáno	Bombay	Weekly	Dr. W. F. Pais, L. M. & S. ; Goanese ; 36	1,000
	ANGLO-SINDI.
44	Frontier Gazette	Jacobabad	Weekly	Vishindás Pránjainmal ; Hindu (Bhátia) ; 35.	500
45	Hind Vasi	Hyderabad (Sind)	Daily	Jethmal Parsram ; Hindu ; 40	500
46	Lárkána Gazette	Lárkána	Weekly	Tahilrám Mulchand Tavarmaláni ; Hindu (Amil) ; 28.	700
47	Sindhi	Sukkur	Bi-weekly	Mulchand Bhágchand ; Hindu (Baláni); 39.	1,000
48	Sind Patrika	Lárkána	Weekly	Devsing Shámsing ; Hindu (Amil) ; 30	500
49	Sind Upkárak	Shikárpur	Monthly	Bhai Mohandev Ghanshamdas ; Hindu (Bhátia); 55.	300
50	Sind Vasi	Hyderabad (Sind)	Daily	Vasomal Kishanchand ; 37	725
51	Sookhree	Karáchi	Weekly	Jámatmal Lálchand ; Hindu (Chapráo) ; 44.	500
52	Trade Advertiser	Shikárpur (Sukkur).	Do.	Teckchand Verhamal ; Hindu (Gokláni) ; 45.	800
	ENGLISH, PORTUGUESE AND CONCANIM.
53	A Luz	Bombay	Weekly	Henry Anthony DeSouza ; Portuguese ; 36	500
54	O Amigo do Povo	Do.	Do.	Sebastian Xavier Vaz ; Goanese ; 40	805
55	O Goano	Do.	Do.	M. A. Fernandez ; Goanese ; 44	900

No.	Name of Publication.	Where Published.	Edition.	Name, caste and age of Editor.	Circulation.
	GUJARA'TI.
56	Ákhbár-e-Islám	Bombay	Daily	Kási Ismáil Kási Muhammad Parbundri; Muhammadan; 47.	2,200
57	Baroda Vartamán	Baroda	Weekly	Javerbhái Dádábhái Patel; Hindu (Lewa Pátidár); 47.	1,700
58	Bombay Mazah	Bombay	Do.	Sorab Sheriar Irani; Pársi; 30	500
59	Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	Kaikhusru Mánekji Minocheher-Homji, B.A.; Pársi; 42.	4,200
60	Broach Mitră	Broach	Weekly	Trikamlál Harináth Thákor; Hindu (Brahmă Kshatri); 35.	550
61	Broach Samáchár	Do.	Do.	Jehángirji Ardeshir; Pársi; 38	500
62	Chitramayă Jagat	Poona	Monthly	Tuljáshankar Gawrishankar Yádnik; (Audich Sahasra Bráhman); 35.	900
63	Deshi Mitră	Surat	Weekly	Maganlál Kikábhai; Jain (Visa Shrimáli); 41.	1,300
64	Hind Vijayă	Baroda	Do.	Dáyábhái Kasandás; Hindu (Shráwak Bania); 51.	1,000
65	Hitechhu	Karáchi	Do.	Harilál Válji Thákur; Hindu (Audich Bráhman); 32.	100
66	Islámic News	Amreli (Baroda)	Do.	Abdulla Ismail; Muhammadan (Memon); 36.	550
67	Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Do.	Somachand Panachand; Hindu (Jain Bania); 41.	500
68	Káthiáwár Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Do.	Bhaishankar Chhaganlal; Hindu (Bráhman); 47.	500
69	Loka Mitră	Bombay	Bi-weekly	Kaikhosru Mánekji Minochar-Homji, Pársi; 42.	700
70	Navsári Patrika	Navsári	Weekly	Harivallabhdás Pránjivandás Párekh; Hindu (Bania); 43.	400
71	Political Bhomiyo	Ahmedabad	Do.	Nurkhan Amirkhan; Muhammadan; 62	...
72	Praja Mitră	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	Jaffar Faddu; Muhammadan (Khoja); 63.	375
73	Praja Pokár	Surat	Weekly	Uttamram Umedram Reshamwala; Dásálád Bráhman; 41.	700
74	Shri Sayáji Vijayă	Baroda	Do.	Máneklál Ambárám Doctor; Hindu (Dasha Shrimáli Bania); 39.	4,100
75	Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	Pirozsháh Edalji Patel; Pársi; 42	750
76	Vivechak	Lachhras (Nándod, Rájpipla State).	Monthly	Chaganlal Naranbhai Mesri; Hindu (Bhavsár); 32.	800
	GUJARA'TI AND HINDI.
77	Jain	Bháwnagar	Weekly	Devchand Damji; Hindu (Bania); 31	1,800
	HINDI.
78	Chitramayă Jagat	Poona	Monthly	Rámchandră Vásudeo Joshi; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhman); 30 and Shankar Narahar Joshi; Hindu (Deshasth Brahman); 41.	1,250
79	Jain Mitra	Surat	Weekly	Mulchand Kasandás Kapadia: Jain; 33	1,200
80	Shri Venkateshwar	Bombay	Daily	Pandit Chandulál Mehta; Hindu (Sáraswat Bráhman); 48.	1,000
81	Shri Venkateshwar Samáchár.	Do.	Weekly	Do. do.	10,000

No.	Name of Publication.	Where Published.	Edition.	Name, caste and age of Editor.	Circulation.
	KANARESE.
82	Karnátak Vaibhav ...	Bijápur ...	Weekly ...	G. B. Mannur; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhman); 50.	500
83	Karnátak Vritt and Dhananjayă.	Dhárwár ...	Do. ...	Krishnáji Hanumant Mudvedkar; Hindu (Vaishnav Bráhman); 44.	1,200
84	Lokă Bandhu ...	Do. ...	Do. ...	Gururáo Rághavendră Mamdápur; Hindu (Deshastha Bráhman); 49.	300
85	Raj Hansa ...	Do. ...	Daily ...	M. N. Tembe; (Karháda Bráhman); 34 ...	600
86	Raj Hansa ...	Do. ..	Weekly ...	Do. do. ...	600
87	Rasik Ranjini ...	Gadag (Dhárwár)...	Do. ...	Gaurishankar Rámprasád; Hindu (Kanoja Bráhman); 54.	50
88	Savigara ...	Agdi (Dhárwár) ...	Do. ...	(1) B. P. Kale; Hindu (Chitpávan Bráhmin); 30. (2) R. T. Karpur; Hindu (Deshastha Bráhmin); 35.	500
89	Shubhodaya ...	Dhárwár ...	Do. ...	Vasudevacharya Shrinivasacharya Kerur, Pleader; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhmin); 50.	800
	MARA'THI.
90	Alhad ...	Sátára	Weekly ...	Narayan Hari Apte; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhmin); 28.	1,000
91	Arya Vaibhav ...	Dhulia (West Khándesh).	Do. ...	Tulsidas Govind Joshi; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhmin); 27.	250
92	A'ryávart ...	Do. ...	Do. ...	Shankar Hari Joshi; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhman); 29.	200
93	Bakul ...	Ratnágiri ...	Do. ...	Hari Dharmaráj Gándhi; Hindu (Bania); 40.	400
94	Belgaum Samáchár ...	Belgaum ...	Do ...	Hari Bhikáji Sámant; Hindu (Gaud Sáraswat Bráhman); 55.	230
95	Bhárat Máta ...	Islámpur (Sátára)...	Fortnightly ...	Vishnu Sitárám Athale; Hindu (Karháda Bráhman); 31.	400
96	Chikitsak ...	Belgaum ...	Weekly ...	Abáji Rámchandră Sávant; Hindu (Marátha); 54.	540
97	Chitramayă Jagat ...	Poona ...	Monthly ...	Rámchandră Vásudev Joshi; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhman); 30 and Shankar Narahar Joshi; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhman); 41.	10,000
98	Daily Report ...	Chopda (East Khándesh).	Weekly ...	......	...
99	Din Mitră ...	Somthána (Ahmednagar).	Do. ...	Mukund Ganpat Pátil; Hindu (Máli); 30.	600
100	Dnyán Ságar ...	Kolhápur ...	Do. ...	Vishnu Vithal Mantri; Hindu (Gaud Sáraswat Bráhman); 52.	600
101	Hasya Vinod ...	Bombay ...	Do. ...	Vishwanath Purshottam Pendharkar; Hindu (Karháda Bráhmin); 41.	1,500
102	Jagadádarsh ...	Ahmednagar ...	Do. ...	Káshináth Bahirav Limaye; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman); 66.	200
103	Jagad Vritt ...	Bombay ...	Do. ...	Ramrao Balkrishna Kirtikar; (Pathare Prabhu); 42.	13,000
104	Kalpataru and A'nandvrit.	Sholápur ...	Do. ...	Govind Náráyan Kákade; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhman); 60.	450
105	Karmanuk ...	Poona ...	Do. ...	Hari Náráyan Apte; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman); 49.	3,400
106	Kesari ...	Do. ...	Do. ...	Narsinh Chintáman Kelkar, B.A., LL.B.; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman); 44.	20,000
107	Khándesh Vaibhav ..	Dhulia (West Khándesh)..	Do. ...	Yádav Bálkrishnă Bahálkar; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhman); 51.	500
108	Maháráshtra Vritta ...	Sátára ...	Do. ...	Ramchandra Balwant Bhosle; Hindu (Mahrátta); 33.	200
109	Mantri ...	Bombay ...	Daily ...	Gopal Dajiba Dalvi; Hindu (Mahrátta); 40.	1,000

No.	Name of Publication.	Where Published.	Edition.	Name, caste and age of Editor.	Circulation.
	MARATHI—concluded.
110	Modă Vritt	Wái (Sátára)	Weekly	Dámodar Laxman Lele ; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman) ; 38.	50
111	Mumukshu	Poona	Do.	Lakshman Rámchandră Pángárkar, B.A. ; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhman) ; [illegible]	1,700
112	Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	Rangnáth Vishnu Kále ; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman) ; 37.	300
113	Pancham George Vijay	Belgaum	Do.	Balvant Ramchandra Sohoni ; Hindu (Gaud Sáraswat Bráhman); 33.	1,000
114	Pandhari Mitra	Pandharpur (Sholapur).	Do.	Govind Sakharam Bidkar ; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhmin) ; 55.	100
115	Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon (East Khándesh).	Do.	Náráyan Narsinh Phadnis ; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhman) ; 54.	200
116	Prakásh	Sátára	Do.	Rámchandră Ganesh Soman ; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman) ; 41.	350
117	Sahasrakar	Poona	Do.	Valchand Ramachand Kothari, B.A. ; Jain Humad ; 26.	850
118	Sandesh	Bombay	Daily	Achyut Balwant Kolhatkar, B.A., LL.B ; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhmin) ; 37.	5,000
119	Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Weekly	Krishnáji Hari Limaye ; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman) ; 32.	1,000
120	Shivaji Vijay	Sholápur	Do.	Madvalappa Sangappa Deomule ; Hindu (Lingáyat) ; 32.	700
121	Sholápur Samáchár	Do.	Do.	Vithal Narsáppa Jakkal ; Hindu (Telgu Máli) ; 36.	400
122	Shri Sayáji Vijayă	Bombay	Do.	Dámodar Sávlárám Yande ; Hindu (Marátha) ; 55.	1,500
123	Shri Sháhu	Sátára	Do.	Váman Hari Dhavle ; Hindu (Karháda Bráhman) 36.	300
124	Shubh Suchak	Do.	Do.	Dattátrayă Rámchandră Chitale ; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman) ; 38.	250
125	Udyam Prakásh	Wái (Sátára)	Do.	Vishwanath Dhondi Teli ; Hindu (Teli) ; 30.	50
126	Vaidyak Patrika	Poona	Do.	Mahadev Sakharam Date ; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhmin) ; 38.	500
127	Vichári	Kárwár (Kánara)	Tri-monthly	Shaikh Adam walad Shaikh Abdul Karim ; Muhammadan (Sunni) ; 43.	450
128	Vinod	Belgaum	Fortnightly	Dattátrayă Rámchandră Kulkarni ; Hindu (Gaud Sáraswat Bráhman) ; 28.	200
129	Vrittasár	Wái (Sátára)	Weekly	Purushottam Ganesh Vaidyă ; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman) ; 26.	90
130	Vyápári	Poona	Do.	Nána Dádáji Gund ; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhman) ; 61.	500
131	Wárkari	Pandharpur (Sholápur).	Do.	Vithal Keshav Limaye ; Hindu (Chitpâwan Bráhman) ; 45.	300
	SINDI.
132	A'ftáb-i-Sind	Sukkur	Weekly	Sháms-ud-din walad Muhammad ; Muhammadan (Abro) ; 50.	500
133	Al-Amin	Hyderabad	Do.	Shahnavaz Pirzada, B.A. ; Muhammadan ; 21.	500
134	Al-Haq	Sukkur	Do.	Abdul Aziz Sheikh Mahomed Suleman ; Muhammadan ; 41.	800
135	Bharat Vasi	Hyderabad	Daily	Viruram Vishindas ; Hindu ; 36	400
136	Khairkháh-i-Sind	Lárkhána	Weekly	Gurudinomal Tahilsing ; Hindu (Khatri) ; 44.	250
137	Mirpurkhás Gazette	Mirpurkhás	Do.	Gurudinmal Tahiling ; Hindu (Amil) ; 36...	600

No.	Name of Publication.	Where Published.	Edition.	Name, caste and age of Editor.	Circulation.
	SINDHI—concluded.
138	Musáfir ...	Hyderabad (Sind)...	Weekly ...	Abdul Wahab Khan ; Pathan ...	900
139	Prabhát ...	Do. ...	Tri-weekly ...	Gopaldás Lekhráj Thadani ; Hindu (Amil) ; 29.	550
140	Sind Mail ...	Hyderabad ...	Weekly ...	Parmanand Rijhumal ; Hindu ; 60.	250
141	Sind Sudhár ...	Karáchi ...	Tri-weekly ...	Khánchand Rahumal ; Hindu (Amil) ; 49...	800
	SINDHI, DEV NAGRI AND SANSKRIT.			...
142	Hindu ...	Hyderabad (Sind)...	Weekly ...	Lokram Nainarám ; 28 ...	400
	URDU.
143	Islámic Mail ...	Bombay. ...	Weekly ...	Saiyad Muhammad Abdulla Khán ; Muhammadan (Sunni) ; 38.	1,500
144	Mufid-e-Rozgár ...	......	Do. ...	Hazi Munshi Mahamad Husein ; Muhammadan ; 46.	3,500
145	Muslim Herald ...	Bombay ...	Do. ...	Sheikh Mahamed Yusuf ; Muhammadan (Sunni) ; 38.	1,200

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the margin of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The system of spelling vernacular words followed in the report is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word as Arunodaya or the well-known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

D. The figures giving the circulation or number of copies published of each newspaper and periodical as furnished by the proprietor are not guaranteed as accurate, and in some instances must be regarded with caution.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Indians are more fitted for Swárajya than Arabs, Turks and Afghans.

Shubhodaya (89), 29th June.

1. The great men of England who love liberty and the curious individuals with us, the Anglo-Indians, have expressed many a time their gladness at the progress of democracy in Turkey, Persia and China. Why are they then so suspicious at a time when India is likely to get a portion of that liberty? We no not know the circumstances that are against us. Are we not skilful and wise? Are we lower than the African Boer, the Russian peasant and the half-civilised Persian and Afghan? We are the sons of great men who have taught the world. Yet one year is wanting to make up a century after Marátha rule. Let that go. Are we not receiving education for three generations under British rule? When wild Arabs, uneducated Turks and Afghans selling asafœtida are fit to enjoy liberty without British education are we not fit to enjoy liberty, trained as we are for a century by the British? Did you not affectionately teach us to love liberty? Have we no education? We excel you as barristers and doctors. How many of you will come every year to rule us from England? How many are you put together, Civilians, Barristers, etc. At the most you are five thousand. We have tens of thousands of men more intelligent than you. Can we not conduct Swarájya together? Give us the opportunities to conduct the administration. When we have no conveniences we have extraordinary men like Mr. Basu, Sir Ali Imam and others. Let us admit that few Indians have received political education. But train us with affection. Do not call us henceforward seditious. We shall not say that you try to keep us in dependence for your own good.

Alleged evil effects of the present policy of Government against Home Rule on the public mind.

Chandrodaya (33), 2nd July.

2. British statesmen say that India will get Swarájya by steps. Indians want a definite declaration by Government that India will get Swarájya and the first instalment in the shape of some important rights. When the point of difference is this much only it is surprising and regrettable that Lord Pentland has dubbed the Home Rule movement as seditious and that he has treated Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues as enemies of the Empire. Let Government give the rights demanded by the subjects or refuse them; but it is very unjust to gag their mouths. We do not think that the local and Imperial Governments are justified in getting angry at the Home Rule movement. The Governor of Madras may have intended to suppress the Home Rule movement. The Imperial Government may have ordered him to take measures. But we do not think either Government will succeed in its object. Many Home Rulers have announced their intention of sticking to Home Rule in spite of Government. Some have begun to utter the words swadeshi and boycott again. Some engaged in recruiting men for the Indian Defence Force have stopped their work. People who wanted to pay for the War Loan have paid to the Besant fund. The Partition days are likely to recur. We think the King-Emperor should pacify the people and grant them some important rights as the first instalment of Swarájya.

Gujaráti (16), 1st July.

3. The officials, helped as they are by the law, the police and armed forces, commit a mistake in thinking that the Indians are of weak intellect. Government have spread education in this country and since the people get newspapers to read, how is it possible for them not to institute a comparison between their own condition and that of foreign countries? Must not a series of thoughts be suggesting themselves to them by the action taken by Lord Pentland, the silence of Lord Chelmsford and the support given by Mr. Chamberlain to the action taken by the Government of Madras in connection with Mrs. Besant? Indians are fully aware of what takes place abroad and the opinions expressed on current politics and the political situation in India in other countries; and they are not kept in the dark about the high principles that underlie England's relations with other nations. They know that while Australia has opposed conscription they have not been able to get liberal treatment in the matter of voluntary military service and that while the Irish rebels who were tried and found guilty were set at liberty, in India people are interned without any specific charges being laid against them for taking part in a legitimate movement for raising the status of the country. They know that while Government help Ireland, Canada and Australia to effect their own advancement on the lines of self-help they place impediments in the way of India. Mr. Lloyd George has effected catastrophic changes in England and the Parliament sent congratulatory messages in connection with the triumph of democracy in Russia on the dethronement of the Czar. Is it not strange that the Anglo-Indian papers, who favour the democratisation of Germany, should support the action of Lord Pentland? Why should not Indians be allowed to participate in a perfectly legitimate movement? English statesmen express noble sentiments in praise of the democratic form of government but they want India to be contented with the bureaucratic form of government! Are not the bureaucrats aware that thoughts of liberty and freedom are gaining ground among the people in spite of there being no compulsory education in this country and that these ideas are strengthened by repressive measures like the Press Act and by contact with the thoughts of other nations? The current of public opinion should not be stopped by repressive measures, but it should be educated and properly directed by sympathy. A current well directed helps agriculture, but a wild current rushes onward by demolishing barriers in its way.

Government's duty in the present political situation.

Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 1st July; Gujarâti Punch (18), 1st July.

4. The meetings that are being held throughout the length and breadth of this country to protest against the internment of Mrs. Besant and her two associates go to prove that the discontent and unrest caused by the indiscreet order of the Madras Government are on the increase. The continuance of such a state of affairs is not desirable in the interests of good government and the prestige of the official classes. We hope the rumours about the impending internment of other advocates of Home Rule will prove to be false. The adoption of a policy of repression at a time when India has proved her loyalty to the Empire can never be considered as farsighted. The reply given by the Secretary of State for India in the matter of Mrs. Besant's internment seems to have been based on one-sided reports. [The Gujarâti Punch deprecates the internment of Mrs. Besant and believes that the reply given by the Secretary of State in Parliament would tend to increase the gloom already cast on the outlook of Indian politics. It adds:—It is quite clear that the Home Rule movement cannot be suppressed. The people of India are prepared to resort to passive resistance to secure Swarâjya within the Empire. We would ask His Excellency Lord Chelmsford to take care to see that the Provincial Governments do not harass those who are prepared to resort to passive resistance for the attainment of their goal and would request him to break his silence and to take the lead of the popular political movement and to carry it to its destined goal.]

England's policy in Ireland and India contrasted.

Mahrátta (5), 8th July.

*5. "The Times of India compares in a recent issue the treatment of Ireland by Britain with the treatment given by Germany and the Dual Monarchy to the nationalities under their rule. The Times has been led into this task by the plain-speaking of some people that if Ireland had been a constituent part of the German or the Austrian Empire, the Allied Governments would unquestionably have declared her liberation to be one of their war aims. This plain-speaking places Britain on the same level of 'civilised barbarism' on which Germany and Austria are trumpeted to be. We are not directly concerned with this controversy. One remark which the Times has made in pleading for Britain struck us particularly, and it is only to draw attention to this remark that we pen these few lines. The Times says: 'Where either in her laws or in the admintstration of them, is there anything in Ireland which has least resemblance to the systematic endeavours of the Government of the two monarchies to obliterate national feeling and national distinction in the Slav and other non-German and non-Magyar communities? Whatever England has been in Ireland in our day, she has not been anti-national.' This comment of the Times may be taken as a condemnation of every anti-national endeavour on the part of the ruling powers in any country. The British rulers in India—what have they been doing, and what are they doing? The campaign of repression with which we are now face to face—what is it, if not a campaign to thwart the growth of National feeling? With the Defence of India Act in one hand and the actual and rumoured concessions in the other, is not a regular attempt made to divide the Nationalist Camp?......... While the national feeling in Ireland has now been invited to co-operate with Government in solving the problem of the government of Ireland, the national feeling in India is sought to be suppressed with a high-handedness unworthy of any rulers who would call themselves civilised."

Condemnation of the agitation of the Home Ruler party.
Muslim Herald (145), 6th July.

6. The Muslim Herald characterises the agitation set up by some Hindu members of the Home Rule League as funny and unreal, and inquires as to how much has been subscribed to the War Loan by those whose princely donations to the funds of the League have been recently announced. It regards the decision of the Allahabad Congressmen regarding their non-participation in the raising of the Defence Force as unwise and unpatriotic, and it condemns the boycott (of foreign goods) as highly dangerous in these critical times seeing that a similar movement proved mischievous in more peaceful times some years ago. It is at a loss to understand in what way the ladies who are being enrolled as members of the Home Rule League will be utilised in obtaining the Home Rule. It criticises adversely the alleged policy of opportunism followed by Government inasmuch as they encourage agitators by bestowing on them high offices and exalted titles, and discourage Muhammadans by ignoring their loyalty. Finally it points out that Mrs. Annie Besant is pro-Hindu and innocent of having done any good to the Musalmans, and advises the latter to desist from sympathysing with her particularly as some past mistakes of theirs have caused much harm to their community.

The loyalty of educated Indians is greatly strained by the repressive measures of the authorities.
Gujaráti (16), 1st July.

7. Indians have no reason to be disappointed with the present political situation. History proves that man perishes, but thoughts and ideals never perish. Those who have propounded noble ideals may have died a physical death; but they are still present with us. The bureaucrats, by their actions, seem to be urging Indians to persist in their adherence to their ideals. Lord Pentland's advisers could never possibly have dreamt that by restricting the liberty of speech and writing of three individuals they were giving an impetus to speech and writing all over India. Indians are helpless, but they will effect their own salvation by keeping the ideal of swarájya constantly before them and adhering to it tenaciously. No one can stop the current of righteous thoughts. We are constrained to say that the loyalty of educated Indians is greatly strained by the recent repressive steps taken by Government and they find it very difficult to keep their thoughts in check, for their inner self asks whether the steps taken by Government are an indication of their changed angle of vision.

Condemnation of certain Home Rulers for advocating boycott against English goods without consulting other Indian leaders.
Dnyán Prakásh (36), 7th July.

8. It is evident that prominent members of the Home Rule League have decided individually to preach boycott although the League itself thinks it inadvisable to associate itself with the movement. They cloak their movement, however, under the name of swadeshi. An article in New India leaves no room for doubt that they preach boycott under a milder name only. The movement does not aim at encouraging indigenous industries, but at retaliating against the repressive policy of Government. New India admits that the movement is started for a particular political object. If, therefore, there is any name for this movement that is more appropriate than any other, it is boycott and not swadeshi. We do not mean to say that boycott is illegal. We have every right to inaugurate it if we find it desirable and likely to attain the desired end. But we should like the Home Rulers to tell us whether it is right to preach boycott without giving the other leaders an opportunity of deciding whether it is desirable or feasible. We hold that the Home Rulers are acting improperly in preaching boycott on their own responsibility and without the approval of the other leaders.

The Swadeshi vow.
Hindusthán (20), 5th July.

9. The Hindusthán supports the suggestion made by New India to the young men of this country to take a vow for using swadeshi goods, but it at the same time exhorts young men to be reasonable and not to introduce the element of boycott of foreign goods in their propaganda. It adds:—The swadeshi vow will be productive of good if it is faithfully adhered to against all difficulties. We should find out the causes that contributed to the failure of the swadeshi movement some years ago and should try to remove them. Our failures have taught us lessons and we should now take steps with caution. The present times are favourable to the success of the swadeshi movement as we shall not have to contend against foreign competition.

How would Muhammadans fare if India obtained Home Rule?
Islámic Mail (4), 24th June, Eng. cols.

10. In the course of a lengthy article, the Islámic Mail says that Government are really in favour of the ideal of self-government, rightly conceived; that the services done by India during the war have brought about a change for the better in the views about India held by British and Colonial statesmen; and that the British character is not such as to yield to pressure and intimidation. It counsels patience and moderation to the Indians and assures them that a measure of self-government is sure to be granted in the very near future. It then continues:—"The most momentous question for us is whether we are prepared for the change. India is not like Ireland. It is a big continent with an immense population of divergent characters and temperament. So far as things go at present, the educated few hold an upper hand in the civil life and domineer the masses in the same way as Brahmins used to do in olden days. Minorities have no opportunity of taking their legitimate share of public life unless it be by the favour of the Government who safeguard their interests by special measures. What chance was there for the Muhammadans to get adequate representation on the Legislative Councils, if Government had not granted them the right to elect their own members? The Hindus have never treated the minorities in an indulgent spirit and the agreement arrived at between the Moslem League and the Congress has proved unacceptable to the bulk of the Moslem population. Past experience teaches us that an alliance with what is called the bureaucracy has been more advantageous to us than joining hands with the rival communities to be made a scapegoat. Sir Syed advocated the policy of an alliance with the rulers of the land and so long as we followed that policy we never came to grief. The question now is what is the best policy for us to adopt at the present juncture: to sit quiet and let the majority get the power with which to crush down the helpless minorities or to chalk out a separate course of action for ourselves in order to safeguard our communal interests. We leave a solution of this problem in the hands of those who claim to lead the community and who are responsible to God and to the people for right guidance and judicious action. It is a very serious problem that they have to solve and we call upon them in the name of their national honour and in the name of Islam to follow the dictates of their conscience and not the advice of their Congress mentors."

Comments on the internment of Mrs. Besant.
Young India (14), 4th July.

11. "The bureaucracy, pursuing its methods of unconscious friendliness to the popular cause, is doing its best to impress upon the people of this country that in the issue that has been joined there can be no compromise. So be it. We for our part are more than content that the air should have been so definitely cleared.

It is something to know that repression, naked and unashamed, stalks the land.......... That is far preferable to having to do with an intangible antagonist, with foes in the guise of friends, with half-hearted protestations of 'sympathy' which in practice work out in the opposite direction, with gifts from one hand which are snatched away with the other, with all the deviousness, in short, of the political game with which India is so familiar—to her cost.......... A more clear or flagrant misuse of powers could scarcely be imagined. Yet there has been no sign of reprimand or disapprobation from the Government of India whose function it is to supervise, and control, when necessary, the subordinate administrations. On the contrary, exemplifying the proverbial rapidity of evil contagion, the executive in other provinces of India have succumbed to the example of Madras.......... The people of this country may, no longer, even protest when their sentiments and rights are assailed; the newspapers of this country are peremptorily ordered not to publish even the proceedings of public meetings at which constitutional protests and representations are made! The enormity of such a campaign is too self-evident to need labouring.......... No leader or publicist in this country, no educated man, no self-respecting citizen can afford to rest content until the constitutional status quo in India has been restored. The internment of the individual known as Mrs. Besant is a great enough question: the internment of the principle which is identified with Mrs. Besant is infinitely greater. And it is to this latter point that we think the attention of the country should be drawn. It is not Mrs. Besant, but Home Rule that has been interned, said Mr. Gandhi in a pregnant phrase."

Indian Social Reformer (3), 8th July.

*12. "The Pioneer challenges the Members of the Imperial Legislative Council who have protested against the action of the Madras Government interning Mrs. Besant, to raise the matter in the Council when it meets for the autumn session. 'It is one thing', says our contemporary, 'to indulge in platform rhetoric at public meetings and quite another to put forward allegations where declamation can be met by facts'. Our contemporary well knows that the standing official majority in the Imperial Legislative Council will swallow everything put forward from the Government side irrespective of its intrinsic value either as fact or argument. It is, therefore, quite safe in challenging the Indian non-official members to raise any question in that Chamber. The effect of the standing official majority ready to be convinced of the rightness of anything which falls from the lips of the Government spokesman, on the matter and manner of the latter's oratory, is well described in the last batch of Mr. Eardley Norton's reminiscences in the Looker-On, the Calcutta fortnigthly. Commenting on the failure of retired Anglo-Indians in the House of Commons, Mr. Norton observes: 'Many men from India have in my time sat in the House of Commons. I cannot recall a single success.' 'It is one thing', Mr. Norton goes on to say in the manner of the Pioneer, 'to read out a string of platitudes and sonorous promises of favour yet to come to an assembly bilious for Khan Bahadurships and the ginger-bread toys of the Indian Empire......... It is very different to face an assembly in which every man is as free as yourself and unlike you is careless of red chaprasis and the Code of Civil Procedure.' Nevertheless, we trust, the Indian Members will accept the Pioneer's challenge, so that, even if they are defeated by the standing majority of officials and their nominees in the Council, there might be a record in the proceedings of the fact that India protested, through her elected representatives, against the attempt to intimidate public opinion by interning some of its most prominent exponents."

O Anglo-Lusitano (43), 30th June, Eng. cols.

13. "The internment of Mrs. Annie Besant and her co-workers, Messrs. G. S. Arundale and B. P. Wadia, by the Madras Government appears to have sent a thrill of indignation throughout the length and breadth of this historic peninsula. Even those who hold moderate views seem to have been stirred by what is considered to be the high-handed procedure of the Madras authorities. Whatever may have been the reasons of the Madras Government to act as it did, the blow is generally regarded to be aimed at Home Rule, and the unhappy expressions of Lord Pentland concerning self-government appear to confirm the view. The wound is perhaps bitterly felt because India has spontaneously given of her best towards the cause which has for its object the triumph of the forces of liberty and righteousness over those of despotism and corruption. Whilst pouring her life's blood on the altar of patriotism she does not forget the goal of her aspirations, viz., self-government. The attitude of the Madras Government, therefore, has been rather unfortunate in that it has run counter to India's expectations and hence the profound indignation throughout the country as may be gauged from the protest meetings held in various quarters."

Comparison between the activities of General Hertzog and Mrs. Besant.
Message (6), 1st July.

14. "The South African nationalists are agitating for the establishment of a Dutch republic and instead of General Hertzog and his followers being interned or imprisoned for 'sedition' they are being seriously coaxed and persuaded by General Botha and his adherents not to embarrass the Government. While the South Africans were promoting a serious rebellion we were declaring from every housetop our loyalty to the throne and adherence to the Empire and striving by every means in our power to help that Empire; while the Dutch nationalists are crying against every little assistance in men and money, we were promoting the war loan and got for the Finance Member 45 crores instead of 15 which at the outside he had anticipated......... On second thoughts Lord Pentland says that the recent orders of internment were not directed against the ideal but against the methods, and Mr. Chamberlain has loyally endorsed that 'Mrs. Besant and her associates' were dangerous persons. Does Lord Pentland or Mr. Chamberlain say that General Hertzog with his anti-English propaganda is not dangerous and the perfectly constitutional propaganda of Mrs. Besant and her associates is! Or again, is it the opinion of these complacent authorities that General Hertzog's every attempt to frustrate the service of General Botha's Government was not dangerous and that Mrs. Besant's attempt to procure more money for the War Loan and recruits to the Defence Force was dangerous?"

Government and protest meetings against Mrs. Besant's internment.
Kesari (106), 3rd July.

15. Commenting on the alleged interference of the Tuticorin Police with the protest meeting regarding the internment of Mrs. Besant, the Kesari remarks:—If any one is breaking the peace, it is these rough Police officials and not loyal and peace-loving subjects. [The paper here deals with the order of the Punjáb Government prohibiting the publication of the proceedings of the protest meeting at Láhore.] It is the first blunder to suppose that discontent does not arise amongst the people even if the officials commit a repressive and unjust deed. To suppose that it does not add to the former discontent to disallow protest meetings and to prohibit publication of the proceedings constitutes the second blunder. Government may think that they should not be exposed by any speeches at the protest meetings and that America and other foreign nations should not hear of these things. But will not the Allies be prejudiced more by reading that even the proceedings were not allowed to be published than otherwise? What did the Punjáb Government gain by issuing such absurd orders?

Comments on Mr. Chamberlain's opinion about Mrs. Besant's Home Rule movement.
Dnyán Prakásh (36), 7th July.

16. In reply to Mr. Chancellor's inquiry whether Mrs. Besant's Home Rule movement transgressed the limits of the law, the Secretary of State replied that it was injurious and conducted on improper lines. This is no answer to Mr. Chancellor's question. The question is not whether the Secretary of State considers the movement proper or improper, but whether it is lawful or unlawful. If it is unlawful why do Government not have recourse to a court of law? It is our duty to warn Government that if they injure a movement which is conducted on constitutional lines, whatever opinion they may hold about it, they will meet with disapprobation from all sides.

*17. "Mr. Chamberlain does not seem to have been consulted beforehand in the matter of the internments of Mrs. Besant and her associates. Did this case fall under the class of 'grave cases' in which, according to Mr. Chamberlain, the Indian authorities 'must act in anticipation of consultation with him'? Every one knows that the internments recently effected were in the air for over a month before they actually took place.......... Mr. Chamberlain left the House under the impression that the Home Rule propaganda in India had already developed a grave situation, such as needed the prompt employment of repressive measures and rendered previous consultation with him unnecessary. This impression being absolutely contrary to the actual facts, Mr. Chamberlain has made himself responsible for a gross misrepresentation. Of course, he is in a safe position and can libel India with impunity."

Mahrátta (5), 8th July.

Comments on the order of the Punjáb Government prohibiting the publication of accounts of a public meeting at Lahore.

Praja Mitra and Párai (28), 1st July.

18. The Praja Mitra and Pársi writes in a tone of severe condemnation about the order recently issued by the Punjáb Government prohibiting newspapers in that province from publishing accounts of the proceedings of the meeting held in the Bradlaugh Hall at Láhore to protest against the internment order passed by the Madras Government against Mrs. Besant and her two associates. It inquires why the speakers in the abovementioned meeting were not stopped in the course of their speeches or why the meeting itself was not dispersed if the speeches delivered there were calculated to endanger the public safety. The paper remarks that the action of the Punjáb Government would lead one to infer that the speeches were such as could not be proved to have trangressed the law and that in issuing the present order the Punjáb Government had arbitrarily used the powers vested in them under the Defence of India Act. Regard being had to the instinct of curiosity among human beings, it strongly believes that the object of Government in stopping the publication of these accounts would not be served and that on the contrary the public would get hearsay and consequently more unsafe information about the proceedings of the meeting. The paper observes that some authorities are not sufficiently far-sighted and seem to labour under the erroneous belief that they uphold the prestige of British rule in India by displaying the wide and arbitrary powers they hold and are in a position to wield.

Dnyán Prakásh (36), 3rd July; Kaiser-i-Hind* (24), 8th July, Eng. cols.

19. Every one will be dismayed to learn that the Punjab Government has prohibited the newspapers, under the Defence of India Act, from publishing an account of the meeting held at the Bradlaugh Hall against the Madras internments. Do the Punjab Government suppose that all the speeches delivered at the Bradlaugh Hall come under the Defence of India Act? We do not think that the speeches made at Lahore were more violent than those made at Poona, Madras and other places. We fail to understand how the proceedings of the Lahore meeting could have endangered public safety when no such result ensued elsewhere. This shows what unlimited power the Defence of India Act has placed in the hands of the authorities. [The Kaiser-i-Hind writes:—"Newspapers published in other provinces are full of such reports and their circulation in Punjab does not appear to have been prohibited. What then is the practical use of the Order in question except to create bad blood?"]

Comments on the orders of the Chief Commissioner of Delhi prohibiting protest meetings against the internment of Mrs. Besant.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 7th July, Eng. cols.

20. Commenting upon the orders passed by the Chief Commissioner of Delhi regarding the holding of protest meetings in connection with the internment of Mrs. Besant, the Prája Mitra and Pársi writes:—"Now, similar meetings have been held everywhere. Local authorities did not like them and, as stated above, the Punjab Government went the length of prohibiting the publication of the proceedings of the meeting though the prohibition was withdrawn later on. But no local Government or authority went to the length of prohibiting the holding of the meeting itself. Yet it has been done at Delhi which is the seat of the Government of India. Does that reflect credit on the Delhi Administration and, indirectly, on the Government of India? Meetings that are not interfered with in remote places are considered dangerous in the capital of India, for there is no getting over the fact that Delhi with its officials belonging to the time of the Great Mogul is the capital of India. The result will be that the discontent in Delhi will be deeper than anywhere else. In India statesmanship is at a discount, while repressiveness is at a high premium."

Criticism of the working of the Defence of India Act.
Mufid-e-Rozgdr (144), 1st July.

21. The Mufid-e-Rozgdr reproduces, without acknowledging it, a portion of an article on the abuse of the Defence of India Act from the Hamdam newspaper of Lucknow dated the the 23rd June 1917. The article in question reviews the state of affairs in Ireland since the war commenced and contrasts the generosity of the British Government towards Irishmen and the discretion of those authorities who are charged with the administration of the Defence of the Realm Act in England with the high-handedness of officials in India and their abuse of the provisions of the Defence of India Act. It recalls the circumstances in which the Defence of India Bill was passed into law and lays emphasis on the alledged pledge of Lord Hardinge that it would be set in motion against the agents of the enemy only. It maintains that it was not proper to utilise the provisions of this Act for suppressing popular newspapers or for interning leaders of the public who ought to have been put on their defence in the ordinary law courts of the land.

Suggestion that Mrs. Besant should be elected President of the next Indian National Congress.
Young India (14), 4th July.

22. "The various Provincial Congress Committees are busy suggesting names for the presidency of the ensuing session of the Congress.......... The final selection is yet far off. It is, however, interesting to know that public opinion is already asserting itself in favour of the unanimous election of Mrs. Besant to be the President. The country cannot show its disapproval of the reactionary tendencies of the Executive Government of India more emphatically than by electing her as President. A writer in the Lucknow Advocate has put forward a proposal to this effect. He suggests that Mrs. Besant may be formally elected as President and assuming that between now and the meeting of the Congress the executive will not reconsider and withdraw the order of internment a Vice-President should be elected, who will preside over the Congress and guide its deliberations. The Message has whole-heartedly commended the suggestion. The wonderful rally of the country round the Home Rule Flag, which was unfurled two years ago by Mrs. Besant, encourages us in the belief that it will readily respond to the suggestion, than which there cannot be a better way of showing its appreciation of her devoted services."

Mahrátta (5), 8th July.

23. "Who should preside over the session of the Congress this year? This question is very important. The Reception Committee of the Congress has sent out notices to the Congress Committees calling upon them to send in their nominations for the Presidential honour. It seems only proper, in view of the universal condemnation of the internment of Mrs. Besant, that this devoted lover of our country should be accorded the honour as a mark of our appreciation of her great services to our country and at the same time as a mark of our supreme indifference to what the authorities think of her and would have us think of her."

Message (6), 3rd July.

24. "The country is now face to face with a definite and single issue: Bureaucracy versus Democracy; and it is the duty of everyone to concentrate at this juncture over that one issue. The President of the Congress should be elected on that issue and none else. The names so far suggested are all excellent, and it would indeed be invidious to make a distinction between them. But considering the critical times through which we are passing, it is our bounden duty to see that only the person best qualified for the position is elected. Now that the Bureaucracy has opened its campaign against Home Rule by interning Mrs. Beant, we cannot better convince the Bureaucrats of our earnestness of purpose than by electing her as President of the Congress. That will not only be a fulfilment of the votes of confidence that have been passed but also a vigorous reply to the challenge of the Bureaucracy."

Appeal to the Bombay Government not to prevent students from serving as volunteers at the Congress and the League and at Conferences.

Sind Advocate (9), 21st June.

25. In the course of an article in which it condemns the Bombay Government's circular about students and politics, the Sind Advocate remarks:—"Whatever the authorities do with regard to discouraging the active participation of students in politics, it would be a sad mistake and a sadder disservice to the country if students are forbidden to enrol as volunteers at Conference and Congress or League. What are the duties of volunteers at such functions? Purely personal and social. The young volunteers learn to serve distinguished visitors from the provinces and thereby to imbibe practical love of country and its great men, and this quite irrespective of this or that school of politics and certainly without mixing themselves up in political propaganda. Whatever part they may be said to be taking in the Conference or Congress politics by performing the specific duties assigned to them including their attendance at the meetings, that part is such that any wise Government and a broad-minded and tolerant Government like the British should not at all mind it."

Government's own educational policy is influenced by politics.

Dnyán Prakásh (36), 3rd July.

26. Owing to the peculiar condition of India it is difficult to consider the question of education with an unbiased mind. Whatever Government and the people may say about the desirability of politics not stepping into the realm of education, they are so completely interwoven that the one cannot be divorced from the other. The Secretary of State justifies the order of Government prohibiting students from attending political meetings on the ground that politics may interfere with their studies. The educational policy of Government, however, is such as would hardly satisfy people with this explanation. Sir Narayen Chandavárkar conclusively proved in his address as President of the Educational Conference that although Government preach that politics ought not to be allowed to interfere with the student's studies, their own educational policy is influenced by politics. While all the higher educational appointments are monopolised by Europeans, only the lower appointments are given to Indians. Have Government made this differential arrangement with the pure motive of spreading education in India or is politics at the bottom of it? Such glaring injustice cannot escape the notice of students and is sure to engender such thoughts in their minds as no mischievous speaker in a political meeting can engender.

The evil effects of separate representation granted to the Muhammadans.

New Times (7), 26th May.

27. Discussing the "Principle of special representation" the New Times makes the following comments on the special representation granted to the Muhammadans:—"As long as Government persists in these crude methods of giving relief to important minorities inspite of the existence of better methods in the form of various schemes of proportional representation, it cannot entirely escape this suspicion [that separate representation is a device of Government to set one community against another]. That separate representation has created much distrust and disunion in the country nobody, least of all Government, ventures to deny. It has created two nations out of India, but what is not known is that it has done the greatest harm to the community which it is supposed to benefit. The unity of the Muhammadans is at once destroyed as soon as they are treated as a class apart with no external pressure to induce them to preserve a united front. Their unity at once dissolves as soon as there are two or more rival Muhammadans bidding for the favour of the community, which is exactly what happens under separate representation... ...... It encourages those insincere religious benefactions which have figured so largely in the recent Muslim election petitions. Fanaticism is encouraged at the expense of moderation with the result that the task of Government becomes difficult when the extreme representatives meet in the common council. These a priori deductions are borne out by facts of recent Muslim history. The Muslim disunion dates from the day on which they got special representation in the Councils."

Comments on the extension of terms of Their Excellencies the Governors of Bombay and Madras.

Young India (14), 4th July.

28. "That Mr. Chamberlain, with the approval of His Majesty, should have invited these two 'distinguhished' statesmen to remain at the helm of affairs in Bombay and Madras is not at all extraordinary. They have shown themselves ready to stand by the policy which now is in so much favour with the India Office and the present personnel of the Government of India. A Secretary of State, who has from the very beginning of his career at the India Office, been out for dispensing his patronage among obscurantist politicians and mediocre Tory, lordlings, would not certainly like to part with Governors who have readily subscribed to the Chamberlain creed of autocracy in respect of Indian government. People are crying themselves hoarse for the recall of Lord Pentland, and in a smaller measure they are longing for the retirement of Lord Willingdon. These are added reasons why the Secretary of State should retain them in their present posts lest, forsooth, bureaucratic—and not British—prestige should suffer."

Message (6), 4th July.

29. "So far as the Indian public is concerned, in the two Presidencies in particular, it will receive the news with mixed feelings and will view the unwarranted extensions with grave apprehension. When the cry from all sides is directed to the immediate recall of Lord Pentland, the all-wise Mr. Chamberlain has sprung a sudden surprise on the devoted heads of the people.......... While this act of Mr. Chamberlain will greatly add to the sourness of public feeling at the shabby treatment that has hitherto been accorded to it, it will not certainly enhance its confidence in the impartiality or fair-mindedness of the presiding deity at the India Office. .... If such an act as this, which avowedly proceeds in the direction of alienating the sympathies of the people from the administration, ultimately tends to make every form of true and zealous co-operation between the public and the administration impossible, one may well rejoice at the decision of Mr. Chamberlain."

Kesari (106), 3rd July; Sandesh (118), 5th July; Dnyán Prakásh (36), 4th July; Mantri (109), 5th July.

30. If Lord Willingdon really thinks that the rights of Swarájya should be given to Indians he should resign even before his time as a protest rather than spend the remaining days of his administration in milk-and-water sympathy, because he knows that such a desire has no chance of being fulfilled. Possibly Lord Willingdon can support the Home Rule movement more freely in England than in India. We have no objection if his term is extended, for who can guarantee that we shall have a better Governor after him? But we request him not to forsake Home Rule if he leaves India without any extension. [The Sandesh is in favour of Lord Willingdon's extension, but it strongly objects to any extension being given to Lord Pentland. The Dnyán Prakásh says:—No one can object to the extensions granted to Lords Willingdon and Pentland as they were given because of the restrictions on travel. It would have been necessary to criticise if any one had said that the extensions were given because people asked for them or because of the extraordinary merits of the administration of these Governors. Their regimé is quite barren. It is necessary to record a protest if one wants to convey the idea that the step taken by the Secretary of State is in consonance with public opinion. The Mantri accords its approval to the extension of Lord Willingdon's term.]

Hindusthán (20), 3rd July; Kaiser-i-Hind* (24), 8th July, Eng. cols.

31. Referring to the Simla telegram announcing that Lords Pentland and Willingdon will continue to act as Governors of Madras and Bombay respectively after the close of their present terms of office, the Hindusthán writes:—Who in India does not know Lord Pentland now? And how did the movement that was made in the matter of the extension of Lord Willingdon's term of office end in Bombay? These facts reveal what the public opinion is with regard to these two Governors. Howsoever good Lords Pentland and Willingdon may be personally, they have not done all that was necessary for the welfare of the people and for acquiring popularity. We have, therefore, to say that it is not a good thing that their terms have been extended. This extension is said to have been due to the difficulties at present attending a voyage to England. Was it not in that case possible for their being kept on in India as guests for some time more? Is it quite necessary that one should leave the shores of this country as soon as he finishes his term of office as Governor? In the face of the fact that the period of Lord Carmichael's Governorship was not extended and the term of Lord Hardinge's Viceroyalty was extended only by six months, it is not proper that the terms of Lords Pentland and Willingdon have been extended and that too for an indefinite period in spite of the public opinion not being in their favour but rather against them. [The Kaiser-i-Hind remarks:—"In the case of Lords Hardinge and Carmichael the appeal for extension went forth from the people of India; but in the case of Lords Pentland and Willingdon it is His Majesty that has invited them to serve on in India. No one has a right to question the Royal prerogative but those who are not aware of the existence of such prerogatives may be inclined to think that in the case of Lord Pentland the extension granted is a veritable infliction on the people of the Southern Presidency."]

Comments on the alleged absence of Europeans in the funeral procession of the late Dr. Dadabhai Naoroji.

Gujaráti (16), 8th July, Eng. cols.; Indian Social Reformer (3), 8th July.

32. "We feel it our painful duty to observe that the vast concourse of people that had assembled to pay their last respects to the deceased patriot noticed with no small regret the absence of the representatives of the European community even on an occasion when political and racial differences must be forgotten and it becomes the duty of all to do honour to one who had for more than half a century served his country with splendid devotion and loyalty and whose distinguished virtues, both public and private, would have shed lustre upon any politician in Great Britain and elsewhere. The incident made many thoughtful minds feel that appeals for mutual toleration and co-operation, trust and confidence, are, after all, mere conventional phrases." [The Indian Social Reformer remarks:—"The immense concourse which walked behind the bier which bore all that was mortal of him to the Towers of Silence, there to mingle with the dust of two score generations of his ancient race, was symbolic of the sentiments of his countrymen. It was remarked that Englishmen were conspicuous by their absence in the gathering which assembled to do honour to the illustrious dead, Mr. Horniman's presence only making the fact more glaring. The warmly appreciative notices of Dadabhai's career, which have appeared in the English Press here and in England, preclude the idea that Englishmen are unable to appreciate greatness of character in an Indian. Probably it was the national diffidence to entering into social relations with strangers, which kept them from attending. Such diffidence is a serious drawback in a people who find themselves charged with the duty of consolidating an Empire."]

Death of Dr. Dadabhai Naoroji.

Indu Prakásh (39), 2nd July, Eng. cols.

33. "Dadabhai's personal example and his writings and speeches will continue to operate as living forces, shaping minds and building characters.......... We are now perfectly familiar with the fact that a class of Anglo-Indian journalists and politicians are completely upset and thrown off their balance whenever they hear an Indian speak of the poverty of India. Well, the poverty of India is a fact, it was a fact when Dadabhai wrote about it, and it is a fact still, no economic miracle having in the meanwhile occurred, banishing poverty and making India flow with milk and honey."

Controversy about the application of the term mlechchha to Muhammadans.

Political Bhomiyo (71), 6th July.

34. The Political Bhomiyo reproduces a letter written by one Mr. Joshi which appeared in the Arya Prakásh dated the 17th of June, wherein the writer attempts to show that the application of the terms mlechchha and yavan to the Muhammadans is in no way objectionable and calculated to create bad blood between community and community as has been stated to be the case in a letter headed "Advocates of swarájya and mlechchhas" noticed in paragraph 10 of the Weekly Report No. 20 of 1917. Mr. Joshi goes on to quote passages from a book entitled "Bhadrambhadra" written by R. B. Ramanbhai Nilkanth with a view to show that the term mlechchhas connotes nothing else but non-Hindus or followers of an alien religion. He also remarks that books like Chhatrapati Rajaram are not likely to create unpleasantness between the Hindu and Muhammadan communities. Their publication is necessary for the information of the present and future generations as to how much particular communities had to suffer in the past as a result of the oppression caused by others. [Elsewhere the paper publishes a very lengthy letter from a correspondent styling himself a "lover of peace" wherein he tries to refute Mr. Joshi's views. He remarks that no good purpose can be served by opening up the old sores by referring to the various acts on the part of the Muhammadans in the past, e. g., the destruction of the idol at Somnath, the levy of Jazia, the destruction of Hindu temples and cities like Benares, etc. He observes that if Mr. Joshi cannot forget such matters and incidents that have taken place in the remote past he should plainly declare that the Hindus and Muhammadans will not be able to pull on well together and that the Hindus will not rest satisfied till they have wreaked vengence upon the Muhammadans for the sufferings of their forefathers at the hands of the latter. The writer then goes on to inquire whether the fact that some Hindus address the Muhammadans as their 'brethren' and (thus) induce them to combine with themselves for obtaining swarájya is only empty talk. He also remarks that even if the term mlechchha ordinarily means a non-Hindu, it has been used in the passages quoted by Mr. Joshi from "Bhadrambhadra" and elsewhere to indicate contempt for those to whom it has been applied. He goes on to argue that the Muhammadans should, on the same analogy, be allowed to apply the word kafir to the Hindus since that term in Arabic only means a non-Moslem. The correspondent advises Mr. Joshi not to advocate the use of words which are calculated to degrade others and to be in favour of the use of more polite language in public writings.]

Alleged use of disrespectful language in connection with the Prophet Muhammad in a certain Guzerati almanac.

Political Bhomiyo (71), 6th July.

35. Addressing a letter to the Political Bhomiyo from the village of Dasán, district Broach, one Abhram Asmál Patel draws the attention of the paper to an almanac for Samvat 1973, published by Mr. Girijashanker Harishanker and printed at the Dnyán Mandir Printing Press, Ahmedabad, on the ninth page of which appears a passage which, rendered into English, would run thus:—The Prophet Muhammad was an inhabitant of Mecca. On his claiming to be a Prophet, the people of Mecca resolved to attack him. He, consequently, left for Medina and got estranged from his native place Mecca. [The objectionable element in the above passage seems to be the use of verbs and pronouns in the third person singular instead of the plural used in the Indian vernacular as mark of respect to the persons spoken or written about. The writer requests the paper to move in the matter with a view to preventing the use of such impolite language in connection with the Prophet in the next edition of the almanac.]

Comments on a recent speech of General Smuts.
Message (6), 3rd July.

36. "General Smuts was in mail week the guest of a Committee of people associated with South Africa. Lord Selborne presided at the dinner, which was given at the Savoy Hotel, London. On that occasion the most idolised of South Africa's soldier-statesman made a speech which should open the eyes of all liberty-loving and just people to the prospect of a new menace to the coloured world. The sentiments expressed by General Smuts are by no means unprecedented for their extreme selfishness. The policy which he advocated for being pursued in Africa is to practically demoralise the 'black continent' and reduces the natives of the soil to the status of coolies, whose sole business would be to minister to the needs of the superior white adventurers who might go there to seek their fortunes. General Smuts said that they were not aware of the military value of the natives until this war and now that this war had demonstrated that value, he pleaded for absolutely forbidding the military training of natives. His most ingenuous plea was that if the natives were properly trained and equipped they would become a danger to civilisation itself. Comment is indeed superfluous. If the General's policy is to hold water with British statesmen, it is better that they should abandon, what Lord Salisbury so neatly phrased as 'political hypocracy,' about the justice and righteousness of 'our cause in this war'. We trust that General Smuts' impolitic and unrighteous speech was merely the outcome of a temporary mental aberration."

Comments on the Mesopotamia Commission's Report.
Sandesh (118), 4th July.

37. Grant of any new rights to Indians is always subjected to the official powers of control, supervision and veto on the plea that we are inexperienced. This trio of control, supervision and veto is in evidence in the Legislative Councils, the Municipalities and all other places. But strange as it may seem, mistakes are made by the Secretary of State or the Government of India which is the fountain-head of this triple control. It appears from the cabled summary of the Mesopotamia Commission's Report that the Secretary of State, the Government of India and the Commander-in-Chief are all responsible for the failure of the first Mesopotamia expedition. We have, of course, nothing to say about their mistakes. We would only point out that mistakes are occasionally possible in the discharge of one's duty. Why should then the plea that Indians are liable to make mistakes be always trotted out?

Hindusthán (20), 4th July.

38. The Hindusthán remarks that one of the defects disclosed by it in the administration of India is the very great confidence reposed in subordinate officers without proper deliberation or due inquiries, as was done in the case of Sir John Nixon, and it observes that bad consequences are sure to follow the continuance of such a policy in India in the future. It maintains that the fact that the Commission was opposed to dividing the responsibility for the temporary setback to the British arms in the Mesopotamia campaign between the British and the Indian Governments points to the impracticability of dividing between these same Governments the responsibility with respect to the internal administration of India. The paper declares that while the Government in England located at White Hall cannot carry on the administration of this country, the hands of Government at Simla also cannot be left free and unfettered. From the fact that the Commission has not thrown any responsibility in the matter on the members of the Imperial Executive Council it infers that the Council was not consulted in the matter of the Mesopotamia Expedition, and it raises the question why the members should have borne such insult without any protest and allowed Lord Hardinge to override the rules governing the constitution of the Council. To remedy such a condition of things the paper suggests that members of the Executive Council of the Government of India should be made responsible to the British Parliament as well as the Indian public.

Frauds in the Supply and Transport Corps.
Sind Observer (12), 15th June.

39. "We trust the Commander-in-Chief does not think that the publication by him of details regarding the members of the Supply and Transport Corps, recently convicted of fraud and dishonesty, terminates his duty in connection with this mattar. It is true that, with the exception of the officer concerned in the cases referred to, severe punishments have been awarded, and the publicity now given to the disgrace which has fallen on these men will act as a warning to others, but neither the enquiry nor the communique issued by the Commander-in-Chief touches the root of the evil which is the pernicious system for which Government are responsible. The scandalous conduct of persons belonging to the Supply Services has been widely known and openly spoken of for months past, and now that details of the crimes and punishments have been announced, the authorities appear inclined to believe that everything necessary has been done. But it seems to us that the question now at issue is how Government expected inadequately paid warrant and non-commissioned officers to resist the temptation to acquire wealth by dishonest means when the temptation placed in their way was so great......... When the outbreak of war suddenly called upon the Supply and Transport to handle enormous quantities of stores for the expeditionary forces, the duties, responsibilities and temptations of these subordinates increased tremendously. But what did Government do for them? Their pay remained the same, and while their confrères in the other services were advanced to commissioned rank, the warrant and non-commissioned officers of the Supply and Transport Corps saw inexperienced men from all paths of civilian life pitchforked into the department as officers......... We cannot conclude this article without referring to the employment by the Supply and Transport of Agents, one of whom we see was convicted of dishonesty as a result of the recent enquiry. These Agents draw a paltry amount as salary, and what their functions are we cannot say, but what we do know is that their position in the inner circle of the department enables them to secure contracts for themselves directly, or indirectly through their friends, and the batten on the wicked system which called them into being......... The Commander-in-Chief would be well advised to take up the question of the employment of Agents by the department. What use are they, and does any business concern with a keen eye to its own interest tolerate such parasites? The whole matter needs urgent attention, and we hope Sir Charles Munro will leave no stone unturned till he arrives at a perfected system of payment and control of the Supply Services."

Complaint that subjects of Native States are refused admission in the Indian Defence Force.
Kesari (106), 3rd July.

40. A correspondent from Sángli writes to the Kesari:—Five persons had applied for admission into the Indian Defence Force, but they were refused as they were subjects of a Native State. It is a sample of British justice that while recruiting is energetically carried on in the Native States and while money for the War Loan is accepted from State subjects, they are not admitted into the Indian Defence Force.

Retraction by the Islámic Mail of its opinion that Anglo-Indians were unwilling to fight for their country.
Islámic Mail (4), 24th June, Eng. cols.

41. "We were wrong in stating that more that half our Anglo-Indian friends are unwilling to fight for their country. An examination of the applications for exemption shows that, with the exception of a small minority, they were made, not by individuals on their own behalf, but by their employers, who were unwilling to spare them. In the great majority of cases their employers were either Government or a Railway Company, and it is obvious that, however much Europeans employed by these agencies may wish to serve, it would be impossible, in the best interests of this country, to relieve them from their ordinary duties. Similar considerations apply in the case of many employees of Banks and big commercial concerns. Finally, we may note that the great majority of exemptions for which application has been made have been exemption from general service only, ... We can only repeat our expression of regret that our former article ignored these facts."

Japan and the War.
Islámic Mail (143), Urdu edition, 25th June.

42. Commenting on the report that Japan will send troops to France through America should Russia make a separate peace with the enemy, the Islámic Mail says that the alleged desire for greater co-operation seems to be based on self-interest inasmuch as a peace between Russia and the enemy would endanger Japan's position from Harbin to Vladivostock. It acknowledges with gratefulness the valuable assistance which the Japanese Navy has rendered and is still rendering to the Allies, and urges Japan to take part in land-warfare as well, instead of waiting for the Russians to first fall out of the struggle before she takes up arms.

The situation in Russia.
Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 3rd July.

43. The Praja Mitra and Pársi refers to the speech made by the Premier at the time when the freedom of the City of Glasgow was conferred upon him and endorses his wish that Russia may soon come to the right path now and may be in a position to do her duty by the Allies. It maintains that Russia seems to have forgotten that France sided with her because at the time the war broke out her prestige was at stake and that but for France not only would she have lost her prestige but she would have suffered great harm. The paper then refers to the demands made upon the Provisional Government by the Congress of Russian soldiers for making laws enabling the different nationalities composing the Russian Empire to determine their own political future in such way as they might choose. It regards this as startling news and believes that these soldiers have completely lost their heads in thus making demands for a dismemberment of the Empire instead of desiring to maintain its solidarity. The paper is very doubtful if Russia would any longer be in a position to render any substantial help to the Allies if this delusion on the part of the Russian soldiers is not soon dispelled from their minds.

Complaint about the tender treatment accorded to interned Germans at Belgaum.
Sind Observer (12), 5th June.

44. Referring to the complaint about the tender treatment accorded to the interned Germans at Belgaum, the Sind Observer remarks :—" Truth will, we have no doubt, be surprised to learn that tenderness to the Boche does not in Belgaum end with providing interned Germans with the best quarters available to the detriment of British troops, but extends to allowing Huns of military age to reside with their families, which are rapidly increasing, as a direct result of this benign treatment. But the best part of this arrangement is that the children born in the internment camp become British subjects according to the curious law of October 1914. There is something unfathomable in the policy of favouring the German. Some of the men permitted to live at Belgaum did not enjoy when at large in India before the war the very best of reputations, and there does not appear to be any reason why they should be specially favoured now. We notice that there is a great hubbub in Rangoon over a naturalised German who has been permitted to reside and trade in Rangoon, and an indignation meeting was held the other day to urge Government to put a stop to the scandal. We hear that the German who ran a hotel in another large city and who for months passed as a Swiss, though the Swiss subjects repudiated him, has been interned. We have not, however, been told about the hidden hand which kept this man in his lucrative position so long."

Comments on the new appointments to the India Council.
Young India (14), 4th July.

45. " Sir P. D. Pattani is appointed in succession to Raja Daljit Singh, who has resigned and we should say unhesitatingly that Mr. Chamberlain could not have netted a better substitute for the Raja whom Dame Fortune has thrust on the State of Kashmir. In regard to Mr. Basu, however, matters stand on a different footing.......... That he should forsake at this time both his profession and his politics for the obscurity of the India Council is rather extraordinary and it is not certainly worth the sacrifice which it involves. In an interview with which he favoured an Associated Press representative he was so modest that he would not dwell on the heavy sacrifice he will have to bear. But such was his sense of patriotism that he would not hesitate to push to the background personal matters and accept the Secretary of State's offer of a place on the India Council—a body whose abolition the Congress and the Moslem League have consistently urged! If Mr. Basu is consistent and true to the Congress traditions, his first business, as an honest Indian, of character and fearless independence, is to throw up the job and rest contented with the high position he has already attained in Indian politics."

Kesari (106), 3rd July; Subodh Patrika (42), 1st July.

46. The appointments made by Mr. Chamberlain will not make repression less oppressive and bearable. We thank him for increasing the number of Indian appointments and for appointing a popular leader like Babu Bhupendranath Basu. But he will be disappointed if he thinks that the demands of Indians will be satisfied with this concession. We do not think that these appointments will give a turn to the policy of the administration favourable to Indians. Our chief demand in the present circumstances is that the Executive Council should be reponsible to the majority of the Legislative Council. We cannot guarantee that Indian interests will be properly guarded even if the number of Indian members is raised to five. The Congress, therefore, has suggested that such an irresponsible Council having no powers like the India Council should be abolished. We do not think that the appointment of an ex-president of the Congress to the Council is a desirable one. The Congress now should not depend upon Babu Bhupendranath Basu and should arrange to send its deputation to England. [The Subodh Patrika remarks:—We do not think that Sir Prabhashankar Pattani can represent the side of Indians in the Council. We do not know how he performed his duties as a Member of the Bombay Executive Council, but this we know that in the Legislative Council he did nothing more than occupy his chair. What more will this gentleman achieve in the Secretary of State's Council?]

Gujaráti (16), 1st July.

47. Sir Prabhashankar who has earned fame by erecting a statue to Lord Curzon in Calcutta has been appointed to the India Council. Sir Prabhashankar is a favourite child of fortune and his former appointments on the Executive and Legislative Councils go to prove the influence he wields. We heartily congratulate him on his elevation to the India Council, and hope he will exert his influence for the good of the country and the Government. Mr. Chamberlain has taken a bold step forward by appointing a Congressman of the type of Mr. Basu to the India Council. The honour has come to Mr. Basu unsought and has, therefore, taken the people by surprise. The appreciation of such men will tend to do good to the people and Government alike. Mr. Basu has been appointed to the India Council at an opportune moment, for his advice will reflect public opinion and be very useful to the Secretary of State in the reorganisation of the constitution of the Government of India. We hope three seats will now be reserved for Indians in the India Council.

Comments on the security taken from the New Times of Karáchi.

Sind Journal (10), 28th June; Sind Advocate (9), 28th June.

48. "It was, no doubt, within the discretion of the Executive to have taken security from the New Times when the declaration of its publication was first made by the publisher. But to have allowed the paper to be started without the deposit of security and then to have brought it within the meshes of the Press Act is a different thing. It means that the editorial policy of the paper is repugnant to the authorities. Had the security been taken at the start, no such presumption could have been drawn. Further, it is really strange that no warning was given to the Editor before demanding security from him. This is pre-eminently a fit case for the Press Association of India to take up......... So far as we have been able to judge of the writings of our esteemed contemporary, we would say that if the New Times has erred at all, it is on the side of moderation. To have demanded security from such a paper shows that the authorities in Sind are becoming intolerant of even healthy public criticism which should be encouraged instead of being penalized." [The Sind Advocate writes:—"Other papers were receiving warning, but the New Times was being severely dealt with without a warning......... We have not the least doubt that the order is unjust, that the New Times has written nothing of an objectionable character. This is the opinion of the public, who rather think that the New Times is sometimes not sufficiently outspoken and strong. But perhaps personal offence has been given to some one high in authority and not trained to bear effective criticism."]

Comments on the security taken from the Hindu Missionary newspaper.
Mantri (109), 6th July.

49. Though we cannot say why security was demanded from the Hindu Missionary, started to propagate Hinduism, we shall describe the tradesman's trick resorted to in demanding the security. Mr. Vaidya tendered the security in Government Promissory Notes of Rs. 500 bearing 9½ per cent. interest (sic). But it was pointed out to him that he should pay the difference between the market rate and the nominal value of the paper in cash and he paid Rs. 170. The editors will have to bid goodbye to their profession if they are obstructed in such manner. The executive officer should have, moreover, borne in mind that Government lower the value of their own paper by such a step. No one seems to have frankly pointed out to the responsible officials the effect of such a step on the public mind. We do not still think that responsible Government officials whether Imperial or Provincial will make themselves a laughing-stock in such a way. We beg, therefore, to bring this matter to the notice of His Excellency the Governor.

Suggestion that Pardanashin ladies should be exempted from the obligation to attach copies of their photographs to applications for passports.
Islámic Mail (4), 24th June, Eng. cols.

50. "Those who desire to go out of India must provide themselves, according to the orders of the Government of India or rather of the Home Government, with a passport which is to bear their photograph. Residents of Bombay cheerfully comply with this and attach their as well as their women's photo to their passports. But upcountry peeple observe the strictest Purdah, so that some of them consider it a sin for their women folk to be seen even by women whom they do not know, not to speak of female strangers and under-age children. We know of some families in the United Provinces where no stranger women nor a child of 7 or 8 years is allowed to go in......... They say that no political mischief can emanate from Indian women who know nothing of the world and the thumb impression is enough for purposes of identification. We have every sympathy with those people and would be glad if the Government of India could see their way to modify their rules in regard to Pardanashin ladies. The Local Government have not failed to place these objections before the Government of India and we shall be glad if out of regard for a foolish Indian sentiment Government will allow only the thumb impression to be taken of Purdanashins."

Comments on the reported death of an Indian in South Africa through being thrown out of a tram-car by a European.
Kalpataru (104), 1st July.

51. Referring to a report from South Africa regarding the alleged pushing out of a moving tram-car of an Indian by a European which resulted in the man's death, the Kalpataru remarks:—The culprit has not yet been arrested. This incident has created a great stir among the Indians in South Africa. After a good deal of agitation a preliminary inquiry was held before a Magistrate during which several persons deposed that they witnessed the occurrence. The man is still at large although the Magistrate has given an assurance that he would be arrested. This shows what value is attached to the life of an Indian in South Africa even now when we are freely contributing men and money for the defence of the Empire. Is this a sign of the changed angle of vision?

Comments on the Draft Local Government Ordinance of the Natal Government.

Mahrátta (5), 8th July.

*52. "Natal Indians are being exorcised over the Draft Local Government Ordinance.......... It shows the temper of the Colonials. Even a European paper, the Natal Mercury, objects to this Ordinance on the ground that it is conceived on lines too drastic inasmuch as it proposes the erection of an absolute colour-bar. The paper warns the authorities that the Colonies cannot solve the racial problem in South Africa by a segregation policy which would consign the natives to permanent barbarism, nor by decreeing that the non-European shall in no circumstances be admitted to any citizen rights. It has been proved time and again that the white Colonist has developed a curious grabbing disease which does not permit him to think, in human ways, of the non-whites, who unfortunately have no Governments of their own anywhere in the world strong enough to take their side. The talk about 'Free development of communities' applies, according to the white man, only to white communities. Any 'black' community that, owing to misfortune, has come under the thumb of the white man may never hope to rise to the human level of Freedom, so long as the white master can help it. The white creed is twofold. The black dependant is not able to take care of himself and therefore must bow to the rule of the white brother. That is one principle. And if the black man cannot be proved to be incapable of taking care of himself, there is another principle employed to keep him in his lowly position. This principle barefacedly asks the black man to be content with what position might be settled for him by the white master, because the latter cannot afford to raise the blackie beyond a certain level, as such a step would endanger the white interests. Controlled by these two principles, the fate of the unfortunate Indian and his brothers, the black men of other races under the white dominions, is not and is not likely to be in any degree endurable. Where is the remedy? As far as Indians are concerned the remedy lies in their acquiring their natural Rights of Freedom in their own Native land. When these rights are gained, it would not be so difficult to deal with Colonies that choose to pass laws shamefully inhuman in their intention, wording and working......... It is to be remembered that the services of the Indians in this war have not served to awaken any feeling of true sympathy in the minds of the white Colonist. We cannot blame him very much, when we see the white Britisher in India holding the reins of office, or owning a plantation or a paper, etc., no wise changed for the better by the knowledge of our sacrifices in the service of the Empire."

Alleged insult to His Highness the Maharaja of Bikanir by a police officer in Bombay.

Indu Prakásh (39), 6th July.

53. Referring to the alleged insult at the Apollo Bunder to His Highness the Maharajah of Bikanir (vide paragraph 36 of Weekly Report No. 25 of 1917), the Indu Prakásh remarks:—Was the policeman instructed to demand passports only from those who were dressed as Indians and not to interfere with those who donned European clothes? If the reported account be true, it constitutes a deliberate insult not only to the Maharajah but to all Indians. We hope that the necessary steps will be taken to see that such incidents are not repeated. The present incident, if true, shows how racial distinctions are made as between blacks and whites in actual practice.

The Birthday Honours List and Bombay Muhammadans.

Islámic Mail (4), 24th June, Eng. cols.

54. "A correspondent complains that while the Honours List contains the names of Hindus and Parsis, there is no Muhammadan name there to get any honour in this Presidency. The fact is, we have no ground for complaint on this score. Government never leave unrewarded any public service rendered by any public man. Sir Dinshaw Watcha and Sir Mahadeo Chaubal have rendered conspicuous public services and they fully deserve the honour bestowed on them. But no Muhammadan names occur to us as having deserved a distinction by virtue of their service and left unrecognised. It is a matter for regret though that eminent leaders such as

Mr. Salebhoy Barodawala, Mr. Sharif Dewji, Mr. Mohomedbhai Hajibhoy, Mr. Ibrahim Haroon Jaffer have been left without any recognition. They deserve greater titles than that of 'Honourable' which Government have bestowed on them. Mr. Salebhoy has worked well in the Corporation and amply deserves some recognition."

Alleged dilapidated condition of the road between Kasarkod and Bhatkal (Kárwár).
Kánara News (34), 27th June, Eng. cols.

55. "The road from Kasarkod to Bhatkal along the sea-shore is as bad as bad could be. It is practically washed away by the rains in many places and many of the culverts are in such a delapidated condition that some have already given way and some more want to follow suit—to the great inconvenience and discomfort of the travelling public and the cart traffic. We have personally visited the line and can specify and even quote the numbers if necessary of culverts totally or partially broken. The double gutters between miles 61 and 64 are not cleansed and repaired. Will the authorities concerned enquire into the matter and set matters right for the good of the public? We hope they will."

Complaints about insufficiency of fuel at Bhatkal (Kárwár).
Kánara News (34), 27th June.

56. Before fuel depôts were started people used to buy head loads. But depots have been started on the plea that forests are spoiled by permission being given to carry head loads and that people do not get a sufficient quantity of fuel. Whatever be the price of fuel, it is the duty of Government to supply fuel and to look to the convenience of the public. The Bhatkal (district Kárwár) depôt is managed this year by Government themselves. It is situated at a distance of 9 miles from the town in the heart of the forest and the way to it is full of steep ascents. In the town there is only one shop and the store of fuel in it cannot suffice for the needs of ten families for a day or two. We suggest to Government that they should now at least set matters right.

Alleged inconsistency of Government in dealing with people who have conscientious objections to vaccination.
Sind Journal (10), 28th June.

57. "B. G.", writing to the Sind Journal on the subject of the conviction of two teachers of Karáchi under the Vaccination Act, remarks:—"The situation thus created is very ridiculous. One year conscientious objection is respected and the next it is absolutely disregarded. Does the grant of exemption depend upon the whims of officers or on some principle? If on principle, why should not exemption be granted in the present case? It appears to be the intention of the Government to wait for a proof of conscience. But how did they know last year that the objection of Messrs. Jethmal and Vaswani was conscientious? Every reasonable man will recognise that in the present case we have genuine conscientious objectors. For more than four months the gentlemen have struggled against subjecting their healthy children to an operation which is regarded by them as an infusion of disease and a sin. Both are schoolmasters who are ever anxious to see that they do nothing to incur the displeasure of Government. To know that their objection to vaccination is not agreeable to Government and still to dare to object, indicates the strength of their conviction. They have, moreover, decided to pay up the fine and suffer other penalties rather than trifle with their conscience. This should convince the Government that their objections are conscientiously held."

The Sind College principalship.
Sind Journal (10), 28th June; Sind Advocate (9), 21st June.

58. "The Government of Bombay is to be congratulated on the just decision which it has apparently arrived at for not lending the services of Professor Hampton of the Gujarat College to the D. J. Sind College Board to take charge of the Principalship of the Karáchi College. That Professor Hampton is not at all suited for the appointment has been made abundantly clear by those who know the educational needs of the College. It is rumoured that a ludicrous movement is on foot to approach the Bombay Government on behalf of the Sind Muhammadans to appoint a European as Principal of the Sind College, as otherwise the interests of Muhammadan students would be jeopardised. To charge Principal Shahani with any communal or religious bias is the most flagrant instance of serving one's ends by any means fair or foul. But we are sure that such manœuvres would not hoodwink any one, as Principal Shahani has established a reputation for catholicity which cannot be easily destroyed, the calumny of the Sind Moslem notwithstanding." [The Sind Advocate writes:—"If there is any truth in the reports that the Government of Bombay have declined to send Mr. Hampton to fill the temporary principalship of the Sind College and have directed that the present arrangement should continue, then Lord Willingdon will have further enhanced his reputation for broad statesmanly instincts apart from the innocuousness and expediency of allowing an Indian of such experience and capability as Professor S. C. Shahani to act as Principal during the pendency of the war notwithstanding the arbitrary rule that the Principal has ordinarily to be a European. We hope that Lord Willingdon will not allow the arrangement to be disturbed till after the war, and that he will exercise an independent and watchful control over the affairs of Sind."]

MUNICIPALITIES.

Comments on the intention of the Bombay City Improvement Trust to take in hand the improvement of slums.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 5th July; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 6th July.

59. Referring to the announcement recently made by the Chairman of the Bombay City Improvement Trust that he was prepared to commence utilising the aggregate sum of one crore and twenty-seven lakhs of rupees, that he expects to remain at the disposal of the Trust by the end of the next twelve years, in the improvement of slum areas brought to its notice by the Bombay Municipality as requiring immediate attention, the Praja Mitra and Pársi, while observing that the accumulation of the abovementioned sum is after all a matter depending upon future conditions, characterises the present change in the attitude of the Chairman towards the question of the improvement of slum areas, the urgency of which he was not prepared to recognise up till now, as revolutionary. It attributes this change to the effect of the public agitation against the attitude he had hitherto assumed and to the sympathy of the Bombay Government. The paper considers the order stated to have been made by the local Government for appropriating towards the improvements of insanitary areas the sum of fifty lakhs of rupees granted by the Government of India to the Trust, to be a further proof of their sympathetic attitude towards the demand of the public. It regards the present phase in this matter as a victory of public voice and declares that the people will thank Government for the justice they have done to them. [The Jám-e-Jamshed also expresses agreeable surprise at the change in the attitude of the Chairman of the City Improvent Trust. It, however, sarcastically remarks that it hopes that a decade may not pass away before the work of improving the congested areas is effectively taken in hand.]

NATIVE STATES.

Complaint that a likeness of the Prophet Muhammad at Kamati Bág, Baroda, is injuring the feelings of the Muhammadans.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 4th July; Akhbar-e-Islam (56), 4th July.

60. In the course of a letter addressed to the Praja Mitra and Pársi "Khádim-e-quom" makes mention of a portrait of the Prophet Muhammad that has been placed in the picture gallery at Kamati Bág, Baroda, with the words 'Muhammad's journey to paradise' inscribed on it, and remarks that the making of a likeness of the Prophet is contrary to the tenets of Islam and, consequently, is calculated to injure Moslem feelings. He believes that the placing of the abovementioned portrait is the result of inadvertence on the part of those concerned and requests His Highness the Gáekwár to get the portrait removed from the place in question as soon as possible and thereby put a stop to the Moslem feelings being further injured. [The Akhbár-e-Islám cursorily mentions the fact of its having received the above communication and feels surprised that the Moslems of Baroda should have until now observed complete silence over this matter. The paper desires the latter to send it correct information in the matter in order to enable it to make a suitable request to His Highness the Maharaja on the subject.]

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 12th July 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

B 130—8 CON

Brown Paper Cover
& Label please

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 28 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 14th July 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to sent Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British Rule:

Advice to Muhammadans not to hanker after Swardjya 1
Comments on Mr. Chamberlain's reply to an interpellation in Parliament regarding Mrs. Besant's internment . . . . . 4 & 5
Comments on the alleged prohibition by the Collector of Lárkána of a public meeting at Lárkhána to protest against the Madras internments 6
Comments on the alleged repressive acts of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjáb and the Chief Commissioner of Delhi . . . 7
Comments on the extension of the terms of Lord Pentland and Lord Willingdon . . . . 11—13
Comments on the suggestion for the election of Mrs. Besant as President of the Congress . . . . 8 & 9
Condemnation of the agitation for Home Rule 2
Hindu females should be made to observe the Swadeshi vow during the four sacred Hindu months 14
Inamdars in the Central Provinces are being threatened with confiscation of their vatans for joining the Home Rule League . . 15
India's determination to secure Swardjya under British suzerainty at all costs 3
It is a mistake on the part of Governors to treat Indians as mere children 16
Parsis and high posts in the public service 17
Sir R. Tagore on the Madras internments 10
Spread of revolutionary tendencies in India 18
Students and political meetings 19
The Commerce Member of the Government of India in Bombay . 20
India Council: Comments on the new appointments to the— . . . 21 & 22
Indian Press: The policy of the New Times newspaper 37

Police:

Comments on the recent case of assault by a Pathan on a woman at Charni Road 39
Immediate action should be taken by Government against the Pathan terrorism and the Bombay slave traffic 38
Press Act: Comments on the taking of security from the New Times and the Hindu Missionary 40
Revenue matters: Government should be asked to disclose its policy as regards the rights of Khots 41

H 137—a CON

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

Sind : Report of a meeting at Hyderabad (—) to popularise Swadeshi . 23

War :

Alleged reign of terror at Dádar (Bombay) . . . . 24—27
Comments on Lord Hardinge's statement with regard to the Mesopotamia Commission's Report 35
Comments on Mr. Chamberlain's resignation 28
Comments on the Honourable Mr. Cadell's speech at the Mahar recruiting meeting at the Bombay Town Hall 29
Comments on the Mesopotamia Commission's Report . . . . . 30—34
Comments on the proceedings of the Bombay Exemption Tribunal . 36

LEGISLATION—

Comments on the Honourable Mr. Patel's Primary Education Bill . . 42

RAILWAYS—

Railway grievances of Indians 43

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Advice to Muhammadans not to hanker after Swardjya.

Political Bhomiyo (71), 13th July.

1. In the course of a letter addressed to the Political Bhomiyo a correspondent disapproves of the action of a section of Muhammadans in participating in the present agitation for Swardjya and Home Rule and remarks that these members of the community fail to consider whether they would continue to enjoy the same measure of freedom in the matter of the profession of their faith after the grant of Swardjya to India that they, together with their countrymen professing other faiths, now enjoy under the independent (impartial?) British rule. He remarks that if Swardjya were granted to India, Muhammadans, being very backward in education, would have very little voice in the administration of the country and their position, consequently, would be untenable. He then goes on to write:—Will the Moslems be able, after the grant of Swardjya, to make the sacrifices of the cow and the goat in accordance with the tenets of their faith as they can do freely now? Will they be able, after Swarajya is granted, to build mosques and open Madressas where they like and deliver discourses on the beauties of their religion as they can do now? Is there anybody in India manly enough to give or make others give the assurance that after the securing of Swardjya the Muhammadans would be allowed to perform the sacrifices enjoined by their religion as at present? [The writer then reminds Muhammadans of the instance of Junagadh, a Moslem State, where the old established practice of sacrificing goats at the temple of Bhairavnath was put a stop to as a result of the agitation of the preponderating Hindu element there although the administrative head of the State was a European. He therefore, advises those Moslems who are fond of Swardjya to be more far-sighted and asks them to consider in what way the British rule is bad, so far as their own interests are concerned. Elsewhere the paper remarks that Muhammadan rulers like the Aurangzeb and Tippu Sultan are unnecessarily reviled by the Hindus because their glory is greater than they can bear. It maintains that it is futile to hope for a unity between the Hindus and the Muhammadans as long as mutual hatred, born of differences of religion, exists between them and adds that till that unity is brought about, to hope to secure Swardjya is to build castles in the air. The paper wishes that harmony between the Hindus and the Muhammadans may be soon established and they may be able to obtain and enjoy Swardjya, but it dubiously inquires when, if at all, such a consummation would be realised.]

Condemnation of the agitation for Home Rule.

Surat Akhbdr (75), 9th July.

2. Under the heading "India is not fit for Home Rule at present" the Surat Akhbdr remarks that comparing India, the people of which are divided into 2,400 castes and follow not less than ten religions, with Ireland and demanding Home Rule for her on the basis of that comparison is not consistent with far-sightedness. It expresses satisfaction with the present system of British rule in India in spite of being conscious of some defects in it. It compares each of the Civilians in India to a fort which can protect from five to ten lakhs of people. [The paper then goes on:—Under the auspices of British rule, trade and business is carried on peacefully. The people can sleep at night with perfect ease. They are enjoying even now the same measure of tranquility and comfort that they used to enjoy three years ago before the outbreak of the present bloody war. The sacrifice of men and money the British people are making in Europe is not merely for their own sake but for the protection of the lives and property of the people of India.......... What hardships have the Indians had to bear as a result of the present system of administration that they should make a demand for Home Rule? Where is the defect in the administration which is grave enough to justify the uproar that has now been raised throughout the country? The paper next goes on to compare the economic condition of the people of India in pre-British days with their present condition and remarks that the present increased economic prosperity of the people and the much larger measure of peace and happiness they enjoy are the direct results of British rule. It denies the utility of the present political agitation which is calculated to promote disaffection among the people and distract the minds of students from their studies and strongly vindicates the action of the Bombay Government in issuing the recent circular prohibiting students from taking part in political meetings.]

India's determination to secure Swarajya under British suzerainty at all costs.

Gujdrati (16), 8th July.

3. Is it not strange that England should participate in celebrating the 4th of July, the anniversary of the declaration of independence by the United States of America from the British sway? Indians should feel confident that England will behave in a similar manner towards them. The repressive policy now pursued in India will conduce to the ultimate good of the nation. Indians need not be cowed down by repressive measures like the Defence of India Act. The officials who declare themselves to be against political awakening, excitement and eagerness are themselves causing an awakening among the people and stirring excitement among them. The whole of India is becoming Home Ruler in consequence of the internment of Mrs. Besant. Let us see what steps Government are going to take against the whole country. Mr. Chamberlain's statement in Parliament that Mrs. Besant's movement is mischievous and likely to bring Government into contempt is as ridiculous as the opinion expressed by Justice Stratchey in the Tilak case to the effect that criticising acts of Government was tantamount to exciting sedition among the people. Can any political changes be effected without proving the defects of the existing Government and showing that it is harmful and undeserving of respect? Is Mrs. Besant's criticism directed against the British administration or is it against the centralisation of the bureaucracy? Mr. Chamberlain might for the time being succeed in defending the misuse of the Defence of India Act by the local authorities just as Lord Morley regarded the Partition of Bengal as a 'settled fact'. Indians believe in the certainty of the triumph of the movement of the popular party against the bureaucracy in India with as much certainly as they believe in the ultimate victory of the Allies against the militarism of Germany. We Indians are on the right path though others may differ with us as to the pace with which we should move on the long and weary path. Indians do not share their apprehensions. If the way is long, instead of going on foot we might use a bullock cart, or instead of a bullock cart we might use a carriage drawn by horses, or instead of a coach we might use a motor car. If the way is thorny we shall put on shoes and clear the way, if the way is intercepted by mountains we shall either cross them or make a way by blasting operations, but we shall never break our pledge of endeavouring to secure swarajya for India under the suzerainty of the British. Unite and move forward with patience and perseverance! Public opinion will surely achieve a triumph against the bureaucracy at an early date. We are approaching the victorious day and England will take delight in celebrating the anniversary of that victory.

Comments on Mr. Chamberlain's reply to an interpellation in Parliament regarding Mrs. Besant's internment.

Hindusthdn (20), 7th July.

4. While commenting upon the reply given by Mr. Chamberlain to the question put in the House of Commons regarding the internment of Mrs. Besant by Mr. Chancellor, the Hindusthdn tries to show that the aims and objects of the Home Rule League are identical with those of the Indian National Congress, which the authorities have declared to be legitimate, and avers that Mr. Chamberlain's reply is vague and misleading. It wishes Mr. Chamberlain had clearly declared on what grounds he considers Mrs. Besant's movement to be mischievous and hopes that either the Madras Government or the Government of India will make a clear statement of their policy with a view to allaying misunderstanding and satisfying all concerned.

Kesari (106), 10th July; Sandesh (118), 10th July.

5. Mr. Chamberlain does not object even to extreme demands but he attacks the methods of Mrs. Besant. If anyone blames the existing system of administration while making demands, Government are discredited! As the temper of Government has become very delicate they may not tolerate criticism that speaks evil of them and discredits them. But to treat such criticism as seditious would be going beyond Justice Strachey who defined disaffection as absence of affection. It is necessary to point out the defects in the existing system of administration when a change is demanded. Nobody considers this seditious. It is necessory to expose the fallacy underlying Mr. Chamberlain's contention and Pandit Motilal Nehru has already done it in his telegram to the Premier. [The Sandesh says that the attempt of Mr. Chamberlain to misrepresent facts, to evade a straightforward reply and to lessen his own responsibility is improper. It further remarks that India has made a definite demand and that Goverment also should publish a definite scheme. It holds that many Anglo-Indian newspapers took up the cry of Lord Pentland like foxes raising a cry in unison and that the big fox of England, Mr. Chamberlain, also opened his throat and supported Lord Pentland.]

Comments on the alleged prohibition by the Collector of Larkana of a public meeting at Larkana to protest against the Madras internments.
Sind Journal (10), 5th July.

6. "It is impolitic to suppress the feelings of the people which must find an outlet any how. It is, therefore, strange that the Collector of Larkana should have thought it fit to prohibit the holding of a protest meeting in any public place in Larkana.......... The Larkana Gazette publishes the whole account as to how the meeting came to be held in a private garden after all. The attendance at the meeting was necessarily thin, but speeches were made and resolutions were passed which would get publicity through the medium of the Press. The attitude adopted by the Collector was quite unwarranted, as we cannot believe that Larkana is totally different from the other parts of India where protest meetings have been held without any dire consequences. The interference of the officials with the legitimate activities of the people only creates bitterness of feeling which should be the aim of statesmanship to avoid."

Comments on the alleged repressive acts of the Lieut.-Governor of the Punjáb and the Chief Commissioner of Delhi.
Gujaráti Punch (18), 8th July, Eng. cols.

7. Referring to the alleged repressive action recently taken by the Lieut.-Governor of the Punjab and the Chief Commissioner of Delhi the Gujaráti Punch writes:—"These two noble Knights of the Order of the Civil Service, with the intent of out-doing Lord Pentland, have made use of the handy instrument the Defence of India Act and put an unwarranted restraint on the liberties of the people. Mr. Hailey has under powers vested (or assumed to be vested) in him under section 3 of the Defence of India Act, 1915, stopped a meeting of the Citizens of Delhi to express their feelings with respect to the recent internments. And Sir O'Dwyer has issued a notice to the press not to publish reports of or reference to the public meeting held at Bradlaugh Hall to protest against the action of the Madras Government interning Mrs. Besant. His subordinate, the Deputy Commissioner, Láhore, has addressed a letter to the heads of the Colleges and educational institutions saying that 'as it would be inadvisable for students to attend the meeting, I shall be glad if you will advise the students of your college not to attend. I would suggest that a master of each unit be deputed to attend and see that your orders are obeyed.' A great honour to the teaching profession to be put on a level with the officers of that eminent service, the C. I. D. We think the Act has been sufficiently abused and it is now high time that the Government of India would direct that its provisions be applied within its legitimate and narrow bounds."

Comments on the suggestion for the election of Mrs. Besant as President of the Congress.
Dnyán Prakásh (36), 14th July.

8. Referring to the suggestion made by Sir Subramania Iyer that Mrs. Besant should be elected President of the forthcoming Indian National Congress, the Dnyán Prakásh points out that the Hindu and the Leader deprecate the suggestion as unwise and opposed to the best interests of the country although they recognise Mrs. Besant's invaluable services in connection with the Swarájya movement, and expresses the hope that the view expressed by those two influential organs will be shared by all.

Rast Goftar (30), 15th July, Eng. cols.

*9. "Attractive as Sir Subramania Iyer's proposal may appear in view of the forced attention which this gifted old lady has been made the subject of by a faulty and injudicious step on the part of Government, it has the elements of short-sightedness which was never expected from a gentleman of Sir Subramania's reputation for political acumen and forethought. The question of the internment of Mrs. Besant can be fought out on its own intrinsic merits, but whatever sympathy that is easy to feel for her and whatever resentment that may be honestly entertained at the temporary check that has been imposed on her public activities may be expressed by other means than by proposing her for the presidentship of the Congress,—a course which is certain to bring that body into direct open conflict with Government and to complicate matters quite unnecessarily for those who guide the affairs of the Congress.......... We do not see what great purpose would be served by electing an individual for the Presidentship of that body on whose liberty of movement and speech an embargo has been placed by Government which may continue to be in force when the Congress is in sessions.......... We do not believe that the suggestion of Sir Subramania would find favour with any large number of the men with whom the election finally rests."

Sir R. Tagore on the Madras internments.

Indian Social Reformer (3), 15th July.

*10. "Sir Rabindranath Tagore has added his voice to the many voices throughout India which have been raised in protest against the internment of Mrs. Annie Besant and her two lieutenants......... Government must see from the singular unanimity evinced by all shades of opinion in this matter, that they have been misled into committing a big blunder. We earnestly hope that they will have the courage to rectify it at once by revoking the order of internment against Mrs. Besant and her friends.......... Mrs. Besant interned is a more formidable personage than Mrs. Besant at large has ever been or can ever possibly be."

Comments on the extension of the terms of Lord Pentland and Lord Willingdon.

Praja Bandhu (27), 8th July, Eng. cols.

11. Commenting upon the extension of the terms of office of Lord Pentland and Lord Willingdon, the Praja Bandhu remarks:—"While Anglo-India will welcome it the same cannot be said of a considerable section of the Indian public. It is said that Lord Willingdon has by his suavity and charming manners won over the hearts of the people of this Presidency. This is true to some extent, but it cannot at the same time be denied that some recent measures of the Government have disappointed a considerable section of the Indian public. The case of Lord Pentland is much worse. His last indiscreet speech in the Madras Legislative Council followed by the internment of Mrs. Besant and her two co-workers under the orders of his Government has practically set the whole indigenous India ablaze. As is well known protest meetings have been already held in several places not only in the Madras Presidency but in other parts of the country as well, and a demand for Lord Pentland's immediate recall to England has been urged upon the Secretary of State for India from some quarters. Instead of paying any attention to it the Secretary of State has invited Lord Pentland to serve on in India."

Kesari (106), 10th July; Shubhodaya (89), 6th July.

12. Commenting on the extensions granted to Lord Willingdon and Lord Pentland, the Kesari says that the arguments that have been advanced for the extension are very ridiculous and shallow. It goes on:—We do not know whether we are to weep or to laugh at the reason that restrictions on travel made extension for an indefinite period necessary. If that was the real reason some arrangements could have been made for their voyage. It was proposed to Mrs. Besant that she would be safely escorted to England if she would go out of India. If any one but Mr. Chamberlain had spoken in this fashion he would have been sent to the Bedlam. The extension granted is an answer by the higher officials to the Indian agitation. We should be ready to face the trouble, trusting in God. [The Shubhodaya remarks:—The arrangement may be convenient to Government in a way, but we cannot say whether it will turn out good or bad for us. Lord Willingdon and Lord Pentland were such nice gentlemen till recently. Only for the last three or four months they have been subjected to public criticism. Have they taken action according to Simla orders? But the new Governors also would be controlled from Simla. So the old hands are preferable. They have been subjected to severe criticism and they may try to wash off the stain on their names. But the new men may deny all responsibility and argue that everything has become a settled fact.]

Gujarâti (16), 8th July; Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 8th July.

13. The Gujarâti expresses surprise that the term of office of Lord Willingdon and Lord Pentland should have been extended because of the restrictions placed upon travelling by sea. It significantly observes that these restrictions did not come in the way of Lords Hardinge and Carmichael when they left India. It remarks that the belief of the people is that if these restrictions had operated in the case of Lord Hardinge's retirement no need would have been felt for putting the Defence of India Act into action. People cannot understand, observes the paper, why restrictions on voyages should have affected the exit of Governors when the Maharaja of Bikaner, Sir James Meston and Sir S. P. Sinha went to England and have returned, when Lord Ronaldshay came to India along with his family, when Sir Frederick Blake came in connection with the manufacture of munitions in this country and when Sir Prabhashanker Pattani and Mr. Basu will be shortly going to England for taking their seats in the India Council. The paper thinks that the real reason for these extensions is that suitable members of the English aristocracy are either not willing to come over to India or that they are not available on account of the exigencies of the war. It is not surprised that Lords Willingdon and Pentland should have given their consent to Mr. Chamberlain to continue to serve in India. For are they, it inquires, ill off in any way in this country? Referring to the extension of Lord Willingdon's term of office, the paper remarks that the people inquire what His Excellency has done during the last 4½ years of his regime in the matter of education, local self-government, sanitation and the reform of the local Legislative Council for them to remember his name with affection. It also considers it to be odd that Lord Pentland should have been continued at the helm of affairs in Madras when he himself has declared his ignorance about the resolutions passed in public bodies like the Indian National Congress and the Moslem League which are the exponents of the aspirations of the people. [The Kaiser-i-Hind, on the contrary, welcomes the extension of Lord Willingdon's term of office. It, however, remarks that but for this extension His Excellency would have left behind him feelings of estrangement and, to some extent, bitter memories. It expresses the wish that His Excellency will avail himself of the unusual opportunity now afforded to him accidentally of taking public leaders into his confidence and removing the feelings of variance caused by the expression of some of his political views. The paper also doubts if the people of Madras will relish the extension of Lord Pentland's term of office as Governor of their Presidency.]

Hindu females should be made to observe the Swadeshi vow during the four sacred Hindu months.

Sandesh (118), 13th July.

14. A 'Home Ruler' makes a suggestion in the Sandesh that during the chaturmas (the four sacred Hindu months) which has just commenced, boys and girls should be made strictly to observe the Swadeshi vow and people should make it a point not to touch food before praying to God everyday to grant Home Rule to India.

Inamdars in the Central Provinces are being threatened with confiscation of their vatans for joining the Home Rule League.

Kesari (106), 10th July.

15. The officials seem to have pledged themselves to excite the minds of the people of the country. We have already commented on the Tuticorin and Lahore meetings. The Commissioner of Delhi disallowed the meeting itself. In the Central Provinces officials have been threatening the Inamdars that their vatans would be confiscated if they joined the Home Rule League. It is not illegal to join a Home Rule League, and moreover, these Inamdars are not Government servants. Zamindars take a leading part in political agitation in Bengal and Madras. Why, then, these threats in other provinces? The question will of course come up before the Central Provinces Council. No one should take any notice of the Police warnings. If Government confiscate vatans, the matter may be taken to court for decision. But till that question arises the best way is to pursue our path without minding the threats or growls of lower officials.

It is a mistake on the part of Governors to treat Indians as mere children.
Gujaráti (16), 15th July, Eng. cols.

*16. "In India the people are every now and then treated to candid homilies. But this candour is often of an interested and one-sided character. It commands no genuine respect and does not add to the diginity and moral influence of those who think it their peculiar right and privilege to deliver such sermons in the belief that educated Indians are mere school-boys and deserve to be treated as such. This is altogether a mistaken belief and the sooner it is dispelled the better. Simply because a peer, who whatever else he may be, certainly does not belong to the first rank of British politicians, happens to be placed by a stroke of good fortune in an exalted position in India, that is surely no reason for him to put on superior airs and look upon the people under his sway as children who every now and then stand in need of so-called candid and friendly homilies."

Parsis and high posts in the public service.
Rást Goftár (30), 8th July.

17. Referring to the appointment of Sir Prabhashanker Pattani and Mr. Bhupendranath Basu as Members of the India Council and expressing gratification at capable Indians being thus placed in high Government posts the Rást Goftár remarks:—But how is it that the Parsis are not included among persons appointed to such positions? In the Bombay High Court, after the appointment of one Parsi judge, no other Parsi has been elevated to the Bench; not a single Parsi has been appointed member of the Executive Council of the Governor of Bombay, nor has the name of any competent Parsi been mentioned in connection with the Council of the Secretary of State for India. Why should it be so? Does the Parsi community not contain men competent enough to fill such posts? How is that the sons of a community which has up till now taken the lead in education and progress, commerce and industry, are left out in the cold so far as high Government positions are concerned? If they are intentionally kept in the back-ground, it will be looked upon as a piece of gross injustice; but if competent Parsis are not now really available, the Parsi community must be regarded as having fallen on evil days. It should be ascertained which is the real state of things. But the Parsis have become so very indifferent in this matter that nobody even raises the question. On the contrary it looks as if the Parsis acknowledged that only the Hindus and the Muhammadans are fit to become Councillors. What a disgrace to the community if that be the case! But is it really so?

Spread of revolutionary tendencies in India.
Young India (14), 11th July.

18. In his third article on Home Rule Mr. B. C. Pál writes:—"The Government frankly admit the presence of very serious revolutionary tendencies in the country. These have actively affected only a very insignificant section of our youthful intellectuals. The larger and saner public stand aloof from all this midsummer madness. But it would not be true to say that the central ideal of the revolutionaries is not equally shared by the general body of their countrymen. Stated in the most general terms, this ideal means the desire of the people of India to be in their own country as other civilised peoples of our time are in theirs. It means the desire for national autonomy.......... But the decisions of the Imperial War Cabinet and the Imperial War Conference indicate the commencement of an insiduous but carefully organised movement to deprive India, for an indefinite period, of this irreducible measure of national freedom and self-fulfilment. It will kill all hope of real national autonomy for India. And we shudder to think what this may mean. The most serious aspect of the situation is the spread of revolutionary tendencies even among the masses. This has been seen in the Punjáb. German intrigue may, as it is believed, be largely responsible for the troubles in the Punjáb. But no enemy intrigues can succeed where the people have no secret sense of wrong or irritation against the Government."

Students and political meetings.

Young India (14), 11th July.

19. "The gospel of reaction preached in Madras was repeated with flaunting impunity at Dacca. The chorus of popular protest, remonstrance and condemnation aroused throughout the country has been treated with studied and insolent disregard.......... The Government of Bombay have issued an order that no student may attend any meeting held under the auspices of the Home Rule Leagues or where Home Rule for India may be advocated. In other words by arbitrary coercion the young Indian is to be restrained from learning about his country, and loving his country.......... Would Lord Willingdon be prepared to penalise a young Irishman from attending meetings where Home Rule for Ireland was advocated, or a young Canadian or young Australian in similar circumstances supposing they had not already Home Rule? Being an English Liberal and an English gentleman, we know he would not. The order against students participating in Home Rule meetings is both impolitic and immoral. Its principle is utterly un-British. It must be cancelled."

The Commerce Member of the Government of India in Bombay.

Bombay Samáchár (59), 13th and 14th July; Sánj Vartmán (31), 11th July; Hindusthán (20), 12th July; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 12th July; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 14th July, Eng. cols.

20. Referring to the informal discussions that recently took place between Sir George Barnes, Member for Commerce and Industry of the Government of India, and the leading representatives of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce and of the Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau, the Bombay Samáchár congratulates the Commerce member and the said representatives for the various suggestions made by the latter and for the sympathetic replies given by the former. It expresses its sense of intense gratification at the policy of Government, as declared by Sir George, of making India more self-supporting in future than she has been in the past and of giving an impetus to the growth of indigenous industries by placing Government orders with Indian concerns, and wishes that Government might see their way to carrying out this policy without delay. In the light of its experience about the commandeering of steamers in England by Government which has not had the effect of marring the prosperity of the steamer companies, the paper believes that the manufacturers of cement in India need have no such anxiety as was given expression to by the Honourable Mr. Lallubhai Samaldas in the course of his address. It remarks that these manufacturers should, in fact, welcome the present arrangement of Government purchasing the whole of their produce inasmuch as it tends to gratify the long-expressed desire of Indian manufacturers for Government patronage. It wishes that the hope of the Government of India of having a satisfactory settlement of the vexed subject of the Viramgam customs line at an early date may be soon realised. The paper also expresses satisfaction at Sir George Barnes assuring the Indian Chamber that no unnecessary restrictions will be placed upon the bleaching powder and other chemicals manufactured from salt in Káthiáwár on their entering the British territory. [In the subsequent issue the paper remarks that the appointment by Government of the Selection Committees will help greatly to minimise the disturbance of trade likely to be caused by the military training for Europeans under the Indian Defence Force scheme. In connection with the suggestion made by Mr. Hogg for the issue of Premium Bonds conjointly with the ordinary form of loan if Government thought it necessary to raise another loan next year, the paper expresses its belief that the issue of such bonds will prove very attractive to a section of Indian investors. The Sánj Vartamán thinks that if a fresh loan were to be raised next year the terms and conditions attached to it should be such that the raising of it may not injure the interests of the investors in the Terminable Loan of the current year. It thanks Sir George Barnes for his assuarance that Government would not allow the indigenous cement industry to suffer from unequal foreign competition, which, it declares, can be best secured by imposing a sufficiently high import duty on foreign cement. The paper also observes that the news about the prospective abolition of the custom duties at Viramgam will spread great satisfaction among the people of Káthiáwár. The Hindusthán warmly welcomes Sir George's declaration that the policy of the Government of India was to make the country more self-supporting in future than it had been in the past by promoting the rapid growth of new Indian industries. It wishes that the fact should not be lost sight of that the economic advancement of India is a source of great help to the Empire. It declares that the people of Gujarát and Káthiáwár will be grateful to Lord Chelmsford if the levy of the custom duties at Viramgam comes to be abolished in the near future, as it is expected to be. Apropos of the action of Government in purchasing all cement manufactured in India at a fixed rate the Jám-e-Jamshed remarks that the authorities should not forget that once foreign competitors become established in the trade in the Indian markets, it would be difficult to oust them afterwards. It, therefore, suggests that Government should allow 25 per cent. of the cement manufactured in India to be sold in the open market. The Praja Mitra and Pársi writes:—"Indian companies can have no objection to tendering cement requisitioned by Government for military purposes. What they contend against, however, is that it should be taken up under the Defence of India Act even for semi-public bodies like the Municipalities, Railways, etc.......... We welcome the desire of the Government to make the country self-supporting, but care must needs be taken that in the process she does not get even some of the existing industries crippled.......... The Viramgam grievance is now nearing its end and the Indian public will feel deeply grateful to Government for paying heed to the appeals of the Indian public, though after so long a time. We are glad to learn from the Honourable Sir George Barnes that 'His Excellency the Viceroy has taken and is taking the keenest personal interest in this question'.......... We feel that His Excellency Lord Willingdon also deserves not a little credit for he must have impressed on His Excellency Lord Chelmsford the harassing nature of these customs duties."]

Comments on the new appointments to the India Council.
Indian Social Reformer (3), 15th July.

*21. "Sir Prabhashankar Pattani has been appointed in succession to Raja Daljit Singh, and the Honourable Mr. Bhupendra Nath Basu has been nominated as an additional Indian Member of the Secretary of State's Council. Both the nominations are satisfactory, but we are afraid the time is past when this kind of concession will be regarded by Indian opinion as of any weight or value. As a matter of fact, the additional membership has fallen flat, and, indeed, it is resented by some advanced sections of opinion as an attempt to put off the essential demands of reform with an empty concession."

Hind Vijaya (64), 11th July.

22. We have grave doubts as to whether Sir Prabhashanker, who has risen in life through the grace of God, has made a deep study of Indian questions. He owes his present appointment to the India Council also to the favour of Government. He will be deserving of our congratulations if he, like Mr. Basu, makes a detailed study of Indian polity and raises his voice to acquaint the Secretary of State with the real state of affairs in India. We hope Sir Prabhashanker will take up our suggestion and endeavour to make his tenure a success.

Report of a meeting at Hyderabad (Sind) to popularise Swadeshi.
Sind Journal (16), 12th July.

23. "Under the auspices of the local branch of the Home Rule League a crowded public meeting was held at the Holmstead Hall, Hyderabad (Sind), to popularise the Swadeshi idea on Sunday last. Diwan Partabrai Manghirsing was voted to the chair. Dr. Choithram P. Gidwani, Misir Lokram and Mr. Jethmal Parsram made eloquent speeches, explaining the urgent need of carrying out the Swadeshi programme under the present conditions. Seventy persons signed a pledge on the spot to use Swadeshi goods as far as possible and even at a loss."

Alleged reign of terror at Dádar (Bombay).

Mahrátta (5), 15th July.

*24. Under the heading "Struck out", the Mahrátta writes :—"In deference to the wish of the District Magistrate, Poona, we have struck out the matter which occupied this space. We print here the letter of the Magistrate in extenso in order that our readers and especially certain correspondents who pressed us to oblige them may be in possession of the facts which have come in our way. We have an idea that we shall be in a position to enlighten our readers next week regarding the alleged reign of terror at Dádar, for we hope that the District Magistrate may be brought to see the futility of our being silent on the Dadar matters when they have been published and commented on by Bombay dailies." [Here follows the District Magistrate's letter asking the Editor to abstain from any reference to the subject in his papers, the Kesari and the Mahrátta.]

Message (6), 14th July.

25. "We have since received a number of complaints from the Dadar and Matunga public confirming in various degrees the allegations that have previously come to our knowledge. We now feel that the time has come for drawing the pointed and immediate attention of the military authorities as well as of the Local Government to the extremely agitated condition of feeling among the peaceful and helpless populations of these areas. The Labour Recruiting agency stationed there has become an object of terror and the depredations of gangs of labour recruiting agents have spread among the poor people a sense of despair. Unless the authorities take immediate steps to bring under better control the Labour Depôt, its agents and its methods, the only alteranative before the people is to emigrate elsewhere and abandon the place to the tender mercies of fate. Another source of nuisance is the visitation of the Japanese and Chinese hordes who have contributed in no small measure to make the conditions hopelessly bad.......... We note with great pleasure the appeal of Mr. Mashruwala for volunteers who are prepared to give their time and service for protecting the poor and helpless people of these localities. We are not quite so sanguine about the success of Mr. Mashruwala's idea of doing work, having special regard to the apparent indifference or apathy of the police to come to the rescue of the affected public. But still, the matter is worth a trial."

Indu Prakásh (39), 13th July; Sandesh (118), 14th July; Sánj Vartamán (31), 13th July; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 14th July.

26. Under the just rule of the English there are rare instances of criminal assault on women. It is very painful, therefore, to have to record some such instances of exasperating character that have occurred during the last few days. Recently a ruffian tried forcibly to carry away a young school-girl in a thickly populated part of the city and the police only arrived on the spot when the girl had somehow already escaped from his clutches. Similar instances have occurred at Dadar and in Girgaum. Are the vigilant police of Bombay asleep and is the C. I. D. meant to watch the Home Rule movement only? What do we pay taxes for if the Police do not afford the necessary protection to our women? If they are unable to do their duty we should organise volunteer units to guard the honour of our women folk. [The paper then refers to the letters published in the Bombay Chronicle complaining about the alleged mischievous activities of men of the Labour Corps encamped at Dadar and remarks that these events add fuel to the fire when the public are already agitated by the repressive policy of Government. It indignantly asks whether the police have in their cowardice decided to give us a taste of the horrors committed by the Germans on the people of France and Belgium. In conclusion it invites the attention of Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Willingdon to this matter and prays for early redress. The Sandesh writes :—We have received complaints that soldiers harass the people at Dadar, Parel, &c., and some mill-hands have consequently struck work. We also learn that female mill-hands leave work early in the evening as they are afraid to move in the streets after dark. One Mr. Mashruwala who is convinced about the truth of these allegations has called for volunteers to defend the honour of the female labourers. It is undesirable for the people and the authorities alike that matters should come to such a pass. We request the police and the military, therefore, to make early inquiries into this matter and remove the grievances of the people. The Sanj Vartamán publishes at length the details of an interview granted to its representative by the Commissioner of Police, Bombay, wherein Mr. Vincent declared that there was no foundation for the rumours about the alleged murder of an Indian woman at Matunga and the abduction of another in a motor car and that there was no truth in the reports of women and school-girls being molested by the members of the Labour Corps at Dadar as no complaints were made to the police in the matter. The Commissioner of Police is reported to have given an assurance to the representative that he was prepared to render all possible assistance to the public in redressing their grievances, if they had any, provided the aggrieved party lodged a complaint at the nearest Police station. The Jám-e-Jamshed publishes a communiqué issued in the Press by Mr. Vincent to the above effect. Other papers also publish Mr. Vincent's communiqué.]

Indu Prakásh (39), 12th July; Hindusthán (20), 12th July.

27. Mr. A. M. Syed writes to the Indu Prakásh:—Many new people who have come down to Bombay in connection with the several military establishments have been causing much annoyance to ladies in the streets. On Tuesday last at about 3-30 P.M. about 15 of these low-paid employés tried to stop three school girls near the Prarthana Samaj Building in Girgaum. I intervened and the girls were able to go away, but in the meantime those brutes turned their attention to about ten ladies who were standing near a post-office pillar close by. These ladies, however, escaped by running to the other side of the street. There was no policeman on the spot, but I found some high class people idly looking on! I trust the Police and the Military will take steps to prevent similar incidents in future. [The Hindusthán refers to the letters appearing in the Bombay Chronicle of the same date complaining about molestation of women by members of the Labour Corps encamped at Dadar and asks the authorities to investigate into the matter and to remove the causes of complaint as also allay the panic that has been caused by rumours among the illiterate classes by apprising them of the true state of things with regard to this matter by beat of drum as had been done in the case of the panic that had spread among the people at the beginning of the war.]

Comments on Mr. Chamberlain's resignation.

Sánj Vartamán (31), 13th July; Hindusthán (20), 13th July; Prája Mitra and Pársi (28), 14th July.

28. No one will be grieved at the news of Mr. Chamberlain's resignation. His career as Secretary of State for India has proved a failure. The public have been greatly disappointed by the attitude assumed by Mr. Chamberlain towards the policy of repression adopted by local Governments in India. He has supported Mrs. Besant's internment by the Madras Government without inquiring into the matter and has come into disfavour by giving an extension, to Lord Pentland. His resignation will under the circumstances, be received with delight in India. We hope a liberal-minded statesman, who will do justice to the claims of India, will be appointed to succeed Mr. Chamberlain. [The Hindusthán writes:—Mr. Chamberlain has done nothing remarkable for India and has disappointed all the high hopes entertained of him at the time of his appointment and has taken no steps to conciliate the opinion of educated Indians. The Prája Mitra and Pársi writes:—Mr. Chamberlain's resignation has caused neither surprise nor sorrow among the people. He has done nothing remarkable. He put blind faith in his subordinates and was led by them.]

Comments on the Honourable Mr. Cadell's speech at the Mahar recruiting meeting at the Bombay Town Hall.

Indu Prakásh (39), 10th July, Eng. cols.

29. "We do not know how the adoption of the class-company system led to the exclusion of the Mahars. Even now, the Mahars are to be formed into a separate battalion, and we fail to understand how it was necessary not 'to take the Mahars for the army in deference to the prejudices of other castes'. Mr. Cadell, before making this gratuitous attack on the 'other castes', should have at least thought out how he should express himself, if it was not necessary for him to state the facts about this apparent imputation. We cannot for a moment think that Lord Willingdon is responsible for the manner of Mr. Cadell. Lord Willingdon has equal sympathy 'with all classes included within the sphere of his governorship'. It was only one of Mr. Cadell's civilian arguments to the Mahars. Mr. Cadell thought that if he told the fact to the Mahars about Government's apathy to the repeated requests of the Mahars, it would be essentially unbureaucratic. Therefore, he must conceal the fact that Government were apathetic because the only problem before Government was to keep the peace of the country, and Government were always sure, and rightly sure, of the peaceful nature of the people, and that they could safely leave that business to the ordinary Police.......... That is the case, true and convincing as well as noble. But Mr. Cadell must not make out that case. He thought that under any circumstances Government must have granted the Mahars' petitions, and if Government did not, he must throw the blame on 'other castes'. Blasphemy of the 'other castes' is not, Mr. Cadell ought to know, the only way to enlist the Mahars in the army. They want to enlist, and straightway give them an opportunity. His Majesty's Government give it, and Mr. Cadell should have only congratulated himself on being the Chief Secretary to the Bombay Government when His Majesty's Government are giving that privilege to the Mahars."

Comments on the Mesopotamia Commission's Report.
Message (6), 8th July.

30. "It is a mistake to blame Lord Hardinge for the sins of commission and omission which are more directly traceable to the outlived system of government practised in this country and to the ignorance and incapacity of the Secretary of State. Our own opinion is that the blame rests primarily on Mr. Chamberlain and his military experts in London, India and Mesopotamia. It rests in a large measure, too, on the War Council of the Asquith régime, which allowed itself to be influenced by the opinions of the Secretary of State, who has justly earned the nice name of 'know-nothing.'......... It is impossible not to sympathise with Lord Hardinge that a cruel irony of fate should have found him in office at a time when the environments of that office were uncongenial. There can be no doubt that he behaved throughout his viceroyalty with a splendid sense of duty, courage and statesmanship. But for his presence at the helm of affairs in India at a critical juncture like the opening months of the war, Great Britain might have found a far from encouraging prospect in this country."

Indian Social Reformer (3), 15th July; Mahrátta (5), 15th July.

*31. "The responsibility for any mishaps rests, therefore, not with the Government of India, but with the Secretary of State and the Government of which he was a member. That there were not more serious mishaps was solely and wholly due to the implicit confidence reposed by India in Lord Hardinge as the custodian of her honour and her aspirations. No other Viceroy enjoyed in the same or anything like the same measure the confidence and goodwill of the people of India. It is surely an irony of fate that instead of being thanked for his magnificent services to India and the Empire in this great crisis of our history, this noble-minded statesman should be called upon to defend himself before his countrymen......... The telegram which the Bombay Presidency Association has sent to the Prime Minister very aptly embodies the universal feeling of the people of India regarding the Mesopotamian Commission's ill-conceived comments on Lord Hardinge's share of responsibility for the mistakes of the campaign." [The Mahrátta writes:—"The Mesopotamia muddle—is it not a proof that the Bureaucrats with all their vanity are no gods, but poor-brained mortals who will make mistakes, nay, blunders, grave and even criminal? Does it lie in the mouth of such men to tell us that we are unfit to rule ourselves?"]

Indu Prakásh (39), 11th July, Eng. cols.

32. "We are seriously afraid the Council of India in love with their pliable tool Mr. Chamberlain had determined to knock down the noble Lord Hardinge who was too tough a nut for them. The Commissioners that sat to inquire into the failure of the Mesopotamian campaign seem to have paid little heed to the supreme fact that the Parliament has created as an oligarchy over the head of the viceroy that cabalish body, viz., the Council of India, a body that is responsible to nobody and is able to hatch mischief in the cells of darkness.......... Lord Hardinge pathetically refers to his past honourable service for thirty-seven years. He does this merely on account of his supreme sense of duty. Had his Lordship been as unblushing as Mr. Austen Chamberlain he would not have shown so much submission. Mr. Austen Chamberlain, in fact, does not show any. In spite of the fact of the Mesopotamian failure and reprobation of the Commission, he sticks to his office with a supreme imperturbability......... On no account must Lord Hardinge come by any trouble. All the greater responsibility rests on Mr. Chamberlain. Not only did he fail in the Mesopotamian compaign, but also has he kept himself culpably ignorant of Indian affairs and criminally subservient to the desires of the Council of India. He must go out of office."

Kesari (106), 10th July.

33. Every one regrets that Lord Hardinge has been censured in the Mesopotamia Commission's report. It is a glaring instance of England's ingratitude that the noble statesman who served her faithfully for 37 years in important positions has had piteously to appeal to his former record of services. We assure Lord Hardinge that we are gratefully thankful to him for his services to India. We need not travel far to see the difference in the effect produced on the public, firstly by the utterances of the Viceroy who warned the I. C. S. that it was necessary to reinvest Indians with the rights of Swarájya and then by the orders of the official who asked Indians to cease thinking about Swarájya. During the regimé of the first, three lakhs of men could be sent out of India while under the regimé of the latter, 6,000 men could not be recruited for the Indian Defence Force.

Sánj Vartamán (31), 7th July; Bombay Samáchár (59), 9th July; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 8th July; Hindusthán (20), 10th July; Shri Venkateshwar (80), 8th July; Indian Loyalist (22), 12th July; Young India (14), 11th July; Sunday Tatler* (13), 15th July.

34. The allegations made against Lord Hardinge in the report of the Mesopotamia Commission are quite unfair. The people of India are at one in regarding Lord Hardinge as free from blame. It is not Lord Hardinge but the administrative machinery of India that is responsible for the failure of the Mesopotamia Expedition. Lord Hardinge was bound down by the military policy which gave the sole authority in such matters to the Commander-in-Chief. Lord Hardinge's statement in the House of Lords goes to enhance our respect for his statesmanship. He has vindicated the honour of India and thrown light on the help given by her in the war. The administrative machinery that is responsible for the failure of the Mesopotamia Expedition should be overhauled. The whole of India should support Lord Hardinge and thank him for his spirited explanation. [The Bombay Samáchár refuses to regard Lord Hardinge as responsible for the failure of the expedition and calls upon the people of India to assure both Houses of Parliament of their confidence in the ex-Viceroy. The Praja Mitra and Pársi, the Hindusthán, the Shri Venkateshwar and the Indian Loyalist dwell on the services rendered by Lord Hardinge to India and express their admiration for the explanation given by him and thank him for enumerating the valuable services rendered by India. All of them express hopes that Lord Hardinge will come out of his troubles unscathed. Young India writes :—"It is after all the governed alone that have the last word, and in their considered judgment, Lord Hardinge is free from the base insinuations and malicious attacks that have been made on him as an administrator and statesman." The Sunday Tatler writes :—"For the rest, nothing has been shown to cast the slightest blame on Lord Hardinge as Viceroy in war time. Indian opinion is emphatic on the point and herein it is supported by the best Anglo-Indian opinion, in which latter category Calcutta opinion cannot be included."]

Comments on Lord Hardinge's statement with regard to the Mesopotamia Commission's Report.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 9th July ; Rást Goftár* (30), 15th July, Eng. cols.

35. Commenting upon the statement made by Lord Hardinge in the House of Lords with regard to the Mesopotamia Commission's Report, the Praja Mitra and Pársi remarks :—"How many rulers have we now in India who are prepared to say what Lord Hardinge did and to tread in his footsteps ? Nevertheless, it is the verdict of India that counts so far as the position of a ruler in India is concerned. Lord Ripon, Lord Reay claimed to be judged by the verdict of the people of India. Lord Hardinge has followed their example, and holds a place in the hearts of the people of India very near theirs. .... The complete reversal of his great and wise policy, repression rampant in word and in deed, this is the order of the day in India and it fills all loyal well-wishers of Government with grave misgivings. Lord Hardinge's place is not at the bar of Parliament or English public opinion, but back to the Viceroyalty of India to restore general confidence and help India in moving along the appointed path to the goal of full partnership in the Empire." [The Rást Goftár writes :—"The statement which Lord Hardinge made in self-defence against the sweeping allegations of the Mesopotamia Commission was at once so satisfactory and conclusive as to render his anxiety for a verdict of India on his alleged failure an act of supererogation. Since, however, India has been asked by His Lordship to pronounce its verdict, it is summed up in the predominant sentiment in this country which regards Lord Hardinge as the saviour of India and of the Empire. That verdict was pronounced in no mistakable manner when in the midst of his administration India with one voice appealed for a prolongation of his term of office."]

Comments on the proceedings of the Bombay Exemption Tribunal.

Message (6), 11th July.

36. "In the course of its work, the Bombay Exemption Tribunal has propounded some wonderful ideas regarding 'work of national importance'. We pointed out some time ago that this body summing up in itself the highest wisdom of mankind had come to the conclusion that distillery work was one of the utmost national improtance, and that, therefore, those who are engaged on it must be exempted from joining the Defence Force. Next in importance only to this is the Gramophone Trade. At its sitting yesterday at the Town Hall the Tribunal had before it the consideration of an application from a Mr. Sutherland of the Gramophone Company.......... Captain S. T. Sheppard, representing the General Officer Commanding Bombay Brigade on the Tribunal, interposed with the remark that gramophone business was not work of national interest. But the Honourable Mr. W. C. Shepherd sympathised with Mr. Sutherland and agreeing with the view that the closing down of the business was not desirable in the national interests, granted the application. We wonder if there is a Maharaja of Bobbili in this Presidency, who might take us to task for our impertinence and disloyalty if we approve of the Honourable Mr. Sheppard's view and also suggest to him to bear in mind that fiddling also is a matter of vital national interest. If a fiddler turns up to-morrow before the Tribunal, we trust Mr. Sheppard will not deny him exemption."

The policy of the New Times newspaper.

New Times (7), 3rd July.

37. After announcing that it has received from a gentleman who wishes to be unknown a gift of Rs. 1,000 towards the New Times Fund, the paper remarks :—"We are anxious to take, in all matters, an independent opinion of men and measures. One is our God, the Universal Father, one our Scripture, the Truth of Conscience and History : one our Passion, the service of the Mother Immortal. So it is we regard the cause of the New Times as sacred ; and every expression of sympathy coming from our readers is to us a source of comfort and strength in the work on which we are engaged. We wish to heal the wounds with which is wounded the Nation that we love ; we wish to reconcile people and the Government one to the other ; we wish to serve the King and the Empire. And if our efforts are opposed and our work embarassed, we still stand sure upon the path of service without a halt, withour a fear, knowing the truth of History that the Good and the Right, and the Pure and the True are Immortal and will vindicate themselves one day."

Immediate action should be taken by Government against Pathan terrorism and the Bombay slave traffic.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 12th July.

38. "Since the public conscience was rudely aroused to the shocking abuses of slave traffic in Bombay, by the hideous facts of a murder case in the Bombay High Court in April last, there has been a great deal of agitation and discussion over this question, and the allied subject of Pathan terrorism. But we do not see that, except for a halting proposition brought forward in the Corporation, there has been any practical result of that agitation. In the meanwhile, fresh evidence of the extent and intensity of this evil is being brought to light in the proceedings of our criminal courts. Only within the last few days several cases concerned with this traffic, have come up for trial before the courts. Two of them are pending in the Police Court, and one was disposed of before Mr. Justice Kajiji in the Criminal Sessions of the High Court on Monday. This last was a shocking and pitiable story of how the local slave-market is being supplied and kept running.......... It seems to us that the most strenuous measures are needed, and that too promptly, to hunt down from our midst this race of vampires. If the dreadful murder case in last April has not been sufficient to rouse the Government and the public, we think that in the light of what is now being daily revealed, further inaction is almost criminal. The whole question must be thoroughly investigated. There must be a commission immediately appointed to go into the conditions of the local slave-market. Sections 372 and 373 of the Penal Code are sufficiently wide and comprehensive. But it is now common knowledge that they are being constantly evaded."

Comments on the recent case of assault by a Pathan on a woman at Charni Road.

Indu Prakásh (39), 13th July.

39. Commenting on the case of assault on a woman by a Pathan at the Charni Road Tramway Jnnction, the Indu Parkásh says that the woman was saved from further ill-treatment by the timely arrival of a European Inspector of Police. It remarks that a large crowd including some policemen assembled on the spot, but no one attempted to rescue the woman. It asks whether the Pathans are allowed to assault with impunity their debtors who fail to repay them in time and whether the police have instructions not to arrest the Pathans.

Comments on the taking of security from the New Times and the Hindu Missionary.

Kesari (106), 10th July.

40. Officials often charge political agitators with committing breach of the public peace. But it is surprising to note that many a time they themselves do things consciously or unconciously that go to excite the people. Of the sentences objected to while demanding security from the Karáchi New Times the following was one, 'Government are attempting to put down Home Rule agitation by interning Mrs. Besant'. Now is this sentence more likely to excite the people or the demand of security from the paper that wrote it? The Magistrate ordered that security should be taken from the paper without taking any notice of the explanations of the editor. But the Karáchi New Times is at least a political paper. But the Hindu Missionary which has recently been started in Bombay only for religious discussion had to pay a security of Rs. 500 at the very beginning. Mr. Vaidya quietly submitted to the order requiring him to pay down money and presented G. P. Notes of Rs. 500 in accordance with the Press Act. Who knows whether the officials themselves have ceased to care for the credit of Government? The Magistrate plainly told Mr. Vaidya to pay Rs. 170 more as the market value of the G. P. Notes was only Rs. 330. Should not the higher officials ask him to explain why he discredited the G. P. Notes and why he dishonoured the law? The clause permitting the deposit of G. P. Notes was introduced by the Select Committee and much was made of the concession by Government at that time. But where lies the concession when an additional sum of Rs. 170 had to be paid along with the G. P. Notes? It is really shameful that while one thing is said while enacting a measure, the lower officials should resort to hair-splitting while giving effect to it and that the Government officials themselves should lower the value of the G. P. Notes in the market.

Government should be asked to disclose its policy as regards the rights of Khots.

Satya Shodhak (119), 8th July.

41. The Khoti Sabha of Chiplun is said to have come into existence as the result of an inquiry by the Assistant Collector, Northern Division, Ratnágiri, of the Khots whether they were willing to part with their rights in exchange for an amount twenty times the Khots' profit. On the other hand, Government stated at the last meeting of the Legislative Council that the question of extinguishing Khots' rights was not under consideration. Under the circumstances, we would suggest that some elected member of the Legislative Council should interpellate Government on the following points at the ensuing meeting of the Legislative Council:—Do Government desire to extinguish the rights of the Khots? If not, how is it that the inquiries of local officials, while on tour, support the general belief that some such step is contemplated? Has there been any demand that Government should determine the value of the Khots' rights to allow the tenant to have the option of purchasing his land? Are not inquiries of the character referred to by local officials likely to create further ill-will between the Khots and their tenants?

LEGISLATION.

Comments on the Honouable Mr. Patel's Primary Education Bill.

Prakásh (116), 11th July.

42. The Honourable Mr. Patel's Bill does not require all Municipalities to make primary education free and compulsory, but only provides that those Municipalities who are able to bear the necessary expenditure may introduce it with the permission of Government. Thus the Bill has a very limited scope as very few of the existing Municipalities will be able to avail themselves of the benefit of its provisions. The Koimbatore Municipality has had the bitter experience that Government oppose even a small measure of this kind. The Government of Madras showed by their attitude that they would neither make primary education free and compulsory themselves nor would they allow any Municipality under their jurisdiction to do so. Our own Presidency has had no such experience, but the attitude of the bureaucracy is the same everywhere. The object of the present Bill is that Government should not come in the way of a Municipality if it desires to make primary education free and compulsory even if they do not wish to take that step themselves. We would request His Excellency Lord Willingdon to take advantage of the extended term of his office and make his regime memorable at least to a small extent by showing that he did not oppose the demand for free and compulsory primary education in some small areas of the Presidency.

RAILWAYS.

Railway grievances of Indians.

Hitechhu (65), 1st July.

43. In the course of a letter addressed to the Hitechhu, Mr. Jivraj Gokuldas Nensi, Honorary joint-Secretary of the Indian Passengers and Traffic Relief Association, Bombay, dwells on the arbitrary and insolent attitude displayed by railway officials of all denominations of the different railway administrations in India not only towards the poor and illiterate but even towards educated and well-to-do passengers and on the hardships they have to undergo while performing railway journeys. He particularly lays stress on the hardships suffered by those who are bound for places of pilgrimage. [He then goes on as follows:—Alas, what is the condition of the children of holy Ind! Oh, mother Bhárat, how canst thou bear the tyranny perpetrated by thy sons born on thy soil on the mothers, sisters and daughters of their own country? Fie upon such railway servants who are not ashamed of being called Indians! The writer then refers to the question of the right of railway administrations to reserve compartments for Europeans and Anglo-Indians and tries to establish the unsoundness of the Government plea that the practice of reserving railway compartments was adopted in response to the demand made by the Hindus for some such separate arrangements on account of the differences between them and the Europeans in the matter of taking of food, etc., by inquiring why the Parsis and the [illegible] are not allowed to enter those reserved comartments. He regards it as a sort of trick to deceive the people. The writer praises the efforts that are being made by the Karachi Citizens' Association in the direction of either starting a branch of the Bombay Passengers and Traffic Relief Association or having a similar institution on an independent basis. He also appeals to the people in Sind to help themselves and their countrymen by becoming members of his Association in Bombay on payment of the annual fee of one rupee. The paper elsewhere endorses the suggestion made by Mr. Jivraj for the starting at Karáchi of a branch of the Association in Bombay and also supports his appeal to the Sind people to become members of his Association. It remarks that if there had been any such Association in Karáchi a case like the recent one in which Mr. Durgadas B. Advani was concerned would not have suffered in importance as it actually did because he had to take up the whole burden of it on himself.]

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 19th July 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 29 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 21st July 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to sent Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British Rule:

Advice to the Parsis to keep aloof from the Home Rule movement . . 25
Allegation that the Viceroy appealed to Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya to induce the Congress and the Moslem League to moderate their proposed scheme of reforms 23
Comments on the appointment of Mr. E. S. Montagu as Secretary of State for India . . . . 7—10
Comments on Sir James Meston's remarks before the United Provinces Legislative Council regarding the political situation in India . 11—13
Comments on the resignation of Mr. Chamberlain . . . . . 1—6
Comments on the withdrawal by the Punjab Government of the order prohibiting newspapers from publishing accounts of the meeting at Lahore to protest against the Madras internments . . . 21
Controversy on social matters among the Borah community . . 30
Creation of "men on the spot" 20
Disapproval of Swadeshi that is not honest and the boycott of foreign goods 24
Duty of Government to enact legislation for the better control of Muhammadan Wakf funds 29
Interned persons are not given the privileges which convicts enjoy . 22
Need of political reforms in India at an early date 15
Plea for an intellectual entente between England and India . . . 19
Reflections on the present political situation in India . . . . 16 & 17
Students and politics 27
The forthcoming Hindu-Muhammadan Conference at Bombay . . 26
The Lord Bishop of Bombay on Indian polity 14
There should be no misrepresentation about the political agitation of the Indians 18
What is the best way to inculcate the Imperial idea in Indian schools and colleges 28
Complaint about inadequate ferry arrangements at certain places in the Ratnágiri District 52
Indian students in England: The Students Department in England and Indian students 49
His Excellency the Governor: Comments on —'s letter explaining the absence of his representative at the late Dr. Dadabhoy Nowrojee's funeral 31

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

Judicial matters :

Comments on a Bombay case in which a Pathan who was punished slightly for offering public insult to a Hindu woman 50

Complaint that papers produced in civil suits are not returned to the parties for days together 51

Police :

Comments on the — Commissioner's explanation with regard to the alleged "reign of terror" at Dádar (Bombay) . . . . . 39—41

Contradiction of the reported "reign of terror" at Dádar 42

Many villages in the Ratnágiri District are unable to guard against depredations of wild beasts owing to want of firearms 44

The — and the stoppage of public meetings 43

Press Act :

Comments on the demand of security from the Sanjibani, a Calcutta newspaper 46

Comments on the security taken from the New Times of Karáchi. . 45

Public Service :

Alleged grievances of the Public Works Department Upper Subordinates in the Bombay Presidency 48

Vatandar kulkarnis should sue the Secretary of State in the matter of the commutation of their vatans 47

Sind :

Alleged unreasonableness and harshness of the decision of the Judicial Commissioner in Sind to debar non-graduates from appearing for the — Pleaders' Examination 57

Government should take notice of the mischievous nonsense being daily poured out by the vernacular press in — 55

Suggestions for the improvement of Muhammadan education in — . 56

The duty of the Hindus and Muhammadans of — to unite closely and co-operate together for the welfare of the province . . . 54

Vaccination : Complaint about injurious effects of old vaccine lymph being used in Poona 53

War :

A review of the — situation 36

Alleged Pro-German tendencies of Holland, Denmark, Sweden and Norway 37

Comments on the Bombay Town Hall meeting to encourage the scheme for a Mahar battalion 33

Comments on the Government of India's communiqué about their acquisition of imported silver 35

How the — has humbled John Bull 32

Lord Hardinge and the Mesopotamia report. 34

Manifesto of the German Majority Socialists 38

LEGISLATION—

Comments on the Patna University Bill 58

RAILWAYS—

Suggestion that the various Railway Administrations in India should appoint leaders of the Hindu and Muhammadan communities as visitors if they want to know thoroughly the grievances and requirements of Indian passengers 59

MUNICIPALITIES—

The recent fire in Prag Mahal, Bombay 60

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Comments on the resignation of Mr. Chamberlain.

Young India (14), 18th July.

1. "One of the topics of the week is the flight of Mr. Chamberlain from Whitehall. The "event" has aroused considerable interest among people in this country; and if all do not rejoice over the resignation of Mr. Chamberlain, no one does at any rate regret that he who had proved a fifth wheel in the Juggernath of Indian progress has, meteor-like, disappeared from the Indian horizon. That is the outstanding fact and the rest is a matter of small consequence.......... Mr. Chamberlain was an out and out failure at the India Office. There is not a single act of his, whether in dispensing the large and lucrative gifts of patronage or in determining the administrative policy of India, which gives evidence of a large-minded, if not liberal, and also generous appreciation of his very great responsibilities. His first and sole care after coming to office was to eliminate from the responsibilities of Indian Administration men of known sympathies with the people and replace them by the Tory lordlings of minor political talents and to win back to the ways of reactionarism those who still possessed any liberal tendencies at all. We are not very much concerned here with the immediate cause leading up to the resignation of the man who seemed to have regarded himself as quite indispensable for the safety of the British Empire in India. We should, however, be glad to learn that it was as much due to his errors of judgment in regard to the Mesopotamia Expedition as to the Imperial Government's disapproval of his blundering and floundering policy in this country."

Indian Social Reformer (3), 22nd July.

*2. "It looks very chivalrous for him to stand up in the House of Commons and take upon himself the responsibility for the actions of the Governors in India. But, as a matter of fact, it is nothing of the kind. It is merely playing to the official gallery at the expense of the people of this country. His duty is to carry out the intentions of the British Democracy towards the people of India, intentions which are not infrequently frustrated by the action of the local authorities. If Mr. Chamberlain had not the strength to hold his own against his advisers in military matters, it is just possible he may have not got it where the larger aspects of Indian administration are concerned. We have reason to think that Mr. Chamberlain was not at all reactionarily disposed towards Indian aspirations, but there can be no doubt that he was pre-disposed to the hypnotic fascination of the men on the spot and was afraid to take responsibility. Under the circumstances, it is perhaps as well that he has resigned."

Message (6), 15th July; Indu Prakásh (39), 14th July, Eng. cols.; Gujaráti* (16), 22nd July, Eng. cols.

3. "The whole country will breathe a sigh of relief that the regime of incompetence and ineptitude has for once ended at the India Office.......... Since he was foisted upon the destinies of 'the vast inarticulate millions of India', by the terrestrial providence of the Asquithian Government, Mr. Chamberlain has tenaciously clung to his high office through fair weather and foul and with a Savoire faire, which was as astonishing as remarkable. No amount of condemnation whether in the public press or on the platform turned him from the steady purpose which he had set to himself, first of dispensing the gift of patronage among the lordlings of the Tory party, and second, of placing immeasurable faith in the infallibility of the men on the spot." [The Indu Prakásh writes:—"If, however, Indians have not been able to dislodge him, the British democracy has been able to, though in connection with an affair not directly connected with the governance of India. We are not glad about his resignation merely because we cannot stoop to being glad over anybody's fall.......... By the bye we congratulate Mr. Chamberlain on his being able to do at least one good thing, viz., laying down an office which he never deserved." The Gujaráti writes:—"Mr. Austen Chamberlain's resignation called forth feelings of regret and uncertainty, not unmixed with a feeling of satisfaction at least in some quarters. With all his talents and force of character the traditions and principles of his party prevented him from doing as much for this country as he could have done. Nor is that all. His presence at the head of the India Office and that of Lord Curzon as a member of the Cabinet were generally believed to have encouraged the adoption of a reactionary and even repressive policy in this country."]

Dnyán Prakásh (36), 15th July; Sandesh (118), 15th July.

4. No one will say Mr. Chamberlain was particularly sympathetic towards India. He ably upheld, however, India's cause in the matter of the increased import-duty on cotton goods. In other respects he did not either try to acquaint himself with the trend of public opinion or else having done it, purposely ran counter to it. In the beginning of his régime as Secretary of State he frankly avowed his ignorance in many matters; but even when he could not plead this excuse he did not try to curb the high-handedness of the Indian and the Provincial Governments. But however little he sympathised with the political aspirations of the Indian leaders, he had come to realise since he came into contact with His Highness the Maharajah of Bikanir and Sir S. P. Sinha that it was imperative to introduce important changes in the administration of India to meet popular demands. Although his régime so far was not a promising one, we cannot say that his resignation will necessarily benefit unless either Mr. Montagu or Mr. Charles Roberts, both of whom have Indian experience, is appointed to succeed Mr. Chamberlain. The British Government are well aware of the effect produced by the repressive policy inaugurated in India. They have now a good opportunity of checking that policy and pursuing one of conciliation instead. [The Sandesh writes:—Mr. Chamberlain's resignation is the most satisfactory news of the week. Indians do not think Lord Hardinge is in any way to blame for the failure of the first Mesopotamia expedition. Mr. Chamberlain exhibited want of statesmanship by backing officials of the type of Lord Pentland. The joy felt by Indians at Mr. Chamberlain's resignation will be increased hundredfold if Lord Hardinge is appointed to succeed him. The present form of government does not conduce to the contentment of the people and it is neither wise nor statesmanlike to disguise this fact which is as clear as daylight. It is absolutely necessary for the British Government to give an assurance by means of a proclamation that the rights of swaráјya would be conferred on India within a stated period.]

Kesari (106), 17th July.

5. Indians have protested against the censure passed on Lord Hardinge by the Mesopotamia Commission, but they are glad at the resignation of Mr. Chamberlain. One encouraged as far as possible Indian aspirations and the other gave a free hand to repression in this country. Not only that, but he persisted in supporting the policy of repression. Mr. Chamberlain charges Mrs. Besant with insolence, but the published account of her interview with Lord Pentland which has not been questioned by Lord Pentland does not contain a single insolent word. Even admitting the truth of all the charges made by Mr. Chamberlain against Mrs. Besant, we fail to see how the Defence of India Act is applicable in her case. Mr. Chamberlain is gone and we hope he will not be succeeded by one who would out-Chamberlain Chamberlain.

Bombay Samáchár (59), 16th July; Indian Loyalist (22), 19th July; Akhbár-e-Islám (56), 16th July.

6. The Bombay Samáchár takes an appreciative review of Mr. Chamberlain's term of office as Secretary of State for India and lays special stress on the sympathy shown by him towards the Indian people and his anxiety to deal justly with them, as was evidenced by his appointment of Indians as representatives on the Imperial Conference, the increase of Indian members on the India Council from two to three and the appointment to the posts of such persons as would voice the opinion of the Indian people and his staunch support of the import duties on foreign cotton goods without effecting any corresponding increase in the Excise duties on Indian yarn in spite of the strong opposition of Manchester. It expresses a hope that a man of the type of Lord Morley may be appointed to the post. [The Indian Loyalist also writes in appreciation of Mr. Chamberlain's services. The Akhbár-e-Islám on the other hand opines that Mr. Chamberlain has done nothing for India.]

Comments on the appointment of Mr. E. S. Montagu as Secretary of State for India.

Hindusthán (20), 19th July; Sánj Vartamán (31), 19th and 20th July; Bombay Samáchár (59), 21st July; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 19th and 20th July.

7. Referring to the appointment of Mr. E. S. Montagu as Secretary of State for India in succession to Mr. Austen Chamberlain, and quoting the views recently expressed by the new Indian Secretary to the effect that though England has done well in India her mission is not yet over and that since the Indians have joined the British people to fight the common enemy they should be prepared to give the people of India what they want, the Hindusthán inquiries whether there is any one in India who will not rejoice at the appointment, as Secretary of State, of a statesman with such liberal views. It remarks that the Indian people should thank Mr. Llyod George for this happy choice. Dwelling upon the likelihood of persons like Lords Curzon and Milner in the Cabinet endeavouring to check the liberal policy of Mr. Montagu, the paper, at the same time, hopes that the new Secretary will fully acquaint himself with Indian matters before placing great reliance on the men on the spot in India and that the alleged policy of repression now inaugurated will undergo a change. [The Sánj Vartamán remarks that India receives with cordial acclamation the appointment of Mr. Montagu as the new Secretary of State for India. It observes that the Indian people have confidence in him and that India builds high hopes on him. The paper is inclined to believe that the appointment has been influenced by the present agitation of the Indian people against the policy of Mr. Chamberlain and maintains that by means of this appointment Mr. Llyod George has done justice to India. It then goes on to dwell on Mr. Montagu's liberal and sympathetic attitude towards Indian aspirations and expresses the hope that though he will meet with opposition in the Cabinet from Conservative statesmen he will find a supporter of his policy in the present Premier. In the subsequent issue the paper adversely criticises the action of Anglo-Indian newspapers in disapproving of Mr. Montagu's appointment and regards the advice given to him by the Pioneer of not interfering with the Indian authorities in the administration of the country as detrimental to the interests of India. It remarks that by such adverse criticism the Anglo-Indian papers not only do not render any service to the Empire but merely mislead the British public. The Bombay Samachár expresses its approbation of Mr. Montagu's appointment and remarks that since this appointment and the speeches of Messrs. Chamberlain and Montagu and the statement of Sir James Meston have disillusioned those who read in some of the recent speeches and actions of provincial authorities an inauguration of a policy of repression in India, they should now lead the people in the right track and should now do their duty by encouraging Indians to make up the force of 6,000 volunteers required by Government for the Defence of India Force. The Jam-e-Jamshed remarks that the alarm expressed by the Anglo-Indian papers in this country at the resignation of Mr. Chamberlain was significant of their apprehension lest a statesman having sympathy with the Indian Home Rulers might be appointed to the vacancy. Expressing its hope that Indian aspirations will receive a great support from the new Indian Secretary, the paper observes that the latter should without any delay direct his attention to securing an announcement by the British Government to the effect that swarájya would be granted to India in the near future. In the subsequent issue the paper hopes that Mr. Montagu will not follow the misleading advice of the Anglo-Indian Press of trusting completely "the man on the spot". It exhorts Mr. Montagu to follow the policy of Lord Hardinge of hearing both the officials as well as the public leaders before arriving at a conclusion in respect of Indian matters.]

Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 20th July, Eng. cols.; and 19th July.

8. "We have now practically a Secretary of State of our own choosing. Had the appointment rested with the people of India they would have nominated Mr. Montagu, and as a matter of fact he has been appointed. This appointment is significant of a great deal. .... No Secretary of State for India was so fully equipped for his high office. Mr. Montagu knows all the details of the working of the India Office and he has an intimate knowledge of Indian affairs. He personally knows many Indians and has openly supported their aspirations. His appointment has not been made as a venture or as an experiment. It has been deliberately done with the intention of improving the situation in India, for every day the country was being brought nearer to an impasse." [In the Gujaráti columns of its previous issue the paper expresses gratification at the new appointment and believes that the Indians will thank Mr. Chamberlain for resigning his post. It interpretes the words uttered by Mr. Montagu in the House of Commons in connection with the Mesopotamia Commission's Report wherein he urged the policy of greater responsibility on the part of the Indian Government towards the people of India as an advocacy on his part for laying the foundation of swarájya in India.]

Indu Prakásh (39), 19th July, Eng. cols.; Dnyán Prakásh (36), 20th July; Sandesh (118), 20th July; Mantri (109), 20th July.

9. "The peculiar merit of his appointment is this, that it is the appointment of a man of firm and settled convictions. These convictions are not a sealed book to the world. They have often been declared in and out of the House of Commons in terms clear and definite, and altogether divested of that ambiguity which modern diplomacy has raised almost to the rank of a science.......... But a few days ago, in the course of the Mesopotamia debate, Mr. Montagu put in a strong plea for 'a policy of greater responsibility on the part of the Indian Government towards the Indian people and, consequently, less responsibility at Home'. This is exactly what Indians mean by their demand for responsible Government. Such a remarkable concurrence of views between a Secretary of State and the people of India is indeed a landmark in the history of British rule and a good augury for the future." [The Dnyán Prakásh congratulates the Ministry upon the appointment of Mr. Montagu. The Sandesh also welcomes the appointment and calls upon the people to carry on persistently the agitation for self-government to strengthen the hands of the new Secretary. The Mantri believes that Mr. Montagu's appointment will put a stop to the policy of the authorities in India which has been causing discontent among the people.]

Message (6), 20th July; Indian Social Reformer* (3), 22nd July; Mahrátta* (5), 22nd July; Gujaráti* (16), 22nd July, Eng. cols.; Kaiser-i-Hind* (24), 22nd July, Eng. cols.; Rást Goftár* (30), 22nd July, Eng. cols.

10. "So far as one can see, the charge has been entrusted to one from whom hope has not yet fled, and in whom we can still hope for a better ordering of things. Mr. Montagu is not the 'dark horse' that Mr. Chamberlain was. He is known in India, he is respected by India; he knows India and respects India.......... If his recent speech does not belie the promise of the future, we may reasonably hope that as Secretary of State he will make India his own and look at the India Office not as an exploiting ground in the interests of the political party to which he belongs, but as a 'sacred trust' to be held and administered in the interests of those who go to make up that trust." [The Indian Social Reformer writes:—"There has been great relief throughout the country at the appointment of Mr. E. S. Montagu as Secretary of State for India in place of Mr. Austen Chamberlain.......... The Times, criticising his appointment, mentions that in the course of his speech Mr. Montagu almost ridiculed the India Council. This is, of course, a hostile version. But if Mr. Montagu had departed from the attitude of superstitious veneration of this ancient institution for the old and weary veterans of the Indian Civil Service, the people of India, at any rate, will not view his action with dismay.......... The situation has perceptibly lightened since the announcement of the appointment."

The Mahrátta writes :—“ Love of their country is to Indians something more imaginative, something more religious than anywhere else in the world. Mr. Montagu realises this and from such a man we may indeed expect solid help in our progress. The ‘ crush-it ’ policy that has been set on foot by the predecessor of Mr. Montagu cannot commend itself to the latter, if he honestly and sincerely believes that we do worship our Land as we worship our Mother with a devotion literally religious in all its aspects.......... Mr. Montagu has great hopes formed about him. And those who have formed hopes about him have not done so without a proper basis. Mr. Montagu’s sympathetic and emphatic utterances in regard to India and his good work as Under-Secretary for India constitute this basis. Will he belie the hopes formed upon this basis ? ” The Gujaráti writes :—“ Mr. Lloyd George has done a great service to India and also to the cause of British rule in this country by appointing Mr. Montagu Secretary of State for India.......... Momentous questions will come up before him for solution and it is a matter of the utmost satisfaction that the Council of the Secretary of State for India will have at its head a gifted and sympathetic statesman like Mr. Montagu to look after and guide the affairs of India.” The Kaiser-i-Hind writes :—“ The appointment of Mr. Montagu to succeed Mr. Chamberlain as the Secretary of State for India will be received with unqualified satisfaction by all classes of His Majesty’s subjects from one end of India to the other. A change from Mr. Chamberlain to Mr. Montagu means much particularly in view of the crisis to which matters have been pushed by the repressive and reactionary policies of the bureaucracy in this country. Unlike Mr. Chamberlain, Mr. Montagu is familiar with the Indian problems, and what is more, he can, if he is so inclined, solve such problems without the help and co-operation of the so-called men-on-the spot.” The Rást Goftár remarks :—“ Mr. Montagu’s appointment is a great concession to popular sentiment and the country is grateful to Mr. Lloyd George for his attempted reconciliation. The appointment of another Secretary of State of the reactionary tendencies of Mr. Chamberlain would have spelled a grave mistake. As it is, Mr. Montagu’s selection is a brilliant stroke of policy which would go a great way—at least for the present—in appeasing the passions that have been aroused and in reconciling the people to their Government.”]

Comments on Sir James Meston’s remarks before the United Provinces Legislative Council regarding the political situation in India.

Message (6), 19th July.

11. “ We should be extremely happy to flatter ourselves that Sir James Meston’s statment to his Legislative Council yesterday marks the beginning of a returning sense of responsibility in the higher councils of the Government of this country.......... Government have failed to bring statemanship to bear on the problems conducing to the vigorous prosecution of the war. And while eager to see the world freed from the clutches of a domineering insolent German culture and the Prussian sabres, it has, doubtless unconsciously, tried to set up in this country something like a replica of it.......... Sir James Meston seemed to regard the present state of affairs in India with anxiety. Certainly, no friend of the Empire could afford to remain complacent in the face of the tragic tale which the last few weeks have laid bare. Where Government and the people ought to be pulling together, we have had the gloomy spectacle of the two pulling asunder, because certain good people who held the reins of power in this land did not know how to live in amity, peace and goodwill with their neighbours.......... May we not ask where was all the need for it ? Is it no small consolation to be told, in the face of accumulating evidence of reaction and repression, that the Imperial Government was giving careful attention to Indian suggestions regarding political reforms in India ?......... Sir James Meston seems to think that it is all the fault of the people that there is excitement and restlessness in the country. All that we can say of him is that he has sadly missed the truth.”

Rást Goftár (30), 22nd July, Eng. cols.

12. “ We are thankful to Sir James for his sympathetic utterances and hope to see his example followed by his confrérs of the other Provinces. As it is, he is almost alone among Provincial satraps to allay as he attempted the popular apprehensions. ‘ There seemed to be a fear' he said, 'that the Government was in some way preparing a policy of reaction'. We wish we can take Sir James at his word in his assurance to the contrary; but the policy which has been followed since the departure of Lord Hardinge from India does not permit, we daresay, of this optimistic survey thereof by Sir James.......... The appointment of Mr. Montagu to the office of the Secretary of State might improve things even in India itself and there would be no longer then the suspicion and mistrust in the public mind which Sir James tried to assail in his speech."

Sánj Vartamán (31), 15th July; Hindusthán (20), 19th July; Bombay Samáchár (59), 20th July.

13. Instead of decrying the present political agitation in this country, Sir James Meston has given expression to sympathetic views calculated to encourage the Indian people. We feel sure his speech will act as a soothing balm on many a drooping heart. What the Indian people want is that Government and the official classes should sympathise with their movements and should be enthusiastic about their success. But short-sighted people like Lord Pentland have adopted repressive measures and have helped to spread discontent in the country. People of this country will, however, heave a sigh of relief at the announcement made by Mr. Chamberlain that the Imperial Government will soon make a pronouncement with respect to political reform in India. [The Hindusthán thanks Sir James for the views he has expressed showing his sympathy with the political aspirations of Indians and opines that his speech will greatly tend to dispel their misgivings about the future and fill them with hope. It asks His Excellency the Viceroy to make a pronouncement with respect to the future of India and thus take the people in his confidence. The Bombay Samáchár is of opinion that Sir James Meston's speech throws some light on the nature of the reforms that are under contemplation by the Imperial Government and would, therefore, go a great way in reassuring the Indian public on the question. It believes that Sir James' speech and the announcement made by Mr. Chamberlain in Parliament about Indian reforms will help the people to keep their heads cool and facilitate the task of the popular leaders.]

The Lord Bishop of Bombay on Indian polity.
Indian Social Reformer (3), 22nd July.

14. Commenting on a letter from the Lord Bishop of Bombay on the political situation in India, the Indian Social Reformer writes:—"We have said above that the faith of the Indian people in the good intentions of the British democracy has been unfailing and absolute. But—and this is a factor which His Lordship has left out of account—the Indian people also feel that the bureaucracy in India has not been and cannot, in the nature of things, be a true and ready interpreter of the intentions of the British democracy towards the Indian people. His Lordship himself realises this in a way when he says with evident disappointment that the Government of India for reasons which are as unknown to him as to any of us utters no word calculated to allay the excitement in the public mind in India. We assure the Lord Bishop that the main reform which Indian leaders are anxious to see immediately carried out, is to make such breaches in this huge Chinese wall of bureaucracy as will afford a readier view to Indians of the intentions of the British democracy and to the British democracy of the intentions of its Indian fellow subjects." [Referring to His Lordship's exhortation to Indian youths to join the Indian Defence Force, the paper writes:—"Owing to certain technical considerations, which the Government of India insist on maintaining even in these spacious times, an Indian gentleman cannot rise above the rank of a Subedar or Havildar while a Goanese Christian, who might have been his butler in civil life, is qualified to become a commissioned officer. Of course these distinctions had always existed, but the constitution of the Indian Defence Force brings them into sharp prominence. We have ourselves urged every young man within our influence to join the Force and shall continue to do so. But we know what their difficulties are and have not the heart to blame them if they do not join, as they ought to and would, in sufficiently large numbers, if their feelings were treated as of some account.......... Some time back the New Statesman, if we remember, had an article on what would happen if the Germans conquered England. Our contemporary thought it not improbable that there might be more efficient administration, but all else which makes life worth living for Englishmen would be gone. The Indian bureaucracy is efficient in a sense, but what is its effect on the soul of the people?"]

Need of political reforms in India at an early date.
Gujarâti (16), 15th July; Kâthiâwâr Samachar (68), 18th July.

15. Important political changes were recently effected in England and now the question of giving Home Rule to Ireland is being mooted. It would be foolish to expect the Indians not to compare the attitude of Indian officials towards their aspirations with the attitude of British statesmen towards the Irish question. The Indian people naturally ask why public opinion is not respected in India when grave political changes are contemplated in England. Delay in answering the question is fraught with danger and a belated reply will detract much from its worth. His Highness the Maharaja of Bikaner has done well in asking Government to make an early announcement of the political reforms they mean to effect. The Mesopotamia Commission has found the military machinery of India defective and has found out that no adequate provisions exist in India for the preparation of stores and munitions. These revelations will have some influence in effecting political reforms in India. Suggestions are being made to decentralise the power now vested in the Secretary of State. The Indian Government want that power while the Indians want to have it for themselves. Should the power now vested in the Secretary of State be transferred to the Government of India, the existing evils will not be removed. Provincial Governments want local autonomy but the people do not want any enhancement in the powers enjoyed by them. The power enjoyed by the Secretary of State should be transferred to a Council representative of the people so that it might control the actions of the Executive. This cannot be effected without freeing the Legislative Councils from official control. The popular representatives should be directly elected by the people themselves. We feel sure Mr. Lloyd George will spare no pains to make the scheme of Indian reforms as complete as possible. [The Kâthiâwâr Samâchâr on the other hand expresses the opinion that the grant of self-government to India at the present stage of its development will be detrimental to its real interests.]

Reflections on the political situation in India.
Praja Mitra and Pârsi (28), 19th July, Eng. cols.

16. In the course of an article headed "Indian Leaders and Indian Affairs", Praja Mitra and Pârsi quotes the views of Indian leaders like Sir S. Iyer, Sir N. G. Chandavarkar and Sir Rabindranath Tagore and, referring to Sir K. G. Gupta's metaphor about the ship, the captain and the men on the bridge, remarks:—"This is an excellent metaphor, but how is it to be pursued? Who are the men on the bridge and how are they guiding the vessel of our national and sacred aspirations? We can think only of constitutional methods, but those methods must become more and more vigorous. One thing, however, is as clear as the noonday sun, and that is that the present repressive policy in India bids fair to alienate even men who have been greatly honoured by Government and on whose support Government should always count. If the distinguished men we have quoted use this kind of language, what must be the feeling of less cautious and discriminating men? What is the feeling among students, those who will soon become the driving power of the national vessel? There is a clear and unmistakable cleavage of opinion between the best national forces of India and the present Government. Who can tell what forces are at work lower down in the different strata in the country? It is high time for statesmanship to come to the aid of the administration of the country and to close the chasm which is becoming wider every day."

Islâmic Mail (143), Urdu edition, 2nd July.

17. Referring to the agitation set up by a certain section of Indian publicists, the Islâmic Mail relates the story of a lion and a fox in which the latter having once the audacity to attack its powerful companion and supporter, was in the end killed. It enumerates the reforms and concessions made to the Indians in recent years such as the enlargement of the Legislative Councils, and points out that these were granted in peaceful times when the power of the British Government was absolute. It also refers to the grant of Self-government to the Boers of South Africa, and states that British statesmen as well as the politicians of Canada and South Africa lose no opportunity of publicly admitting the value of the assistance rendered by India in the prosecution of the European War. It then continues thus :—In such circumstances if a statesman were even to err and prevent a violent extremist from creating excitement, is it expedient to oppose him with the result that our old services might lose their value? Will those persons who have sacrificed the lives of their brothers and sons for the glory of the country be pleased if their sacrifices are stultified by political agitation? Will they admire the loss of a right to greater political privileges owing to the charge of disloyalty? Men are apt to act thoughtlessly and impulsively when fired by political or religious fervour, but they repent afterwards. "He is good who forsees the consequences of his act."

There should be no misrepresentation about the political agitation of the Indians.

Rást Goftár (30), 15th July.

18. The Rást Goftár refers to the steps that are being taken by the various provincial Governments to suppress political agitation and adds :—There is no doubt that we shall get substantial political rights after the war and that there will be a great improvement in our political status. But a long time must elapse before we get or are able to get self-government on colonial lines. But the people of India cannot be said to be doing anything wrong if, during that interval, they carry on constitutional agitation and take steps to educate public opinion as also to bring their demands to the notice of the authorities. Lord Pentland, Sir Michael O'dwyer or Lord Sydenham need not be unnecessarily alarmed at the demands of the Indian people so long as they carry on their agitation in a loyal manner and in a spirit of friendliness. There is no cause for alarm or fear at the demands of the Indian people. No good purpose would be served by creating a misunderstanding about the political agitation of the Indian people.

Plea for an intellectual entente between England and India.

New Times (7) 9th July.

19. The New Times thus concludes an article in which it pleads for a better understanding between England and India, mutual study of each other's civilization, culture and literature and the mutual adoption of what is best in each :—"India and England have given one to the other, the hand of fellowship on the fields of Death; let this friendship, forged from sacrifice in a common cause, be not a memory of the past when the strain and the agony are over; let the friendship continue; let it eternal be; and in the spirit of friendship let India and England study one the other, on the higher planes of thought. They will be prouder, each of the other; they will be gladder of mutual knowledge; they will find each other circled by a greater confidence; they will be worthier servants of Humanity; and the twain tegether will lead the world through the clang and clamour of armies to where the Great Musician harps for the healing of the Nations."

Creation of "men on the spot".

Young India (14), 18th July.

20. Mr. L. G. Khare writes in Young India :—"The fact is that the Englishman when he comes in contact with a people of a mentality higher than his own, often makes a fool of himself although he may mean well. This will become increasingly notorious as in India the children of the soil, who have always recognised administration as a science, will come to take part in the management of their own affairs with an insistence that knows no delay......... One of the standardised tricks of a Bureaucratic Government is to create more 'men on the spot' while apparently yielding to popular clamour. A case in point is the over-advertised Chamberlain concession to Indian feeling of the addition of an Indian to his Council, over and above the usual two. I hope it is recognised that the three Indians will now serve as safe men, the 'men on the spot' in London, to whom can be credited initiation of the meagre 'reforms' we may be promised. The appointment of two white beards, the one well-known for his native Statecraft, the other for his deftness in fighting for Zamindari rights, should be assessed by young India at its true value."

Comments on the withdrawal by the Punjab Government of the order prohibiting newspapers from publishing accounts of the meeting at Lahore to protest against the Madras internments.

New Times (7), 5th July.

21. Commenting on the withdrawal by the Punjab Government of the order prohibiting newspapers from publishing accounts of the meeting held at Lahore to protest against the Madras internments, the New Times remarks:— "Wisdom comes late to the official mind: but better late than never. 'The English'; wrote Sir Bartle C. Frere in the Times of London, 'are, I suppose, the stupidest race that was ever created'. This certainly is an exaggerated view and coming from a great Englishman has the virtue of good humour but it also embodies an element of truth without which the humourous becomes the grotesque. And the truth is that several of the officials in India lack a sympathetic understanding of the situation in India. It is the imperative need of sagacious wide-visioned statesmanship in India today which we wish to emphasise as strongly as we can; such a statesmanship will rebuke the apprehensions of officials, will understand the psychology of the present situation and will, without an hour's unnecessary delay, give response to India's call for self-government which is the call of democracy and civilization all over the world."

Interned persons are not given the privileges which convicts enjoy.

Mahrátta (5), 22nd July.

*22. "In the Bengal Legislative Council the Honourable Babu B. C. Ray put a series of questions on internments in Bengal. The replies that he elicited will astound people who expect that an enlightened Government will act in a manner not scandalising to the reason of the average human being, at any rate. The replies show that Government gives no formal intimation to the families of interned persons of their place of internment or the change of their place of internment. The interned have the opportunity of writing letters and the relatives have the opportunity of seeking information! So the Government does not consider it necessary to send a formal intimation to the relatives! The relatives can interview the interned on applying for such an interview and getting permission, which they may or may not obtain—'there is no general prohibition of such interviews' was the official reply. The A. B. Patrika rightly asks: 'Why should not Government intimate the fact to his guardian as soon as a person is taken under custody under the D. I. Act and grant him immediate permission to see his ward? Would such a concession result in the collapse of the Empire?' The concession will not result in the collapse of the Empire, but it will result in the Bureaucracy being praised for its humane consideration—and such praise is apparently hated by the Bureaucracy in these days of its glory......... Further, when asked whether there was any arrangement for non-official visitors visiting persons dealt with under the D. I. Act, while under detention, as in the case of ordinary prisoners in jail, the Government replied that no special arrangements were made. Thus the interned who are mere suspects, many of them absolutely innocent, are not given the privileges which a hardened jail convict is allowed to enjoy."

Allegation that the Viceroy appealed to Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya to induce the Congress and the Moslem League to moderate their proposed scheme of reforms.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 17th July.

23. Referring to the interview the Honourable Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya is alleged recently to have had with the authorities at Simla in connection with the internment of Mrs. Annie Besant and her colleagues, the Praja Mitra and Pársi observes:—We have not yet come to know what has been the result of that interview, but it is likely that His Excellency the Viceroy may have declared his inability to do anything in the matter of Mrs. Besant and may have pressed the Pandit for his co-operation with Government in the matter of the demands made by the Indian National Congress and the Moslem League. It appears that Government having found the demands made by the Congress and the League for the introduction of political reforms in India in the direction of swarájya to be extremely immoderate, have requested Pandit Malaviya to help Government during the present crisis, by revising those demands, in consultation with other Indian leaders, and so moderating them as to be in keeping with the present condition of things, because moderate reforms of some such kind have received sanction from His Majesty's Government and they are going to be shortly made public. The abovementioned interview with the Viceroy terminated with the exchange of the usual formalities as the Honourable Pandit declared his inability to secure any change in the scheme of reforms jointly formulated by the Congress and the League.

Disapproval of Swadeshi that is not honest and the boycott of foreign goods.
Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 20th July; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 15th July.

24. Referring to the agitation which is being conducted at present in Madras and other parts of the country for educating public opinion in favour of Home Rule and to the meetings which are being held for urging people to take a vow to use Swadeshi goods only, the Jám-e-Jamshed, while advocating the use of Indian made articles by the people of this country as a means to facilitate the development of Indian industries, condemns the policy of taking vows for using home made articles only under the present political conditions. It remarks that before substantial efforts are made in the direction of reviving the decaying Indian industries and starting new ones, the taking of vows for using Swadeshi articles only even at a sacrifice is like putting the cart before the horse and is likely to prove calamitous to persons with limited means. The paper is of opinion that the best way to bring about the economic regeneration of India is for the richer classes to come forward with capital, for the intellectual youths to go to foreign countries to acquire industrial training and to start new industries on their return to India and for Government to encourage them. It believes that the advancement of the country only lies in the joint co-operation of the swadeshists and Government in this matter. [While admitting the necessity and desirability of keeping up public agitation for awakening and promoting a spirit of nationality among the people, the Praja Mitra and Pársi observes that the agitation should not be of a nature which would lead others to believe that the public leaders are influenced by feelings of enmity towards British rule and that they are desirous of spiting that rule. It expresses regret at suggestions made in some quarters for boycotting foreign goods and for ceasing to co-operate with Government in the administration of the country, by the elected members resigning their seats in the Legislative Councils and in the Council of the Secretary of State for India, and characterises the latter suggestion as suicidal to the best interests of the country. The paper also advises Indians not to confound the Swadeshi movement with the "boycott" of foreign goods. Regard being had to the comparatively poor condition of the Indian people, the paper urges the necessity of Government and the people working hand in hand in the matter of the development of industries in India.]

Advice to the Parsis to keep aloof from the Home Rule movement.
Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 15th July, Eng. cols.

25. "Whatever may the attitude of a handful of Parsis be towards the Home Rule movement, we are of opinion that should the community desire prosperity and not destruction it would do well to keep itself where it is under the British Rule. The union of the Muhammadans and the Hindus and with them the union of the Parsis no doubt look very well on paper, but alas! how ghastly and impracticable is such a scheme. The very talk of it smells hypocrisy. Have the Parsis forgotten the treatment accorded to the late Sir P. M. Mehta at the Surat Congress even though every Indian used to worship him as his revered Guru? How preposterous, how silly, it is even to dream of a united body of Hindus, Muhammadans and Parsis!......... We seriously ask, is it possible, is it natural, for a Parsi to compromise himself in the heart of his heart with typically a different soul? As long as the English sword and the English fist continue to exercise their functions effectively in India, so long one can indulge in idle talks of such a union, but the moment the British leave our shores the union will end in bloodshed and anarchy."

The forthcoming Hindu-Muhammadan Conference at Bombay.
Rást Goftár (30), 22nd July, Eng. cols.

26. "The forthcoming United Conference of the All-India Congress Committee and the Council of the Moslem League in Bombay will be held under the happiest auspices. The shadow of repression was brooding over the whole country; it has been lifted by the mere appointment of Mr. Montagu. The Hindu-Muhammadan understanding is complete and will become stronger every day. We hope the attendence will be full, though we regret to hear very few of our countrymen will be coming from Bengal."

Students and politics
Young India (14), 18th July.

27. "Our school and college students are not being educated. They are being circularised; but they cannot be debarred from reading the news of the day, from participating in private political discussion; and their spirit will not, we are sure, brook any further restriction on their liberties. To achieve that desirable bureaucratic consummation, the Indian Educational Departments will have to be converted barefacedly into an auxiliary of the C. I. D.......... Evidence can be multiplied to show that the new spirit demands mental food of a higher kind. Even the Students' Brotherhood, which under the patronage of Sir Narayan Chandavarkar cannot possibly be considered as having been 'tainted with the poison of Home Rule' doctrines' has issued a programme of lectures, which proves that the student-world of Bombay is anxious to read the signs of the times. We notice that a European member of the Indian Educational Service is going to give a series of lectures on 'some aspects of Prussian History'......... We understand further from the same programme that Mr. K. N. Natrajan who in his Social Reformer has been latterly taking a dispassionate survey of recent political and internment activity in India, has promised a dissertion on 'India in Evolution'......... Now it must be apparent to every sensible citizen of India that if intellectual activities of the kind noticed above are permitted in one quarter, it is absurd and futile that a bureaucracy will not permit just similar activities in another. Is it not yet clear to the authorities, that such an insensate proceeding only means spoiling the morale of the Indian youth ?... It may be hoping against hope, but we do hope that the Government of Lord Willingdon will once again come to look on students in this Presidency as potential gentlemen, and not as potential criminals."

What is the best way to inculcate the Imperial idea in Indian schools and colleges.
New Times (7), 5th July.

28. Referring to the recommendations of the Committee, appointed by the Burmah Government to report on the methods to inculcate the Imperial idea in schools and colleges, to the effect that the Principals of Government Anglo-Vernacular High Schools should be officers of the Indian Educational Service and that the Superintendents or Head Masters of aided High Schools should be of British nationality, the New Times remarks:—"Strange recommendations these! Why should the appointment of Indian heads lead to a suppression of Imperial sentiment? The recommendations rest on an antiquated irrational conception that the man who is patriotic cannot be loyal to the Empire: but there is no conflict between patriotism and loyalty.......... The best way to inculcate the Imperial idea in schools and colleges is to do away with the foolish distinction between the Indian and the European and to develop among schoolboys and youngmen the vision of humanity which rises above the limit-lines of race and religion. Those of the Englishmen in the East who constitute a separate caste—a caste of the white Brahmins of the West—and refuse to rise to the Vision Human, are just the men who undermine the foundations of the Empire: for the Empire stands for justice and freedom and the evolution of self-government in every nation-group and the conservation and consolidation of many cultures and race-ideals."

Duty of Government to enact legislation for the better control of Muhammadan Wakf funds.
Islámic Mail (4), 1st July, Eng. cols.

29. The Islámic Mail dwells on the misuse of Wakf funds by the trustees and remarks:—"Every Wakf is more or less mismanaged and it will be a great day when the Government would have introduced some law to check the abuse.......... A trust is public property and Government have as much right of control over it as on any other public property, but the wonder is that they see the Wakfs wantonly misused without so much as raising a finger to stop it. The one great good that Mr. Jinnah ever tried to do to the Mussalmans was his Wakf Bill; but unfortunately it could not come out and local Governments are debarred from taking action in the matter. We hope zealous Muhammadans like Sir Ebrahim Rahimtulla or Nawab Mir Asad Ali Khan will rouse up the Government of India to action."

Controversy on social matters among the Borah community.

Akhbár-e-Islám (56), 10th and 17th July.

30. From the middle of the year 1916 letters purporting to be written by some members of the Borah community commenced to appear in the columns of the Praja Mitra and Pársi adversely criticising the alleged apathy of the Mullaji and those surrounding him towards the educational advancement of the community and particularly towards English education, the extravagance with which money was spent on feasting and conviviality and in the entertainment of the Mullaji Saheb, the highhandedness exercised by the associates of the Mullaji and those of his subordinates, e.g., Amils and others whose duty it was to administer the affairs of the community, the alleged issue of orders by the Mullaji fixing particular curricula of studies with respect to certain Madressas, orders directing the use of the turban instead of the phenta (a sort of headgear), etc. These contributions (the views expressed and the complaints raised in which it seemed to endorse) continued to appear in the above-mentioned paper up to the month of May of the current year, when the Kaiser-i-Hind, in its issue of the 20th May 1917, published an account of an interview its representative was stated to have had with the Mullaji Saheb. During this interview the Mullaji was represented to have declared that he was not against the spread of education among the community, that occasional feasting was not without its benefits inasmuch as it promoted unity and feelings of brotherhood among the community, that the use of the turban was recommended from considerations of economy and with a view to inculcating the virtue of simplicity among the members of the community, etc. The Kaiser-i-Hind then commenced publishing a series of leading articles in successive issues in the course of which it tried to uphold the cause of the Mullaji Saheb on the lines adopted by him in vindicating himself during the above-mentioned interview and while so doing attacked the writings appearing in the Praja Mitra and Pársi in this connection and stated that the reforms the new party was seeking to introduce in the community were not real ones and that their attempt to shake the authority of the Mullaji over the community was attended with grave peril. It also expressed its belief that the communications appearing in the Praja Mitra and Pársi seemed to have been written by non-Moslems rather than Muhammadans. The Akhbár-e-Islám then thought it fit, as a Moslem organ, to express its views in connection with this controversy which was agitating the community for a long time. In some of its earlier issues it advises the Mullaji Saheb not to remain content with moving in the old grooves, but to introduce suitable reforms that may be in keeping with the present progressive times, in administering the affairs of the community, and also warns the party of reform against the undesirable results that might follow the weakening of the authority of the Mullaji over the Borah community. In its issue of the 10th July it strongly condemns the action of the Kaiser-i-Hind in representing that its belief was that the writings appearing in the Praja Mitra and Pársi were the product of some non-Moslems. The paper believes that such a move on the part of the Kaiser-i-Hind is calculated to create bad blood between different sections of the Borah community. It remarks that the defence of the Mullaji in the manner in which it has been made by the weekly paper is entirely uncalled for, that it bespeaks the ignorance of the editor about the constitution of the Borah community and that the account of the interview above referred to was published against the express wish of the Mullaji Saheb. The paper regrets that the Kaiser-i-Hind has unnecessarily excited the community by publishing the account. It then goes on to declare that from inquiries made it is able to state that those who wrote on the subject in the Praja Mitra and Pársi were none else but Muhammadans. The paper, while expressing its approbation of the passages quoted from the Koran and statements made by ancient spiritual leaders like Amir-ul-Momnin, by "Abdul Karim" in his contributions appearing in the issues of the Praja Mitra and Pársi dated the 30th and 29th June 1917, respectively, in indirect support of his criticism of the Mullaji Saheb, disapproves of the discourteous manner in which those quotations have been applied against a personage like the head priest of the Borah community. In the subsequent issue the paper regrets that the alleged well-wishers of the Mullaji Saheb should have, in the shape of correspondence appearing in the Kaiser-i-Hind, supported the action of a publicist who has not refrained from making a lame defence of the Mullaji by using vulgar language and by publishing matter calculated to produce unlawful excitement among the Borah community. It, however, expresses gratification that it has latterly refrained from such mischievous tactics as were adopted by him in the beginning. It then refers to the words used in the humourous columns of the Kaiser-i-Hind making fun of the way in which the Borahs pronounce the Gujarati language and remarks that it considers it its duty to bring that fact to the notice of the authorities with a view to preventing bad blood being created between community and community. The paper supports the quotations from religious books by correspondents whose contributions appeared in the Praja Mitra and Pársi for securing the removal of the evils affecting the Borah community and attributes the hostility displayed against the use of such quotations to a desire to keep the members of the community generally in ignorance of those evils.

Comments on His Excellency the Governor's letter explaining the absence of his representative at the late Dr. Dadabhoy Nowrojee's funeral.
Subodha Patrika (42), 15th July, Eng. cols.

31. Referring to His Excellency the Governor's letter to the Honourable Sir D. E. Wacha explaining why His Excellency was not represented at the late Dr. Dadabhoy Nowrojee's funeral, the Subodha Pătrika remarks:—"We all know that ever since his arrival in this country, His Excellency's one anxiety has been to move among the people and cultivate the acquaintance of every leader of every community; and we believe he had on this ground even got the usual budget allowance of the Governor's household considerably increased. No one will therefore think of accusing His Excellency of any neglect to pay his last tribute of respect to our great citizen whom he had taken the trouble to visit in his own home during his lifetime: and every one will sympathise with His Lordship in the quite natural human feeling of 'very great concern' that he had no representative at the funeral. But what will astonish every one is the fact stated by His Excellency that he 'heard nothing of Mr. Dadabhai's death till Sunday afternoon through Reuter, and then it was too late." Are we to understand that none of their officers in the city is charged with the duty of informing Government in time of all happenings of any importance? It is simply inconceivable in view of the boast flaunted by the Imperial and Provincial Governments in the face of the public that their agencies are all pervading as well as all-knowing. If so, the only explanation seems to be that whoever is charged with the duty, did not think it necessary to be in any great hurry to report the death of one who was after all a native citizen though he may be great in the eyes of the Governor...... Under these circumstances, however much we may sympathise with His Excellency personally for the awkward situation in which he was placed by his own men, he cannot blame the public if they suspect that such incidents become possible because of the feeling encouraged by tradition or experience that they rarely mean anything particularly untoward to the defaulter in matters affecting the interests or prestige of Indians."

How the war has humbled John Bull.
Sind Observer (12), 6th July.

32. "Foreigners talk of the intolerable arrogance of John Bull, but the war seems to have altered his character considerably and to have made of him a most humble being. He went round the United States in a mendicant manner obtaining opinions on the Irish question and how best to settle it. The Yankees freely expressed themselves on the subject. Next an American Admiral is appointed to command the British Naval forces in Irish waters and the stars and stripes is hoisted over the admiralty headquarters in Ireland. But who would have expected that the 4th of July, Independence Day, would be celebrated with eclat in England and the American flag flown over both Houses of Parlia- ment, in commemoration of our fatuous methods with the Colonists, of their successful resistance against our ineptitude, and our final expulsion from the country? Much as the French love and admire us, and though they are an intensely demonstrative people, they could not make themselves do anything so magnificent. The American public must be hugely pleased with the show, which appeals to their vanity. We are Allies now in the great cause of freedom and it is becoming to say nice things of each other. We trust, however, for the sake of that cause that John Bull does not in a weak movement tender any advice to Uncle Sam on matters concerning the internal policy of the United States, nor expect him to forget that U. S. A. worsted us every time we tried conclusions with him. Some Englishmen have made the useful suggestion that an American should be appointed as chairman of the Irish Conference. An attractive proposal indeed and quite in keeping with the new character of John Bull."

Comments on the Bombay Town Hall meeting to encourage the scheme for a Mahar battalion.
Sánj Vartamán (31), 14th July, Eng. cols.

33. Referring to the recent Town Hall meeting at Bombay to encourage the scheme for a Mahar battalion the Sánj Vartamán remarks :—"By reopening the military service to them, Government have provided them with an honourable occupation which will erase from them the sense of servility, and will make them self-respecting and self-reliant......... Centuries of servility and subjection have rendered them docile and deferential. If these millions were given a fair chance in life, they will make good and useful citizens, and will be a valuable asset to the State and society. We do not think that the Mahar regiments will be formed simply for service during the war and will be disbanded after peace is restored. There can be no objection to regiments composed exclusively of men of this community, and they are sure to give a good account of themselves. If there were more of the genuine sympathy and humanity that is felt for them by Sir Narayen Chandavarkar, the prospect of their regeneration will not be so dim and distant.......... The enlistment has offered them a splendid opportunity, and we believe they will freely avail themselves of it."

Lord Hardinge and the Mesopotamia report.
Mahrátta (5), 22nd July.

34. "Lord Hardinge is one of those who have been impugned by the Mesopotamia Commission. In his statement before Parliament, Lord Hardinge said that his administration ought to be judged in the light of the opinion which India formed of it.......... The ex-Viceroy's appeal to India for its verdict on his administration has a special significance in these times when the Bureaucracy of India acts as if there is in this country no such thing as public opinion that a ruler ought to take respectful notice of. Lord Hardinge has as it were set himself in opposition to the Indian Bureaucracy and proclaimed to the people of the world that there is such a thing as Indian opinion, organised Indian opinion, which the rulers of India ought to respect, though according to the constitution of the day they may ride rough-shod over it with perfect impunity."

Comments on the Government of India's communique about their acquisition of imported silver.
Indu Prakásh (39), 14th July, Eng. cols.

35. "The Simla communiqué (11th instant) referring to the Government acquisition of silver contains what, in our opinion, is a flagrant misrepresentation. When speaking of the reasons that led to the adoption of this policy the communique has the words :—'Owing inter alia to the prosperity of India at the present time, etc.' We are absolutely at a loss to understand the word 'prosperty' unless India means Anglo-Indian community. If Government cares to make the least inquiry into the matter, every household will be found bending under the weight of increased expenditure.......... When the middle class men are in doubt as regards their capacity merely to feed their wives and children, how does a statement about India's prosperity sound to them! We do not know who is responsible for thus deluding and defrauding the Government. We guess he is somebody that knows only the Anglo-Indian community who form the only group of human beings on the face of this earth that have not at all perceptibly been touched by this all-grabbing war."

A review of the war situation.

Gujaráti (16), 15th July; Hindusthán (20), 18th July; Praja Bandhu (27), 15th July.

36. It is now nearly three years that the war is in progress. Many wonderful events have happened during that period. We cannot conjecture what the final result will be. Whoever wins, this is certain that the European nations will not come out of the struggle without great loss to their former glory and prestige. These nations seem to be bent on sticking to their resolve of fighting to the last man and the last penny. All nations except England have been completely exhausted. France has stood the struggle manfully; but it has had to make tremendous sacrifices. The United States of America have entered the war with the object of preventing France from being bled white in its struggle against German militarism. It has taken three years for England to make such preparations as would stagger Germany. In what way did France withstand the German attacks? France has proved itself to be a nation of heroes. There is nothing to equal the sacrifices made by France in the defence of liberty. The revolution disorganised the Russian army and Germany would have greatly benefitted by it and would have thrown its armies against exhausted France and might perhaps have forced it to sue for a separate peace; but America came to her rescue and saved her from such a disgrace and supplied her with stores and munitions. America moreover saved Russia from making a separate peace with Germany. It would be no exaggeration to say the war would have come to an end this year but for America. It will now surely be protracted. Germany has shown admirable powers of organisation and it has continued to wage war for three years in spite of deficient supplies of provisions owing to her being cut off from the rest of the world. It has not cared for financial difficulties. The Allied progress in Mesopotamia, Palestine and in the Caucasus has slackened. Only four months of the year are left to inflict a defeat on the enemy and so the Allies are trying to do their best. Germany is counting upon the exhaustion of the Allies; but America will soon be able to throw her armies in the field. One of its contingents has already landed without the loss of a single ship by submarines! It is a great achievement on the part of the Americans. [The Hindusthán is of opinion that another year will be required to defeat Germany, while the Praja Bandhu declares that there are clear signs of Germany being compelled to sue for peace at an early date.]

Alleged pro-German tendencies of Holland, Denmark, Sweden and Norway.

Sind Observer (12), 10th July.

37. "The attitude of Holland, Denmark, Sweden and Norway remains a mystery. The first country is repeatedly talking about the danger which threatens her and that the people must be prepared to use their utmost strength for liberty and independence. We take this as referring to the German menace on the Dutch frontiers, but at the same time find it necessary to take precautions in the North Sea as we do not wish to run any risks. The potato business, too, requires some explanation. We had agreed to purchase the Dutch potato crop, and according to the contract, the consignment was about to be shipped to England when the Dutch Government stepped in and seized and distributed it. We had arranged to purchase this year's crop on learning that Germany was negotiating to buy it although she has not paid the money due on a huge consignment delivered last year. This extreme tenderness for the German may be dictated by fear of reprisals from which the good Hollanders do not believe we can protect them but it is pro-German nevertheless, and if not nipped in the bud may lead to other methods of assisting the Huns. The Danes should have no sympathy for Germany considering the treatment she gave them in the past. But there is a dearth of footstuffs in Germany and plenty of money is to be made by supplying the Huns with food. Norway has had a bad time on sea. A large number of her vessels have been sunk on one pretext or another by the Germans, but except for an occasional growl she appears unperturbed about it. The mines which find themselves in the way of our shipping require investigation. The enemy are slim fellows, but we scarcely believe that they are able to deposit them so well and far from European waters without the aid of neutrals.......... A point which has struck us as needing elucidation is the despatch of submarines by Holland to her East India possessions. What is the meaning of this haste to protect her distant Colonies when her Ministers speak of the danger being nearer home? Taken with her attitude in respect of the potato crop and other matters in which England is interested, the movements of these vessels appear suspicious to say the least. Our Admiralty should be wide awake to such shady transactions after the experience of three years."

Manifesto of the German Majority Socialists.
Mahratta (5), 22nd July.

38. "The following is taken from the Communique from the German Majority Socialists published by the Dutch-Scandinavian Socialists' Committee of Stockholm:—'German Social Democracy seeks a peace by understanding. Just as it demands guarantees for the free political, economical and cultural development of its own people, so it condemns the violation of the vital interests of other nations.......... By national self-determination we understand the right of nations to maintain or get back their political independence. The first group here to be considered is the States which have lost their independence during this war. We wish to restore independent Belgium. Belgium shall not be a feudatory State either of Germany, England or France. As regards Serbia and other Balkan States we agree to the declaration of our Austrian comrades. A second group of States which have lost their old independence but find themselves liberated by the events of this war are Poland and Finland.......... A third group of ancient independent nations which became the victims of Imperialistic oppression is Ireland, Egypt, Tripoli, Morocco, India, Tibet and Korea. German Social Democracy pronounces the greatest sympathy with the efforts of all these nations to re-establish their national freedom, and would rejoice if Socialists in the States which govern those countries would raise their voices for liberating those nations from foreign oppression'."

Comments on the Police Commissioner's explanation with regard to the alleged "reign of terror" at Dadar (Bombay).
Mufid-e-Rozgár (144), 15th July.

39. Referring to the reports about the alleged molestation of women by members of the Labour Corps encamped at Dadar, the Mufid-e-Rozgár states that the Commissioner of Police has investigated the complaint personally and has found the disquieting reports to be entirely unfounded. It thanks Mr. Vincent who took so much trouble in restoring the public confidence, and it urges that the circulators of these baseless complaints may be traced and suitably dealt with in order to deter others from following in their foot-steps in future. It believes that there are many men of that ilk in the town who are always bent upon making mountains of molehills.

Dnyan Prakásh (36), 15th July; Mantri (109), 18th July.

40. Mr. Vincent, the Commissioner of Police, is apparently of opinion that the various rumours about the public being molested by sepoys and men of the Labour Corps are entirely unfounded. It cannot be said that they are all unfounded because no complaints have been made to the police. Not only the police should make minute inquiries into this matter but people should also co-operate whole-heartedly with the police. We cannot agree with Mr. Vincent that newspapers should not publish anything about these allegations. In our opinion they will fail in their duty if they refrain from giving publicity to them. It must not also be forgotten that the police find it more safe to watch political agitators and thus fill their diaries than to deal with bands of rowdies. It is unfortunate that while shouts about swarájya and Home Rule are being plentifully heard there are very few men who possess the necessary courage to risk their own skin or even to give evidence in a court of law with a view to punish acts of injustice. [Mr. Sitaram Keshav Bole, Secretary, Kamyar Hitawardhak Sabha (Society for the promotion of the welfare of workers), writes to the Mantri:—On personal inquiries made at Dadar, etc., we find that no evidence is forthcoming to support the allegations that women have been abducted in motor cars. Men from the military camps are, however, alleged to have molested women. There was only one case of this kind before a Magistrate and the accused was severely punished.]

Rást Goftár (30), 15th July; Akhbár-e-Islám (56), 21st July.

41. The prestige of Government would, no doubt, suffer if there is a grain of truth in the wild rumours. Even if the Commissioner of Police has repudiated all the allegations in his interview with the representative of the Sánj Vartamán, we believe there is urgent need of recording the evidence of all those that have complained in the matter and investigating into it. Should no immediate steps be taken in this direction, it is feared the people of Dádar will become panic-stricken. The Commissioner of Police is, no doubt, prepared to redress grievances, but the matter is of such a grave nature that police interference might result in disturbance of the peace. The question might be successfully tackled if the military officials are left to deal with the situation with the co-operation of the police. [The Akhbár-e-Islám says that on enquiries it finds that there is no truth in the wild rumours, but that some men belonging to the military camp are reported to have made fun of women passing along the streets. It asks people to be prompt in bringing their grievances to the notice of the authorities.]

Contradition of the reported "reign of terror" at Dádar.

Indu Prakásh (39), 16th and 19th July, Eng. cols.

42. "A special representative of this paper visited Dádar and made careful inquiries into the alleged actions of soldiers stationed there. So far as he could gather, the allegations are not founded on facts. Nobody could give him the name, occupation or address of any women alleged to have been insulted. We are also told that the authorities have not received a single complaint from anybody. We would only say here that our popular Commissioner of Police is ever ready to inquire into any case provided he receives definite information. If one has got a complaint to make, it is his duty to approach the Commissioner of Police with whatever evidence he has got. The propagation of vague and idle rumours bodes nobody any good If you have evidence of a wrong perpetrated by a soldier, it is your duty as a citizen to fearlessly step forward to help the cause of justice. If you have none, it is your duty to combat idle rumours. We suggest to Government that a Press Note may be issued on the subject." [A correspondent writing to the paper about the same matter says:—"I fully go with you, and would like to make the Government another suggestion, viz., to make police 'bandobast,' for some time to come, near mills and girls' schools, for the consolation and encouragement of the inmates of those buildings. In making this suggestion I take into account the reported though not believed molestations to female operatives. The school girls are also informed, and they believe, that the authorities have by the beating of the bataki announced that it is not safe for womankind to be out of their houses after five in the evening. This 'Curfew Bell' ordinance is undoubtedly the figment of some hairbrained individual, but all the same, it has produced the scaring-away effect on the minds of the fair 'alumni' and their parents or guardians. Hence, if they see the police-guard in sight, they will begin to breathe as freely as before." The paper, referring to the matter in its vernacular columns, says that what it wrote last week about the affairs at Dádar was not found to be true on investigation. It, therefore, advises newspaper editors to make inquiries on the spot before airing complaints. It also calls upon the Kamgar Hita Vardhak Sabha, a society for the advancement of the interests of workmen, to take up the matter and to rebut the many rumours flying about.]

The Police and the stoppage of public meetings.

Kesari (106), 17th July.

43. The highhandedness of the officials has not stopped; on the contrary it is in evidence in various ways. After the closure of the Delhi meeting of protest, the Saharanpur (Punjáb) meeting also was stopped. The Rai Bareili meeting met the same fate. Our Bombay Police are engaged in the task of surpassing these measures. It is rumoured that orders have been passed in the Dhárwár District that no meeting should be held without the previous permission of the Police. We have still no definite news about the order. But a meeting at Hubli (Dhárwár) in favour of the Honourable Mr. Patel's Bill on Primary Education was stopped by the Police Inspector. We are afraid that this policy of gagging may hereafter develop into one of completely suppressing public meetings. The time has come when we have to decide whether we should obey these orders quietly and postpone such meetings.

Many villages in the Ratnágiri District are unable to guard against depredations of wild beasts owing to want of fire-arms.

Shatya Shodhak (119), 15th July.

44. A correspondent writing to the Satya Shodhak states that at Khedshi, a village near Ratnágiri, a tiger recently broke into a cattle-shed and killed a cow, and points out that no one in that village possesses a license to carry arms. He states there are many villages in the Ratnágiri District which possess no fire-arms and inquires what the people of those villages are to do to protect themselves from the depredations of wild beasts. He further complains that not only are license holders prohibited from lending their arms to others on such occasions, but ammunition, without which fire-arms are useless, cannot be procured even in a place like Ratnágiri. He, therefore, requests the authorities to remove the grievances of the people.

Comments on the security taken from the New Times of Karáchi.

New Times (7), 27th and 30th June.

45. An anonymous admirer of the New Times, writing to the paper, dwells on the moderation and fairness of its comments and referring to the security taken from it, remarks:—"It is very strange to see that you have fallen in the clutches of the law and so soon. I have often seen far stronger articles in the Anglo-Indian papers. I have read with contempt articles in Anglo-Indian papers abusing Indians and creating race-hatred. Even now when Indians are fighting shoulder to shoulder with the Britishers, Anglo-Indian papers often let themselves loose and dishonour noble Indians, and not a hair of their head is touched. But, alas! I foreget that they are white Brahmans and their person is sacred." [In the second issue, Mr. Poptatlal A. Bhoopatker, M.B., B.S., declares that he has been a regular reader of the paper and found nothing objectionable in it. He then continues:—"If you cannot express public opinion to the authorities and the authorities' views to the public on the national problems, what are you supposed to do? Are you simply supposed to collect advertisements and make your paper a daily directory of commerce rather than an organ of the country? Mr. 'Admirer' rightly refers in your issue of 27th instant to the undesirable attitude of some of the Anglo-Indian papers; and why are they not held responsible for telling deliberate lies, wounding Indian feelings, and creating racial hatred?......... Since you have met such a fate in doing a public service, I am sure the people who fully appreciate your well-meant efforts shall stand by you and share in your lot."]

Comments on the demand of security from the Sanjibani, a Calcutta newspaper.

Dnyán Prakásh (36), 19th July.

46. We understand that on the death of its printer a security of Rs. 1,000 was demanded from the Sanjibani, a well-known journal of Calcutta, at the time of making a fresh declaration. During its long career the conductors of the paper were never punished for sedition nor were they even warned. It is very strange, therefore, that a security should have been demanded from such a respectable paper simply because its old printer happened to die. This shows that a journal though conducted on the most unobjectionable lines is not necessarily free from the clutches of the Press Act.

Vatandar kulkarnis should sue the Secretary of State in the matter of the commutation of their vatans.

Kesari (106), 17th July.

47. A vatandar writes to the Kesari:—From the very start the vatandar kulkarnis have contended that their consent to the commutation of their vatans was not a voluntary one but that it was given through fear caused by the oppression of responsible officials in authority. The section of the Vatan Act under which Government say that kabulayats were given requires that every vatandar should make an independent request to the Collector whenever he wants to commute his vatan. But as a matter of fact kulkarnis were called to the Taluka headquarters and their signatures were taken on printed forms. It is clear therefore that these kabulayats are illegal. Kulkarnis have been advised to sue the Secretary of State in the matter and many kulkarnis have already given notices. This is the only one way now left open for the kulkarnis.

Alleged grivances of the Public Works Department Upper Subordinates in the Bombay Presidency.
New Times (7), 30th June.

48. An anonymous correspondent writes to the New Times:—"It is a matter of great regret that Government machinary is too slow for the welfare of the present over-worked and highly qualified Public Works Department Subordinate in the Bombay Presidency. It is nearly three-fourths of a century that the scale of pay of Public Works Department Upper Subordinate Establishment has not been revised, when side by side there has been a gradual increase in salaries of subordinates of almost all the other departments. Times have so changed that the purchasing power of a rupee is less than ¼th of what it was in the sixties of the last century. The Public Works Department Subordinate of the early sixties was an ordinary bazzar man, fit for no work, and was tempted with a scholarship to join a recruiting Engineer's School with a nominal training to be fitted out as a subordinate. The present Public Works Department Subordinate has to undergo a stiff academic test and has to struggle hard in an Engineering College to fit himself for the difficult Public Works Department duties.......... The Public Works Department Subordinates Association has cried and cried for increment of pay, sympathetic Honourable members have moved the matter in the Council, but the Government takes long to decide. Years have passed when a memorial was submitted to Government to redress the grievances of Public Works Department Upper Subordinates, but no result has come out as yet."

The Students' Department in England and Indian students.
Dnyán Prakásh (36), 18th July.

49. Commenting upon the proceedings of the Conference of Provincial Secretaries of Advisory Committees at Simla, the Dnyán Prakásh says:—The Students' Department costs a lakh per year. Where lies the sense in saying that students are not compelled to take the help of the Students' Department in London when students without certificates of the India Office are not admitted into any college? Students are not helped much by the London Department. Complaints have been made that the Indian Advisory Committees try to dissuade students from going to England and it is a fact that they have generally done so. Till the attitude of the London Department is changed, it is useless to expect any notable improvement in the work of the local committees.

Comments on a Bombay case in which a Pathan was punished slightly for offering public insult to a Hindu women.
Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 16th July.

50. Commenting upon the sentence of a fine of seven rupees or 30 hours' rigorous imprisonment recently passed by a Bombay Bench of Honorary Magistrates against a Pathan for threatening to strike a Hindu woman on a public thoroughfare for not being able to pay him on the spot his dues which amounted to about 10 rupees and otherwise creating a disturbance on a public road, the Jám-e-Jamshed remarks:—Even if the Police had charged the accused with a lighter offence the Magistrates had the power to alter the original charge if the facts of the case disclosed that a graver offence had been committed. In any way if a person abuses a woman in broad daylight and on a public thoroughfare and threatens to take off her sari, he should be dealt with so severely as to strike terror in the hearts of other ruffians like him. (From the present case) it would seem as if a poor Hindu woman's honour is valued at seven rupees. Suppose in the present case there had been a European woman, would a money-lender offering her similar insult have been able to escape with the insignificant fine of seven rupees? We have great doubts about it. Complaints against Pathan money-lenders are steadily increasing in Bombay and it behoves Government to take measures for effectively removing this source of complaint.

Complaint that papers produced in civil suits are not returned to the parties for days together.

Sandesh (118), 19th July.

51. A correspondent complains in the Sandesh that papers produced in civil suits and darkhast matters are not returned to the parties for days together and that the clerks of pleaders and Court clerks also do not hand over the papers to the parties in time. He, therefore, suggests that papers not handed over to the parties should be sent to them per V. P. P., which would benefit the parties without costing anything to Government.

Complaint about inadequate ferry arrangements at certain places in the Ratnágiri District.

Satya Shodak (119), 15th July.

52. A correspondent writes to the Satya Shodhak complaining about the mismanagement of the ferry service at Tavsál in the Ratnágiri District. He says that only one ferry plies between this place and the opposite coast, although two ferries have to be maintained, and this causes much inconvenience to the passengers who have on many occasions to go without food. He adds that although the prescribed fare for the ferry at Jaigad is only one anna, the contractor charges twice the amount on the plea that the service does not pay him and also claims remission from Government pretending to have incurred a loss. The sail of the ferry-boat, he further says, is a tattered one and it is also inadequately manned. The correspondent expresses a hope that this will receive the attention of the authorities.

Complaint about injurious effects of old vaccine lymph being used in Poona.

Dnyán Prakásh (36), 15th July.

53. The Secretary, Arogya Mandal (Sanitary Association), Poona, publishes the following in the Dnyán Prakásh:—One Pandhari Narayan, a vaccinator, vaccinated a child, a year and a half old, of Mr. Deshpande, residing in Shanwar Peth, without its father's consent. Later on the child was seen to be suffering from four different wounds on the arms each half an inch deep and three inches in circumference. The child is laid up for the last two months undergoing unbearable pain. It has now transpired that this was due to the vaccine lymph being too old to be used.

The duty of the Hindus and Muhammadans of Sind to unite closely and co-operate together for the welfare of the province.

New Times (7), 5th July.

54. In the course of an article in which it dwells on the various benefits conferred by Islam on the province and people of Sind, the New Times pleads for close union between Hindus and Muhammadans and remarks:—"It is essential to the progress of Sind that the Hindu and Muhammadan should realise their deeper unity one with the other as sons of a common soil. The majority of the people are Muhammadans; and the disruptive tendencies of secular English education which have done harm in some places should be snubbed in Sind. Still, in our villages and small towns, the beautiful spectable may be seen of Hindus and Muhammadans living together as good neighbours, as friends, as helpers one of the other. This co-operation, this attitude of friendliness, this spirit of mutual help should develop all the more with the growth of our new political consciousness.......... The Hindu and the Moslem must needs draw closer one to the other in order that they may serve together the Sindhudesha. The Eternal Saviour of Nations has joined us together: let no petty personal matters tear us apart. The political, social, economic and educational reconstructions which we demand, call for a co-operation of the Hindu and the Mussalman."

Government should take notice of the mischievous nonsense being daily poured out by the vernacular press in Sind.

Sind Observer (12), 6th July.

55. "A curious article published in a Sindhi newspaper has been brought to our notice as illustrating how every opportunity is seized by a certain class to fling mud at the Government. Commenting on the extension of office granted to Lords Willingdon and Pentland this newspaper remarks that Government have by this shown extreme solicitude for the safety of their Lordships and have arranged, so that they should not travel home at a time when the German submarines render the passage usafe. Yet, continues this same paper, three Indians are commanded to proceed to England through this submarine beset sea to take up their appointments on the India Council. Are their lives cheaper? the writer asks. Such is the mischievous nonsense which is poured out in streams daily for the consumption of the public, many of whom do not possess sufficient wisdom to recognise the noxious and untruthful from the wholesome and true......... Some one once said 'throw mud and some of it is sure to stick.' This appears to be the policy of certain newspapers and there is no doubt that some of the mud does stick, and the masses see it there and wonder if Government approve of it. Silence, they say, is golden, but that is not a saw which should guide Government in this country above all. Silence here is taken as approval or at least an admission of the truth of what is said against the Sirkar."

Suggestion for the improvement of Muhammadan education in Sind.

Sind Moslem (11), 7th and 14th July.

56. "In the first place there should be appointed a Mussalman Educational Inspector and put in sole charge of the Muslim education in Sind. He should be selected from among the educational experts of India and be subordinate to the Director of Public Instruction. This measure would retain the control with the Government and at the same time insure the progress of education of the Mussalmans in Sind. Such steps have already been taken by the Governments of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh and Bengal. In the second place the number of the existing schools being inadequate, other schools should be soon opened by the Government and given in the exclusive management of Mussalmans controlled and guided by the Muslim Edutional Inspector and his Muslim staff. The Government as well as the Municipal schools, monopolised, as they are, by the Hindus have undoubtedly failed to attract Mussalmans perhaps owing to little sympathy shown by the teachers to Muslim students. One of the immediate steps, in the third place, that the Government should take should be to open High Schools in each district, raise those schools that already exist to high standard under the control of Mussalmans." [In the next issue the paper points out that the appointment of a Moslem Deputy Educational Inspector to be in charge of Moslem education in Sind would not be a novelty, as there are already similar Muhammadan Deputies in other parts of the Bombay Presidency itself. With regard to its suggestion for opening High Schools, the paper remarks:—"We, further, repectfully approach Government to take a step forward in that direction and open a High School either at Hyderabad, the geographical centre of the province, or at Sukkur—a place where a Muhammadan boarding house already exists with free boarders and paying boarders altogether to the extent of about seventy. If Government decide upon the course suggested, they can easily divert a part of the ensuing Government grant of one lakh of rupees towards the early opening of the suggested High School instead of distributing it among Muslim Schools for providing unnecessary luxuries like swimming baths, etc. In addition to that the Municipalities and the District Local Boards should also be asked to participate in extending educational facilities to Mussalmans which their special circumstances and requirements call for, and which they have an unquestionable right to expect."]

Alleged unreasonableness and harshness of the decision of the Judicial Commissioner in Sind to debar non-graduates from appearing for the Sind Pleaders' Examination.

Sind Advocate (9), 5th July.

57. "The action of the Judicial Commissioner in Sind in confining the Sind Pleaders' Examination to graduates has been adversely commented upon in the Sind papers and the Muhammadans who will be particularly harmed in their present backward state of education by the measure in question have made a strong representation on the subject, but nothing seems to have been done by the authorities who appear disposed to put a mere idea of this above all reasons that the public have advanced. One or two salient facts will suffice to show the unreasonableness or at least the premature character of the measure. Even the High Court Vakils' Examination is open to undergraduates! Does the Judicial Commissioner in Sind consider the status of his Court to be higher than that of a chartered High Court? There must be some openings in the legal profession for the gifted ambitious matriculates who are too poor to go to college......... Matriculates sometimes have done very well in the Law Examinations and the legal profession......... The Judicial Commissioner in Sind should, therefore, reconsider the matter; if not, the Government of Bombay may well intervene."

LEGISLATION.

Comments on the Patna University Bill.
Kesari (106), 17th July.

58. Commenting on the report of the Select Committee on the Patna University Bill the Kesari says:—On the eve of his departure Sir Harcourt Butler had saddled Sir Sankaran Nair with a retrograde Bill. It has, however, undergone many changes in the Select Committee and a new Bill as it were has been framed. Still there is room for reform in it. But the Imperial Council will consider that. The Select Committee could not make a horse of an ass, but it has at least produced a mule. If Sir Harcourt was in his former place, would such a change have been possible?

RAILWAYS.

Suggestion that the various Railway Administrations in India should appoint leaders of the Hindu and Muhammadan communities as visitors if they want to know thoroughly the grievances and requirements of Indian passengers.
Islámic Mail (4), 1st July, Eng. cols.

59. The Islámic Mail dwells appreciatively on the efforts being made of late to meet the convenience of Indian passengers by most of the Railway Administrations in India in the matter of refreshment and waiting rooms, supply of food and drinking water, etc. It, however, thinks that there is still much room for improvement, and continues:—"The chief difficulty in India arises from the absence of an understanding between the travelling public and Railway authorities. The passengers suffer a lot of hardship which could be avoided if the authorities knew of it. For, the gentlemen who are in charge of Railway Administrations are usually very sympathetic, public-spirited and solicitous for the welfare of the travelling public.......... But unfortunately they have no means of knowing what the public suffer and cannot, therefore, remedy it. They have appointed passenger superintendents, train conductors and a lot of other superfluous inspectors, simply to help the passengers, and there have been Conferences and Committees to hear the public side of questions. We would suggest the appointment of 'visitors' from amongst the leaders of Hindu and Muhammadan communities, people like Ebrahim Rahimtulla, Pundit Madan Mohan Malaviya, Sir Fazalbhoy, Nawab Mir Asad Ali Khan and others, who are interested in railway questions. They may be invested with powers to go about the lines once or twice a year and see things for themselves with a view to represent to the railway authorities the grievances of the travelling public and explain to the public the railway point of view of things. This will lead to mutual understanding and clear up much mistrust and suspicion on both sides."

MUNICIPALITIES.

The recent fire in Prag Mahal, Bombay.
Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 20th July.

60. Referring to the recent fire which broke out in a building named Prag Mahal, situated in the locality known as Dhobi Talao, Bombay, on account of some cinema films catching fire, and which resulted in the loss of human lives, the Praja Mitra and Pársi remarks that to allow rooms to be used as shops for storing such highly dangerous goods in dwelling houses is not only folly, but should be regarded as the permitting of the performance of a rash act calculated to endanger human life. It observes that the making and selling of cinema films comes within the category of trades hazardous to the safety of the public and inquires if a permit was issued by the Municipal authorities in the present case to the proprietor of the shop in which the cinema films caught fire and if such a permit was granted, the paper inquires on what grounds it was granted.

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 27th July 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 30 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 28th July 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

Agrarian Matters: People in Khándesh should be allowed to feed their cattle on Anjan leaves as grass has disappeared owing to want of rain . 47

Bombay Legislative Council:

Comments on the replies to interpellations at the last meeting of the— . . . . 30—33

The Bombay Budget in the Local Legislative Council . . . . 34 & 35

British Rule:

Alleged insulting reference to Muhammadans and their religion in books compiled by Hindus 25

Alleged speculating in Sovereigns by Marwaris in Bombay 26

Appointment of Mr. Montagu as Secretary of State for India . . 21 & 22

Bombay Muhammadans should not join the agitation against the Madras internments 5

Comments on Sir J. Meston's speech to his Council on Indian polity . 10

Comments on the Bishop of Bombay's letter on Indian polity . . 11

Comments on the circular about students and public meetings issued by the Educational Inspector, Northern Division, to managers of aided and recognised high schools 18

Comments on the notice under the Defence of India Act, served upon the Editor of Bombay Chronicle 23

Comments on the steps taken by the authorities against the holding of certain meetings 15

Comments on the suggestion that a law should be passed requiring the names of editors of newspapers to be registered 24

Controversy on social matters among the Borah community . . 27 & 28

Does the British Government in India deserve to be called Ma-bap Sarkar? 1

Indian leaders should not show impatience at the present crisis . . 6

Mr. Chamberlain's resignation 20

Mrs. Besant has introduced the theatrical art into Politics . . 13

Parliament should exercise greater check over the Indian Government and the people should control the Provincial Governments . . 7

Reflections on the present political situation in India . . . . 3 & 4

Students and political meetings . . . . 16 & 17

The British democracy's duty to support India's efforts to achieve Self-government within the Empire as a reward for her sacrifices in the war and especially in the Mesopotamia campaign . . 8

The importance of Swadeshi and the right of the masses in India to enjoy the fresh air of a free life 2

The internment of Mrs. Besant is a master stroke, not of men, but of the gods 12

H 155—a CON .

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

British Rule :—continued.

The movement for national education is intended only for re-establishing Brahman superiority 14

What students should do in memory of the day of Mrs. Besant's internment 19

What the British Government should do to restore their prestige throughout the length and breadth of India 9

His Excellency the Governor of Bombay: Comments on His Excellency Lord Willindon's utterance in the Bombay Legislative Council in support of the resolution regarding the death of Dr. Dadabhai Naoroji 29

Indians in the Colonies: Comments on the tramcar incident at Johannesberg. 44

Police :

Comments on the Government Press Note regarding the alleged "reign of terror" at Dádar 41

Contradiction of rumours about women being carried away in Bombay by soldiers 42

Protest that a play entitled Aurangzeb, staged at Surat, hurts Muhammadan feelings 43

Press Act:

Comments on the security taken from the Sanjibani of Calcutta . 45

Comments on the security taken from the New Times of Karáchi . 46

Sind :

Comments on certain orders of the District Magistrate, Hyderabad (—), prohibiting the singing of songs at a procession in honour of Mrs. Besant 48

Comments on the delegation to the Commissioner in Sind of power to transfer District Superintendents of Police 50

Complaint about carriages of Indians not being allowed to stand in a certain road in Hyderabad (—) 49

War :

A German writer on the ease with which Russia could become master of India 36

A Japanese prophesy about the — 38

Protest against New India's attempt to discourage recruitment for the Indian Defence Force 37

The progress of the — 39

The situation in Russia 40

LEGISLATION—

Comments on the Honourable Mr. Patel's Primary Education Bill in the Bombay Council . . . . 51—53

EDUCATION—

Protests against the recent orders requiring school teachers to appear before Collectors to sign declaration of loyalty 54

The policy of Government with regard to the School Final and Matriculation Examinations 55

RAILWAYS—

Strike of railway-men in Bombay 57

There is no chance of Company management of Indian — being done away with in spite of its recognised evils 56

MUNICIPALITIES—

Bombay: The recent fire at Prag Mahal, — 58

Hyderabad: Protest against the introduction of house-tax and terminal-tax in — (Sind) 61

Ratnágiri: Comments on the grant of larger elective rights to the — Municipality 60

Vita: Comments on the Collector's reply to the deputation of the people of — (Sátára) in connection with the local — 59

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Does the British Government in India deserve to be called "Ma-bap Sarkar".

Paraja Mitra and Pársi (28), 26th July.

1. The Praja Mitra and Pársi declares that the opponents of Indian progress who advance the plea that the general Indian public prefer the autocratic form of Government to Government on a democratic basis and that they call the present Government "Ma-bap Sarkar" and depending upon them as upon a parental Government deem it proper to follow their bidding, do not understand the meaning of the phrase "Ma-bap Sarkar". It remarks that by that phrase the Indians should be understood to mean that just as children can approach parents direct to make known their wants and demands without fear from anybody, so Government are, like parents, bound to come in direct touch with all classes of subjects and after hearing them, to satisfy them. Such a conception of the term "Ma-bap Sarkar", observes the paper, comes very close to the idea of democracy. It then refers in a tone of dissatisfaction to the public being prohibited from making mention of their wants and grievances in the addresses they present to the rulers and Governors when they are on tour in their districts and to the introduction to them only of those persons who are selected by Collectors and Commissioners for such interviews. It also inquires how the actions of Government can be said to be those of a "Ma-bap Sarkar" when in directing petitioners to forward their petitions through the proper channel they in effect ask the public to forward their tale of grievances through the very parties against whom they have to complain, and when they arrive at a decision upon the basis of the remarks made in self-vindication by those very parties.

The importance of Swadeshi and the right of the masses in India to enjoy the fresh air of a free life.

New Times (7), 11th July.

2. In the course of an article headed "Swadeshi Appeal", the New Times dwells on the progress made by the scheme for starting the Bharat Swadeshi Vastu Stores at Karáchi. It also points out how the Swadeshi spirit when developed will influence all departments of life. It then writes:—"Sind yet lacks leadership; but one thing is sure: they alone will be accepted as our leaders whose hearts will bleed at the thought of the poverty and sufferings of the masses in Sind; they alone will be our leaders who will mix with the masses, freely, unostentatiously—men who will have no scruples of caste, no pride of aristocracy, no sordid motive of self-advancement—men who will realise their unity with the great 'unwashed' ones of the land; unwashed because of the sins of society which is indifferent to them—'unwashed' yet rich in the yearnings of the heart, rich in the treasure of humble devotees of nature.......... Oh these masses of the land! they pine for the fresh air of a free life: they yearn for the things which society denies them to-day—the things that God has fashioned fair; their souls would commune with the stars; their hearts would throb with true patriotism. But they are in poverty; who will help them? Who will contribute to their material welfare? Who will make their hearts less lonesome? As many as will, are destined to gain the gratitude of the people and be greeted as the servants of the Nation."

Reflections on the present political situation in India.

Kesari (106), 24th July.

3. Government doubted a few years ago whether people can remain loyal and at the same time be patriotic. But they are now completely disillusioned and they know full well that loyalty and patriotism can dwell together even under foreign rule. Our rulers see clearly that the political aspirations of Indians are just and proper and based on loyalty and that they must be fulfilled and that otherwise there will surely be a conflagration of discontent and that there is no chance of the rally of the moderates round their banner unless their political desires are satisfied. Loyal patriots who were victims of Government's suspicion and loyal patriots who were patronised and patted by Government are now working hand in hand for swarájya. With what face can England deny plain swarájya—not independence—to India when England is holding aloft the banner of independence of small principalities? And if she does, what true and loyal patriot will submit? Since Lord Pentland delivered his speech and interned Mrs. Besant and her two followers discontent caused by pain inflicted on the people has spread all over India and Indian leaders have taken the vow of swarájya and have expressed their determination not to go back an inch. The Home Rule movement is being vigorously carried on in the United Provinces and we are thankful to the head of this Province for setting a good example to other timorous local Governments and for not interfering with the movement. In other provinces the movement is being carried on and the atmosphere is favourable to swarájya. The appointment of Mr. Montagu is welcome, but that is no reason why our agitation should flag, and we hope the All-India Congress Committee that will meet shortly will recognise its responsibility in the matter.

Gujárati (16), 22nd July.

4. Sir K. G. Gupta has rightly asked why Indians alone should be made to keep silence in the matter of their aspirations. The answer to his question is that Indians are helpless and are accustomed to yield unquestioning obedience to authority. Indians are accustomed to obey the law, but they are not prepared to give up the rights of mankind and those of British citizenship. On the one side there is authority and on the other there are the aspirations of the people. It is the British who have sown the seeds of these aspirations and have fostered them by their political history. High souled Englishmen have not up to now allowed these aspirations to be discouraged. Lord Hardinge, Mr. Lloyd George, Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Montagu have all expressed a desire for making the administration responsible to the people of this country. But Lord Chelmsford, Lord Pentland, Lord Willingdon and Sir Michael O'Dwyer have said nothing calculated to give satisfaction to the people. Sir James Mestion has given expression to hopeful views. Sir James is of opinion that we are not doing our best to co-operate with the Allies in securing victory. The causes of this state of affairs are quite obvious. The officials have centralised all authority in the name of efficiency. Have the authorities before or after the beginning of the war done anything to enlist the sympathy of the people and to encourage them in their aspirations? What have the officials done to lead the enthusiasm of the people in the right direction? There is truth in Sir James's assertion that the present condition of India gives rise to anxiety. But are the people to be blamed for the present situation? What have the Government of India done to rectify the mistake of Lord Pentland, who does not know anything about the aims and aspirations of the Congress and the Moslem League? What should people think of the attitude of indifference adopted by the officials in asking them to be silent as regards their apirations? If the Imperial Government are considering the question of Indian reform, why should not Indians be allowed to express their opinions on the question? It is the popular belief that the Imperial Government have adopted the suggestions of the Government of India which are not likely to satisfy Indian aspirations, and now the Government of India hesitate to make them public at the present juncture when Indian opinion is so much united. The Government of India find themselves in an awkward position. The awakening among the people has proved that the Government of India are not in sympathy with the people. It was on this account that various officials were asking the people not to pitch their hopes very high; but as their efforts did not secure the desired effect they got exasperated and resorted to repressive measures. This has made the people sceptical and a state of discontent has arisen such as was never seen during his stay in India by Sir James Meston. The remedy lies in the officials coming over to the popular side instead of being antagonistic to it. If this is not done popular agitation will become more acute.

Bombay Muhammadans should not join the agitation against the Madras internments.

Islámic Mail (4), Urdu Edition, 16th July.

5. Dealing with the situation in India, particularly as it is affected by the Madras internments, the Islámic Mail states that Indians pay a traditional reverence to all objects of magnitude and power, and it believes that if it had not been for the western education imparted by Englishmen, Indians would have worshipped their rulers, as they do Ram, Lakshman and the Ganges. It states that all literate Indians regard themselves to be the equals of British officials and aspire to govern the country; they demand Home Rule in India in imitation of a similar measure intended for Ireland. It classifies them into two groups: one which trusts in the British love of liberty and generosity, holds that the people would be granted political rights according to their fitness for these, and considers it an ungrateful and ungentlemanly act to wring concessions forcibly at a time of unequalled stress; and the other which thinks that Government would not grant anything except under compulsion, and having been instrumental in setting aside the original partition of Bengal is ready ever and anon to engage in a trial of strength with Government. The paper is of opinion that the propagandist activities of this latter class of men may be perfectly lawful; at the same time they are apt to unbalance the minds of the illiterate and the young who degenerate, as was the case in Bengal, into out-and-out terrorists and anarchists. It opines that an indigenous Government might have been forced to take stronger measures for suppressing Mrs. Besant's propagandism leading to violence and crime, and regards the agitation against her internment as totally stupid. Having regard to her pro-Hindu sympathies, the paper advises the Bombay Musalmans to abstain from partaking in the agitation in her favour and points out that their confrères in Madras have done the same.

Indian leaders should not show impatience at the present crisis.

Chikitsak (96), 18th July.

6. As a part of the British Empire the future of India depends upon the result of this war and it cannot be foretold what position India will occupy in the scheme of Imperial reconstruction which will be taken in hand after the war. There are disquieting signs of the overlordship of the Colonies over India being added to that of England. The complex and important question as to how to reach the goal of swarájya through the vortex of the present critical times is engaging the attention of our thoughtful men. It is neither prudent nor politic, therefore, to be irritated at the repressive policy adopted in one of the Presidencies and encourage the ignorant masses to inaugurate such an extreme measure as boycott of foreign goods. We would warn our responsible leaders, therefore, not to hinder the fulfilment of our demands for swarájya by their impatience.

Parliament should exercise greater check over the Indian Government and the people should control the Provincial Governments.

Prakásh (116), 25th July.

7. Lord Curzon attributed the failure of the first Mesopotamia expedition to the centralization of all power in the Government of India and advocated division of power among the several Provincial Governments. The Times of India supports this view and argues that it is quite necessary that the Provincial Governments should be autonomous. Our contemporary also pleads for the curtailment of the powers of the Secretary of State. We too do not particularly want this official. We have been demanding that Parliament should exercise more control over the administration of India and that the salary of the Secretary of State should be charged to the British treasury. To do away with the Secretary of State and make the Government of India more independent would be to give unbridled license to the bureaucracy. Similarly we wish for more power for the Provincial Governments provided public opinion exercises a real check over the Executive. Otherwise increased power in the hands of an administrator of the type of Lord Pentland would prove disastrous to the people. We are, therefore, of opinion that the mere transfer of power from one Civil Servant to another will not make the Provincial Governments really autonomous in the eyes of the people. We shall get real autonomy only when the Legislative Councils exercise authority over the Executive and the bureaucracy realise that they are not the masters but the servants of the people.

The British Democracy's duty to support India's efforts to achieve self-government within the Empire as a reward for her sacrifices in the war and especially in the Mesopotamia campaign.

New Times (7), 10th July.

8. In the course of a lengthy article in which it dwells on the findings of the Mesopotamia Commission's report and the importance of the capture of Bagdad, the New Times remarks :—" The city famous in legend and story, the city of the Arabian Nights and the miraculous carpet, the city which boasted of a great University and a noble civilization in the days of Harun-al-Rashid, the city of Bagdad is now in the hands of England ; and with the loss of this city has perished Germany's dream of dominion and conquest in the East. And let it not be forgotten that Indian Forces have played an important part in the capture of Bagdad. It may be that when the war is over, they who tell its story to the world will be careful to point out that the turning-point in this mighty struggle between democracy and militarism came not in the West—in France or Salonika—but in the East. And they who will tell that story will also tell of how in that day of England's trial Indian soldiers went forth to fight and vanquished England's foes—of how Indian soldiers marched to semi-desert Mesopotamia accepting agonies as a triumph, and offering their life-blood to enhance in the annals of time the glory of the 'little gem set in the silver sea'. Yes—India that to many of her critics seemed suspicious, seemed seditious, India has proved a friend of the British Commonwealth. Is it too much for India to ask the English people to help her whose sons have paid with their bodies for their soul's dominant desire ? Is it too much for India to expect that the English democracy should show their appreciation of her national self by supporting her efforts to achieve self-government within the Empire ? "

What the British Government should do to restore their prestige throughout the length and breadth of India.

New Times (7), 16th July.

9. In the course of a lengthy article dealing with a volume of General Smuts' speeches, the New Times dwells on the changes in ideals, etc., that seems to have come over the whole world as a result of the war. In the course of the article the paper writes :—" If England regards herself as the trustee of India, and is aware of the present mood and temper of the nation, is not the time come to make a clear declaration concerning the new policy the Government would follow in India ? The supreme need in these anxious days of the world-war is co-operation between the Government and the people ; and if the Government will send a sobering summons to the people setting forth the New Programme as seen from the changed angle of vision, the present unfortunate situation will end. The Government, we may well believe, have their difficulties as their energies are concentrated on the one task of winning the war ; but knowing as we do the present situation, we feel strongly that the Government should announce the policy as early as possible ; the Government should not despise the psychology of the first impression. A clear bold declaration of policy—one worthy of England's history and England's ideals—will restore the prestige of the British name throughout the length and breath of India. Our young men are animated by noble impulses ; our people have no disloyal thought against the Government ; and a declaration of policy, such as we earnestly ask for, will come like a lightning-flash rending the gloom of those who may otherwise indulge in the easy politics of despair. Let the Government lead the popular movement in industry, education, legislation ; let the people have an assurance that the authorities are in sympathy with the great patriotic forces of the Nation ; let them know from the Rulers that in the building-up days of the New Word which is to displace the old, the service and loyalty and the yearning of India for a life of larger self-realisation are respected, appreciated and responded to by the Government."

Comments on Sir J. Meston's speech to his Council on Indian polity.

Young India (14), 25th July.

10. "If one reads carefully Lord Pentland's speech, one will discover that Sir James Meston was practically translating what His Excellency of Madras had chosen to put with less tact and more pointed bluntness......... But the whole point is that as soon as people begin to think of their legitimate dues which are long overdue, war comes in the way. When there was no war, the authorities were in no hurry to consider them, and when there is war they are too busy with its prosecution. Strange as it may seem, this is how the aspirations of the people have been met. And yet Sir James Meston assumes that the people are indulging in certain forms of political excitement which have reacted on the Government's prosecution of the war! Is it a wonder therefore that 'there is a note of suspicion and mistrust in this country'?......... Whatever policy may hereafter be pursued under the new regime, it is at least impossible to regard that the Government were hitherto anything but extremely unsympathetic and determined to oppose, as far as they could, the onrush of the tides of Indian nationalism."

Comments on the Bishop of Bombay's letter on Indian polity.

Message (6), 25th and 24th July.

11. "A sheep in the fold" writes to the Message:—"His Lordship the Bishop of Bombay has taken upon himself the thankless task of giving advice to people who have not only not invited it but who would rather be without it, proceeding, as it does, from his ignorance, his prejudices and an incapacity to reason, which are little short of a disgrace to the high position which His Lordship occupies....... Being an Englishman, he could not openly repudiate the Indian aspirations to attain self-government: but he asks Indians 'to deserve it' first and then claim it. He assures us that the present Home Rule agitation is 'unpractical' and is likely to prejudice the 'practical' English people. Now we admit that the English are eminently 'practical' and also that they 'care little for ideas and nothing for words' as the reverend Bishop says. Surely, a people which always and universally cared much for 'words' would not have allowed the charters of 1833 or of 1858 to be made dead letters and even openly declared to be 'impossible charters' by a viceregal satrap. Surely, again, a people all of whom cared much for 'ideas' would not have deprived a whole nation of their arms and practically emasculated them, so that their crores are incapacitated to defend their homes and help the empire in the hour of need.......... And just because we recognise this fact, we invite the people to carry on t[illegible]r constitutional agitation for Home Rule and not to remain content with th[illegible]assing of pious resolutions. 'Resolutions of the Congress which are not followed by persistent agitation cannot appeal to a 'practical' people, caring 'little for ideas and nothing for words'—thank you, right reverend Sir, for teaching us these words.......... His Lordship tells us that the educated classes in England did not press for any removal of their grievances in regard to recruiting. We can well believe this, for the simple reason that the English had no grievances, such as Indians have to complain of. The relevant question is whether the English educated youths would have refrained from complaining if foreigners had been getting commissions which were denied to them, and unless we are assured as to this we shall refuse to attach much importance to the analogy which the Lord Bishop has seen fit to draw." [The Message in its previous issue remarks:—"Judging from the whole tenor of the letter, it would seem that the reasonableness, practicality and deserving of the place in the Empire of the educated clasess consists in their submitting themselves to be 'dumb-driven cattle'. Subscribe freely to the War Loan and the War Relief Funds; drop all agitation—constitutional and otherwise—regarding your future status in the Empire; furnish volunteers to the 'Defence force': that way lies your 'deserving' 'the place you claim in the Empire'. Even thus has the good and noble Bishop of Bombay argued."]

The internment of Mrs. Besant is a master stroke, not of men, but of the gods.

New Times (7), 14th July.

12. The New Times publishes a paragraph, subscribed with the name "G. E. Sutchffe", which explains why and Mrs. Besant, a mystic, took up politics. In the course of the paragraph occurs the following:—"No one could have awakened India to the part it had to play in the coming civilisation, as a self-governing section of the British Empire, except Mrs. Besant. To describe her as ignorant of politics is manifestly absurd. She was a trained politician, gaining victories over opposing forces of enormous weight whilst many of us were imbibing our mother's milk. Being therefore both a mystic and a trained politician, she was in a sense a unique instrument for the work.......... No one but the mystic can really reach the Indian heart, and Mrs. Besant possesses that heart. She will be known in future as the Mother of India, the India that will be free, for on that freedom she has set her heart and devoted her life. To the Indian there is nothing more sacred than a mother, at whose domestic shrine all alike must worship. To cast aspersions upon the mother is the greatest of all insults to the Indian.......... It is this filial emotion now focussed on Mrs. Besant, the most powerful emotion of which India is capable, which has been universally roused to fever heat by her internment. Her former enemies even immediately rally to her side, for this filial instinct is an irresistible force in the Indian heart. The internment was a master stroke, not of men but of gods, and against these Olympian forces the opponents of India's emancipation are putting their puny strength. Let them beware."

Mrs. Besant has introduced the theatrical art into politics.

Jagaruk (new), 27th July.

13. Mrs. Besant has introduced the theatrical art into politics. She has changed her opinions from time to time as an actor assumes different rôles at frequent intervals. She married a Christian Missionary, but soon separated from him and began to adversely criticise Christianity. She then entered the Theosophical Society and endeavoured to increase her own importance by belauding Hinduism. The ignominious disclosures of the Leadbeater affair, however, compelled her once more to change her rôle. She then realised that she would not regain her lost importance unless she took part in politics, and the woman who once roundly abused political agitators became an advocate of Home Rule! She has propounded contradictory views on every subject. In short by establishing her own importance by her cunning she exposed to the gaze of the world the stupidity of Indians. When the Press Act was enforced against her, she had thought that she would be imprisoned, and so had made preparations to leave the political arena with dramatic effect. She made her will and left a last message to the people! Unfortunately, the curtain did not rise in time! This time, however, all went well without any mishap and she has dramatically left the political stage. Even in her internment she has not allowed herself to forget the theatrical art. She has hoisted the Home Rule flag on a lofty p[illegible] on the heights of Ootacamund and salutes it three times a day with her [illegible]owers.

The movement for National Education is intended only for re-establishing Brahmin superiority.

Jagaruk (new), 27th July.

14. 'National Education' is one of those terms that are used at present to mislead the people. According to its advocates Western education which strikes at the root of old prejudices and social inequalities is not 'National', but that education which sanctions old religious beliefs and upholds class distinctions is 'National' as it alone will help to establish the old ascendancy of the Brahmins! Strenuous efforts are being made at present to re-establish this superiority. Caste superiority has received a check since the spread of Western education, which inculcates ideas of equality and universal brotherhood, and the lower classes have now begun to realise the need of intellectual independence. Those who desire, therefore, to escape from the tyranny of this intellectual slavery and social inequality should see that they are not misled by this movement.

Comments on the steps taken by the authorities against the holding of certain meetings.

Kesari (106), 24th July; Shubhodaya (89), 20th July; Chandrodaya (33), 23rd July.

15. There were three attacks of the plague of police repression this week and three deaths. On the internment day it was proposed to have a huge procession in Madras. But it was attacked by this plague and it died. A similar meeting proposed to be held in Hyderabad (Sind) was also attacked by it and the project had to be given up. The Arni (Madras) attack appears to have been of a stronger type. When the programme of a meeting is inoculated with loyalty-serum, the experience is that such a meeting generally remains immune from this plague. But still the Swadeshi meeting of Arni was attacked. What ground is there to say that there would have been disturbances at the Swadeshi meeting? So long as there is no responsibility to answer such questions, why will the police consider whether their orders are properly made or not? But the people want to keep their agitation safe from this plague and their leaders should, therefore, find out a sovereign remedy. We should make our agitation so strong and robust that it will remain immune from the attacks of this plague. [Mr. Tabib, Secretary of the Hubli Ratepayers' Association, writes to the Shubhodaya a letter protesting against the dispersal by the police of the meeting held in Hubli to support the Honourable Mr. Patel's Primary Education Bill. The Shubhodaya says that it was unpardonably wrong on the part of the police to disperse a meeting properly convened to discuss a question of public interest. It further remarks that Government should issue strict orders to the Police not to commit such wrongs henceforward. The Chandrodaya commenting on the same incident, writes:—Is this the legal acumen of the Police Bahadurs or their sweet will? We are living in strange times. It is desirable that there should be no such misunderstandings between the police officials and the people. We suggest that the District Magistrate should issue orders to the police not to prohibit such meetings.]

Students and political meetings.
Gujaráti* (16), 29th July, Eng. cols.

16. In noticing the circular issued by the Educational Department on 7th June 1917, prohibiting students from attending any public meeting whatsoever and specially meetings called by the Home Rule Leagues or other meetings at which Home Rule was advocated, we pointed out that although Government had not chosen to mention specifically the meetings of the National Congress and the All-India Muslim League, the prohibition was capable of being applied to them as well. That is now made clear by the reply of the Bombay Government to the Honourable Mr. Manmohandas Ramji. Although the Honourable Member did not specifically refer to the meetings of the Congress and the League at which the question of Self-government for India might be discussed, Government have distinctly stated that public meetings at which the scheme of self-government adopted by the Congress and the Muslim League is considered cannot be allowed to be attended by students. We, however, hope the Honourable Mr. Manmohandas will get an authoritative declaration from Government with reference to the meetings of the Congress and the Muslim League, as they were not specifically included within the scope of his interpellation. As hairsplitting is possible, the position requires to be placed beyond the shadow of a doubt. The Indian public must know precisely to what lengths Government are prepared to push their senseless policy of repression."

Message (6), 28th July; Mahrátta* (5), 29th July.

17. "We congratulate the Local Government on their strict impartiality. At Tuesday's meeting of the Legislative Council at Poona they stated in reply to a question by the Honourable Mr. Munmohandas Ramji that the 'Students and Politics' circular enjoined the non-attendance of students not only at meetings organised by the National Congress and the Moslem League at which questions on Self-government were propounded, but also 'meetings where other political problems of interest to the country and the Empire are discussed'. Students will kindly note the reply and take care to see that they do not attend any political meeting, because like Home Rule and Self-government, questions dealing with 'Empire day', War Loan and Recruitment to the Indian Defence Force are all politics in their strictest logical interpretation. Nothing that is of this mundane world can be separated from politics and let Bombay students beware!" [The Mahrátta writes:—"The student's circular of the Bombay Government, dated 7th June, was a little vague and gave some excuse for supposing that political meetings held under the auspices of the Home Rule League were its special objective. An interpellation in the Council has made this point clear. We are now told that it applies to all political meetings including those where the question of Self-government as propounded by the Indian National Congress and the Muslim League is discussed. This reply of Government confirms the view which the 'best minds' in the country have been putting forward ever since the May speech of the Madras Ruler: Home Rule and Self-government are not two, and are equally pernicious in the eyes of Government."]

Comments on the circular about students and public meetings issued by the Educational Inspector, Northern Division, to managers of aided and recognised high schools.
Praja Bandhu (27), 22nd July, Eng. cols.

18. "An esteemed correspondent sends us the following circular addressed by the Educational Inspector, Northern Division, to all the managers of aided and recognised high schools. We think the latest circular issued by the Bombay Government aimed a fling at the Home Rule movement, while this fiat from the Director of Public Instruction forbids all schoolboys from attending any public meeting of any kind. The rules printed below are given as accompaniment to the recent order issued by the Bombay Government, and although it is distinctly stated that they are for 'Government and aided schools', may we inquire how are they now made applicable to all educational institutions by the Director of Public Instruction, who seems to be more keen than the honourable member in charge of the Educational portfolio? This is quite a significant sign of the times and clearly shows what way the wind blows even in the Educational Department." [Here follow the circular and rules referred to above.]

What students should do in memory of the day of Mrs. Besant's internment.
Mantri (109), 26th July.

19. The Mantri, in commending to the attention of the students, a letter written by a Madras student to Sir Subramaniya Iyer in which he says that he has decided, among other things, to forego his morning meal on the 16th of every month in memory of the internment of Mrs. Besant, remarks:—Our students may or may not follow the example of this student. But they should at least make it a point, in memory of the Madras internments, not to drink tea on the 16th of every month.

Mr. Chamberlain's resignation.
Young India (14), 25th July.

20. "As a politician, Mr. Chamberlain may hold what views he likes. But to go out of his way—just when he is under a cloud and he had made up his mind to relinquish his responsibilities—to deprecate changes in the Indian administration was neither decent nor desirable. As all the world knows, Mr. Chamberlain is by no means enamoured of political changes in India, though so far as the white races of this earth are concerned he would not scruple to talk big on liberty, fraternity and equality.......... But with an insatiable desire for notoriety, he deprecated, while defending some of his egregious blunders, 'discussion as to the future of India at present'.......... The only excuse Mr. Chamberlain could have had for interposing his deprecation of a public discussion in the House of Commons was that it would expose his utter incompetence to rise to the height of his responsibilities. That is the inevitable result of hoisting a man without merits into office, simply because the interests of the Party machine required it."

Appointment of Mr. Montagu as Secretary of State for India.
Young India (14), 25th July.

21. Commenting on the appointment of Mr. Montagu, Young India writes:—"It is a legacy of ineptitude to which he has succeeded, months of inattention and incompetence have reduced the garden into a growth of jungle.......... His last words inspire us with hope and faith, hope and faith that have been long on the wane, that the new Secretary of State will be able to succeed where others have failed.......... Mr. Montagu's appointment at the present supreme crisis in the history of Indian politics is, we take it, an indication that there is still statesmanship in England, and if at such a time like the present we behave like men and not time-serving self-seekers, the course of India's political destiny will be still further advanced, advanced in a manner satisfactory to our national pride and sentiment."

Kesari (106), 24th July; Dnyán Prakásh (36), 24th July.

22. The Kesari welcomes the appointment of Mr. Montagu as Secretary of State and refers to him as a sympathetic Secretary. It refers to an alleged rumour in Simla that Lord Chelmsford's despatch has been disapproved by the British Government and that it has been returned to him for further consideration. It also refers to Mr. Montagu's old speeches as Under Secretary to Lord Morley and to the speech of Lord Islington and remarks :—Political reforms in India are being actively considered in England and Mr. Montagu who formerly said that Indians should gradually have a larger share of government is now Secretary of State. Lord Islington says plainly that the reforms now to be made will end in swarájya. It is a great evil that we have no one to speak on our behalf in England when the situation is so favourable to us. It is necessary that the All-India Congress Committee should send a deputation to England immediately. [The Dnyán Prakásh says :—Mr. Montagu should put a stop to repression and grant a larger share of the administration to the people. The release of Mahomed Ali, Mrs. Besant and others is necessary in order that political reforms may be enthusiastically welcomed by the people. The obstructions put in the way of constitutional agitation by little-minded officials should be immediately removed. We should not merely rely on the generosity of Mr. Lloyd George and Mr. Montagu, but we should carry on a vigorous agitation. We hope the All-India Congress Committee will arrange to send a deputation to England immediately.]

Comments on the notice under the Defence of India Act served upon the editor of the Bombay Chronicle.

Gujaráti (16), 22nd July.

23. The notice served on Mr. Horniman, the editor of the Bombay Chronicle, under the Defence of India Act prohibiting him from publishing anything in connection with the alleged reign of terror at Dadar has caused astonishment among the people, for this step of Government has deprived the people of the privilege they enjoyed of seeking redress of grievances by ventilating them in the newspapers and has vested the official classes with arbitrary power. It is the duty of Government to protect the realm and to preserve peace; but it is as equally their duty to protect the lives, property and honour of the people they govern. No official will ever say that the realm should be protected at the sacrifice of the lives, property or honour of the people. Government should investigate into the truth of complaints made to them and if they find any truth in them they should take steps to remove the causes of such complaints. There would have been nothing wrong if Government had informed Mr. Horniman that enquiries were being made in the complaints he had published and asked him not to publish anything further in the matter pending the enquiry. Such a step would have won the confidence of the people. The complaints were of a serious nature and in the absence of any assurance from Government of steps being taken to protect the people from harm they gave rise to many rumours. These rumours helped to create a panic among the people. These rumours would have been set at rest by taking the people into confidence. The people are placed in a very awkward position, for if they ventilated their grievances they would be held liable for doing things that would be prejudicial to public safety. Many acts of high-handedness have been done by provincial Governments in the name of 'public safety'. If there is anything unlawful in ventilating these grievances the publisher may be dragged to court, but if it is lawful to ventilate grievances people must be free to make their grievances known with a view to protecting their lives, property or honour from harm. It is one of the advantages of British rule in India that people can ventilate their grievances in the Press and on the platform. If people are debarred from this privilege the only methods open to them are either to resort to a general strike or to wait upon the officials and to refuse to go away unless the grievances are redressed. We do not think Government would like people to resort to these antiquated methods. We are glad to note that Government have made an attempt to correct their mistake by issuing a Press Note to the effect that enquiries are being made in the matter. People will be pacified by the views that Government are eager to punish the guilty and they will now readily come forward to co-operative with them.

Comments on the suggestion that a law should be passed requiring the names of editors of newspapers to be registered.

Gujaráti (16), 22nd July.

24. The Gujaráti disapproves of the suggestion made by the Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court in the Amrit Bazar Patrika contempt of Court case to the effect that a law should be enacted under the provisions of which the names of editors of newspapers could be registered and adds:—Should the names of editors be registered every time there is a change in the editor of a paper? Is it not enough that the Press Act can demand security from a Press and from the publisher of a paper? Why should a contributor be made to attach his signiture to an article? What objection is there for holding the publisher responsible for all that appears in a paper? We do not think that newspapers would be able to go on for a single day if all articles in the newspapers are to be signed. Where else on the face of the earth except in Austria-Hungary, which is regarded as a friend of militarism and the enemy of democracy, is there such a law as the Press Act of India? If the writer is to be held responsible for his writings, why in the name of justice should not responsibility be removed from the publisher and the keeper of the press? It is not desirable to add to the authority of the official classes and to make an addition to the number of people who are to be held responsible for their connection with the press.

Alleged insulting references to Muhammadans and their religion in books compiled by Hindus.

Political Bhomiyo (71), 20th and 27th July.

25. Writing to the Political Bhomiyo, a correspondent refers to a couplet, appearing on page 114 of a book entitled Kabir Mansur printed at the Shri Venkateshwar Press, Bombay, in 1903 and published by one Makan Kuber, a painter in which Kabir is represented to declare that he was not only a spiritual preceptor of the Prophet Muhammad but was God himself. The writer regards this writing as one calculated to insult the Muhammadans and their religion. He is of opinion that those educated and wealthy Moslems who quietly look on while such attacks are openly and freely made on Islam are, without doubt, guilty in the eye of God. He cannot understand why measures should not be taken in this connection regard being had to the fact that (as declared by the writer) Government had to withdraw from circulation the Sixth Gujarati Reader prepared by the Vernacular Text Books Revision Committee as a result of the protest raised by the Muhammadans against some false and unbecoming matter in connection with the Prophet Muhammad contained in that book. [Elsewhere in the same issue the paper publishes the first instalment of an article under the heading "The present day writers and their writings" wherein it is declared with regret that while the spread of education has promoted feelings of brotherhood in other countries, in India it has led to slandering and religious hatred of others. This result is attributed to the narrow-minded writers of the present times. The writer then goes on to remark that the author of the Satyarth Prakásh has, by making in that book unwarrantable statements regarding the Prophet Muhammad and the religious scriptures of the Moslem (vide paragraph 33 of the W. R. No. 25 of 1917), wounded feelings of the entire Muhammadan world. He regrets the lack of commonsense on the part of those educated Muhammadans who have joined hands with the Hindus in making fruitless endeavours to obtain swarájya and then goes on to speculate as to what lengths the Hindus would not go after the repeal of the Indian Press Act and the attainment of swarájya seeing that even at present they do not scruple to make unjustifiable attacks on Islám and Islamic practices. The writer then proceeds to describe how Vyas, the author of the Vedas, was begotten of Machhagandha as the result of rape committed on her by the Suryavanshi Raja of Hastinapur and significantly observes that the Moslem religion contains no such incident. He remarks that the Moslem scriptures nowhere contain the dogma that God belongs to the Muhammadans alone and that it is a creation of the imagination of the author of the Satyarth Prakásh. He concludes with appealing to the Muhammadans to ask for justice from the British Government in this connection. In the subsequent issue the paper publishes the second instalment of the above mentioned article, in which the writer, after reiterating his contention that education has given birth to mutual enmity, religious hatred, etc., in this country instead of promoting harmony, remarks that the Muhammadans have not become so imbecile that they would passively tolerate the insults that are being flung at their community, their religion and their pious emperors. He adds that as long as books containing such insults are not withdrawn from circulation and as long as it is not guaranteed that such books will not be published in future, the Moslem and the Hindu communities will never become united. The writer observes that he has twenty books in his possession containing matter offensive to the Moslem feelings and that he will gradually bring them into publicity through the medium of the Political Bhomiyo. He then refers to particular statements contained in a novel entitled Sambhaji Maharaj being a Gujarati translation made by Dwarkadas Motilal of a book bearing the same name published in Marathi by Mahadeo Ramchandra Jagushte disclosing the love affairs of Roshanara (represented in the novel to be the daughter of the Emperor Aurangzeb) and then goes on to refute the truth of those statements by mentioning that Roshanara was not the daughter but a sister of Aurangzeb and by trying to show that the details contained in those statements were not compatible with the ordinary course of human affairs, and with the practices of a Muhammadan zenana, etc. The writer remarks that the author has given truth the go-bye in his overpowering desire to insult the Muhammadans by bringing such charges upon an emperor like Aurangzeb.]

Alleged speculation in Sovereigns by Marwaris in Bombay.

Bombay Samáchár (61), 25th July.

26. One G. V. Shah, a jeweller, writes to the Bombay Samáchár complaining of business being done on a large scale in buying, selling and speculating in Sovereigns by certain Marwaris in the Shroff Bazar situated in the Mumbadevi locality in Bombay. The writer asks the authorities to put a stop to such transactions as fluctuations in the price of the Sovereign tend to produce a harmful effect on the minds of the public.

Controversy on social matters among the Borah community.

Akhbar-e-Islám (56), 24th July; Bombay Mazáh (58), 22nd July.

27. Apropos of the Bohra controversy which is being carried on in a section of the press and which was noticed in paragraph 30 of W. R. of No. 29 of 1917, the Akhbár-e-Islám expresses regret that it cannot publish a number of communications it has received on the subject partly because some of them are anonymous and partly because some of them are calculated only to add fuel to the fire. It desires the continuance of peace and harmony among the community and advocates the adoption of a viá media and the introduction of reforms that may be in keeping with religious tenets. The paper is of opinion that those who at present indulge in fruitless criticism and mutual recriminations are not the well-wishers of the Borah community but are only hypocrites and instigators of strife. [In its humorous columns the Bombay Mazah publishes a pseudonymous contribution in the course of which the writer observes that the entering of the Kaiser-i-Hind into the controversy about the affairs pertaining to the Borah community was quite uncalled for and that the last mentioned paper profusely applies complimentary epithets to that community only from motives of self-interest. He then refers to the feeling of apprehension frequently expressed by the Kaiser-i-Hind lest the writings in the Praja Mitra and Pársi in connection with the subject might create bad blood between community and community and inquires which two communities he means thereby. Does the former paper intend by means of such vague assertions, inquires the writer, to bring the Parsi and Borah communities into conflict? He then suggests that though the controversy is being carried on in Parsi papers, the Parsi community as such has nothing to do with the affairs of the Borahs.]

Sánj Vartamán (31), 28th July; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 28th July.

28. The Sánj Vartamán remarks that the agitation that has been carried on in a Parsi paper [the Praja Mitra and Pársi] of Bombay for the last two years by a party of reformers among the Borah community and the way in which some of the Borah monthly magazines are conducted have created some disaffection among the peace-loving Borah community of Bombay. It refers to the crowded meetings of the Borahs that were held on the 27th and 28th July 1917 at Badri Mahal to consult the Mullaji Saheb as to what steps should be taken in the matter and makes bold to assert, on the strength of the scenes the paper witnessed at both these meetings, that the excitement among the community has reached such a pitch that if the so-called reformers do not give up their present methods without delay and observe complete silence it will lead to serious results later on, for which those who carry on the agitation as well as the section of the press which permit it to be carried on in their columns will be held responsible. The paper observes that there is nothing wrong in these persons pressing for proper reforms in a moderate manner and in advocating the extension of education among the Borah community, but that in doing so they have made attempts not only to intermeddle with religious questions, but have made very unseemly attacks upon the Mullaji whom the Borahs venerate as their head priest and their Pir and adore him as their Murshid. It maintains that liberty of the press is a privilege that has been conferred not for its being abused in creating religious feuds among the people. It also inquires if it is possible that reforms would be brought about among a community by abusing its head priest or by trying to overthrow the sovereign religious authority in the community. The paper then proceeds thus:—We feel surprised, or rather we regret, to note how Government silently tolerate such writings which are calculated to create religious feuds. It is necessary that Government should put a check upon writings which tend to create conflict and excitement between community and community (sic. There is only one community concerned in this matter). We venture to say that Government would be startled if they were to read English translations of the writings indited by these agitators under the influence of the fumes of reform. No respectable editor would make room in his paper for such writings. The first duty of Government is to maintain peace and quiet. Such writings render the fulfilment of this duty more arduous and, therefore, the primary duty of Government is to deal severely with them. We wish that the attention of Government would be drawn to the excitement among the Borah community. [The Praja Mitra and Pársi very briefly refers to the meeting that was held on Friday putting down the number of those present at about 500 Borahs. It remarks that the number was small in the beginning, but it began to swell as a result of the curiosity awakened by the presence of the police outside the mosque. It observes that the more considerate section of those who had assembled there seemed to be opposed to any needless excitement or any action dictated by untimely haste, whereas another section demanded permission to put down the whole agitation by taking the law into their hands. The paper maintains that the Borahs afterwards began to disperse quietly on Shaikh Tyebbhai Kokab admonishing them to have patience and on his explaining to them the futility of unconstitutional methods.]

Comments on His Excellency Lord Willingdon's utterance in the Bombay Legislative Council in support of the resolution regarding the death of Dr. Dadabhai Naoroji.

Bombay Samáchár (59), 27th July; Hindusthán (20), 26th July.

29. The Bombay Samáchár refers to the speech made by His Excellency Lord Willingdon in support of the resolution moved in the Bombay Legislative Council by the Honourable Harchandrai Vishindas placing on record the services rendered by the late Dr. Dadabhai Naoroji, wherein His Excellency expressed the hope that political leaders would lead the country to the goal of self-government within the Empire, and adds:—This speech will make the people conscious of their true position and convince them that Lord Willingdon is not opposed to the goal of self-government, as some people have been led to suppose. His Excellency wants that the present political leaders of the country should walk in the footsteps of those that have passed away from us and should guide their followers with sincerity and moderation. We should make endeavours to prove our fitness for self-government and should bear in mind that vociferousness will not help us in our cause. It will take a long time for us to acquire the qualities that are needed to govern ourselves and we should, therefore, try to enlist the sympathy and co-operation of our rulers for the attainment of our goal. We have every hope that His Excellency's speech will tend to remove the misunderstanding existing in the mind of the public and save them from being led astray. [The Hindusthán writes:—We welcome Lord Willingdon's speech at the present juncture when our political atmosphere is steeped in gloom and thank him for recognising self-government within the Empire as the goal of our ambition. We, however, cannot help saying that the speech furnishes a further instance of the lip sympathy expressed by officials. Mere lip sympathy can never satisfy the aspirations of the people. If Lord Willingdon is really in sympathy with the goal of self-government, why should he have prohibited students from attending political meetings? When students are not allowed to be in touch with the political agitation and to listen to the speeches of political leaders, it would be futile to hope that the country will produce political leaders of the type of Gokhale or Dadábhai Nowroji.]

Comments on the replies to interpellations at the last meeting of the Bombay Legislative Council.
Message (6), 26th July.

30. Commenting on the replies to interpellations at the last meeting of the Bombay Legislative Council, the Message writes:—"Issues raised in the questions are of course avoided, but there is no 'fine art' visible. Asked whether The Mail was subscribed to by the Government, the latter replied in the negative. It was, however, admitted that they subscribed for 150 copies of that paper. The Jagadvritta also, we were told some time ago, was not 'subsidised', but that some hundreds of copies were subscribed to by the Government. Now can any one admire the fineness of the distinction between a 'subsidy' to a paper and generous subscription to it? To take another instance. Asked whether it was a fact that the Governments of other parts of India had invited non-official opinion in respect of the Public Services Commission, the Government replied: 'It is believed that some local Governments have invited non-official opinions on the report of the Public Service Commission'! We doubt whether a Government which does not know, or does not care to know, the facts of the matter and is content with knowing only that 'it is believed that such and such is a fact'—whether such an indifferent Government can rightly claim to have implicit confidence placed in its knowledge and wisdom. The difference in the angles of vision from which the War Loan and the Indian side of the Indian Defence Force are looked upon by the Government is hardly more strikingly shown elsewhere than in the reply which Government has vouchsafed to an interpellation by the Honourable Mr. D. V. Belvi, requesting for information about the number of enrolments in that Force according to districts. The reply of the Government blandly states that 'for enrolments the information asked for is not available with the Government'. People who remember how information about subscriptions to the War Loan was being promptly supplied to the press and got advertised, will rub their eyes at the thought that the same Government confesses with apparent sangfroid its ignorance of the accurate progress of enrolment."

Indu Prakásh (39), 25th July, Eng. cols.

31. Referring to the reply in the negative to a question in the Legislative Council whether the attention of Government had been drawn to the nuisance of prostitutes plying their trade in the vicinity of schools, etc., in Bombay, the Indu Prakásh writes:—"The reply of Government is extraordinary indeed. If their attention has not been 'drawn' to the evil, the fault lies with the officer or officers of theirs who is or are paid just to keep Government informed of people's complaints and grievances appearing in newspapers. Government know or ought to know that a public meeting was held some years ago under the presidency of Sir Bhalchandra Krishna to protest against prostitutes being allowed to ply their nefarious trade in respectable localities. In spite of the protest the authorities were unmoved and things are where they were. We are prepared to prove that prostitutes ply their trade just in the vicinity of schools, etc., aye, girls' schools too. Premises occupied by women of ill-fame are at places found to stand exactly in front of girls' schools and chawls occupied by respectable men and women.......... We have often drawn the attention of Government to this subject, and we do so once again. The situation is serious in all conscience......... We do not appeal to the Police. We appeal to the Government who alone can legislate. We respectfully point out that while a 'No.' may silence a member of the Council, it cannot improve the situation."

Dnyán Prakásh (36), 26th July.

32. Government stated in reply to the Honourable Mr. Patel's interpellation that during the last seven years Honourable Members gave previous notice of 213 resolutions out of which 150 were allowed to be discussed and the remaining 63 could not come before the Council for one reason or another. We understand that in connection with the present session alone Government disallowed at least 15 resolutions. The nature of these resolutions can be gathered from the fact that Government disallowed resolutions on the improvement of the indigenous system of Ayurvedic medicine and the summer exodus to the Hills. The Government of Madras not only allowed discussion on the subject of Ayurvedic medicine in their Council but appointed a special officer to inquire into it. The move to the Hills involves considerable waste of public money and also enables Government to escape even from the slight check at present exercised by public opinion. It is quite improper that Government should disallow discussion on the subject of the move to the Hills when Anglo-Indian newspapers also are persistently clamouring against it. This shows the futility of looking for impartial decisions from a President of the Legislative Council who is also the head of the administration.

Bombay Samáchár (59), 28th July; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 28th July.

33. The Bombay Samáchár thanks the Honourable Mr. Patel for eliciting from Government by means of an interpellation statistics as to the number of boys and girls studying in primary schools in municipal areas in the Presidency. It considers the information of a very important nature and expresses surprise that it should not be included in the annual report of the Director of Public Instruction. It hopes Government will see their way to waive the objections advanced by them in this matter and ask the Director to include the information in his report every year. [The Jám-e-Jamshed expresses surprise that Government should have answered in the negative the question asked by the Honourable Dr. C. Fernandes with respect to prostitutes plying their trade in residential quarters and near schools. It reminds Government of a memorial being submitted to them about seven years ago by the residents of the Girgaum locality. The paper is of opinion that the evil of prostitution can be removed only when the public conscience is awakened.]

The Bombay Budget in the Local Legislative Council.

Bombay Samáchár (59), 25th July; Jam-e-Jamshed (23), 27th July; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 27th July.

34. The Bombay Samáchár regards the provincial Budget for the year 1917-18 presented by the Honourable Mr. Carmichael at the recent session of the Bombay Legislative Council held at Poona as a document representing a very satisfactory outlook for the financial condition of the Bombay Presidency. It expresses gratification that it should have been possible for the Finance Member to be able to declare a closing balance of Rs. 259 lakhs for the current year even in the present times of financial stress. It remarks that the public will be grateful to Honourable Mr. Carmichael for the provision made by him for expenditure on education and sanitation. The paper then goes on to refer to the grants made for such objects as the new High School at Násik, the Royal Institute of Science at Bombay, etc., and observes that they constitute an unmistakeable proof of the solicitude of the Bombay Government for the welfare of the people even in the present time of war. It wishes that the balance of Rs. 85,000 from the Bombay share of the profits of the Wheat Scheme may be utilised towards the construction of schools for imparting agricultural training at suitable places in the Presidency on the basis of the new school to be started at Godhra. The paper regrets that a substantial balance from Bombay share of the grant announced by His Majesty at the Coronation Delhi Durbar should remain unutilised all these years when the educational needs of the Presidency have remained unsatisfied owing to financial embarrassment. [While expressing satisfaction at the various items in the Budget, the Jám-e-Jamshed remarks that the people of the Presidency will remain anxious to secure grants on education, sanitation and medical relief in future on a more liberal scale than at present. It endorses the suggestion of the Honourable Mr. Naik for improvement in the present arrangements for medical relief in the rural districts. It, at the same time, maintains that Government aid in this direction must necessarily be supplemented by private efforts. The paper also dwells on the desirability of appointing a committee as recommended by the Honourable Mr. Patel, for considering how economy can be effected in public expenditure. The Praja Mitra and Pársi regards the declaration made by the Government of India at the time of His Majesty's Coronation Durbar at Delhi to the effect that adequate expenditure on the people's education will have the first claim on the revenues of the country as a "charter" to the Indian people and remarks that no Government can dare to violate that sacred promise. It regrets that the Finance Committee of the local Legislative Council or even the elected members have not made endeavours for securing a proper utilisation of the balance of over 2½ crores of rupees and believes that the latter ought to have got a sum of 1½ crores of rupees earmarked from that balance, over and above the usual expenditure on education, to supplement the income raised by means of a special tax by those bodies that desire to make primary education free and compulsory within their districts.]

Dnyán Prakásh (36), 26th July.

35. The whole of the first day of the meeting of the Legislative Council was spent in the discussion of the budget. The Honourable Members who delivered speeches on the occasion and also those who listened to them must have doubted the utility of criticising a budget at the end of July which became operative from the beginning of April last. Indeed any one could notice that although several members took part in the debate they all knew in their minds that their suggestions were powerless to alter a single figure in the budget even by a pie. The debate otherwise would not have been so very uninteresting. It is perhaps right that Honourable Members should speak with the hope that their suggestions might be taken into consideration at the time of framing the next year's budget. The Honourable Mr. Patel's remarks as to how the suggestions made by the Finance Committee are disposed of will show any one that the debate on the budget is a mere farce. If His Excellency the President had not stopped his speech as irrelevant it would have been more instructive to the ordinary people than the whole debate. The non-official members emphasised the point that Government while spending liberally on the Police stint the necessary expenditure on education, sanitation, etc. The Honourable Mr. Kamat pointed out that the grant for sanitation is only a tenth part of that for the Police Department. This alone is sufficient to convince any one that the administration of the Bombay Presidency is not satisfactory. The non-official members have several times requested Government not to give effect to the Police Department reorganisation scheme, but strangely enough, Government go on heaping additional expenditure on the Police every year although Government officials themselves doubt its necessity and desirability. The Honourable Mr. Kamat remarked, and we agree with him, that until Government showed more solicitude for the spread of education than for their favourite Police Department, it could not be said that public money was being expended according to the popular will.

A German writer on the ease with which Russia could become master of India.

Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 29th July, Eng. cols.

36. "'With a tenth part of the military force which she (Russia) has spent in vain in the European War, she can make India her own and recompense herself for all her losses in Europe. At the same time she has a chance of undertaking a civilising mission such as has never been offered to her in the course of centuries. The historical greatness of England is doomed and England's star is setting. Even India, the pearl of the British Empire, appears to be about to fall into the sphere of Japan. England's position in India is certainly advancing towards a fall. Japan will gravitate towards India by way of China.' A German writer named Herr Maurus Revai makes the above observation in one of the recent issues Nord Und Sud. If one is able to judge anything from the war telegrams it is pretty certain that the heroic British have been holding the Germans everywhere. In spite of such reverses there are people in Germany to indulge in speculations of such fantastic nature. This is really a curious phenomenon."

Protest against New India's attempt to discourage recruitment for the Indian Defence Force.
Dnyán Prakásh (36), 24th July.

37. The Dnyán Prakásh protests against the attempt made by New India in its issue of the 20th instant to discourage recruiting for the Indian Defence Force. It says that though the rules regarding that force are unsatisfactory still no one should lose the present priceless opportunity of serving the Empire and of receiving military training. It remarks that it is an evident attempt to bring Government to their knees by the use of boycott, but that Government will lose very little, if at all, by it and that Indians alone will lose incalculably. It hopes that the younger generation will find the advice of Mrs. Besant and Mr. Gandhi preferable to that now tendered by New India.

A Japanese prophecy about the war.
Loka Bandhu (84), 22nd July.

38. The Loka Bandhu publishes a war prophecy said to have been given out by a Japanese, Yusho Kumumoto:—The war will end between the middle of August-November 1917. A Peace Conference will meet either at Paris or Copenhagen. Before Germany, Turkey will be conquered. Russia will try hard to get possession of the Dardanelles. Poland will be made over to Russia after a promise to grant it swarájya is given. Belgium will be renovated. Alsace-Lorraine will be given to France. The Allies will not get a full war indemnity from Germany. The Kaiser will be deposed and while on his way to America in a submarine, will meet his death. After a few years of democracy the Crown Prince of Germany will again rule and there will be again a war in 1930. All the wealth of England will be spent in that war. Germany will be wholly destroyed. Japan will side with the Allies.

The progress of the war.
Sanj Vartamán (31), 23rd and 24th July; Bombay Samáchár (59), 26th July; Akhbár-e-Islám (56), 28th July; Gujaráti Punch (18), 22nd July.; Praja Mtra and Pársi (28), 28th July.

39. The speech of the German Chancellor merely reproduces the opinions of those who are responsible for the war and it goes to show that the people and Government in Germany have not been brought to their senses even after three years of the war. There is no possibility of peace as long as there is no change in the present attitude of the German people and their Government. It is quite clear from the speech that Germany is prepared to continue the war and to take advantage of the present position in Russia to hold on for some time. It will take some time for the situation in Russia to improve; but there is no probability of the Allies on that account consenting to the terms of peace suggested by Germany. In spite of slackness on the Russian side the Allies have inflicted severe blows on Germany, but now that America has come to their help, they will answer the German challenge by expressing their determination to fight to the last and break down German militarism. [In the subsequent issue the paper considers Mr. Lloyd George's recent speech as an effective reply to the boastful pronouncement of the German Chancellor and believes that the Allies will not be afraid of making any sacrifices to gain their object. The Bombay Samáchár writes in a similar strain and opines that the present unsatisfactory state of things in Russia will have no effect in securing ultimate victory for the Allies. The Akhbár-e-Islám is afraid that the spirit of disobedience prevailing in the Russian army will lead to serious developments. It gives a summary of the article of the Times of India on the Russian situation. The Gujaráti Punch expresses its confidence that the Allies will take about a year or so to bring the enemy to his knees. The Praja Mitra and Pársi considers the present situation in Russia as calculated to give rise to anxiety. It, however, hopes that it will improve in course of time.]

The situation in Russia.
Rást Goftár (30), 29th July, Eng. cols.

40. "The telegrams that are allowed to pass the Censor show a very serious crisis in Russia. Really speaking, Russia has been in critical and even parlous condition ever since the Revolution, because while the Revolution brushed aside the Romanoff and his entourage, it did not arm the Provisional Government with sufficient authority while it utterly broke the discipline of the army and the navy.......... Russia's first object should have been to help the Allies to bring the war to a successful conclusion, but the Revolution has entirely distracted the whole country, while German intrigue and other treacherous influences are at work. If discipline cannot be restored at once and the Russian army continues to retreat the ultimate problem of the war will become far more intricate than it was a few months ago. German troops may penerate deep into Russian territory and seize places of great strategic or commercial importance.......... This means not only the prolongation of the war but the isolation of Russia. Notwithstanding all forecasts and calculations of experts, Germany is showing no signs of exhaustion and she is prompt in seizing every opportunity. The situation in Russia must cause grave anxiety to the Allies."

Comments on the Government Press Note regarding the alleged "reign of terror" at Dádar.
Indu Prakásh (39), 21st July, Eng. cols.; Subodha Patrika (42), 22nd July, Eng. cols.

41. "We publish elsewhere a Government Press Note regarding affairs at Dádar. It contains an assurance that all rumours and allegations shall be investigated at the earliest opportunity. As Government suggest in their Note and as we ourselves have ever urged, it should be the duty of all well-meaning and intelligent citizens to co-operate with the Police in bringing truth to light and contradict unfounded rumours. These are times of unparalelled stress and strain and nothing should be said or done that would in any way embarrass the authorities.......... It is equally the duty of the Police to adopt a kindly demeanour that will induce people to approach them, and not scare them away, as sometimes happens. We have all to do our duty by the State, and in exceptional times like the present, there ought to be exceptional mutual co-operation and brotherliness." [The Subodha Patrika, commenting on the Press Note, remarks:—"If Government intends to establish a connection between the recent strikes of railway workmen and the circulation of rumours in the northern part of the island, we are afraid they will not succeed. While no one desires to hamper Government in its recruiting operations, Government will do well to instruct the Police to carefully investigate into the causes of the rumours and not to pooh-pooh them as altogether false."]

Contradiction of rumours about women being carried away in Bombay by soldiers.
Sánj Vartamán (31), 25th and 26th July; Hindusthán (2[illegible]), 26th July; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 26th July; Akhbár-e-Islám (56), 27th July.

42. The Sánj Vartamán warns the people of Bombay not to believe in the rumours that are being set afloat in the City about wives of respectable people being carried away by soldiers. It asserts that on enquiries it found that there was no truth in the rumour of the wife of a jeweller being spirited away. [In the subsequent issue Naginchand Javerchand, jeweller, residing in Sandhurst Road, writes giving the lie to the rumours about his wife being carried away by soldiers. The Hindusthán also says that on enquiry it found that there was no truth in the rumour about the wife of a jeweller being carried away. It considers it disgraceful on the part of people to believe or give currency to such false and baseless rumours which greatly hamper the work of the political leaders and add to their difficulties. The Jám-e-Jamshed joins in deprecating the practice if giving currency to such rumours and asks the people to bring their grievances if they have any to the notice of the Police. The Akhbár-e-Islám holds the correspondents of the Bombay Chronicle responsible for the excitement stirred up in Bombay and suggests that the editor may be asked to disclose their names so that they may be brought to book.]

Protest that a play at Surat entitled Aurangzeb staged hurts Muhammadan feelings.

Political Bhomiyo (71), 20th July.

43. Referring to the play of "Aurangzeb" which is being staged at Surat by the Vankaner Dramatic Company (a condemnation of which has been noticed in paragraph 37 of the W. R. No. 25 of 1917) a correspondent, styling himself an "Eyewitness," contributes the following to the Political Bhomiyo:—Only those who have witnessed this play can form an idea of the ugly aspect in which the Emperor Aurangzeb has been represented. It is obvious how (grievously) this open defamation of Emperor Aurangzeb, who got compiled a book like "Fatawa Alumgiri" and who did not care for his own life or for the lives of his relatives in the defence of religious tenets, must have wounded the hearts of the Surat Moslems. The attention of the educated Muhammadans and Olmas of the Surat district has been drawn to the staging of this play in which a devout Moslem Emperor like Aurangzeb is represented, in a month like Ramzan, in the garb of an inveterate hypocrite and cheat and to the fact that some non-Moslems have been ready to defame Islam, regardless of the feelings of thousands of Muhammadans, merely for the sake of earning money. To represent Aurangzeb as an oppressor and as an intriguing and deceitful person and to put the words, "I speak one thing and I do another thing; my name is 'hypocrite'," in his mouth and that too before Muhammadan spectators is tantamount to defaming the Moslem community. To my mind it would tend to enrich Hindu philosophy if, instead of staging "Aurangzeb", plays were to be staged representing Draupadi the chaste woman (of Hindu mythology) with her five husbands or sati Sita who gave birth to the two brothers Lava and Kusha in the wilderness!

Comments on the tram-car incident at Johannesburg.

Mahrdtta (5), 29th July.

44. "In a recent issue we noticed a tram-car incident which took place in Johannesburg in which a young educated Indian was thrown out by a European and died immediately. The man Blignaut who was charged with culpable homicide in connection with this death (the unfortunate Indian's name was Bhula Bhawan) has been let off with a fine of £ 50! The Indian Opinion rightly asks: 'What would have been the punishment imposed on an Indian who had been found guilty of killing a European?' It further remarks that the judgment in this case can only confirm the conviction that there is one standard of justice for white and another for coloured persons in South Africa."

Comments on the security taken from the Sanjibani of Calcutta.

Kesari (106), 24th July.

45. The old printer of the Sanjibani (Calcutta) died and a new declaration had to be made. We have often experienced that officials lose their heads while enforcing the Press Act when a prey has been caught in the meshes of the Act. Our experience has been strengthened by the demand of Rs. 1,000 security from the new printer in this case. This state of things had been anticipated in the Imperial Legislative Council by Sir Vithaldas Thackersey and he had suggested that no security should be demanded when a formal declaration is made, but he was told by the then Home Member that the Act would be enforced with discrimination. Because his amendment was not passed, see how many have bitterly to suffer. The Sanjibani has been in existence for the last 34 years and it has not been even warned once. Government should themselves consider whether the Magistrate who demanded security from a paper with such a clean record acted conscientiously or in a revengeful manner. As to the people, they have already formed their own convictions.

Comments on the security taken from the New Times of Karáchi.

Sind Advocate (9), 12th July.

46. "The City Magistrate of Karáchi has done a service to the New Times by taking a security of Rs. 500 from it without rhyme or reason. The offending passages have been placed before the public and they are so innocuous that men have been staggered at the mere idea of security being demanded. The public cannot understand what induced the Magistrate to take such an extreme, severe and unreasonable view of the writings. They are drawing their own inferences which had better not be mentioned. The service which the Magistrate has rendered to the paper is that the public goaded by a sense of wrong have not only expressed lip sympathy, but have started a fund for payment of the security amount and for otherwise helping forward the paper. One gentleman has sent twice the amount of the deposit, and other gentlemen have sent over Rs. 125. Now this is a new phenomenon in Sind and it shows the rise of the new spirit in Sind which is most welcome.......... We must add that the case is one fit for appeal to higher authority. The point of jurisdiction should be referred to the Judicial Commissioner's Court, and we believe the paper will win on that point. Then an appeal on the merits should be made to Government which can see how inoffensive have been the writings. We do not think any case of such an unoffensive character has occured under the Press Act in any other part of India; for if such cases did occur all new papers in the country will have to 'close down'."

People in Khándesh should be allowed to feed their cattle on Anjan leaves as grass has disappeared owing to want of rain.

Khándesh Vaibhav (107), 23rd July.

47. Owing to the absence of rain for about a month past the little grass that had grown has already disappeared and cattle are getting more and more emaciated for want of fodder. Grass having become extremely dear, we request the Collector to allow people to feed their cattle on Anjan leaves. It will take about a month more for the grass to grow again even if the rain were to fall now. Unless, therefore, permission for the use of the said leaves is given the sufferings of the cattle will not be mitigated.

Comments on certain orders of the District Magistrate, Hydrabad (Sind), prohibiting of singing of songs at a procession in honour of Mrs. Besant.

Sind Journal (10), 19th July.

48. Commenting upon the orders of the District Magistrate, Hyderabad (Sind), prohibiting the singing of songs in a procession in honour of Mrs. Besant to be held in the city on the 16th July 1917, the Sind Journal remarks:—"The authorities were, it seems, labouring under a grave misapprehension, and they turned the whole city into an excited state by their ill-advised actions. First of all the order of the District Magistrate which was issued under section 42 of the Bombay Police Act IV of 1890 showed ignorance of the real nature of the procession. The procession was to be orgnised by the Home Rule League which is composed of grown-up, responsible men of status and education and 'school boys and boys' had no lot or part in it. The projected procession was in no way such as would have interfered with public peace or order and its prohibition indicates official nervousness.......... The order issued by him (the District Magistrate) is discreetly silent about the grounds on which he based the prohibition, but one can well understand why he issued his ukase. However, the object of the Home Rule League was served in a far greater measure than would have been possible otherwise by the unwise measures adopted by the Police.......... The authorities, perhaps apprehending something serious, had mustered a strong police force in the neighbourhood of the Home Rule League office. This naturally excited the curiosity of passers-by who collected on the road in front of the office in such large numbers that even the police could not disperse them. The organizers of the procession had done nothing to lead the authorities to believe that they would disobey the order of the District Magistrate, and in spite of the well-known fact that the people of Hyderabad are law-abiding, a posse of police constables was kept in readiness evidently to make a big haul of Home Rulers. This clearly demonstrates how utterly out of touch with the real feelings of the people the local officials are. The order was most unjust and based on no sound reasons, but there was no inclination on the part of the organizers to court police interference. The attitude adopted by the authorities concerned was most regretable and should be deprecated, as causing needless sensation and irritation."

Complaint about the carriages of Indians not being allowed to stand on a certain road of Hyderabad (Sind).

Sind Journal (10), 12th July.

49. An anonymous correspondent writes to the Sind Journal:—"A fiat has gone forth that no carriages shall stand on the edge of the hill at the western end of the now famous Church Road. The public has not forgotten how the Mukhi of the Bhaibund Panchayat, Mukhi Pritamdas, was asked to go away and not to let his carriage stand on the hill, when the Mukhi is said to have told the 'sahib' 'it is the King Emperor's road, etc.' It is three days that two policemen have been seen standing every evening to see that no carriages stand on the hill-side. Is this also a part of the programme of the 'new angle of vision'? It is absurd to station policemen to drive away gentlemen in their carriages. Even in the Viceregal mountain capital of Simla we find Indians and Europeans walking and standing and berthing their rickshaws on the same road, on the same part of the hill-side. Why this strange phenomenon here, may I ask?"

Comments on the delegation to Commissioner in Sind of power to transfer District Superintendents of Police.

Sind Advocate (9), 12th July.

50. "We wonder if it is the answer to the long public demand for curtailment of the Commissioner in Sind's powers that the Government of Bombay has in the plenitude of its wisdom given to that functionary the power to appoint Police Superintendents in Sind. Of course the nomination of these officers is only in the hands of the Secretary of State since these posts belong to the Imperial Service and all fresh appointments to them are made by the Secretary of State, but what is meant by the notification is that the Commissioner in Sind will in future transfer Police Superintendents without reference to the Bombay Government. That is not a power enjoyed by the Commissioners and there is no reason why the Sind Commissioner should have it—and this in face of the strong and emphatic expression of the public opinion against the already excessive delegation of Government's powers to the Commissioner in Sind."

LEGISLATION.

Comments on the Honourable Mr. Patel's Primary Education Bill in the Bombay Council.

Gujarāti (16), 29th July, Eng. cols.; Rāst Goftār (30), 29th July, Eng. cols.

51. Commenting on the Honourable Mr. Patel's Bill the Gujarāti writes:—"We are afraid Government will feel strongly tempted to throw the whole financial responsibility on the shoulders of municipalities on the plausible ground that municipalities have got the legislation they wanted to enable them to levy an educational cess and that they should no longer look up to Government but to their own local resources. Herein lurks a serious danger and we warn the Honourable Mr. Patel and his colleagues in time....... In the midst of the enthusiasm evoked by the Bill we hope this all-important point will not be lost sight of and Councillors will not allow themselves to fall into a trap." [The Rāst Goftār remarks:—"It is to be hoped that this private Bill will meet with a better fate than Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoolah's Bill, though we have our doubts. So far the attitude of the Government is quite correct. Particularly hopeful and helpful is the attitude of the Honourable Mr. Covernton, Director of Public Instruction.......... We sincerely hope that after the Bill has been fully considered by the Select Committee there will be no opposition in the Council and it will be accepted by the Government and allowed to pass into law."]

Bombay Samāchār (59), 28th July; Praja Mitra and Pārsi (28), 28th July.

52. The Bombay Samāchār expresses satisfaction at the debate that took place at the recent session of the Bombay Legislative Council on the Bill brought before it by the Honourable Mr. V. J. Patel to provide for the extension of primary education in the municipal districts in the Bombay Presidency outside the City of Bombay. It remarks that, regard being had to the enthusiasm created during recent years even among the backward classes, when the Bill is passed into law and is put into operation it will not receive any opposition from them. It believes that the experience which Government will get from the working of this measure in the municipal areas which choose to avail themselves of its provisions will be of use to them when they come to prepare a general scheme for the wider extension of primary education in all parts of the Presidency, to be carried into effect after the war. [The Prája Mitra and Pársi quotes the words uttered in the Council by His Excellency the Governor while winding up the debate on the Bill to the effect that if a municipality was eager to introduce compulsory education but could not raise money to do it any request for assistance made by that municipality will be sympathetically considered by Government, and remarks that these words of His Excellency are a sort of challenge to the public leaders to prove that they are alive to their responsibility of making the introduction of compulsory education a matter practically realisable for bringing compulsory education within the range of practical politics. It, therefore, appeals to the advocates of the Swadeshi movement, instead of taking other vows, to take a vow for helping to make compulsory education popular among the general masses.

Message (6), 28th July.

53. "In legal matters, no element of chance should be allowed—everything should be clearly and unmistakeably inserted in the body of the Act. We can, therefore, understand the attitude of Government in regard to clause 18, but what we fail to understand is that Government often expect people or their representatives to rely absolutely on their speeches and take it as an insult if some people request them to embody their assurances in the proposed Acts themselves! While getting the Press Act passed, Government did not allow people 'to guard against any unforeseen situation that might arise'. Then they expected people to place unqualified trust in them, but now, in a very innocent matter even, they absolutely refuse to leave anything to the discretion of anybody or any institution. The difference in the attitude is remarkable and carries is own lessons."

EDUCATION.

Protest against the recent orders requiring school-teachers to appear before Collectors to sign declarations of loyalty.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 27th July.

54. In the course of a contribution addressed to the Praja Mitra and Pársi a correspondent refers to circular No. 218 issued by the Deputy Educational Inspector (?) Bombay, requiring school teachers to sign their forms of declaration of loyalty in the presence of Collectors instead of in the presence of Deputy Educational Inspectors as hithertofore. He remarks that school teachers, and particularly teachers in primary schools, are from the very nature of their occupation loyal, and to direct them to take an oath of loyalty is to entertain a low opinion about them. The correspondent then dwells on the inconveniences that the teachers would suffer in having to go to a department other than their own for making a declaration of loyalty and on the loss of time and the hardships they will have to undergo. He suggests that there would be no serious harm if these declarations are made either before the Head-masters or before Educational Inspectors at the time of their annual inspections.

The policy of Government with regard to the School Final and Matriculation Examinations.

Kesari (106), 24th July.

55. The favour or disfavour of bureaucracy in India is adamantine. Once they take a thing into their heads they will never abandon it. Similarly once they look askance at a thing, they will never consider it favourably. All have had a bitter experience of this prejudice in the case of the School Final and the Matriculation and the P. E. and I. E. examinations. It is dishonouring the P. E. and I. E. students to class them along with the S. F. students. But Government are not willing even to do that. Mirza Samiulla had moved a resolution in the United Provinces Council on the subject, but it was rejected. In the Bombay Legislative Council also a resolution is to be moved, but we can guess its fate beforehand.

RAILWAYS.

There is no chance of Company management of Indian Railways being done away with in spite of its recognised evils.

Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 29th July, Eng. cols.

*56. An anonymous correspondent writes as follows in the Kaiser-i-Hind on the subject of Company management of Railways in India:—"When a sympathetic Viceroy like Lord Ripon, so callously and in his own words 'quietly' sacrificed such vital interests of India to railway companies, what hope is there that a Viceroy like Lord Chelmsford will not sacrifice the Indian railway revenues to the Companies? When the protests of the Under-Secretary of State, the Accountant-General and other high officials of the Government of India during Lord Ripon's Viceroyalty could not prevent the reversal of the railway policy which had proved eminently successful, what hope is there, of a restoration of that policy now, when we have a Railway Board whose prejudices in favour of the Companies are so notorious? What hope is there for the abolition of Company management which is actuated by the narrowest, most sordid and selfish motives when the representatives of the people in the Councils are powerless? I see no hope. It is distressing to think that a management which drains away from India every year an ever-increasing sum of £ 1,56,47;267, a management that is supposed to injure Indian trade and industries and gives preferential treatment to foreign trade and industries is going to be perpetuated. Terrible is the thought that a management which oppresses Indian third class passengers, and excludes Indians of education and status from the highly-paid posts on the railways, is going to be perpetuated. Company management of railways is 'an inequity that must be ended', says the Indian patriot. Company management is 'a blessing that must be perpetuated' says the Anglo-Indian. But what is the Indian patriot? A mere nothing. What is the Anglo-Indian? Everything. Therefore the cry of the Indian patriot must and wi' unheard. Therefore the cry of the Anglo-Indian must and will be heard. India must be and will be sacrificed to Anglo-India! Will this inequity continue because Anglo-India calls it a blessing?"

Strike of railway men in Bombay.

Young India (14), 25th July; Message (6), 27th July.

57. "While the Police Commissioner and his Deputies are busy watching over the movements of the G. I. P. Railway men on strike, it is a pity that nothing has been done to remove their grievances. Considering that the men have held out so long, it seems to us that their grievances are very substantial, and there is no reason why the G. I. P. Railway, which as a result of the war is making enormous profits out of their men's labour, should not return to them an infinitely small portion of it and allow them some relaxation in the arduous conditions of service in these times. While there is need for an immediate comprehensive enquiry into the causes of unrest among the men, we regret to note that non-official and philanthropic bodies such as the Servants of India Society, the Social Service League, etc., have overlooked the claim of this community of ignorant and insufficiently organised men on their time and attention. Situated as we are at present, it is the duty of these bodies to take up the matter in right earnest and help the men in placing themselves on an organised footing. They should also vocalise their grievances and by making effective representations in proper quarters obtain some decent remedy therefor." [The Message writes:—"It is gratifying to note that the men have not so far manifested any of the least inclinations towards rowdyism, but that is the very reason why attempts at mediation should be made by influential men and institutions. We refuse to believe that the men or the railway authorities are unamenable to reason, and we hope that not only in the interest of the large number of strikers, but also to prevent the spread of contagion as well as the other dangers to the public incidental on such a strike, influential men commanding the confidence and respect of both the parties will move in the matter and put an end to a situation which is daily growing more serious, if not menacing."]

MUNICIPALITIES.

The recent fire at Prag Mahal, Bombay.

Bombay Samáchár (61), 27th July.

58. The Bombay Samáchár refers to the fire which broke out in Prag Mahal situated at Dhobi Talao in Bombay and questions the advisability of allowing cinema films to be stored on the ground floor of the building. It asks the Bombay Municipality to add to its building by-laws provisions whereby owners of houses would be prohibited from allowing such inflammable material as cinema films to be stored in dangerous proximity to residential quarters and compelled to provide fire-proof staircases.

Comments on the Collector's reply to the deputation of the people of Vita (Sátára) in connection with the local Municipality.

Prakásh (116), 25th July.

59. The Collector's reply to the deputation in the matter of the Vita (Sátára) Municipality is not satisfactory. Government deprived the people of Vita of the right of electing members to the Municipality in 1908 as the then elected members resigned their seats on account of the sentence of imprisonment passed on Mr. Tilak. Apart from the question of the propriety of their action, it must be remembered that the situation prevailing in 1908 has now undergone a complete change. The Collector insists that the people of Vita should hold a public meeting and pass a resolution expressing repentance and regret for the action of the elected members in 1908. How are the people to be held responsible if a few persons elected by them for a particular object exceed the scope of their legitimate duties? Why are the people required to express repentance? To express repentance one must do something wrong. Is it right to require the people of Vita to express regret when they are not guilty of any offence? We earnestly ask Government to be satisfied with the fact that people are again asking for the elective right and so confer it on them with good grace.

Comments on the grant of larger elective rights to the Ratnágiri Municipality.

Sandesh (118), 22nd July.

60. Government have issued a Press Note stating that from 1st April 1918 two-thirds of the total number of members of the Ratnágiri Municipality will be elected by the people. What is the reason for this belated action in such a trifling matter since the Honourable Mr. Patel's resolution covers as many as 88 municipalities? Do Government mean that only those municipalities are to be given the benefit of that resolution who ask for it? If that is so, then the remaining 87 municipalities should make haste to formulate their demands. Under the existing law Government have authority to allow not only two-thirds but all the members of a municipality to be elected by the people and the Ahmednagar Municipality has already secured this right. The municipalities themselves, therefore, are to blame if they do not secure this right. The Local Self-government Conference sitting at Poona should appoint a sub-committee to induce the several municipalities and local boards to put forth their demands for larger elective rights.

Protest against the introduction of house-tax and terminal tax in Hyderabad (Sind).

Sind Journal (10), 12th and 19th July.

61. In the course of a lengthy article in which it dwells on the attempts of the Municipal Committee of Management to enhance taxation in Hyderabad (Sind) and the opposition offered by the public to these attempts, the Sind Journal remarks:—"Hyderabad is opposed to house-tax almost to a man, and it would be strange if the terminal tax which leads to it should be countenanced by any one who is opposed to the imposition of house-tax. The Government Resolution clearly lays down that a terminal-tax should be regarded as facilitating the transition to a system in which direct taxation will form an increasingly important factor. Hyderabad cannot accept house-tax which is not suited to the conditions of the people, and it would be tyrannical to impose it in the teeth of universal opposition. The people have resisted it so long and they would continue to do so believing that it would be oppressive to the people whose only wealth in most cases is a dwelling-place. The Resolution quoted above, which lays down the Local Self-government policy of the Government of India, remarks about house-tax that it is difficult of assessment in many places, where it is the custom to own rather than to rent dwelling houses, because in such cases the house affords no indication of the financial status of owner. This is exactly applicable to Hyderabad where rented houses are few and far between. It is thus quite clear that both terminal tax and house-tax are out of harmony with the conditions prevailing in this town." [In the next issue the paper dwells on the proceedings of a public meeting held in the Holmstead Hall on the 15th July to protest against the proposal to levy house-tax in Hyderabad and remarks :—" Even a superficial knowledge of the conditions of the town would convince any one that the exemption of those only whose houses would be valued at five hundred rupees or less would operate in the case of only those few who are extremely poor. The overwhelming majority of the people will have to pay house-tax which being a direct tax would be far less acceptable than octroi, even though the former may confer on the payee the dignity of a voter in municipal elections. The anxiety of the officials on behalf on the poor is quite illusory, for the lot of the poor would in no way be improved, but would, on the contrary, be worse than at present, if house-tax is imposed and every one has to pay a direct tax in a lump sum......... The last Sind Gazette contains a chapter which gives some facts about the growth of municipal institutions, and we give the following extract from it........... 'House-tax, always unpopular, was opposed from the outset by several municipalities.' These facts show in what mood the minds of Sindhis have been cast and how they regard house-tax. The conditions of Hyderabad specially militate against the suitability of a tax on houses."]

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 3rd August 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 31 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 4th August. 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

Bombay Legislative Council:

Comments on the Bombay Budget debate 34
Interpellations in the recent session of the — . . . . 36 & 37
Resolutions in the recent session of the — 35

British Rule:

A Home Rule prayer 27
A suggested career for Indian youths "of exuberant patriotism" . 24
A Swadeshi vow 28
Alleged persecution of Indian Law students by the Bombay Government 25
Appeal to the Indian leaders not to take any hasty steps calculated to spite Government 18
Comments on Sir D. E. Wacha's resignation of the presidentship of the Bombay Presidency Association 11
Comments on the action of the District Magistrate, Hyderabad (—), in prohibiting a procession in honour of Mrs. Besant 22
Comments on the alleged dismissal of a Mukadam by the Municipal Commissioner of Hyderabad (Sind) for wearing a button with a photo of Mr. Tilak 23
Comments on the Bishop of Bombay's letter on Indian politics . . . 19
Comments on the proceedings of the meeting held at the China Bag, Bombay, to protest against the internment of Mrs. Besant . . . 9 & 10
Comments on the prohibition of the Calcutta meeting of protest against the Madras internments . . . . 20 & 21
Complaint about the alleged open attempts on the part of Christian Missionary organisations to use schools for propagandistic purposes 29
Government Pleaders and politics 26
If Government will study carefully the psychology of the present situation they will realise the inevitable necessity of cancelling the order of internment passed against Mrs. Besant and her assistants. 14
Reflections on the present condition of the fort of Sinhgad near Poona. 30
Reflections on the present political situation . . . . 15 & 16
The Borah controversy 31
The Congress and Moslem League Conference in Bombay . . . . 1—6
The meaning of the phrase "Passive resistance" 8
The political situation in the Bombay Presidency 7
What is needed in India is for Government to kindle the imagination of the public by a new bold and Christ-inspired democratic policy. 13

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

British Rule:—continued.
- What the Bureaucracy wants in India 17
- Why Mr. Montagu's appointment as Secretary of State for India is welcomed by the Indians 12

His Excellency the Governor of Bombay:
- Appreciation of the extension of the term of His Excellency Lord Willingdon 33
- Comments on His Excellency Lord Willingdon's speech on the resolution about Dadabhai Naoroji in the Bombay Legislative Council . 32

Judicial matters: Comments on a Násik case in which a man was prosecuted for bringing a false charge of bribery against a Sub-Inspector of Excise 47

Police:
- Comments on the conduct of the Hubli — in stopping a local meeting in connection with the Honourable Mr. Patel's Municipal Education Bill 44
- Government and the recent rumours in Bombay 45

Press Act: The articles on the strength of which security was taken from the New Times of Karáchi were written by it out of a sense of duty to Government 46

Revenue matters: The cost of surveying sub-shares should not be recovered from the people for the present 48

Sind:
- Comments on the Government resolution fixing 20 years as the period for revision settlements in — 49
- Comments on the proposal to appoint Benches of Honorary Magistrates in the talukas and towns of — 50

War:
- Appeal on behalf of a destitute old lady at Rohri (Sind) who cannot trace the whereabouts of her three sons who have joined the Indian Army 38
- Comments on the Bombay Government's Press Communiqué appointing a Provincial Recruitment Board 39
- Comments on the failure of the first Mesopotamia expedition and the blame cast upon Lord Hardinge in the Commission report . 41
- Comments on the poor response to the recruitment for the Indian section of the Indian Defence Force 40
- Reflections on the completion of the third year of the — 42
- The new German Imperial Chancellor's speech shows that Germany is prepared to fight to the finish 43
- The situation in Russia 44

LEGISLATION—

The Honourable Mr. Patel's Primary Education Bill . . . . . 51—55

EDUCATION—

Proposal to start a National College at Ahmedabad 56

RAILWAYS—

The G. I. P. Railway strike 57

MUNICIPALITIES—

Comments on the proceedings of the Local Self-government Conference at Poona . . . . 58—60
Protest against the proposal to levy a house-tax at Rohri (Sind) . . . 62
Question of house-tax at Hyderabad (Sind) 61

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

The Congress and Moslem League Conference in Bombay.

Young India (14), 1st Aug.

1. "The Joint Conference which met here on the 28th and 29th instant, has tried to be extremely generous and reasonable in spite of grave provocations. And while it has made perfectly clear its unflinching determination not to take lying down the affronts which the bureaucracy is heaping upon the country day after day, it has afforded the Government here and in England an opportunity of rectifying past blunders and setting India once more on the path of progress, peace and contentment. Too much significance cannot be attached to the fact that the conference, including members of all shades of political opinion and differing kinds of practical experience of bureaucratic methods, has been forced to consider the desirability of a resort to passive resistance against the high-handed and arbitrary methods of the bureaucracy.......... It will not be denied that passive resistance seems the only weapon now left in our reach and most suited to the habits and temperaments of our people. Even the Congress has placed its seal of approval by upholding the struggle of Gandhi and his valiant band of ignorant and illiterate men and women in South Africa, and it will be strange if it does not approve and sanction the use of that weapon here at home to resist methods of repression of popular rights and liberties."

Message (6), 1st Aug.

2. "That the meeting should have been compelled to consider the possibility of resort to 'passive resistance' in its strictly legal and constitutional aspects is an extremely significant affair and the resolution anent this matter which it adopted does not only mark a definite breach with the mendicant traditions of the past, but reflects the temper of the members, some of whom have hitherto been content to console themselves with the promise of a better future.......... Now, it is clear that the accredited representatives of the people have come to recognise the serious danger which threatens their very existence as civilised people. The policy of reaction is, it is obvious, running riot, and it is incumbent on them to devise means for counteracting it.......... In the meanwhile, we welcome the suggestion of some distinguished friends and workers regarding the urgency of holding an emergency session of the Provincial Conference in every Province.......... The situation calls for it, there can be no manner of doubt, and we do trust members of the Provincial Congress Committee will immediately move that body to organise a special conference in this city as early as it can."

Rást Goftár (30), 5th Aug., Eng. cols.

3. "The resolutions and the representation must be taken as the opinion of all India, educated India, whose representatives had gathered in Bombay from every part of the country. And the whole country will assent to and approve of what was done at the Conference.......... Any one who reads the resolutions and the representation will be struck at once by the firmness of the language employed. Passive resistance has been foreshadowed, and the history of the passive resistance in the Transvaal may repeat itself in India.......... It is being felt even in unexpected quarters that the Government must altogether change its attitude towards the movement of constitutional agitation in this country.......... We want the statesmanship of England to come to the help of India, for the situation is grave and is being made graver by the authorities here. The mere fact that Hindu and Mahomedan leaders are acting in perfect concert, and are equally determined to obtain for India her just rights, should give the bureaucracy a pause, but there is no such suggestion, and coercion is the only thing in sight."

Bombay Samáchár (59), 1st Aug.; Akhbár-e-Islám (56), 2nd Aug.; Hindusthán (20), 30th July; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 30th and 31st July and 3rd Aug., Eng. cols.

4. The Bombay Samáchár does not approve of the Conference passing certain resolutions, e.g., that with regard to the prohibition by the Bengal Government of a meeting which was to meet in Calcutta to protest against the Madras Government's internment orders and that which demanded that Messrs. Muhammadali and Shaukatali be restored to liberty, because it remarks that they related to matters which had hardly any connection with the actual subject for the consideration of which the Conference had met. It refers to the heated discussion that took place over the question of receiving favourably the work done by the Home Rule League and, approving the strong attitude assumed by the Bombay leaders in connection with that subject, it reminds the public that it was only those of their leaders who while espousing their cause, enjoyed the confidence of Government that have been able to raise the nation to its present high status. The paper wishes that even the resolution requesting the Provincial Congress Committees and the Council of the All-India Moslem League to consider the advisability of adopting the policy of passive resistance in carrying on political work had been entirely dropped by the Conference. It strongly condemns the adoption of the policy of passive resistance as detrimental to the best interests of India. While approving the resolution passed by the Conference for submitting a petition to Parliament in support of the scheme of reforms adopted by the Indian National Congress and the Moslem League, the paper impresses upon the people the indispensability of Government sympathy towards any reforms they might wish to see introduced in their country. [The Akhbár-e-Islám does not consider the proceedings of the Conference to be a sucess. It remarks that the result of the Conference must have convinced Government that the excessive political agitation that is being carried on in the country has not received support from all leading Indian politicians. It is also opposed to the adoption of a policy of passive resistance and believes that the movement would not achieve in India even a small fraction of the success it has achieved in South Africa. The Hindusthán regards the resolutions passed by the Conference as an effective reply to the policy of repression alleged to have been adopted by Government of late. It vindicates the action of the Conference in passing the resolution about passive resistance as a measure to secure the withdrawal of the alleged repressive policy. The paper hopes that, realising well the responsibility attaching to his position as the Secretary of State for India, Mr. Montagu will put a stop to that policy. The Praja Mitra and Pársi expresses the hope that Government will not commit the mistake of preventing the deputation of four Indian gentlemen which the Conference has resolved to send to England within a short period from proceeding to that country. The paper does not favour the policy of passive resistance and believes that the severing of connection with official bodies, e.g., the Legislative Councils, to which the passive resistance movement might lead, will do harm instead of good to the cause of the country. In its issue dated the 31st July the paper observes that the fact that two leading political bodies holding moderate views, like the National Congress and the Moslem League, have been forced to consider the advisability of adopting passive resistance as a political weapon indicates the feelings with which the public view Government's repressive policy. The paper remarks that all eyes at the present juncture are turned towards Mr. Montagu, the new Secretary of State for India. In its issue of the 3rd August, the paper, in its English columns, writes:—"Of the Resolutions passed the most important is undoubtedly that relating to passive resistance. This has been in the minds of most people, because persistent repression always goes on increasing unless it is either checked by higher authority or resisted by those against whom it is directed.......... Unless there is a complete reversal of the present repressive policy there can be hardly any doubt that passive resistance will be resorted to, though the actual form of that resistance will require much consideration. There are times of suffering and trial ahead, but they will have to be faced undaunted if we are true to ourselves, to our country and to our ultimate goal......... It is for the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for India to realise the grave state of things in India and to reverse the highly unwise policy that is being pursued here."]

Kesari (106), 31st July; Sandesh (118), 30th July.

5. The Conference could not but take up the question of definitely guiding the Swarájya movement, and resolutions were passed accordingly. We heartily congratulate the Conference for condemning clearly and fearlessly the retrograde policy of Government and for plainly re-stating the Swarájya view. By the mere Government admission of the legality of the ideal, the dispute will not be ended. Agitation in support of the ideal must have a free scope. To attack the agitators is but to attack indirectly the ideal. Therefore, the Conference has asked for the release of the interned—Mrs. Besant, Mahomed Ali and others.

The Conference has been helpful in bringing together the Home Rule Leagues and the Congress more closely than at Lucknow. We have no doubt that Mr. Montagu's tendency is towards liberalism, but we doubt whether he will grant us Swardjya. For the Liberals as well as Conservatives are affected by the madness of prestige. We cannot say definitely whether the strong representation of the Conference will have positively some effect. Even more than political reforms do the people want the release of the interned leaders. The question of passive resistance also was raised in this connection, but it was postponed to the October Conference. The repressive policy adopted by the Provincial Governments will encourage rather than check such ideas. Even protest meetings like the Calcutta one are being stopped. It would have been better if the Conference had appointed a small executive committee and a full-time Secretary. Meanwhile the Home Rule Leagues should try to solve the question in their own light. [The Sandesh is jubilant over the result of the Congress and Moslem League Conference and says:—Hitherto a meeting of the All-India Congress Committee meant a meeting of big busybodies for putting a break upon the fast moving national aspirations. This sealed monopoly of wisdom which was jealously guarded by men like Gokhale, Mehta, Rash Behari Ghose, Wacha and others came to an end last year on the entrance of Messrs. Tilak, Jinnah and Gandhi into the All-India Congress Committee, and since then the door has been so widely thrown open that at Lucknow none could distinguish as to who were the hosts and who the guests. The control of public opinion over the Congress having thus been re-established, the Conference at Bombay attracted the greatest attention. It is to be regretted that the Honourable Sir D. Wacha left the meeting in dungeon when it began to discuss a certain point. No one even dreamt that he would show such intolerance of the opinions of popular leaders from other parts of India. Mr. Samarth may be said to have cut a better figure inasmuch as he valiantly tried, though without avail, to place before the meeting the views of the old slow-moving Congress party. The deliberations of the Conference are bound to bring nearer the fructification of our national aspirations.]

Islámic Mail (143), 30th July, Urdu edition.

6. The Islámic Mail reports that besides Messrs. Wazir Hasan and Mazherul Haque no other Musalmans took part in the proceedings of the joint conference of the Congress and the League held in the last week of July in Bombay. It ascribes their abstention to their recognition of the fact that Self-government for India is an unattainable ideal, and even if it were ever achieved it would be Hindu not Indian Home Rule. The paper also states that it has been authorised to declare that Sir Fazalbhoy Currimbhoy attended the secret conference merely as a spectator having been invited to do so in his capacity as a Vice-President of the Moslem League, and not for the purpose of shewing his sympathy with the conveners' cause or taking an active part in their deliberations.

The political situation in the Bombay Presidency.

Indian Social Reformer (3), 5th Aug.

7. "During the last fortnight the eyes of all India have been turned to Bombay in anxious expectation. The Provincial Legislative Council met on the 24th July, and there was very general curiosity as to whether Lord Willingdon would take the opportunity to admonish the public on the lines familiarised by the utterances of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab and the Governor of Madras.......... The only speech which His Excellency Lord Willingdon made during this session of the Council was one on a resolution of condolence on the death of the late Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji. He spoke with evident warmth of feeling.......... By associating himself in this frank and cordial fashion with the Indian aspiration to secure self-government within the Empire, His Excellency the Governor has done much to steady public opinion and to direct it in placid channels. The best proof of it is the almost total absence of the tension, irritation and excitement in Bombay, which are unfortunately evident in some other provinces.......... Lord Ronaldshay has got into the practice of speaking of his "rule" in Bengal, a practice which has very properly evoked a sharp reminder from the Bombay Chronicle, that His Excellency is not His Majesty. He seems to regard the other provincial Governments as independent Kingdoms in alliance with his own, criticism of whose actions may lead to untoward diplomatic incidents. We have not met anyone who has a word to say in justification of this action of Lord Ronaldshay's Government. Well, the Joint Conference of the National Congress and the Moslem League sat in Bombay for two days. The local Home Rule League, with a lack of forethought which, we hope, is not symptomatic, arranged to hold a large meeting in a small hall, with the inevitable result that the meeting could not be held. The Bombay Presidency Association held a mass meeting on Monday to protest against the Madras internments, under the chairmanship of Mr. Jinnah. Busybodies went about whispering that the Government of Bombay would prohibit the meeting. Had Government wished to do so, there were not wanting excuses for adopting such a course. There has been for some time past some excitement owing to rumours about alleged excesses of recruits for the labour corps stationed in this city. A strike involving some thousands of workmen was in progress, and showed signs of spreading. These are excellent reasons, as official reasons go, to justify the prohibition of political meetings, as compared with Lord Ronaldshay's for stopping the meeting of Calcutta citizens. But the Government of Bombay had a definite policy, and stuck to it. It kept a cool head, and nothing happened. It almost looks as if there is at this moment only one real statesman in India."

The meaning of the phrase "Passive resistance."

Mahrátta (5), 5th Aug.

8. "We notice that the Times of India and the Madras Mail have a kind word to say in connection with the idea of Passive resistance. The Times of India has the following:—"We believe that the nebulous phrase means passive resistance to work in councils, either local or imperial. Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings may come wisdom, but the political tactics of an infant are not commonly held up to admiration as a model for men aspiring to Self-government.' And thus blabs the Madras Mail: 'Any attempt to organise opposition to the Government will get no sympathy from the bulk of the British people and find no weakness here.' So one mouth of Anglo-India calls us childish, while another takes us more seriously, but warns us against plunging into a resistance that will, in its opinion, evoke more repression here without rousing 'sympathy' in Britain. The self-befogged Times of India cannot be easily brought to understand the 'nebulous' phrase 'passive résistance'. But we must try. We would, in the first place, advise our contemporary to sit at the feet of the Madras Mail, for to the latter the phrase does not seem to be 'nebulous'. He seems to grasp correctly the central idea of the phrase. It is 'opposition to Government'. This opposition may be organised not only in relation to council work, but in relation to other matters as well. Every proceeding, order and law that in the words of Mahatma Gandhi is 'derogatory to the manhood' of a people, or, in the words of Lord Hardinge, is 'invidious and unjust', supplies to the passive resister, a fit occasion to employ his soul-force......... As to the remark of the Times that such a resistance is 'an infant's tactics', we would only say that Pym and Hampden, to give but two names from English history, and Mahatma Gandhi, to give one name from our History of the Day,—be they called infants or worse by men with 'nebulous' brains like the leader-writer of the Times of India—will continue to inspire the down-trodden in such times as the present, when milder 'tactics' have no chance."

Comments on the proceedings of the meeting held at the China Bag, Bombay, to protest against the internment of Mrs. Besant.

Sánj Vartamán (31), 31st July.

9. Referring to the meeting that was held on Monday the 30th July at China Bag to protest against the internment order passed by the Madras Government against Mrs. Annie Besant, the Sánj Vartamán remarks that in point of the number of people present and the enthusiasm displayed there, the meeting, to its knowledge, excelled any other meeting called under the auspices of the Bombay Presidency Association during the whole course of its existence. It observes that the speech delivered by the Honourable Mr. Jinnah as President of the meeting was not of such a nature as to do justice to the importance of the meeting. The paper writes:—Of course the language used by the Honourable Mr. Jinnah was severe and he echoed the feelings of the people; but his speech was not like the speeches delivered by the late Sir Pherozeshaw Mehta at similar public meetings, which were characterised by a higher order of statesmanship. We had hoped to hear a speech in which the speaker, instead of putting questions like these, "Has the bureaucracy become blind?" "Have they lost their reason that they behave with loyal India in that fashion?" "What is His Excellency Lord Chelmsford doing?" in strong language, as had been done by Mr. Jinnah, had dwelt on the gravity of the present political situation, the causes that have given rise to it, and the real duty of the authorities and the people. We wish that a more capable, more experienced person, for instance, Sir N. G. Chandavarkar, who was more qualified than Mr. Jinnah to do credit to the occasion, had been elected president of the meeting.

Indu Prakásh (39), 1st Aug., Eng. cols.

10. "The public meeting in China Bag has come and gone, leaving behind lessons for all. In the first place, it showed the closing of the ranks of the popular party. When national grievances are genuine, political parties cannot for ever continue to remain at daggers drawn towards each other and an ultimate agreement on essentials is simply inevitable. Such an agreement was signed and sealed when we had a united Congress at Lucknow which passed the joint scheme of reforms formulated by the Committees of the Muslim League and the National Congress. Since then, the reform resolution of the Congress has been the banner under which all parties have joined in a common endeavour to realize national aspirations. This explains the gathering together, at last Monday's meeting, on a common platform, of leaders belonging to all castes and creeds and political parties."

Comments on Sir D. E. Wacha's resignation of the presidentship of the Bombay Presidency Association.

Sánj Vartamán (31), 2nd Aug.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 2nd Aug.; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 3rd Aug.

11. The Sánj Vartamán remarks that in view of the need of the advice and guidance of an experienced and veteran politician like Sir Dinshaw E. Wacha in the present critical political situation in India, his resignation as President of the Bombay Presidency Association will cause regret not only among the people of the Presidency but among the whole Indian nation. Regard being had to the valuable services rendered by Sir Dinshaw to the country for wellnigh half a century, it regards his present resignation as a public calamity. If Sir Dinshaw's resignation is attributable to the conduct of the young politicans in the Presidency Association in opposing the President's views in every matter that comes up for discussion and in raising questions about the extent of his authority, the paper observes that this younger class of politicians cannot afford to forget the facts that in the past Sir Dinshaw has served India at a very great sacrifice of time, money and health, that he has been a great pillar of the political contest in India and that Indians are bound to respect such a true servant of the motherland. It, at the same time, maintains that it is the duty of a political leader like Sir Dinshaw to direct in proper channels the enthusiasm of this rising generation in whose hands lies the political future of India. On behalf of the people of the Bombay Presidency, it appeals to Sir Dinshaw to withdraw his resignation for the sake of the interests and prestige of the country. In conclusion the paper expresses its joy at the news it received after writing the above about Sir Dinshaw actually withdrawing his resignation. [The Praja Mitra and Pársi also regards it as regrettable that a veteran like Sir Dinshaw should relinquish the helm of political affairs of the country at the present juncture. It regards the present action of Sir Dinshaw as a step calculated to strengthen the hands of the opponents of Indian aspirations. The Jám-e-Jamshed remarks that if those who differ from Sir Dinshaw believe that his political views have undergone a change as a result of the knighthood that has been conferred upon him do not properly understand him. It wishes that Sir Dinshaw will continue the political fight for his country and thereby help her to reach the 'goal' she has fixed her eyes upon.]

Why Mr. Montagu's appointment as Secretary of State for India is welcomed by the Indians.

New Times (7), 23rd July.

12. In the course of a lengthy article on Mr. E. S. Montagu's appointment as Secretary of State for India the New Times quotes with approval his views about India and remarks:—"And only a few days ago while taking part in the debate on the Mesopotamia Commission, he urged that the Indian Government should adopt a policy of greater responsibility to the people of India. In speaking thus, Mr. Montagu showed himself to be a true statesman; for the very soul of good administration is murdered if the Government have not a sense nor a policy of responsibility to the people. As early as the days of the Plantagenets, the English Chancellor, Sir John Fortescue enunciated the doctrine that the ruler is the delegate of popular power and that the laws of England in all cases declare in favour of liberty. To this doctrine the English political genius is pledged; therefore has England been the teacher and guardian of freedom. India wants to be itself; it wants to develope its arts and industries, its genius and ideals as a nation among other nations of the Empire. And it is because Mr. Montagu has some perception of India's needs that his appointment is welcomed by the people. His appointment takes place at a time when a mighty patriotic wave, swiftly sweeping over the land, is buffeting against a policy of reaction—a policy responsible for the Madras internments and the prohibition of public meetings. It is a time when the people's demands for political reforms are being snubbed by some on the ground that reforms can wait till the war is over. We believe Mr. Montagu belongs to the class of wide-visioned statesmen who know that there are things which will not—must not—wait even in war time, that the Indian problem is urgent, and that it must be faced without delay in a spirit of courage and confidence, and with the resolve to strengthen the patriotic forces in loyalty to the spirit of the British Commonwealth."

What is needed in India is for Government to kindle the imagination of the people by a new bold and Christ-inspired democratic policy.

New Times (7), 20th July.

13. Commenting upon Sir K. G. Gupta's Calcutta speech, in which, the paper declares, he has uttered the soul of India, the New Times remarks:—"National reconstruction is in the air; and India discusses the after-war problems not, surely, to embarass the Government or the Empire, but to make it clear to the authorities and the English nation that India is fighting for England to defend the ideals of democracy and the liberties of nations, and that in this 'speeding up of the triumph of freedom India also must have her share'. Indian leaders have formulated their programme in order that increased guarantees and safeguards may be secured for defence, in India, of the great Ideals which inspire England and the Allies to-day. India demands more, because she feels she has the right to make demands in the name of the democratic ideal to which the Allies are patriotically devoted. We live in great times; and the times—the New Times—impose on us the obligation to realise our national personality; how can India stand still when the world is marching on?......... In the name of this Ideal, the people ask the Government to co-operate with them in the task of national re-constructions, so that when the great day of Peace comes, India may not be handicapped in the race of Progress but may march along with the other nations of the British Commonwealth. A new, a wide-visioned statesmanship is needed;—a statesmanship which will take a sympathetic view of the progress of national forces. A change in the spirit and methods of administration is needed; the understanding heart is needed. The root-cause of the difficulties of Government is suspicion, doubt, distrust; never was a greater necessity than to-day, for the Government to kindle the imagination and idealism of the people by a vision of a new, a bold, a Christ-inspired democratic policy.

If Government will study carefully the psychology of the present situation they will realise the inevitable necessity of cancelling the order of internment passed against Mrs. Besant and her assistants.

New Times (7), 21st July.

14. "Never before has so great a part of educated India united itself to criticise a single measure of the Government. Judged by the severest standard of criticism, the situation, it will be seen, created by the internment of Mrs. Besant, Mr. Arundale, and Mr. Wadia, is one which calls for quick and sympathetic handling by the Government. The internment is construed by the people as an index to a new, unwelcome policy which Government wish to follow; the internment has sown doubt and suspicion among the people; the line of cleavage between the authorities and the people is becoming sadly clearer every day. If Government will but study carefully the psychology of the present situation, it will know that the one acceptable, the one inevitable, course is to cancel the order of internment.......... Cancelling the order of internment will be no reflection on the prestige of Government; it will rather raise the official class in the estimation of the people who will have a clear proof of the intention of Government to co-operate with the country."

Reflections on the present political situation.
Message (6), 31st July.

15. Referring to the steps taken by Government against the Home Rule agitation, the Message writes:—"Feelings have been aroused and embittered to an extent perhaps undreamt of by the authorities. We shall be the last to further inflame and embitter the passions, but while appealing to the people not to be carried away by their emotions, we have to entreat Government to consider the full significance of the fact that a special joint meeting of the All-India Congress Committee and the Council of the Muslim League was held to consider the situation, with the still more important and pregnant fact that such a joint meeting of the best brains, heart and experience of the country, unanimously passed a resolution asking the several Provincial Congress Committees and the Council of the All-India Muslim League 'to consider the advisability of adopting the policy of passive resistence'. That things should come to such a pass as to make even the most level-headed of men think of the advisability or otherwise of passive resistance is sad in the extreme and should make the Government of India reconsider betimes their own attitude and bring it into greater harmony with the best currents of political thought in India. 1917 is not 1907, and a policy which might have been possible in the latter year will not necessarily suit the former year. Times are moving fast, even in this 'land of the bullock cart', and it will clearly not do for any Government to complacently ignore pregnant signs and symptoms, simply because they are unwelcome to them. We hope that better counsels will prevail with Government and a grave catastrophe, which would otherwise ensue, will be avoided, to the relief and joy of all concerned."

Indu Prakásh (39), 1st Aug.

16. Executive authority which is wholly irresponsible to public opinion is daily becoming more and more unbearable. Although the methods of the moderates and the Home Rulers differ the ideal of both is the same. Government, therefore, look upon both the political parties as their opponents. India has liberally contributed men and money for the defence of the Empire. Although the authorities are aware of this fact they do not appreciate it. Some Indians suspect that England desires to keep India always in subjection. This suspicion has led to perpetual fight between the officials and the popular party. The conflict, if not checked in time, will lead to disastrous results.

What the Bureaucracy wants in India.
Mahrátta (5), 5th Aug.

17. "Government have a sort of a case against the whole people. The case is that the people are entertaining thoughts of Home Rule at an early date. The Bureaucracy cannot tolerate this. India with its millions of human beings and untold material resources is a very tempting place for the bureaucrat. To be a ruler of men is a great (!) ambition......... You Indians want that you shall, in the Legislature where you will dominate, pass laws which the bureaucrats shall faithfully obey. Your men and women—you want to make real men and women of them by giving them the exalting consciousness that they are masters in their home. All this does not suit the bureaucrat. Dumb driven cattle that you have so long been, he likes you and loves you, so long as you remain such.......... What a wonderful 'failure' a man may make of himself! The 'good things' of the world are not able to keep him good; they intoxicate him and make of him a being haggard in mind and spirit, a wretched specimen that moves us to pity at the same time that the fate of the many who suffer for the misdevelopment of this dehumanised man makes us indignant."

Appeal to the Indian leaders not to take any hasty steps calculated to spite Government.
Phœnix (8), 25th July.

18. In the course of an article headed "The Indian problem" the Phœnix takes to task the Anglo-Indian organs for not receiving favourably the appointment of Mr. Montagu, and then continues:—"Leaving these Anglo-Indian critics severely alone, we may say with some confidence that the Imperial Government means to satisfy our legitimate aspirations in an appreciable degree. Mr. Montagu's in-coming shows where the wind blows.

We wish our 'Home Rule' friends shed the rancorous spirit characterizing their utterances and writings. The situation needs to be faced in a bold, but sober, spirit. Sir James Meston has spoken his mind on the Indian problem. It is a sympathetic and a sane pronouncement which needs to be taken in the spirit in which it is made. Sir James Meston lays special stress upon India's participation, on a footing of equality, in the Empire's Council......... It is refreshing to note that Sir James Meston holds the view that 'India cannot effectively take up her partnership in the Empire unless her people are given an ever-increasing share in the management of their own affairs. .... It is significant to note that the Pioneer, in a leading article on the Home Rule agitation, favours the idea of convening a conference, on the lines of the Irish Convention, of representatives of various interests in India for arriving at a workable scheme of reforming the Indian Government. It is plain that British statesmanship will have soon to tackle the solution of the Indian problem, whether through the agency of a Parliamentary Committee or of an Indian Convention as suggested by the Pioneer. It is about time for the sober and responsible men among our politicians to make their voice heard in the matter. We trust that no such hasty step will be taken as is calculated to spite Government. We unreservedly disapprove of the endeavour made in certain quarters to have Mrs. Besant in internment elected as President of the Calcutta Congress, nor are we impressed with the idea of having such a president as will be in a position to speak the mind of Mrs. Besant."

Comments on the Bishop of Bombay's letter on Indian politics.

Kaiser-i-Hind* (24), 5th Aug., Eng. cols.; Kesari (106), 31st July; Shubhodaya (89), 27th July.

19. The Kaiser-i-Hind thus concludes a very lengthy article on the Bishop of Bombay's letter to the Indian Social Reformer on the political situation in India:—"The letter of the Bishop of Bombay is most welcome as coming at least from one Englishman, who believes in self-government and is not temperamentally opposed to see India governing herself. His emphasis on the undemocratic character of caste must be taken to heart by every true son of India, and we trust his letter will have the desired result. On the other hand we deplore that the Bishop has not had the courage to tell his reactionary countrymen in India that reaction is doing more harm to India than good, inasmuch as it fosters ill-feeling between the rulers and the ruled, and adds a bitterness to political propaganda, which makes them more passionate than reasonable. India is and wants to be loyal to England. Let not superfluous and unneeded repression add any tinge of distrust to that loyalty which she has proved by shedding her blood and devoting her treasures to the cause of the Empire." [The Kesari says:—We know that it rests with the British people to grant us Swarājya and that local officials have nothing to do with it and that we can have it if we agitate and undergo self-sacrifice. The Bishop of Bombay need not be anxious. The attempt will be made in a constitutional way. He need not worry himself. The Shubhodaya gives a summary of the letter and adds:—'Enough, Father, Good-morning!!'.]

Comments on the prohibition of the Calcutta meeting of protest against the Madras internments.

Gujarāti* (16), 5th Aug., Eng. cols.; Message (6), 31st July.

20. "The step taken by the Bengal Government in prohibiting the meeting that was to be convened by the Sheriff of Calcutta at the Town Hall is not of less serious importance than the internment of Mrs. Besant and her two associates against which the citizens of Calcutta wished to enter their protest.......... The action of the Bengal Government shows emphatically that the authorities care not a pin even for an Indian of such a distinguished reputation like Sir Rash Behari Ghose and have no confidence whatsoever in his judgment or guidance. It is the gravest step that the Bengal Government have taken......... As far as we can recollect, such an instance of high-handedness on the part of a local Government has not taken place in any presidency town in India." [The Message remarks:—"The Calcutta meeting was to be presided over by no less a person than Sir Rash Behari Ghose, and if the authorities could easily interfere with people of his eminence and distinction, what greater proof does it need about the state of things in the mofussil? We have now reached the hour of India's destiny, and the action of our leaders will decide the future course of Indian history on the popular side."]

Dnyán Prakásh (36), 1st Aug. and 29th July; Kesari (106), 31st July.

21. So far whenever Government wanted to prohibit a meeting they sheltered themselves behind the Defence of India Act without troubling themselves to adduce any reasons for their action. The plea put forward this time at Calcutta, however, is that it is dangerous to countenance criticism of the methods of a provincial Government by the people of another province. This will give our readers an idea of the gravity of the situation. It is evident that the Government of India, though outwardly silent, have made up their mind to pursue a policy of repression with a view to check the legitimate aspirations of the people. If Government have the least regard for public opinion they should at once concede the two demands of the joint conference held at Bombay, viz., the reversal of the present policy of repression and the publication of a proclamation granting Swarájya. The question of reforms is under the consideration of the Government of India and the Home Government and it is generally believed that the campaign of repression inaugurated at the instance of the Government of India is designed to keep popular aspirations within the prescribed limits. It is also believed that the Government of India have issued a circular in this matter to provincial Governments. It is absolutely necessary in the interests of political tranquillity that this circular should be published and the illiberal policy laid down therein completely reversed. The policy of prohibiting meetings recently adopted by some provincial Governments is extremely dangerous. It has disturbed the minds of even those persons who have hitherto carried on political agitation with the utmost sobriety. Government are mistaken if they suppose that they will succeed in gaining their object by depriving the people of the right of speech. [The Dnyán Prakásh says:—Local Governments seem to be engaged in a sort of rivalry among themselves to frame new schemes to attack popular freedom of thought. To prohibit meetings to be held under the presidentship of men like Sir Rash Bihari Ghose and to contend at the same time that there is no intention of opposing constitutional agitation is to add insult to injury. The Kesari writes:—Nobody dreamt that the Calcutta meeting would be stopped, but the officials issued the order highhandedly. The order is not clear as to whether the meeting itself has been prohibited or the meeting at the Townhall. The principle newly introduced that one local Government should not allow protests against any other local Government is absurd and dangerous. Where is the scope then for constitutional agitation? The Congress is sure to take up the question of the interned leaders. Are the Bengal Government going to prohibit the resolution or the Congress itself? The gag introduced by the Bengal Government is extraordinary and it cuts at the root of all constitutional agitation.]

Comments on the action of the District Magistrate, Hyderabad (Sind), in prohibiting a procession in honour of Mrs. Besant.

Sind Advocate (9), 19th July.

22. Referring to the orders of the District Magistrate, Hyderabad (Sind), prohibiting a procession in honour of Mrs. Besant, the Sind Advocate writes:—"But the way in which the Collector of Hyderabad set about preventing the projected procession was the most extraordinary imaginable. The Collector was not satisfied with issuing prohibitory orders to the responsible office holders of the Home Rule League. He was too nervous and too weak-minded to trust to the majesty of law and authority for preventing the procession. He seems to have seriously thought that the Home Rulers were going to break the law and defy authority. But even so, it was the height of imprudence to have adopted the measures that he did adopt. Long before the hour appointed for the procession something like two hundred policemen were brought out and posted at different points of the bazar and the bulk of them were standing opposite near the office of the Home Rule League. The people knew by this time that the procession was not to be, but the presence and activity of the police excited their curiosity and in the bazar they enquired if anybody was passing through and they collected in knots here and there and laughed outright when they heard what the bother was about. But opposite the Home Rule League office the crowd was a very large one and the scene gave the idea of a mela. The one hundred or more policemen could hardly disperse the crowd, and in despair, the District Police Superintendent, who himself had thought fit to come up, ordered the police to disperse themselves and it was then that at the request of the Home Rule men the crowd gradually dispersed. The District Magistrate has rendered a disservice to Government and a real service to the Home Rule League. The latter got more fame and sympathy than they might otherwise have received, and as regards the former, its dignity was seriously compromised by the excessive nervousness and blundering weakness of its chief representative in the district. We must add that either under the District Magistrate's orders or the District Superintendent of Police's the town round in a tanga accompanied by the policemen of the prohibition of the procession was proclaimed in every nook and corner of the city for hours and hours together. It gave one the idea that a general rising of the populace was apprehended. We say that even if there was any suspicion of breach of law, the officials should not have betrayed such nervous weakness."

Comments on the alleged dismissal of a Mukadam by the Municipal Commissioner of Hyderabad (Sind) for wearing a button with a photo of Mr. B. G. Tilak.

Hindusthán (20), 28th July; Shri Venkateshwar (81), 29th July.

23. The Hindusthán refers to the incident published by the Hind Vasi wherein the Municipal Commissioner of Hyderabad (Sind) is alleged to have dismissed a Mukadam of sweepers for wearing a button with a photo of Mr. B. G. Tilak on it, and writes:—The incident affords an illustration of the misuse of power made by the smaller officials encouraged by the unfavourable attitude of the Provincial and Indian Governments towards Indian aspirations. It can never be considered a crime to wear such a button. It is not a wise step to dismiss a man who had put in twelve years' service on such an excuse. We are surprised that the Municipal Commissioner should have acted so hastily in the matter. [The Shri Venkateshwar suggests that the Municipal Commissioner may be removed from his present post and transferred to the Police where he might have full opportunity to exercise autocratic powers and that the mukadam be replaced and be given full salary for the period of suspension.]

A suggested career for Indian youths "of exuberant patriotism".

Mahrátta (5), 5th Aug.

*24. "Money is scarce in this country and for this reason and for other reasons which have reference to the unpreparedness of the general public for an organised National Education programme on a large scale, it becomes necessary to connive more or less at the campaign of Government against the growth of intelligent patriotism in the student-community of the country.......... Youths of exuberant patriotism must be prepared to go without the 'education' available in the anti-National Schools and Colleges and all the amenities that that education is likely to make available to them in their after-life. If they really mean business, there is a large field open to them, a field which will remain open for another generation at any rate. This field is Mass education. Patriotic students, who cannot brook to be fettered in the abominable way that the students' circulars contemplate, have this noble service of the people always open to them. Russian students, both young lads and young ladies, did this service for over 50 years—and now have their efforts culminated in an all-Russia awakening of an epoch-making character! Enlightenment of the masses, beginning with the humble three R's, is a necessity that cannot be shirked. There will be difficulties thrown in the way of the youths who spurning the tainted atmosphere of circular-ridden schools and colleges have given themselves up to the cause of Mass Education, improving their own minds by private study as far as possible. .... So long as our country is not ours, so long even the most innocent patriotic service may be looked upon with a suspicious eye and hindered and hampered by power-loving officialdom in various ways. But to make the country ours, in the sense of its becoming an equal partner in the Empire with Full Self-government in Home Affairs, the question of Mass Education must be seriously and successfully tackled."

Alleged "persecution" of Indian Law students by the Bombay Government.

Mahrátta (5), 5th Aug.

25. Under the heading "More Persecution" the Mahrátta writtes:—"Government machinery in Bombay and Madras and Bengal and all-where is now chiefly employed in picking out cases where the wrath of the authorities may be somehow 'exhibited', and attempts thus made to bully the popular movement into 'respectable' quiescence.......... The example of Government tenaciously pursuing an evil course, ought to inspire us with a like tenacity in a good cause.......... As another example, we have the notice put up in Government Law School, Bombay, prohibiting students from taking any part either passive or active in the affairs of the Home Rule League, prohibiting the Law students, in other words, from becoming or continuing members and from attending any meetings which may have anything to do with Home Rule. The Government Law School students are graduates, all the five hundred of them. But graduates or no graduates, they learn, and are called students and, therefore, must suffer! These graduates have the right to vote members to the Municipaltity and the University Senate, i.e., are citizens, too. But what does that matter? Government is determined to stamp out the Home Rule nonsense, if it can do it by any means!"

Government Pleaders and politics.

Dnyán Prakásh (36), 27th July.

26. Government have published, at the request of the Honourable Mr. Belvi, the circular issued by the Legal Remembrancer defining the extent to which Government Pleaders can take part in politics. As Government Pleaders not only conduct cases on behalf of Government but also advise them in legal matters, they are required, under this circular, not to take part in movements the objects and methods of which clash with the policy of Government. The circular does not mention what particular movements are aimed at but says that a Government Pleader can easily find them out for himself. Even supposing thet it is necessary to impose these restrictions on Government Pleaders and Public Prosecutors as advisers of Government, we fail to see the necessity of imposing them on Assistant and Subordinate Government Pleaders and Honorary Assistant Government Pleaders also as they are not consulted in legal matters. Considering the status of Subordinate Government Pleaders, the small remuneration paid to them, and their duties, it is highly improper that they too should be classed as advisers of Government and as such debarred from associating themselves with political movements. We do not understand why they should accept these posts at all if they are to be treated thus. It is impossible to justify this circular from any point of view.

A Home Rule prayer.

Young India (14), 1st Aug.

27. "King of Kings, Ruler of Nations, Deliverer of the Oppressed, open Thine eye of Mercy on Thine ancient people of India, that Thy Servant the Emperor may know the wrongs that are being committed in his name in India. Break Thou the rod of the oppressor, who forbids us to claim our Birthright of Freedom and deliver Thy People. Free Thou Thy servants, who are unjustly imprisoned for Freedom's sake, and all who can lift to Thee hands free from crime, and who suffer for the sake of the Freedom of the Motherland. So shall we, Thy People, live in peace and safety, in the land which Thou hast given to us for our habitation."

A Swadeshi vow.

Young India (14), 1st Aug.

28. "Invoking the Blessing of Almighty God, and making appeal to His Justice, for the purpose of winning for ourselves and for unborn generations the elementary rights of freedom of person and security of property, until deprived of them by judicial sentence after open trial, we make the solemn vow to purchase Home-made goods in preference to foreign ones, even at a sacrifice. And may Almighty God give us strength of will to carry out this our solemn vow until these rights be restored to the Indian Nation."

Complaint about the alleged open attempts on the part of Christian Missionary organisations to use schools for propagandistic purposes.

New Times (7), 21st June.

29. "Christian missionary propaganda disguises itself so often as a benevolent desire to educate the people of India out of their depths of ignorance, that the evil has reached serious proportions and deserves to engage the attention of the public and Government......... Indian politicians have long pressed for the adoption of the conscience clause which would leave Indian parents the option of prohibiting alien religious instruction being given to their chidren attending schools which receive a Government grant, but somehow or the other Government has not seen its way to accepting the suggestion in spite of its obvious fairness. The result is the increase of open attempts on the part of Christian missionary organisations to use schools for propagandistic purposes. Such attempts are utterly unscrupulous and have not even the cloak of decency. A striking case of this kind has occurred in the Garrikhatta Mission School for girls in Karáchi which throws a lurid light on the inner working of missionary societies. [Here the paper gives details of the case of Chandribai, a minor, who is alleged to have been induced by Miss Carey, the head of the school in question, to repudiate the guardianship of her mother, and continues :—]......... The case has created the greatest sensation. Another daughter of hers (Chandribai's mother) who was also serving as a mistress in the same school, has left it along with many pupils whose parents naturally entertain some suspicions about its character. It is high time that the unwary public should be fully warned against such institutions. It would be better for the religious susceptibilities of the parents that missionary schools should not be patronised at all."

Reflections on the present condition of the fort of Sinhgad near Poona.

Sandesh (118), 29th July.

30. S. G. Bhat contributes some verses to the Sandesh in which the writer bewails the transformation that has taken place at Fort Sinhgad near Poona since the days of the Mahratta. He says tennis is being played at a place where warriors played with the heads of their enemies, and adds that his heart breaks to contemplate what Tanhaji, the Mahratta warrior, would have thought if he were still alive to see the present state of the fort.

The Borah controversy.

Akhbár-e-Islám (56), 30th July; Rást Goftár (30), 29th July; Hindusthán (20), 30th July; Sánj Vartamán (31), 3rd Aug.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 30th July; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 3rd Aug.; Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 29th July.

31. Referring to the orders of excommunication passed by the Mullaji Saheb against certain members of the Borah community during the course of a meeting held on the 28th ultimo, the Akhbár-e-Islám doubts if the said order will lead to permanent peace among the community. It refers to a letter written by Mr. A. M. Jivanji and appearing in the Praja Mitra and Pársi of the 28th July and the Akhbár-e-Islám itself of the same day wherein he declares on oath that the object of his (i. e., reform) party was only to have the accounts of certain trust properties rendered and that they in no way wished to subvert the authority of the Mullaji over the community and regrets that a split has been allowed to be created among it by disregarding the explanation contained in the abovementioned letter and by not arriving at an amicable settlement. The paper declares that the Mullaji committed a blunder in yielding to the demand of those present at the meeting, which in its opinion, was dictated by malice, to excommunicate particular families. It believes that matters would have stood quite the other way if the majority of the community had been educated. It maintains that the Borah community will have to repent not a little for the present painful incident of excommunication. [The Rást Goftár, while professing respect for the Mullaji Saheb, remarks that one cannot afford to ignore the views of well-known persons like the sons of the late Sir Adamji Pirbhai and others. It observes that the family of the late Sir Adamji has become famous for their charity among the community and that, therefore, it behoves the party of the Mullaji patiently to listen to what they have to say. It believes that some "street-fighters" made a mountain out of a molehill at the Borah meeting that was held on Saturday the 28th ultimo. The paper appeals to the Mullaji, if he wishes to uphold the prestige of the community, to keep at arm's length the meddlesome Borahs who pose as leaders among the community, and to arrive at a compromise with the other members of the reform party. It, otherwise, cannot expect any good to come of weeping piteously in public meetings. The Hindusthán expresses itself against Government intervening in controversies with regard to religious or communal matters, as was advocated by the Sánj Vartamán, in its issue of the 28th July 1917 (Vide paragraph 28 of Weekly Report No. 30 of 1917). It advises the reform party as well as the orthodox sections of the community to settle their disputes in an amicable manner and utilise, towards the improvement of education or otherwise, of the community, the money which would be spent in the expensive litigation which the present disputes are likely to give birth to. The Sánj Vartamán refers to another Borah meeting which was held at Badri Mahal in the morning of the 3rd August 1917 in connection with the protest raised by the Surat Borahs against the action of some persons in challenging the authority of the Mullaji Saheb as Dai of the community. Describing the proceedings of the meeting it declares that two persons named Mia Saheb Issac Ali and Mulla Muhammadali Bháthari experssed their penitence for what they had done and signed a declaration before those present acknowedging on oath the Mullaji's position as Dai. During the course of the meeting Mulla Ibrahim Sikandar requested the Mullaji to send for Mulla Ibrahim, son of Shaikh Lukmanji, Amil of Kapadvanj, who, he remarked, was writing against the Mullaji in the Deshi Mitra. The Praja Mitra and Parsi remarks that before the meeting, in which the excommunication order was passed, was held, some farsighted Borahs had gone to those who demanded accounts of the administration of certain trust properties to bring about a compromise. It observes that the last-mentioned persons during that interview expressed their willingness to forego their right of demanding accounts of the administration in the past provided that regular accounts be kept thenceforward and published for the information of the community and that managing Committees composed of the leading members of the community be appointed for the administration of communal funds. The paper states that the deputation very strongly approved of these conditions but the Mullaji Saheb was against any such arrangements. The paper further points to the probability of some civil suits and criminal cases arising from the proceedings of the meeting of the 28th July. The Jám-e-Jamshed refers to a Borah meeting that was held at Surat on the 2nd August at Saiji Madrsesa for securing the excommunication of those Borahs who were carrying on agitation there against the Mullaji, at which feelings of respect were expressed for him and in which the Naib Mullaji Saheb declared that he would pass the necessary orders after hearing all parties. The Kaiser-i-Hind remarks that it entered into the Borah controversy because as an independent paper it considered it its duty to prevent the general Indian public from being misled by writings that appeared in a section of the press from the "reform" party among the Borahs in connection with such questions as, education, feasting, etc., among the community. It maintains that it had published the interview (referred to in paragraph 30 of the Weekly Report No 29 of 1917) its representative had with the Mullaji in connection with the subject matters of the controversy with his express permission. It then goes on to describe how the continued personal attacks of an unpardonable nature injured the feelings of the Borahs, who, the paper declares, suspended business on Friday the 27th July and tried to approach the Mullaji in order to bring about a satisfactory solution in the matter. It then goes on to give an account of the proceedings of the meetings on the 27th and 28th July, declaring in the head lines to the account that the excommunication order passed by the Mullaji spread feelings of great joy and satisfaction among the community. Elsewhere in the same issue the paper remarks that the 'reform' party that has sprung into existence among the Borah community is merely a set of talkers.]

Comments on His Excellency Lord Willingdon's speech on the resolution about Dadabhai Naoroji in the Bombay Legislative Council.

Gujaráti (16), 29th July.

32. Commenting upon His Excellency Lord Willingdon's speech in the Bombay Legislative Council in support of the resolution regarding the death of Dr. Dadabhai Naoroji, the Gujaráti remarks :—What a good fortune has befallen to these great men (Dadabhai Naoroji, Gokhale, etc.) that after their demise their services should be appreciatively recorded in the files of Government and that the goals they pursued should be recognised as legitimate ! Highly indebted are we to Lord Willingdon for not advising us to give the go-bye to the ideal of swarájya or to refrain from hoping for its immediate realisation ! Why should we indulge in a fruitless discussion on the subject since we do not know what may happen at any time ? It would be sufficient for Government to tell the people to see that they do not trespass legitimate bounds. Then the people should be left to realise their destiny by their own exertions.

Appreciation of the extension of the term of His Excellency Lord Willingdon.

Islámic Mail (4), 8th July, Eng. cols.

33. "Bombay has hailed with delight the news of the extension given to her popular Governor. It is a fact that no provincial ruler has a firmer hold on the hearts of his people than the Governor of Bombay; it is also known that the immense success of the War Loan and the War Funds was mainly due to his personal influence. His kindness and courtesy have endeared him to the people to such an extent that even the poorest of them regards him as his protector and friend. There is no official barrier between him and his people. He loves them all, rich and poor. In fact he is regarded more as a friend of the helpless poor people than of the rich. The mill-hands who form the bulk of the Bombay population regard him as their ma bap. Even the humblest of them knows their Excellencies and is grateful for their kindness. The poor soldiers returning wounded from the front take pride in the fact that they have the " personal frindship and regard " of their Excellencies Lord and Lady Willingdon.......... While a firm and strong ruler His Excellency is a very liberal-minded and kind-hearted ruler and has distinct sympathy with Indian aspirations which have made him as successful politically as personally. It was for this reason that a movement was set on foot to secure an extension of his term of office and all Bombay feels grateful to His Majesty's Government for having given them their heart's desire."

Comments on the Bombay Budget Debate.

Message (6), 31st July.

34. "The debate is one continuous narrative of neglect and parsimony in regard to the most elementary needs of a civilised community, that is, Education, Medical Relief and Sanitation.......... While Government could not find more than ten lakhs for Sanitation, the Police Department has become their 'first love'. It is no exaggeration, no fiction. It is a simple, stern reality. From a crore and fifty-eight thousand in 1913-14, the expenditure has successively risen in four years to a crore and twenty-one lakhs. Imagine what it means. An increase of over 20 per cent. in four years, an increase that might startle the most prosaic mind.......... And as regards Muhammadan education, if there is anywhere any feeling that Muhammadans are accorded favoured treatment, we would ask them to put aside all such belief on the shelf. We would strongly recommend them to read the fine exposition of Mr. Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer. We fully sympathise with Mr. Jaffer's complaint that in respect of scholarships, Muhammadan students have not been treated very liberally or sympathetically, although as a class they have fully deserved better treatment."

Resolutions in the recent session of the Bombay Legislative Council.

Bombay Samáchár (59), 30th July; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 2nd Aug.; Kesari (106), 31st July.

35. The Bombay Samáchár expresses gratification at the passing of the Honourable Mr. V. J. Patel's resolution for the establishment of a training college for primary teachers in Bombay in its amended form which asks Government to extend the facilities for training teachers in the existing colleges and to open more colleges in the mofussil when funds permit. It is of opinion that training colleges should be opened in the mofussil in preference to Bombay where living is very expensive.

Writing about the Honourable Mr. Patel's resolution for the appointment of a committee to equire into the working of the Police Department, the paper says:—The acceptance of the resolution in an amended form shows that the attention of Government had already been drawn to the growth in the expenditure on the Police and that they were departmentally making enquiries to ascertain whether the expenses could be curtailed. There is no doubt that expenditure on the Police has increased enormously of late and necessity has arisen of a careful investigation as to whether it could be curtailed without endangering public safety. Steps should also be taken to ameliorate the condition of the subordinate staff of the Police Department. [The Jám-e-Jamshed also expresses gratification at the passing of the Honourable Mr. Patel's resolution about training colleges in an amended form. It is, however, of opinion that a training college for primary school teachers should be established in Bombay to meet the requirements of the Bombay Municipality when it resorts to the measure of making primary education free and compulsory. It thanks the Honourable Mr. Patel for moving his resolution for an enquiry into Police expenditure and thus eliciting a promise from Government for placing on the Council table the results of the departmental enquiry being made by them. The Kesari says:—Lord Willingdon characterised the proposed inquiry into the increase of expenditure and specially into the Police expenditure as a vote of censure on Government. Why should Government so much misunderstand the resolution and be enraged against it? In England such an inquiry is proceeding and nobody takes it as a vote of censure. Why should the local officials be so much put out? Mr. Gokhale proposed such an inquiry in the Imperial Council and the Viceroy did not raise any such objections. The Police Department has been reconstructed and the burden of expenditure has been increased, but the work turned out has not been satisfactory. Is it a sin to request an inquiry into the unbearable burden of expenditure borne by the people? What do the officials in the Council mean by rating the elected members? The change proposed by the Honourable Mr. Curtis gave altogether a different complexion to the resolution and the honourable members should guard themselves against such yielding. It is better that a resolution should be rejected rather than it should be accepted with such changes as leave in it no trace of the original resolution.]

Interpellations in the recent Session of the Bombay Legislative Council.

Praja Bandhu (27), 29th July, Eng. cols.; Sánj Vartamán (31), 30th July.

36. Referring to the replies to interpellations at the recent Session of the Bombay Legislative Council, the Praja Bandhu writes:—"The replies to a few interpellations are satisfactory to a greater or less extent, while with regard to quite an appreciable number of them the replies fall under the category of inquiry will be made, information has been called for, or the time and trouble involved will not be commensurate with the result. Now, so far as we know, the non-official members submit most of their interpellations long before the Council meets, and Government with their vast resources ought not in our opinion to experience any very great inconvenience or difficulty in supplying promptly the desired information to a non-official member. As matters stand at present, the delay deprives such interpellations of much of the interest which they would otherwise have for the public. We will, therefore, welcome a little more activity on the part of the officials concerned.... ..... The Honourable Mr Bhurgri's question whether school and college students have been acting as volunteers at the Congress and Moslem League meetings brought forth the reply that enquiries were being made. With regard to this question it is not quite easy to divine the object of the Honourable Member in putting this interpellation. Moreover, it is a fact known to every one that the bulk of the volunteers at the two assemblies are school and college students, and hence we do not think it is necessary to make any enquiries, although as a result of the recent circular of the Educational Department they will not be allowed to do so. Another question by the same member re the Report of the Public Services Commission elicited the reply that the Bombay Government had not invited non-official opinion in respect of the Report, although some local Governments had done so. The reasons for this are not vouchsafed, and hence the public are quite in the dark about them. Whatever these reasons may be, we hope the Bombay Government will now be pleased to do so without any further delay. A third question of the same gentleman regarding the rumoured internment of Mr. Tilak and others drew forth the reply that Government had no statement to make on the subject. A reply like this can, however, hardly set at rest the rumour referred to......" [Commenting upon the reply to the Honourable Mr. Haroon Ebrahim Jaffer's interpellation about waiting rooms for third class female passengers, the paper remarks:—"This reply can scarcely be considered satisfactory, for the consensus of indigenous public opinion has long since been in favour of this reform, which if anything, has been overdue. It is, indeed, a pity that notwithstanding the fact that third class passengers contribute to the bulk of a Railway Company's income from passenger traffic, many of their elementary needs conducive to their comforts and convenience still continue to be unprovided for. A question by the Honourable Mr. B. S. Kamat re the expenditure on the Mahableshwar move brought forth the reply that information was being collected. It is needless to state that in view of the indigenous public opinion being hostile to such moves, which more or less tell on Government resources, the public will await with interest the promised information.......... An important question by the Honourable Mr. V. J. Patel in connection with the separation of Judicial and Executive functions elicited the reply that it was not intended to separate the two functions in some districts of the Presidency. This reply need not, however, take the public by surprise, however deplorable the decision may be, when we bear in mind the trend of the official view with regard to this venerable question.......... Another question by the same gentleman brought out the reply that the Mail (Islamic) weekly newspaper published in Bombay was not subsidised, but 150 copies of it were purchased by Government. We think the general belief of the public is that the policy of Government subsidizing or purchasing a newspaper in pretty large numbers was given up in view of the highly questionable utility of such a measure. That this is not the case at any rate in the Bombay Presidency is clear from the above reply, although it is extremely hard to understand why Government should spend public funds in purchasing copies of a newspaper for the purpose of distributing them free. The Sanj Vartdman refers to the question asked by the Honourable Dr. C. Fernandes with respect to the plying by prostitutes of their trade near educational institutes and draws the attention of Government to the existence of a brothel opposite to the Grant Medical College Hostel and asks Government to give powers to the Police to remove all the brothels from respectable quarters and to assign a special locality for them.]

Message (6), 29th July.

37. "We are glad to learn that Government are inquiring into the matter. But is it not desirable that this inquiry should not be conducted only officially? The question is one of grave public interest, and any inquiry, therefore, in order to be exhaustive and complete must be an open one at which the interested public may lead the evidence within their knowledge. Having particular regard to the reply of Government to the second question of the Honourable Dr. Fernandes, we think it is extremely necessary that the inquiry should be made comprehensive and non-officials should be largely associated with the Government agency that may be at work."

Appeal on behalf of a destitute old lady at Rohri (Sind) who cannot trace the whereabouts of her three sons who have joined the Indian Army.

New Times (7), 19th July.

38. Mr. P. C. Ajwani of Karáchi writes to the New Times:—"Lately when I was at Rohri, with my relatives, a lady about 70 years old, named Zanber Khatu came to me and requested me to get her a clue as to the whereabouts of her three sons who, she said, had joined the Indian Army as privates, at the beginning of the war. Knowing of no other course then, I drafted two applications on her behalf and sent them under her thumb impression to the District Magistrate, Sukkur, and the General Commanding Officer, Karáchi, respectively, requesting them to supply her the requisite information, and if possible, to grant her some pension, as she stood in great need of it. The abovementioned lady is putting up and living on the charity of a retired Indian soldier, who, he lately told me, could not support her any longer. It is nearly a year, since she applied for relief to the abovementioned officers, and to our great regret little has been done for her as yet. Some inquiries were made by the District Magistrate, Sukkur, and now I learn that she has got a reply from the Collector of Sukkur to the effect that he can do nothing for her.......... Indeed it is exceedingly regrettable that a lady who has sent three of her best blood on the active service to die for us, should be left in ignorance of her sons and be uncared for by us on whom she has every claim." [Commenting upon this letter, the paper remarks:—"She has set us all an example of noble sacrifice by sending her three sons to fight for the King and the country. And now she has none to support her in her sorrow and privations; she is starving. Has she no claims upon us? To efface this scandalous neglect, the New Times is opening a fund for the relief of this widowed mother and is contributing Rs. 10 to it as the first donation."]

Comments on the Bombay Government Press Communiqué appointing a Provincial Recruitment Board.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 2nd Aug.; Akhbár-e-Islám (56), 3rd Aug.

39. The Praja Mitra and Pársi cordially supports the appeal made by His Excellency the Governor through the Press Communiqué recently issued by the Government of Bombay in connection with the subject of more effectively organising the resources and man-power of India for the purposes of the war. While wishing success to the Provincial Recruitment Board appointed by Government, it maintains that sufficient efforts are not made by His Excellency for awakening enthusiasm among the people in the matter of recruitment, as had been done with regard to the raising of the Indian War Loan. The paper appeals to His Excellency Lord Willingdon to call a public meeting in connection with the recruitment of men for the army. It believes that such a course will tend greatly to help the work which is to be done by the new Recruitment Board. [The Akhbár-e-Islám remarks that it behoves the people of the Bombay Presidency to give a hearty response to His Excellency's appeal embodied in the Communiqué.]

Comments on the poor response to the recruitment for the Indian section of the Indian Defence Force.

Hindusthán (20), 29th July, Eng. cols.

40. The Hindusthán regrets the fact that only 1,778 Indians have up to now joined the Indian Defence Force, and continues:—"We have written several times on this question and yet continue to write as we feel a burning shame at the lack of response of our youths to this call on them for the defence of their country. Whatever restrictions there may have been, whatever limitations, it is the bounden duty of all who are of military age to join the Indian Defence Force. We venture to suggest to Government that in case the required number does not come up in a month they should raise the age of eligibility to at least 35, announce some separation allowance and extend the period for three months more. The scheme with all its defects is a good one and its being shelved off for want of response will be sheer disaster the magnitude of which our youths do not realise. Let the different Home Rule League branches decide not to admit any young man of military age unless he has joined or is prepared to join the Indian Defence Force."

Comments on the failure of the first Mesopotamia expedition and the blame cast upon Lord Hardinge in the Commission's report.

Political Bhomiyo (71), 3rd Aug.

41. Referring to the Report of the Mesopotamia Commission which, among other persons, held Lord Hardinge responsible for the failure of the first Mesopotamia expedition, the Political Bhomiyo significantly remarks that it is regrettable that the brave Anglo-Indian army should have surrendered to the Turks who are called the sick men (of Europe). It observes that if Lord Hardinge is to be held responsible for that result he should be so held in common with all the big European States who believed that Turkey was the sick man of Europe and that it would not take long to drive her out from Europe. It writes:—If the army and amunition first sent there were believed to be adequate, the Allies equally with Lord Hardinge are worthy of reproach inasmuch as in the beginning of the war they had made mighty efforts to drive out this sick man of Europe from the continent and to partition among themselves the great Turkish Empire.

Even before victory was won, programmes were published as to who should get Constantinople and as to how the Turkish Empire should be distributed, which exemplified the adage "Counting chickens before they are hatched". But these castles in the air collapsed, their (the Allies') imaginings proved abortive and the result of the Mesopotamia expedition did not turn out to be less humiliating than the result of the programmes that were published of reaching Constantinople by the Dardanelles route and of unfurling within a week the Allies' banner of victory there. Why should not the party responsible for the failure of the Gallipoli expedition be brought to account just as Lord Hardinge has been in the present case? [The paper then apparently goes on to praise the Indians in a half-hearted manner for the public protests they have made in vindication of Lord Hardinge after the Mesopotamia Commission Report was published and proceeds thus:—These same Indians had thrown a bomb at Lord Hardinge while he was making his state entry into Delhi. If the Indians then really loved Lord Hardinge with sincere hearts, the commission of this crime was the best occasion to show their loyalty by helping to get the criminal detected. It is needless to analyse the motives of the persons who were implicated in the Chandni Chowk conspiracy (against Lord Hardinge) and to try to ascertain as to what religion, class or body they belonged, because the same sort of agitation was rife then as is being carried on now.

Reflections on the completion of third year of the war.

Rast Goftár (30), 5th Aug., Eng. cols.

42. "On the 4th instant full three years of the war were completed, but the end, if it means a decisive result, is nowhere in sight. On the other hand, complications have arisen which may not only protract the war but seriously affect the position of the Allies. The demoralisation in Russia, the disgraceful retreat of Russian armies before German and Austrian troops, the capture of nearly a hundred miles of territory by the victorious Germans, are not events calculated to hasten the end of the war. On the Western front severe fighting is in progress, but though British and French troops are fighting splendidly, Belgium and France are not likely to be cleared of the German invaders very soon. The financial exhaustion is complete, but the war has not yet taken a decisive course. The Kaiser's proclamation, as usual, is bombastic, but it is not wholly untrue. German territory still remains scatheless. A fight to a finish means a complete defeat of the Central Powers, East and West. Of that there is not a vestige or sign so far. The joining of America may hasten the end, but that also means another year, and another year of this war is horrible to contemplate."

The new German Imperial Chancellor's recent speech shows that Germany is prepared to fight to the finish.

Praja Bandhu (27) 29th July, Eng. cols.

43. In the course of an article in which it quotes from the recent pronouncement of the new German Chancellor, the Praja Bandhu remarks:—"Another sentence, viz., 'we cannot again offer peace with a loyally outstretched hand once there has been no response', plainly indicates that the offer for peace must come from the other side. The few sentences that we have selected from the Imperial Chancellor's speech unmistakably indicate that there has been absolutely no change in the German policy with regard to the present war. With these views expressed by the German Chancellor in unequivocal language there is no wonder that the British Press should take the speech as a declaration for a fight to a finish on the part of Germany. This means a further prolongation of the war with all its attendant horrors to and curses on the whole world in general and Europe in particular."

The situation in Russia.

Gujaráti (16), 19th July; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 29th July; Akhbár-e-Islám (56), 1st Aug., Kaiser-i-Hind* (24), 5th Aug., Eng. cols.

44. People are eagerly enquiring about the situation in Russia. There are many rumours current among them to the effect that Petrograd has fallen and that the Provisional Government has taken refuge at Moscow. People shake their heads very seriously and discuss such rumours as if they had received special communications on the subject. Some even go the length of saying that Russia has concluded a separate peace with Germany and is making a show of fighting to conceal the fact from the Allies.

It must, however, be conceded that we are completely in the dark about the real internal situation in Russia and that even newspapers in England cannot lay claim to full knowledge on the subject. Russia was congratulated by the Allies on the overthrow of the Czar and we were told that nobody sympathised with the old form of Government. How is it that Russia has not organised itself for the contest against Germany? How is that the new Government has not been able to put the country in order in spite of the claim made by it that it has the sympathy of the people? It is strange that Russia is not fighting as well as she did under the Czar. Experience has taught us not to expect anything good from Russia for the present at any rate. If people are forced to obey orders they might resort to secret intrigues. The hopes based on the reports of the Russian advance in Galicia have been frustrated and we cannot predict the end of the war with any amount of certainty. The trusted leaders of the people are resigning one after another and we do not think that those now in power will be able to put things in order. Why have the officials appointed by the Provisional Government resigned? Why are the soldiers retreating in disorder? Why is there chaos in Russia? If only a handful of men are stirring up disorder at the instigation of the enemy they can surely be put down by the people. Should, however, there be many parties in the country who are all equally powerful, it must be said that they are not all agreed upon the object with which the war was waged, namely, the protection of the Slavs. The Allies do not want Russia to be inactive as they are not in a position to withstand German attacks single-handed. But they dare not interfere in the internal administration of Russia lest they should excite the opposition of the people. England is confronted with the difficult task of pacifying the people, infusing enthusiasm in the soldiers, collecting munitions and stores, securing money and keeping her pledges with the Allies. The present situation in Russia is largely due to German machinations. Germans are interested in keeping Russia in a state of disorder and all their exertions are directed in that direction. The Allies would derive some benefit by helping up Russia to continue hostilities with Germany; but great risk is involved in supplying Russia with the money and munitions it requires at a time when its affairs are at sixes and sevens. The Allies, moreover, are running the risk of losing the large advances of money they have made to Russia. It is feared that Germany will take advantage of the present situation to destroy the Russian fleet. Germany has again commenced to hammer at France with a view to gain some success and thus revive the flagging zeal of its own people and to complete the demoralization of the Russian Army. We are informed by Italy that Russian slackness has enabled Austria to withstand its attacks. Just as Germans cannot definitely say anything about the future of Austria or Turkey, we cannot say anything about Russia. It is so very vast that there is no possibility of its being able to maintain itself intact in the situation in which it is involved; on the contrary, it is likely to be smashed to pieces. [The Praja Mitra and Pársi remarks:—It is to be regretted that all our hopes centered in the establishment of a popular form of Government have been frustrated by the chaos that at present reigns in Russia. The Provisional Government has not been able to conduct the war even as efficiently as the Government of the Czar. A considerable portion of the Russian army has refused to obey orders and is falling back and giving way to the enemy. The situation in Russia has greatly elated the enemy and the triumphant note struck in the German Chancellor's recent speech is based on the weakness of Russia. German machinations are at the bottom of the trouble in Russia and matters will assume a very gloomy aspect if Germany succeeds in her intrigues and is enabled to place her own creatures in power. We shall join the Allies in hoping that the dark clouds will soon disperse and disclose to view a satisfactory state of things that will prove lasting. The Akhbár-e-Islám writes in a similar strain. [The Kaiser-i-Hind writes:—' Keep your eye on Russia ' was the advice of many who have studied the problems of the War. But for her the great struggle would have seen its end before the trials of the next Winter began. But is Russia to be blamed? Not the Russia of old which groaned under the heels of Romanoff autocracy, but the free Russia of to-day which has not had time to survive the shock of the great Revolution. Russians have not been able to set their house in order. In fact the time has been but too short. And German machinations appear to have had some free play.......... The situation in Russia at present is far too delicate to allow of the country to do something substantial in the fighting regions.]

Government and the recent rumours in Bombay.

Gujaráti (16), 29th July.

45. Commenting upon the wild rumours that have recently gained currency in Bombay, the Gujaráti writes:—We do not know what folly prompted the officials to order Mr. Hornimann to refrain from publishing any further communication on the Dádar affair on the score of its being detrimental to public safety. It seems they did not know that the people would naturally ask as to how redress should be sought in such cases. Why should not Government have made a declaration as to whether there was any truth in the rumours? The Press Note subsequently issued on the subject should have come earlier. Even the Press Note created further embarrassment by stating that such rumours give rise to racial animosities and impede the work of recruiting! The people were led to believe that this step was taken to frighten the newspapers and they were confirmed in their suspicions! A very good impression would have been made on the public if Government had undertaken to investigate into the matter and to punish the culprits, if there were any, and to safeguard the honour of the people. It is a pity that Government do not know that threats produce a contrary effect.

The articles on the strength of which security was taken from the New Times of Karáchi were written by it out of a sense of duty to Government.

New Times (7), 28th June.

46. In the course of an article which it writes in justification of itself on the security of Rs. 500 being taken from it, the New Times writes:—"We do not believe in catastrophic changes. We are content if the progress of Sind is slow and gradual provided there is progress. We aimed at the slow enlightenment of Sind. We, therefore, wrote with studied moderation, and knowing the political incapacity of the province, even refrained from commenting on many things unless it was absolutely required by duty. But all this caution has been in vain. The Government, anxious for the 'repose' of the province, has decided that we must pay security worth Rs. 500. We cannot appeal, we may protest, but we must pay. We have paid. The passages complained of came mostly from articles written on the subject of the recent Madras internments. We have not pursued an exceptional policy in condemning them. Whole India is aflame with excitement at the outrage perpetrated by the Government of the Southern Presidency. Muslims have combined with Hindus in expressing their indignation.......... Under the circumstances, the New Times would have failed in its duty to the Government if it had omitted to warn it of the consequences which might follow a policy of repression and to represent the feelings of the people on the subject. We still maintain that in writing those articles we performed a service to the Government for which it cannot be sufficiently grateful. But it seems that warnings are not welcome and an editor's offer of information is a reflection on official omniscience. We can only protest and remain silent, but we cannot refrain from thinking that under such circumstances honest journalism becomes impossible."

Comments on a Násik case in which a man was prosecuted for bringing a false charge of bribery against a Sub-Inspector of Excise.

Rást Goftár (30), 5th Aug., Eng. cols.

47. "We are informed that some one living in the Nasik District complained that a certain Sub-Inspector of Excise had demanded a bribe from him. Thereupon the District Magistrate called upon the man to prove his allegation. Of course he could not do it, and was forthwith charged with making a false complaint against a public servant, tried and convicted and sentenced to a month's rigorous imprisonment. In principle there is nothing to be said against this; but was it expedient? The first aim of district officers and others should be to do everything they can to eradicate the admitted corruption in a Department which offers unlimited opportunities for corruption. Bribes are not demanded openly in the presence of witnesses, and it is very difficult to get satisfactory evidence of a bribe. In the case under notice the man might have told the truth, but he had no evidence to prove what he said. The result will be that no one will come forward in future to make allegations or give any evidence of corruption against officers in the Excise Department. This will be lamentable, but it will be the logical and inevitable outcome of such a prosecution."

The cost of surveying sub-shares should not be recovered from the people for the present.

Satya Shodhak (119), 29th July.

48. A correspondent writes to the Satya Shodhak:—It is unjust to require the people to pay the cost of surveying sub-shares as Government have carried out this work of their own accord. At any rate the present is not the time for making such a demand, for prices have at present gone up very high and people have had to incur debts to meet the enhanced amount of land assessment. They have also had, as loyal subjects, to contribute their share to the War Loan. This fresh demand, therefore, will prove unbearable to the people. It would be well if it be postponed under the circumstances.

Comments on the Government resolution fixing 20 years as the period for revision settlements in Sind.

Sind Advocate (9), 19th July.

49. "At last the Sind Settlement report is out and the Government Resolution announces that the revision settlement period shall in future be 20 years instead of 10. This is not quite satisfactory of course, but whatever concession it is, the grace is taken out of it by the evident anxiety which is shown by the Committee and still more by the Commissioner in Sind in forwarding the report to the Government to assure the world that the concession is not made out of regard for public opinion or for the soundness of the objections urged by the critics, but merely as a matter of administrative convenience and expediency, just to save the officials and the Zamindars the inconvenience and the embarrassment caused by rapidly recurring revisions!!! Another reason is also given that the revision settlements though theoretically decennial, are as a matter of fact held in many places every 15 or 16 years and sometimes even after 20 years. Also there is evident gloating over the mistakes and ignorance of the witnesses, among whom the Honourable Mr. Bhurgri is mentioned with special care and that more than once. The Commissioner in Sind indeed seems anxious not to miss an opportunity to make capital of the mistakes which Mr. Bhurgri and others did fall into, i.e., of supposing that everywhere in India the land assessment included as in Sind the water-rate which as a matter of fact is separately charged in other provinces. About the other 'mistakes' we believe Mr. Bhurgri and others will still have something to say."

Comments on the proposal to appoint Benches of Honorary Maistrates in the talukas and towns of Sind.

New Times (7), 7th July.

50. An anonymous correspondent writing to the New Times points out how Honorary Magistrates have been a failure in Sind and how the question of the appointment of a Bench of such Magistrates in each Taluka and town of Sind is exercising the minds of the people. He then continues:—"With this sentiment and prejudice in the public mind it becomes an interesting question why such a large number of Magistrates should be scattered over the dumb millions of Sind. If the object is to relieve the ordinary Magistracy of the congestion of work, that can be easily met by the investiture of summary powers. If again the object is to reward the 'Select few' for the services rendered by them to the State, it involves the sacrifice of the principle that it is the legal brain that is a sine qua non of the judicial administration. Again the worst result of this will be that this would lead to the lowering of the standard of judicial administration, which would affect the prestige of Government. But in large towns the effects would be far-reaching. It is a wellknown fact that Municipalities in big towns are torn asunder by internal dissensions so much so that almost every question is treated as a party or individual question and decided as such. Where the public interests command so much party attention the appointment of Honorary Magistrates will lead necessarily to ruinous results. With the stipendiary Magistrates who are liable to be transferred at a moment's notice and who have no vested interests in the area where they are exercising jurisdiction, it is a matter of indifference who the parties to the case may be. But with the Honorary Magistrates, however honest, the presence before them of an accused person will at once raise before their mental vision the picture of a friend or otherwise. In such an atmosphere where the first impressions are of a questionable nature, can an accused person feel himself safe?"

LEGISLATION.

The Honourable Mr. Patel's Primary Education Bill.

Young India (14), 1st Aug.

51. "The permission given to the Honourable Mr. Patel to introduce the Bill was hedged round by so many conditions that it might have been as well if he had declined to accept those conditions and proceed with the Bill. One of the most important conditions whose significance Mr. Patel does not seem to have recognized earlier in the day, is that a new section—section 18—has been inserted in the Bill, thus knocking the bottom out of the whole proposal. The wording of the section does credit to bureaucratic ingenuity and no more effective step could have been adopted to scare away impecunious municipalities—almost all our municipalities are impecunious—from attempting compulsory education than to tell them in advance that they have no claim upon Government, except what it might be pleased to give out of its unbounding generosity and good will."

Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 5th Aug., Eng. cols.

52. "The Bill is certainly a great move, but we are inclined to think too full of safeguards to make it acceptable. Believing that something is better than nothing, we congratulate the mover on the success he has obtained so far. Non-official opinion is almost unanimous in its opposition to clause 18, but we have the Honourable Sir Mahadev Chaubal taking up an almost uncompromising attitude in regard to it on behalf of the Government. And we have the sorry spectacle of the honourable mover of the Bill being compelled to introduce a clause against which he has to declare himself. We cannot, however, lose sight of the fact that the mover was not in a free assembly but in the trammelled atmosphere of an Indian Provincial Legislative Council. Here comes in the illiberality of the Government about which the Honourable Mr. Belvi remarked to which Lord Willingdon took exception. We trust that the Governor's promise of sympathetic consideration of a request of any Municipality for monetary assistance from Government will not follow the wake of so many other such assurances which are either easily forgotten or deliberately ignored."

Message (6), 29th July.

53. "In regard to Mr. Patel's Bill we do not wish to say more than this at present that it is more moderate than Mr. Gokhale's Bill of 1911 in the Imperial Legislative Council. It does not only leave sufficient option to the municipalities concerned, but also leaves the freest hand to the local Government and its Education Department to play ducks and drakes, if they like, with the fate of the School Committees. When we read the Bill, we were reminded of the old adage about 'half a loaf'. It still marks a definite advance over the present 'hallowed' state of things and to that extent it has our cordial welcome."

Kesari (106), 31st July; Dnyán Prakásh (36), 29th July.

54. We suggest to the Select Committee on Mr. Patel's Bill to remove the defect introduced in it by the last clause. The whole burden of primary education has never been placed upon local bodies anywhere. His Excellency does not want any legal binding, though he says Government will help the local bodies. Why should Government be so much afraid of a legal binding? No doubt today we have a very sympathetic Governor. When he leaves these shores his sympathy will depart with him and the Municipalities will have to bear the expenditure. Therefore the point should be cleared up in time. It is possible that the Auditor would object to all expenditure incurred in this connection if he clause is retained. Therefore the clause should be dropped. We do not think that it has been suggested by the Government of India. It seems to be the production of some local learned lawyer. Government should openly state in the Act what help they intend to give to the Municipalities or tell them plainly that they cannot help. A point blank refusal would be welcome. [The Dnyán Prakásh says:—It is clear that the Bill could be introduced because of the encouragement given to it by Lord Willingdon. It was, therefore, not possible for any official to oppose it openly, but short of that the officials expressed their fears and objections against the Bill. It shows that the officials are unwilling and unfit to accept new ideas. There is no room for the fear expressed by some of the honourable members that Government may stop their grants if there is no legal binding; in fact there is no binding on Government even now to pay half the expenditure on education to the municipalities. The same state of things will continue under the new Act. But it was natural for the members to make such comments because Government were unduly circumspect.]

Bombay Samachár (59), 30th July.

55. Apropos of the Education Bill brought by the Honourable Mr. V. J. Patel in the last session of the Bombay Legislative Council, the Bombay Samachár remarks that the people of this Presidency will thank His Excellency the Governor for allowing the Bill to be introduced in the Council and for the sympathetic views he expressed in regard to it. It cannot agree with the opinion expressed by the Honourable Mr. Lawrence to the effect that a large portion of the members had supported the Bill without realising the grave responsibility attaching to it. It observes that it is preposterous to say that the Government of Lord Willingdon had supported the Bill without fully appreciating its gravity. The paper quotes His Excellency's remarks wherein he dwelt on the importance of compulsory primary education, and about which he remarked that it was a question that would have to be considered after the war not only by the Government of Bombay but all over India, and remarks that there could hardly be a better rejoinder to the excessive cautiousness of the Honourable Mr. Lawrence than these words of His Excellency Lord Willingdon.

EDUCATION.

Proposal to start a National College at Ahmedabad.

Gujaráti Punch (18), 29th July, Eng. cols.

56. The Gujaráti Punch dwells at great length on the alleged defects and evils of the present system of education and then continues:—"Under such gloomy circumstances we find some relief to see attempts being made to nationalise the system of education and we note with great pleasure the circular issued by Mr. Jivanlal V. Desai, Bar.-at-Law, which we print in another column. The organisers intend to start a National College in Ahmedabad on the lines advocated by Mrs. Besant some time back. They intend to begin with only three subjects, viz., English, Gujarati and History. Their immediate aspirations are modest which go to show that they mean business. Religion and physical culture form a part of the curriculum.......... As the institution grows the organisers hope to include other branches such as Civil Engineering and Physical sciences in their curriculum."

RAILWAYS.

The G. I. P. Railway strike.

Kesari (106), 31st July

57. Commenting upon the G. I. P. Railway Workshop strike, the Kesari holds that the demands of the strikers are plain and straightforward. It further remarks:—Labourers belonging to the backward classes now know the root cause of their grievances. Instead of making individual complaints they should establish a League of their own and approach Government for redress if the capitalists do not yield. Then Government will have to consider the matter. In the age of Kali, those who hold together will be powerful.

MUNICIPALITIES.

Comments on the proceedings of the Local Self-government Conference at Poona.

Bombay Samáchár (59), 30th July; Sánj Vartamán (31), 1st Aug.; Hindusthán (20), 31st July.

58. The Bombay Samáchár fully endorses the suggestions made by the Honourable Mr. Patel at the Local Self-government Conference which recently met at Poona and expresses hope that His Excellency Lord Willingdon will be pleased to effect the necessary reforms in the matter of introducing the elective principle in the Municipalities, removing the official control therefrom and placing municipal finances on a satisfactory footing during the extended period of his term of office. [The Sánj Vartamán writes :—The facts and figures marshalled by Mr. Patel show that Government have not afforded sufficient opportunities for the development of local Self-government. The responsibility for the backwardness of our Municipalities, therefore, rests with Government and not with the people. The inefficiency of municipal administration is due to the incompetence and indifference of the nominated members. It is now high time that Government gave up their narrow-minded policy and adopted a liberal policy in the matter of local self-government by adopting the suggestions of the Honourable Mr. Patel. The Hindusthán writes :—In matters Municipal as in other matters, we refuse to be guided by the policy of drift. Government should adopt a liberal policy in their relations with India and should give us tangible proofs of their earnestness of purpose by guiding India to the goal of Self-government under the Empire.]

Dnyán Prakásh (36), 31st July.

59. Whatever views officials may hold about granting the rights of Swarájya, they are now firmly convinced that more extensive rights of local self-government cannot long be withheld from the people. Fortunately for us His Excellency Lord Willingdon is most eager to increase the number of these rights. But, however eager a Governor may be to confer rights upon the people, the triumverate of his Executive Councillors is generally not so very keen on the subject, and especially an highhanded adviser of the type of the Honourable Mr. Curtis will do his utmost to damp the ardour of the Governor. Some three years ago Government decided to appoint officers of the rank of Assistant Collector as Commissioners of the larger municipalities on the ground of efficiency. Complaints are being received that these officials conduct themselves as if they were lords of the municipalities and exercise unrestrained authority. The Ahmedabad Municipal Councillors appear to be so very disgusted with this arrangement that we shall not at all be surprised if there is a sharp conflict between Government and the Municipality. While one of the Ahmedabad Councillors was reading out an account of the pranks of the Municipal Commissioner before the conference, the Honourable Mr. Curtis, who is the prince of arrogant officials, gave vent to his angry feelings. He approached the President and told him that it was improper to criticise the conduct of the Commissioner behind his back. On the President telling him that there was nothing wrong in it he left the meeting in high dudgeon. His childish conduct only caused much amusement.

Message (6), 29th July.

60. "Mr. Godbole's address was, we are constrained to say, singularly lacking in breadth of vision and depth of feeling. It was more platitudinous than it really ought to have been and was characterized by its narrow conception of what local self-government is or ought to be. And Mr. Godbole's remark that the larger question of Home Rule for India was meeting with sympathy from Government in India was not only ill-timed but certainly most unfortunate. Mr. Godbole had remarked earlier in the day in the Legislative Council that he was already 69 years old and as such he could not undertake certain things. We wish the old gentleman had kept this in view and declined to accept the Chairmanship of the Reception Committee. The choice of the Chairman was quite bad, though the choice of the President made up in a small degree for the Reception Committee's initial blunder. Mr. Patel's address was a brilliantly practical address, the subject being one in which he has made himself quite at home."

Question of house-tax at Hyderabad (Sind).
Hind Vasi (45), 20th July, Eng. cols.

61. Writing on the subject of house-tax at Hyderabad (Sind), the Hind Vasi remarks:—The Municipality being gone and replaced by an officialized committee, it is comparatively easy to get the proposal of the house-tax passed. Analyzing the constitution of the committee, we find that the three European official members, out of its total of six members, of whom one is Mr. Gibson himself, are bound to support him......... So it is feared that the tax will have been imposed in the teeth of the most universal feeling and the most emphatic public opinion to the contrary. Hence the early alarm among the citizens now. We hope that all the three Indian members will stand fast against the tax...... ... In the municipal meeting of September 1915, where the two conditions of the Government ultimatum to the Municipality were discussed, the Honourable Mr. Ghulam Hussain declared himself unreservedly against the imposition of house-tax. Nothing has happened since to alter the conditions of the city so as to justify the imposition of the tax more than before. Rather, by the additional taxation recently imposed by the Committee of Management, considerable additional revenue will be raised which will make the grounds for the imposition of a house-tax now far more feeble than they might have been when the Bombay Government imposed its two conditions. Before discussing these grounds, however, we would like to ask why this further attempt (or blunder shall we call it) of perturbing the inhabitants of a city that is already so much agitated over the harsh and anomalous rules and bye-laws regarding the water-supply fees and water-rates and the echoes of whose commotions regarding cattle-shed and dairy bye-laws, new octroi taxation and various other municipal taxes have not yet died out. The Committee has increased its revenue very substantially and ought now to cry halt."

Protest against the proposal to levy a house-tax at Rohri (Sind).
Sind Patrika (48), 21st July.

62. "What a startling news that the intolerable and obnoxious house-tax is to be imposed upon the small town of Rohri in the teeth of strong popular opposition! The proposal has actually received sanction of the Municipal Board. What does that show? That the supposed representatives of the people are not the protectors of popular interests necessarily and that they often feel responsible to those who nominate them, the general public having no hand in their appointment at present. We wonder why the authorities should feel so anxious about this, which causes unnecessary irritation and heartburning, while the object could be gained by many other less objectionable means."

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 10th August 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

H 164—7 CON

CONFIDENTIAL. [No. 32 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 11th August 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British Rule:

- An indictment of the Indian bureaucracy 5
- Comments on Sir James Meston's speech before the United Provinces Legislative Council 13
- Comments on the demise of the Indiaman 20
- Comments on the order prohibiting Law Class students from attending Home Rule meetings 19
- Comments on the Pioneer's proposal for a political conference in India to suggest reforms 8
- Comments on the prohibition of the Calcutta meeting to protest against the Madras internments 17
- Exhortation to Indians to resort to passive resistance 1
- Parsis and Home Rule 14
- Passive resistance and Indian politics . . . . 2 & 3
- The affairs of the Borah Community . . . . 22—24
- The political situation in India . . . . 6 & 7
- The joint conference in Bombay of the National Congress and the Moslem League . . . . 9—12
- The Indian Food Products Exhibition 25
- The Madras Government and Mrs. Besant 16
- The Madras Government's orders against Messrs. Marathe and Karandikar 18
- The question of a separate electorate for Muhammadans 21
- What is passive resistance 4
- Why Muhammadans should not join the Home Rule movement? Alleged shortcomings of the Muhammadan leaders especially those in the Bombay Presidency 15

Co-operative Credit Societies: Comments on the proposed amendment of the — Rules 42

His Excellency the Governor of Bombay: Comments on His Excellency the Governor's speech at Fergusson College, Poona, regarding students and politics . . . . 26—30

Police:

- Bombay — should have arms while on their rounds at night . . . 41
- Comments on alleged cases of — zulum at Hubli and Vengurla . . 40

H 186—a CON

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

Sind:

Comments on the rules issued by the Police Superintendent, Hyderabad (—), regulating processions 44

Necessity of appointing an extra Judge for the Judicial Commissioner's Court (—) 43

War:

Comments on the formation of the Provincial Recruiting Board . . 34 & 35

Comments on the Intercession Day Service Sermon by the Metropolitan of India 31

Comments on the Mesopotamia Commission's Report 36

How wounded Indian soldiers are treated in South Africa 37

Reflections on the third anniversary of the — . . . . 32 & 33

The conquered German Colonies and their future form of government. 38

Turkish prisoners interned in Burma should be exchanged for British prisoners taken at Kut 39

LEGISLATION—

The Honourable Mr. Patel's Municipal Education Bill 45

EDUCATION—

Suggestion for lessening the hardships of students appearing for the Vernacular Final Examination at Ratnagiri at the close of the rainy reason 46

RAILWAYS—

Duty of the public in connection with the G. I. P. Railway strike . . 47—49

MUNICIPALITIES—

Bombay: The dangers of storing celluloid films, etc., in residential localities 51

Hyderabad: Question of house-tax at — (Sind) 54

Larkana: The people of — are determined not to have the house-tax . 53

Matheran: Alleged arbitrary doings of the Superintendent of — . . . 52

Rohri: The question of house-tax at — (Sind) . . . . 55 & 56

The Local Self-Government Conference 50

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Exhortation to Indians to resort to passive resistance.

Young India (14), 8th Aug.

1. "During the week that has passed, so far as Bombay is concerned more than one proof has been given of the fact that whether other Provinces are prepared or not, Bombay wholeheartedly approves of the idea of starting passive resistance at once. The manner in which the speeches at China Baug and Cavel Street were applauded by the audience leaves no doubt in our mind that Bombay is prepared to start the movement of passive resistance at once. But what is passive resistance? During the lifetime of a nation moments come when if the progress of the nation is to be achieved, the defiance of authorities has to be resorted to. There are various forms of defiance but the mildest and the only peaceful form is that which is known as passive resistance. We are not to take up arms, we are not to resort to violence; we are simply to disobey those laws which we consider unjust and which if obeyed and continued to work, would not only hurt the interests of our country, but would shake the Empire to its very foundations. We are to disobey laws, the submission to which violates the fundamental principle, which is the justification of the Empire's existence. These laws are the result, no doubt, of the misuse of power to which the bureaucracy resorts, in order to prevent the change which is advocated by the people of the country in the interests not only of the country itself but of the Empire as a whole.......... Under these circumstances it becomes the duty of the people of the country to defy such laws, the obedience to which would place the country in perpetual bondage and render the position of the British Empire permanently insecure....... Disobedience to an unjust law is sure to expose us to the dangers of imprisonment, but for the sake of the principle of liberty we must be prepared to pay such penalties as law ordains for disobedience to unjust laws." [Elsewhere in a contributed article the same paper says:—"The repressive policy of the Government, of which the notorious Defence of India Act is the omnipotent weapon, and the internments and the gagging of the Press and the people a necessary resultant, indirectly aims at pressing out of existence nothing short of the proposed Congress-League Reforms—which, let us repeat, is the minimum of our national demand. We must proclaim to the world that India is in no mood to be trifled with, and no 'stops' will do in place of the reforms demanded of the Govenment.......... The proposed Congress-League deputation must at once proceed to England to interpret our aspirations to the British Electorate; nothing need be trusted to the soul-less machine of the bureaucracy.......... An elaborate scheme of passive resistance should be carefully drawn up, and an organisation formed to see to its being rigidly adhered to. Passive resistance may in its extreme phases involve loss of personal liberty, and the hardships of the prison-house, for in its extreme phases it includes, as Mr. Gokhale once asserted, the withholding of taxes. If our rights are withheld no taxes can be levied. In fact political science declares that all taxes levied without the consent of the people are illegal, as 'taxation without representation is robbery'. All our representatives must resign their seats in the Imperial and Provincial Councils, and a Passive Resisters' Organisation must control all the voting, suffering no one to be elected to the Councils until the final attainment of our object.......... True British statesmanship is sure to be on our side. True greatness does not mean the lust of power.......... There is grace in giving and disgrace in 'rights' being forcibly taken."]

Passive resistance and Indian politics.

Indian Social Reformer (3), 12th Aug.

*2. "It is idle to pretend that there is to-day the same absolute unanimity as there was on the eve of the joint conference in Indian political circles; and, so far as we can judge it is impossible to restore that unanimity unless the idea of 'passive resistance' is promptly dropped. We appeal to our advanced political friends to drop it and we appeal to Government to make it easy for them to do so without loss of self-respect. No one who has read Seeley's observations, needs to be told that an extensive scheme of 'passive resistance', if it should at any time become possible of execution in India, would paralyse the administration and make British rule impossible. On the other hand, even the most implicit believer in passive resistance as a remedy for Indian grievances must admit that only a general spoliation of property, or religious persecution, can persuade the masses at present to throw in their lot with a movement of 'passive resistance'. Without the co-operation of the masses, a movement of passive resistance will not seriously embarrass Government, and consequently the leaders of a passive resistance movement will insensibly be led on to represent the political grievances in the only terms which can impress the mass-mind. .... While we cannot in the least doubt that there is a wide-felt feeling of soreness and wrong which it is the duty of Government to take note of and take prompt measures to efface, we feel, at the same time, that it is not as yet, though it may become if neglected in the not too distant future, of a strength or character needed to sustain a movement of the only effective kind of passive resistance, assuming that it is justified by the disabilities from which we are suffering. There is now an opportunity for the soberer heads among us to assert themselves. It is, perhaps, their last opportunity. And we ought to say quite candidly that they cannot assert themselves, with the greatest goodwill in the world, unless Government give unmistakable proof of their resolve to lead India by speedy and certain steps to the goal of Self-government within the Empire. The opportunity is fast passing away."

Rást Goftár (30), 12th Aug., Eng. cols.

3. "We have no idea what form the proposed passive resistance will take, but the suggestion is already finding acceptance. The Belgaum District Congress Committee has declared in favour of it, so has the Home Rule League of Hyderabad, Sind. Even more remarkable is the fact that Sir S. Subramania Iyer, presiding at a public meeting in Madras, declared that it was in the highest interests of the country that both old and young men and women should join the ranks of the passive resisters. Everywhere our foremost leaders appear to be of the same opinion. It is the unanimity of views that has to be noted. There are no parties, no difference of opinion. If it comes to passive resistance there will be a nation of passive resisters. Has this unanimity of purpose and concert of action no significance to those who believe in repression? An evil can be repressed, but New India has no evil thought nor does it seek to go out of the Empire. How can such legitimate aspirations be put down?"

What is passive resistance.

Shubhodaya (89), 3rd Aug.

4. 'Puzzled' says in the Times of India that Indians use the word 'passive resistance' without knowing its meaning. If Mr. Cupping comes when we are assembled in the Town Hall and asks us to go out, we will never get up. We are ten thousand. Will they handcuff us and take us out one by one? If one President is carried away, another will be elected. If he is removed, a third will take his place. We cannot say what will happen if the Police attempt to beat us. All this is termed passive resistance! We do not know whether 'Puzzled' has noticed the requests made by Lords Pentland and Ronaldshay to help them in their respective measures. If we do not consent to assist these Governors, is it not carrying into effect passive resistance?

An indictment of the Indian bureaucracy.

Young India (14), 8th Aug.

5. Commenting on the Mesopotamia report Young India writes:—"But what about that 'infallible Indian bureaucracy,' which has latterly been too much in the lime-light? 'The war (whose effect is nowhere to disclose new weaknesses so much as to concentrate under a microscope those which existed but were less noticeable in peace-time),' observes an English contemporary, 'has exhibited in a clear light the need for extending further the scope and degree of Governmental responsibility in India.' It has taken three years' chastening influences of war, and a Commission to boot, to rouse English public opinion to the 'ineptitude, incapacity and neglected duty' of the Governmental machinery of India......... Even when forced from above, the bureaucracy would not bestir itself and thrust upon the country an extremely insulting and disappointing piece of military legislation. The attempt to mobilise the country's vast potential forces was perhaps never whole-hearted. What followed? The statute meant one thing and the rules another. Barely two months had elapsed when the Government indulged in a rigmarole on Indian patriotism and public spirit. The rules belied the alluring promise of the Commander-in-Chief. The 'students and politics' circular followed everywhere, and 'Home-rule' volunteers were sneered at, and one army officer of thirty years' standing had the impudence to question the loyalty of such volunteers. And the crowning act of bureaucratic statesmanship was the internment of Mrs. Besant, who had laboured for the success of the volunteer movement."

The political situation in India.

Indu Prakásh (39), 9th Aug.; Chandrodaya (33), 6th Aug.

6. The Home Rule contagion is going to spread throughout Gujarat. Cities like Surat and Ahmedabad have turned Home Rulers and the Home Rule cult is being spread in villages by means of lectures. At Abrama Home Rulers went by special invitation of the villagers. The rapid spread of the Home Rule cult shows the direction in which public opinion is tending. But Government—the Imperial Government—continues to be silent. If the complaints of the public are wrong, that must be openly pointed out to them. The continued silence of Government will only give rise to false conjectures and the police and the provincial Governments will try to follow the lead of Lord Pentland, and this will result in increased discontent. Cannot Government hold a consultation with men like the Honourable Mr. Jinnah, Sir D. Wacha, Malaviya and others, and make an announcement that will satisfy the people? Valuable time is being lost for nothing. [The Chandrodaya writes:—The strong measures adopted by the bureaucrats to nip in the bud our political aspirations have given rise to a dangerous situation in India. Formerly a distinction was made between the Congress and Home Rule movements. Now both are one and there is a danger that the bureaucrats who are attempting to stop the Home Rule agitation will try to stop the Congress agitation also. It is necessary that Lord Chelmsford should show sound statesmanship at the present time as even the Anglo-Indian journals have changed their angle of vision.]

Gujaráti (16), 5th Aug.

7. Why is the Government of India silent in the matter of making an announcement about political reforms? In the estimation of the public the speech made by Lord Pentland on the 24th May last affords an answer to the question. In the opinion of Lord Pentland the reforms that are to be introduced by the Government of India will fall short of the expectations of the people and so he has asked them not to hope for the early grant of Swarájya. The people believe that Mr. Chamberlain has accepted the recommendations of the Government of India and the latter have some hesitation in making them public. The Government of India, without knowing the mind of the people prevailed upon the Secretary of State that their recommendation if adopted, would give satisfaction to the Indian people, and now they do not like to admit that these very recommendations fall very short of public expectations. Such an admission is likely to deprive the Government of India of the confidence of the Imperial Government and subject them to the charge of being incapable of gauging public opinion or of being in touch with it. The Government of India was thus placed on the horns of a dilemma. It, however, thought it proper to suppress public opinion and, as it is rumoured, issued a private circular to the Provincial Governments in March last to make their own pronouncements on the subject. Lord Pentland and Sir Michael O'Dwyer were taken in by the circular with the result that they suffered in public estimation. Lord Willingdon showed his wisdom by observing silence. The issue of the circular synchronises with the suggestion made by the Maharaja of Bikánir to make an early pronouncement on the subject of reforms. It seems from the speeches made by the Maharaja that the reforms have been formulated and merely await announcement. These reforms would have carried some weight if they had been announced last year, but now they have lost their importance and the Government of India will find it considerably difficult to convince the Imperial Government that they are favourably received in India when they come to be announced. The popular belief is strengthened by the placing of the demands of the nineteen Honourable members of the Viceregal Legislative Council and those of the joint Committee of the Congress and the Moslem League in the category of 'catastrophic changes' by Lord Chelmsford.

Comments on the Pioneer's proposal for a political conference in India to suggest reforms.
Dnyán Prakásh (36), 10th Aug.

8. The authorities in India seem to be much agitated since the demand for Swarájya has gained in intensity. But as they cannot speak for themselves, the Anglo-Indian journals speak for them. The Pioneer has suggested that a conference should be called to discuss the question of Indian reforms. The Irish Convention perhaps is responsible for this idea. There is, however, no difference of opinion amongst Indian leaders as amongst Irish leaders. The Government of India does not seem to feel any necessity for such a conference. Though our leaders asked for a publication of the Government proposals for Indian reforms Government did not comply with their request. The decision of the question of Indian reforms rests ultimately with the British Government. The opinion of the Government of India has been secretly communicated to them and it is believed to be very reactionary. The proposed conference at this stage will be of no use and will only complicate matters. We should rely solely on the demands made by the Indian National Congress and the Moslem League.

The joint conference in Bombay of the National Congress and the Moslem League.
Gujaráti (16), 5th Aug.; Praja Bandhu (27), 5th Aug.

9. Commenting upon the proceedings of the conference of the All India Congress Committee and the Council of the Moslem League that was recently held in Bombay the Gujaráti writes:—The Joint Conference has done well in passing a resolution for organising public meetings in all the cities and towns of the country simultaneously with the holding of the ensuing Congress at Calcutta and reading to them the Presidential address in the vernaculars of the province and passing therein resolutions of swarájya passed at the last meeting of the Congress. This will popularise the Congress and the Moslem League and make their aims and objects known to the general public. We hope the officials will not come in the way of this resolution being carried out in practice. They should bear in mind that the British principles of justice, liberty and democracy are now being put to the test in India. These principles are the foundations of the unity, peace, strength and supremacy of the British Empire and we hope the officials in India will not prohibit the meetings referred to and thus prove to the world that the high principles for which Britain and India are at present fighting against the milatarism of Germany are a mere sham. [The Praja Bandhu writes:—The popular leaders have always been advising Government to remove the causes of discontent by rational means, but the the officials have so far taken recourse to measures of repression which have tended to aggravate the situation. Now is the time for Government to take the gravity of the situation into consideration and to change their policy accordingly.]

Hásya Vinod (101), 6th Aug.

10. The Hásya Vinod does not approve of the demand of the conference of the All-India Congress Committee and the Moslem League that His Majesty the King-Emperor should give an assurance of ultimately conferring swarájya on India. This assurance, the paper remarks, is superfluous since the ideal of swarájya has met with the approval of both the Governors of Madras and Bombay, who are His Majesty's representatives in India. It further declares that the demand for the release of Mr. Besant and her associates is beyond the realm of practical politics.

Muslim Herald (145), 3rd Aug.

11. The Muslim Herald refers to the joint conference of the Congress and the League held recently in Bombay and ridicules the desire for Home Rule which is fast becoming the end all and be all of every Tom, Dick and Harry. It refers to the differences which exist among different sections of the Indians and likens them to downright enmity. It asserts that the stronger party which has brains is continually maltreating and robbing the weaker in this country, and quotes the example of the Hindus who moved heaven and earth to upset the Partition of Bengal, and tried all sorts of means to wreck the United Provinces Municipalities Act—measures which were calculated to do justice to the Musalmans. It considers that the grant of Home Rule to the Hindus who are richer, more numerous and more enlightened than the Muhammadans, would be like entrusting a knife to a baby, and maintains that it is clearly the duty of Government to safeguard the interests of all sects and classes of men. Turning to the Moslem League, the paper avers that it does not represent the Indian Muhammadans, many of whom are ignorant of its very existence, and expresses its belief that a small inquiry by Government would disclose its (unrepresentative) character. Finally it alleges that some acts of Government in the past have created a little dissatisfaction and distrust amongst Moslems which they can easily remove, and assures Government that the Musalmans are second to none in respect of loyalty; at the same time it advises the latter to rely on Government than whom they can have no better friend.

Jagruk (new), 3rd Aug.

12. The resolutions passed by the joint conference of the Committees of the National Congress and the Moslem League were noteworthy. We admire the temerity of these 'educated men' who want to secure the control of the whole of the internal administration of the country in the interests of a handful of their own fellow caste men by asking for a small instalment of reforms. The masses are steeped in ignorance and it would be against their interests if political power passed into the hands of the class of men who desire to perpetuate the load of social injustice under which the people are labouring. If the Indian population wants anything badly today it is the spread of education and salvation from intellectual slavery. Government have recognised the importance of the first need and have commenced work in that direction. Public weal requires, no doubt, that the Provincial Legislative Councils should be more autonomous. But the uncontrolled authority of the educated classes over the internal administration of the country would be disastrous to the masses. As a matter of fact, reforms necessary for the country's progress are being undertaken by Government from time to time. We are all aware how well the educated classes succeeded in the past in spreading discontent in the country. The reason why they have not succeeded so well of late is the vigilance of the authorities born of experience. In our opinion Government, instead of conceding the demands of the 'leaders', should endeavour to spread education among the masses and thus strengthen their feelings of gratitude and reverence for them.

Comments on Sir James Mestons' speech before the United Provinces Legislative Council.

New Times (7), 24th July.

13. "Sir James Meston has not, in the least, exaggerated the situation. We speek words of sober truth when we say that the feelings of the people are racked: for they believe not simply that the Government are preparing a policy of reaction, but that such a policy has been already flung in their face and is responsible for acts such as the Madras internments, the prohibition of public meetings and for the lack of official co-operation with the collective determination of the people to refashion the fabric of our national life. There is suspicion; there is excitement; there is restlessness; and every man of common sense knows that the situation has arisen out of the recent doings of some representatives of the Indian Government.......... There is, in several quarters, to-day, a lack—a deplorable lack—of enthusiasm for the war; but the reason is not far to seek: the heart of the country is in the new struggle between public opinion and official mind. The intentions of the people are perfectly honourable; they mean no embarassment, no slander, no sedition; but the situation is most unfortunate. We cannot contemplate it without anxiety, and we earnestly appeal to the Government to see to it that statesmanship be not allowed to abdicate in favour of a policy of reaction. Such a policy indeed—as Sir James was careful to point out—would be inconsistent with the 'great purposes of British rule.'........ If the Government will get below the surface and take a sympathetic and penetrating view of the situation, they will know why it is that we are not all pulling together as we ought. The Government have not answered yet the needs of the people. The people want that the back-and-forward play with Indian feeling should give way to a change in methods and spirit of the Government; the people want that there be formulated concrete measures of reforms in a spirit of liberal statesmanship; the people want that the scheme of 'reform' which Mr. Chamberlain said was under contemplation should not be matured without their knowledge and discussion, that the minimum of demands formulated in the Note submitted by the leaders of the people be granted as a step towards self-government."

Parsis and Home Rule.
Jam-e-Jamshed, (23), 6th Aug.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 7th and 9th Aug.

14. In the course of the sermon delivered by him on the 4th instant at the Fire Temple of Hormasji Bamanji Wadia before a public meeting of the Parsi Zoroastrian Anjuman which was called by the Trustees of the Parsi Punchayat for offering prayers for the success of the British arms, Dastur Darabji Sanjana, Head Priest of the Parsis, is said to have stated as follows:—The services rendered by the small Parsi community in this horrible war are proportionately far more than those rendered by other communities. This is indeed creditable to us and we earnestly hope that Government will not fail to recognize them in future. But the rise and prosperity of our community have been entirely due to the English education and the impartial British rule. Should India get Home Rule in future, the benefits resulting from this concession will be largely monopolised by the crores of Hindus and Musalmans while it is doubtful if it will prove more beneficial to the Parsis. Under Home Rule the Hindus will push forward their own kith and kin, while the Musalmans will promote the welfare of their community as much as they can. But the influence of the Parsis will proportionately decrease and the progress that they have made on account of their personal merits with the help of the impartial British officers will be blocked. It follows therefore that it is only proper for a small community like the Parsis to desire that the constitution of the British rule (in India) should remain unchanged. [The Praja Mitra and Pársi commenting on this sermon adversely regrets that the Head Priest of the Parsis should have expressed such sentiments which are savouring of selfishness and are calculated to create estrangement between community and community. Such ideas, it remarks, are opposed to the tenets of the Zoroastrian faith which enjoins its followers to pray for the welfare and prosperity of the people of the entire globe. In support of its remarks the paper, in its subsequent issue, refers to that portion of the sermon delivered by the Lord Bishop of Calcutta at Calcutta on the 4th of August 1917 during the intercessory service wherein, among other things, he urged the British people to look at their paramount position in India in the light of their own ideals in the present war and declared, that it would be hypocrisy to come before God with the plea that their cause was the cause of liberty if they turned away from an application of their principles to this country. The paper observes that this portion of the sermon more benefitted a true Zoroastrian Priest that the views expressed by Dastur Darab during his sermon above referred to.]

Why Muhammadans should not join the Home Rule movement. Alleged shortcomings of the Muhammadan leaders, especially those in the Bombay Presidency.
Islámic Mail (4), 5th Aug., Eng. cols.

15. "It is a matter of no small satisfaction to us that at least one Muhammadan member of the local Legislative Council had the courage to speak out against the tyranny of those who are fraternising with the Muhammadans in order to win Home Rule. It was a startling though rueful disclosure which the Honourable Mr. Ebrahim Haroom Jaffer made at the Poona session of the Council the other day. Referring to local self-government, he said:—'The Muhammadans, who form by no means a small part of the population, have little share or voice in local self-government. Take the Poona City Municipality for instance. Not one Muhammadan member has been elected as a councillor since the Municipality came into existence.'......... What is true of Poona may be true of most other Municipalities in this Presidency. Our information is that in Sind, which is virtually a Moslem Province, there are Municipalities where not one Muhammadan member has ever been elected. We wonder what those who professed to treat the Hindus and Muhammadans with perfect equality and uniformity and who claim to aim at Home Rule for the benefit of both will have to say to this. Perhaps the same plea would be put forward as was done by the Calcutta Corporation when the absence of Muhammadan element from that body was taken objection to by Government, namely, that the Muhammadans were not fit for it. But we would in that case reply, if the Muhammadans are not fit for local self-government they cannot by any means be fit for a higher sphere of political life—we mean Home Rule—and rather than be excluded afterwards, is it not advisable for them to keep aloof from all agitation to that end? They have seen how the Hindus have resented any attempt on the part of our well-wishers—the much abused bureaucracy—to maintain the balance of power equally between the various communities. They have seen how 'the friends of Mussalmans'—Sir Chintamani (sic) and others—have fought Government tooth and nail on the ground that the Government restored to the Muhammadans their share of local self-government in Bengal and United Provinces which had been usurped by the Hindus. It does not require any great stretch of imagination to know that Home Rule means Hindu Rule and no wonder that the Muhammadans are slow to identify themselves with the movement. It is unfortunate that the young men who represent the community and lead it are so completely in the hands of the tactful Home Rulers that there is no one to voice the grievances of the Muhammadans or to open their eyes to the baneful game that is being played behind their back. It pays them in the form of increased practice or cheap notoriety to play second fiddle to the Home Rulers and they conceal all the gaping wounds in the heart of the community. It is very rare that a public spirited man like Mr. Ebrahim is stirred up by the sight of the grievous wrongs subtly inflicted by the 'fraternising brother' and cries out. There was a time when it was regarded as a display of courage and bravery to criticise the officials and their policy. To-day those people require a great deal of courage to speak out against the tyranny of Home Rulers. As a Punjáb leader once said, the quickest way to earn a name and fame now-a-days is to abuse the officials. .... It must be a complete surrender, for the 'unsettler' of the settled fact would not tolerate any middle course (we would not offend their susceptibilities by using the offensive term moderate). If you join them you must join them heart and soul.......... If the officials give you a University you must refuse. If they appoint you to an Executive Councillorship you must decline it (as the Muhammadan Members of the Bengal Council were advised to resign their seats while the Hindu members retained theirs). If Government give you separate electorates refuse them, if they give you certain seats in the Municipalities decline them, and you become true heroes, real leaders of United India. You will be given ovations at public gatherings (the Muhammadan Members of the Congress such as Jinnah, Wazir Hasan, Mazharul Haq and Raja of Mahmudabad, however, remained unnoticed at the last Congress meeting when the pandal was ringing with the Jai Jaikars of Tilak Maharaj). Your name will be proclaimed from the house tops and published in every Congress paper and if you are following the legal profession you will get an enhancement in your practice. If you are prosecuted you will be called a martyr; an uproar will be raised in the Press and a fund started to assist your case (although no such thing has fallen to the lot of those Mussalmans who fell victims to the temptations held out by their Congress mentors). Woe betide you if you ever side with the officials in any single matter. .... Look to the activities of the Hindu representatives and you cannot help feeling ashamed at the lethargy and inanity of your own leaders. They are indeed lacking in education and culture, but in the first place why send up such duffers to fight the battles of the communities, and then can they not, as Sir James Meston said, get their thoughts translated into writing by those capable of doing so. We know it is a universal complaint and one that ought to put the Muhammadans to shame; but nowhere it is so bad as in Bombay where the Muhammadans are at the mercy of the Home Rulers. We often hear complaints that Government are influenced by Hindus and Parsis and give their jobs to them in preference to Muhammadans and we wonder how it could be otherwise. Government officials who come in contact with the coxcombs who have arrogated to themselves the title of Moslem leaders, naturally judge the community by the standard of its so-called leaders. If there were a Moslem public opinion in Bombay, if the Moslem leaders had any weight and strength in their own community, if our respresentatives were such as to inspire respect and confidence in the officials, we would not have to complain of there being no Moslem Collector, no Moslem Executive Councillor, no Moslem in the upper ranks of the judiciary, and so forth."

The Madras Government and Mrs. Besant.
Kesari (106), 7th Aug.; Subodha Patrika (42), 5th Aug., Eng. cols.

16. There is no ebb in the highhanded whims of the Madras Government; there is still a flow. The Madras officials now look upon the Home Rule flag hoisted by Mrs. Besant for her satisfaction as an eyesore and it is said that they have ordered her to remove it. The official will not feel any hesitation in declaring that the 'order' has been issued as there is likely to be a disturbance of the public peace, etc. The Madras Government is angry with Mrs. Besant for having sent a message of condolence to Dadabhai's daughter. The local officials are very much put out with Mrs. Besant because she insisted on the publication of her letter to Lord Pentland regarding the question of her books on Theosophy. Her telegram to Mr. Chamberlain on the subject has been returned to her on a flimsy pretext evading the point at issue. Sir Reginald Craddock who asserted openly in Council that the detenues are given every opportunity to defend themselves before being interned should examine this case and judge for himself. [The Subodh Patrika writes:—"In interning Mrs. Besant and her associates Government does not aim at getting rid of individuals considered to be dangerous to public safety merely. It has evidently an ulterior motive in view, and it is to strike a blow at the legitimate aspirations of the people. The people's answer to the policy of repression is the manifesto issued by the joint conference last week. We sincerely hope that Government will not be so foolish as to treat it with contempt."]

Comments on the prohibition of the Calcutta meeting to protest against the Madras internments.
Sánj Vartamán (31), 7th Aug.

17. The Sánj Vartamán disapproves of the order issued by the Government of Bengal prohibiting the Calcutta meeting of protest against the Madras internments and adds:—When Lord Ronaldshay was appointed as the Governor of Bengal, we expressed the fear that his administration would not prove popular. Unfortunately our fears have commenced to prove true. The order issued by the Government of Bengal is unconstitutional and unnecessary. The Government of India would do well to take the highly wise step of intervening at an early date and rectifying the mistake of the Bengal Government.

The Madras Government's orders against Messrs. Marathe and Karandikar.
Indu Prakásh (39), 7th Aug.; Karnátak Vritt (83), 7th Aug.

18. The Madras Government, it seems, does not want Marathas. The first warrant under the Defence of India Act was served on 'Marathe'. Now the turn of Mr. Karandikar has come. So far as we know, Mr. Karandikar did not write much and he was not a speaker. We do not know what Mr. Marathe has done. Why are they externed? What good do the Madras Government hope to obtain by these orders? Mr. Karandikar has been replaced by Mr. Deobhankar. This repression, though legal, puts more courage into men who are determined. Action will produce reaction. Might is right, but it should be guided by wisdom. It is the misfortune of our country that some officials do not seem to take note of the abovementioned principle. [The Karnátak Vritt says that the application of the Defence of India Act to such an innocent man as Mr. Karandikar is like using a hammer to kill a fly.]

Comments on the order prohibiting Law Class students from attending Home Rule meetings.
Kesari (106), 7th Aug.

19. Commenting upon the order directing students of the Bombay Law Class not to attend Home Rule meetings, the Kesari says that it is ridiculous to treat graduates attending the Law Class on the same footing as primary school students and to apply to them the same orders. It points out that they have a right to vote in Municipal and Senate elections in Bombay and that the Muhammadan graduates have in addition the right to vote in the Council elections. It is, therefore, it remarks, sheer blindness to prevent them from attending Home Rule meetings and from becoming members of Home Rule Leagues. It says that while the question of passive resistance is being discussed by Indian students at Oxford, their brethren in India are being prevented from attending even ordinary lectures on politics.

Comments on the demise of the Indiaman.
Young India (14), 8th Aug.

20. Commenting as the cessation of the Indiaman newspaper, Young India writes :—" It was a subsidized organ of Anglo-India, both in India and in London, and was maintained, as one could see from its contents week after week, solely for vilifying Indians, their work, their aspirations and blacken their character and at the same time applaud the Anglo-Indian bureaucracy and Anglo-Indian capitalist exploiters both living and dead, to delude the ignorant British public in regard to the state of affairs in India.......... We are sceptical, however, as to the alleged reason for its much deserved end. Coming closely on the heels of Mr. Chamberlain's resignation of the Secretaryship of State for India, we begin to wonder if it is not proximately due to it. We have for some time entertained the strong belief that the journal was directly and indirectly assisted by the India Office, either with or without the connivance of Mr. Chamberlain himself. The India Office must have felt, and the directors must have realised, the impossibility of getting any assistance from Mr. Montagu's régime for the nefarious propaganda on which the journal had embarked."

The question of a separate electorate for Muhammadans.
Islámic Mail (143), 30th July, Urdu edition.

21. Commenting on the question of a separate electorate for Muhammadans the Islámic Mail writes :—Referring to local self-government the Honourable Mr. Ebrahim Haroon Jaffar regretted to say that since the Poona Municipality has come into being not a single Muhammadan had been elected as a Councillor. There are scores of other Municipalities in which the same has been the case. If this sad incident causes no surprise to such Muhammadans as have made up their minds to join the Hindus at any cost, all the same it is sure to rouse feelings of profound sorrow in the hearts of those who take a genuine interest in the welfare of their community and watch with concern the affairs of their co-religionists. On the one hand, the Muhammadans are being neglected by Government while on the other their rights are being trampled upon unmercifully by those very Hindu brethren of theirs to whom they have been looking for help. Those leaders of our community who have been inciting us to make common cause with the Hindus should consider the question more seriously and see if they can point out a single good turn that has been hitherto done to us by the Hindus. On the contrary, whenever a question of our rights is raised, they protest in spite of their professions of friendship. In connection with the Local Boards Bill, when the question of protecting our interests arose, all the Hindu members made a unanimous protest. In spite of the fact that the Honourable Mr. Jinnah, the mouthpiece of the Congress, made a public announcement at the Ahmedabad Conference that the settlement arrived at by the Muhammadan and the Hindu leaders at Lucknow regarding the question of communal representation is not meant for the Legislative Councils alone but for all public bodies, the President of the local Self-government Conference openly declared that communal representation was undesirable. This being the case, how far can we rely on the consoling statements made by our Muslim leaders on behalf of the Hindus who, by their conduct, give the lie direct to their statements, and what value can we attach to the compromises made by the Hindu and the Muslim leaders ?

The affairs of the Borah community.

Akhbár-e-Islám (56), 6th Aug.

22. The Akhbár-e-Islám refers to the Borah meeting held on the 3rd August at the Badri Mahal, Bombay, wherein two Borahs expressed their penitence for the part they had played in the campaign against the Mullaji Saheb and remarks that the belief of the latter that the sons of the late Sir Adamji Pirbhoy were also implicated in those attacks was ill-founded. It supports that statement by observing that no single Borah has hitherto come forward to prove their connection with the attacks that were made against the authority of the Mullaji as the Dai of the Borah community and that their names were also not mentioned along with the four names given in the meeting of being those of the party of "Abu Muslim" who was making such attacks. The paper maintains that the complaint of the sons of Sir Adamji was merely against the irregular administration, by the Mullaji's subordinates, of communal affairs. It hopes that the Mullaji will make up his mind to form a committee of twelve competent Borahs including the sons of Sir Adamji, with himself at its head, and put a stop to the corruption prevailing in the affairs of the community.

Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 12th Aug., Eng. cols.

*23. The Kaiser-i-Hind, in its English columns, has the following by way of warning to the pseudo-reformers among the Borah community:—"Few religious heads in India are loved and revered by their followers with such doating fondness as the venerable Head Mullaji Saheb of the Borah community, and it was a reckless blunder on the part of the so-called reformers to have started their campaign by a venomous attack on the personality of their revered Mullaji Saheb. How baseless their accusations were we have been showing most vigorously week after week in our Gujarati columns. We have no desire to go over the same ground again, nor do we wish to dwell on the great commotion in the community against these pseudo-reformers, which finally culminated in the severance of their connections with his Holiness the Head Mullaji Saheb.......... We, however, congratulate the Borah community, who have so nobly stood by their venerable Mawla and even forced him to weed out men, who have sought to undermine his authority. These men have failed, and their failure is an eloquent testimony to the influence of religion and reverence for order that mark even to-day the luck of that remarkable community. The hot-headedness of some has precipitated the issue of reform. For some years to come at least it has been definitely shelved. But if in future a genuine reformer arises among them, let him always be conscious of the perils of a leaderless and disorganised community like the Parsees. It has been disputes of petty importance that divides to-day the Parsee community into such sharp factions. We wish that lesson would not be lost upon the Borah community."

Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 5th Aug.

24. The Kaiser-i-Hind publishes a letter from a Surat correspondent describing the proceedings of a Borah meeting that took place in that city on the 2nd August 1917 under the presidentship of Janab Bhaisaheb Dawoodbhai Saheb to take steps against those Borahs who were alleged to be making unpardonable attacks upon the authority of the Mullaji Saheb. Shaikh Isabhai Kaji commenced the proceedings of the meeting with a speech wherein he represented that Sirdar Bhaisaheb Dawoodbhai was the religious leader and lord of the Momins who had assembled there and declared that Sirdar Saiyedna Taher Saifuddin Saheb (the Mullaji Saheb) was their spiritual guide and deliverer on the Day of Judgment. Mr. Taiyabhai Muskate declared that they had all assembled there to give expression to the grief caused to them as a result of the attempts that were made by some indiscreet persons in the city to disintegrate the Borah communion. He then asked the meeting to submit the names of those who were inimically inclined to the communion. Mr. Yusufally Kinkhabvala then proposed that such persons should be cut off from the communion so that other members of the community may not catch their contagion. The correspondent then represents that two Borahs then appeared before the meeting, begged the Mullaji Saheb's pardon and signed a written declaration that they acknowledged him as the rightful Dái of the community.

25. Commenting on the Indian Food Products Exhibition scheme the Gujarâti writes:—"The object is evidently an excellent one. But we think the Indian community ought to have been given more representatives on the General Committee. It consists of eight members of whom there are only three Indians. We hope the Indian communities will be adequately represented on the Sub-Committees that are going to be formed. The public are willing to co-operate and the movement ought not to be made an officialised and one-sided affair."

The Indian Food Products Exhibition.
Gujarâti (16), 12th Aug., Eng. cols.

26. "His Excellency claims that the circular is 'in the best interests of the young men'. May be! Only the young men have proved by their 'ignoring of the orders' that they totally differ from His Excellency. And so have the elders—parents and guardians—of these young men given clear proof of their adverse view of the 'beneficent' circular. Ahmedabad 'elders' have not considered the protests in the newspapers sufficient. They recently held a public meeting and adopted a formal resolution condemning the circular. Will His Excellency say that they are all fools or knaves? 'Let me perfectly frankly tell you that the reason that special reference was made to meetings on Home Rule was because some of the speeches made on the subject have been of a decidedly intemperate character and it was considered, and I think rightly considered, most undesirable that you, young men, should get your heads filled with that sort of oratory.' To this 'oratorical' pleading of His Excellency the 'perfectly frank' reply is that the more than intemperate character of the Executive's latter-day proceedings and policy aimed obviously at the suppression of the early-emancipation-yearnings wholly justifies whatever little 'intemperateness' (and there has not been much of it we know) that has characterised some of the Home Rule speeches. As to whether 'that sort of oratory' should or should not get into the heads of the young men of the country, it is the people's province to decide, and not the province of a government which does not represent the people. That is our firm opinion and it is, we believe, the opinion of all who can take a sane view of things. The circular makes a special reference not only to 'meetings on Home Rule' but also to 'meetings organised by Home Rule Leagues'. What is His Excellency's defence of this 'special reference'? Why did he shirk this point in his address? Why have non-political meetings organised by Home Rule Leagues been banned?......... And how will he justify the application of the students' circular to grown-up men who are actually allowed to vote in municipal and university and even Council elections? Reading Law in a Law School is considered sufficient to bring the reader under the rule of the students' circular, notwithstanding the fact that he is a full-fledged 'citizen' in every other way, having a few sons and daughters at school and supporting a pretty large family by his earnings. A Government that can treat 'citizens' in this shabby manner, cannot rightly complain if indiscriminate repression draws even 'an intemperate' comment from the victims of the repression."

Comments on His Excellency the Governor's speech at Fergusson College, Poona, regarding students and politics.
Mahratta (5), 12th Aug.

27. "We do not want students to take active part in politics, but we do think that it is a serious deprivation to them to be prevented from listening to addresses, except within the four walls of their colleges, by Indian gentlemen who have made a mark in the public life of the country. His Excellency need not be reminded that such cloistered virtues as are fostered by prohibitions of this kind, cannot very well stand the strain of the world which the students must some day enter. The point of view of all such restrictive measures is absolutely identical with that of the upholders of the purdah system for women which, we are sure, His Excellency will not defend. The fact is that our rulers are becoming orientalised in the same measure as the Indians are becoming infected with the ideas of the freedom-loving West."

Indian Social Reformer (3), 12th Aug.

Message (6), 9th Aug.

28. "We do not know whether the students of the Fergusson College will be called to account for attending on Monday the 6th instant a political meeting, a meeting, moreover, where the question of self-government was warmly spoken on......... We would like to suggest that the students of the Fergusson College who disobeyed the Government order should be promptly and exemplarily punished in order to prevent a recurrence of the offence. The offence is all the more serious and heinous, because it was committed not at a place distant from the College, but in the very presence of the Principal and the Professors, nay, under the nose of His Excellency Lord Willingdon......... Apart from this aspect, the speech which His Excellency Lord Willingdon delivered deserves to be noted and pondered over. [Here the paper refers to the two difficulties mentioned by His Excellency which have come in the way of a satisfactory response to the formation of the University Corps and remarks:—] We would like to suggest to His Excellency that these two difficulties are not as serious as the one which is based on the general attitude of the Government. Surely, there is no appeal to a people's patriotism or self-respect in the spectacle of unconstitutional use of laws against popular leaders, or in the individious distinctions made between one section of the people against another in the matter of granting commissions in the Army. You cannot treat a people as helots and expect them to be turned into heroes!......... His Excellency said that in his college days at Cambridge there was an occasion when students were forbidden to attend electioneering meetings at the place. Did His Excellency expect the students of the Fergusson College to be stupid enough not to see the difference between an occasional order and a regular, standing order, prohibiting students to do certain things? His Excellency also stated that he was not opposed to students considering and discussing political questions under the guidance of their Principals or Professors. Those who know what the guidance of heads of institutions controlled by Government would mean in regard to many of the schools and colleges in India would not be much deceived by the plausible concession. The so-called 'pure atmosphere of study' in many of the Government and aided schools and colleges is replete with the miasma of hypocrisy and other filthy moral and intellectual germs attending on an officialdom which finds its interests more in servility to official intentions, expressed or inferred, than in devotion to the real interests of the students under them.......... His Excellency was in sympathy with the ideal of Home Rule and wished the students to act reasonably and not be carried away by catch-phases or by their emotion. The advice is either platitudinous or mischievous—it is the former, if there be no false and evil implications in it, and it is the latter, if such implications do exist. If His Excellency meant to suggest that leaders in India were unreasonable or were being carried away by their emotion in formulating the Congress and the Muslim League Schemes we have to enter our emphatic protest against the suggestion which is as unfounded in fact as it is undignified, if not cowardly, to make before an audience which has not the right to reply to it. If insinuations are to be made, courage and ordinary fairness would dictate that more suitable occasions, than the one chosen, should be availed of. In case, however, His Excellency meant to insinuate nothing, he would have been better advised to drop the subject altogether and not to inflict well-worn commonplaces on the devoted heads of the students."

Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 11th Aug.

29. Referring to the speech recently delivered by His Excellency Lord Willingdon at Fergusson College, Poona, the Praja Mitra and Pársi remarks with reference to the circular regarding students and politics that in holding the belief that circulars of a similar tenor issued in the time of one of his predecessors were ignored only in his regime, His Excellency has been ill-informed. It observes that those circulars had met with such a strong protest at the time they were issued that they had been since then allowed to remain as dead letter. Will not His Excellency, inquires the paper, be kind enough to pay attention to the opinions expressed by the principals and professors of colleges in the Madras Presidency that it was impracticable for them to enforce a similar circular, issued by the Madras Government? While admitting that the primary duty of students is to devote their attention to studies, the paper regrets that it cannot be at one with His Excellency in holding that students should not pay any attention to public questions before finishing their college study. It believes that such a course would leave them ignorant of all practical matters. It maintains that the whole movement for preventing students from taking part in public matters had its origin in the desire of some officials who are against the development of feelings of patriotism among Indian students on the consideration that the Indians were a subject nation and who desire that these students should only learn lessons teaching them obedience to the ruling class. The paper remarks that the circular on which His Excellency laid stress during his above-mentioned speech has originated in such narrow ideas and wishes that Lord Willingdon would cease to attach any importance to it.

Dnyán Prakásh (36), 8th Aug.

30. To say that His Excellency Lord Willingdon sympathises with our aspirations is to repeat what is known to all. This sympathy was clearly noticeable in his speech at the Fergusson College. The two causes to which His Excellency attributed the inadequate response given by University men to the call to join the Indian Defence Force may have deterred some students from enlisting, but the third and the principal cause which contributed to this result is the racial distinction made in the matter of pay, promotions, etc., and the illiberal attitude of some of the officials towards Indian aspirations. As to His Excellency's defence of the circular about students attending political meetings that Cambridge students used to be placed under similar restrictions on the occasion of general elections, we beg to point out that the bar on English students was not a permanent one, as contemplated by the Government circular, but only temporary. His Excellency's reference at the conclusion of his speech to the ideal of Self-government within the Empire was indeed most gratifying.

Comments on the Intercession Day Service Sermon by the Metropolitan of India.

Mahrátta (5), 12th Aug.

31. "The Intercession Day Service in a local church which was attended by Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Willingdon included an address by the Chaplain which contained observations which have now become rather common......... The remarks of the Chaplain with respect to the acquisition and retention of paramountcy in India by the British are not wholly correct. 'Diplomacy' of all sorts, including the most questionable type of it, played an important part in securing 'paramountcy' for the British. And as to the continuance of this supremacy, not 'India's needs,' but England's hunger has been the main motive underlying it. As to the observations regarding England's duty in India, we hope that Englishmen will hate to be 'hypocrites' and back up their protests about 'their cause being the cause of liberty' by giving India Home Rule at an early date, as Home Rule India will be the only proper 'training ground' for Indians to become fully qualified for Full Self-Government, for as Macaulay has said, 'if men are to wait for Liberty till they have become good and wise in slavery, they may indeed wait for ever.'"

Reflections on the third anniversary of the war.

Hindusthán (20), 4th Aug.; Sánj Vartamán (31), 6th Aug.

32. In its reflections on the third anniversary of the war the Hindusthán writes:—Prophecies of the statisticians about the exhaustion of the resources of Germany within a very short time have proved untrue and Germany has fought for three years with unabated vigour. There is no likelihood of England being starved by German submarines, but there are also no signs of the enemy being complled to sue for peace by the measures adopted by England to blockade Germany. There may be scarcity of food-stuffs in certain parts of Germany, but the German army does not seem to have been affected by it. Just as the Gurkhas have not yet entered Berlin, the wild hopes entertained by the Crown Prince of reaching Paris and taking Calais have not been realised and the Germans had to admit discomfiture at Verdun. The Allies made preparations on a large scale to bring the war to an end by the end of this year, but unfortunately the Russian situation became grave about the time the spring offensive was launched. Russia has not concluded a separate peace, but since its political situation is unsettled it will take some time to enable it to be in a state of preparedness for war. Russia joined the war with the intention of getting possession of Constantinople. But it has now made a declaration that it does not want to annex enemy territory and so the Allies will again meet in a conference to settle their aims. The weakness of Russia will to some extent be compensated by the the entry of America into the war on the side of the Allies. We have no doubt that the Allies will eventually be successful, but in order to secure victory all the subjects of the Allies must make greater sacrifices than they have made heretofore. The future of India rests on the victory of the British and so the people of this country should put forth their best efforts for the success of the Allies. India has borne its share of burden for the continuance of the war, but Government should remove the causes of discontent and take the people into their confidence with a view to enabling them to make greater sacrifices in a willing manner. [The Sánj Vartamán is afraid that Germany may be able to knock out Russia before America is in a position to help the Allies. It believes the Allies will be able to bring the war to a successful termination by the end of 1918.]

Kesari (106), 7th Aug.; Dnyán Prakásh (36), 4th Aug.; Indu Prakásh (39), 4th Aug.; Sandesh (118), 6th Aug.

33. The Kesari publishes a review of the three years of war and says:—Generally speaking, both the parties appear to be equally determined at the beginning of the fourth year and they do not appear to entertain any idea of concluding peace till one party is smashed up on the battlefield. Germany is finding it daily difficult to maintain the Western Front intact, but her object to maim Russia permanently on the Eastern Front appears likely to be successful. Though Germany appears to be in the ascendant from a military point of view still if we take political circumstances into consideration we shall find that both the combatants are at present equally matched and that preparations are being made that would go to make the Allies stronger than Germany in the next two years. The democratic movement has caused a great sensation in Germany and Austria and if there is a big defeat the movement will overwhelm the rulers there. They are attempting to conclude peace through the Russian Socialists, before any such defeat occurs. The French and English people are likely to favour peace just as the Germans do. It is clear that Germany cannot be completely crushed till America sends in all the help she can afford, for the next year or two. It is not surprising that the masses in England and France appear to be wearied of war and that the Labour Party and the Socialist Party have begun to talk of the peace terms. The democratic movement has influenced the whole world. It contends that big Empires should not be in the hands of a handful of people and that every portion of it should be granted responsible home rule so that it may develop itself. Indian Home Rule is being discussed by the socialists of all the belligerent countries, while talking of peace. By the convulsion of the great war the Russian revolution has taken place and the masses of England, France, Germany and Russia are eager to taste the nectar of Home Rule enshrined in the democratic vessel. It is clear that they will not consent to the prolongation of the war for two years more. [The Dnyán Prakásh says that the war having been waged for the independence of small states, countries under the suzerainty of the nation that went to war in defence of the above principle are very eager to secure freedom. It further thinks that the Irish question having been solved, Mr. Montagu, the Secretary of State, should make a declaration of his policy with regard to India and that the third anniversary of the war can be celebrated in a fitting manner by the grant of Swarájya to this country. The Indu Prakásh says that the great democracy of the New World has answered the call of oppressed freedom in the old and that the inward meaning of the war is that it is the greatest struggle for human liberty in which the free democracies of the world are ranged in deadly conflict against the last and greatest of autocracies. The Sandesh points out that the Allies have been successful all along and predicts an early victory for them. It says that it is doubly glad because Indian blood has been spilt to gain the victory, and argues that India wants only Colonial Home Rule and internal autonomy. It hails Home Rule as the ideal of Indians and wants it to be brought to India on the wings of British victory.]

Comments on the formation of the Provincial Recruiting Board.

Bombay Samáchár (59), 6th and 11th Aug.; Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 5th Aug.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 10th Aug.

34. Referring to the Press communiqué recently issued by the Bombay Government with a view to a more effective organisation of the resources and man-power of India for the purposes of the war, the Bombay Samáchár confidently hopes that the people, their leaders and heads of communities will whole-heartedly respond to the appeal made through the communiqué. It believes that the appeal affords to the public a golden opportunity of joining the military service and hopes that they will not fail to avail themselves of it. [In the subsequent issue the paper refers to the speech made by His Excellency the Governor at Poona on the 7th instant at the first meeting of the Provincial Recruiting Board, and remarks that the provision that has been made for wound pensions and for the maintenance of the disabled and for the families bereft of their supporters should prove attractive to the backward and depressed classes. It believes that the personnel of the Board will be able to impress upon the martial classes the liberal nature of the abovesaid provision made by Government. Alluding to the communiqué the Kaiser-i-Hind remarks that the ways of Government are sometimes inexplicable. It describes how during the time of Mr. Simcox as Collector, a representation was made by a gentleman, seeking permission for a number of Parsi youths with strong physique to be admitted as volunteers, and how cold water was thrown upon that offer. Should the people, inquires the paper, go from street to street and vociferously cry out that they are prepared to go where they are bid and die for their Government? It also believes that some of the persons composing the Bombay Provincial Recruiting Board are such as would not be able to achieve anything. The paper remarks that for such a purpose as that of recruiting men, instead of Government selecting their hangers-on they should select those persons who are popular with their own communities and who wield influence among them. The Praja Mitra and Pársi suggests that His Excellency would do well to personally address a meeting composed of those classes from which labourers for military service are to be drawn. Such an appeal, the paper strongly believes, directly made to those classes by the ruler of the province, will produce the most desired effect.]

Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 12th Aug., Eng. cols.

*35. "The Press Communiqué recently issued by the Government of Bombay must meet with warm welcome. We are sorry it is so late in the day as on the eve of the entry of the fourth year of the war that the step to institute an influential Recruiting Board such as has been now formed is taken. It is not necessary to narrate how earlier efforts in this direction would have strengthened the fighting units of the country. Late as it is, we trust it will not be any the less successful.......... We hope the Board will meet with unqualified success in their efforts and that all classes will respond to the call of duty. This is not the time to flinch or falter. Let every man understand his supreme duty to the Empire to-day and let him be up to perform that duty."

Comments on the Mesopotamia Commission's Report.

Kesari (106), 7th Aug.

36. The Kesari gives extracts from the Mesopotamia Commission's Report describing the sufferings of the combatants and the wounded soldiers in the first campaign and remarks:—The perusal of this description of the sufferings make one's hair stand on end, and one questions how such serious blunders could have been committed by the authorities. As a mater of fact, there is no mystery in this. A man who considers himself omnicient is bound to commit such mistakes. It would be a wonder if blunders were not committed by a man who is not responsible to anybody and whom no one has any opportunity of criticising and whose affairs are not open to discussion. It is natural that mistakes should be committed at every step by men who are accustomed to work according to their sweet will for years. Many such mistakes must have been committed till now, but it was by a chance that the Mesopotamia affairs have come to light. When even Majors and Generals are given threats we need not be surprised if people who complained of the rudeness of Mr. Hood and of War Loan Zoolum are refused hearing. The bureaucracy has always in the end to wind up an affair by getting angry and it has become habituated to this practice. We are not generalising from a case or two. These pranks of the bureaucracy are not of an exceptional nature; they are general and fully known for a long time to many persons. The losing of a chance of getting a Lieutenant-Governorship for siding with Assam coolies, transfers to unhealthy stations for reporting the real terrible state of famine, stopping of judges' promotions for making adverse comments on the police, are not new things. All the deeds of the bureaucracy have, it is true, no chance of coming to light. But it would be the height of folly to suppose that the bureaucracy erred only in Mesopotamia and that the affairs of India are carried on faultlessly. Can we say that there are no other proud officials like Duryodhana or harassed females like Draupadi because there is only one Mahabharata that sets forth these things? We can treat the Mesopotamia affairs as a sample of the doings of the bureaucracy that has come before the world. Commander Wedgewood has already suggested the remedy; will Mr. Montagu fully consider his proposal to make the bureaucracy responsible to the people?

How wounded Indian soldiers are treated in South Africa.
Dnyan Prakásh (36), 8th Aug.

37. The Dnyan Prakásh says that it learns from a South African paper that two maimed Indian soldiers had to stand on the foot-board of a tram-car as they were unable, owing to their infirmity, to walk to the benches set apart for Indians and as the conductor could not let them occupy seats reserved for Europeans on account of the stringent regulations in this respect. The paper remarks that such incidents only accentuate racial hatred. It considers it disgraceful that while Europeans ask Indians to fight shoulder to shouler with them in the present war of liberation, they treat them as inferiors in the matter of rights.

The conquered German Colonies and their future form of government.
Dnyán Prakásh (36), 11th Aug.

38. The Dnyán Prakásh congratulates Great Britain for following a liberal policy towards the conquered German Colonies and for proposing to send a mission to them to inquire what form of government they would have, and remarks:—If the principle laid down by the Prime Minister that no system of administration disliked by anybody should be imposed upon him is to be applied to the backward German Colonies in Africa, it is very distressing to find that loyal India which boasts of an ancient civilisation and which has come into contact with Britain for over a century, should not have the benefit of it. While Indians have not yet been told anything of the reform proposals framed by the Government of India and now under consideration, a mission is being sent to the conquered German Colonies to ask them what kind of government they would like to have! Is it possible, in these circumstances, for anyone to keep quiet as advised during the time of war.

Turkish prisoners interned in Burma should be exchanged for British prisoners taken at Kut.
Sind Observer (12), 20th July.

39. "Several thousand Turkish prisoners are interned in Burma. Naturally the inference is that these should be exchanged for British prisoners taken at the fall of Kut-el-Amara. It is too late to save the men, but there is still time to do something for the officers, even at this eleventh hour. If report speaks truly there must be no further delay in arranging for an exchange, or there may be no survivors of the surrendered garrison. In view of their present plight, poor fellows, the verse on the Christmas card which they sent off from Kut-el-Amara in 1915, immediately before the investment, is pathetically significant."

Comments on alleged cases of police zulum at Hubli and Vengurla.
Gujaráti (16), 12th Aug., Eng. cols.

40. Commenting on the alleged cases of police zulum at Hubli and Vengurla, the Gujaráti writes:—"It is time that Lord Willingdon's government should put a stop to the uncalled-for interference on the part of the local authorities with legitimate movements.......... We hope Lord and Lady Willingdon will interest themselves in the incidents of this Vengurla case and that Lord Willingdon's government will put a stop to the kind of high-handed tyranny that is practised in cases like those in question. We feel sure if His Excellency will give effect to his own views and impulses and assert his own personality, this Presidency will be rid of the causes that are producing needless irritation in certain districts and especially in Sindh."

Bombay Police should have arms while going their rounds at night.

Hásya Vinod (101), 6th Aug.

41. Commenting on the recent murder of a policeman in plain clothes, while on his round at night, by a ruffian in a thickly populated part of Bombay, the Hásya Vinod points out that the reason why the man could murder the policeman was that the latter was unarmed and suggests that steps may be taken by the authorities to arm the police, while on their rounds at night, to avoid similar incidents in future.

Comments on the proposed amendment of the Co-operative Credit Societies Rules.

Subodha Pátrika (42), 5th Aug., Eng. cols.

42. "Government proposes to issue some draft rules under section 43 of Act II of 1912 whereby it is feared that it intends to officialise the co-operative movement of the Presidency which is doing so much useful work among the masses. Rule No. 18 prohibits a Co-operative Society, by itself or by the Committee or any officer, from taking any action involving the Society in the discussion or propagation of controversial opinions of a political or a religious character. The co-operative movement, affecting as it does the very life of the masses, should be a means of keeping them thoroughly informed of all kind of healthy public opinion. So far as we are aware, no Co-operative Society has dabbled either in political or religious propaganda. Why then the introduction of a rule which smells more of a desire to kill all political activity in the bud rather than to safeguard the interest of Co-operative Societies which stand in no need of such a grand-motherly care from Government. If Government is really anxious to train people to stand on their own legs, the best way would be to give them as much liberty as possible in the management of institutions like the Co-operative Societies and not to fetter them with unnecessary rules and regulations."

Necessity of appointing an extra Judge for the Judicial Commissioner's Court, Sind.

Sind Observer (12), 20th July.

43. "In our last issue we mentioned the fact that the Judicial Commissioner in Sind had proposed to transfer a certain amount of criminal work from the Karáchi district for trial before the Sessions Judge of Hyderabad. Presumably the suggestion has been made owing to the congestion of work in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind. If this is so, there is another remedy, and that is the appointment, temporary or permanent, of an Additional Judicial Commissioner. We have reason to believe that it was proposed sometime ago to appoint an extra judge to strengthen the Judicial Commissioner's Court, but what has been done in the matter has not transpired. If the proposal has been held up for want of funds, owing to the war, how comes it that in other places in India such appointments have actually been made, viz., the Madras High Court and the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Nágpur. Surely if other parts of the country can be given extra Judges there is no reason why Sind should be treated differently, unless of course it is intended to keep her in the background, as she has been kept in the past. The position of Karáchi has changed considerably since the war started, and after the cessation of hostilities she will be one of the greatest seaports in the world. Is Government going to face the position after the event or before it? Ordinarily one would expect that preparation would be made in advance to face any contingency that may arise. That the present state of things calls for action is proved by the suggestion made by the Judicial Commissioner, as mentioned above, and it is a question that concerns the public even to a greater extent than it does the members of the local Bar, who, we are glad to see, have already taken prompt action in the matter, the result of which is awaited with interest."

Comments on the rules issued by the Police Superintendent, Hyderabad (Sind), regulating processions.
Sind Advocate (9), 26th July.

44. "Following upon the absurdly extraordinary measures taken at Hyderabad to prevent a Home Rule procession on the Besant internment day, the Police Superintendent has promulgated rules for regulating all processions in future. Of course ordinary religious or social processions like the mohurram or of marriages, funerals, &c., can pass anywhere, but other processions are prohibited from taking certain routes which practically would exclude them from the greater part of the well populated quarters including the bazar. Do the officials at Hyderabad want further to increase the membership of the Home Rule League? That is what happened as a result of their ill-advised coup of the 16th instant. Do they think that the people can't understand this?"

LEGISLATION.

The Honourable Mr. Patel's Municipal Education Bill.
Jagruk (new), 3rd Aug.

45. We think the most important achievement of the Legislative Council meeting held at Poona was that Government conceded the principle of compulsory education by allowing the introduction of the Honourable Mr. Patel's Bill. Government ignored all efforts of the late Mr. Gokhale to make primary education free and compulsory in this country. We ought to be grateful, therefore, to our present liberal rulers for recognising, even if late, their duty in this respect. Although the major portion of taxation is being borne by the cultivators, practically no efforts were made up till now to ameliorate their condition. The upper classes freely exploited the ignorance of the masses to fatten themselves at their expense. It is to the interests of the lower classes that the internal administration of the country should remain in the hands of the British for several years more, but the political agitators have been able to spread discontent among the people and to induce them to accept their swardjya propaganda owing to the illiberal educational policy hitherto followed by Government. This will now be changed by the welcome change that has come over that policy.

EDUCATION.

Suggestion for lessening the hardships of students appearing for the Vernacular Final Examination at Ratnágiri at the close of the rainy season.
Bakul (93), 5th Aug.

46. At the last Legislative Council meeting Government stated, in reply to the Honourable Mr. Desai, that they were inquiring into the alleged hardships to students who appeared for the Vernacular Final Examination at Alibág in September last, owing to the sudden setting in of the rains and the consequent stoppage of sea commuications. The case of Ratnágiri is also analogous. Last year the examination commenced there on the 18th of September whereas this year it is to begin earlier than that, viz., on the 3rd of September. As the steamer service will not probably begin by that date, boys coming from a long distance will be put to much inconvenience. To obviate this we would suggest that the authorities should hold the examinarion in October when the steamer postal service commences. It would be also more convenient if the examination is held at Málvan and Dápoli in addition to Ratnágiri. We would also request that the case of candidates for the Revenue Departmental Examination may be considered along with that of the students for the Vernacular Final Examination.

RAILWAYS.

Duty of the public in connection with the G. I. P. Railway strike.
Message (6), 8th Aug.

47. "In reply to the telegram of the solicitors for the Parel and Matunga Workshop men, the Private Secretary to His Excellency the Governor says that 'Government cannot intervene in Great Indian Peninsula Workshop strike'. We should not think the reply is disappointing. Speaking for ourselves we had expected no better reply nor do we think that Lord Willingdon's Government could have given a better answer. So long as public opinion is indifferent to the grievances of the men, the State alone cannot be expected to rise above it. The Government thinks that the matter in dispute is mainly between the G. I. P. Railway and its workmen, and has remained content to leave the matter at that. Were it not for the fact that the Railway is the dominant body and the workmen are not properly organised like the Trade Unions in England, the public also might have been indifferent to it. It is now the duty of the public to take up the matter and help to properly organise the men on strike and also help them with some means of living and enable them to hold out, unless of course the railway authorities who have been called to, seem to be more conciliatory and reasonable. If the community does not help these men to stand by their resolve, the authorities know that the men will bend down under the weight of want and hunger. If on the other hand the men realise that they have behind them the sympathy and support of the community and if the railway authorities also realise as much, the present strike will have a different tale to tell. In the meanwhile, if the police and the magistracy cannot prevail with the authorities to reconsider their decisions and meet the men at least half-way, they should not be meddling with the men unnecessarily and the public ought strongly to deprecate such one-sided attempts on the part of these."

*Gujaráti (16), 12th Aug., Eng. cols.; *Rást Goftár (30), 12th Aug., Eng. cols.; *Mahrátta (5), 12th Aug.; Sandesh (118), 9th Aug.

48. Commenting on the G. I. P. Railway workmen's strike the Gujaráti writes:—"Even in England where the employers and the emplyees are both well organized bodies, Government find it necessary to intervene on certain occasions and bring about a compromise. British ministers are known to have intervened on more than one occasion in recent years and that too with success. There is, therefore, no reason why the Bombay Government should not endeavour to put an end to a state of things that cannot but result in serious hardships to the strikers and great inconvenience and even loss to a railway concern of which Government and not a private company are the proprietors." [The Rást Goftár remarks:—"It is quite evident that the railway authorities will offer no terms which may be acceptable to the men, so that there is in effect a lockout as well as a strike. If there is no likelihood of the difference being satisfactorily settled, it would be wiser for the advisers of the strikers to advise them to seek fresh employment rather than swell the number of the unemployed for an indefinite period of time The reply that Mr. Framroze Ginwalla, the men's solicitor, has received from the Chairman of the Board in London will not help a compromise, because it is merely a repetition of what the Agent said." The Mahrátta writes:—"It is melancholy note to that Government though expressly requested by the workmen to intercede and arbitrate has refused to do so. There have been many instances, even since the outbreak of war, of the British Government at Home having interceded in similar circumtances. But India is not England!" The Sandesh writes:—It would have been better if it were explained why the procession of the G. I. P. Railway strikers, arranged in order to obtain assistance for them, was given up. The flags of the strikers had nothing to do with Home Rule or Swadeshi and their boxes had no photograph of Tilak or Besant on them. There was no possibility of any breach of the peace. The attitude of the police has been sympathetic and friendly, and this is due to the quiet behaviour of the strikers. In these circumstances we have to say that the prohibition of the procession was unnecessary.]

Sánj Vartamán (31), 8th Aug.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 6th and 8th Aug.; Akhbár-e-Islám (56), 9th Aug.

49. Referring to the fact of about 15,000 workmen of the G. I. P. Railway Loco. Carriage and Waggon workshops having been on strike for nearly a month last, the Sánj Vartamán is of opinion that, regard being had to the present rise in the cost of living, the employers of labour should remove the discontent from the minds of the labouring classes by increasing their salaries or granting them a high prices allowance. It fears that the strike will prove to be one of a long duration if Government will not intervene to bring about a settlement in the matter. The paper regards the reply His Excellency the Governor sent to the workmen concerned, declining to interfere in the matter, as disappointing. It cannot see any wrong in Government interfering in the matter of such strikes in India when Ministers in England do not fail to intervene on similar occasions. [In its issue of the 6th instant the Praja Mitra and Pársi remarks that the appeal made by the workmen of the G. I. P. Railway Company to His Excellency Lord Willingdon in the matter of the present strike affords a proof of the confidence the public have in His Excellency's tact and sympathy for the people. It observes that the willingness expressed by the workmen to abide by the decision of the arbitrators appointed by Government coupled with their hitherto peaceful behaviour draws public sympathy towards them. On the above grounds and in view of the interests of both Government and the public being involved in the smooth working of railways, the paper wishes that His Excellency will acquiesce in the appeal above referred to. In the subsequent issue the paper maintains that His Excellency has been ill-advised in refusing to interfere. It remarks that such non-interference on the part of higher authorities seems to have been based upon the consideration that these workman, having no substantial means to support themselves, will be brought to their knees. It does not consider this to be a far-sighted policy. The Akhbár-e-Islám remarks that even in the present times of stress some employers over-feed themselves and suffer from surfeit while those whom they employ suffer from starvation, and as an example refers to the strike organised by the G. I. P. Railway workmen. Have the higher authorities, inquires the paper, completely fulfilled their duty in the matter of the present strike? It answers that question in the negative. In its opinion His Excellency's plain denial to interfere was undesirable.]

MUNICIPALITIES.

The Local Self-government Conference.
Shetkari, (41), 5th Aug.

50. In course of an apprecative review of the proceedings of the Local Self-government Conference, the Shetkari writes:—Municipalities and Local Boards ought to be completely under the control of the local population, but that is not so in practice. These institutions are wholly controlled by officials and latterly local self-government has become a mere farce. The least opposition to Government is enough for the suspension of a municipality. This is only a travesty of the principle of local self-government. The real test of independence lies in the ability to control public money and the power to raise money and expend it without outside sanction is real Swarájya. True local self-government, therefore, means the possession of this power by the members of a municipality. The reason why people do not take interest in local self-government is want of this power.

The danger of storing celluloid films, etc., in residential localities.
Bombay Samáchár (59), 10th Aug.

51. The Bombay Samáchár expresses surprise that the Bombay Municipality allows cinematograph films and toys and other inflammable articles made of celluloid to be stored in houses used for residential purposes without insisting upon any special precautions being taken against outbreaks of fire. It refers to the resolution that is to be moved in the Bombay Corporation on the subject and expresses a hope that some check will be placed on the storing and exhibiting of cinema films in residential quarters in Bombay.

Alleged arbitrary doings of the Superintendent of Matheran.
Rást Goftár (30), 12th Aug., Eng. cols.

52. Referring to the complaints in the press about the alleged arbitrary doings of the Superintendent of Matheran, the Rást Goftár says:—"Dr. Kharegat, the present Superintendent, is a capable and energetic officer, very much devoted to his work, but rather inclined to be uncompromising. In the absence of authentic information we are unable to vouch for the accuracy of the numerous charges made out against him. If, however, what is alleged about the licensing of medical practitioners be true, then we cannot too strongly condemn the proposal. Of course the Superintendent has no power to do it himself, nor would such a suggestion meet with any support. We can understand—though we ourselves do not approve of it—that a public dispensary of this kind should refuse to dispense prescriptions from any but qualified doctors, but it is preposterous that medical visitors should be required to first get licenses in order to acquire the right of prescribing for patients. No doctor who is a visitor would agree to such a thing. In an out-of-the-way station like Matheran medical aid and relief are not easily available. There are no doctors for aught we know who practise there as permanent residents, except perhaps the Superintendent who is as a rule selected from the I.M.S. Difficulties of acquiring medical relief in ordinary and even urgent cases of sickness cannot but keep away intending visitors, and Matheran is one of the most popular and easily accessible health resorts for Bombay and adjoining towns."

The people of Larkana are determined not to have the house-tax.
Lárkána Gazette (46), 28th July, Eng. cols.

53. Referring to the delay in the grant of Municipal franchise to Lárkána (Sind), the Lárkána Gazette demands that the franchise should be granted from September 1917, and remarks:—"The time is not short and there is sufficient time still. All the preliminaries can easily be arranged if there is only a strong will. But a sparrow whispers into our ears that a strong effort will be made then when the people of Lárkána will agree to the imposition of house-tax. We cannot make up our mind to believe this as the grant of franchise to the town had never been a conditional one and the question of house-tax has very lately cropped up and it had and has nothing to do with the franchise question. But according to the saying of sages 'No smoke without fire', if there is an iota of fact in it, we then feel it our bounden duty to give the views of the people to the authorities over this question. We tell them frankly and candidly that the people are bent upon not agreeing to the imposition of this house-tax and they will even forego the franchise but not accept this odious tax, if the matters come to that pass. It will, therefore, be advisable and honourable that the preliminary arrangements for the franchise be at once begun and the promise honourably fulfilled."

Question of house-tax at Hyderabad (Sind).
Sind Advocate (9), 26th July.

54. "At last the cat is out of the bag. The Committee of Management at Hyderabad, not satisfied with Rs. 80,000 a year with which they have already burdened the rate payers of Hyderabad, want to impose the house-tax as well. The Committee have not even attempted to show what necessity there is for this new and direct taxation and have evidently gone about in reckless high-handed fashion. With so much more money taken out of the pockets of the people, they have been doing decidedly less for the town than the much maligned Municipality did and now they want still more money, and that in a way most odious to the people. Thus the Committee does not seem to understand its business at all and it is very flippant and superficial in its ideas and methods. The people have held a very big meeting of protest and in the Committee itself two out of the three non-official members, i.e., Honourable R. B. Teckchand and Mukhi Harkishindas, have definitely declared themselves against the house-tax and it is only the officials who have little time even to think of the needs and condition of the town that have sprung the disquieting proposals upon the distracted public."

The Question of house-tax at Rohri (Sind).
Sind Journal (10), 26th July.

55. "The Rohri people have long clamoured for the elective franchise being conferred on them and they are now within a measurable distance of achieving their object. But such has been the official anxiety for the good of the town that the proposal for imposing house-tax has not been allowed to wait till the Rohri Municipality is composed in part of the elected representatives of the people who could voice the real opinion of the town. The conditions obtaining in Rohri militate against the suitability of house-tax, and if there is a deficit in the Municipal exchequer, it could be made up by raising the octroi duty on some articles such as cloth. But it would be rank oppression to impose house-tax against the wishes of the people who are expected to know their interests better than the officials. The idea of imposing house-tax in different towns in Sind appears to have originated with the present Commissioner in Sind who urged its acceptance by the people of Sind in the course of his speech on the occasion of laying the foundation stone of the Kotri Municipal Hall. We trust that the Honourable Mr. Lawrence who has a strong predilection for house-tax will give the matter further consideration in the light of the peculiar conditions prevailing in towns like Rohri and Hyderabad 'where it is the custom to own rather than to rent dwelling houses.' The incidence of house-tax being direct and payable in a lump sum is against the sentiments of the people who have since long been accustomed to paying indirect taxes. Even if there be no solid reasons against house-tax from the official standpoint, yet the existence of a sentiment against it should weigh with the authorities.......... If the people are convinced of the unsuitability of house-tax in view of their local conditions, it should not be forced down their throats, and we believe all people are not prepared to receive such disregard for public opinion lying down. The people of Rohri have every reason to protest against the arbitrary saddling of their town with an odious tax, and we trust they would succeed in their efforts."

Sind Advocate (9), 26th July.

56. Referring to the proposed imposition of house-tax at Rohri (Sind), the Sind Advocate writes:—"We wonder more because of the inopportune time selected for the imposition of such a direct tax. Inopportune we say it because the Rohri town is soon to be granted the privilege of elective franchise, and because of the world war which has affected every one. If there was any necessity of a tax to improve the financial resources of the Municipality, the authorities should have devised other means rather than levying this tax."

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 17th July 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 33 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 18th August 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

- Bombay Legislative Council: Comments on Government replies to interpellations in the last session of the — . . . . 28 & 29

- British Rule:

  - Advocacy of passive resistance and boycott as the only means of combating official high-handedness 22
  - Appeal to Government to pardon all young men interned under the Defence of India Act 10
  - Appeal to the people to take the vow of Swadeshi. 23
  - Comments on Lord Islington's speech at Oxford on Indian political reforms . . . . 3—7
  - Comments on Sir Benjamin Robertson's speech at Amraoti (Berár) . 12
  - Comments on the notice served on Mr. S. M. Paranjpe under the Defence of India Act . . . . 8 & 9
  - Comments on the replies of Mrs. Besant and her lieutenants to the Madras Government regarding their political and theosophical activities 14
  - Comments on the reply of the Governor of Bengal to the deputation about the prohibited Calcutta meeting 25
  - How England is discharging its trust in India 1
  - Passive resistance . . . . 17—21
  - Students and the Government circular prohibiting them from attending public meetings 11
  - Suggestion to partisans of Mrs. Besant to approach the Madras Government on her behalf 13
  - The 4th of August ought to be a day of a new vision of sympathy, friendship and co-operation between Indians and the English . 24
  - The late Mr. Gokhale's scheme of reforms . . . . 15 & 16
  - The present is the time when Parliament should intervene in the affairs of India 2
- Co-operative Credit Societies: — and political movements 30
- His Excellency the Governor: His Excellency the Governor's speech at the Fergusson College . . . . 31—33
- Indian National Congress: Mrs. Besant and the presidentship of the next session of the— . . . . 26 & 27
- Indians in the Colonies: Indians in South Africa 40

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

Police:

Comments on the action taken by the — in connection with the meeting at Hubli (Dhárwár) 37
Comments on the Shiroda (Ratnágiri) — prosecution case . . . 36
His Excellency the Governor should stop — highhandedness . . 34
Reflections on a recent case of suicide by a woman in Bombay . . 35

Press Act:

Comments on the taking of security from the Sanjibani of Calcutta . 41
Comments on the fresh forfeiture of the New India security . . 42

Sind:

Comments on the — Settlement Committee's Report 38
The Hyderabad (—) authorities and the Home Rule movement . 39

LEGISLATION—

Muhammadans and the Honourable Mr. Patel's Education Bill . . . 43

EDUCATION—

Alleged waste of stationery in the Educational Department. 45
Comments on the institution in the Bombay University of a degree of Teaching 44

RAILWAYS—

The G. I. P. Railway strike . . . . 46—48

MUNICIPALITIES—

Bombay: The Kennedy Sea Face (—) and Government . . . . 49 & 50
Matheran: Comments on the proposal to levey a tax on professions at — . 51

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

How England is discharging its trust in India.
Mahrátta (5), 19th Aug.

*1. "Speaking at Glasgow a few days ago, the Prime Minister made the following observations:—'Mesopotamia is not Turkish and never has been Turkish. The Turk is as much an alien in Mesopotamia as the German is, and every one knows how he ruled it.......... At best he was the trustee of this far-famed land on behalf of civilisation. Ah, what a trustee! (Laughter.) He has been false to his trust.'......... Would this piece of rhetoric had not fallen into Indian hands! Here is more:—'The wishes, the desires and the interests of the people of these Colonies (German Colonies) themselves must be the dominant factor in settling their future government. That is the principle upon which we we are proceeding..........' And what is the principle upon which England is proceeding in regard to India? We don't know about the Turks' behaviour in Mesopotamia, but can England say that she has been utterly true to the trust she assumed in taking over India's governance in her hands?" [Elsewhere, writing about Lord Islington's speech, the paper refers to the Premier's words as follows:—"There is one thing specially noticeable about Lord Islington's pronouncement. The Under Secretary for India, who must in a way be held responsible for the 'Students' circulars' that have the effect of consigning students to 'political darkness', chose for his audience the students of Oxford! Evidently English students are in no need of a 'pure atmosphere of study'. The very first pronouncement by such a high official as Lord Islington—a pronouncement on Indian reforms—must be made before students! And if we think of acquainting our students—our sons and daughters—with the Indian view of Lord Islington's scheme the Circulars are there to take care of the students who attend our lectures! 'Ah! What a trustee!'"]

The present is the time when Parliament should intervene in the affairs of India.
Rást Goftar (30), 19th Aug., Eng. cols.

*2. "The administration in India from the sympathetic and progressive Government of Lord Hardinge has changed to retrogression and repression. The pre-occupations of the war are not preventing several Provincial Governments in India from trying to suppress constitutional agitation. The official attitude at the present moment is that India should do all she can for the Empire during the war, but for herself she must ask nothing. Let the people of India be praised ever so high, they must not press their claims to a form of Government like the Australian Commonwealth. They must simply stand and wait. The people of India, or rather, the educated classes behind whom stand the people, refuse to stand and wait, and are pressing their claims, which is their birthright, all the more strenuously. 'Coercion and repression on one side, a fixed determination not to yield on the other side', that is the present situation. The absolute unanimity of Educated India makes the position still more grave.......... The Government here in India takes no note of the supremely important fact that India stands united to-day and the demand of India is that of a united people.......... This is the time when action should be taken in the House of Commons, when the attention of the House should be drawn to the critical situation that is being created in India by official action.......... Let Parliament judge for itself and let it decide whether the repressive policy will lead to good or evil results. There is no Charles Bradlaugh to fight our battle in the House of Commons, but surely other friends like Commander Wedgewood may be found to invite and arrest attention to the perilous course that is being pursued in India."

Comments on Lord Islington's speech at Oxford on Indian reforms.
Indian Social Reformer (3), 19th Aug.; Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 19th Aug., Eng. cols.

*3. "Lord Islington talked glibly of leaving each province to work out its own redemption in such matters as the police, education, agriculture, forestry, public works and industrial enterprises. But there is one little phrase in his sketch which spells disaster to the whole scheme. It is that about the superior authority retaining the power to intervene if the province squandered its resources. The Government of India will maintain that it is no good intervening after a province had squandered its resources, and that, therefore, it should be kept constantly in touch with the doings of a province so as to intervene effectively to prevent such squandering. This may mean, in practice, the Provincial Government having virtually to obtain previous sanction for all important projects—which the Government of India will give or withhold according to its own conception of the needs of the province—and it may also mean the paraphernalia of Inspectors-General and Directors-General, which we are always getting rid of, but which are always coming back though in different forms.......... Lord Islington's new model Provincial Government with four members of the Executive Council, two Indians and two Europeans, with independent powers over certain departments, and transacting more business directly with England, will not be a reality unless the Central Government is first remodelled and not, as His Lordship indicated, wait to be reformed till success follows the changes in the Provincial Government. The Government of India, for its part, cannot be 'liberalised' till the India Office is abolished and the Secretary of State for India becomes a Minister on exactly the same footing as the Secretary of State for the Colonies (in his relation to the self-governing Colonies), his salary being put upon the British estimates.......... On the whole, we cannot say that Lord Islington's scheme is better calculated to carry out the liberalisation of the Indian administration than that of the nineteen members, which he criticised, though there are some good points in it." [The Kaiser-i-Hind remarks:—"Lord Islington advocacy of financial independence for the Provincial Governments is worth serious consideration. Enlargement of the Council Electorate and making it as far as possible direct is one of the standing demands of the country to which a very tame hearing has been accorded upto now. We cannot agree with his method of broadening the franchise which clearly deals a blow against all union. The greatest drawback of these proposals is that they savour of obsoleteness. The alteration in the angle of vision is absolutely lost sight of."] Young India (14), 15th Aug.; Mahratta* (5), 19th Aug.; Gujarati* (16), 19th Aug., Eng. cols.

4. V. R. writes in Young India:—"It has been said times without number that the first object of our British rulers is to train us for self-government.......... But so far all evidence is against them that our rulers seriously mean to maintain their promises. Pledges and promises of Parliaments, Sovereigns, Cabinet Ministers and Viceroys, solemnly given and reiterated for almost a century, have been broken reeds, so much so that people are sick with disappointment and refuse to-day to pin their faith to despatches and documents which the Indian bureaucracy has torn up at its will and trampled under foot on every conceivable occasion. .... Self-government, says Mr. Nevinson, implies the right to go wrong, and that is a perfectly well-recognised law of constitutional growth. When once this indisputable fact is conceded, what becomes of the bunkum of vested interests about conditions in India not being ripe for self-government? Considerable emphasis has been laid about the unfitness of Indians to govern themselves. But what has been done to ascertain the fitness of Indians to self-government? Take the municipalities; take the district and taluka boards; take in fact any institution which British genius in India has evolved; and scrupulous regard for political honesty ought to convince any one that failure in all these cases is the result of the meddling instinct of the bureaucracy.......... Both the memorandum of the immortal 'Nineteen' and the Congress-Moslem League scheme, while asking for an enlargement of the legislative and executive councils, have unanimously voiced the demand for a definite recognition in practice of the principle of the responsibility of the government to the governed. The various proposals they have made only constitute a first step in that ultimate consummation and do not certainly ask for the transformation of a highly centralised bureaucracy into a set of decentralised self-governing systems in a night. It is the greatest insult to offer to the intelligence of the country to insinuate as Lord Islington of imperishable fame does, that leading Indian politicians and political institutions demand catastrophic changes or a sudden upheaval in the governmental machinery of the country. It is good to hear that His Lordship was not speaking before the Oxford Summer meeting in his official capacity as Under Secretary of State for India. If he did, one should really despair at the opacity of British politicians to understand the real issue.......... It seems to us that argument never enters the head of an English politician; but overwhelming demonstrations, because they are visible, appeal to him and his instinct of self-preservation. And we in India alone cannot fail to respect the lesson of English history, both past and present." [Elsewhere in a long article on Lord Islington's speech the paper writes :—"Any way, we are constrained to regard Lord Islington's proposals, as cabled to this country, as entirely inadequate and unsatisfactory. They leave the root of the evil untouched and do not go beyond the surface. They fall far short of the principles of the Memorandum and are hopelessly disappointing in the light of the Congress-Moslem League scheme." The Mahrátta says :—"As to Lord Islington's scheme, we propose to dismiss it with a very few observations. The Bengal and Madras Committees have already repudiated it as a disappointing scheme.......... What India wants is Autonomy in All-India and Provincial and local affairs with a Secretary for India (without an India Council) doing for us the work which the Secretary for the Colonies does for the latter. To ask in these circumstances that 'the provinces should transact more business direct with England' and to suggest throwing before us a few crumbs of 'power' is to laugh at our aspirations for Autonomy. Lord Islington did not speak in his official capacity, but that is no consolation. His speech shows that the march of the times has made little impression upon him: and being a high official his reactionary attitude must act as a great stumbling block in our way. It is well, however, that he has spoken. It is well to know the difficulties in our path." The Gujaráti writes :—"It is difficult to understand why Lord Islington should have made a pronouncement on the subject of Indian reforms in the course of a lecture to students at the Oxford Summer meeting. It is fortunate the jurisdiction of the Bombay, Madras, Bengal and Punjáb Governments does not extend to Oxford and its student population, otherwise such a meeting and such a pronouncement would have become impossible.......... The procedure adopted by Lord Islington is seriously open to misconstruction and his intervention at this moment, to the supersession of his official chief, is not of a very assuring character and it is the more open to adverse criticism having regard to the fact that the views to which he gave expression will not inspire the Indian public with confidence in his impartiality or liberality."]

Indu Prakásh (39), 15th Aug., Eng. cols.; Message (6), 14th Aug.

5. "The plea of the non-official nature of his Lordship's utterance is only made for the sake of neutralising all possible responsibility. In every other respect the utterance is of the Under Secretary of State. The thoughts are certainly His Lordship's. Does one find there anything except the official or bureaucratic doctrine about the political progress in India? The only point that appears in the speech with any clearness, is that the progress must be slow.......... If the noble Lord expects any sensible Indian to be in the least satisfied with these steps he has grossly miscalculated or has been misled into a wrong conception of the present Indian agitation.......... Mr. Lloyd George has placed above Lord Islington another bold and far-seeing statesman; and who knows if Lord Islington has not gone out of his way to address to a meeting of students his 'stationary politics' because His Lordship fears something wrong is going to happen owing to Mr. Montagu's bold far-seeing statesmanship, in the way of the Indians coming by what is their own, and has been withheld from them merely on account of the bureaucratic mistrust!" [The Message writes :—"The absurdity of Lord Islington's position in regard to Indian reforms will become patent on a little thinking.......... What he in effect proposes to do is to lay a superstructure on a system whose foundations are narrow and whose top is already too heavy, so that the moment you begin to lay the superstructure the whole thing might topple down.......... Evidently, his Lordship has failed to understand that local self-government in India is nothing but a sham which cannot be relieved by any process of tabloidation and that it requires a more drastic recasting. As regards decentralisation and devolution as between the Imperial and Provincial Governments though his proposal makes a show of approximating to the proposal of the nineteen, the proposal itself becomes ridiculous so long as the personnel of the Provincial governments is untouched.......... We do not think people are so gullible nowadays as to regard this silly talk with any amount of seriousness."]

Kesari (106), 14th Aug.; Indu Prakásh (39) 13th Aug.; Dnyán Prakásh (36), 15th Aug.

6. Lord Islington was careful enough to say that he was speaking as a private individual. All will laugh at this exhibition of official caution. If to-morrow Government reforms were seen to differ from those of Lord Islington, no one would hang him. Government apparently want to keep their reform proposals behind the Pardah even more strictly than old Rajputs did their women. Nobody would believe that Government have nothing to do withLord Islington's reform scheme. Lord Islington's scheme is a revised edition of the old decentralization scheme. Indians are ready to undertake any amount of responsibility that Government may throw upon their shoulders. If Government want to put us to shame they should appoint one of us Governor or Governor-General. When perchance European officials turn out to be useless, we suffer the loss and not England. Why then shall we not bear the loss consequent upon the appointment of some of us to high posts? Sometimes there may be a loss, but we shall get the experience, and experience is the first step to fitness. [The Indu Prakásh remarks:—We have had enough of the advice 'Proceed slowly; do not be in haste and trust us.' We must know what we are to get definitely after the war. It must be settled how far the officials will be responsible to the people. We do not want the moon immediately; but we do not want to remain any longer helpless babies. We do not want any rewards; we want our rights. We do not think that Lord Islington's scheme fully satisfies our aspirations, but it appears that under it greater powers will be given to the people in local self-government and the Provincial and Imperial administrations. But it is better to wait and see. The Dnyán Prakásh says:—We consider Lord Islington's scheme to be unsatisfactory. Some one holding a higher position than the Under Secretary should have made a pronouncement in the matter and he should have made it clear that Indians would get many more rights than they possess now. The scheme of reforms should be of a comprehensive character and it should be published immediately. Mere committees will be of no use; they will only heighten discontent. The hopes raised by the appointment of Mr. Montagu are being diminished. Real statesmanship lies in an early declaration of policy by Mr. Lloyd George or Mr. Montagu.]

Hindusthán (20), 14th Aug.; Bombay Samáchár (59), 18th Aug.; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 13th Aug.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 12th Aug.; Akhbár-e-Islám (56), 13th Aug.

7. Referring to the address delivered by Lord Islington at the Oxford Summer Meeting, the Hindusthán expresses its disagreement with the remark made by him to the effect that the changes proposed by the 19 elected members of the Viceroy's Legislative Council would increase the number and powers of the critics of the Government of India without giving them any real responsibility, and observes that an increase of powers necessarily carries with it greater responsibility. The paper also does not find anything new or attractive in the scheme he outlined with regard to decentralisation and remarks that people do not demand this sort of decentralisation which takes away powers from the hands of the Indian Government and invests them in the Provincial rulers. It then proceeds:—As long as a larger share is not given to the representatives of the people and the sons of the soil in the administration of the country, as long as they are not placed in the category of the present rulers and given similar treatment, as long as the distinctions that are being constantly observed at present in their connection are not set aside, and as long as a policy of confidence is not freely introduced (in the country), to talk about the "decentralisation" of powers and to describe the popular representatives as persons demanding powers without responsibility is out of place. [The Bombay Samáchár expresses satisfaction that Lord Islington has suggested the Australian Commonweath as the model for India. It, however, remarks that it is preposterous to suppose that popular representatives with a majority in the Legislative Councils would think of compelling the Executive to adopt a particular policy without realizing their own responsibility. The Jám-e-Jamshed remarks that the critics of the Indian Government will be prepared to undertake with delight the real responsibilities associated with "responsible Government" if the former choose to invest them with those responsibilities. It, however, expresses gratification at the proposed change in the constitution of the Provincial Executive Councils and welcomes it as the first instalment of the concession to the claims of India for swarájya. The paper wishes that the committee that may be appointed to institute inquiries about the prospective Indian reforms might include two or three experienced Indian politicians and favours the appointment of Mr. Montagu to act as its President. The Praja Mitra and Pársi seems satisfied with the announcement made by Lord Islington and regards it as a part of the policy of the new Secretary of State for India. It believes that it is a move on Mr. Montagu's part to ascertain the views of the Indian public on the subject of political reforms to be introduced in India before finally submitting a scheme of those reforms to His Majesty's Government. The Akhbár-i-Islám characterises Lord Islington's speech as a pronouncement full of hopes which leads the paper to foresee that the régime of Mr. Montagu will not fail to prove beneficial to the interests of India.]

Comments on the notice served on Mr. S. M. Paranjpe under the Defence of India Act.

Prakásh (116), 15th Aug.; Sandesh (118), 16th Aug.

8. Those who framed the Defence of India Act will be gratified to learn that its enforcement is not the monopoly of the Madras Government, but that the Bombay Government also is lending them a helping hand in this respect. It appears as if the notice served on Mr. S. M. Paranjpe will prevent him from even having a talk with a party of friends invited to dinner! It makes him a dumb man though possessing the power of speech. This repressive policy pursued by Government, instead of achieving the desired result, only lays bare the real attitude of the bureaucracy towards the ideal of swarájya the legitimacy of which they outwardly admit. [The Sandesh writes:—The notice charges Mr. Paranjpe with having acted in a manner prejudicial to public safety and also with the intention of acting in such a manner. We are not aware of any instance which can support the first allegation. As regards the second accusation, viz., that he was about to act in a manner prejudicial to public safety, it is but right that Government should disclose the grounds on which they base their allegation. It will then be possible to judge whether the grounds which they held to be reasonable are really so.]

Message (6), 16th Aug.

9. "The Government order says that Government have reasonable grounds for believing that Mr. S. M. Paranjpe has acted in a way prejudicial to public safety. Now, if Mr. Paranjpe has acted in a way prejudicial to public safety, he could have been overhauled before a judicial tribunal, and due punishment could have been meted out to him. But it seems the officials concerned are very merciful to the delinquent and have with extreme generosity refrained from taking such steps. Such extreme tenderness may suggest to some that some of the officials concerned might at heart be sympathetic towards extremists like Mr. S. M. Paranjpe. His Excellency Lord Willingdon's Government will, therefore, do well to take care that the impression that some of their officials are possibly partial, is speedily and completely removed. Delinquents who 'have acted in a way prejudicial to public safety' should, therefore, be dragged into the court and no leniency should be shown to the guilty. But perhaps 'the law is an ass' as some one said and the Government of Bombay do not like to have much to do with it, especially in view of the fact that on appeal to the higher courts, the judgment of Executive Judicial officials is sometimes reversed, to the great confusion of the authorities concerned."

Appeal to Government to pardon all young men interned under the Defence of India Act.

Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 17th Aug.

10. The Jám-e-Jamshed approves of the step taken by the Punjab Government in pardoning certain Musalman students who had fallen victims to disaffected intrigues and had disappeared with the intention of fighting against Government, and hopes that the Government of India will be pleased to show mercy to the many misguided students who have been interned under the Defence of India Act and who now repent of the follies they have committed. It believes such a step will be appreciated by all and tend to allay much of the existing discontent that has been engendered by the repressive acts of Government.

Students and the Government circular prohibiting them from public meetings.

New Times (7), 6th Aug.

11. Mr. Jamshed N. R. Mehta writes to the New Times:—"If not for any other reason, I most strongly urge the cancellation of these orders because of sorrow, dissatisfaction and discontent existing at present in the students. I ask is it worth while, is it advantageous to Government itself? On one side are the prohibition orders, which are difficult to carry out and prove as an impossibility to carry out, by the open confession of educationists at a meeting in Madras called by Lord Pentland, and on the other side, sorrow and discontent raging within pure, innocent and loyal hearts; compare the advantages and disadvantages. I urge and appeal not only in the interest of the students, but also in that of India and British Empire. May wisdom guide our rulers......... [The writer then offers the following advice to the students:—] Let the prohibition be taken as a training ground for them; let it be a discipline of life. Let them feel that in laws of nature, no prohibition or internments can stop Evolution and Home Rule; in fact, the quiet and pious force of sacrifice will bring the desired changes earlier. The prohibition is only for physical bodies; minds and hearts cannot be prohibited or interned......... Let us humbly offer ourselves to services of the Motherland and political knowledge can be learnt within a much shorter period than one can get by studying a thousand books.......... Students are prohibited from attending political meetings, but are not prohibited to read and study the biographies of Great Men of Politics and their speeches; these are very valuable to read, grasp and study and I do advise all students to occupy their leisure time to learn lessons from such books."

Comments on Sir Benjamin Robertson's speech at Amraoti (Berar).

Dnyán Prakásh (36), 16th Aug.; Message (6), 16th Aug.

12. In the course of his speech at Amraoti Sir Benjamin Robertson, Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, warned the watandars that Government would not tolerate their connection with the swarájya movement. He argues that this movement creates difficulties in the path of Government at a time when the successful prosecution of the war ought to be the sole preoccupation of all people. No one denies that India ought to bear her legitimate share in this struggle along with the other units of the Empire. But why should far off India maintain absolute silence after she has discharged her duty, when every kind of subject is being freely discussed even in those parts of the Empire which are in close proximity to the seat of war?......... England has decided to confer the rights of swarájya on Ireland in spite of that country putting her to endless difficulties, whereas our wholly constitutional agitation for swarájya is considered to be objectionable! Sir Benjamin dilated on the many benefits of the British rule, but he seems to be unaware that the time when such benefits could satisfy the aspirations of the people has long passed away. England's duty towards India does not end with maintaining an efficient administration. Her avowed object is to fit this country to govern itself. The advocates of swarájya maintain that the time for discharging this duty has now arrived. They are aware that this movement is distasteful to officials of the type of Sir Benjamin and that they will lose no opportunity to suppress it. The authorities ought to realise, however, that the movement has passed the stage when it could be stifled by their opposition. [The Message also condemns the tone of Sir Benjamin Robertson's speech and remarks:—"It is not by indulging in intemperate rhetoric or wholesale denunciation that public confidence in truth will be restored."]

Suggestion to partisans of Mrs. Besant to approach the Madras Government on her behalf.

Bombay Samáchár (59), 16th Aug.

13. From the declaration made in the House of Commons on behalf of Government on the subject of the internment order passed against Mrs. Annie Besant and her associates by the Madras Government, the Bombay Samáchár infers that the order was not passed to suppress all agitation for political reforms as has been popularly believed, but that it was passed to put down Mrs. Besant's methods of agitation. It, therefore, does not approve of the importance attached to the internment order by the United Provinces Congress which recently held its session at Lucknow and which passed certain resolutions in connection with that order. The paper remarks that it is the primary duty of the well-wishers of Mrs. Besant to banish from their minds all thoughts about her being a martyr for this country and to assure the Madras Government that she would no longer persist in the attitude which compelled that Government to issue the internment order. In view of the regard Mrs. Besant has for the people of India as well as British rule and also in view of the sympathy various responsible authorities have shown towards the ultimate political goal of the Indians, the paper believes that it would not be difficult for the public leaders to obtain the consent of. Mrs. Besant for some such assurance. It expects that good results would follow if some leaders were to approach His Excellency Lord Pentland on her behalf and personally confer with him in connection with the order passed against her.

Comments on the replies of Mrs. Besant and her lieutenants to the Madras Government regarding their political and theosophical activities.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 17th Aug., Eng. cols.

14. "Candidly we cannot say that the communications addressed to the Governor of Madras by Mrs. Besant and her colleagues, now published as a press communiqué by the Government of Madras, are of a nature calculated to advance the political cause of India, which Mrs. Besant has now made her own.......... Thus there are persons who say that Mrs. Besant suddenly and somewhat sensationally shot up as an active political agitator. And in the opinion of these persons, her fundamental object all along has been to rehabilitate and restore Theosophy, by means of a popular political propaganda. The present communications of Mrs. Besant and her theosophic colleagues would seem to lend some colour to these insinuations.......... Mrs. Besant and her colleagues must learn to discriminate between the departments of human life and their own activities. If they do not, then they are unpractical visionaries, whose deliberations, whatever their spiritual and theosophic value, are politically worthless."

The late Mr. Gokhale's scheme of reforms.

Mahrátta (5), 19th Aug.

15. "Mr. Gokhale was an extremist Moderate and we cannot conceive that in the year 1917 he would have published a scheme over his signature containing the clause that 'the principle of an official majority for the Viceroy's legislature shall be continued at present'. .... We do not propose to go further into details. We shall only say that Mr. Gokhale's scheme falls short of the National aspirations of the day as embodied in the Joint Scheme. It is not very likely that even the blindest admirers of the departed patriot will think of going back on the Joint Scheme and fall into love with one that will keep the nation out of real power at the centre, simply because the scheme emanated from 'the amiable Mr. Gokhale', 'a few days before his death'. The Aga Khan evidently desires on the part of Indians such 'an advance in the direction of the tail'. But we are sure that he will be disappointed."

Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 18th Aug.: Gujaráti* (16), 19th Aug., Eng. cols.; Rást Goftár* (30), 19th Aug., Eng. cols.

16. The Praja Mitra and Pársi draws the attention of its readers to the points of similarity that exist between the scheme of reforms outlined by Lord Islington and that of the late Mr. Gokhale published by His Highness the Aga Khan and expresses the opinion that Lord Islington must have largely drawn upon Mr. Gokhale's scheme which the Aga Khan must have shown him unofficially. It refers to the favourable opinion expressed by the London papers on Mr. Gokhale's scheme and the contrast they have drawn between the scheme and the suggestions of the nineteen members of the Imperial Legislative Council, and expresses the fear that British statesmen might set aside the suggestions of the Nineteen in favour of Mr. Gokhale's scheme, which the paper regards as having been framed in a hasty manner when Mr. Gokhale was in a weak state of health, without having consulted other people. The paper suggests that a responsible deputation should be sent at an early date to England to educate public opinion and to convince Parliament of the advisability of adopting the suggestions of the Nineteen.

[The Gujaráti writes :—"His Highness the Aga Khan, who ought to be in this country at least for the greater portion of the year and give a lead to public opinion in India instead of spending his time and money in England and on the Continent, has thought it proper to publish Mr. Gokhale's scheme of reform in the belief that his memorandum will have a beneficial effect upon Indian thought and contribute materially to the evolution of a sound progressive policy. His Highness has by his long residence outside India lost touch with the forces and influences that have stirred the mind of his countrymen and is entirely wrong in believing that Mr. Gokhale, had he been alive, would have adhered to all the proposals he had drafted without consulting any of his countrymen." The Rást Goftár remarks :—"Apart from the solemnity inseparable from such a document, the scheme is a heritage left by a great patriot who was held in the highest esteem by the rulers of the country. What do statesmen of the rank of Sir Michael O'Dwyer and Lord Pentland think of the scheme, and will they ventilate their opinions independently of higher authority? We think the publication of the scheme is timely, for it is a definite constructive scheme prepared by a leader whose premature death is regarded as a misfortune even by the opponents of Indian progress. It will be a touchstone wherewith to test the real attitude of our critics."]

Passive resistance.

Indian Social Reformer (3), 19th Aug.; Mahrátta (5), 19th Aug.

17. There cannot be the least doubt that an effective and widespread scheme of passive resistance would paralyse the administration and make British rule impossible.......... We have good reason to think that some of those who advocate passive resistance have not the least idea to what extremities it may be carried, if once started.......... What those who advocate passive resistance desire is to tickle the old and otiose John Bull a little under his ribs, with a view to call his attention to the fact that his Indian boys have outgrown the school-boy suit of clothing which he had provided for them some fifty years ago. That John Bull does stand in need of being tickled up a bit, and made to pay more heed to the wants of the Indian people, is unfortunately true. But opinion will be divided as to whether resort to passive resistance should be had for the purpose. The kind of passive resistance which men like Sir Subrahmanya Iyer contemplate is of a very mild type.......... It will be a fearful mistake, however, to assume that when the movement is once launched, it will for ever remain under the control and guidance of men so spiritually-minded and experienced as Sir Subrahmanya. Passive resistance will soon turn to active resistance." [The Mahrátta, on the other hand, urges that there is justification for a resort to passive resistance and is of opinion that the time for doing so is ripe.]

Dnyán Prakásh (36), 14th and 15th Aug.; Indu Prakash (39), 14th Aug., Eng. cols.

18. Though the theory of passive resistance is not unconstitutional the question is when it should be adopted and to what extent it should be followed. The question has been raised in this country mainly because of the prohibition of the Calcutta meeting. But some people do not want to limit its scope and character. It is necessary to lay down first whether its object is to conduct political meetings regardless of prohibition or to continue it till the whole of Government's reactionary policy is reversed or till swarájya is gained. The Bombay Provincial Congress Committee wanted first to define passive resistance and settle a scheme to carry it out. If the Congress approves of passive resistance in general it is likely that the movement may assume many legal but harmful shapes. The same thing happened in the days of boycott and therefore those who advocate the new movement should first define its character. [In the next issue the paper says that passive resistance is legal and that the word 'unconstitutional' was used by Mr. Samarth at the Bombay Congress Committee meeting in reference to the movement only in the sense that it was against the constitution of the Congress. The Indu Prakásh writes :—"The refusal of Messrs. Tilak and Jinnah to be in the Committee appears to us extremely strange and inconsistent with democratic discipline which demands of every man, whether he be as great as the Himalayas or as small as an atom, that he shall obey the mandate of the majority. We are right glad that Mr. Natrajan's proposal was carried."]

Raj Hansa (85), 14th Aug.; Chandrodaya (33), 13th Aug.

19. Indians are fully convinced that there is no other way but passive resistance to open the eyes of the officials. There is no sedition in it. Even Brahma is not able to charge passive resisters with sedition. Women in England followed passive resistance and got suffrage. Indians obtained by its great power rights in South Africa and taught the mighty Boers a lesson. Passive resistance is a powerful weapon to realise our ideal silently without any fear and without any threat to the rulers. We hope that Government who have witnessed the methods of passive resistance followed in England, will fulfil the ambition of Indians and see that it is not followed in India. [The Chandrodaya remarks:—Patriot Gandhi first began the movement in South Africa. Passive resisters disobey orders felt by them to be improper and unjust and suffer courageously any punishment awarded to them. It appears that repressive orders issued by one or two local Governments will convey matters to extremes. We suggest sincerely to Government to find out some way to keep the people contented and peaceful.]

Gujarâti (16), 12th Aug.; Hindusthân (20), 16th Aug.; Bombay Samâchâr (59), 15th Aug.; Prâja Mitra and Pârsi (28), 13th Aug.; Jâm-e-Jamshed (23), 16th Aug.; Akhbâr-e-Islâm (56), 18th Aug.

20. The officials have allowed matters to come to such a pass that the people have no other recourse left to them but to take to passive resistance. This opinion is shared by those who are reputed to be thoughtful and cool-headed. Bengal alone was affected by political agitation at the time of the partition of the Province, but at present the whole of India is involved. Do the officials believe that the commencement of the passive resistance movement on the part of the people means the success of their high policy? If the officials consider passive resistance as a welcome movement they should ask the Public Works Department to set about erecting new prisons. We do not think that the officials would like the people to go the length of resorting to passive resistance. They would, therefore, do well to allow the people to express their opinions freely and to refrain from adopting further measures of repression. Lord Hardinge has considered passive resistance as a legitimate and constitutional weapon in political agitation. Mr. Winston Churchill has expressed a similar opinion. Pym and Hampden resorted to the same weapon as a protest against the unlawful orders of Charles I. But since it is injurious both to the rulers and the ruled we hope Government will not drive the people of India to have recourse to it. [The Hindusthân writes:—We should be prepared to undergo the worst of difficulties in this world and in order to enable us to pass our ordeals we must have sufficient self-control. We would be courting destruction by entering upon passive resistance without self-control. Not only does the passive resistance movement require leaders endowed with spiritual powers, but it requires followers who possess similar qualifications. Passive resistance cannot be carried out by verbal protestations. We must not commit the mistake of being carried away by misplaced enthusiasm in the matter of passive resistance. The Provincial Congress Committee has, therefore, done well in postponing the consideration of the question for a fortnight more.] [The Bombay Samâchâr expresses its approval of the step taken by the Bombay Provincial Congress Committee in not expressing its opinion in favour of adopting passive resistance and appointing a committee to formulate a clear definition of 'passive resistance'. The paper is of opinion that resort to passive resistance will prove harmful to the real interests of India and asks its readers not to be deluded by the catch expression which might lead young men into a course of conduct that would be far from law-abiding and constitutional. It asks the Provincial Congress Committee to work in co-operation with Government and not to resort to passive resistance, an objectionable and highly injurious method of political agitation. The Praja Mitra and Pârsi and the Jâm-e-Jamshed also sound a note of warning against the adoption of passive resistance and ask the Moderates to rise to the occasion and prevent the nation from falling a victim to harmful sentimentalism. The Akhbár-e-Islám praises the Bombay Provincial Congress Committee for the tact and wisdom they have shown in dealing with the question of passive resistance.]

Jágruk (new), 10th Aug.; Kalpataru and Anand-vritt (104), 12th Aug.; Indu Prakásh (39), 11th Aug.

21. The Jágruk say that the 'educate' leaders want to throw the heavy responsiblity of the defence of India on the British Government while appropriating the loaves and fishes of the internal administration of the country to themselves. Referring to the question of passive resistance it wishes that the antecedents of the woman for whose sake the serious step is going to be undertaken by the leaders had been at least noble, but that is far from being the case and declares that in the end the leaders are likely to find themselves bamboozled. What intolerable oppression, it ironically asks, is being practised by the authorities on the masses that our leaders have no other alternative but to resort to passive resistance? [The Kalpataru writes:—In our opinion passive resistance is not as easy as it appears to be. The success of this movement depends on the patience, endurance and tenacity of those who resort to it. On calm consideration it must be admitted that our people do not possess the requisite qualifications to ensure success in such a step. We are also of opinion that the present is not the proper time to inaugurate such a movement. It is however certain that resort to it will one day be necessary. The Indu Prakásh while approving the passive resistance movement says that its scope should be clearly defined before inaugurating it.]

Advocacy of passive resistance and boycott as the only means of combating official high-handedness.

Young India (14), 15th Aug.

22. R. S. G. writes in Young India:—"Passive resistance, the successful resistance of unjust executive orders, to which a conscientious person cannot reconcile himself, is a legitimate and peremptory duty of every true son of his country. It has a moral justification, as well as the acceptance and approval of civilized humanity.......... Faith in the justice of our cause and confidence in ourselves alone would strengthen us in those efforts which would prove the harbinger of events justifying our struggle and exalting us as a nation. This self-confidence is the more essential in view of the fact that much is heard about us of speculation, as to who is the eventual arbiter of our destinies.......... It is unmistakably clear that we are the makers of our own status, our strength is the solution to the riddle and no amount of faith in external factors alone would ever aid us in getting at what we aspire for.......... Mere wailing would help us to get to nowhere when it is open to us to place our money in foreign banks or not, when we are free to insure our lives in foreign companies or not, when our choice is unfettered to order goods from foreign firms or not and, if foreign goods were needful, to get them directly from the manufacturers or not.......... Action in such matters—really potent passive resistance that it is—is calculated to prove a most powerful supplement to the resistance to executive high-handedness and misuse of authority.

Appeal to the people to take the vow of swadeshi.

Sandesh (118), 10th Aug.

23. The Sandesh makes use of the recent celebration of the birthday of God Shrikrishna to dwell upon the 'depressed condition to which India has been reduced on all sides', and declares that the reason why there have been no incarnations of God now as there were in old times is that the people have as yet no consciousness of their degraded condition and that the 'flame of divine discontent has not as yet been kindled in the hearts of the people. The writer, therefore, calls upon the people to rouse themselves to action and to take the vow of swadeshi, as it includes all matters. It goes on:—To-day is Shrikrishna Jayanti. From to-day not even a bit of foreign cloth or a pinch of foreign sugar should be consumed. These things must not be forgotten while working for Home Rule. Shrikrishna will not be far off when the step is taken with fixed determination.

The 4th of August ought to be a day of a new vision of sympathy, friendship and co-operation between the Indians and the English.

New Times (7), 3rd Aug.

24. In the course of an article headed "August 4th", the New Times praises the spirit of high resolve displayed by the English and the French in connection with the war, and the fairness and genius for constructive administration displayed by the English. It then remarks:—"It is unfortunate that young India interprets English genius by a reference to contemporary events in India. How long will India and England wander thus through the wood of error? How long will it take for both to awake out of the dreams of disintegrating criticism to the reality of a comradeship, a union of service in a common cause? How long will last the clouds which have crossed between the two? Misunderstandings between both are multiplying; and it seems, sometimes, to an Eastern lover of the West as if it were not possible to stand long the strain of the situation.......... Shall the 4th of August be simply a memorial day? May it not be a day of a new vision of sympathy, a new friendship between Indians and Englishmen—a day of mutual trust and confidence between the officials and the people, so that disintegrating reaction and criticism may give place to constructive co-operation."

Comments on the reply of the Governor of Bengal to the deputation about the prohibited Calcutta meeting.

Kesari (106), 14th Aug.; Message (6), 12th Aug.

25. We do not know whether the Bengali leaders were satisfied or felt insulted by the reply they got. It is a question for consideration whether meetings should be held after giving the assurance required by officials. We hope the Bengali leaders will give due consideration to the point that it would be an admission that former speeches were violent if assurances regarding future meetings are now given.] [The Message writes:—"The Lord Sahib of Bengal would revoke the order if an assurance were given that precautions would be taken as to the language used. The assumption that such language would be used is a grave reflection on the good sense of Bengal, and we think that the Bengalis should rather hold no meeting than give such an undignified assurance as has been asked for."]

Mrs. Besant and the Presidentship of the next session of the Indian National Congress.

Gujaráti (16), 19th Aug., Eng. cols.

26. "It is very doubtful whether the action of the Provincial Congress Committees which have voted in favour of Mrs. Annie Besant's appointment as president of the forthcoming session of the Congress has done to her cause a real service.......... It is, however, a significant circumstance that no less than 42 votes including that of the Honourable Mr. Jinnah were recorded in favour of the Raja of Mahamudabad as against the 54 votes in favour of Mrs. Besant. There are not a few people who appreciate her work just as her out-and-out or blind admirers do, but have not much confidence in her judgment. Whilst strongly disapproving of the action of Government in interning her, they are not prepared to place themselves under her leadership. Although their voice has been drowned for the time being, it is very likely that the Reception Committee of the Calcutta Congress will find themselves constrained to invite the All-India Congress Committee to elect another President."

Kesari (106), 14th Aug.

27. The Kesari expresses its belief that Mrs. Besant will be very likely elected President of the next Congress, but at the same time it thinks that Government will, on that very account, be obstinate enough to continue her internment till December. It opines that just as Government are resolved, people also should adopt a firm attitude. It avers that if Mrs. Besant had not been interned the Raja of Mahmudabad would have been elected President and that he should be appointed her Deputy, if she is not released. It then refers to the question of passive resistance and says that the Bombay Provincial Congress Committee has postponed the decision thereupon. But it holds that such questions cannot be permanently shelved as they have been put forward when the heart of the nation is full of the sentiment.

Comments on Government replies to interpellattions in the last session of the Bombay Legislative Council.

Sind Advocate (9), 2nd Aug.

28. One question of Mr. Bhurgri was if Government knew that students had hitherto been permitted to serve as volunteers at Congress, Moslem League and Provincial Conferences. The whole world knows that this is so, but the Government of Bombay declared that they were ignorant of it, and they will make enquiries! If a Government does not know such a public fact, it proclaims itself as.........we will not say what. The most charitable view we can take of such a reply is that the Government were joking. Another question was about Deputy Superintendents of Police. The Police Commision had recommended that Deputy Superintendents—which posts were created for Indians specially—should now and then be elevated to the office of Police Superintendents. How many have been so promoted?......... Neither the answer nor the fact stated in it will, we are afraid, raise the reputation of the Government which has plainly frustrated the purpose of the Commission and broken the promise which the Government of India and the Secretary of State held out on the ground of the Commission's recommendations. .... Then, Mr. Bhurgri asked if Government knew that the officials at Larkana had openly expressed to some people their hostility to the Home Rule movement, and whether the Police Superintendent had there sent for one Seth Thanwardas (who had sent letter to the Hind Vási newspaper) and scolded him; further whether the Municipal hall had been first allowed for public meetings, but then the Collector sent for the president of the Home Rule and then even an open air meeting was forbidden? The Government simply replied that they did not know! Yes, but if you avert a question like that, you must, when you do not know the facts at least enquire of those concerned. To do otherwise, and merely state in Council 'we do not know' is not sufficient."

Phœnix (8), 1st Aug.

29. Commenting upon the Government reply to the Honourable Mr. Bhurgri's interpellation in the last session of the Bombay Legislative Council on the subject of the working of section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Phœnix remarks:—"The fact that Government resist the idea of publishing papers regarding the working of section 110 cannot but lead one to suspect that all is not well in this best tract of India in connection with the proceedings instituted under the Badmashi Chapter. If the section has been found to be working satisfactorily as stated in the reply, there is no reason why the papers on the point should be withheld from the public. The matter should not be allowed to rest here. Efforts should again be made to get the publication of papers regarding the working of section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code in Sind. We trust the honourable members from Sind will take note of it.........." [Coming to the Budget discussion, the paper remarks:—"The Muhammadans in Sind greatly appreciated Government's grant of rupees one lakh for secondary education; but much more was needed to be done in this direction. The Sind Muhammadans, as we have several times pointed out, should press for the acceptance by Government of the Sind Muhammadan Educational Cess Bill. In view of the fact that Government has already allowed the introduction of Mr. Patel's Bill for compulsory primary education under which a Municipality is authorized to levy an educational cess, there is no reason why Government should oppose the Bill which levies an educational cess on Muhammadans in rural tracts for the promotion of their education."]

Co-operative Credit Societies and political movements.

Praja Bandhu (27), 12th Aug.

30. The Praja Bandhu associates itself with the protest that is being raised against certain rules that Government mean to apply to the Co-operative Credit Societies in the Presidency. It is of opinion that the experience gained by Government in the matter of the Co-operative Credit Societies does not warrant them in introducing rules for keeping them aloof from politics inasmuch as no Co-operative Society is known to have dabbled in politics. It considers the new rules as vexatious and such as would officialise the working of the societies to their great detriment. It thinks that Government have been actuated by baseless suspicions in introducing the new rules.

His Excellency the Governor's speech at the Fergusson College.
Kesari (106), 14th Aug.; Subodh Patrika (42), 12th Aug.

31. Commenting upon Lord Willingdon's speech at the Fergusson College, Poona, the Kesari says that while officials are free to impress upon the minds of students their views, the students are prohibited from hearing the other side. It further remarks that the prohibition enforced against students is primarily for the benefit of the authorities and adds:—If Lord Willingdon would consult the files of 1909, he will see that the circular issued that year was protested against even then. The officials themselves admit that it was not acted upon. Hence the boys suffered in discipline and character thereby. How will the officials honestly answer this question? In 1909, there was no Press Act, no Defence of India Act and no Conspiracy Act. If students remained obedient even after listening to lectures in those days of full independence what grounds are there to believe that their character will be spoiled by attending lectures in the present days of gagging? Moreover in those days there were independent schools so that those students who were against restrictions about attendance at meetings, could attend them. But Government have now suppressed independent schools and also prohibited students from attending meetings. This is like giving a beating to a man after gagging him. [The Subodh Patrika remarks:—Where was the necessity for His Excellency to harp upon a circular issued at Cambridge in the remote past? We wish His Excellency had not made the attempt to justify the Bombay Government's circular which had practically become a dead letter and which has now been given a new lease of life by His Excellency's Government.]

Young India (14), 15th Aug.

32. The discrimination which has been made against meetings on Home Rule appears to have been a mere after-thought introduced in the resurrected circular, because it was found necessary to allay the suspicions of the "elder" Congress propagandists. The reply to Mr. Manmohandas Ramji's question knocks the bottom out of the complacent theory that temperate speeches made on the subject of self-government are exempt from the comprehensive purview of the circular. Though personally Lord Willingdon might rightly consider it undesirable that young men should get their heads filled with oratory of an 'intemperate character', the circular, the replies have made it clear, is distinguished for its impartiality, so far as speeches of whatsoever complexion on politics are concerned. Students may in future acquaint themselves with approved official politics of the day from 'leading gentlemen and statesmen' who are well known perhaps in the sanctified ante-chambers of Government Houses and gubernatorial camps. As we have said, students might listen to an address on the Allies' war aims from Principal Covernton on war anniversary day or to a digression on politics, physics and civics by Father Goodier; but they may not attend a meeting addressed by Pandit Malaviya or Syed Wazir Hasan. They may be treated to an expatiation on India's failure to help the Empire by the Lord Bishop of Bombay; but they cannot listen to an indictment of the Indian bureaucracy by the grey-bearded lion of Bengal. Such is the wonderful and ingenious logic of the Bombay Government which Lord Willingdon would fain defend in an address to the Principal and the students of the Fergusson College!"

Gujaráti (16), 13th Aug.; Sanj Vartamán (31), 10th Aug.; Bombay Samáchár (59), 13th Aug.

33. His Excellency has advised the students to invite political leaders to attend their debates with the permission of their Principal, but his advice cannot be easily put into practice. They dare not invite political leaders whose names stand on the black list of the Police and so they will have to invite the so-called leaders of the people who are sycophants of Government. Does His Excellency imply, by asking our students not to be carried away by catch words and phrases, that leaders of political movements in India live on them alone? While His Excellency gives us such advice Sir Stafford Northcote as Rector of St. Andrews University is reported to have said: "The taking of the youth out of the State is like taking the spring out of the year!" But it is a far cry from St. Andrews to Bombay! [Elsewhere the paper writes:—The exhortations made to students to abstain from politics lead them to believe for certain that there must be something wrong in the administrative machinery of Government, for they argue that without such a radical defect they would not have been prevented from merely attending political meetings and listening to lectures. The Sánj Vartamán writes:—One of the main reasons of the poor response to the appeal to join the Indian Defence Force is that Indians have lost their martial spirit owing to being disarmed. The conditions of service are not the same for Indians and Europeans and nothing has yet been done to admit Indians to higher commissioned ranks. There will be a better response if these grievances are removed. We do not think that intemperate language has been used at any of the lectures organised by the Home Rule League. People have been driven to use strong language on account of the repressive measures of Government. But strong language is not sedition. We see no objection to students attending political meetings provided they do not take any active part in them. No harm is likely to be done if students attend political meetings; on the contrary attendance at such meetings will make them better citizens. The Bombay Samáchár exhorts Indian students to give a ready response to the appeal of His Excellency to join the Defence Force. It considers His Excellency's explanation about the orders regarding students and politics as satisfactory and asks people not to be carried away by the misconstruction put upon the speech in certain quarters.

His Excellency the Governor should stop police highhandedness.
Kesari (106), 14th Aug.

34. Referring to the Hubli (district Dhárwár) Police who wanted to assert their right to attend a private meeting, the Kesari says:—Lord Willingdon says that he is sympathetic towards constitutional agitation. What then does it mean that the police should commit such pranks freely in his régime and that no one should hold them to account? How much more are the powers of the police to extend? [It then refers to the prohibition of a dramatic performance in aid of the War Fund by the Vengurla (Ratnágiri) Police and says:—Such instances of police highhandedness occur daily. Has not the time come for a sympathetic Governor like Lord Willingdon to stop them? When the police were being criticised in the Council Lord Willingdon asked for particular instances and deprecated general criticism. Many instances like the one detailed above must have been noticed by him. But nobody knows what measures were adopted by him and what punishment was inflicted upon the police who persecuted the people. How many more days can this evasion continue?]

Reflections on a recent case of suicide by a woman in Bombay.
Indu Prakásh (39), 9th Aug., Eng. cols.

35. Referring to a recent case in Bombay in which a young woman committed suicide to escape from a warrant of arrest issued for disobeying the court's order in the matter of restitution of conjugal rights, the Indu Prakásh remarks:—"It would be against all known law and equity for a court to arrest a wife and send her to her husband's place, or send her to jail for disobeying the order of the Court to go and reside with her husband, besides being absolutely inhuman. The bailiff, one wonders, how he had a warrant of arrest! Or was it a mere make-believe to browbeat the wife? However that be, we are of opinion that a wrong use, if not a positive abuse, of judicial process has resulted in the loss of a young life for the sake of a decrepit old man of fifty-five. We know the matter will always remain clouded in obscurity, because the principal person affected is not going to care for that life. The police will remain quiet, because the jury have returned a verdict of suicide. The question will, therefore, always remain unanswered what kind of warrant the bailiff had in his hand that frightened the already disgusted young woman into committing suicide. We shall never know who is guilty of driving the young woman to cause the loss of her own life."

Comments on the Shiroda (Ratnágiri) police prosecution case.
Indu Prakásh (39), 11th Aug., Eng. cols.; Rást Goftár (30), 12th Aug.

36. Commenting on the Shiroda (Ratnágiri) police prosecution case, the Indu Prakásh remarks:—"The whole matter is simply astounding. We are not at this distance able to appreciate which of the tin-gods' wrath instituted this long humbug of persecution of an honest police patel and a loyal citizen who was working hard in aid of the War Relief Fund. We are nowadays getting a surfeit of gubernatorial warnings all harping that the whole Empire's resources are at present concentrated on the winning of the war. Are those orations merely intended for the citizens? Are they not at all meant for the police officers? Here is the case of a citizen trying to help the Empire and the police in substance helping the enemy. Lord Kitchener said they would rather lose India than lose the war. The Ratnágiri police ideal appears to be rather to lose the war than to lose their cockney prestige. Clear on the face of it it is a perverted exaggeration of prestige.......... Looking at the order of the Assistant Collector he does not appear to have made, or to have thought it necessary to get made, any inquiry into the substance of the mendacious report of the Sub-Inspector of Police, Vengurla. If that is the way the higher authorities are to exercise their power, what is the worth of the safeguard desired by the Government in entrusting powers of dismissal and suspension in those higher authorities?......... Adequate comment is beyond our capacity. The police administration is getting more and more expensive every year. And some members of the police department justify that increased expenditure by behaving prejudicially to the cause of the Empire. The infringement of the civil right of the people by such a low animal as the head constable in this case taking on himself peremptorily to stop without any order a public dramatic performance is certainly less of an offence than acting prejudicially to the cause of the Empire. And if the guilty officials are not punished for the latter, they certainly can remain secure against any apprehension in connection with the former. We await anxiously what action Government take in this matter." [Commenting on the Shiroda case, the Rást Goftár remarks that if there be even a substratum of truth in this example of alleged police zulum as is mentioned in the Bombay Chronicle it is necessary for Government to deal with the police in a strong manner, because, adds the paper, officers of lower rank have now-a-days become very overbearing and are severely oppressing people in the villages.]

Comments on the action taken by the police in connection with the meeting at Hubli (Dhárwár).
Shubhodaya (89), 10th Aug.

37. Referring to the letter of the District Superintendent of Police of Dhárwár regretting that the public was not informed in time of the prohibition of the Hubli meeting, the Shubhodaya remarks:—What is the meaning of the letter? The District Superintendent of Police is not at all sorry that the meeting was stopped. He regrets that those who arranged the meeting were not informed in time by the police of the prohibition. What a strange ruling! We regret to see that the Police Superintendent does not possess a proper knowledge of the District Police Act which lays down the duties of the police. Section 53 of the Act says that the police should regulate the business going on in a public place. Nowhere does it say that it should be stopped. On market days Durgad Bail (in Hubli) is full of people. Will the police disperse them? The Durgad Bail belongs to the public. Police should confine themselves to their duties. They can only regulate meetings and processions and they cannot stop them.

Comments on the Sind Settlement Committee's Report.
Sind Advocate (9), 2nd Aug.

38. "In Settlement Committee's Report it is triumphantly pointed out that in the Punjab to which (and not to Bombay) the conditions of Sind correspond—so they say—the period of settlement is twenty years, and hence the demand for thirty years, settlement is extravagant......... It is no doubt true that in the Punjab the term is at present twenty years, but ever since Lord Lawrence's strong recommendation for thirty years an agitation has been carried on for an increase of the interval; and it was only the other day that in the Punjab Legislative Council a motion brought forward by a responsible non-official member was defeated simply by the casting vote of the President, i.e., the Lieutenant-Governor. What does that show? Nothing but this, that in the Punjab there is even stronger opinion in favour of the thirty years' settlement and the Punjab will soon have it. The ignorance of the officials is less pardonable because that of which they have proved themselves guilty is matter of current history."

The Hyderabad (Sind) authorities and the Home Rule movement.
Young India (14), 15th Aug.

39. "The Sind-Hyderabad authorities seem to be bent upon obtaining some notoriety for their reactionary tendencies. It is not long ago that they obtained a measure of success in this direction, and they seem to be determined upon obtaining a larger measure. Viewed in this light, their latest exploits in prohibiting the holding of all sort of pro-Besant meetings seem perfectly justified and the benighted character of the Province of Sind has only offered untold facilities to the authorities for indulging in antics in repression. It seems to us that this craving for notoriety would have been limited if the Central Government had shown some solicitude to be in closer touch with the state of things in that part of the Presidency. But the recent interpellations have elicited the fact that the central authority is lamentably in the dark regarding the antics of the Sind officials, and we are afraid that that knowledge has only encouraged them to indulge still further in the pursuit of footling tactics."

Indians in South Africa.
Baroda Vartamán (57), 18th Aug.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 16th Aug.; Shri Venkateshwar (80), 16th Aug.

40. Referring to the incident that took place at Johannesburg some time ago in which an Indian died as a result of his being thrown out of a tram car by a white man, the Baroda Vartamán remarks:—On the complaint being lodged the magistrate convicted the white Lát and inflicted a fine of Rs. 750 or nine months' imprisonment and let him go! The price of a poor Indian's life is Rs. 750! It is stated that another Indian was similarly thrown off from a car, but his soul being tenacious escaped getting redemption at the hands of the white man! Dear me! We thought that the painful chapter relating to South Africa had closed as a result of the efforts of Mahátma Gandhi; but no, it is the same old round again! The brave General Smuts praises the Indian army and shows great sympathy for the Indians, but will he be able to say what is the significance of the proposition "the South African situation has satisfactorily improved" when the white sahebs of South Africa can escape on the payment of a fine of fifty pounds after taking the life of an Indian by throwing him off as if he were a beast? A contemporary rightly inquires what punishment would have been awarded to an Indian for killing a white in that manner. [The Praja Mitra and Pársi dwells upon the overpowering desire of all nations for their national and economic development and believes that a permanent peace can be established only on the basis of allowing all nations development of their trade and commerce in a free manner and also of allowing them the use of all parts of the earth. It regrets that the people of the same empire have not yet been prepared to make some such arrangements in their mutual relations with one another. The paper then refers to the movements said to have been set on foot for the exclusion of the Indians and other Asiatics from South Africa, for preventing them from acquiring immoveable property and for placing trade restrictions on them and regrets that the attitude of the local authorities in that connection is also not reassuring. It concludes with inquiring how the hopes of the Allied nations and their Governments for a permanent peace are likely to be realised under these circumstances. The Shri Venkateshwar also adversely criticises the light nature of the punishment awarded in the case above referred to. If the law in that country (South Africa) has provided a fine of 50 pounds sterling for the offence of manslaughter, the paper sarcastically remarks, ruffians have a fine opportunity of knocking off the heads of men and play with them as if they were balls. If, however, it adds, the law permitted a severer punishment for the offence, the magistrate must not have considered an Indian life to be of higher value than that of a costly animal.]

Comments on the taking of security from the Sanjibani of Calcutta.
Dnyán Prakásh (36), 15th Aug.

41. We think that the reasons advanced by the Bengal Government for the demand of security from the Sanjibani, that it had been warned twice and that the declarant was an uneducated man, are worthless. The list of warnings recently issued by Government contained the names of newspapers that did not know that they had been warned. No one supposes that the paper has published objectionable articles because Government have warned it. It is not proper that security should be demanded because a compositor has come forward to make the declaration. So long as the policy of the paper is not really objectionable it is necessary that anyone coming forward to make the declaration should be allowed to do so without any security.

Comments on the fresh forfeiture of the New India security.
Message (6), 18th Aug.

42. "Considering that the Madras Government is not yet out of the first security forfeiture of 'New India' under Mrs. Besant, we wonder that that Government should have been so hasty to utilise the sweeping and arbitrary powers in a second case. The first case is still under appeal before the Privy Council by special leave of that august judicial tribunal; and it would have been certainly more judicious if it had waited until the Privy Council had delivered its judgment. We can only explain the hastiness of the Government of Lord Pentland on one of two assumptions, viz., that it does not care sufficiently for any of your judicial tribunals and that sort of nonsense or that it is extremely nervous about the validity of its action. Perhaps, there are other 'valid' reasons which entitle the Madras Government to confiscate the property of a loyal and law-abiding 'Citizen of the Empire,' without going through the common formalities of a judicial trial, but those reasons are not so apparent to us. The present action should, however, convince the people that the provincial autocrats and bureaucrats do not care in the least for your so-called public opinion. Those who have suddenly begun in the city to exhibit a love for the 'constitution of the Congress' as they alone could interpret it, ought to take note of this fact. We presume Lord Pentland's Government is determined to put to complete test the power of endurance in the present political agitation. If that be so, we assure it in advance that it will be disappointed if it expects that the present agitation is one of those passing phenomena of the Indian atmosphere, destined to disappear like a gathering of clouds."

LEGISLATION.

Muhammadans and the Honourable Patel's Education Bill.
Sind Moslem (11), 4th Aug.

43. After quoting the views of those who took part in the debate in the Honourable Mr. Patel's Education Bill in the last session of the Bombay Legislative Council, the Sind Moslem remarks :—"We believe the Honourable Mr. Lawrence and Honourable Mr. Ghulam Husain were to some extent reasonable in expressing their fears in this connection. For we believe some clauses in the bill of which the Honourable Mr. Patel made a mention in his speech, particularly clause No. 15, will come in the way of the poor Muhammadan parents and there is likelihood of their coming into trouble. It is, therefore, the duty of all Moslem educationists in Sind and their well-wishers to go carefully into these clauses so as to safeguard the interests of the poor Muhammadan parents before the bill is finally passed. It may not be out of place here to mention that we are in favour of compulsory and free education and not only compulsory education."

EDUCATION.

Comments on the institution by the Bombay University of a degree of Teaching.
Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 19th Aug., Eng. cols.

*44. "The institution of a degree in Teaching by the Bombay University promises to lift up that profession into a higher plane. Of course we are not confident that the institution of a degree alone will lead to the desired results. In fact what is wanted is training institutions for men who have a real love and liking for the profession and who mean to devote themselves to it throughout their life. And although in the natural sequence of affairs the degree should have followed the establishment of such institutions, we hope the latter will not be long in following the degree. The great satisfaction to us is the recognition of the importance and greatness of the profession."

Alleged waste of stationery in the Educational Department.

Subodha Patrika (42), 12th Aug., Eng. cols.

45. "'Is not India at war with Germany'? is a question which naturally rises to the lips of those who have an opportunity of witnessing the waste that is going on roundabout us in the use or rather misuse of stationery by Government offices and particularly by the Educational Department. Circular letters of not more than a dozen lines typed on highly glazed foolscap paper mentioning the names of students debarred, books sanctioned or proscribed, etc., are sent out frequently from the offices of the Inspectors. The information contained in these circulars could be easily printed in the form of a tract once a month and thus considerable economy could be practised not only in stationery but in postage. We do not intend to criticize at length the value of the contents of these letters which are often of a worthless character not certainly worth the paper on which they are typed. Government offices and especially the Educational Department ought to set a lesson in economy by ceasing to waste money on mere red tape. It is astonishing to find that when paper of all descriptions has become awfully dear, the Director of Public Instruction should have yet issued no circular asking schools to practice economy in the use of exercise books. We are glad to find that the Educational Department of the United Provinces has set a good example in this respect."

RAILWAYS.

The G. I. P. Railway strike.

Kesari (106), 14th Aug.; Indu Prakásh (39), 15th Aug.

• 46. Referring to the G. I. P. Railway strike the Kesari says:—Government have given an indifferent reply that they cannot interfere though they shed crocodile tears in season and out of season over the poor condition of the labourers. Do not the local officials know that the British Ministers have intervened in labour strikes in England and have made the capitalists pay more wages? The heartless conduct of the G. I. P. Railway officials and the allowances granted to their white fellow countrymen on higher pay and the refusal to consider the grievances of Indian labourers getting lower pay give rise to indignation in the hearts of self-respecting Indians. The officials who have refused to grant allowances to labourers getting less than Rs. 50 have granted increments to guards, station masters, etc. We do not think that the Agent will consider sympathetically the grievances of workshop labourers. They should place them before the Home Board through Mr. Baptista. [The Indu Prakásh advises both the parties not to prolong the quarrel but to come to a settlement. It asks the men to return to work and requests the Agent to consider their claims.]

Sánj Vartamán (31), 16th Aug.; Bombay Samáchár (59), 17th Aug.

47. Sánj Vartamán considers the scale of salaries proposed by the Agent of the G. I. P. Railway for the workshop operatives as unsatisfactory and hopes that the Railway Company will see its way to put an end to the strike. Should the Railway Company not be able to settle the matter, the paper suggests that Government should intervene and bring the strike to an end and thus avoid further loss to the Company and the fifteen thousand operatives involved in the strike. It considers the demands of the strikers to be perfectly reasonable. [The Bombay Samáchár on the other hand warns the operatives against playing into the hands of certain selfish individuals who have been giving them false hopes, and asks them to resume work forthwith and then bring their grievances to the notice of their superiors as suggested by the Kámgár Hitwardhak Sabha.]

Mahrátta (5), 19th Aug.

48. "We confess we cannot understand the justice or expediency of Government standing by and looking on as if they were not concerned at all in the welfare of the many thousands of poor men, women and children who are suffering on account of the unreasonable obstinacy of the Railway Company. These poor people are surely members of the 'masses' for whom so much solicitude is so often professed in bureaucratic quarters."]

MUNICIPALITIES.

The Kennedy Sea Face (Bombay) and Government.

Jám-e-Jamshed (23) 13th and 15th Aug.; Sánj Vartmán (31), 14th Aug.

49. The Jám-e-Jamshed disapproves of the proposal contained in the letter addressed by Under Secretary, Public Works Department, Bombay, to the Bombay Municipal Corporation suggesting that the latter body should build a new road along the Kennedy Sea Face from the Marine Lines Railway Station to Chowpati. It inquires how the Bombay Municipaltiy, whose revenues are limited, can undertake such an expensive work when a wealthy public body like Government are unable to build this road. Do not Government know, the paper further inquires, that the Municipality cannot cope with other more important and pressing demands for want of funds? It believes that the proposed new road, if built, will only serve as a promenade for well-to-do people and declares that the Municipality should not undertake its construction at the present time. It is of opinion that by acquiescing in the present proposal the Corporation will be creating a bad precedent so far as its own interests are concerned. [In the subsequent issue the paper refers to the reply forwarded by Government to the Bombay Municipality declaring their inability to make provision for lighting the Kennedy Sea Face and watering the ride alongside it and remarks that the reasons assigned by Government for their inability are ridiculous. It raises the question if Government have not money enough even to provide about two hundred lamps for the time being on the sea-face, the cost of which would hardly come to one thousand rupees. Such a reply, the paper opines, creates great dissatisfaction among the large bulk of the public. It does not approve of the Government policy of relying upon the opinion of three or four Government officials and disregarding the most urgent and, at the same time, inexpensive demands of the people. The Sánj Vartamán hopes that the Bombay Municipal Corporation will refuse to accept the Government proposal about the former building the new road along the sea-face. It also raises the question whether the Municipality can build a road upon ground which belongs to others.]

Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 19th Aug., Eng. cols.

50. Writing on the subject of the improvement of the Kennedy Sea Face, Bombay, the Kaiser-i-Hind remarks:—"We have the authority of the Under Secretary to the Bombay Government, Public Works Department, that 'from reports Government have received, it appears to them that the nuisance is not so serious as is represented in the petition.' We are at a loss whom to connote by the word Government. As we understand it, we would request His Excellency and his three honourable colleagues to enjoy a walk along this disgraceful part with their Secretaries and Under Secretaries. That to us appears to be the only way to bring the nuisance home to those who deny its existence.......... We cannot understand why, failing the Trust, Government should not undertake to finance the construction of the road and why the heavy burden of five and a quarter lakhs should fall on the rate-payers of Bombay. It is equitable to make the Municipality maintain the road, not to construct it."

Comments on the proposal to levy a tax on professions at Matheran.

Rást Goftár (30), 19th Aug., Eng. cols.

51. Commenting upon the proposal to levy a tax on the professions at Matheran, the Rást Goftár remarks:—"Now if it were explicitly stated in terms that these professional gentlemen carrying on their professions in Matheran would have to pay such taxes, we could admit the reasonableness of such a demand, but engineers and architects and contractors of buildings can scarcely go to Matheran to look for business. The station is a small health resort, and not a great place of business. If the proposal that these professional people will have to pay this tax merely because they belong to those professions, although they do not carry on their professions in Matheran, then it is an iniquitous proposal which must be unhesitatingly and emphatically condemned, and against which every inhabitant of Matheran should energetically protest. In fact, the matter should be brought at once to the notice of the Bombay Government so that this preposterous proposal may be vetoed."

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 24th August 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY : PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 34 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 25th August 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION —

British Rule:

A justification of the Government circulars prohibiting students from attending political meetings 18
Alleged friction between Hindus and Muhammadans at Jubbulpore . 20
An open letter to the Head Priest of the Borahs 21
Comments on a recent speech of Mr. Bhupendranath Basu . . . 22 & 23
Comments on the announcement about Mr. Montagu's forthcoming visit to India . . . . 1—6
Comments on the late Mr. Gokhale's scheme of reforms published by High Highness the Aga Khan . . . . 9—13
Lord Islington's pronouncement on Indian Reforms 8
Mr. Montagu's statement in Parliament about India's political future. 7
Muhammadans and the Home Rule movement 19
Necessity of the British retaining control over the internal administration of India 17
Passive resistance . . . . 14 & 15
The Bureaucracy's love of power is placing obstacles in the way of reforms 16

Excise: Comments on a case in which a false charge of corruption was brought against an Abkári Inspector in the Kaira District . . . 33

His Excellency Lord Willingdon:

Comments on His Excellency Lord Willingdon's remarks about the Indian Defence Force at the Fergusson College 30
Regret at Her Excellency Lady Willingdon's bad state of health and the need for her to leave Bombay to recuperate 31

Indians abroad: Alleged prohibition of respectable Indians from visiting America on business 29
Press Act: Comments on the forfeiture of the security of New India . . 32
Public Service: Complaint that Government has been excluding Brahmins from Sub-Judges' appointments 35
Revenue matters: Protest against Government orders directing Inamdars of Bijápur to keep a record of rights for their villages 34
Sind: Alleged need of police reorganization in— 36

B 202—a CON

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

War:

Comments on the announcement regarding commissions to Indians in the Army . . . . 24—26

The — 27

What should be done to make the Indian Defence Force popular . 28

EDUCATION—

A lecture on the modern system of education in India 43

Comments on His Excellency Lord Chelmsford's address before the Secondary Education Conference . . . . 40 & 41

Comments on the secondary Educational Conference at Simla regarding teaching of English in secondary schools 42

The last Convocation of the Bombay University . . . , ... 37

The Vice-Chancellor's Convocation address at the Bombay University . 38 & 39

RAILWAYS—

The G. I. P. Railway strike . . . . 44—48

MUNICIPALITIES—

Comments on the Government resolution on the working of Local Boards in the Presidency 49

Government should lay down a general policy as regards the constitution of all Local Boards 50

Municipalities do not enjoy real self-government 51

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMIINSTRATION.

Comments on the announcement about Mr. Montagu's forthcoming visit to India.

Mahratta (5), 26th Aug.

*1. "There are features in the announcement which may well raise a smile on the face of the most serious and angry thought within the bosom of the most forgiving. 'The British Government and the Government of India on whom the responsibility lies for the welfare and advancement of the Indian peoples must be judges of the time and measure of each advance.' That statement is truly humorous—and at the same time ominous.......... The contention of the people is that these authorities have not discharged their responsibilities in a commendable way. Much that could have been done in the last 50 years—not to speak of earlier days—has been left undone.......... In fine, by the 'irresponsible' and wholly unsatisfactory manner in which the 'responsibility' so much talked about has been discharged so far by our Government during quite a long period of rule, while other civilised Governments were taking rapid strides forward in the work of the true all-round development of the several peoples for whom they were responsible, our Government has, in our opinion, lost, morally speaking, the right of putting forward the plea that 'they must be the judges of the time and measure of each advance.'.......... England is a trustee. And the right of a trustee to control the destinies of his ward is but limited. Without going further into detailed argument over the matter, we put it as our categorical National demand that the time and measure of each advance shall be roughly settled to-day.......... If this is not done, and if the fixed period which is to elapse before India really governs herself and is an equal member in the Empire is unreasonably long, say over 30 years, we may assure our rulers that India cannot breathe contentedly.......... For the Government of India is practically a big bureaucratic clique that never will think of letting the people move forward except under compulsion of some kind. The announcement, as it stands, is nothing more than a declaration of pious wishes, but even in this declaration there is an exhibition of 'small-heartedness.' A truly bold and statesmanlike declaration would have contained a definite date, as indicated above, by which the evolution of the Governmental machinery in India would be completed (or, at any rate, energetic attempts made to complete it). It would have been free from the exhibition of want of trust in the people.......... Indian ability is not questioned. But Indian 'sense of responsibility' and desire for 'co-operation' are questioned.......... We are told that the Government of India are in complete accord with His Majesty's Government in the matter of the progressive realisation of responsible government in India. Who would have thought that the authors of the most unreasoning repression directed against forceful constitutional agitation have been all the time thinking of giving us 'as soon as possible' 'substantial reform' leading to the progressive realisation of responsible government? Would it be an illogical deduction from facts that the complete accord of the Indian Government is a latter-day, a very recent change brought about by the unexpected failure of the policy of cruel repression which is still stalking abroad in our peaceful country. If we are right in our guess, then the lesson for us is obvious.......... Let us not forget ourselves, let us not forget our duty to our country, and the best and the only way of fulfilling it adequately, when our best leaders are in internment and our most cherished rights are made mockery of. We must declare for passive resistance as the only remedy that National Honour imperatively demands under the circumstances." [Elsewhere the paper writes :—" Mr. Montagu's speech on the Mesopotamia affairs, extracts from which are given elsewhere, breathes sentiments which are glaringly incompatible with the tone of the 'announcement'. 'The history of this war shows that you can rely upon the loyalty of the Indian people to the British Empire—if you ever before doubted it!' A man who speaks thus from the bottom of his heart can't possibly subscribe without a twitch of the conscience to the ungenerous and unjust aspersions on loyalty implied in the closing portion of the announcement." In another article the paper urges the need of "forceful agitation" to strengthen the hands of Mr. Montagu. It also declares that unless Mrs. Besant, etc., are released, the Indian leaders will refuse to confer with Mr. Montagu and thus his mission will be fruitless.]

Bombay Samáchár (59), 23rd Aug.; Hindusthán (20), 21st Aug.; Sánj Vartamán (31), 21st Aug.; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 22nd Aug.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 22nd Aug.; Shri Venkateshwar (80), 22nd Aug.

2. The Bombay Samáchár remarks that the announcement about Mr. Montagu's proposed visit to India in connection with the political reforms to be introduced in this country will not fail to produce feelings of joy among the entire Indian people. It declares that the proposed visit affords a strong proof of the determination the British public to give India her due place in the Empire. It observes that the announcement demonstrates how uncalled for was the misunderstanding that has prevailed in some quarters with regard to the policy of the Indian authorities since the commencement of Lord Chelmsford's Viceroyalty. The paper appeals to the Indian politicians of all shades of opinion once for all to set aside all their preconceived ideas and prejudices and co-operate with Mr. Montagu in making his visit a complete success so far as the interests of India are concerned and to make a beginning in that direction by dissociating themselves from thoughtless and extreme measures. It wishes that the programme of Mr. Montagu's visit should be so arranged that he might be able to attend the coming sessions of the Indian National Congress and the All-India Moslem League. The paper then goes on to suggest that if that course be not feasible, the leaders of these two bodies should arrange to hold the sessions at Delhi and at a time which would render it practicable for the Secretary of State for India to attend them. [The Hindusthán remarks that the people of India have become indebted to Mr. Montagu for his undertaking a voyage to India at a time when travelling is attended with peril. It declares that his forthcoming visit will enable Mr. Montagu to see India in her true aspect and to realise how exaggerated and misleading are the statements that are being made about the Indian people by certain Anglo-Indian journalists and ex-Governors. The paper also expresses the belief that Mr. Montagu will find India in quite a different mood if the Government of India will liberate the Indian political prisoners before he visits this country. The Sánj Vartamán regards Mr. Montagu's proposed visit to India as a step farsighted and full of political wisdom. It also dissuades Indian politicians holding extreme views from keeping aloof from co-operation with Government. It expresses the opinion that Mr. Montagu's visit will prove fruitful of beneficial results if, instead of keeping himself confined to Delhi, he prefers to come in close touch with the Indian public. The Jám-e-Jamshed remarks that the time has come for the realisation of the message of "hope" which His Majesty left to the people of India on his leaving this country. The Praja Mitra and Pársi greatly approves of the provision that has been made for affording the Indian public ample opportunity for the discussion of proposals that will be formulated as a result of Mr. Montagu's inquiry in India before submitting them to Parliament, and believes that such a course will tend greatly to strengthen British rule in India. The Shri Venkateshwar also enthusiastically welcomes the announcement.]

Rást Goftár (30), 26th Aug., Eng. cols.

*3. "We should be less than human if we do not own to a feeling of elation at the announcement that Mr. Montagu, the new Secretary of State for India, is coming out to India to make personal inquiries as to reforms that should be introduced in India at an early date. We say a feeling of elation is prefectly justifiable, but there must be no feeling of exultation, because it must not for one moment be supposed that we are in sight of the promised land and the goal has been nearly won. We here in India have had the bitter experience how the hardly won progress of years may be lost in a few months. Even now while the war of human liberty is going on and India has been spending her blood and money freely, the forces of re-action were let loose in this country and all the agencies that tend to alienate the people were at work. The highhanded manner in which many things were being done in several provinces shewed as if India were a rebellious country instead of one the splendour of whose loyalty has filled with admiration the whole world.......... Unchecked the bureaucracy would have brought affairs in India to a serious pass; they were steadily alienating all the best men in the country, and the movement of alienation would have spread rapidly......... This danger has been averted."

Indu Prakásh (39), 21st Aug.

4. It is well that Mr. Montagu is coming here just at the nick of time. The Viceroy also is to be on tour in November, but it is not known whether Mr. Montagu is to accompany him or to remain at Delhi to carry out his purpose. It would be well if he toured about the country himself inasmuch as he would thereby come into personal contact with the popular leaders and derive light from them on many public questions. We are sure that even the most out-and-out Home Rulers will welcome Mr. Montagu's visit. We are of opinion that the Gokhale scheme, if so modified as to give half of the Imperial Executive Council seats to Indians, and also otherwise altered will suit our present purposes. It is well that Mr. Montagu is going to institute personal inquiries. It should not be forgotten that he is coming out at the invitation of Lord Chelmsford.

Message (6), 22nd and 25th Aug.

5. After expressing its "great satisfaction" at the announcement of Mr. Montagu's coming visit to India and the admission of Indians to commissioned ranks in the army, the Message remarks:—"There is statesmanship in all these decisions and our own opinion is that much of the credit is due to Mr. Montagu. Though the announcement regarding Mr. Montagu's forthcoming visit is couched in the orthodox bureaucratic phraseology, we think it is entirely the genuine desire of Mr. Montagu to satisfy himself regarding Indian conditions at the present time.......... Indeed, it seems to us that Mr. Montagu with his personal knowledge and acquaintance with Indian affairs has felt sceptical regarding the bureaucratic versions which have been allowed to reach England regarding the unfitness of Indians for any form of advance towards self-government but what the bureaucratic Councils think they can 'safely' permit in this country.......... While we heartily welcome the announcements, we feel we must utter a word of caution to our own countrymen against being led away by any mirages regarding the nearness at hand of the Indian millennium. Until we are sure that the most earnest efforts are being made on the other side, we cannot speed down in our work of political salvation; but we must continue to press for the immediate reversal of the unjust and arbitrary policy of repression and for the release of those who are made to suffer merely for their convictions." [The paper writes in a subsequent issue:—"Bureaucrats may fear a great blow to their sense of prestige in any policy which starts with such an act of justice and statesmanship. But if perfect harmony is to prevail the only course which prudence and consistency dictate is the one we have urged here. If it can be followed in Ireland there is no reason why it should not be followed in India with better results."]

Indu Prakásh (39), 23rd Aug., Eng. cols; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 23rd Aug., Eng. cols.

6. "Some papers have opined that Mr. Montagu's visit will encourage extravagant hopes. We do not agree. When the demands of India are not extravagant, how can her hopes be extravagant? Mr. Montagu will find that India is really in an economic plight and that the only way to improve the conditions is to grant fiscal autonomy to India. Secondly, progress must be made in the direction of making the executive responsible to the Legislature. That is the sine qua non of real self-rule. Mr. Montagu realizes that the gospel of stationary humanity, exploded everywhere in the world, cannot hold good even in India. A noble-minded Englishman, at the helm of Indian affairs, visiting India, is a great event. The stars will certainly bless Mr. Montagu's visit, which we do expect to prove of highest good to the cause of progress."

[The Jam-e-Jamshed writes:—"It is scarcely using the language of rhetoric to say that the arrival of Mr. Montagu in India heralds the opening of a new era in the history of India's political development with a new spirit of tolerance and mutual co-operation animating it. It remains for the Government of India to mark their recognition of this new spirit by releasing all those interned for political reasons during the last few months, including Mrs. Beasant."]

Mr. Montague's statement in Parliament about India's political future.

Gujarāti* (16), 26th Aug., Eng. cols.; Dnyān Prakāsh (36), 22nd Aug.; Kaiser-i-Hind* (24), 26th Aug., Eng. cols.

7. "The procedure adopted by His Majesty's Government in announcing the policy they propose to follow in the further governance of India was not altogether a happy one. .... Further, we cannot say that the announcement of the policy is couched in language which will inspire the people of India with very great confidence or evoke an outburst of unalloyed gratitude. Just as Lord Islington was careful to repeat his formula of reform by cautious, nay, over-cautious stages, the announcement is permeated by the same spirit of timid hesitancy......... The concluding portion of the announcement is not only wanting in grace but looks more like the schoolmaster's exhortation to his pupils to be on their guard or of good behaviour, if they wish to be treated with greater leniency or consideration. Surely in a country where was penned Queen Victoria's graceful and magnanimous Proclamation, the penultimate sentence, in which is asserted the exclusive right of the British Government and the Government of India to determine the time and measure of each advance according to the degree of co-operation on the part of the Indian people and of confidence that can be reposed in them, could have been clothed in a more graceful garb and in a spirit far removed from that of proud pedagogism or self-conscious omniscience and omnipotence. It is scarcely conceived in good taste and has a distinct flavour of self-centred Curzonism about it." [The Dnyān Prakāsh on the other hand remarks that the announcement will gladden the people of India and urges that nobody need take objection to the statement that complete self-government will be reached by gradual steps. It declares that it is but proper that further advance should depend upon the way in which we avail ourselves of the opportunities that may first be accorded us. It points out that though the advance is to be determined by the British Government and the Government of India, Indian public opinion is also to be taken into consideration, and concludes by saying that after all, everything will depend upon the magnanimity which Mr. Montague will show in bringing about a satisfactory solution of the whole question. The Kaiser-i-Hind remarks:—"The goal to which all India is determined to attain is now gracefully acknowledged and accepted by His Majesty's Government. With that goal in view the policy of 'progressive realisation of responsible Government in India, as an integral part of the British Empire' is laid down. The decision to take substantial steps in this direction has been arrived at. And Mr. Montagu comes out to determine what these steps should be. It would indeed be rash to prejudge Mr. Montagu's decision. But his previous utterances, his known sympathies and his liberal traditions amply justify the hope that the voice of the country will be heard and respected."]

Lord Islington's pronouncement on Indian Reforms.

Subodh Patrika (42), 19th Aug., Eng. cols.

8. "We cannot congratulate Lord Islington on what Reuter wires out as his 'pronouncement on Indian reforms'. We have had quite enough of this spectacle in India of Provincial satraps making their own 'pronouncements' one after another, if not under instructions from the Government of India, at any rate without let or hindrance from them, while the Viceroy himself is maintaining sphinx-like silence......... It is difficult to know how the Under Secretary considered himself at liberty or called upon to take as the subject of a lecture to Oxford students a question which is officially before the India Office and the Cabinet and go into details in advance of the really responsible functionary, the Secretary of State."

Comments on the late Mr. Gokhale's scheme of reforms published by His Highness the Aga Khan.

Mahrātta (5), 26th Aug.

9. "We print elsewhere the letter of the Honourable Mr. Shastri, President of the Servants of India Society, to the Hindu with reference to Mr. Gokhale's scheme of reforms. It will be seen that Mr. Gokhale's standpoint in preparing the draft was to give the authorities a chance to try and 'avert agitation during the war and ensure the fullest co-operation of the people'. The authorities did not take the chance. How the people of India might have received the announcement of reforms on the lines of Mr. Gokhale's draft it is idle to speculate. But a free-will gift of even Mr. Gokhale's reforms coming from a close-fisted Government would no doubt have gone far to make the people hopeful. But 'what might have been' does not help us now. Government, instead of honouring the memory of Mr. Gokhale whose 'greatness' has been in official and Anglo-Indian quarters so fulsomely admired after his death (though while living he was the 'No. 62' of the C. I. D.'s 'marked men') by taking some action in accordance with his suggestions on Indian reforms, thought proper to take another course—and we are reaping the harvest now. To put the late patriot's scheme now before the public, when the march of events has necessarily rendered it extremely unsuitable (whatever merit it might have had for a few months after it was drawn), is to make oneself ridiculous."

Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 26th Aug., Eng. cols.

*10. After surveying the political situation in India since the time of Lord Curzon, the Kaiser-i-Hind writes:—"From all this it is clear that the present situation on all hands is considered to be of a very grave character. Different provincial governments with varying degrees of alacrity have been vainly trying a repressive policy. Far from repressing, it has served to popularise the ideal of Home Rule. The lecture of Lord Islington on the Indian political reforms has come far too late, and has no effect in allaying the present agitation. If Government sincerely desire to put down or at least render innocuous the Home Rule movement, they should retrace their steps from an untenable position and try to regain the support of the Moderates by definitely availing themselves of the statesmanlike suggestions made by the late Mr. Gokhale, and recently published by His Highness the Aga Khan. This memorandum does not go so far as to advocate Home Rule in the Besantian form. It rather seeks to prepare Indians for fuller powers."

Message (6), 21st Aug.

11. "If those who have discovered in Gokhale a hero and a statesman when he had been gathered to the majority, had taken the trouble to discover it when he was alive and acted on his advice, born of close knowledge and experience, we ourselves feel much of the ground for the present agitation would have been removed. To pretend however that the draft which Mr. Gokhale had prepared within six months after the outbreak of war for a high Government official represented the sum total of all that the Indians wanted is the greatest humbug that we have yet come across in these days. To these Mr. Shastri has given a crushing reply, and we ourselves think that no more effective answer could be given. 'If Mr. Gokhale were alive to-day' says Mr. Shastri, 'he would be among the strongest exponents of the essential principles embodied in the Memorandum of the Nineteen and in the scheme adopted by the National Congress and the Moslem League'."

Kesari (106), 21st Aug.; Sandesh (118), 21st Aug.

12. The flag of Indian Swarājya was first hoisted when the Congress and Moslem League scheme of reforms was passed by the Indian National Congress. Government are now engaged in capturing this position and it seems they want to do that by bombarding us with schemes containing smaller reforms than those embodied in the Congress scheme, but we do not think that this their selfish attempt will succeed. Their latest attempt is the publication of the Gokhale scheme. If these schemes had been published before the Congress scheme was out they might have been considered. But when our demand has been definitely settled there is nothing left to consider about. Have Government ever published up till now of their own accord any scheme of granting rights to the people before any demand was made for them? The tradition has all along been that people should tire themselves out by demanding a right, that Government should first ridicule the demand and try to sow discord among the people and then offer something when there are clear signs that if nothing is given there would rage discontent in the land and that perchance there might be riots. Government should always be frank in speaking out their mind. But that is not their way. They are always adopting tortuous and elusive methods in making known their sentiments, which only excite ridicule. Instead of showing over-modesty on their part, this only shows their clandestine way of doing things. They might think this a skilful way to feel the situation, but they do not appear to know that it only gives rise to distrust. Mr. Gokhale's scheme is not now worth the paper on which it is written; if it had been published at the beginning of the war, probably it might have been useful in moderating the demand for Swarájya. The Honourable Mr. Shastri who is the successor of Mr. Gokhale has hastened to disown it and he says that the scheme was prepared at the request of a high official authority (probably it may be at Lord Willingdon's request) to put into a definite form the reforms that should be granted by Government before the agitation became strong. So the scheme is not Mr. Gokhale's; it is Lord Willingdon's. The scheme was prepared in order to stop agitation, but not a single reform mentioned in it having been introduced the Swarájya movement was begun. But now Government instead of carrying out the reforms have begun to speak against the movement and to resort to legal outrage. So the secret treaty between Government and Mr. Gokhale stands annulled. His Highness the Aga Khan himself is no longer in the forefront and it is ridiculous for a discredited Moderate to try to mislead the nation by publishing the testament of a dead Moderate. [The Sandesh says:—Indian popular party will accept neither Lord Islington's scheme nor Mr. Gokhale's scheme. It has already settled its minimum demand and it will never go back upon it. We congratulate the Honourable Mr. Shastri on his explaining clearly the genesis of the Gokhale scheme.]

Sánj Vartamán (31), 18th and 20th Aug.; Bombay Samáchár (59), 21st Aug.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 21st Aug.; Hindusthán (20), 18th Aug.

13. Mr. Gokhale's scheme of reforms might have served a good purpose in the year 1914 when it was framed, but the world has made large strides since then and so the scheme cannot be said to be suitable to India's present requirements. It is likely that attempts will be made in certain quarters to utilise the scheme in dealing a blow to the political aspirations of Indians and so, in order to counteract them, a deputation should be sent to England as soon as possible. [In a subsequent issue the paper discusses Mr. Gokhale's scheme and declares that since it was framed by Mr. Gokhale without consulting his friends and at a time when the world had not been convulsed by the war, it will not appeal to the Indian people and that nothing short of the suggestions made by the nineteen members of the Viceregal Legislative Council will satisfy the political aspirations of India. The Bombay Samáchár, while admitting that Mr. Gokhale's scheme falls short of the present requirements of India, believes that some of the suggestions contained therein about giving the Imperial Legislative Council control over military and naval affairs and giving the King's Commission to Indians, will tend to support the demands put forth by the Joint Committee of the Congress and the Moslem League. The Praja Mitra and Pársi writes:—In view of the explanation coming from the Honourable Mr. Sastri about Mr. Gokhale's scheme it is clear that Mr. Gokhale himself did not consider it complete or final and it would be inadvisable to regard it as an authoritative document. The Hindusthán is of opinion that the scheme embodies many important suggestions in spite of its being incomplete owing to its having been framed before the war, since the beginning of which the world has moved rapidly along the lines of progress.]

Passive resistance.
Gujaráti (16), 19th Aug.

14. Commenting upon the resolution of the Provincial Congress Committee in the matter of passive resistance, the Gujaráti writes:—The question of resorting to passive resistance is being discussed at present because the officials make use of certain repressive measures as it suits their whims and the people cannot get their grievances redressed, and they have not also the means of doing so. People want justice and the right use of legislative measures; they do not want to be at the mercy of the officials. Passive resistance consists in a person being prepared to undergo physical hardships when his feelings are not respected. He thereby means to show that the legislation is faulty and that the administration is defective and badly conducted. We do not think that there is anything wrong or unconstitutional in passive resistance. Those who resort to passive resistance break the law, but they do not come in the way of the law being put into force nor do they advocate the subversion of the Government established by law. They do not consider a certain legislative measure as conducive to public happiness and so they refuse to respect it and are prepared to undergo punishment and sufferings rather than submit to what they consider as unjust. Nothing but passive resistance on the part of Indians will convince the people of England that the allegations made against Mrs. Besant and her associates, of stirring up the people against Government, are false. [Elsewhere the paper gives a substance of the views expressed in New India and the passive resistance memorial number of Indian Opinion wherein the question of passive resistance in all its aspects is discussed and it is shown how the weapon can be successfully used against Government and society alike for getting rid of harmful laws and customs.]

Subodh Patrika (42), 19th Aug., Eng. cols.

15. "We are not anxious to anticipate the decision of the committee which has been appointed by the Provincial Congress Committee to define what is meant by passive resistance, but we certainly wish that the question had not been at all countenanced by the joint conference of the Congress and the League. Apart from the value of passive resistance which in the condition of India as it is is nil, there are other and more important considerations which should have weighed with the joint conference to reject the proposal. Experience has shown that when boycott was resorted to in this Presidency as in other Provinces ten years ago it was the students who were made the victims of the subsequent Government repression and those who advocated boycott escaped scotfree. There is reason to fear that history will repeat itself if boycott and passive resistance are resorted to again, as a protest against Mrs. Besant's internment. Mrs. Besant who only two years ago wrote that a 'handful of passive resisters in three hundred millions of passive acquiescers is futile and their abstinence helps the bureaucracy' is evidently not in favour of the use of this weapon, herself. Why then have anything to do with a measure which instead of achieving the end meant for it, is likely to embroil young men and students in its meshes and thus ruin their careers for ever?"

The Bureaucracy's love of power is placing obstructions in the way of reforms.

Indu Prakásh (39), 23rd Aug.

16. If we bring before our mind's eye the occasion when lower classes in England demanded and got rights from King John or from the official nobles (sic) and the occasion when Charles I had to pay with his life for his lust of power and when irresponsible bureaucracy was wholly sacrificed and the occasion when the first Reform Bill was passed, we find that the bureaucracy is always unwilling to give up its powers and that the agitation is in proportion to its unwillingness. The French Revolution of 1789 is a dreadful picture of this tug-of-war for the possession of power and the Russian Revolution is a mild and revised edition of it. How can India remain quite unaffected by this wave? Official responsibility to the people was the underlying principle of all the various demands made in India. Though the old "swarájya, pure and simple, and boycott" have now reappeared as "Home Rule and passive resistance", the only demand made is that officials should be responsible to the people. Even in Mr. Gokhale's scheme the same principle is embodied. But the jaundiced Englishman of Calcutta sees in it the admission that India is not yet fit for swarájya. What responsible leader says that India is at this moment fit for completete swarájya? But it does not mean that India can never be fit. It cannot be that India is to pass her days in slavery of officials. We must get into the water before learning to swim. Though irresponsible officials may try to threaten us that we might be drowned, it only means that they do not want to part with their powers.

Necessity of the British retaining control over the internal administration of India.

Jagaruk (new), 17th Aug.

17. The Jagaruk admits the necessity of further liberalising the Indian Legislative Councils and also granting autonomy to the Provincial Governments, but it denies that all parties are unanimous as to the granting to the Legislative Councils of complete control over the Executive, as represented by the organs of the educated classes. It declares that in the interests of the well-being of the masses of the country, it is absolutely necessary that the British rulers should retain control over the internal administration of India for several years to come, and it expresses surprise that 'our leaders' should still be blind to or try to belittle the agitation carried on by the non-Brahmins and Zamindars of Madras and the Indian Christians of that part of the country in furtherance of the above view.

A justification of the Government circular prohibiting students from attending political meetings.

Bombay Samáchár (59), 20th Aug.

18. The Bombay Samáchár thanks the Punjab Government for the mercy they have shown to certain misguided youths who intended to fight against Government and expresses the hope that the Government of India will show similar mercy to many youths who have been interned under the Defence of India Act on their expressing their repentance for their lapses. The paper is of opinion that such incidents afford full justification to Government to issue orders prohibiting students from attending political meetings and it hopes that those who have raised an uproar against these orders of Government will now be induced to acknowledge the propriety of the orders when they see that disaffected intriguers work with a view to influencing the minds of students and bringing them into their clutches.

Muhammadans and the Home Rule movement.

Islámic Mail (143), 13th Aug., Urdu edition; Muslim Herald (145), 17th Aug.

19. Referring to the part which some Muhammadans are playing in the Home Rule agitation the Islamic Mail exhorts them to consider carefully how the grant of self-government would affect their co-religionists. It holds that the Brahmins are really aiming at power to be vested in them solely under the guise of self-government, and it fears that some of the first fruits of Home Rule would be the prohibition of cow-killing, and the loss of reputation by British officers who would be called upon to enforce disagreeable orders such as compulsory attendance of unwilling scholars at schools. It asserts that Muhammadans are kept in subjection everywhere by the Hindus, and most of all in those places where they show signs of an awakening. It regards those people who have joined the Hindus as renegade Musalmans, and though it favours the policy of maintaining amicable relations with all classes of Indians, since all must combine to ameliorate the condition of their fellow-brethren in this country, it declares the members of different sects and religions ought to preserve their individuality intact. [The Muslim Herald also opposes the grant of self-government to Indian on the following grounds: the Muslim League does not voice the aspirations of all Indian Musalmans, and its conferment would be injurious to the interests of Muhammadans. The paper cites the treatment which Hindus have meted out to Moslems at Jubbalpore where according to a report published by the Vakil (which the paper reproduces elsewhere) the Muhammadans have had to shut up their mosques owing to the misconduct of the Hindus.]

Alleged friction between Hindus and Muhammadans at Jubbulpore.

Muslim Herald (145), 24th Aug.

20. The Muslim Herald publishes a second extract from a newspaper called Al-asr on the subject of strained relations between the Hindus and Muhammadans of Jubbulpore. The latter paper reports that the Hindus shout and play music in front of the mosques thereby hurting the religious feelings of the Moslems. Three Musalmans have been sent to jail as a result of a rial arising out of these troubles, while the Musalmans have shut up the mosques and have memorialised the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces and His Excellency the Viceroy for a redress of their wrongs. The paper ridicules the demand for Home Rule while different sections of the people have not yet learnt to live amicably together.

An open letter to the Head Priest of the Borahs.
Akhbár-e-Islám (56), 25th Aug.

21. Under the heading "An open letter to Saiyedna Táher Saifuddin Saheb" the Akhbár-e-Islám publishes a letter from an unnamed correspondent to the Head Priest of the Borahs in which he pointedly inquires of the latter if he was right in excommunicating some Borahs and if in doing so he could be said to have properly discharged his duty as a true Dái. He also considers it to be the duty of the Mullaji to remove the belief entertained by some Muhammadans that by the excommunication he has broken one of the principal tenets of Islám which enjoins fraternity and cordiality among the professors of that faith. The writer is not sure how far the belief held by others that the order of excommunication was the result of the Mullaji being led away by others, is true. He is also not at one with those who believe that by resorting to the desperate remedy of excommunication the Mullaji has achieved a permanent victory over his opponents. In most respectful terms he inquires of the Head Priest what guarantee there is that the voice of his opponents that he had stifled by means of the powerful weapon of excommunication would not rise up with redoubled vigour on some occasion in future and whether his advisers are able to give him such a guarantee. The writer then goes on to suggest that the Mullaji has practically done very little in the matter of progress and education among the Borah community. He observes that the reputation of the Borahs as an enterprising and prosperous community is unreal and that the advisers and subordinates of the Mullaji desire to keep him in the dark about the internal rottenness of the community. He then dwells on the desirability of appointing a body of men to supervise and control the actions of his subordinates. The correspondent further inquires of the Mullaji why he does not establish educational institutions and thereby remove the evils of ignorance, superstition, misdirected fanaticism, &c., from among the community.

Comments on a recent speech of Mr. Bhupendranath Basu.
Kesari (106), 21st Aug.

22. Commenting upon Mr. Bhupendranath Basu's recent speech at Calcutta, the Kesari remarks:—Mr. Basu has not yet joined his appointment but he already feels that he constitutes the Government. If he wants his peace to be undisturbed he should try to grant swarájya to India as soon as he assumes office; otherwise he knows by experience how troublesome the Bengali agitators are. Bureaucracy is like an army in a fortress invested by the people. Public leaders joining temporarily any office should behave as a soldier of the investing forces joining by mistake or deliberately the army within would behave if he is made to put on the uniform of the invested army by its General and asked to guard the bastions. Though he has to remember his oath which he takes when he joins the office he should not forget that the soldiers investing the fortress are his own brethren. Or rather he should look more after the interests of the army outside than inside the fortress. If it does not so happen we had better write the obituary notice of a leader when he accepts office than congratulate him on his appointment.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 23rd Aug., Eng. cols.

23. "If Mr. Basu can bring it home to the minds of Mr. Montagu, Mr. Lloyd George and the leading British statesmen that India is being threatened with a great crisis on account of the rigidity and inflexibility of the bureaucracy, he will deserve well of his country. He ought to realise that the best and the greatest national forces of India are mobilising for a great constitutional campaign, and every attempt should be made to avert such a struggle on moral grounds and considerations of expediency. The Government here have declined the invitation to place themselves at the head of the best national forces in India. Let the British Government do so and help the evolution of Indian nationhood."

Comments on the announcement regarding commissions to Indians in the Army.

Gujaráti (16), 26th Aug., Eng. cols.

*24. Commenting on the announcement about commissions to be granted to nine Indian officers, the Gujaráti writes:—"Training Schools at Quetta and Wellington are maintained at present at the expense of the Indian tax-payer, but under some divine dispensation they are not meant at all for the benefit of Indians! Let us hope this shameful state of things will cease in the name of at least elementary fairness and ample facilities will be honestly provided for the military education of selected candidates by the establishment of an Indian Sandhurst. It would be a thousand pities if the inexpressibly sad story of the Civil Service Examination in England and the association of Indians with the higher branches of administration were again to be repeated in the settlement of the important question that is now being considered by the Secretary of State for India and the Imperial Government."

Bombay Samáchár (59), 24th Aug.; Hindusthán (20), 21st Aug.; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 22nd Aug.; Sánj Vartamán (31), 21st Aug.; Kaiser-i-Hind* (24), 26th Aug., Eng. cols.

25. The Bombay Samáchár expresses its joy at the announcement made by Mr. Montagu in the House of Commons as regards the decision of His Majesty's Government to remove the bar to the admission of Indians to commissioned ranks in the army. It refers to the various instances in Indian history in which Hindu and Muhammadan commanders fought valiantly and loyally on behalf of their rulers professing an alien faith, and, dwelling upon the hitherto unflinching loyalty of the Indians towards their rulers, remarks that the British Government should also repose confidence in them. It wishes that over and above admitting Indians to commissioned ranks in the army provision should be made for giving them complete scientific military training in all its diverse branches, e. g., military engineering, artillery, etc. [The Hindusthán also welcomes the announcement and remarks that there is no doubt Indians will prove themselves worthy of the honour done to them. It hopes that the commissioned ranks will be more widely opened in due course after those who have been recently admitted have proved their merits. The Jám-e-Jamshed remarks that if the present selections had not been confined to men belonging to the Imperial Cadet Corps, it would have spread great satisfaction both among the Indian public and the Indian Army. The Sánj Vartamán says that the Indian public hope that the scheme which the Secretary of State for India and the Indian Government are considering about the admission of Indians to commissioned ranks in the future will be in keeping with the present liberal spirit of Messrs. Llyod George and Montagu. The Kaiser-i-Hind writes:—"The bar which had hitherto precluded the admission of Indians to commissioned ranks in His Majesty's Army has now been removed and with it has been wiped off the blot that besmeared England's fair name......... What could have been a handsome, graceful concession that might have fired the imagination of India and touched and vibrated the chords of gratitude within her now comes in as a matter of course, a surrender to legitimate demands."]

Rást Goftár* (30), 26th Aug., Eng. cols.; Indu Prakásh (39), 21st Aug.; Dnyán Prakásh (36), 24th Aug.

26. Welcoming the initiation of the policy of giving to Indians Commissions in the Army the Rást Goftár remarks:—"It is added that a scheme for giving proper training to selected officers or cadets will be shortly considered. When such a scheme is prepared it should be a real and genuine thing such as to open a new career to deserving Indians, and not a replica of Lord Curzon's blue turbanned Imperial Cadet Corps.......... We must have our own Woolwich and Sandhurst and the door must be opened to competition." [The Indu Prakásh says that the nation need not go into ecstasies over the grant of commissions to nine brave Indians for their valuable services in the war, but admits that a good beginning has been made in breaking through the fort of the racial distinction. It declares that it marks a distinct stage of progress and calls upon educated Indians to join the army in view of the concession now made. The Dnyán Prakásh also expresses its gratification that a distinct promise has been given in Parliament for freely opening the higher posts in the army to Indians and hopes that steps will at once be taken for imparting the necessary military training to Indians selected for officers' posts.]

The War.
Gujaráti (16), 19th Aug.

27. A certain school of historical students was of opinion that Austria-Hungary would be split up since it was composed of many races, but such a thing has not yet come to pass. It is now three years and three weeks since the war commenced, but Austria-Hungary stands erect. It is a matter of no small surprise that Germany, Austria, Turkey and Bulgaria stand on one side, while the rest of the world is ranged against them! In spite of Germany and its allies being our enemies we cannot help admiring their spirit of co-operation and power of organisation. Our hearts similarly admire the French for the brave manner in which they have withstood enemy onslaughts. Gigantic Russia with its vast territories embracing half of Europe and half of Asia has reached such a plight that it seems as if it will be shattered to pieces. The British Empire which seemed as if it was on the point of disruption has become all the more united. There has been such a loss of men and money that we need not be surprised if all the talk of about indemnities and fines turns out to be mere talk. The war has been in progress for the last three years and at last it turns out to be a contest of tiring out each other. If the railway line connecting the Rumanians with the Russian forces goes into the hands of the Germans the Rumanians will have to evacuate Moldavia and take refuge in Russia. This will place the Germans in possession of a rich harvest of which they are in need. We are in the dark about the internal condition of Russia. Politicians are doing their duty in encouraging us with the hope of Russia being reorganised. But is it possible for Russia to be saved from falling by the encouraging words of outsiders? Should Russia fall, its disruption will follow immediately. Germany has centered its hopes on the disorganisation of Russia. On the other hand, if Russia breaks down, England will be made safe in Asia. Germany's life will be prolonged if Russia concludes a separate peace or if it does not fight with all its might. German submarines have worked havoc with steamships and they seem to have almost paralysed the world's trade. There is now trade in munitions of war only and the sea is ploughed only for that purpose. Progress in shipbuilding is not in proportion to the losses by submarines. It is probable that the terrible loss has created a sense of weariness in all the nations and that they might be conducting secret negotiations.

What should be done to make the Indian Defence Force popular.
Hindusthán (20), 20th Aug.

28. Remarking that it is the duty of every Indian to try to become fit for the defence of his motherland, the Hindusthán observes that the Indians should not fail to avail themselves of the present opportunity accorded to them by Government by joining the Defence of India Force. It then goes on to make some suggestions which, it believes, if carried into effect will make the scheme of the Defence of India Force a success. The paper suggests that Government should extend the period fixed at present for enlisting in that Force and as a sort of incentive to the Indians to join it, Government should, over and above gratifying the aspirations of the people, place confidence in them; that the scheme should not be of a temporary character and that Government should assure those who enlist that they would not be disbanded after the termination of the war; that the discontent of the Indians should be removed by granting them commissions in the army on the same conditions on which they are granted to the members of other nations composing the British Empire; that those who in the beginning do not come up to the military standard of physical fitness should be enlisted to form a second line force, those who become fit after six months' training to be taken up in the first line; that students of 15 to 18 years of age should be enlisted for the formation of a "third line" force; that officials should cease to view gymnasiums with distrust and that Government should open schools at hill stations for imparting military training to the men belonging to the first and second line forces during the hot weather.

Alleged prohibition of respectable Indians from visiting America on business.

Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 19th Aug.

29. The Kaiser-i-Hind refers to the hardship caused to two Parsi young men who had obtained passports to go to America, but who now cannot proceed to that country on account of the prohibition issued by the American Government against all Indians except bonâ fide students, missionaries and tourists. It alleges that Indians are not allowed to share a cabin with Europeans or Americans on steamers after leaving Hongkong for America and that they are made to travel in first class cabins and to pay more than the usual fare. It expresses the hope that the Government of India will use their influence with the Government of America and remove the bar against respectable Indians paying visits to America for business purposes.

Comments on His Excellency Lord Willingdon's remarks about the Indian Defence Force at the Fergusson College.

Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 19th Aug., Eng. cols.

30. An anonymous correspondent writes to the Kaiser-i-Hind:—"I cannot help feeling that while speaking of the failure of the response to enlist in the Indian Defence Force and the consequent disappointment His Excellency Lord Willingdon has not spoken the whole truth. It was really a charming manœuvre of the Governor to attribute this failure to such petty difficulties as the 'distances of many of the colleges from the headquarters of the corps at Poona' and the serious interference with educational studies. I call this a manœuvre advisedly. For I cannot believe that Lord Willingdon does not hear and see what is going on about him, far less that His Excellency came to speak before the students of the Fergusson College on the University Company without having studied the actual facts. I must acknowledge it was a pleasant way out of what may have proved a harsh and hard situation and perhaps it was Lord Willingdon's inward knowledge that such harshness was not justified that prompted him to pass over the root cause of the failure to enlist in the Indian Defence Force. But it does not add to the prestige of the head of the Province to ignore the correct issue and avoid facing it. However I must remember that Lord Willingdon had no hand in the framing of this Act."

Regret at Her Excellency Lady Willingdon's bad state of health and the need for her to leave Bombay to recuperate.

Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 26th Aug., Eng. cols.

31. "The absence of the Lady Willingdon, C. I., from the activities of this Presidency is keenly felt by all classes with whom, by her sympathy, zealous regard for and watchful interest in their welfare she has endeared herself for several years past. A lady of the most wonderful energy and indefatigability, Her Excellency by her initiation of and association with the gigantic movements for war relief work has proved what solid work and the will to work could achieve. We regret much that she has had to leave the surroundings of her activities under medical advice.......... Her holiday is indeed well-earned and we hope and wish along with the Presidency that her stay at Maymyo may benefit her health and that she may soon be back amongst us to resume her great task in the interest and welfare of humanity. What Bombay owes to Lady Willingdon cannot be forgotten and Bombay wishes her health and vigour and speedy return to the scene of her activities."

Comments on the forfeiture of the security of New India.

Kesari (106), 21st Aug.

32. Writing about the forfeiture of the New India security the Kesari writes:—The forfeiture of security is like sport to Government, but it places newspapers in jeopardy of their life. How long can a man or society, however rich, stand it when Government begins to forfeit security after security? Moreover under the Press Act, it is not merely money that will win the fight. Nationalist journals have no other recourse but to try to live and to feel it a glory to die in the attempt, taking it that the present fight is a divine test of our national efforts.

Comments on a case in which a false charge of corruption was brought against an Abkari Inspector in the Kaira District.

Rást Goftár (30), 26th Aug., Eng. cols.

*33. Commenting upon an Abkari case in the Kaira District, the Rást Goftár writes :—"The case in question reveals gross departmental bungling and an instance of how the Department was bamboozled by a shop-keeper who presumably had a grudge against the Inspector........ The Inspector in question, an officer of long standing, had been in good odour with his superior officers. Some time ago a shop-keeper lodged a secret report against him. A trap was laid, and one fine day the shop-keeper handed the Inspector at Nadiad Railway Station a letter containing currency notes and addressed to the shop-keeper's brother with a request to deliver it on his way to the addressee. But before the Inspector could deal with the letter as requested, he was arrested and searched in the presence of a 'punch' on a warrant issued by the Collector and District Magistrate Mr. Ghosal....... The case was then submitted to the Honourable Mr. Arthur, the Commissioner of Excise, and that official who bears the reputation of being just and impartial acquitted the Inspector. So far so good; but a stigma all the same attaches to the Inspector beside the pain and humiliation that he suffered. Soon after, the Inspector was transferred to an unhealthy and out-of-the-way place in the Khándesh District. The case suggests its own commentary. Will any man with any sense of self-respect care to take employment in a Department where he is exposed to such grave risks to his reputation and stability of service? We trust that the shop-keeper against whom there is a primâ facie case of bringing a false charge against a public servant will be severely dealt with. We trust Mr. Ghosal will deal for the future with his subordinates in a more considerate manner."

Protest against Government orders directing Inamdars of Bijápur to keep a record of rights for their villages.

Karnátak Vaibhav (82), 21st Aug.

34. Government have ordered all the Inamdars of the Bijápur District to maintain a record of rights in all their Dumala villages and to produce all the papers before the Mamlatdar. Incessant quarrels are going on between the Inamdars and their tenants about the tenancy rights. The object of Government may be to do good to the rayat, but they will again give a start to dissensions between Inamdars and their tenants. Every rayat will maintain that he is a permanent tenant and the Inamdar will try to oppose him. The orders issued by Circle Inspectors in these cases are not final and both the parties will have to go to Court. Land has not been properly surveyed in all the inam villages and survey settlement cannot be introduced in them without the consent of the Inamdars. Orders issued now regarding the record of rights which cannot be introduced without any survey settlement seem to be illegal as they have been given without the consent of the Inamdars. The rights of Inamdars and tenants vary as against each other, and how can a register be made of these indefinite rights? We do not know under what law Inamdars have been asked to produce the papers. Section 70 of the Vatan Act and section 85 of the Land Revenue Code are not applicable to the accounts of inam villages, if properly interpreted. It is improper to settle about the rights of Inamdars without consulting them.

Complaint that Government has been excluding Brahmins from Sub-Judges' appointments.

Dnyán Prakásh (36), 25th Aug.

35. Mr. D. H. Bhat writes to the Dnyán Prakásh :—We see from the appointments of Sub-Judges made by Government that they do not find persons qualified for those posts except among Gujaratis and Prabhus. There is only one caste disliked by Government and that is the Brahmin caste. Brahmins cannot but feel indignant at the partiality shown in the matter of the appointment of Sub-Judges. There was a time when pleaders used to refuse the posts of Sub-Judges. But now times have changed. Chiefly Brahmins are put to loss by the appointments of Sub-Judges now made by Government, and there is a possibility of hatred arising between Brahmins and other communities owing to this. I humbly request Government not to take the credit of causing such hatred. Government would not have hesitated to haul up a man before a court of law if he had privately tried to foment such hatred.

Alleged need of Police reorganisation in Sind.

New Times (7), 31st July.

36. Referring to the discussion in the Bombay Legislative Council over the Honourable Mr. Patel's resolution on the subject of the need of an inquiry into the working of the Police Department, the New Times writes:—"So far as Sind is concerned, it seems to us that the Police Department requires to be reorganised. Reports have come to us again and again of thefts committed, in several places, under circumstances which are a very sad commentary on the present organisation of the Police authorities......... In some places, indeed, the sense of insecurity is so great that the Punchayats have to engage the services of their own men to protect life and property. We are glad that the capable Commissioner in Sind is preparing proposals on the subject and we hope that they may prove fruitful at an early date. Tremendous is the responsibility placed on the police; and we are sick at heart when we read the story of repeated thefts and robberies committed in some of the villages. The policeman who dodges his duty deserves to be most severely punished."

EDUCATION.

The last Convocation of the Bombay University.

Gujarâti (16), 26th Aug., Eng. cols.

*37. "His Excellency Lord Willingdon, who as Chancellor presided a the last Convocation of the Bombay University delivered a short but very happy address to the young men who were admitted as graduates of the University......... Lord Willingdon has a happy knack of deftly and gently hitting a situation without being offensive and in our opinion His Excellency's advice is so appropriate that we commend his address to the notice of every one, whether a graduate or undergraduate. It deserves to be carefully studied and pondered over both for the felicity of its phraseology as for the golden words of wisdom it contains. The Vice-Chancellor followed him with an address which in some respects marks a departure from the tone and style of the generality of the Convocation addresses......... As one who has been associated with the actual daily work of the University for years past, he approached his subject from a more practical point of view but with a candour and courage which Vice-Chancellors as a rule find it inconvenient to exhibit in their formal Convocation addresses. He gave bold expression to certain truths in the very presence of the Chancellor which it was very necessary to proclaim unfettered by conventional etiquette. Mr. Setalvad accomplished this delicate task with firmness and courage but with dignity and self-restraint that were indeed commendable."

The Vice-Chancellor's Convocation Address at the Bombay University.

Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 26th Aug., Eng. cols.

*38. "The public utterances of the Honourable Mr. C. H. Setalvad have rarely come upto expectations. Such has been in some respects his address as Vice-Chancellor of the University delivered on the occasion of the Annual Convocation. There ran in it a deference of the old system and the attempt to show that our University education has been a success......... He quoted authorities to show what the University man ought to be, yet he overlooked the fact that with the notable exceptions whom he mentioned and a few more our system has produced little better than cramming machines......... He harped once again on the subject of interference by Government and the repressive policy of Lord Sydenham which he had already exhausted at the time he presided at the Educational Conference at Ahmedabad. We hope that the appalling figures of illiteracy which he presented have reached proper quarters. Those who talk of putting a stop to University education might well digest these disgraceful figures. We have enough of professors and educationists to take care of our boys at college. As Mr. Setalvad so correctly pointed out, it is not right to have them guiding educational policy. Control of University government ought correctly to be in the hands of men of general culture and business."

Bombay Samáchár (59), 24th Aug.; Hindusthán (20), 23rd Aug.; Sánj Vartamán (31), 23rd Aug.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 24th Aug.

39. Referring to the speech delivered by the Honourable Mr. Setalvad as Vice-Chancellor of the Bombay University at the recent University Convocation, the Bombay Samáchár writes in support of the plea urged by him for placing the University on a more popular basis, and for further liberalising its constitution by extending the elective principle. It shares in the hope expressed by the Vice-Chancellor that the extension of His Excellency Lord Willingdon's term of office will lead to the University enjoying, both during his régime as well as in those of his successors, a fuller measure of independence. The paper dwells at length on the advantages resulting from a University independent of external control and remarks that instead of leaving it at the mercy of those who are morally bound to act up to the wishes of a particular party, its governance should be committed to the hands of those who are anxious for its development and who wish to turn it into a useful institution. It suggests that out of the hundred fellows of the Bombay University fifty should be elected by the registered graduates. The paper agrees that there is a vast scope for higher education in India, and trusts that His Excellency will be able to help in saving the enormous brain capital of the Presidency from being frittered away in the shape of continued illiteracy. [The Hindusthán wishes that the various suggestions made by the Honourable Mr. Setalvad during the course of his address may be carried into effect as soon as may be practicable. It also favours the view that a larger measure of independence should be granted to the Bombay University and expresses regret at, what it calls, the present illiberal system according to which 80 out of 100 fellows are nominated by Government. The Sánj Vartamán also endorses the suggestion that educated citizens should be given the supreme control over the local University and believes that such a course would infuse new spirit and enthusiasm among the public in the affairs of the University. The Praja Mitra and Pársi remarks that the public pray that His Excellency may have the glory of placing the local University on a higher and more independent footing before the termination of his régime in consonance with the British policy in India, which, as recently declared by the authorities in England, should be one of making government in India more and more responsible to the people.]

Comments on His Excellency Lord Chelmsford's address before the Secondary Education Conference.

Message (6), 23rd Aug.

40. "People who are interested in the English versus vernaculars controversy will find abundant food for thoughtful reflection in an observation or two which His Excellency Lord Chelmsford addressed to the Secondary Education Conference which met at Simla on Monday. These observations are conceived in a different key from those which he addressed to the Educational Directors' Conference not quite so many months ago. The optimistic note of January this year has given place to a note of pessimism in August. It is no doubt a long period in these momentous times. Men are changing; their ideas are changing. And the change such as it is, is a very good sign of health. We do not doubt that His Excellency must have had very good reasons of state for the change of front on his part. He told the present Conference that he had much sympathy 'with those who deplore the neglect of the vernaculars'; but he asked those good people to remember that 'the substitution at this time of the day of the vernaculars for English is beyond the bounds of practical politics even if the Government were willing to consider such a policy'. Of course we quite understand the difficulties confronting such a change as the one for which the vernacularists are contending. To say nothing of Government and what it might or might not do, we ourselves feel that the advocates of the vernaculars are considerably handicapped in the struggle. All the advantage is on the side of the study of English and few seem to possess a love for the vernaculars because the Government has discounted them. It therefore offers a most cogent and perfectly logical argument why we should have Home Rule in which the administration is carried on with the wishes of the general public. Then and then alone will it be possible to effect even gradually any change at all."

Kesari (106), 21st Aug.; Sandesh (118), 25th Aug.

41. The Kesari also complains of the change in His Excellency the Viceroy's attitude, and declares that the high hopes that His Excellency's Delhi speech had raised have disappeared by his present pronouncement. It further complains that the suggestive questions placed before the conference go to confirm the suspicion as to how the question of the medium of instruction is likely to be decided by the conference and remarks:—It is not the ideal of education to become proficient in English only. All are not able to complete the course and only 5 per cent. of those who join the primary schools take up the collegiate course. Is it desirable to burden every boy with English in the primary course? Soon primary education is to be made compulsory and this forcing of English upon the students will be intolerable. [The Sandesh expresses its gladness at the acceptance of the resolution that the last school examination should be also held in the Vernaculars as well as in English and requests the leaders to see that it is enforced.]

Comments on the secondary Educational Conference at Simla regarding teaching of English in secondary schools.

Jám-e-Jámshed (23), 24th Aug.

42. Referring to the discussion that took place at the Educational Conference which met at Simla to consider the question of the teaching of English in secondary schools, the Jám-e-Jamshed, while recognising the importance of English education, supports the demand of the Indian patriots who wish that the authorities should not entirely devote their attention to developing the study of the English language at the cost of the vernaculars. It maintains that the Directors of Public Instruction in India should formulate some such scheme as would help the development of the Indian vernaculars without, at the same time, hindering the progress of English education. How can the people, it further inquires, blame the authorities for not attaching due importance to the development of the vernaculars when Indians are so sharply divided among themselves on the subject of the instruction to be given in the vernacular?

A lecture on the modern system of education in India.

Young India (14), 22nd Aug.

43. "Mr. Ernest Wood, Secretary of the National Board of Education, delievered a lecture on 'Preparation for Citizenship' at the Morarji Goculdas Hall on Sunday......... He referred to the stunting effects of the present system of education on the growth of India's young men and emphasised the view that the reason for the stagnation of Indian society was to be found in our schools.......... The emotional side which has played a great part in the prosecution of the present world-wide war has been neglected and even ignored in Indian education and all those requirements which go to develop in the youth the capacity for self-government have been strictly excluded lest educated Indian youths should some day refuse to act as 'clerks' to 'uneducated superiors'.......... So long as the work of educating Indian youth rests in the hands of unsympathetic foreigners or so long as that work is dominated by political considerations, it is futile to expect that things would adjust themselves to the progressive needs of the country.......... The policy which determines Indian education is essentially bad and is determined by men who, however well meaning they may be, can have no adequate perception of the real needs of the country. And the methods adopted to give effect to that policy are equally so and instead of producing healthy, intelligent and self-respecting citizens, they cramp the whole outlook of young men on life and tend to make them selfish, narrow-minded or even lifeless. It has been increasingly felt that this policy and these methods cannot be allowed to preponderate for any further length of time if the Indian nation is not to commit intellectual and moral suicide and find itself face to face with intellectual anarchy."

RAILWAYS.

The G. I. P. Railway strike.

Young India (14), 22nd Aug.

44. "Apparently the strength of the men's determination, resulting from a sense of grave injustice, was not recognised and the various authorities concerned must have reckoned with a certain amount of cocksureness that the strike would fizzle out. The Strikers' Relief Committee, which was organised at a psychological moment entirely out of motives of public charity and philanthropy and not, as is basely alleged by blasphemous tongues, to serve the political ends of the Home Rule agitators, was an unexpected factor, which added to the growing consternation of the authorities. When the work of relief had been carefully organised and proceeded with for a few days, a little game of bluff was attempted and what may be characteristically described as stage-management was attempted with a view perhaps to strike terror into the hearts of the men and harass the relief committee in gratitude for their trouble and expense! The Police Commissioner stepped on the scene with his armed hosts and is said to have at one time waxed eloquent over machine-guns, bloodshed and that sort of stuff. Certain gentlemen went to Poona in consequence thereof and waited on His Excellency Lord Willingdon, to come back none the wiser than that the head of the Government was too full of Home Rule agitators and passive resistance. Our old, old friend Mr. Robertson seems to have largely shared the honours of the tabletalk by his cheap flings at Home Rulers, and why not? Is not the Home Ruler at the present moment the bete noir of the bureaucracy and is not Mr. Robertson himself one of the foremost bureaucrats that our presidency can boast of? To let alone Mr. Robertson, Lord Willingdon regretted his inability to intervene between the men and the railway, but promised to see what he could do in his individual capacity. Lord Willingdon arrived here on Sunday and after a busy day or two spent in interviewing the public gave his decision for which the men had longed for, late on Monday. The decision does not amount to much in effect nor is it in any sense reassuring to the men about their interests. .... Although Lord Willingdon's letter does not help them in any tangible manner, they have agreed to go back out of respect to the personality of the head of the Government.......... Bureaucrats, both in the Government and the railway management, need not, therefore, lay the flattering unction to their souls that the strike has collapsed owing to their firmness.......... Now that the men have returned to work, we trust Lord Willingdon will exert all the influence and weight of his high position and obtain for them the very modest terms for which they are now asking." [Elsewhere the paper writes:—"The Home Rule agitator has come to be the bete noir of bureaucratic India and it is perfectly understandable that it should attempt to lay all the evils at his door. But that persons set in high positions of responsibility, authority and trust, should try to exploit that theme to deny justice or fair treatment to the men who have suffered and who have made great sacrifices indeed takes one's breath away. A little exercise of intelligence ought to convince anybody that the Home Rule agitator can be the last person who would attempt any diversion from his main purpose. Yet the libellous assertion has been freely indulged in, in order to discredit a perfectly legitimate movement and in order, it seems to us, to justify the coercion of men for attempting to have their grievances remedied by perfectly peaceful and law-abiding means.......... Here are 6,000 men—not a small number—, mostly illiterate though not ignorant or stupid as is commonly supposed and almost unused to collective effort on such a vast scale. In order to draw public attention to their sense of injustice and hardship, they go on strike and remain on strike for a month and four days, unmoved by threats of physical pain or the aggravation of moral wrong. Does this not offer sufficient food for calm impassioned reflection without one needlessly trying to hunt for the skeleton at the intellectual feast which such reflection offers?......... The public is now convinced that illiterate and cosmopolitan as is this great community of workmen, it offers splendid field for an organising genius. If proper attempts are made to organise and train these labour masses to collective effort and collective action, it should be easy to raise them from a state of economic serfdom and make them self-respecting and respected members of the body politic." In a contributed article Mr. L. G. Khare writes :—" The fact that more than ten thousand workmen, belonging to all classes and creeds and serving under economic conditions which became unbearable under war times, have co-operated in organising thoroughly and constitutionally a strike is an event pregnant with meaning.......... The point which should not escape public attention is that it is possible for Indian workmen, whatever their difference in religion and language, to combine for the redress of their common economic grievances.......... Nobody doubts the right of the police of any country to keep the peace. In fact it is considered that it is one of their primary duties. It appears to be supposed, however, in higher police circles in Bombay that Mr. Vincent and his men have been saddled with the additional duty of interfering in an arbitrary way with those Indians who, instead of keeping quiet in a Jo-Hukum attitude, have chosen to distribute grain and render relief to the families of the strikers. This may be one of the extraordinary ideas of keeping the peace, prevalent in Indian police circles. Rudeness to Indian journalists, afterwards to be suitably apologised for, is another, but it is a pity that Mr. Vincent and those of his subordinates who seem to have their own code of manners do not understand that they are unfortunately helping to create an impression that, in this quarrel between capital and labour, you have on the one side, the administration of the G. I. P. in India and the police officials of the City, that is, the Government, while on the other side are the strikers, goaded on by those awful races—the Home Rulers."]

New Times (7), 11th Aug.; Indu Prakdsh (39), 22nd Aug, Eng. cols.; Sunday Tatler* (13), 26th Aug.

45. In the course of a lengthy article in which it dwells on the significance of the strike by the hands in the G. I. P. Railway Workshops, the alleged duty of Government to intervene between the strikers and the Railway Company, the duty of the employers of labour to see that their men are well-off, etc., the New Times remarks :—" All over the world, increasing attention has been paid to the conditions of labour, and efforts have been put forth by employers to contribute to the welfare of their employees. The Western world is moving in the direction of industrial democracy. Unfortunately, the situation is different in India; old traditions continue; and the authorities fight shy of new ideals. The Government that gives support to a system of Western industrialism is reluctant to support the methods which would assuage the evil results of that system. The Government has nothing to do with business—such seems to be the attitude of the powers that be; every one turns a deaf ear to the labourers' complaints and though the Bombay workmen have shown a spirit of reasonableness, and have expressed their desire to submit to arbitration and accept the results of arbitration, they have received no response. The theory, the temper, the attitude of mind of the old employer continue: profit of the employer rather than social profit and the workman's welfare continues to be the object in view; and it is not yet understood how great a harm to society is caused by strain and irritation among the employer and the employee. Labour in India must be liberated from all forces working against the well-being of the workman. Labour must protect its legitimate human interests. And, therefore, labour must become vocal in mediation, representation of grievances, arbitration and settling of labour disputes. Labour should be represented on our municipal corporations for the social betterment of the workman and the better building of our civic life." [The Indu Prakdsh remarks —" We are glad that the strikers have at last resumed work, thanks to the gracious assurances from His Excellency Lord Willingdon which were conveyed to the men. His Excellency the Govrenor by his unvarying kindness, geniality and chivalrous disposition has won the hearts of the people of this city. His Excellency has indeed become a great social force." The Sunday Tatler writes :—" Thus a great crisis has been averted by His Excellency Lord Willingdon who, in the rôle of a diplomat, has scored most successfully. The appreciative reference made in the Government Press Note to the Commissioner of Police and all ranks of the City Police is well earned and deserved. It is impossible for the lay public to realise with what tact, energy and discretion the Police have handled the situation during the last few weeks, adverse influences notwithstanding, and what would have been the result otherwise."]

Sánj Vartamán (31), 22nd Aug.; Bombay Samáchár (59), 25th Aug.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 23rd Aug.; Hindusthán (20), 22nd Aug.

46. The public thank His Excellency Lord Willingdon for his tact in putting an end to the Railway strike. We hope His Excellency will impress upon the Railway officials the necessity of dealing with their workshop operatives in a more liberal spirit. The strikers behaved with admirable patience and the Police Commissioner, Mr. Vincent, and his assistants have rendered valuable services during the period of the strike. [The Bombay Samáchár, the Praja Mitra and Pársi and the Hindusthán also thank His Excellency for his kindness in using his personal influence to put an end to the strike.]

Rást Goftár* (30), 26th Aug., Eng. cols.; Mahrátta* (6), 26th Aug.; Indian Social Reformer* (3), 26th Aug.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 23rd Aug., Eng. cols.

47. "An appeal to Government to step in and put an end to the strike also failed, for the bureaucracy recks not of philanthropic benevolence. On a personal appeal being made to him Lord Willingdon rose to the height of the occasion, came down to Bombay from Poona, interviewed all and sundry concerned, was able in a couple of days to send an assuring letter to the representatives of the men on strike and everything is at an end, and the men have gone back to work. From the first the men have been saying that they would cheerfully accept any decision of the Governor and they have loyally kept their word. Such a tribute from common working men is a very high compliment to the ruler of a Province or Presidency, but except Lord Willingdon no other provincial ruler in India enjoys at present so large a measure of popular confidence, including that of the proletariat." [The Mahrátta writes:—"It is in deference to the wishes of His Excellency that the strikers have gone back to their posts. We hope that Lord Willingdon will endeavour to see that they are not shabbily treated. No unorganised class can have a chance of getting its grievances respectfully and adequately considered and redressed. Labour must be organised here as it is in other countries. That is the outstanding lesson which the strikers and the general public in sympathy with them should take to heart." The Indian Social Reformer writes:—"But for the kindly intervention of Lord Willingdon, it is extremely doubtful if the strike would have terminated so peacefully and so soon. The Press Note has overlooked the humanitarian services rendered by that section of the public which actively mitigated the sufferings of the men on strike". The Praja Mitra and Pársi writes:—"Just now the Home Rule League is the bete noire of the bureaucracy and its members were suspected of inciting the strikers to hold out. A more silly figment of the brain cannot be conceived. Surely the Home Rule League has more important work to do than fomenting a dispute, which can have no political result, between employers of labour and their men. The mere suggestion is proof of the incompetency of the men who make it. However, all's well that ends well, thanks to the humanity and wise intervention of Lord Willingdon."]

Message (5), 22nd Aug.

48. "The immediate result though not very satisfactory has all the same to be welcomed. It puts an end to what at one time threatened to become a serious labour crisis in the history of Indian industrialism. The men of course have immense faith in the wisdom and sympathy of Lord Willingdon and they have taken his assurance in a generous spirit of resignation. We hope now that the impending crisis has been averted, the railway authorities will be given definite instructions to deal with the men's grievances in a generous and liberal spirit."

MUNICIPALITIES.

Comments on the Government Resolution on the working of Local Boards in the Bombay Presidency.

Bombay Samáchár (59), 22nd Aug.; Jám-e-Jamshed (28), 21st Aug.

49. Referring to the resolution recently published by Government on the administration of the District and Taluka Local Boards of the Bombay Presidency during the year 1915-16, the Bombay Samáchár considers the sum of rupees 35 lakhs and odd spent by these Boards after education during the year to be very small, regard being had to the vast area of about 1¼ lakh of square miles under their jurisdiction. In view of the pecuniary help these Boards are expected to get from Government after the war, the paper presses upon them the urgency of allowing education to grow even at the cost of some extra drain on their existing means. It further remarks that some measures should be devised to remedy the inconvenience these Boards have to suffer as a result of the delay caused under the present system in securing the income intended for being spent on educational purposes. The paper maintains that it is necessary for those Boards that have been conceded the right of electing their own Presidents to prove that the representatives of the people possess the capacity of successfully performing the task entrusted to them. [While commending the Government action of extending the elective principle with regard to 16 out of the 19 District Local Boards of the Presidency the Jám-e-Jamshed remarks that so long as the Local Boards are suffered to remain in a financially weak condition, so long as Government do not grant them, from their own revenues, substantial aid for meeting their general wants and so long as the income to be derived from certain taxes is not placed at their disposal, hopes can scarcely be entertained about the administration of these Boards being carried on in a manner beneficial to the interests of the public.]

Government should lay down a general policy as regards the constitution of all Local Boards.

Kesari (106), 21st Aug.

50. General opinion is in favour of the retention of Taluka Local Boards, but from the way in which Mr. Martin seems to be pursuing his inquiry it appears that it is intended to do away with these Boards. It is desirable that Government should put an end in time to this suspicion entertained by some people. Though Government have not directly contradicted the impression they have, by increasing the number of elected members of the Taluka Boards in Kaira and Poona Districts, shown that they want to retain the Taluka Boards. Still we cannot but laugh at the unnecessary precautions Government take in introducing this reform. Who knows what time it will take to reach all the Districts of the Presidency? The conduct of Government appears to be eccentric and partial as they consider every case separately and do not follow any particular principle in constituting these local bodies. Is it because Sind is backward that not a single Local Board has a majority of elected members in it? Why is it that Ratnágiri and Broach Districts only have a majority of nominated members? Thana though the headquarters of a District has not got an elected majority in its Municipality. How can we defend the non-existence of a single elected member in Mehmadabad and three or four other Municipalities in the Northern Division? Government have not followed any comprehensive policy but have depended on the individual recommendations of local officers. Government should henceforward follow a general policy and grant to all Taluka Boards the right of having two-thirds elected members. It is necessary to stop altogether the policy of differentiation made between different Boards.

Municipalities do not enjoy real self-government.

Kesari (106), 21st Aug.

51. Government saddle the Municipalities with works involving great expenditure and pay half the costs. We do not know what good will ultimately result from these works, but at present they are only productive of discontent. It is so mainly because the actual cost greatly exceeds the estimated expenditure, and as the additional expenditure is not previously sanctioned by the Municipalities they have to bear it all of a sudden. We have already written about the great burden of the excess of expenditure borne by the Poona Municipality in connection with the drainage works. The Karad (Sátára) water works had to bear an additional expenditure of Rs. 20,000 simply for exchanging the machinery and the total excess over the estimates in this case was Rs. 67,000. The Karad Municipality had not sanctioned this unbudgetted expenditure till now, but the officials on it got the resolution passed, taking advantage of the absence of some of the members who had gone to attend the Poona Municipal Conference. So long as the Public Works Department does not take the sanction of the local bodies before incurring the expenditure and so long as officials saddle the bodies with the expenditure by devious methods, can it be called local self-government? And who will be proud of it?

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 31st August 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 35 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 1st September 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

Bombay Legislative Council: Contradiction of a reply given to an interpellation at the last meeting of the — 31

British rule:

- Alleged friction between Hindus and Mussalmans at Jubbulpore . . 28
- Comments on Lord Islington's views about political reform in India . 13
- Comments on Lord Sydenham's letter in the Times on Lord Islington's speech at Oxford . . . . 14 & 15
- Comments on one of Mr. Basu's speeches at Bombay 32
- Comments on Mr. Montagu's speech on the Mesopotamia Commission report 7
- Comments on the attack of the Madras Mail on Mr. Montagu . . 4
- Comments on the election of Mrs. Besant to be President of the next National Congress . . . . 19 & 20
- Comments on the Madras Manifesto on the expediency of passive resistance . . . . 8—12
- Comments on the reported grant of self-government to Portuguese India. 23
- Comments on the resolutions passed at the non-Brahmin Conference at Coimbatore 16
- Comments on the Trichinopoly meeting of students resolving to attend Home Rule meetings 17
- Criticism of the work done by the Bombay City Food Prices Committee 30
- Criticism on Lord Hardinge's treatment of his Executive Council in the matter of the Mesopotamia Campaign 25
- If the Government of India and the Secretary of State really set store by the goodwill of the people of India they should not wait a minute in annulling the internment of Mrs. Besant 22
- Mr. Mahomed Ali should be elected President of the Moslem League just as Mrs. Besant is being elected President of the Congress . 21
- Mr. Montagu's forthcoming visit to India . . . . 1—3
- Mr. Montagu's statement in Parliament about India's political future . 5 & 6
- Parsis and Home Rule 26
- Reflections on the internment of Mrs. Besant and the duty of Government to help India to become free 18
- Reflections on the situation in Ireland 29
- Suggestion that Government should stop the raising of house rents in Bombay under the Defence of India Act 24

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

British Rule :—concld.

- The late Mr. Gokhale's Reform Scheme . . . 33
- What should the Muhammadans do to improve their political condition . . . 27

Excise : Alleged hardships of a country liquor licensee in Bassein Taluka (district Thána) . . . 36

His Excellency Lord Willingdon :

- Comments on the address delivered by — at the Fergusson College, Poona . . . 34
- Comments on the formation by Her Excellency Lady Willingdon of a Children's Branch of the Women's War and Relief Fund . . . 35

Public Service : Complaint against the Mahálkari of Valod (district Surat) . . . 37

War :

- Comments on the announcement about the grant of Army Commissions to Indians . . . 40 & 41
- Comments on the portrait and message sent to the widows, mothers and daughters of Indian soldiers killed in the — . . . 39
- The — . . . 38

EDUCATION—

- Alleged aspersions against Muhammad in two Gujarati books . . . 49
- Alleged need of abolishing the system of Mulla Schools in Sind . . . 47
- Comments on the Bombay Law Student's petition to Government . . . 45
- Government should not take any action prejudicial to the study of Urdu in the Bombay Presidency . . . 48
- The people of Lárkána (Sind) should not depend upon Government or the Municipality for the High School so badly wanted by them . . . 46
- The Secondary Education Conference . . . 42—44

RAILWAYS—

- Comments on the Government Press Note on the Railway strike . . . 53
- The G. I. P. Railway Workshop strike . . . 50—52

MUNICIPALITIES—

Bombay :

- Comments on the recent house collapses in — City . . . 54
- The Cumballa Hill War Hospital and the — Municipality . . . 55

Complaint that the bulk of the Municipalities in Sind have boards composed wholly of nominated members . . . 57

Hyderabad : Comments on the proposal to substitute a terminal charge for octroi in — (Sind) . . . 56

Why it would be unfair and inadvisable to introduce house-tax in towns in Sind . . . 58

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Mr. Montagu's forthcoming visit to India.

Young India (14), 29th Aug.; Subodh Patrika (42), 26th Aug., Eng. cols.

1. "Whatever may have to be said of Mr. Montagu's intentions—we believe they are real and earnest—it seems to us that the declaration concedes nothing in effect to the Indian people, nor does it take away from the anomaly of bureaucratic government to any desirable extent.......... The declaration following upon the heels of the repressive tendencies which are proving themselves so irrepressible in the Government is calculated to leave no reassuring effect on the disturbed minds of the people.......... We, therefore, regard the fissiparous tendencies already visible among Indian leaders with a certain amount of grave apprehension. The time is not yet for any relaxation in our efforts or agitation to secure the goal which we have steadily and consistently kept in view.......... We urge therefore with all the emphasis at our command that the country should continue to maintain its agitation firstly for the reversal of the policy of repression and withdrawal of the internment orders against Mrs. Besant and her colleagues, and secondly for the realisation of the reforms contained in the Congress-League scheme as the absolute minimum with which we shall be content for the time being 'as the first step in the progressive stages' alluded to by Mr. Montagu in his declaration." [The Subodh Patrika writes:—"Whatever the actual outcome Mr. Montagu's visit may be—and we are sure it will not be disappointing—the Secretary of State has decided to take a step which is calculated to assure Indian public mind which had been made unnecessarily suspicious and irritable by the irresponsible and provocative utterances of some of the provincial rulers while the Government of India kept a sphinx like silence on the vital question of the future Government of India."]

Mufid-e-Rozgár (144), 26th Aug.

2. The Mufid-e-Rozgár welcomes the announcement regarding Mr. Montagu's proposed visit to India and states that by walking, as it were, in the streets of Indian cities the Secretary of State for India would learn what stage of civilisation the people of this country have reached and for what they are fit. It suggests that the people should arrange to give Mr. Montagu a hearty reception such as was accorded to His Majesty in 1911, and concludes by striking an expectant note regarding the ultimate decision of the authorities on the question of Home Rule for India. [Elsewhere the paper publishes an ariticle on the unsuitability of full-fledged representative government for countries such as China, Persia, etc. It maintains, that the premature grant of self-government to India would do immense injury, and that the authors of deliberate obstruction would but do harm to themselves. It considers it desirable that the people should try to make themselves fit for representative institutions, and holds that the country cannot march forward without the benevolent protection and fatherly care of Government. At the same time the paper declares that an extreme necessity for obtaining an instalment of political concessions exists, and it hopes that these will be made after the termination of hostilities.]

Kesari (106), 28th Aug.; Karnátak Vritt (83), 28th Aug.; Kaiser-i-Hind* (24), 2nd Sept., Eng. cols.

3. It is a unique occasion and it is a special favour to Indians that the Secretary of State is coming to India personally to discuss the question of swarájya with us. The very fact that no Secretary of State for India cared to visit India for the last fifty years shows how wisely the administration of India is carried on. Lord Crewe no doubt visited India a few years ago, but he was only a Minister in attendance on His Majesty the King-Emperor but the present Secretary of State will visit the country by himself and will thus receive all the honours. At the same time he must be prepared to answer straight questions and it will not be in keeping with his dignity to return to England without granting us Provincial autonomy which

Lord Crewe at the time of his visit assured he was going to give. Those who pretended to consider it a great sin to speak a word about swarájya during war time, will, it is hoped now that Mr. Montagu is himself coming to talk of swarájya, open their lips and speak freely. It is a question how far real public opinion will be allowed to be represented in the discussion or inquiry to be conducted by Mr. Montagu in India. His time will be divided between officials and the public but what time he would devote to both separately is an important point. Otherwise he might come to India at our expense and go back with the opinions of the officials. While here he will of course be the guest of white officials and naturally their point of view will be fully placed before him. But will he devote a considerable portion of his time to listen to the people? Will he see anybody freely or will the list of persons who are to see him be drawn out by the officials? It is said that some crafty Anglo-Indian officials take simple-minded visitors to see Khonds and Bhils as types of Indian civilisation. Mr. Montagu may not be so simple-minded but it would be better if he would try to see things for himself. We hope he will give a hearing to one and all. Whatever be the ultimate outcome let there be a truce between the officials and the people during his stay in India. If Mrs. Besant and others be still in internment who would feel any enthusiasm for discussion with Mr. Montagu? Similarly Government might also expect people not to resort to passive resistance. But as it depends upon Government themselves whether there should be such a reaction, the responsibility would be theirs. In order that Mr. Montagu may be successful in his mission, there should be peace in the country. Government should amend their old policy of repression and give us an assurance that they would not begin it anew. [The Karnátak Vritt says that Mr. Montagu's declaration is worded ambiguously in order to postpone the reforms demanded by the people. It finds it very disappointing that Mr. Montagu wants every step of advance to be determined by the Government of India and the British Government. But still it does not want to give up all hopes. The Kaiser-i-Hind writes:—"The announcement of Mr. Montagu's intended visit to India has raised a chorus of welcome, but we cannot characterise this welcome to be as hearty as it might have been expected to be. On the one hand we have the Anglo-Indian journals preaching caution to him.......... On the other hand we have the numerous organs of the Home Rule movement, giving so to speak only a conditional welcome to him......... For ourselves, we cannot but regard this attitude as rather unreasonable."]

Comments on the attack of the Madras Mail on Mr. Montagu.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 1st Sept.; * Mahrátta (5), 2nd Sept.; Dnyán Parkásh (36), 1st Sept.

4. The Praja Mitra and Pársi denounces as foolish effusions of a demented mind the remarks made by the Madras Mail in its issue dated 29th August 1917 under the heading "A Word to Mr. Montagu". The paper regards the remarks of the Madras Mail as almost bordering on disloyalty, and ridicules its belief that it has the power to bring about revolutions in Governments and Ministries. It wishes to know whom the Madras Mail means by the term "conservative Indians" and remarks that it is labouring under a delusion if by that term it means to connote the illiterate and dumb masses of the people who are familiar with the principles of swarájya on account of the existence of representative bodies among them. The paper, however, welcomes effusions of the type above referred to on the ground that they will enable His Majesty's Government and the British public to judge Anglo-Indian opinion at its proper value. [The Mahrátta writes:—"The Mail promises to dethrone Mr. Montagu 'in quick succession to any change here', such as the Secretary of State is understood to be contemplating! Poor Mr. 'Montagu'! If he wishes to keep his place, he must act as 'the most obedient servant' of the Madras Mail and Company. This company is in desperate love with 'the men on the spot'—those Time-honoured beings that love to stick to the spot like vice, never caring what the hour of the day is, and what it demands of them on pain of being set down for miserable laggards and receiving the punishment of the laggards as it is put down in the Penal Code of the Government of Providence established by the Law That Itself has made.......... How will Mr. Montagu act? It is hoped that he will be firm, if we are firm and strengthen his hands by adopting the passive resistance programme and bringing it to his notice in an unmistakable manner that India will no longer tolerate any trifling with her grievances". The Dnyán Prakásh hopes that Mr. Montagu will disregard the selfish outcry of the Anglo-Indians and show firmness in doing what is just.]

Mr. Montagu's statement in Parliament about India's political future.
Message (6), 29th Aug.

5. "It would be unfortunate indeed if leaders of Indian thought are divided at this stage in their opinions regarding the reforms. Yet it seems to have been the effect produced on the minds of Indian leaders—a section of them at any rate, by the recent anouncements. Mr. Montagu's declaration in the House of Commons, it should be remembered, does not take us any further and it would be foolish to regard it in any but an academical light. It is the barest statement that any responsible Minister ever made and savouring too much of a highly gubernatorial touch. What Mr. Mantagu will achieve when he visits this country and confers with the Government and Indian leaders does not in the least matter to us. What is clearly wanted is that we should keep up our agitation for reforms until the Imperial Government gives us a definite pledge that they accept the Congress-Moslem League scheme as the minimum of reform which it is determined to carry out in the Indian admininistration and in order to give full effect to it immediately at the close of the war, it will take steps from this time onward to prepare the ground.......... However closely one may read the Secretary of State's message, one is doomed to disappointment to find any definite promise in it. The only thing which gives hope is the knowledge and insight he has displayed in his Mesopotamia speech regarding the needs of the Indian administration. But that speech is that of a politician of the Opposition Bench and not as a responsible Minister of the Crown. Lord Morley was even more promising when he came to office than Mr. Montagu. But what was the outcome of Lord Morley's work at the India Office?......... Whether Mr. Montagu will emulate his quondam political chief is more than we can surmise at present. We think, however, our countrymen ought to be forewarned about the results of expecting too much from Mr. Montagu's visit and abandoning at this stage our work."

Prakásh (116), 29th Aug.; Shetkari (41), 26th Aug.; Sandesh (118), 30th Aug.

6. We have already expressed our conviction that our stars would ultimately lead us to our goal of swarajya through the dark shadows of official high-handedness. The Imperial Government have now definitely recognised our ideal of self-government within the Empire. Although the views expressed in the Government of India notification are very gratifying, we would warn our people not to forget their own duty in this respect. The Queen's Proclamation of 1858 was of the same character and was similarly worded. It has, however, remained not only a dead letter but our progress has suffered a setback almost every year. High officials of Government like Lord Curzon even went so far as to dub the proclamation as an impossible charter. In the face of these facts it is natural that the present declaration of Government should also be viewed with suspicion. The repressive policy pursued by the bureaucracy in late years has embittered the relations between the officials and people. Although the Imperial Government have displayed fine statesmanship in making the present declaration we do not think they have conferred on us any very extraordinary boon. They would have laid themselves open to the charge of double-dealing if they had tried to keep us in perpetual bondage after drawing the sword in defence of a tiny country like Belgium and also asking us to sacrifice our all in the cause of liberty. Mere declaration of policy, however, is not enough. Indeed our former experience in this respect is not encouraging. The Imperial declaration has been hedged in in various ways and if we abate our agitation their desire to grant us self-government will remain in embryo for several years more. Even after the seed of Swarájya has germinated there are several vested interests which will endeavour to stunt its growth. We will reach our goal, therefore, only by redoubling our present efforts. [The Shetkari says that the wording of the announcement does not inspire much hope and adds that the declaration is only a white flag of truce displayed to put a stop to the wordy warfare now raging in India. The Sandesh says that the present declaration of policy by a Secretary of State is not sufficient and that it should be confirmed by an Imperial proclamation.]

Comments on Mr. Montagu's speech on the Mesopotamia Commission Report.

Bombay Samáchár (59), 28th Aug.; Indian Social Reformer* (3), 2nd Sept.

7. The Bombay Samáchár regards the speech made by Mr. Montagu in the House of Commons during the debate on the Mesopotamia Commission's Report as one characteristic of a really Liberal statesman. It remarks that, unlike other statesmen whose views get changed after they come into power, Mr. Montagu has kept to the above views expressed by him before he was appointed Secretary of State for India, as may be judged from the announcement he has made declaring the policy of His Majesty's Government with regard to India. The paper observes that the statement made by Mr. Montagu to the effect that he made the above announcement in response to the demand made by the Government of India urging for a declaration of policy with regard to India must now dispel the delusion that had, in some quarters, gathered round the Viceroy's silence in connection with the present situation. [The Indian Social Reformer writes:—"The point of view which Mr. Montagu urged on the House of Commons is the very one which we have been endeavouring to impress on our readers. The system of government in India has to be radically reformed not primarily as a concession to the claims of the Indian people for a greater share in the government of the country, but because the system has ceased to be efficient as an instrument of good government. The functions of government may be roughly classified under three heads: the law-making, the law-interpreting and the law-executing. We maintain that, under all three heads, the present system of Indian government has proved more or less a failure.......... While over fifty years of English education and contact with modern ideas have filled the people with fresh hopes and aspirations, the administration has remained impervious to the surging influences of the new century. Apart from the aspirations of Indians, we say that the administration cannot remain what it is without serious danger of collapse."]

Comments on the Madras Manifesto on the inexpediency of passive resistance.

Young India (14), 29th Aug.; Indu Prakásh (39), 28th Aug.

8. We pity those gentlemen of Madras who have rushed to print with their anti-Passive Resistance Manifesto. There was time enough for such a feat, and we wish they had exercised a little more restraint on their generously impulsive natures.......... They have taken it upon themselves to point out the 'inexpediency of Passive Resistance in the present situation', and they seem to think that that situation has been greatly modified by the announcement of Mr. Montagu's intended visit. We have nothing to quarrel with this council of caution. But we think we have a right to ask what is it that has led these gentlemen to modify their views. The mere announcement of Mr. Montagu's visit does not ease the political tension in this country, which is really too acute to be eased off thus.......... Passive Resistance may not be prudent; it may even alienate the sympathies of the allies of the Congress in England, though we are not so sure about it. But is that the reason why one should give up what one feels to be right?...... It was indeed with feelings of the utmost satisfaction that we noticed from a telegram which we received on Sunday that in spite of the Manifesto the special Provincial Conference at Madras had passed a resolution in favour of Passive Resistance by an overwhelming majority. [The Indu Prakásh on the other hand welcomes the appeal of the Madras leaders to suspend adoption of the passive resistance movement pending the result of Mr. Montagu's visit to India. It remarks that though hot-headed and impatient people will not approve of this decision and will heap the choicest epithets such as 'cowards', 'mendicants', etc., on the signatories to this appeal, the action taken in Madras is the right one. It observes that resort to passive resistance is only justified when all other legitimate means of obtaining redress fail.]

Kesari (106), 28th Aug.; Dnyán Prakásh (36), 29th and 30th Aug.

9. We agree with some of the prominent leaders of Madras who have issued a manifesto against passive resistance when they say that nothing should be done to excite the people. But it is the action of Government that first causes public resentment. The Madras manifesto has also given a sound reply to the argument urged by the Bombay moderates that passive resistance is unconstitutional. If Mrs. Besant and others are released and if the policy of Government is toned down then there will be no occasion for passive resistance. But so long as this does not happen, so long as meetings are prohibited in the Delhi Province and processions in Sind have to submit to police zulum and so long as even private meetings in the Dhárwár District are prohibited, the question of passive resistance is not yet over. Our leaders should therefore either get these repressive orders cancelled or permit the adoption of passive resistance. [The Dnyán Prakásh says:—The special Madras Conference does not want to adopt passive resistance to stop the repressive policy of Government or to obtain rights of swarájya as some Bombay people want to do, but it wants to limit it to the right of holding public meetings. We cannot hold rightly that all the officials want to prohibit protest meetings as a rule and it is therefore unnecessary and improper to proclaim a general pasive resistance. If we only talk of passive resistance and do not act up to it, the efforts of some people who want to poison the mind of Mr. Montagu will be strengthened. There is no doubt that Mrs. Besant should be released so that discussion on political subjects might proceed calmly. But we should move the question in the Council and it would be suicidal to adopt Passive Resistance immediately. In another issue the Dnyán Prakásh supports the Madras manifesto against passive resistance and says that India's duty at present consists in strongly agitating for the entire abandonment of the repressive policy and the release of Mrs. Besant and others and the acceptance of the Congress scheme of reforms by Government.]

Gujaráti (16), 2nd Sept., Eng. cols.

*10. "The signatories to the manifesto issued in Madras, whilst deprecating any resort to a policy of passive resistance at this juncture for reasons which, in our opinion, are sufficiently cogent, have characterised those who have opposed the proposal on the ground of its being inconsistent with the Congress constitution, as 'sticklers for legal propriety'. In expressing themselves to this effect with an air of superiority they do not seem to us to have studied the existing provisions of law with sufficient care. Excepting resignations by members of the Legislative Councils and municipal and local boards and like measures, we do not think passive resistance can ever be legal, though it may be morally justified under exceptional circumstances. But that is a matter for individuals to decide and it is not a course for organized and constitutional bodies to recommend or adopt, unless they are prepared to run the risk of being proclaimed 'unlawful associations'. We go further and say that even a newspaper is not at liberty to advocate measures of passive resistance that interfere with maintenance of law and order, because under the Indian Press Act I of 1910, the printing press in respect of which security has been deposited under the Act is liable to be forfeited, if it is responsible for the publication of a newspaper, which encourages or incites any person to interfere with the administration of law or with the maintenance of law and order.......... We fail to see why Mrs. Besant's followers want the support of the Congress and its subordinate organizations, if they wish to enter upon a policy of passive resistance. Similarly, Congressmen, as individuals, have a clear choice before them. They need not wait for anybody's counsel or recommendation. Their own conscience is their guide and if they are not prepared to act up to its imperative dictates, they are not justified in drawing organized and constitutional bodies into the vortex of unknown troubles and dangers and drag them to destruction."

Mahrátta (5), 2nd Sept.

*11. "It is impossible to have patience with those who would, in the name of 'prudence', counsel adherence to a path that leads to National dishonour and an irreparable loss, in the bargain, of a rare opportunity of gaining some material instalment of reforms !......... What is the dominating feature of the situation ? It is the Repressive policy—the Students' circulars, the special ban on the Home Rule Home Rule and 'League' lectures, the fantastic and fanatical operation of the Press Act and the Defence Act and the Police Acts, the prohibiting of processions and public meetings, and so on and so forth....... These—and not the announcement—are the dominating features. The announcement has come—and so far as its essential part is concerned, it has been universally condemned as a bureaucratic draft. And the little 'healthy' change that it may be taken to show is more the result of our agitation culminating in the passive resistance resolution of the Joint Conference, than of anything else. Mr. Montagu is coming—but what is he coming for? It is to ascertain the strength of our forces on the spot. It is to ascertain the strength of our feeling against the repressive policy on the spot. If we create a fictitious 'calm', it will prejudice our cause and not further it. A true Englishman cannot understand men feeling strongly—and yet refraining from even the simple programme of passive resistance. Go, talk to any common man in England, or any statesman (who speaks unvarnished truth like Mr. Bonar Law or Sir Edward Carson)—and you will learn the truth about the men you have to move. The Britishers cannot be moved by any thing but strength. Their women wanted the vote—and what a struggle they have had before they got it. Not 'a calm', but a 'a storm', is the proper atmosphere for the British intellect and emotion to grasp the realities fully and properly. And you cannot expect the best results from the 'coming inquiry' until the realities are properly grasped by Mr. Montagu and his colleagues. Any attempt, therefore, to create a fictitious calm deserves to be severely condemned, as both dishonourable and 'gravely inexpedient'."

Sánj Vartamán (31), 27th Aug.; Bombay Samáchár (59), 1st Sept.; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 27th Aug.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 26th Aug.; Hitechhu (65), 19th Aug.; Gujaráti Punch (18), 26th Aug.

12. The Sánj Vartamán strongly disapproves of passive resistance as a measure to remedy the present political situation in India, and remarks that passive resistance is a weapon which, if not properly handled, is likely to degenerate into an illegal instrument. It observes that in view of the serious endeavours His Majesty's Government have made, since the appointment of Mr. Montagu as Secretary of State for India, to improve the political situation in India, it will bespeak foresight on the part of the Indians to give up even the consideration of the question of passive resistance. The paper accordingly commends the manifesto issued by some of the political leaders of Madras advising the people of that Presidency to give up the proposed boycott and policy of passive resistance. It opines that the release of political prisoners who have been interned without trial under the Defence of India Act will greatly tend to make the mission of Mr. Montagu a success. [The Bombay Samáchár expresses its satisfaction at the conclusion arrived at by the sub-committee of the Bombay Provincial Congress Committee against the adoption of passive resistance. It congratulates Mr. M. K. Gandhi on his dissuading political bodies from adopting passive resistance as part of their work, and hopes that the responsible bodies in the country will follow his advice. The paper suggests that since England is displaying at present genuine sempathy towards India by sending the Secretary of State to make inquiries on the spot, it is the duty of patriotic Indians to unite in co-operating with him. The Jám-e-Jamshed also approves of the advice contained in the manifesto issued by the Madras leaders and expresses the opinion that the political leaders of all the presidencies should act upon that advice. The Praja Mitra and Pársi also deprecates the adoption of passive resistance and believes that its adoption will only tend to strengthen the hands of the opponents of Indian aspirations. The Hitechhu, on the contrary, supports the adoption of passive resistance and observes :—If the need had at any time arisen in India for the adoption of passive resistance it is now. Severer restictions are being experienced from day to day on the liberty of the press and freedom of speech. The case of the last internments illustrates the kind of danger in which individual liberty has been placed. It is degrading to the Indians if they do not carry on the constitutional agitation of passive resistance for the sake of Mrs. Annie Besant. The Gujdrati Punch remarks:—When officials do not respect the wishes of the people there is no wonder if dissatisfied persons resolve to carry on passive resistance in a constitutional manner. May God give the youths as well as the leaders of the country strength sufficient for carrying on passive resistance in order that they may prove successful in this constitutional fight of theirs.]

Comments on Lord Islington's views about political reform in India.

Sind Advocate (9), 16th Aug.

13. "The London Times says with its usual complacency that the pronouncement of Lord Islington, Under Secretary for India, before the Oxford students will give satisfaction to all and sundry. We wonder whether the Times means it.......... Lord Islington's proposals would be disappointing, and very disappointing even if a great war had not brought in its train new possibilities, new view points, new aspirations and new every thing. Indeed, we could expect nothing better of the narrow-minded Commission which has given us that monumental document of despair on the Public Services in India.......... But to do him justice, Lord Islington is quite prepared to be liberal in the bestowal of toys and fine toys at that, on educated aspiring Indians.......... Lord Islington says that he contemplates the Australian Commonwealth as a model for India. But judging from his poor proposals he does not seem to mean it at all."

Comments on Lord Sydenham's letter in the Times on Lord Islington's speech at Oxford.

New Times (7), 18th Aug.

14. Commenting upon Reuter's summary of Lord Sydenham's letter in the Times regarding Lord Islington's speech at Oxford, the New Times writes:—"He (Lord Sydenham) says that Lord Islington's 'description of the Government of India as a vast bureaucracy is a misuse of language borrowed from the vocabulary of a small section which employs the term for the purpose of opprobrium'. Lord Islington's description will be endorsed by any close observer of Indian life; and it is strange that Lord Sydenham with his experience of Indian administration should hesitate to describe the present Governmnet as subject to the bureaucratic system. The story of internments and deportations and the operations of the Press Act and other measures will not be easily believed in by the liberty-loving Britons; but they have only to visit India to know how great is the sway of even the small official functionaries, how despotic are the methods of many, how often they ride roughshod over the feelings and matured convictions of the people and their representatives, how rigorous is censorship of the Press, how even the so-called local self-government of municipal corporations is subject to the scrutiny of inquisitive officials, how small is the number of officials who realise the sanctity of the principles of freedom, equality and fraternity guaranteed to us by the constitution of the great Empire to which we belong. If ever an administration was bureaucratic, it is the administration of the Indian Government. [The paper then quotes Lord Sydenham's remarks about the duty of Government towards the masses, and continues:—]This official petting of the poor 'masses' has a touch of 'ultra-altruism'; it reminds us of a famous Bengali saying: ati bhakti chore lakshan: trust not the man who professes excessive love. Think of the official apostles of the poor, 'the vast masses of India!' It is dangerous, say these ati-bhaktas of the Indian administration, to betray these poor ignorant ones of India into the hands of educated Indians; it will be, they say, 'to ignore our duty,' to allow 'the vast masses' to fall into the hands of a 'little oligarchy' of Indians lest they be trampled upon by their 'educated' brethren! The uneducated, the 'inarticulate masses' must be protected against their kith and kin! This is official patriotism! .... A bureaucracy that is ill-disposed to educated India must never hope to be trusted by the masses; for enshrined in the hearts of the masses are eminent representatives of educated India—men such as Gokhale, Gandhi, Tilak, Arabinda Ghosh, Surendranath Banerji. Lord Curzon's experiment of opposing the educated failed miserably; it will not do to repeat it; it will not be honest, it will not be right to adopt an attitude which means estrangement and loss of fellowship."

15. Lord Sydenham has formed a correct estimate of the present political situation. As all classes enjoy equal opportunities under the British Government it is essential in the interests of the masses that British power should not be weakened. This, of course, does not solve the whole political problem. It is equally necessary that Government should adopt a more liberal policy and diffuse knowledge among the masses. If Lord Sydenham really sympathises with us—and we believe he does—he should advise his countrymen not to make us dependent on British power for ever, but gradually make us self-reliant. ......

Jágaruk (new), 24th Aug.

16. The political parties in a subject country may choose different methods of agitation, but they have all ultimately to recognise that the country's salvation depends on the attainment of swarájya. The resolutions passed at the non-Brahmin Conference recently held at Coimbatore go to show that just as the Moslem League which had its origin in the desire to oppose the Congress propaganda ultimately left behind the latter body in demanding swarájya these non-Brahmin Conferences are naturally bound to take a similar line We, therefore, congratulate the Conference on the demands it has made and feel confident that the non-Brahmin Conference which is about to be held at Belgaum will also pass similar resolutions leading to swarájya. [The Dnyán Prakásh also declares that the Coimbatore Conference, in spite of the desire of its organisers, has supported the cause of swarájya.]

Comments on the resolutions passed at the non-Brahmin Conference at Coimbatore.

Kesari (106), 28th Aug.; Dnyán Prakásh (36), 29th Aug.

17. "A special message to New India from Trichinopoly says that 200 college students openly signed as conveners of a political meeting and expressed their determination to attend Home Rule meetings in future. We offer our hearty congratulations to the students, who have displayed such exemplary moral courage. There was a time when students along with the rest of the community were cowed down by repressive orders and unwarranted encroachments on their liberty and freedom. But that time has definitely passed away. The behaviour of the Trichinopoly students is certainly worthy of the new spirit of patriotism which pervades the minds of all men to-day......... We should certainly be glad to see that the various Governments concerned take a hint from these manifestations and withdraw the orders gracefully and voluntarily, before being forced to such a course by pressure of inevitable circumstances."

Comments on the Trichinopoly meeting of students resolving to attend Home Rule meetings.

Young India (14), 29th Aug.

18. Mr. Jamshed N. R. Mehta writes to the Hind Vási:—"I, as one of the Home Rule Leaguers can say definitely that Mrs. Besant's political activities had always a helpful effect and created not in the least any ill-will, malice or hatred.......... She, in her wisdom and knowledge of India, had understood fully the under-current of India's aspirations, and she knew that this current required a bold and free guidance. The Government of India have had ample opportunities to guide the people to reach the goal of their aspirations, but it was a pity the bureaucratic authorities would not be divested of their illusions and they have not yet been able to see through. When men in power cannot see, the Creator and His Agents must take up the work in their own hands, and as one of the servants of the Lords, one so faithful, one so unselfish, so self-sacrificing, it came to the lot of Mrs. Besant to work for India. Her work, as I said

Reflections on the internment of Mrs. Besant and the duty of Government to help India to become free.

Hind Vási (45), 16th Aug., Eng. cols.

above, was to unite and not to separate. The authorities have got a very handy instrument in stating that she created disturbance during the war. Nothing could be a greater falsehood. I challenge every one to read her articles on the war from the very beginning upto date, and they will see for themselves how absurd their statement is.......... It is an insult not only to Mrs. Besant, but to India, to say that Mrs. Besant's activities have disturbed war operations. Ah! little do these authorities know what Great Personages stand behind Mrs. Besant to protect her, and her adherents, and to guide India: Those who are the real rulers of the world. These Agents of God have given ample opportunities to our rulers and they shall yet give more, because they are the Lords of Love and Wisdom. But let it not be too late. These opportunities cannot be given always and eternally. If the British cannot make themselves worthy instruments to make India free, God's Agents must and shall do so."

Comments on the election of Mrs. Besant to be President of the next National Congress.

Gujaráti (16), 2nd Sept., Eng. cols.

19. "The news from Calcutta is anything but encouraging.......... We confess we do not understand the action of the Reception Committee in confirming Mrs. Besant's nomination, whilst she is still interned. Is the Reception Committee certain that Mrs. Besant will be released about the end of September, by which time the next President ought to be nominated or before the last week of December when the Congress is expected to meet at Calcutta? If not, what is the meaning of the step that the Reception Committee has taken? But even assuming that Mrs. Besant is going to be released—and perhaps she may be freed from internment subject to certain conditions or unconditionally—is it wisdom to create more difficulties and complications in a province like Bengal where more than a thousand internments have taken place, by placing her in the presidential chair? Supposing she is prevented from entering Bengal, what is to be done at the eleventh hour? Further, assuming no such order is issued, has Mrs. Besant that tact, sound judgment and foresight to enable her to pilot the ship of the Congress through all the rocks ahead at this hour of crisis? We are afraid the Honourable Mr. Bhupendranath's appeal to his countrymen to show the highest statesmanship at this hour has fallen upon deaf ears."

Rást Goftár (30), 2nd Sept., Eng. cols.

20. Referring to the election by seven out of the eight Indian Provinces of Mrs. Besant as President of the next Congress, the Rást Goftár remarks:—"In other words, a person who has been interned by the Madras Government on account of her 'dangerous' activities—an opinion which was cheerfully endorsed by Mr. Chamberlain as Secretary of State for India—is deemed by the whole of Educated India as the fittest person for the presidential chair of the Indian National Congress, the highest honour that the country can confer on any one. In the deliberate opinion of the whole country Mrs. Besant, who has been deprived of her liberty and debarred from her numerous activities, is as worthy of honour and trust as Mr. Bhupendranath Basu, member of the India Council, and Sir S. P. Sinha, member of the Bengal Executive Council, for both of them were Presidents of the Congress. Thus the Government and Educated India are as wide apart as the poles, whereas co-operation between them is necessary."

Mr. Mahommed Ali should be elected President of the Moslem League just as Mrs. Besant is being elected President of the Congress.

Kesari (106), 28th Aug.

21. The Kesari says that ultimately Mrs. Besant is likely to be elected President of the next Congress. It quotes Sir Subramania's letter asking the people to approach Parliament and even the King-Emperor for the release of Mrs. Besant at least temporarily during the Congress Session. It is of opinion that Mr. Montagu will release Mrs. Besant if a strong agitation is carried on and that Mr. Montagu may even consult her during his visit. It calls upon the Congress Committees to elect Mrs. Besant unanimously. [Further on the paper pleads for the election of Mr. Mahommed Ali as President of the Moslem League. It holds that the release of these leaders is necessary if Mr. Montagu does not want to look at public questions through official spectacles and if he wants to have an open and frank discussion on them with public leaders.]

If the Government of India and the Secretary of State really set store by the goodwill of the people of India they should not wait a minute in annulling the internment of Mrs. Besant.
Sind Advocate (9), 16th Aug.

22. In the course of a lengthy communication to the Sind Advocate on the subject of the internment of Mrs. Besant, in which he dwells at great length on her virtues and abilities, her claims on the gratitude of Indians and the duty of the latter to carry on her work, Mr. Chandiram J. B. of Rohri, Sind, remarks:—"If the Government of India or the Honourable Mr. Montagu knew the realities of a situation, could fathom and probe the depth of the feelings of intense dissatisfaction to which the minds of thousands of thoughtful and loyal to the core people have been worked up by as a result of this indefensible action of the Madras Government, and really disliked playing an ostrich policy, and set store by the feelings of goodwill of the people, they would not like to wait a minute in undoing and annulling this irritating and exasperating blunder. But divorced from the first-hand knowledge of things and being probably supplied with inaccurate and wrong information they may not soon make up their minds to reverse the action."

Comments on the reported grant of self-government to Portuguese India.
New Times (7), 13th Aug.

23. Referring to the report that the Portuguese Government has granted self-government to Portuguese India, and remarking that the Hindu population will now be on a footing of equality with the Christian population, the New Times continues:—"When will British India have a similar concession? England is the mother of freedom; she is offering home rule with both hands to Ireland. She is anxious to protect the rights of nations; and is for the autonomy of Poland and Finland. She has already granted self-government to the Dominions; to speak to England concerning the desirability of self-government is to preach to the converted; even a Government of archangels will commit grave political blunders when it cannot fully retain the confidence and co-operation of the people.......... The Indian Government should, in a spirit of bold statesmanship, co-operate with the people in the task of achieving self-government; to stand aloof from the aspirations of Indians, which owe their birth and progress to India's political contact with England, would be a calamitous error."

Suggestion that Government should stop the raising of house rents in Bombay under the Defence of India Act.
Indu Prakásh (39), 30th Aug., Eng. cols.

24. "Life in Bombay has become a hardship to the large majority of people, owing to the cost of living which was already prohibitive, having become still more so during the last three years of the present war...... ... Here is a most proper case for Government to act under the Defence of India Act. They can declare under this Act that the landlords shall not raise rents during the continuance of the war and six months afterwards. This declaration under the Defence of India Act should have a retrospective effect, so that house-rents, where raised, should be restored to the status quo ante bellum, although even as they stood then, they were sufficiently prohibitive. The Government would in this measure have the support of all save the vested interests concerned."

Criticism of Lord Hardinge's treatment of his Executive Council in the matter of the Mesopotamia campaign.
Message (6), 31st Aug.

25. "One of the charges against Lord Hardinge in regard to the Mesopotamia affair has been that he 'abrogated the functions of the Executive Council and practically raised himself and the Commander-in-Chief' to the position of the 'Government of India'. While we are at one with the Indian leaders in their grateful attitude towards Lord Hardinge and in their rising as one man to his rescue, we cannot ignore the fact that that part of the accusation which relates to Lord Hardinge's stultifying his Executive Council has truth on its side.......... We yield to none in our admiration for his sympathy with Indian feelings, sentiments and aspirations and for the courageous position he took in regard to the emigration question. But our admiration cannot make us blind to the fact that he—even he, we say—could not fully overcome the tendency towards autocratism which is natural to rulers over a people to whom they are not responsible. Another question which emerges out of the preceding one, is whether the Executive Council of the Viceroy acted wisely or not in not insisting upon their being consulted. For our part, we think that the Council erred in meekly allowing itself to be nullified so far as the Mesopotamian campaign was concerned. For whatever is being done in the name of the Government of India, the Council, as a body, is responsible.......... Indian members of the Executive Councils, Viceregal or Provincial, have often loyally set aside their individuality in the interests of the body of which they formed a part. May we not pertinently inquire whether they have equally often and equally heartily insisted on their right to be consulted in all important matters, transacted in the name of the Government of which they formed a part?"

Parsis and Home Rule.
Sánj Vartamán (31), 30th Aug.

26. Referring to the fact of a section of the Parsi community being against the Home Rule movement, the Sánj Vartamán remarks that a small community like the Parsis will not be benefited by keeping aloof from the movement which, it thinks, is calculated to bring about the political regeneration of India. In view of its legitimate character, as proved in various Indian High Courts, and in view of a similar declaration made by the British Government in favour of self-government for India under British rule, the paper cannot comprehend why a community like the Parsis which is believed to be taking the lead in education and the political progress of the country should not contribute its share in the Home Rule movement. It dismisses the plea of those who argue that the community, being very small in number, will be crushed by the Hindu and the Muhammadan communities if India were to be granted swarájya, by observing that the Parsis, by reason of their innate intelligence and the moral teachings of their religion, will be able to hold their own under any such changed condition of things in India, just as they continued to flourish in the time of the Hindu and Muhammadan rulers before the advent of British rule. The paper maintains that the interests of the Parsis lie in their joining hands with the other Indian communities in carrying on constitutional movements for the purpose of securing political rights for the crores of people of this country and declares that any attempt on their part to keep away from the Home Rule movement will be only calculated to create estrangement between them and the other sister communities in India.

What should the Muhammadans do to improve their political condition?
Islámic Mail (4), 26th Aug., Eng. cols.

27. "The time has come for the real leaders of people, zemindars and men in business to assert their power and to take the lead of things in their hands. The educated have held their tyrannical sway too long so that it has now become impossible to sit quiet, and those who have the welfare of their people and of their country at heart would be failing in their duty if they did not organise their forces in a proper way. .... It is imperative for the Muhammadans to organise their own forces to be able to safeguard their own interests. Let them join hands with Hindus if they so desire; let them follow Mr. Jinnah's policy if they think it will be advantageous for them. Let them even join the Home Rule League if they think it will benefit them in the long run; but let them first put their house in order and call together the force at their command. These are certainly the days of democracy and if they would follow the democratic principles we cannot have any objection to it. But let them first emancipate themselves from the one man rule of Syed Wazir Husan or Mr. Haque. If they wish to fight the bureaucracy, they are welcome to it, but let them first do away with the worst autocracy which dispenses their fate without their knowledge and consent. We do not say that they should not ask for representative government. Let them demand it by all means. But first organise the basis of the representation so that when we ultimately achieve representative government we may not be handicapped by our unpreparedness and let the Hindus reap all the fruits of our labours......... Mr. Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer complained the other day in the Council that there are many Municipalties and District Boards where not a single Muhammadan has ever gone by election. It is no doubt a deprorable state of affairs, but quite natural in the present condition of Muhammadans. They lack cohesion and organisation, and disintegration resulting in the gain of the other communities is the inevitable result. The little oligarchy at Lucknow is the sole arbiter of our destinies, and as it is in the hands of the Congress we are at the mercy of the Hindus who dominate the Congress. Let us organise our power and our resources, let us form real representative associations where every Muhammadan unit, every village, every town has a voice, let us prepare ourselves for our share in the coming concessions. Muhammadans should not have to depend either upon the generosity of Government or upon the good graces of the rival Communities."

Alleged friction between Hindus and Musalmans at Jubbulpore.

Muslim Herald (145), 31st Aug.

28. The Muslim Herald reports that the Musalmans of Jubbulpore where the mosques have been shut up after a dispute with the local Hindu community, wired to the Moslem League at Lucknow which, however, did not even so much as acknowledge its receipt. The paper holds it to be the duty of the League to have sent someone for ascertaining the true facts of the case which might have been published broadcast to allay the anxiety of Musalmans in other parts of the country. It is of opinion that the apparent unconcern of the League springs from a desire to keep in the good books of the Congress of which, indeed, it has become an integral part. [Elsewhere the paper republishes an article from the Mashriq, newspaper of Gorakhpur, in which besides the Hindu-Muhamadan tension at Jubbulpore, mention is made of eleven other subjects of dispute between the two communities. These refer to Muhamadan representation on public bodies, holidays, Id sacrifice, service under Government, and opposition to Urdu.]

Reflections on the situation in Ireland.

Rdj Hansa (85), 28th Aug.

29. As Sinn Feinners are powerful, the British Government admitted them into the Irish Convention. But they are not satisfied with this respectful treatment and disturb the work of the Convention. They put up their own men at bye-elections and thus got into the House of Commons. Even if loyalists and nationalists agree to any scheme of Swardjya Sinn Feinners will come in the way. They do not want Swardjya; they want a republic. The Sinn Feinners are likely to be successful in Parliament. Young Irishmen are mostly Sinn Feinners. Though war is going on in the vicinity they do not join the army. They cannot be compelled to join by conscription. As they have no other work to do they are cogitating over lawless ideas of revolution and rebellion. Those in the know are afraid that they might turn against the Imperial Government by taking advantage of some opportunity, as they are volunteers. It is regrettable that though Government are making varied attempts to remove Irish discontent, it is reappearing like a comet.

Criticism of the work done by the Bombay City Food Prices Committee.

Sánj Vartamán (31), 31st Aug.

30. The appointment of the Food Prices Committee had only a temporary effect on the rise in prices. The Committee has rendered no account of itself beyond publishing periodically a price list that is unintelligible and confusing to the poor and illiterate masses. It is, in the first instance, very necessary to assertain whether the prices fixed by the Committee are not unduly high. The public should be informed of the method adopted by the Committee in fixing the prices and whether any steps are taken to see that the prices fixed are adhered to by the merchants. The Committee might do well to keep its meetings open to the public and invite the press representatives. The Committee would do better to make the price-list simpler than at present, and fix the prices of commodities for such small measures as are commonly known to the poorer people. The Committee has taken a practical and effective step in opening two shops for the poor, but many more such shops are required to relieve the public from the unduly high prices they have to pay to the retail merchants.

Contradiction of a reply given to an interpellation at the last meeting of the Bombay Legislative Council.
Kesari (106), 28th Aug.

31. With reference to the alleged highhandedness of Mr. Hood, Assistant Collector of Kolába, reported in paragraph No. 8 of Weekly Report No. 12 of 1917, the same correspondent writes to the Kesari:—I have been obliged to write this letter because Government have said in their reply to the Honourable Mr. Belvi's interpellation that my allegations were baseless. A few days after the publication of my letter, one of the speakers at the Kolába District Conference made reference to it and condemned such conduct and another speaker supported my statement. The Collector would have contradicted the speakers then and there but he did nothing of the kind nor were the speakers called upon to explain the matter afterwards. Government say that they have made an inquiry but we do not know when they have made the inquiry. The gentleman at whose place the incident occurred should have been asked and the inquiry should have been chiefly conducted in his village. But nothing of any inquiry is known there. The gentleman is ready to declare on oath that the report of the Kesari is true. Even the Saheb himself must have found it hard to wash off the black stain on his extra white hands caused by the grime of the wheel-pin. I am surprised as to how big officials can dare to declare without any inquiry that the incident that occurred in broad daylight before some villagers is quite false. The statements made in my former letter are quite true. What more proof is required than the fact that the Saheb Bahadur has not yet returned to the owner the wheel-pin he took away?

Comments on one of Mr. Basu's speech in Bombay.
Message (6), 1st Sept.

32. Commenting on Mr. Basu's speech at the Servants of India Society's rooms, the Message writes:—"We admire Mr. Basu's faith in the future. But what we do not understand is his complacent omission of all reference to the internments of thousands of poor Indians, unknown to fame, and also of those great leaders of the Indian National movement like Mrs. Besant and Mr. Mahommed Ali. His silence on this most important point was simply provocative beyond measure and Mr. Basu went on to talk cant about so many other things that we should or should not do."

The late Mr. Gokhale's Reform scheme.
Jágaruk (new), 24th Aug.

33. The Jágaruk welcomes the late Mr. Gokhale's reform scheme and remarks:—Mr. Gokhale recognised that it was to the interests of the masses that British control over the internal administration of India should continue for several years to come. A comparison between the schemes of Mr. Gokhale and the present-day Moderate politicians will show how the latter have taken leave of moderation in making their demands. These people are avowedly bent on depriving the British of all real power. It is necessary, however, that the present administration should be more liberalised and the Provincial Governments made more autonomous. We would also urge that provision should be made for the adequate representation of all classes in the Legislative Councils.

Comments on the address delivered by His Excellency Lord Willingdon at the Fergusson College, Poona.
New Times (7), 17th Aug.

34. In the course of the first instalment of an article on His Excellency Lord Willingdon's speech at the Fergusson College, the New Times remarks:—"The Order stands self-condemned as an effort to inflict on students a policy of isolation; whereas Government ought rather to help students to enter sympathetically into the strivings of our national life and thus equip them to be ready for their work in the University of Life.......... The circular seeks to isolate students from the new national life; it cannot succeed: patriotism is a sacrament of our young men's life; they will pay the price of sharing in the sacred work of lifting India; they will suffer; and though they submit to Cæsar's will, they will continue to cling with passionate loyalty to the National Ideal.......... The policy which has prompted the circular is foredoomed to failure. His Excellency expressed disappointment at the small number of those who had enlisted in the Bombay University Company: does His Excellency know the real cause of the inadequate response? Government have followed a policy and proposed to themselves a programme which have provoked the people: the authorities have alienated popular sympathies and the bureaucracy still go their way muddling through a work the most responsible ever entrusted to a Government on this planet. If we may foretell the future from what we see before us, we are inclined to say that the present policy, if persisted in, will prove a source of great anxiety and unrest."

Comments on the formation by Her Excellency's Lady Willingdon of a Children's Branch of the Women's War and Relief Fund.

Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 2nd Sept., Eng. cols.

35. "To the ever energetic and able mind of Lady Willingdon is due the great opportunity that has been afforded to the children of this Presidency to understand and realise and bear a share in the supreme responsibility that rests to-day upon every human being......... It is the genius of Lady Willingdon that has introduced the idea of helping the State into the minds of young children. The formation of a Children's Branch of the Women's War and Relief Fund is an admirable method of inculcating the spirit of social service into young minds. Apart from the immediate benefits that the Children's Branch will bring to the needs of the moment it will serve to arouse a feeling of patriotism and a sense of duty in those who will be the citizens of to-morrow and who, it is essential, should understand the great issue at stake. We trust that Her Excellency's efforts will be crowned with the completest success and the Children's Branch achieve what is expected of it."

Alleged hardships of a country liquor licensee in Bassein Taluka (district Thána).

Rást Goftár (30), 26th Aug.

36. The Rást Goftár publishes a petition submitted by a poor and blind Parsi widow to the Collector of Thána wherein the petitioner states that she has been deprived of her license to sell country liquor at Papri in the Bassein Taluka on the ground of her not personally attending to her shop and prays that the license may be restored to her as she is very poor and as all her belongings to the extent of Rs. 500 which she had reserved for her funeral expenses have been invested in the War Loan. She alleges that she was coerced to do so by the Assistant Collector of Excise. [The paper expresses surprise and indignation that Government officials should have no compassion on the poor widow who was made to subscribe to the War Loan and asks the Collector of Thána to grant relief to the poor petitioner.]

Complaint against the Mahálkari of Valod (district Surat).

Political Bhomiyo (71), 30th Aug.

37. A Muhammadan correspondent addresses a letter to the Political Bhomiyo in the course of which he describes how during the régime of Mr. Anderson as Collector of the Surat District Mr. Bhailal Venilal, Mahálkari of Valod, called an old respectable Borah Mia Kashaji Yusafji in his court and insulted him by pulling his beard and uttering disrespectful terms for the action of a Muhammadan who, through mistake, had dug a grave in the ground which was formerly used as a cemetery by the Borahs. With reference to that incident the correspondent characterises Mr. Bhailal, as an arbitrary and churlish Magistrate and attributes his above act of mishandling the "Mutawali" in open court to the grudge he entertained against the Muhammadans in connection with the construction of a certain hospital at Valod. He then refers to the prosecution instituted against Mr. Bhailal, in connection with the above incident, in the Court of the District Magistrate, Surat, and alleges that Mr. Bhailal managed to square the prosecution witnesses through the influence of his father-in-law, Mr. Lakhia, one time City Magistrate and Deputy Collector of Surat. The correspondent then goes on to observe that Mr. Bhailal has occupied this post of Mahalkari of Valod four or five times during the course of the last 12 years and is heard often to have passed remarks that he would not leave the Muhammadans in peace. In conclusion, the correspondent appeals to the Commissioner of the Northern Division to transfer Mr. Bhailal to some other Mahal and thereby give relief to the Muhammadans.

The War.
Baroda Vartamán (57), 27th Aug.

38. It has been the enemy's boast that his line of defence has not been broken in spite of the continuous attacks of the Allies. The Allies, on the other hand, declare that they are not fighting for acquiring territory or penetrating the enemy's defences but with the sole intention of inflicting the greatest possible losses upon him and tiring him out. The reports show that the object of the Allies is being achieved. Unforeseen circumstances might tend to prolong the war, but the Allies will continue to fight till victory is achieved and German militarism is crushed. The Rumanian situation is very grave. The enemy is advancing towards Odessa and the proposal of transferring the Rumanian capital to the South of Russia leads us to the conclusion that the enemy will be successful in that quarter. Should the enemy succeed in conquering Moldavia he will derive no small benefit by securing corn and other necessaries from that country. The Bulgarians are bombarding Monastir and the great fire at Salonika is supposed to be due to enemy machinations. The Italians, however, have commenced their offensive on the Carso and the French have achieved a splendid success near Verdun. Let us hope that the Allied offensive will succeed in upsetting enemy plans.

Comments on the portrait and message sent to the widows, mothers and dauthers of Indian soldiers killed in the War.
New Times (7), 15th Aug.

39. "Her Imperial Majesty the Queen-Empress is presenting a beautiful portrait to the widows and mothers and daughters of the Indian soldiers who have died nobly for the King and the country in this War; and the portrait is accompanied by a message still more beautiful.......... The message will move the hearts of bereaved families, and is a gracious tribute to the courage and devotion of Indian soldiers. If every repesentative of England in India adopted a similar attitude of sympathy to the Indian people and endeavoured to change the deplorable conditions which would be a disgrace to any civilized community in the West, a new chapter would be opened in our history and England would feel proud of her connexion with India."

Comments on the announcement about the grants of Army Commissions to Indians.
Jágaruk (new) 24th Aug.; Dnyán Prakásh (36), 29th Aug.

40. The Jágaruk remarks that Mr. Montagu has performed an act of supreme importance by removing the bar which precluded the admission of Indians to commissioned ranks in the army. It would have been an act of unpardonable injustice, it says, to continue this bar after the Indian soldiers had proved their loyalty and bravery by freely shedding their blood in the present war. It observes that Government have indeed placed the political agitators in a very awkward predicament by beginning to satisfy the legitimate aspirations of the people. It adds that these agitators will be very much mortified to find their weapons of misleading the people taken out of their hands. [The Dnyán Prakásh, on the other hand, remarks:—We do not understand what is meant by giving commissions to those who have them already. The officers whose names have been announced as the recipients of commissions belong to the Imperial Cadet Corps and were given the King's commissions several years ago. What then is the meaning of giving commissions as rewards for bravery to those who were already commissioned officers? We are indeed unable to solve this riddle and would like Government to enlighten us on this point.]

Kesari (106), 28th Aug.

41. Indians will surely feel glad at the cancellation of former insulting regulations that rankled in the hearts of brave Indian soldiers. Though the bar is removed so far as regards the Army it still exists in the Navy. Instead of removing the restrictions in every Department separately it is necessary to give a general promise to abide by the Charter of 1833 and proclamation of 1858 to the letter and to open all Departments to Indians. Regarding the Commissions in the Army we should like first to know how many places have been reserved for Indians and what arrangements have been made for their education in India. Otherwise it would be another copy of the I. C. S. Arrangements have been made at Quetta to provide military education during the war-time. Indians will be able to avail themselves of the concession only if these arrangements are made permanent or a new military college is established at Poona, Bangalore or Mhow. Otherwise these wordy promises will be as good as if not given at all.

EDUCATION.

The Secondary Education Conference.

Gujaráti (16), 26th Aug.; Hindusthán (20), 25th Aug.; Bombay Samáchár (59), 27th Aug.

42. Commenting upon the proceedings of the Secondary Education Conference, the Gujaráti writes:—It is very strange that Lord Chelmsford who seemed to be in favour of making the vernaculars the medium of instruction seven months ago, now declares that any change in the present system is out of the pale of practical politics. The time of the Conference has been wasted in fruitless discussion. In spite of what has been resolved by the Conference we are of opinion that the question of imparting education to the general public through the medium of the vernaculars is bound to be revived with increased vigour. The days of the present system of imparting education through the medium of English are numbered. The system is responsible for the physical and mental weakness of our children. Just as a child requires to be fed on mother's milk to be nurtured most efficiently, it should be instructed through the medium of its mother-tongue for the proper development of its faculties. [The Hindusthán, while giving its opinion in favour of adopting a system of imparting education through the medium of the vernaculars, advocates the adoption of Hindi for imparting education on national lines. The Bombay Samáchár, on the other hand, is in favour of continuing the present system of imparting education in the High School standards through the medium of English.]

Kesari (106), 28th Aug.; Chandrodaya (33), 27th Aug.; Dnyán Prakásh (36), 1st Sept.

43. Lord Chelmsford has changed his views formerly expressed at the Directors' Conference regarding secondary education and the vernaculars. The Simla Conference has proceeded on a wrong line in considering the question of proficiency in English without considering the percentage of boys for whom it is necessary to acquire a high standard of English. For the sake of 5 per cent., 95 per cent. of the students are now to be burdened anew with English. At present boys study the vernacular for five or six years before taking up English, but the Conference was with difficulty persuaded to retain four years' study of the vernacular. Two resolutions passed are welcome, the adoption of the medium of English only in the two highest standards and the permission given to students to answer their papers in the vernacular at the last examination of the secondary course. We hope that Mr. Covernton who was in favour of these two resolutions will give effect to them in our Presidency. [The Chandrodaya expresses its disappointment at the Conference proceedings and says that after the Viceroy's speech, it saw no chance for the vernaculars. The Dnyán Prakásh objects to the presence of Mr. Natrajan at the Conference as one whose mother-tongue is Tamil and who feels himself a foreigner in Bombay.]

Indian Social Reformer (3), 2nd Sept.

44. "Lord Chelmsford is very far from being given to rhetorical displays, and on that account His Excellency's forecast of the position of English in this country is specially important. 'It is surely out of the question', said His Excellency, 'now to talk of going back on the established lines of our education system. The interest of the educated classes is centred in English. English is on the high road to become, if it has not already become, among the educated classes, the lingua franca all over India.'......... These words show that Lord Chelmsford has a thorough insight into the tendency of things in Indian education, and we may put aside all fears of Government being hustled by enthusiasts into anything savouring of a reversal of the established policy. For our own part, we regard the widest possible diffusion of the English language as a necessary corollary of our position as an integral part of the British Empire, and any proposal which is not likely to further such diffusion is highly detrimental to the political, social and economic progress of the country."

Comments on the Bombay Law students' petition to Government.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 27th Aug., Eng. cols.

45. Commenting on the Bombay Law students' petition to Government against the orders prohibiting them from attending political meetings, the Praja Mitra and Pársi writes :—"We hope Lord Willingdon's government will see the justice and reasonableness of the petition of the Bombay Law students, and grant their request. There is no justification for treating the law students as on the same level with school-boys and under-graduates, for whom we presume the regulations were originally intended, and in whose case alone such anomalous restrictions on the rights and liberties of British subjects could be tolerated."

The people of Lárkána (Sind) should not depend upon Government or the Municipality for the High School so badly wanted by them.

New Times (7), 16th Aug.

46. A "Larkanaite" complains in the New Times of the need of a High School at Lárkána. He points out that although four or five years ago the foundation-stone of such a school was laid by the Governor of Bombay, the school has not yet came into existence. Since both Government and Municipality seem to be neglecting the matter, the writer makes the following appeal to the public :—"I appeal to the young men, who have already volunteered their services for the proposed private high school, but are only waiting for a leader to direct their energies, to be self-dependent. Let them go from house to house a-begging and start a high school at once. For certain reasons, we require neither a Government nor a Municipal high school. But a school maintained from private funds, manned by private agency and conducted on national lines, is what we require. No more fussy arguments, no more reliance on the selfish, but sacrifice your life and soul for the cause of education. We want a fully educated India at this time."

Alleged need of abolishing the system of Mulla schools in Sind.

Sind Moslem (11), 18th Aug.

47. Writing on the necessity of abolishing the system of Mulla schools in Sind in the columns of the Sind Moslem, a correspondent remarks :—"The lack of harmony between the courses followed in the Local Board and Mulla schools (for Mulla schools are supplied a simple time table for guidance) causes in consequence tremendous delay in the progress of such students as are willing to get secondary education. To show the certain stages in the much boasted evolution of the working of the system suffice it to quote from the Director's Report for the year 1915-16 : 'A simple time table has been supplied to all schools and 63 Mullahs (out of 129 for 349 schools) now send in monthly returns of attendance, some keep inward and outward registers and even (go so far as to) apply for leave of absence.' The last sentence is replete with a volume of meaning, and throws a flood of light on the efficiency of the management of the Mulla schools. What a mess as compared with even the worst Local Board Primary schools ! I refuse to be satisfied with this demonstration of operations for the improvement of the Muhammadan education in the Province. It is my earnest prayer to all the well-wishers of Muhammadan education in Sind to give their first attention to obviate the harm thus being done to the Muhammadan advancement by the dissipation of youthful energies in the Mulla schools. I further beg to recommend that the considerable sum of money—Rs. 103,121—that is being spent on Mulla schools without any significant result, be diverted to the establishment of High Schools at important centres in Sind."

Government should not take any action prejudical to the study of Urdu in the Bombay Presidency.

Islamic Mail (4), 26th Aug., Eng. edition.

48. "We are told that some Muhammadan gentlemen from Surat have petitioned Government against Urdu. As people appear to be making much stock of it, we will not be wrong in giving a word of explanation in regard to the attitude of those who have ranged themselves against poor Urdu. It will help the understanding of the case if we state here that the Urdu-Hindi Controversy has assumed, wrongly though, a religious form. The Muhammadans have ranged themselves alongside Urdu and the Hindus have extended their protection to the Nagri or Hindi. No true Muhammadan will, therefore, declaim Urdu. But there is a party of those who call themselves Muhammadan and yet serve the Hindi cause for love or for money and it is probably men of this class who are trying to oust Urdu. We hope, however, that Government know better and they will not wound the feelings of the Muhammadans by the removal of a language from the standard studies which besides being the lingua franca of India is regarded by the Muhammadans as their national language. Personally we are not enamoured of Urdu. At least not in the form in which it is taught in this Presidency. But the Muhammadans in Bombay and other parts of India have adopted it as their national language and would resent any interference with its propagation here. Indeed the feeling is so strong that some of our subscribers misunderstanding our articles threatened to cease to subscribe if we wrote against Urdu."

Alleged aspersions against Muhammad in two Gujarati books.

Political Bhomiyo (71), 17th and 24th Aug.

49. In the course of a contribution addressed to the Political Bhomiyo a correspondent refers to two books entitled Sadguru Kabir Saheb and Kabir Mansur (a contribution in connection with the latter book having been noticed in paragraph 25 of Weekly Report No. 30 of 1917), published by Manilal Tulsidas Mehta of Vadnagar and Makan Kuber Painter of Bombay respectively and takes exception to the remark contained in these books to the effect that Kabir was the guru (preceptor) of the Prophet Muhammad. He observes that such writings are calculated to insult religions other than those professed by the writers of these books. [In the subsequent issue appears the second instalment of the contribution noted above in the course of which the correspondent remarks that the protest raised by the Muhammadans against the books has either not reached their authors or that it has fallen on deaf ears. He adds that the united and deafening voice of the entire Muhammadans community of this country will have to be raised to wake them up. The correspondent concludes with an appeal to his co-religionists to work up and make endeavours to save their religion and their Prophet from insult and contumely. Elsewhere in the same issue the paper publishes another letter from an anonymous correspondent in which the writer refers to a book entitled Vishwa Vilás written by one Amritlal Jatashanker Buch of Rajkot, wherein the Prophet Muhammad is alleged to have been described as having married a widowed businesswoman named Khatija in whose employment he was; as having promulgated the dogma favouring the use of the sword in the defence and propagation of the Moslem faith; as having kept for his "use" Rehâni, a beautiful daughter of Armu, who was one of the Jews vanquished at the hands of the Muhammadans; as having been struck with the beauty of his own niece Zenus and as having married her, etc. The correspondent attributes such aspersions on the Prophet Muhammad to the perverted reason of Mr. Buch. He observes that sentiments such as these pierce the heart of a true Muhammadan through and through. He, in conclusion, expresses the hope that all Moslem bodies will raise their protest in connection with this matter and get the book in question proscribed.]

RAILWAYS.

The G. I. P. Railway Workshop strike.

Islamic Mail (4), 26th Aug., Eng. edition.

50. In the course of its comments on the G. I. P. Railway Workshop strike, the Islamic Mail writes :—"In spite of all the denials that have appeared of the inspiration from the Home Rule Camp, there can be no question that the strike had a political motive behind it, and had not the Police Commissioner behaved with remarkable tact and ability there would have been a serious catastrophe with probable loss of life......... The timely action of the Railway authorities and the cool foresight of the Head of the City Police have saved the situation, but would the agitators be quiet and leave things go that normal way? We are afraid not; so long as you exercise undue toleration and shut your eyes to the gravity of the situation matters are sure to go from bad to worse."

Kesari (106), 28th Aug.

51. The Kesari refers to the reply given by the Secretaries of the Strikers' Relief Committee that they helped the strikers only out of humanitarian considerations and that Home Rule had nothing to do with the relief given, and says that it is simply contemptible to suggest that the relief was organised for the sake of Home Rule. It thinks that Lord Willingdon also appeared to agree with what the Secretaries said inasmuch as he intervened, but it expresses surprise that in the Press Note issued on the subject there is not a word of thanks to the self-sacrificing, energetic and sympathetic gentlemen who worked hard and alleviated the sufferings of the strikers while the Railway authorities who obstinately starved the strikers for so many days and the police are thanked.

Gujaráti (16), 26th Aug.

52. It is to be regretted that Government officials and Anglo-Indian journalists who pose as the protectors of the interests of the poor exerted their influence to break the strike and to induce the strikers to accept low wages and thus continue as the slaves of the Railway Company, instead of helping to get their grievances redressed. And when some philanthropic people distributed grain to the strikers with a view to save them from starvation, not only Police officials but others in high authority went to the length of tracing the origin of the strike to the Home Rule movement merely because those who distributed grain to the strikers happened to be members of the Home Rule League. In fact the Relief Committee scarcely dreamt that they were giving initiatory lessons to the strikers in passive resistance and Home Rule! The strike has made one thing clear, and that is that the officials are prone to suspect the least possible agitation among people to be due to the Home Rule movement and that such an attitude of their mind is responsible for misunderstanding and misrepresentation. Why should the poor workshop operative not get an increase in his salary when the highly paid official gets special allowances to meet high prices and when railway earnings have increased owing to increase in freights? Why should not the workmen have a share in the increased earnings of the Railway Company? Why should they be starved and cowed down and made to continue as slaves? Since the railway belongs to Government it is their duty to intervene in the disputes between the company and their employés. The company induced some of the newspapers to give currency to false reports about strikers resuming work! At last attempts were made to incite the strikers. The police were armed with batons and pistols and the military were called and they guarded the workshops and lined the streets as if excitement among the strikers had reached such a pitch as would result in a breach of the peace. A false report was circulated to the effect that a Parsi was assaulted by the strikers and saved by the Police! But the Police were kind enough not to arrest any one or prosecute him! The behaviour of the strikers during the long period of the strike and the support given to them by the people of Bombay afford a clear proof of the fitness of the Indian people for swarájya and of the training they have received for conducting their agitation without transgressing the law.

Comments on the Government Press Note on the Railway strike.

Young India (14), 29th Aug.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 28th Aug., Eng. cols.

53. "The local Government has issued an interesting Press Note regarding the railway strike, 'in order that the public may be accurately informed as to the action taken by the Bombay Government.'. It would appear to us from all the circumstances which have come to our knowledge that the only justification for issuing the note consisted in the discontent of certain bureaucratic elements in the councils of Lord Willingdon's Government. It is said that they did not view favourably the only construction which the public had put upon the termination of the strike in response to the appeal of Lord Willingdon. They considered it derogatory to their sense of 'prestige' that people should entertain the belief that the strike had ended at Lord Willingdon's intervention. The Press Note was decided upon as a result it seems, and not only was Lord Willingdon's message reproduced but also commendations of Mr. Vincent and 'all ranks of the Bombay City Police' for 'the preservation of order during this trying time' and the acknowledgements of Government to the Agent and Officers of the G. I. P. Railway were introduced into it. The Home Rulers having previously incurred the displeasure of the bureaucracy could not be thanked for their charitable conduct 'during this trying time,' for were they not in the opinion of infallible bureaucrats, the ringleaders of the trouble? The Home Rulers and along with them the other charitable folk of the city have been pushed to the wall and so are the men themselves. We congratulate the author or authors of the note on their impartiality." [The Praja Mitra and Pársi writes:—"The Government thank different authorities in the Press Note, but there is an unfortunate omission which we deeply regret. The committee of citizens which fed the strikers at so much cost and trouble and which worked under somewhat trying conditions deserves to be thanked by the public and no less by the Government."]

MUNICIPALITIES.

Comments on the recent house collapses in Bombay City.

Rást Goftár (30), 2nd Sept., Eng. cols.

54. "During the recent heavy rains two houses in Bombay are reported to have collapsed, the first without any evil effect, the second resulting in the death of five persons and injuries to others. Now the rains were not unusual, or abnormally heavy, and old and unsafe houses should be declared unfit for human habitation at the beginning of the monsoon and compulsorily vacated. The house in Kumbharwada Second Lane was a three-storeyed building, but it was so old that it was completely undermined by the rains, and the whole structure collapsed like a rotten eggshell.......... It is the duty of the Corporation not only to supervise the building of new houses, but also to examine old houses to find out whether they are fit for habitation. It is done elsewhere to our knowledege, and such houses are not allowed to be tenanted until they are thoroughly repaired."

The Cumballa Hill War Hospital and the Bombay Municipality.

Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 2nd Sept., Eng. cols.

55. "The attitude that the Bombay Corporation took up in regard to the Government reference requesting the Corporation to be so good as to waive, as a special case, the recovery of the whole amount of the general tax on the rent paid by Government to the Trustees of the Parsee General Hospital, savours a little of gracelessness......... We trust that Sir Ibrahim's hint that a separate notice of motion was required to make a donation will be availed of by Mr. Cowasji Jehangir or some other philanthropic Councillor. It would merely be an act of justice on the part of the Corporation to donate the amount of the extra assessment to the War Hospital. If Government had not been compelled to establish the Cumballa War Hospital the fairly large addition to the income of the Municipality would not have accrued. It is monstrous to imagine that a body like the Bombay Municipal Corporation should enjoy any benefits because of the War."

Comments on the proposal to substitute a terminal charge for octroi in Hyderabad (Sind).

Hind Vási (45), 19th Aug., Eng. cols.

56. "We frankly confess we don't understand the principles underlying the method by which the Municipal Commissioner of Hyderabad intends to substitute a terminal charge or charges for octroi.......... One may not object to the substitution of octroi by a terminal charge, wholly or partially, provided it is placed on an intelligent, really effective and useful basis and does not interfere with the export trade. There should be no amateurish experiments such as Mr. Carter and the Committee are proved to make. The end in view should be clearly perceived, and the operations and the net results clearly foreseen first and the effects on trade and prices accurately gauged. We would suggest to the Municipal Commissioner and the Committee of Management to take into counsel the leading representatives of mercantile interests by calling a private or informal conference and thrashing out the whole subject in detail with them, before introducing the proposed changes. They will get thereby light from all quarters and will avoid mistakes, and what is more, will carry the city with themselves so that the working of the substituted taxation will be smooth and without any friction.'

Complaint that the bulk of the Municipalities in Sind have boards composed wholly of nominated members.

Sind Advocate (9), 16th Aug.

57. "Sind seems the only backward province in the whole of India. There are 35 Municipalities in the Bombay Presidency the members of which are wholly nominated and out of 35 as many as 20 are from Sind! The total number of Municipalities in Sind are 25, so to only 5 Municipalities franchise of election is extended!!......... Is it because Sind is a province of the Bombay Presidency which has been treating it as its step-child or because of being under the direct control of the Commissioner in Sind without a Council?"

Why it would be unfair and inadvisable to introduce house-tax in towns in Sind.

Sind Advocate (9), 16th Aug.; New Times (7), 14th Aug.

58. "The example of Hyderabad should stimulate other towns in Sind similarly circumstanced. We believe that the towns in Sind are generally unsuited for the introduction of a house-tax......... Larkana is one of such towns and so is Rohri, and we trust the councillors, who, though they owe their seats to nomination by officials are after all inhabitants, of the town mostly, will prefer justice and respect popular will rather than try to curry favour with the officials. In this connection we deem it necessary also to protest against the foisting of the house-tax by official pressure (no use disguising facts) in towns where Municipalities are without the elective franchise altogether. In the presidency proper most of the Municipalities enjoy the right of a certain proportion of elected members and if these choose to impose house-tax it is not such a serious thing. Really speaking there should be a very large majority of elected members if not all, in our Municipalities: otherwise, the complaint will not cease that even in partially elected Municipal bodies the officials through the nominated men carry the day against the people's wishes." [The New Times also dwells at great length on the alleged unsuitability of house-tax for towns in Sind generally, and emphatically declares that such a tax should not be imposed against the will of the people. It concludes as follows:—"We earnestly appeal to the local Government to rise equal to the occasion and vindicate the principle of self-government; we appeal to them to consider that sentiment has an important place in the life of the people, the people's sentiment has been touched; new nationalising and democratising forces are operative to-day as seldom before in the history of Sind; the feeling of the people is not an effervescence, a passing mood, an epi-phenomenon but genuine, widespread, penetrating, profound; and to let municipalities impose a tax hated by a whole people with a whole-hearted hatred would prove a grim undertaking."]

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 7th September 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL. [No. 36 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 8th September 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British rule:

A Poona suspect's complaint . . . 19
Comments on Sahibzada Aftab Ahmed Khan's utterances at Bombay . . . 21
Comments on the Honourable Mr. Basu's speech at the Bombay Presidency Association . . . 22
Comments on the Madras Mail's attack on Mr. Montagu . . . 11 & 12
Comments on the measures adopted by the authorities in Sind with regard to demonstrations on Internment Day (16th August) . . . 29
Comments on the Press Note declaring that the Government of Bombay will not remove to Mahábleshwar in October next . . . 20
Comments on the proposal to introduce 1 Re. and 2½ Rs. currency notes . . . 23
Comments on the removal of Mrs. Besant's Home Rule flag at Coimbatore . . . 38—40
Comments on the Secretary of State's announcement about the British policy in India . . . 13 & 14
Comments on the suicide of an interned Bengali . . . 26
Criticism of the Anglo-Indian attitude towards political reform in India . . . 7
How to spread the Home Rule propaganda . . . 24
Inadvisibility of inaugurating passive resistance . . . 37
Indians are educated enough to carry on swarájya . . . 18
Mr. Montagu's forthcoming visit to India . . . 8—10
Mr. Tilak's suit against Sir Valentive Chirol . . . 16
Proposed mixed tribunals for considering cases of interned persons . . . 27 & 28
Reflections on the election of Mrs. Besant as President of the Congress . . . 30 & 31
Repression is not the stuff out of which Imperial patriotism can be fashioned . . . 15
The Bombay Provincial Congress Committee and passive resistance . . . 33—36
The break-up of the Calcutta Congress Reception Committee's meeting . . . 32
The Government is responsible for the development of Home Rule propaganda . . . 25
Who is a Maratha? . . . 17

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

Imperial Legislative Council :

- Comments on His Excellency the Viceroy's opening speech in the — . 1—4
- Comments on the Government of India's reply regarding the confidential circular to provincial Governments regarding Home Rule movements 6
- Interpellation in the — regarding internment of Mrs. Besant . . . 5

Indians in the Colonies : Comments on the recommendations of the Emigration Conference regarding Indentured labour 42

Police : The report of the police administration of Bombay City . . 43

Public service : Kulkarnis who are over age should be exempted from appearing for the Vernacular Final Examination 44

Sind : Criticism of the personnel of the Benches of Honorary Magistrates in the Naushero Taluka (—) 45

War : The fall of Riga 41

EDUCATION—

Comments on His Excellency Lord Willingdon's speech at the last Bombay University Convocation 46

Comments on the expulsion of a student from the Dharwar Mission School for writing a poem on Mrs. Besant 54

Comments on the recent Conference at Simla regarding the teaching of English in Secondary Schools . . . . 47—50

Complaint that the story on page 39 of Macmillan's Fifth Reader is offensive to Muhammadan religious sentiments 52

Importance of Mulla Schools for spreading literary education among Muhammadans in Sind 51

Suggestion that Home Rule pamphlets should be distributed to students at the gates of schools and colleges 53

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Comments on His Excellency the Viceroy's opening speech in the Imperial Legislative Council.

Sánj Vartamán (31), 6th Sept.; Jám-e-Jámshed (23), 6th Sept.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 6th and 7th Sept.; Hindusthán (20), 6th Sept.; Kaiser-i-Hind* (24), 9th Sept., Eng. cols.

1. The thoughtful and sympathetic speech which the Viceroy made at the opening of the autumn sessions of the Imperial Legislative Council will not fail to gratify the Indian people. The hopes to which the speech has given rise will go a great way in dispelling the clouds of unrest. It was very statesmanlike on the part of Lord Chelmsford to have thrown oil on the troubled waters of Indian politics. We hope Lord Pentland and others like him will take a lesson from the liberal spirit displayed by Lord Chelmsford in his speech. The abolition of the Customs Line at Viramgaum will be received with joy by the people of this Presidency and the Native Chiefs in Káthiáwár. We hope early steps will be taken for the realisation of the promises in the matter of removing racial distinctions in the operation of the Arms Act. Lord Chelmsford has placed India under a deep debt of gratitude in the matter of removing the colour bar with regard to Commissions in the army. We would, however, have been glad if the Indian people had been taken in confidence and informed of the contents of the Despatch on the question which has been sent to the Secretary of State. The release of Mrs. Besant will have a wonderful effect on the Indian people and their enthusiasm for helping Government in the present war will be doubled. [The Jám-e-Jamshed expresses gratification at the Viceroy's speech and exhorts political leaders to use their influence with their followers to enable Mr. Montagu to examine the question of Indian reforms in a clear atmosphere. It is afraid Mrs. Besant will not give any undertaking to desist from her activities to secure her release. The Praja Mitra and Pársi is delighted at the prospect of the release of political prisoners and believes the step to be due to the telegrams sent to British ministers. In the subsequent issue the paper thanks the Viceroy for the promises he has given in the matter of removing the colour bar against Indians with regard to Commissions in the army and hopes that the other concessions promised will help to clear the political atmosphere. The Hindusthán writes:—While thanking Lord Chelmsford for the announcement he has made respecting Mrs. Besant's release, we are constrained to say that Mrs. Besant has never conducted her political agitation in an unconstitutional manner and the undertaking Government want would be tantamount to a confession on her part that her agitation was unconstitutional. We wish the Government of India had shown the liberality Mr. Lloyd George displayed towards the Irish leaders and had released political prisoners in India unconditionally. Should Government cease taking measures that tend to excite the people, the popular leaders will surely exert their influence to tranquillise their followers. The people will co-operate with Government when the officials cease mistrusting them. They will not now be deluded by honied words. The Kaiser-i-Hind considers His Excellency the Viceroy's speech to be "a great speech, a notable speech, a speech which will produce a feeling of deep satisfaction throughout the country".]

Mahrátta (5), 9th Sept.

*2. "'I shall ask you to judge my administration on the work accomplished, and not on promises made': so said His Excellency the Viceroy. But so far as the work accomplished by now is concerned, we do not feel ourselves in a position to unreservedly congratulate His Excellency. Despite the long list of things which His Excellency placed before the Council as the work on which his administration should be judged, we feel His Excellency's regime has not been quite of the laudable kind. The Press Act and the Defence Act have been working havoc during His Excellency's regime. The Police Act has been used as a repressive weapon supplementary to the ubiquitous Defence Act. The Students' Circulars have closed the door of general political and civic knowledge upon the rising generation of India. These are not old, forgotten grievances. They are living present-hour grievances which have set the whole nation asking itself what on earth the bureaucracy is aiming at. Thousands of Indian youths are rotting in internment. Now and then cases of severe hardships in internment leading to madness or suicide, have been brought to public notice. Among the interned are men who cannot be accused of having thought of helping the enemy or planning a revolution. All this has been done in the present regime. The speeches of Provincial rulers and the several species of orders issued with the intention and effect of curtailing or ending the political activity of persons, big and small—all or most of which can now be incontrovertibly traced to the confidential circular of March last—are no praiseworthy actions. Ever since the Press Deputation received an unexpectedly shocking rebuff from His Excellency, things have been slowly, yet with a remarkable steadiness, going from bad to worse.......... These sorry manifestations of regrettable reactionary spirit in responsible quarters could not fail to irritate and anger the people. They contrasted the treatment given to Mr. Curtis and his ambitious propaganda of securing for the colonies partnership with the Mother-country in the governance of India and other dependencies, with the treatment given to their legitimate aspirations of self-government for India.......... During Lord Chelmsford's regime, mistrust has been shown in the matter of the 100 millions war-gift and that of the Indian Defence Force. The Supreme Council was not consulted before the burden of 100 millions was placed on India's shoulders. That was an instance of gracelessness and mistrust. In drafting the Indian Defence Force Act, the bitterly resented discrimination between the British and the Anglo-Indians on the one hand and pure natives of the soil on the other, was not given the go-by. The popular demand for equal treatment in the matter of the grant of commissions, etc., was treated with scant respect. When the leaders of the people, despite the gross defects of the Indian Defence Force Act, came forward to help in recruiting for the Defence Force strange indifference and disrespect was shown to them. All this naturally resulted in a gross failure of the Defence Force Scheme. In six months only 3,000 and odd young men have come forward.......... In the concluding portion of his address, His Excellency turned to constitutional reforms. He said that at the very first Executive Council which he held as Viceroy he propounded two questions to his Council: (1) what is the goal of British rule in India, (2) what are the steps in the road to that goal. As regards (1) self-government was agreed upon as the goal and as regards (2) it was settled that advance in local self-government, advance in the proportion of Indians in higher grades of the various services, and advance in the domain of the Legislative Councils were the steps to the goal and that the advance in all these directions must be made simultaneously. This was the work of the very first session of His Excellency's Executive Council. If His Excellency had not told about this work in such clear terms as he did, not a soul in India would have believed that such an aim and such a programme ever commended themselves to His Excellency and his Government! Much of the 'work accomplished' is in its spirit so reactionary and ungenerous that no one could from such action infer a generously progressive aim in the authors of it."

3. Message (6), 8th Sept.

"Lord Chelmsford has made a speech, no doubt, full of generous impulses but overburdened by equivocations that are superfluous.......... Referring to the adverse criticism that has been levelled at the reticence and delay of the Indian Government in making any sort of pronouncement, Lord Chelmsford said: 'Some criticism has been directed against the Government of India on the score that we have not disclosed the policy outlined in our despatch (to the Secretary of State). I must remind Honourable members that decision on such a question rests not with the Government of India but with the authorities at Home.' If the Government of India and the Provincial Governments subordinate thereunto had consistently adhered to this view and continued to be silent in regard to what reforms India might or might not get from 'the authorities at home', and if they had not in the past gratuitously deprecated all sorts of constitutional agitation and embarked on a mistaken policy of repression we make bold to say,—most respectfully to the views of this Excellency—that the criticism complained of would not have been made or directed against them. What happened on the other hand was that while the Indian Government chose to be silent in regard to the particulars of its despatch and failed to take into any manner of confidence leaders of Indian thought, the head of that Government admonished Indian politicians to hold their peace and not to demand 'catastrophic changes'.......... The provincial satraps, whether or not directly under instructions from the central Government, indulged in similar admonitions, and not being themselves so responsible as the Viceroy is, could permit themselves certain amount of extravagance of speech.......... We quite realise the uselessness of indulging at this stage in mutual recriminations over the past. As His Excellency was careful to remind the Council, we have now entered upon a new phase of Indian politics. The announcement regarding Mr. Montagu's visit and British policy in India is, in a way momentous enough in itself, and opens a new page in the history of Indo-British and not Anglo-Indian relations.......... There is one point on which we fully sympathise with His Excellency, and that is his appeal for enabling Mr. Montagu, when he arrives in India, to find 'a calm atmosphere, suggested policies carefully thought out and supported by sober arguments and concrete facts, and a spirit of sobriety dominating everyone worthy of the issues to be examined.' We have ourselves very strongly urged this point ever since the announcement was made and the response which the country has made to appeals of its leaders is indeed very encouraging. But no solid result can be achieved so long as the Government is disposed to entrench itself behind an undue sense of 'prestige'."

Dnyán Prakásh (36), 7th Sept.; Indu Prakásh (39), 6th Sept.; Gujaráti* (16), 9th Sept., Eng. cols.; Bombay Samáchár (59), 8th Sept.

4. The speech of the Viceroy will produce contentment all over India as it indicates a change in the policy of Government. Lord Chelmsford referred briefly to the interned leaders as the question had already been dealt with by Sir William Vincent in his reply to an interpellation. But we regret that Government are making their generous policy defective unnecessarily in this connection. It would have been better if Government had released even those who carried on an improper agitation in their eyes unconditionally. In Ireland Sinn Feinners who joined openly the rebellion were released and they were invited to the Irish Convention. It is impossible to answer satisfactorily what agitation is improper and disorderly and what not. It is not only unjust but unstatesmanlike to demand a guarantee from leaders about their future behaviour, who are supposed by all thoughtful people to have been interned through a misunderstanding. It is regrettable that the Government of India should consider such a condition necessary to maintain their prestige. The reforms that are to be introduced have not been mentioned in Lord Chelmsford's speech. But he spoke sympathetically and we hope all will accept heartily his suggestion to sit together as friends and discuss the question. All should now concentrate their attention on the question of reforms and forget the past. We hope the popular party will change fundamentally its policy as Government have done. [The Indu Prakásh observes:—The Viceroy's speech was a very sweet one. He began with large promises but ended with nothing. We have listened many a time to speeches dealing with post-war reforms. We are tired of listening to these things since 1858. What powers are you going to entrust directly into the hands of Indians? Answer that question first and then speak about future promises. The Gujaráti writes:—"We may have our differences with the Viceroy on certain important points, but the tone of his pronouncement and his general attitude are so unexceptionable that barring further points of friction and irritating measures the whole country ought to respond readily to the earnest appeal that His Excellency has made to all with such transparent sincerity 'to sit down together as friends', and 'to spend the intervening time before his arrival in quiet examination of the arguments to be placed before Mr. Montagu.' This is not the language of the arrogant, self-sufficient and omniscient bureaucrat so familiar to us in India but of a wise statesman who has realised the gravity and needs of the present situation. The Bombay Samáchár hopes that the Viceroy's sympathetic speech will induce political agitators to work hand in hand with Government. It feels sure that the speech will allay public discontent and dispel misunderstanding.

It asks the Extremists to work in co-operation with the moderates and the Government for the political uplift of India.]

Interpellation in the Imperial Legislative Council regarding internment of Mrs. Besant.
Gujarâti (16), 9th Sept., Eng. cols.; Mahrâtta (5), 9th Sept.

*5. "We are glad Lord Chelmsford's Government have come round to a statesmanlike comprehension of the situation and wisely decided to release Mrs. Besant and her two associates......... As we had anticipated last week, Mrs. Annie Besant and her co-workers will be released subject to the condition that 'the Government of India are satisfied that these persons will abstain from unconstitutional and violent methods of political agitation during the remainder of the war.'......... The position created by their decision as it is worded will require the exercise of considerable tact and a conciliatory spirit and unless Mrs. Besant's views and those of her colleagues are known, it is difficult to say that the critical situation created by her internment will be at once relieved by the annoucement made in the Council on Wednesday last." [The Mahrâtta writes:—"We have an idea that Government will not think of insisting upon any undertaking by the interned which would imply that they had employed unconstitutional and violent methods of agitation. They will, we think, find out other ways of 'satisfying themselves'. For, both His Excellency's speech and the reply to Mr. Jinnah's question made it clear that Government very much desired to 'tranquilise the political situation in the country' with a view 'to ensure the calm and dispassionate consideration of the difficult problems which are to be investigated during Mr. Montagu's stay here'."]

Comments on the Government of India's reply regarding the confidential circular to Provincial Governments regarding Home Rule movements.
Praja Mitra and Pârsi (28), 8th Sept.

6. The reply given in the Imperial Legislative Council in the matter of the confidential circular to the Provincial Governments regarding Home Rule agitation proves beyond doubt that it is not Lord Pentland but the higher authorities that are responsible for the internment of Mrs. Besant and her associates. But it seems from the Viceroy's speech that the Government of India acted in this matter on the initiative of Mr. Chamberlain, the then Secretary of State for India. The speech makes it clear that the Viceroy is now free from the undue restrictions and the illiberal policy imposed upon him by Mr. Chamberlain and that he will now devote his attention to the more congenial task of gaining the good opinion of Mr. Montagu, who comes to India with the reputation of a liberal statesman.

Criticism of the Anglo-Indian attitude towards political reform in India.
New Times (7), 4th Sept.

7. "The English, it has been said, are an inarticulate race. This can hardly be said with truth of the Anglo-Indian Press, and some of the Anglo-Indians are keen upon using their gifts of utterance in the service of the Empire! The Honourable Mr. Webb, as our readers understood yesterday, is anxious to see at least three Sindhis, 'hanged on the nearest tree'; and our Anglo-Indian contemporary of the Daily Gazette would have some of the local 'orators' 'clapped into gaol without delay.' Is this, we earnestly ask, our Anglo-Indian friends' philosophy of co-operation, or is it sowing the tares? The attitude of some of our Anglo-Indian friends in Sind in regard to the national movement reflects, apparently, the spirit of the class in some other parts of India."

Mr. Montagu's forthcoming visit to India.
Muslim Herald (145), 7th Sept.

8. Referring to the announcement about Mr. Montagu's proposed visit to India, the Muslim Herald says that the reason why political agitators are in raptures over it is that the Secretary of State is up to a certain point in sympathy with the movement for political reforms as is evident from his speeches. It expresses its delight at Mr. Montagu's decision and confesses that it is not against the grant of Home Rule to India since none ever despises the possession of power and authority. It speculates whether the visit will benefit the Musalmans, and apprehends that he will be surrounded by Hindus or such Musalmans as are really speaking Hindus disguised as Musalmans. It goes on to refer to the Honourable Mr. Bhupendra Nath Basu's detention in India, and is at a loss to understand how the said gentleman, a leading member of Congress as he is, can give valuable counsel in respect of Muhammadan needs and aspirations. It remarks that Mr. Montagu's act in detaining Mr. Basu in India shews whom he considers powerful and worthy of consultation, and suggests that Government should adopt measures for enabling the Secretary of State to hear what elderly Muhammadans have to say as regards the real requirements of their co-religionists in their respective provinces.

Jdgaruk (new), 31st Aug.

9. The forthcoming visit of Mr. Montagu will prove most beneficial in that he will be able to see for himself how sharply divided the several classes in India are and to what depths of degradation and misery some of them have sunk. He will also find that the class which is foremost in political agitation and which will benefit most by the reforms is numerically very small and that its interests clash with those of the majority of the people. Of course the visit of Mr. Montagu is not sufficient in itself and it rests with the backward classes to take advantage of it. Every caste, therefore, should hold its conference and urge Government to accept the principle of class representation. The non-Brahmin conference held at Coimbatore laid particular stress on this principle and we trust the backward classes of this Presidency also will imitate their example.

Kesari (106), 4th Sept.

10. Anglo-Indians are always in the habit of advising Indians to work loyally, peacefully and constitutionally. But Indians have the experience of the conduct of these Anglo-Indians when their selfish interests are endangered. They even threatened to kidnap Lord Ripon. Our readers are aware of the treatment they gave to Lord Hardinge for the annulment of the Bengal Partition. The Madras Mail has now openly threatened Mr. Montagu but as he is of a strong mind, he will not care for it. It is clear that he must have already obtained the permission of His Majesty's Government to improve the wooden administration of India. The fact that he has sent for the Besant papers shows that he is not willing to be led by others like Mr. Chamberlain. Before Mr. Montagu touches these shores, the release of the interned leaders is necessary and an assurance should be given by the officials that they would not interfere with constitutional agitation and public meetings. Before Mr. Montagu begins his discussion of schemes with leaders all repressive measures should be withdrawn. Hearty co-operation with Government is indeed necessary, but how is it possible while repression and the gag is in force? Before the Irish convention met, even Sinn Feinners, i.e., rebels were released. Should not then the restrictions imposed upon fully loyal and peaceful patriots here be removed? The leader of Sinn Feinners released from the prison becomes a member of Parliament and openly declares that it would be a good day when there would be an opportunity to create a revolution in Ireland! But here leaders who insist upon having swarājya under the British flag and who carry on constitutionally public agitation in favour of it are interned!

Comments on the Madras Mail's attack on Mr. Montagu.

Young India (14), 5th Sept.

11. "The Madras Mail repudiates the suggestion contained in Sir Subramaniam's cable to the Premier and the Secretary of State that its effusions were not inspired by the official world; and asserting that they were spontaneous, emanating from its editorial sanctum. We could have accepted this repudiation most willingly, if the bureaucracy, which is so ready to lay the Indian Press by the heels for comparatively innocent and innocuous writings, had shown as much readiness to call upon the paper to show cause why it should not be dealt with under section 108A of the Criminal Procedure Code. Compared and contrasted with the most heinous writings of the Indian Press, the vituperative and vitiated outpourings of the Mail are more serious and deserve, therefore, to be taken very serious notice of. But the paper possesses an advantage which the Indian papers do not and that is of being Anglo-

Indian in temper, feeling and character. We do not mean to say that the bureaucracy is eager to condone the sins of omission and commission in the Anglo-Indian Press. Only it seems to have a more tender place in its heart and, therefore, it shows its indulgence to a degree which it is impossible in the case of Indian papers. Apart from this indulgence, the fact that such a serious and wilful act as the threat held out to His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for India has been allowed to go unnoticed leads to the too obvious inference that the bureaucracy or at least a section of it is at the back of the paper."

Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 2nd Sept.; Sánj Vartamán (31), 3rd Sept.; Hindusthán (20), 4th Sept.

12. The Praja Mitra and Pársi finds in the passage that recently appeared in the Madras Mail under the heading "A Word to Mr. Montagu" nothing else but an attempt on the part of high European officials and other Anglo-Indians leaguing together to place obstructions in the path of the Secretary of State for India, and condemns such tactics of holding out threats to high state officials. It hopes that His Majesty's Government or Mr. Montagu will not attach any importance to such threats. It also congratulates Sir Subramanya Aiyar and the Madras Provincial Congress Committee for the cables they have sent to England in connection with Madras Mail article. The paper believes that all this bustle has been made on behalf of the Anglo-Indians from the mistaken notion that their prestige would suffer because of the release of Mrs. Annie Besant and others, which they now consider to be highly probable. [The Sánj Vartamán refers to the article of the Madras Mail and remarks that it is an indication as to the direction in which the wind blows as far as the Anglo-Indians are concerned. It appeals to Mr. Montagu not to allow himself to be guided or intimidated by such empty bravado of the enemies of political progress in India. The paper believes that Mr. Montagu will stand undeterred by such selfish prattle of the Anglo-Indians and declares that if he shows weakness by yielding to their threats he will plunge the Indian public in despair and will greatly disturb the political situation in India. The Hindusthán raises the questions whether the article of the Madras Mail will shake Mr. Montagu in his resolve about the reforms he intends to introduce in India and whether those threats will influence his course of conduct as well as the policy of the Home Government. It then observes:—Whatever may take place in this connection we are compelled to say that such attitude of the Anglo-Indians is in no way commendable, and there is a probability of such an attitude causing harm not only to India but to the whole Empire.]

Comments on the Secretary of State's announcement about the British policy in India.

New Times (7), 23rd Aug.; Phœnix (8), 25th Aug.

13. "The contents of the Secretary of State's announcement will hardly be received with enthusiasm by the people. They are vague, indefinite, and wholly insufficient; they promise us nothing which may immediately improve the political situation. The announcement is specially disappointing when we contemplate the present situation of India and the world where civilization and freedom are battling for life." [The Phœnix remarks:—"The declaration is carefully and cautiously worded and, in some important respects, delightfully vague.......... Anglo-India seems to be satisfied with the phrasing of the declaration; whilst Indians have not gone into raptures over it. Although the declaration is not such as to lead us to believe that the minimum of reforms shall be on the basis of the Congress League scheme, it cannot but result in the easing off of the political situation in India. The idea of passive resistance, in our opinion, must now go by the board."]

Karnátak Vritt (83), 4th Sept.

14. It is necessary that the King-Emperor himself should publish a proclamation dealing with Indian reforms. The declaration of Mr. Montagu is not binding upon his successors. As people have been deceived many a time, they deem it necessary to have all such assurances embodied in law. Though the words of Mr. Montagu are likely to create confidence in him we should not be led away by them and we should insist upon embodying in the Government of India Act, to be passed after the war, the administrative reforms we are to have and the different stages at which we are to get them. The policy should be laid down by the King-Emperor in a proclamation.

Repression is not the stuff out of which Imperial patriotism can be fashioned.
New Times (7), 25th Aug.

15. "It is apologists of the bureaucracy, not political reformers, who really create embarassing situations. If you show interest in questions affecting national life, you are told you must not attend political meetings; if you criticise an act of an official, you are threatened with punishment; if you say that you are hard up and cannot bear any additional burdens, even for supposed civic improvments, you are promptly snubbed for your pains; if you wish to organise a procession to show sympathy towards those who suffer for the national cause, you are asked to be silent. To silence criticism by a policy of retrogression is to put a premium on political stagnation; and repression is not the stuff out of which true Imperial patriotism can be fashioned."

Mr. Tilak's suit against Sir Valentine Chirol.
Hâsya Vinod (101), 3rd Sept.; Satya Shodak (119), 2nd Sept.

16. Commenting on Mr. Tilak's suit against Sir Valentine Chirol for damages the Hâsya Vinod makes mention of a rumour that the parties to this suit are going to come to an understanding. The paper heartily welcomes the report and says that the attitude hitherto adopted by Mr. Tilak shows that he will meet his opponent half-way. [The Satya Shodhak says that the correspondent of a Calcutta paper learns that Sir Valentine is going to compromise.]

Who is a Maratha?
Sandesh (118), 2nd Sept.

17. In the course of a rambling article extending over eight columns on the recent death of Bagabai Apte, daughter of Bajirao II, the Sandesh writes:—What is Maratha history? And who is a Maratha? Maratha means Shivaji, Maratha means Rajaram, Maratha means Vishvasrao of Panipat. If he who calls himself a Maratha is not all these and if he does not remember them at every step and if his life is not pervaded by their remembrances, how can he be a Maratha? Shivaji created Maharashtra, Shivaji created Maratha history and Shivaji created the "Maratha" spirit, and therefore he who forgets Shivaji and the stream of history from Shivaji to Bajirao is not a true Maratha! If that blood, that inspiration, that patriotism and that truth thrill Marathas of to-day through and through, then only they are worthy of the name of Marathas. If not they should not live in Maharashtra, should not touch the waters of the Krishna and cease to speak Marathi. He whose feelings, whose memory and whose love do not wander from Shivaji to Bajirao and Bajirao to Shivaji, like the bow moving to and fro on a fiddle, and do not call forth sweet patriotic songs should change his name and should not disgrace the name of "Maratha".

Indians are educated enough to carry on swarâjya.
Shubhodaya (89), 31st Aug.

18. The Shubhodaya does not admit that education has much to do with the question of swarâjya. It is of opinion that those skilled in wordly affairs are fit to take part in swarâjya and points out that in England itself many are still uneducated. It proceeds to observe:—There are lakhs of people amongst us who can manage swarâjya. Even ordinary people know about swarâjya and its advantages. People have confidence in their leaders. What more preliminary arrangements are necessary for the introduction of swarâjya? The schoolmaster is abroad and education will surely spread all the more after we get swarâjya. Some say that the masses will suffer if swarâjya is granted; if English Governors can carry on an administration pleasing to the masses without knowing their interests (the masses themselves do not know their interests), cannot Indian statesmen, their near friends, do it better than the English officials? Those who want to postpone swarâjya till the whole country becomes educated do so with the bad intention of putting off the accomplishment of our aspirations. We know the value of education, but we are educated enough to shoulder the burden of swarájya.

A Poona suspect's complaint.

Kesari (106), 4th Sept.

19. Mr. Hari Raghunath Bhagvat writes to the Kesari:—I am one of those who are daily watched by the C. I. D. in Poona. These detectives sit at some important squares and keep a diary of the movements of 'suspects'. I always pass by Appa Balwant's Gate in Poona. I did not go by that road for five or six days before 22nd August last and consequently the detective stationed there did not see me. It appears that somebody had informed him that I was ill. Three detectives went to the place where I previously resided but getting no news about me there they went to Ashtekar and Company, Book-sellers, Poona City. One of them plainly said that they had come to inquire whether Bhagvat was dead or living, as they had not seen him for one week. I came to know of all this lately and so I inform the C. I. D. publicly that it is a mistake if they have recorded my death in their diary. I am still living and I live at 652, Sadasiv Peth, Poona City. Of course the detectives are not yet free from the task of watching me!

Comments on the Press Note declaring that the Government of Bombay will not remove to Mahábleshwar in October next.

Hindusthán (20), 1st Sept.

20. The Hindusthán expresses its appreciation of the step taken by the Government of Bombay in not making the October move to Mahábleshwar this year and believes the good example set by it will be followed by other Governments. It suggests that the savings thus expected by Government may be used for the promotion of education in the Presidency. It expresses the hope that every year in future Government will refrain from going to Mahábleshwar in October.

Comments on Sahibzada Aftab Ahmed Khan's utterances at Bombay.

Islámic Mail (143), 3rd Sept., Urdu edition.

21. The Islámic Mail makes a reference to the speeches delivered by Sahibzada Aftab Ahmed Khan in Bombay prior to his departure for England, and endorses the remark that true union among the Hindus and Musalmans cannot come into existence by merely passing resolutions thereanent at meetings of the Congress and the League. It also commends the exhortation to young men to assist the leaders of both these communities in their efforts for a better understanding. It asserts that the Sahibzada has been averse to visionary ideals and has done most valuable services to the cause of education; at the same time, it maintains that he did not do anything practical in the matter of the Hindu-Muhammadan union. The paper welcomes the change of attitude visible in the Sahibzada in this respect, and ascribes it to a right conception of his duty as a member of the India Council.

Comments on the Honourable Mr. Basu's speech at the Bombay Presidency Association.

Young India (14), 5th Sept.

22. "The Honourable Mr. Bhupendranath Basu was entertained at the Bombay Presidency Association Rooms on Thursday. In the course of a speech which he delivered on that occasion, he appealed to his countrymen to have patience. Whether Mr. Basu meant to say that his countrymen had not practised or were not practising that great virtue, was not clear from his speech. His appeal was, we believe, superfluous inasmuch as his countrymen are already exercising this great quality which even His Excellency Lord Willingdon commended not long ago, and have exercised it to such an extent that the world might expect them to go on exercising it for ever. A gubernatorial appeal coming from a 'great friend and sympathiser' like Lord Willingdon is excusable. But in the case of a Congress ex-President, such an attitude is not only inexplicable, but in our opinion thoroughly mischievous. We presume Mr. Basu's appeal was due to inadvertence, rather than to a conscious feeling. We hope, too, Mr. Basu has not turned a bureaucrat so soon after his nomination to the India Council, where he has yet to install himself formally and officially."

Comments on the proposal to introduce 1 Re. and 2½ Rs. currency notes.
Rást Goftár (30), 9th Sept., Eng. cols.

23. Commenting upon the proposed introduction of 1 Re. and 2½ Rs. currency notes, the Rást Goftár remarks :—"We are not at all sure whether the time is being well chosen for the introduction of these notes. It is to be hoped that the pros and cons have been carefully considered. The market for Government Promissory Notes is very bad, and they cannot be sold except at a very heavy discount. Will 1 rupee and 2 rupees and a half notes circulate readily? The main point to be considered is whether this is the right time for such an experiment. It would have been much better if the Bill had been introduced and passed at the last Delhi session."

How to spread the Home Rule propaganda.
Sandesh (118), 4th Sept.

24. A correspondent styling himself 'Home Ruler' writes in the Sandesh that Home Rulers should preach their propaganda on the occasion of the forthcoming Ganpati festival. They should also endeavour, he says, to unify the different Home Rule organisations and make them a living force. He also suggests that the Home Rulers should establish free libraries and open free primary schools to prove the identity of interests of the masses and of the advocates of Swarájya.

The Government is responsible for the development of Home Rule propaganda.
Sunday Tatler (13), 2nd Sept.

25. "There is another aspect of the question which cannot be ignored and that is that the Government itself is responsible for the gradual development of the Home Rule problem. Could it be denied that the local authorities everywhere have been tinckering with this question in a timid and unwary way and the natural result is that an impression has gained ground that the Imperial and Provincial authorities are afraid of the Home Rule propaganda and that they dare not meddle with it or check its growth. The methods adopted by the Home Rule leaders in criticizing the Government and its actions and in defying orders would not be tolerated elsewhere. What is the result? The prestige of the Government is held in contempt and there is a weakening of the authority. The talk of passive resistance is not accidental and if this whirlwind of danger takes root, there will be a very serious aspect to face. Things have already come to a pass that every one is made to think that he can defy law with impunity. The bid for popularity must cease and action must take the place of talk. No Government can continue with undiminished prestige for any length of time under such conditions. We venture to sound this note of warning, because the movement is spreading fast from centre to centre and the tendency to defy authority is developing equally fast."

Comments on the suicide of an interned Bengali.
Mahrátta (5), 9th Sept.

26. "The conditions in which the interned have to pass their days are not generally known. They of course vary to a certain extent with different victims of the law of internment. The following account supplies a sad commentary on what these actually were in a particular case :—'Srijut Haricharan Das, son of Babu Arjun Chandra Das, a native of the village of Setalampur under the jurisdiction of Diamond Harbour P. S. (District 24 Pergs.), committed suicide by hanging on 18th July last at the village of Baroipara, Patia, P. S. Rajshaye), the place of his internment. The Honourable Mr. Cumming wrote on 4th August last to Babu Arjun Chandra Das to the following effect :—"Hari Das was interned owing to the fact that he was a member of the Bhowánipur gang of revolutionaries. After receiving information, the Magistrate and the Superintendent of Police of Rajshahi made a local enquiry and found there was no suspicion of any foul play. His Excellency in Council desires to express his sympathy for the bereavement suffered by yourself, by the wife of Hari Das and by all his family." 'There was no suspicion of any foul play': What is the public to understand from this official news? 'No foul play' led the victim to commit suicide: if that is the meaning of the 'sympathetic note', we may properly ask, what brought the victim to such a mental condition as prompted him to commit suicide? 'Better to leave this hell than lie rotting in it': this must become the state of mind of one who is in internment before he thinks of committing suicide. Or he must go mad. But even madness cannot come without an intolerable change in surroundings. Government owe to the public detailed information as to what were the conditions in which the deceased was made to pass his days, what treatment he received at the hands of those who were appointed to 'look after' him and other related things."

Proposed mixed tribunals for considering cases of interned persons.

Gujaráti (16), 9th Sept., Eng. cols.

27. "We hope that before Mr. Montagu's advent to this country tribunals or committees consisting of one Indian Judge of the High Court and two leading non-official Indians and two officials will be constituted for the examination of the interned cases......... In the best interests of Government they ought not to take up the whole responsibility, but should be prepared to invite independent Indians to share in that responsibility......... It is in vain to expect Bengal, for instance, where more than a thousand persons have been interned, to reconcile itself to the present system under which every thing is secret and the interned have no opportunity of submitting their defence to the judgment of an independent tribunal......... We earnestly hope that both in the interests of Government and the public at large the Bombay Government and the other Provincial Administrations will recommend the formation of mixed and independent tribunals or committees for the consideration of the cases of the persons who have already been interned or whom it is proposed to intern."

Mahrátta (5), 9th Sept.

28. "We hope that every local Tribunal will have on it a non-official gentleman of standing. We must say that considering the necessity of tranquilising the political situation, it would be highly expedient and reasonable on the part of Government to set free without undue delay all the interned whose 'impatient' yet legitimate political 'extravagance' has led to their internment.......... It is necessary to add that the politicals who are now serving their sentences in the Andamans or elsewhere for having 'conspired' or 'waged war' against Government must be set free if a reasonably tranquil atmosphere is to be created in the country. As our rulers are now bent on giving substantial rights at an early date, we can assure them that the release of our Sinn Feiners will bring about no trouble whatever. We hope that Government will give earnest consideration to the case of our Sinn Feiner prisoners, any neglect of which is sure to embitter many ardent souls in the country who cannot reconcile themselves to an unsympathetic and mistrustful treatment of their brothers when they see the Irish Sinn Feiners enlarged."

Comments on the measures adopted by the authorities in Sind with regard to demonstrations on Internment Day (16th August.

New Times (7), 20th Aug.

29. Commenting upon the measure adopted by the authorities in Sind with regard to popular demonstrations on Internment Day (16th August), the New Times remarks:—"We understand further that in Hyderabad, it is not processions only, but all public meetings in favour of Mrs. Besant which have been prohibited. All this bestows on the police an authority which is not possessed by the President of the United States! .... It cannot he said that the procession in Karáchi was organised by irresponsible persons....... We object to the whole procedure; for the authorities have prejudged the procession and the meetings. If words of 'inflammatory' character be used at a meeting or conduct of a 'seditious' character exhibited at a procession, surely, it is open to the authorities to appeal to the Law of the Land and bring to book the persons who may be declared guilty by a tribunal of justice. But we strongly object to investing the police with the authority—easily abused—of interfering with processions and public meetings.......... We regard the orders as imputations on civic patriotism, and the policy which may dictate them as an outrage on the civil liberties of Sind......... The public feel that it is worthless for Government and their representatives to make professions and promises of liberty and brotherhood and justice and national rights and self-government if they are not supported by the conduct of the authorities. It is worse than worthless; it is insincere."

Reflections on the election of Mrs. Besant as President of the Congress.
Kesari (106), 4th Sept.

30. If Government had not committed the unpardonable blunder of interning Mrs. Besant, the Rajah of Mahamudabad would have secured more votes than Mrs. Besant. Government have set the wave in favour of Mrs. Besant and if the result is not pleasing to them, they themselves are responsible for it. Government should know that Mrs. Besant has been elected on the principle of passive resistance. Government give special rewards to those who are injured and who suffer in their service. As it is obvious that Mrs. Besant has been interned while serving the people, how can Government object if people reward her with the special honour of Presidentship? What more can the people give? Why should they not give what lies in their hands? If Government think it is an insult to them they should blame Lord Pentland for it. But the question will have to go to the All-India Congress Committee because it is possible that Government may not release her, falling a victim to the ghost of false prestige. Some may even suggest that the Congress should not meet in that case. But Government would not be sorry for it. Is it not better therefore to hold the Congress and pay to Mrs. Besant in her absence all the honours of the President and show that people regard the threat held out by Government by the imprisonment of Mrs. Besant as a straw? Would not the object of Government of dishonouring Mrs. Besant be better defeated by thus honouring her?

Bombay Samachár (59), 3rd Sept.

31. The Bombay Samachár refers to the fact of seven out of eight Provincial Congress Committees selecting Mrs. Annie Besant as President of the forthcoming session of the Indian National Congress and regards it as an act bespeaking a lack of foresight. It remarks that the very fact that those who have selected her have also made suggestions about securing her release for a short while, if not permanently, in order to enable her to preside at the Congress points to the unpractical nature of their selection. Besides, will not the opponents of India, the paper inquires, raise the question if there is no other person except Mrs. Besant, among the sons of the soil, who can represent the country under the present circumstances and, if there is not, how can the Indians be said to be fit to reach the political goal they have fixed? The paper suggests that those Indian leaders who have selected her should, in order to remove the source of friction between her and the Madras Government, approach that Government in the form of a deputation and should also give to the large bulk of the public holding moderate views due assurance that she is prepared to keep to the ideals fixed by the "constitution and creed" of the Indian National Congress.

The break-up of the Calcutta Congress Reception Committee metting.
Message (6), 6th Sept.; Indu Prakásh (39), 5th Sept., Eng. cols.

32. Commenting on the break up of the Calcutta Congress Reception Committee's meeting, the Message remarks:—"The whole trouble as Mr. C. R. Das has ably put it in a nutshell, was due to the fact that these gentlemen who are now being dubbed as 'Moderates' did not want Mrs. Besant's election and tried to resort to subterfuge. Babu Surendranath's conduct appears in any thing but a favourable light. It is a pity that a man who has given of his best to the Congress for thirty years should allow it to be whispered in connection with his name that he was playing for his own hand. We trust good sense will prevail with Babu Surendranath and his friends and that they will at once see the danger of playing into the hands of the Anglo-Indian press at this supreme hour of India's destiny." [The Indu Prakásh writes:—"What is going to be the upshot of it all? Are we going to have another split again, a fresh outbrust of that frenzy of extremism which made a pandemonium of the Surat Congress?......... The unedifying scenes that were witnessed at the Reception Committee's meeting are a commentary on the appreciation on the part of a section of our politicians of the present crisis in our national destiny. The defiance of the orders of the President and the climax that was reached in the election of Mrs. Besant after the President had dissolved the meeting and left the hall appear to portend a repetition of the Surat imbroglio."]

The Bombay Provincial Congress Committee and passive resistance.

Young India (14), 5th Sept.

33. "The Bombay Provincial Congress Committee, where there seemed to be a strong division of opinion at one time, has regarded the question in a more favourable light. Having regard to the forthcoming visit of Mr. Montagu, it has agreed to defer the consideration of this question until such time as it should be found necessary again, but at the same time expressing its strong and unanimous opinion that Government would allay the public feeling by cancelling the internments and annulling other acts of repression and coercion. In doing this, the Committee has taken an eminently reasonable and dispassionate view of the probable result of Mr. Montagu's forthcoming visit and has shown a generous anxiety for the success of his mission in this country, which it now certainly behoves the Government to reciprocate. After this manifestation of our good-will, it would, we think, be the greatest mistake that Government can commit of remaining reticent at this supreme moment. The success or otherwise of Mr. Montagu's forthcoming mission will now be largely determined by the policy which it will follow in the immediate future. We have absolutely no desire to emulate the frivolous example of the Madras Mail and promise the Government an abundant harvest of passive resistance failing its response to our modest prayer. But we think we ought to make this clear that with Mrs. Besant and other leaders still deprived of their freedom of movement and speech, we shall not participate in any deliberations with Mr. Montagu nor assist him in any manner that we are capable of. In saying this we speak not only for ourselves, but also for the whole country save and except for a microscopic minority representing the views of none but themselves."

Message (6), 4th Sept.; Indu Prakásh (39), 3rd Sept., Eng. cols.; Hindu Missionary (38), 3rd Sept., Eng. cols.

34. "The resolution is on the whole satisfactory, in view of the new situation that has arisen. It may be that it is none of the business of the people to exhibit an unduly tender conscience towards Mr. Montagu's visit. And as in the case of the Irish convention, which has been quoted on both sides, it may even be primarily the duty of the Government to ensure a favourable atmosphere for the Secretary of State to conduct his enquiries in. Whether this view is right or wrong, it is certainly as much the duty of the people as of the Government to see that the most favourable conditions exist when Mr. Montagu arrives in this country. They have done their part in defering the consideration of the question in anticipation of certain happenings before Mr. Montagu's arrival and it is now for the Government to fulfil those expectations which are entertained of them. We do hope that wiser counsels will prevail with the Indian Government and that it will leave nothing undone which is necessary to allay the strong public feeling existing in the country." [The Indu Prakásh also congratulates the Congress Committee on its decision and calls upon Government to inaugurate a policy of conciliation. The Hindu Missionary, commenting on the resolution, suggests the formation of a "Passive Resisters' Union" to carry out the new movement "independently, so that the Congress, the Moslem League and the Home Rule Leagues may not in any way be involved in it."]

Kesari (106), 4th Sept.; Dnyán Prakásh (36), 4th Sept.; Indu Prakásh (39), 3rd Sept.

35. The Bombay Provincial Congress Committee unanimously adopted the resolution framed by Messrs. Tilak, Gandhi and Sir N. G. Chandavarkar. The resolution expresses a desire to work with Mr. Montagu in a conciliatory spirit and though no condition has been laid down as to how this spirit can be generated by the officials, still the words of the resolution imply such a condition. There is also a deep meaning in the words that the Committee recognises that there is a strong feeling in favour of passive resistance, though these words have not been used as a threat. It is a correct description of the true feeling of the nation caused by the actions of the officials. [The Dnyán Prakásh says:—As the situation was changed for the better by Mr. Montagu's declaration, the Sub-Committee appointed by the Bombay Provincial Congress Committee found it unnecessary to go into the question of passive resistance. Mr. Tilak wanted to saddle the Congress somehow with passive resistance and to bring in the point in the resolution. But afterwards he gave up his point and the resolution was unanimously passed abandoning all idea of the passive resistance movement. The Indu Prakásh says:—We are by nature loyal and our guiding principle is that of obedience to royal commands, under any circumstances. There have been some exceptions and an exceedingly tyrannical and irresponsible rule has been resisted. Passive resistance is misplaced at present in India. Lord Pentland has not interfered with the liberties of any body else than Mrs. Besant and her two followers. We do not say it is not an injustice. But it does not require any heroic measure. The practice of disobedience to lawful orders whether the rule be Swadeshi or foreign is harmful. Just as dishonouring of public opinion is reprehensible, the teaching of the principle that Government should be set at naught is harmful and censurable. As Mr. Montagu is coming present times are unfavourable to passive resistance.]

Gujaráti (16), 2nd Sept.; Hindusthán (20), 1st and 3rd Sept.; Bombay Samáchár (59), 5th Sept.

36. The Gujaráti publishes the opinion expressed by Mr. M. K. Gandhi wherein, after dwelling upon the ethics of passive resistance, he recognises the advisability of the people of India refraining from resorting to it in view of Mr. Montagu's forthcoming visit and exhorts them to take recourse to it if Mrs. Besant and her colleagues are not set at liberty before Mr. Montagu sets foot in India. [The paper declares that passive resistance can be resorted to by those persons only who groan under the injustice of particular acts of Government and that passive resistance or its advocacy as a protest against the general policy of Government by people in general is sure to bring popular leaders and newspapers into the clutches of the law. It admits that passive resistance does involve disobedience of laws considered unjust by the people, but considers it justifiable to adopt it as a last resort. The Hindusthán asks the people to act according to the advice given to them by their wise leaders and to refrain from resorting to passive resistance in view of Mr. Montagu's visit. In the subsequent issue the paper approves of the recommendation of the Bombay Congress Committee in the matter of passive resistance and hopes that Government will liberate Mrs. Besant and her colleagues and other political prisoners with a view to pacify the minds of the people. The Bombay Samáchár considers it a very wise step on the part of the Bombay Provincial Congress Committee to have decided against passive resistance, and hopes that the people of India will follow the advice of Mr. Basu in the matter of political agitation.]

Inadvisibility of inaugurating passive resistance.

Subodh Patrika (42), 2nd Sept.

37. Why do the followers of Mrs. Besant cling to the fad of passive resistance when she herself does not approve of it? Do they suppose it will conduce to the welfare of the country? If so, why did Mr. Telang furnish a fresh security for Rs. 10,000 and why did Mr. Karandikar leave Madras instead of flouting the law? This shows that at least some of the followers of Mrs. Besant consider discretion to be the better part of valour when it comes to translating their professions into action. Why parade this hobby of passive resistance before the eyes of the people when Government themselves do not prohibit meetings condemning their own policy? No possible good can be achieved by incurring the displeasure of Government against a movement conducted constitutionally.

Comments on the removal of Mrs. Besant's Home Rule flag at Coimbatore.

Kesari (106), 4th Sept.

38. The Kesari sarcastically refers to the removal of the Home Rule flag from Mrs. Besant's house at Coimbatore (Madras) as "a great victory gained by the brave British officials" and says:—It has added insult to injury. The Home Rule flag is not the flag of rebellion. It is not a rival flag to the Union Jack. Why should Government be then so angry with it?

If it really signifies sedition, Government can prosecute Mrs. Besant. It is difficult to understand how the flag could have caused any rioting. It is dishonest to make use of the law for quite another object than the one for which its wording is clearly intended. The flag was hoisted at Ootacamund and it was flying there for two months without any disturbance taking place; how can one occur now? If anybody is likely to get angry at the flag it is Government and the Police. While the Criminal Procedure Code was being framed, it is unthinkable that possibility of Government or the officials themselves creating a riot was ever entertained. Government are to maintain order; how is it possible that they would themselves behave in a disorderly manner?

Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 5th Sept., Eng. cols. Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 3rd Sept.

39. "The tussle between the Madras authorities and the Home Rulers is fast assuming the character of a farce, and it is difficult to say who cuts a more ludicrous figure. .... We have no sympathy with the action of the District Magistrate of Coimbatore. It was the 'crowning act of petty persecution'......... We are quite sure that the flying of this theosophic flag could no more lead to a riot or an affray, than would the flying of a kite. If anything, these theatricals are more likely to expose the cause of Home Rule to ridicule. The whole affair is puerile from beginning to end. What right has this theosophic-trinity to hoist the national banner of India?......... And after all that can be said, there is something farcically incongruous in the idea of Indian nationhood being reperesented by an Irishwoman, an Englishman and a Parsi,—and all three theosophists. Sir Sayyad Ahmed called the Hindu and the Mahommedan, the two eyes of India. Both the eyes are lacking in these Madras experiments with nation making. Could not the Madras Government leave it at that? It seems to us that there is bungling all round. The only effect of these petty irritations is to give an impetus to the movements, which the officials start to put down."

Rást Goftár (30), 9th Sept., Eng. cols.; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 3rd Sept.

40. "The petty persecution to which Mrs. Besant and her colleagues have been subjected since their internment has culminated in the removal of the Home Rule flag and lantern from her bungalow at Coimbatore. The District Superintendent of Police solemnly lodged sworn information before the District Magistrate that the flag and light, if displayed, might produce rioting between Brahmins and non-Brahmins! Was ever such arrant nonsense heard anywhere? And on this information the flag and light were forcibly taken away.......... Mrs. Besant may be set at liberty any day, and then the flag and light will have to be restored to her in any case. Such ingenuity of petty annoyance would be wonderful if it were not contemptible." [The Jám-e-Jamshed reiterates its apprehensions about Mrs. Besant's political methods and ridicules her for setting up a Home Rule flag near her residence. It considers it quite stupid and puerile on her part to indulge in a fad like that. On the other hand, it blames the District Magistrate of Coimbatore for making such a fuss over the question. It is of opinion that misplaced enthusiasm such as was displayed by the District Magistrate of Coimbatore is responsible for giving undue notoriety to many persons and converting them into pinch-back martyrs. It hopes Government will place some check on such undue enthusiasm on the part of their officials.]

The fall of Riga.

Rást Goftár (30), 9th Sept., Eng. cols.

41. "Things are looking very dark indeed for Russia.......... There is no coherence of the national forces in Russia while the demoralisation in the army is complete. In Galicia the Russian troops, shortly after the revolution, put an end to discipline with the result that the Germans advanced and occupied nearly a hundred miles of territory.......... The crisis in Galicia has paled into insignificance before the very grave menace in the Riga region and the Baltic littoral. Here also the Russian troops have fallen back and Riga has been evacuated. Will not the Germans now make a dash for Petrograd? The distance and the approaching winter, it is calculated, may not favour such an enterprise, but that is an idle hope.

Unless Russian patriotism and the discipline of the Russian army respond to the call of the Fatherland nothing will bar the German advance upon Petrograd. It is a prospect terrible to contemplate. Russia must now stand or fall by her own efforts for the Allies on the West can give her no help.

Comments on the recommendation of the Emigration Conference regrading indentured labour.
Bombay Samáchár (59), 5th Sept.

42. The Bombay Samáchár expresses gratification at the recommendations of the Emigration Conference in the matter of indentured labour and thanks the Imperial Government for their determination to put an end to the system of indentured labour. The paper believes that the Imperial Government must have been greatly influenced by the strong case made out on behalf of India by Lord Hardinge. It is of opinion that the recommendations will convince the colonists that the hardships to which the Indian labourers were subjected can no longer be tolerated by the Government of India or the Imperial Government. While believing that the lot of the labourers will greatly improve under the new system, it is afraid that the labourers will have to undergo certain difficulties and asks Government to consider the recommendations of the Conference in the light of the report of the Ceylon Labour Commission which has not yet been published and asks Government to publish the report to enable the Indian people to make their suggestions.

The report of the Police administration of Bombay City.
Bombay Samáchár (59), 3rd Sept.

43. Apropos of the recently published Government resolution on the Bombay City Police Administration Report for the last year the Bombay Samáchár remarks that the citizens of Bombay will join with Government in the praise they have bestowed upon the work done by the Police during the year under Report. It maintains that Government have afforded a proof of their solicitude for the public by increasing the strength of the Police force of the city by about 33 per cent. during the last ten years, which increase, the paper holds, has been necessitated by the steady development of the city. According to the paper the people wish that the Bombay Government would still further strengthen the Police force, which has been found inadequate to cope with the present wants of Bombay both by the late Police Commissioner, Mr. Edwardes, and by his present successor. It believes that Mr. Vincent has, by the suggestion he made for increasing the Alexandra Dock police, rendered a valuable service to the general as well as the commercial public and remarks that the favourable reception of that suggestion by Government will satisfy the merchant class. While appreciating the present stress on Government's finances the paper declares that any further delay in increasing the expenditure on the additional police which may be necessary both for the sake of collecting their own revenue and the safety of commerce will be regarded as improper.

Kulkarnis who are over age should be exempted from appearing for the Vernacular Final Examination.
Karnátak Vaibhav (82), 4th Sept.

44. A Kulkarni of the Belgaum District who is above 25 asked for permission to appear at the Vernacular Final Examination, but the Educational Inspector, Southern Division, told him that he was over age. If the Collector is approached he refers to the Educational Inspector. What is to be done? If we are to take this as meaning that Kulkarnis above 25 should not be appointed, it would be the height of injustice. We hope Government will pay attention to this question. It would be better if Kulkarnis who are over age are exempted from the examination.

Criticism of the personnel of the Benches of Honorary Magistrates in the Naushero Taluka (Sind).
New Times (7), 23rd Aug.

45. Commenting upon the recently published Benches of Honorary Magistrates in the Hyderabad and Nawabshah Districts in Sind, an anonymous correspondent of the New Times remarks:—"The personnel of the two benches in the Naushero Taluka, is anything but desirable, and is such as would be a source of tyranny to the masses. If such of these gentlemen whose antecedents are unsatisfactory, were free from corruption, one would not mind so much; but when one remembers that some of these gentlemen, under the pretence of helping the police, have been screening the real offenders, and running down innocent persons as shady or 'badmash' characters, one wonders by what miraculous influence these gentlemen have succeeded in being selected as Honorary Magistrates......... Again, one is surprised to see that out of six members forming the two benches collectively, one only is a Hindu. Would the authorities wish us to understand that there are no competent and impartial Hindus availabe in the Taluka?....... .. But if Hindus on any account are not acceptable, the authorities could have got impartial and honest Muhammadans. One might suggest, that the authorities responsible for the appointment of incompetent persons to the Bench, might have done so purposely and with a view to give a handle to the critics of Self-government, to comment on the fitness of Indians to rule themselves."

EDUCATION.

Comments on His Excellency Lord Willingdon's speech at the last Bombay University Convocation.

Islámic Mail (4), 2nd Sept., Eng. edition.

46. "'Character,' said Lord Willingdon at the University Convocation the other day, 'is the foundation upon which all human achievements must be built.........' A very good axiom indeed, but may we ask His Excellency what chance is there for the average student to build up his character living in the depraved surroundings of a low society? The boy who attends the school or college may be safe in the class room but he is not out of it for he is in a very unhealthy surrounding. He hears all sorts of falsehoods, deceit and foul language. He sees all sorts of duplicity and mean tricks played by the bazaar boys....... If the noble ideals mentioned by His Excellency are to be inculcated he should be kept away from his vitiated surroundings, and we believe the residential system is very much approved of in India for that. It was probably with regard to this fact that the Committee on Mahammadan education appointed by Government recommended the establishment of hostels even with primary and secondary schools. The Government declined this suggestion because they thought the Muhammadans rich enough to do it for themselves. But they lost sight of the fact that the strings of purses are more readily opened at the suggestion of those in power than by mere philantropy. Lord Sydenham was able to collect a huge sum for commercial education and we wish Lord Willingdon will endeavour to get the rich Muhammadans to build up hostels or character factories, to be run by Government. There are many Wakfs which can be usefully used to this end, but we need sympathetic action and not only advice."

Comments on the recent Conference at Simla re the teaching of English in Secondary Schools.

Gujaráti Punch (18), 2nd Sept., Praja Bandhu (27), 2nd Sept.

47. Commenting upon the proceedings of the recent Simla Conference the Gujaráti Punch refers to the speech His Excellency Lord Chelmsford made at the Conference of the Directors of Public Instruction in January last, wherein he had expressed himself against the system of giving education in English in this country and, contrasting these ideas with the remark he made during his speech in the recent Conference to the effect that the substitution of the vernaculars for English at the present stage of educational progress was beyond the bounds of practical politics, expresses its surprise at this change in his views on the subject, within such a short period of time. The paper dilates on the various difficulties and disadvantages of imparting instruction in English, which system, in its view, deprived many an Indian student of his intellectual power as well as physical stamina, and remarks that it is not proper that people should be denied instruction through their own vernaculars. In view of the efforts that are being made in different parts of the country in the direction of starting colleges for giving education on national lines, the paper believes that the Viceroy's prediction about the English language being more and more widely used in future in this country as a common language is not likely to be realised. It, however, expresses its satisfaction at the two resolutions passed in the Conference, the one in favour of allowing Matriculation students the option of answering questions in their vernaculars and the other in favour of teaching all subjects in the vernacular in lower standards, the medium of instruction being English only in the sixth and seventh standards. [The Praja Bandhu also makes mention of the alleged change in the Viceroy's views above referred to and inquires whether this change is the result of his own experience of eight months or of his having come in touch with the advocates of the language of the ruling class. According to it the people demand that while maintaining the present system of instruction Government should make the experiment of giving higher education in the vernaculars. The paper hopes that now that the subject has been discussed in the Simla Conference His Excellency the Viceroy will deem it necessary to learn public opinion in that connection].

Mahrátta (5), 9th Sept.

*48. "The millions are there before you. And it is now too late in the day to affirm that the best way of carrying on the affairs of a country is to keep the millions of the country in the dark and organise the educational system of the country without any thought of taking the daily increasing light of knowledge to the homes of the vast majority in it. As to the 'multitude' of vernaculars, we must say that the chief vernaculars in the country are by no means too many and if Government once make up their mind to act as a people's Government, no great difficulty will be found in starting vernacular universities in the country. To vernacularise the whole educational course, at the same time encouraging the study of English as a useful second language, must be the aim of the Indian Government. The administration of the country requires English-knowing persons. But when this administration itself is remodelled on a popular basis of decentralisation, much of the district and even provincial administrative work can be carried on in the vernaculars .... His Excellency also spoke of English as being on the high road to become the lingua franca among the educated classes all over India. We may admit this fact, but we cannot believe that the New Tide of Nationalism spreading over the land will not depose English and put in its place Hindi as the lingua franca of the Indian people.......... Striving as we are for the uplift of our Motherland, our mother-tongues will not fail to receive our adequate attention. The English language will be relegated to its proper place in the educational economy of the Nation, as the English people will in due course be brought to occupy their proper place in the administrative economy.......... No self-respecting Indian caring for the honour of his nation and the progress of the millions will for ever tolerate the usurpation by the alien English language of the place which properly belongs to the vernaculars."

Subodh Patrika (42), 2nd Sept.

49. We think His Excellency the Viceroy put himself to needless trouble in holding the Educational Conference at Simla. What was the necessity of dragging to the Conference a staunch advocate of the vernaculars like Professor Naik when the only questions for decision were how to acquire a better knowledge of English and which was the proper time for the commencement of the study of that language? The proceedings of the Conference show that the advocates of the vernaculars were most inadequately represented. It is a moot point whether we are to throw overboard our vernaculars in our eagerness to acquire an accurate knowledge of English. For ourselves we believe that every endeavour should be made for the introduction of the vernaculars in University examinations. It is most disgraceful that whereas Persian, with its limited literature is permitted for all Universiay examinations, Marathi with its vast literature should be excluded from all the examinations except the M. A.

Chandrodaya (33), 3rd Sept.

50. From the details to hand we do not think that vernacular education has been encouraged by the Simla Conference. Though no doubt an option has been given to answer question papers in the vernaculars at the last school examination, how can the students avail themselves of this concession if the medium of English is to be enforced at the last two standards in secondary schools? The resolution would have been practically useful if non-language subjects had been allowed to be taught through the medium of the vernaculars in the highest standards.

Importance of Mulla schools for spreading literary education among Muhammadans in Sind.

Sind Moslem (11), 1st Sept.

51. In the course of an article on Mulla schools contributed to the Sind Moslem, Mr. Alikhan, M.A., remarks :—"I contend that Mulla Schools are serving the same purpose as would be served by free and compulsory education. At present Local Board schools can be opened only in larger villages where Hindus take more advantage of them than Musalmans. The majority of Musalmans live in smaller villages where there are no Local Board schools. Besides Musalmans also want religious education. For these reasons, the only means to spread literacy among the poor Musalmans of Sind is to encourage and improve Mulla schools.

Complaint that the story on page 39 of Macmillan's Fifth Reader is offensive to Muhammadan religious sentiments.

Sind Moslem (11), 25th Aug.

52. "A Moslem," writing to the Sind Moslem refers to the "story given at pages 39 to 43 of the Macmillan Reader V which is registered and prescribed by the Educational authorities as a text book for the V standard students" and remarks :—"It will appear that the story of Bibi Fatima, the beloved daughter of our Prophet, is not taken out from the annals of the Islámic literature as it is put in the most annoying and despiteful form and is sure to produce a bad effect upon the minds of young Muhammadan boys who shall have to read it as one of their lessons in the school. The specific charge of pride that has been laid against her honoured self in this story is quite incorrect and will surely rouse the religious sentiments of every patriotic Musalman. I would, therefore, venture to request you on behalf of the Musalman community to make a reference to the educational authorities and have this story, which emanates from a most reckless and unreliable place of Islamic History, eliminated from the book."

Suggestion that Home Rule pamphlets should be distributed to students at the gates of schools and colleges.

Hindu Missionary (38), 3rd Sept, Eng. cols.

53. In reviewing pamphlets Nos. 4 and 5 issued by the Home Rule League, the Hindu Missionary suggests that "such pamphlets should be given to students at the gates of schools and colleges".

Comments on the expulsion of a student from the Dharwar Mission School for writing a poem on Mrs. Besant.

Raj Hansa (85), 5th Sept.

54. We regret to announce that Rangayya Shenvi, a student of the local mission school (Dhárwár), has been expelled from the school by the Educational Department for having published a poem on Mrs. Annie Besant. There is no sedition whatsoever in the poem; only Mrs. Besant has been praised by him. It is unjust to cut him off from his career by awarding a terrible punishment to him on the ground that he has taken part in a political movement. Even if students of tender age commit theft they are required only to furnish a security. It is killing a fly with a hammer to sentence the student in a way to ruin his whole life. There is not a word that is objectionable in the poem of Rangayya Shenvi. Only it speaks of Mrs. Besant as the 'mother that thinks of the welfare of the world'. Government may release Mrs. Besant in a month or two; but Rangayya Shenvi has to suffer till his death. We can quote this instance to show to Mr. Montagu how young children suffer under orders of local Governments in India. The Dharwar Home Rule League should bring the matter to the notice of Mr. Montagu through Sir William Wedderburn.

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 14th September 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 37 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 15th September 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British rule:
- Alleged highhandedness of the Mamlatdar of Indápur (Poona) for securing contribution to the War Loan 27
- Alleged settlement by arbitration of the dispute between the Hindus and Muhammadans of Bársi 34
- Appreciation of the Bombay Government's decision not to move to Mahábleshwar for the October season 32
- Comments on the attacks of Mr. Webb and the Daily Gazette of Karáchi on the National movement in Sind 15
- Comments on the Calcutta split regarding Congress Presidentship . 21—26
- Comments on the forthcoming visit of Mr. Montagu 17
- Comments on the removal of the Home Rule flag at Coimbatore . 19
- Comments on the suggestion that Mr. Mahomed Ali should be elected as President of the next session of the Moslem League . . . 31
- German colonies will get freedom sooner than India 28
- Government should take steps against those who set up non-Brahmins against Brahmins 16
- Law is not against Home Rule Leagues having a flag of their own . 20
- Parsis and the National movement in India 33
- Sind Mussalmans and politics . . . . 29 & 30
- What is the duty of Home Rulers 18

Imperial Legislative Council:
- Comments on Sir Michael O'Dwyer's recent utterances in the — . 8—10
- Comments on the statement in the — regarding the release of Mrs. Besant and others . . . . 11—13
- Comments on the Viceroy's opening speech in the — . . . . 1—6
- Comments on the reply in the — regarding the confidential circular to the Provincial Governments regarding Home Rule movements . 14
- The Viceroy's announcement about the abolition of the Customs Line at Viramgam 7

Indians in the Colonies: Comments on the report of the Immigration Conference 40

Judicial matters: Complaint that the accused in a gang case being tried at Sátára are being treated in an inhuman manner 39

Press Act: Comments on the suspension of the publication of the Eastern Chronicle, an Assam newspaper 41

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

Public service: Comments on the order of Government directing Kulkarnis to pass the Vernacular Final Examination 42

Sind: The question of the term of revenue settement in — 43

War:

Comments on the Mahar recruiting meeting at Poona 35

Russian Affairs . . . . 36—38

LEGISLATION—

The Usury Bill in the Imperial Legislative Council . . . . . 44 & 45

EDUCATION—

Comments on His Excellency the Viceroy's speech at the Simla Education Conference 48

Comments on the Government circular regarding students and political meetings 46

Comments on the Government Press Note on Urdu education in the Presidency 47

RAILWAYS—

Comments on the shooting affray in the G. I. P. Railway Workshop at Parel (Bombay) 49

Promises given to the G. I. P. Railway strikers have not been kept . . 50

MUNICIPALITIES—

Poona: A complaint against the President of the — Municipality . . 51

Sind: A controversial measure like the introduction of house-tax in various places in — should not be mooted by Government during war-time . 52

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Comments on the Viceroy's opening speech in the Imperial Legislative Council.

Kesari (106), 11th Sept.

1. Lord Chelmsford has pitched his voice in a lower key. The growling tiger has disappeared and a softly bleating sheep has taken its place. This is indeed a magical feat, whoever the magician may be. The bureaucrats are in the habit of boasting in season and out of season that they don't care a rap for public agitation. If Lord Chelmsford is likely to be mollified if we say that the change in His Excellency's temper is due to his goodness and and not to agitation, we are willing to say so. Political agitation is not meant for boasting; it is carried on to bring about a particular result. The Viceroy says that he is for action and not for speech. It is a good policy, but what has he done to improve local self-government which is said to be the basis of all political reforms? How many Indians has he appointed to responsible posts? The Army concessions are due to the Great War and the heroism of Indian warriors. Even Lord Chelmsford will admit that the British Ministry is responsible for including India in the Imperial Conference. Lord Chelmsford himself knows what important things he has achieved! From what he has done uptil now we do not think that his boast of being a worker and not a speaker is much justified. If the Viceroy was for the ideal of self-government from the beginning he would not have issued the Home Rule circular to the local Governments. As Government are not willing to publish it we may surmise that they have not accepted in it even the principle of self-government. We must, however, say that his announcement of the release of political leaders on some conditions will produce some pleasing effect on the people. But how are the leaders to convince Government that they will not adopt violent and unconstitutional methods? As Government have interned them under the Defence of India Act no open inquiry has been held and Government also have not proved their charges against them. Though a week has passed since the announcement of the Viceroy no leader is as yet released. We humbly suggest that all political prisoners should have the benefit of the change in the policy of Government, just as the British Government released all Sinn Feiners without subjecting them to any humiliating conditions.

Young India (14), 12th Sept.

2. "His Excellency Lord Chelmsford's speech at the first meeting of the autumn session of the Imperial Legislative Council falls far short of the expectations which the weary months of his silence had aroused in the country.......... That silence has now been broken and the Indian public can hardly flatter itself with the thought that the responsible head of executive administration in this country has viewed the problem before him with that breadth of vision which a broad-minded and liberal statesmanship would ordinarily dictate.......... View how we may, the speech inevitably leaves on our mind the impression that Lord Chelmsford has not been able to rise above the stunting influences of his surroundings. Instead of well-worn platitudes about various things that pale into insignificance before the one vital problem of the day—the problem of Indian Home Rule,—we had expected that his speech would be pitched in that high key of sound and sober statesmanship, becoming the momentous times through which we are passing......... With all deference to the dignity and prestige of his exalted office, we are constrained to regard the speech as no better than any one of the gubernatorial declamations to which we have become more or less accustomed in recent months. Instead of inspiring the long expectant public with confidence, it fills them with an overwhelming sense of despondency about the future of the country under a strongly entrenched and fortified bureaucracy. We feel we must frankly confess here that it is not to a pedantic speech of this nature we had eagerly looked forward. We should have been extremely happy to hear in a few plain unvarnished sentences what the Government of India, with the full sanction of His Majesty's Government, intended to do in regard to the principal matters now at issue between it and the people.......... Even greater is the disappointment felt at the halting character of the speech in regard to constitutional reforms. This portion of the speech powerfully brings home to us once more the futility of getting hill-top Governments to appreciate the true and real purpose of the insistent demand voiced all over the country....... That portion of His Excellency's disappointing pronouncement, dealing with constitutional reforms is the aptest comment on the state of mental inertia of our bureaucrats." [Elsewhere the paper writes:—"Another point in Lord Chelmsford's speech which deserves more than a passing remark is his reference to the contemplated institution of a school for the education of the sons of Indian officers. He stated that the school would be in the shape of 'a memorial to the gallant services of Indian officers in this war......... This seems to us like an attempt to set up a 'Loyal School' on the lines of the policy pursued by his more famous predecessor—Lord Curzon of imperishable fame. Lord Curzon planned and carried out an arbitrary system of educating the native chiefs and talukdars on novel lines. Now as then, the policy which is responsible for an unnatural system propped up on artificial legs is, to say the least, mischievous and calculated to hinder rather than promote national harmony and concord among the people of this country. And we think that it is a doubtful tribute to the momory of the gallant men who have shed their blood in the cause of unification and consolidation of the Empire that an attempt should be made in their fallen names to wean away their kith and kin from their own countrymen."]

Gujaráti (16), 9th Sept.; Gujarát Punch (18), 9th Sept.

3. Lord Chelmsford may try to take the credit for the concessions given to the Indian Army, but the Indians will ever remain indebted to Lord Hardinge and the opportunities presented by the war. Indian soldiers have won these concessions by shedding their blood on the field of battle. The revelations of the Mesopotamia Commission brought the hardships of the Indian sepoys to the notice of British statesmen and the present reforms in the army have been effected by the pressure brought upon the Government of India. But where are the reforms for which Indians have been clamouring? Why are not Commissions in the army thrown upon to educated Indians? Indians will thank Lord Chelmsford for giving them an assurance that the Arms Act will not be worked on racial considerations. But the Europeans and Anglo-Indians are now free to bear arms since they receive compulsory military training. Why should not Indians have the same freedom? It is gratifying to note that Self-government within the Empire has been officially recognised as the goal of British rule in India. Indians have now no cause left for despondency. Lord Chelmsford has done nothing on his own initiative to give administrative experience to Indians or to free Local Self-government from official control. Lord Chelmsford has asked the people to co-operate with him, but he will not be able to enlist their co-operation unless all political prisoners are released and the people are given an opportunity of indulging in free discussion on all political matters. There should be an end to the undue interference of the C. I. D. and the police with the liberties of the people. [The Gujaráti Punch writes:—We do not approve of the condition imposed by the Viceroy for Mrs. Besant's release. It means that she should make a confession that her activities were not legitimate. If Government want quiet in the country they should release Mrs. Besant and her associates unconditionally. Mr. Mahommed Ali should also be released. We are thankful to Lord Chelmsford for his sympathetic speech. Had such a speech been made six months ago and had the Provincial Governments not adopted a policy of repression there would have been no need for Mr. Montagu to come to India.]

Islámic Mail (143), 10th Sept., Urdu edition.

4. The Islámic Mail says that Lord Chelmsford's speech will reassure those who were beginning to be frightened by the tide of recent events, and affirms that by his kindness and concessions His Lordship has given ample proof of his broadmindedness and generosity. It recalls how Lord Hardinge beyond redistributing two provinces and making some promises did not perform any act worthy of being remembered, during the whole course of his Viceroyalty; and contrasts the alleged barrenness of the régime of Lord Hardinge with the measures which have distinguished the brief period of Lord Chelmsford's administration. It recapitulates how His Excellency nominated Captain Ajabkhan to be a member of the Imperial Council, how he ordered the distribution of free rations among Indian sepoys, how he threw open the Commissioned ranks to the Indians, how he has undertaken to bestow jagirs on the brave fighters and how he has enlarged the Secretary of State's Council by nominating an additional Hindu member thereon. Referring to the appeal made by His Excellency towards the conclusion of his speech, the paper avers that Muhammadans are suffering from a superfluity of servile followers of the Congress or hunters after titles and distinction and inquires if they are powerless to safeguard their own interests against the aggression of their opponents or from the neglect of Government. Finally it suggests that the Musalmans of Bombay should hold a meeting, not necessarily of rich men, where measures could be adopted for carrying out the purpose in view.

Message (6), 11th Sept.

5. "One of the newest arguments against any practical measure of self-government is that suggested by His Excellency Lord Chelmsford's statement that 'there in nothing like administrative experience to sober judgment and bring about an appreciation of the practical difficulties which exist in the realm of administration'. We wish that this obiter dictum of political wisdom were first applied to the House of Commons. It would be interesting then to find how many scores of the six hundred and odd members of the House would forthwith be disqualified to be in the House. Neither in the field of local self-government nor in the domain of administration have several of them anything to do......... It is indeed remarkable that the Viceroy had not a word, not a thought for the Memorandum of the Nineteen, or the proposals contained therein. The executive Government of the country will according to the view of progress now propounded by His Excellency remain unaffected and continue to be vested in a handful of the bureaucracy of Englishmen and Indians. It is a proposal of this nature which does not take us any further from the starting point. If this is the deliberate judgment of the Government of India, it is hardly to be wondered at that even the most moderate of Indian politicians should begin to feel a sense of nervous apprehension about the future of the Indian people."

Prakásh (116), 12th Sept.; Sandesh (118), 9th Sept.

6. The repressive policy recently adopted by Government threatened to arrest the progress of the country. Officials like Lord Pentland fanned the flame of discontent and Mr. Chamberlain, our former Secretary of State, who had the power to curb the zeal of the bureaucracy only exhibited callous indifference towards the political situation. In these circumstances it was only to be expected that the provisions of the law should be abused to intern innocent people that newspapers should be asked to furnish securities, and that the mouths of the leaders should be gagged. It was impossible, however, that these unjustifiable acts should continue for long. The latent power of the people, must ultimately assert itself. Officials drawing fat salaries from the people cannot expect to command their esteem and confidence by consistently ignoring their demands. It was universally believed that the bureaucracy selfishly stood athwart the interests of millions of people lest they might lose their power. Fortunately, signs are now visible of a welcome change in the political situation. His Excellency the Viceroy's speech at the last Legislative Council meeting strikes quite a different note from that of his earlier utterances. This change of attitude can only be accounted for by the altered political situation in India and Mr. Montagu's advent at the India Office. [The Sandesh welcomes the speech of the Viceroy and says that the responsibility of keeping the country in a peaceful state lies more with the officials than with the people. It endorses the view of the Times of India that the agitation would not have assumed such a vehement character, but for the speeches of some of the heads of local Governments. The paper attaches great importance to the release of Mrs. Besant, but at the same time it warns the people to keep in view the ideal of self-government and not to be misled by the release of interned leaders.]

The Viceroy's announcement about the abolition of the Customs Line at Viramgám.

Káthiáwár Samáchár (68), 12th Sept.; Shri Sayáji Vijaya (74), 13th Sept.; Bombay Samáchár (59), 14th Sept.

7. Dwelling upon the various hardships incidental to the levy of the Customs duty at Viramgám, which railway passengers from Káthiáwár had to experience hitherto, the Káthiáwár Samáchár expresses its deep satisfaction at the abolition of the preventive Customs Line at Viramgám, as announced by His Excellency the Viceroy at the recent session of the Imperial Legislative Council. It remarks that the people will thank Lord Chelmsford for giving them a permanent relief in the matter of the above-mentioned hardship. The paper, however, wishes that a new trouble may not arise in the wake of the present abolition of the Viramgám Customs Line. [The Shri Sayaji Vijaya remarks that by his present act of abolishing the Customs Line His Excellency Lord Chelmsford's name will be immortalised in the minds of the people of Káthiáwár as well as in the annals of the country. The paper hopes that the terms of the understanding arrived at between Government and the Native States concerned, which has rendered possible the abolition of the Customs Line, are such as would not prejudicially affect the trade and commerce of Káthiáwár. The Bombay Samáchár also feels gratified at the prospective abolition of the Customs Line. It believes that this measure will help to facilitate the development of the commerce and industry of Káthiáwár and hopes that the people of that province will avail themselves of the advantages arising from the present change.]

Comments on Sir Michael O'Dwyer's recent utterance in the Imperial Legislative Council.

Rást Goftár (30), 16th Sept., Eng. cols.

*8. In the course of its comments on Sir Michael O'Dwyer's speech in connection with the Honourable Mr. Shafi's resolution on the subject of a Lieutenant-Governor for the Punjáb, the Rást Goftár remarks :—" The line that he took was to praise the Punjáb at the expense of the other Provinces, and portions of the speeches were certainly calculated to produce ill-feeling between the Punjabis and other people in India. The speech was in bad taste, undignified, and unworthy of the traditions of the Imperial Legislative Council. But His Honour found more than once that he was not speaking to an overawed and hushed audience in the Punjáb, but in a Council consisting of some fearless representatives of India, who repeatedly took exception to his remarks.......... By the time he had finished Sir Michael O'Dwyer, like Saul, must have found out that he was not among the prophets."

Message (6), 15th Sept.

9. " Sir Michael said that Punjab was the most loyal province and proceeding, spoke incidentally of the stern realities of the Ghadr revolutionary attempts which were peculiar only to the Punjab ! The Punjab, we are told, contributed as many as 1,55,000 recruits out of the 2,67,000 in the Indian army.......... We are reluctant to disturb this complacence by pointing out that the 1,55,000 recruits from the Punjab were not allowed even a single commissioned officer of their nationality or that the pay of the Punjabi soldier was considerably less than that of the Tommy or that aspirations of the Punjabi people as represented by the Provincial Committees of both the Congress and the Moslem Leagues are not very warmly and sympathetically responded to. His Honour does not relish words but values deeds, and with a consistency which is admirable he wishes to reward the deeds of the Punjabis in the war not by the rescinding of the Arms Act or by the conferring of commissioned officerships or by the taking of substantial steps towards self-government or by the larger employment of the Punjabis in the higher Civil Service."

Sánj Vartmán (31), 14th Sept.; Hindusthán (20), 14th Sept.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 15th Sept.

10. The speech made by Sir Michael O'Dwyer on the motion of the Honourable Mr. Shafi was, we are constrained to say, below the dignity of the Viceregal Council, and we are afraid it will tend to counteract the good effect produced throughout India by the sympathetic speech recently made by His Excellency Lord Chelmsford. Sir Michael has made odious comparisons between the services rendered by the Punjáb and the other Provinces and has indulged in irrevelant talk about Home Rule and passive resistance. He has, moreover, attacked our political leaders and made remarks that will hurt the feelings of the Indian people. We are surprised to see that the Honourable Mr. Lowndes allowed the speaker to proceed in spite of the objections raised by the Honourable Pandit Malaviya and others. We would like to point out that passive resistance has never been directed against Government but it is meant to be used against certain repressive measures adopted by the agents of Government. No one has ever advocated passive resistance for securing political reforms. Besides, it must be remembered that opinion in this country is divided on the question of passive resistance. Taking it for granted for argument's sake that India is not fit for Swarájya as alleged by Sir Michael, who is to be blamed for it, the people or the policy of Government? When will India be fit for Swarájya? We want political reforms so that India may be fit for self-government under the Empire. [The Hindusthán disapproves of Sir Michael's speech and declares that he had no business to enter into the question of the fitness of India for Swarájya as self-government under the Empire had been recognised by the Viceroy as the goal of British Rule in India. It states that India fulfils the three conditions laid down by Mill for securing self-government. It is afraid the speech will create a commotion in the country and nullify the good effects produced by the Viceroy's speech. The Praja Mitra and Pársi is of opinion that Sir Michael has made a sorry exhibition of his sense of loyalty and obedience by expressing himself against the grant of self-government to India at a time when the Imperial Government are contemplating measures that would place India on the path of self-government under the Empire. It declares that the unpopularity of certain officials of the type of Sir Michael is due to their open defiance of authority and disregard of the promises given to the people from time to time.]

Comments on the statement in the Imperial Legislative Council regarding the release of Mrs. Besant and others.
Message (6), 9th Sept.

11. Referring to Sir W. Vincent's statement in the Imperial Legislative Council regarding the release of Mrs. Besant and other interned persons, the Message remarks:—"To our mind, it seems that the announcement lacks that statesmanlike instinct which characterised the announcement of His Majesty's Government in England in regard to the Irish political prisoners, and actual rebels of the Easter rising in Dublin. There the Government looked more to results and did not allow any immediate considerations of so-called prestige of the English bureaucracy in Ireland to stand in the way of its doing all that was possible to make the experiment of an Irish convention a success.......... But in the announcement which has lately been made, the dominant consideration appears to be the 'prestige' of the Government rather than that earnestness of purpose which actuated His Majesty's Government in London. Making all possible allowances for the circumstances of the two Governments, the coldness of sentiment which is observable in the Indian Government's announcement is certainly not a welcome sign for the success of the object which the Government in common with the people might have in view. This is a matter, which it ought to be realised, admits of no reservations whatsoever and the best method of appealing to the feelings and sentiments of the people is for the Government of India to follow the example of His Majesty's Government and proclaim a general amnesty of all political prisoners and also those persons who have been interned under the Defence of India Act."

Young India (14), 12th Sept.; Dnyán Prakásh (36), 14th Sept.; Shri Sháhu (123), 12th Sept.; New Times (7), 7th Sept.

12. "We do not know what the feelings may be of the Indian bureaucracy at the colourless statement made by the Home Member of the Government of India with regard to the internment of Mrs. Besant and her co-workers. The icy chillness and prosaic character of the statement as contrasted with the one which Mr. Bonar Law made in the House of Commons on June 15, on a subject of far deeper moment is strikingly prominent in the phraseology of bureaucratic 'circumlocution'......... In these days of war economies, we had expected that the Government of India which both His Excellency and the indefatigable Home Member so ably represented on this occasion would have set an example to the rest of the country by economising the use of words and telling the expectant public the hard, concrete fact that the order of internment against Mrs. Besant and her co-workers would be annulled.......... Contrast with this the touching statement made by Mr. Bonar Law on the subject of the Irish amnesty. Making all possible allowances for differences in the constitution and composition of the two Governments, it will still be found that the Imperial Government scored the biggest point when it decided upon the release, without reservation, of all prisoners, now in confinement in connection with the rebellion in Ireland. At the time and before that, His Majesty's Government were fully aware of the state of Sinn Fein feeling in Ireland, compared to which the Indian bureaucracy must needs find itself in a paradise of political moderation and sanity. And yet such is the rigidity of bureaucratic custom and tendency to run in old grooves that a statement, free from equivocation and calculated to stir the hearts of the people, could not be made....... Though the clumsy and cumbrous phraseology might suggest to an untutored mind that the Government of India will be ready to condone 'unconstitutional and violent methods of political agitation' after the war, one might discern in the multitudinous phraseology of the Indian Government that it now feels convinced of the great political mistake made by the Madras Government, obviously under inspiration from the political circular of March last of the Government of India." [The Dnyán Prakásh writes:—It is greatly to be regretted that Government desire Mrs. Besant to give an undertaking that she would refrain in future from carrying on unconstitutional agitation. No one will blame her if she rejects this conditional offer. The Honourable Mr. Malaviya has given notice that he would bring forward the question of Mrs. Besant's release at the Legislative Council meeting to be held on the 19th instant and His Excellency the Viceroy has allowed the motion to be included in the agenda and thus averted the possibility of the elected members resigning their seats in a body. The Shri Sháhu says that people should not abate their agitation even if Mrs. Besant is released from internment and exhorts the leaders to carry on the agitation until the goal of Home Rule is reached. The New Times writes:—"We cannot think the reply of Sir W. Vincent and the Viceroy's speech are a political manœuvre. We regard them as a sign of a return of that true political statesmanship of which the secret is compromise and which conciliates the dominant tendencies of the day. The Government of India has, we are glad, shown some power of grasping the situation, and a readiness to get out of its old vicious circle of official prestige and move in a new orbit."]

Islamic Mail (4), 9th Sept., Eng. cols.

13. "Lord Chelmsford has had to bend his knee before the storm of popular fury and to release all the interned persons. We thank him for it as it restores some of our Muhammadan friends to their sphere of work in the community; but we very much doubt the wisdom of the policy His Excellency has undertaken. It was a grievous error to have interned Mrs. Besant now when she had acquired some tangible influence over the minds of the people. But to have undone it is worse still; for we have no hesitation in saying that people will not be wanting who will misconstrue it as a weakness. We expected the moral of the annulment of of the Partition had not been lost upon Government......... We understand Messrs. Mahommed Ali and Shaukat Ali will also be released and thank the Government for it. We only hope that the internment has chastened the over-zeal of our friends and they will work for the community in a sober spirit. Mr. Zafar Alikhan has already been released and allowed to resume his journalistic work We hope the Bengal Government will treat the case of Moulana Azad in the same way."

Comments on the reply in the Imperial Legislative Council regarding the confidential circular to the Provincial Governments regarding Home Rule movements.
Hindusthán (20), 12th Sept.

14. The Hindusthán refers to the secret circular which, it writes, the Government of India admit to have issued to the Provincial Governments permitting them to take what steps they thought fit in connection with the Home Rule movement, and expresses its disapprobation of the policy of Government in not publishing the said circular. It believes that the issuing of a circular like the present did not bespeak any wisdom or high statesmanship on the part of its authors. It, however, thanks the circular and those who gave birth to it, remarking that but for the circular and but for the attempts of some Provincial Governments to carry it into effect the progress of the Home Rule movement would neither have been as rapid as it has been of late nor would the movement have been so widely popular.

Comments on the attacks of Mr. Webb and the Daily Gazette of Karáchi on the national movement in Sind.
New Times (7), 6th and 10th Sept.

15. "Mr. Webb's unfortunate letter, closing on a charge as absurd as it was unexpected against three Sindhis, continues to be the talk of the Province and is indignantly attacked by increasing numbers of Indians. It is impossible as it is undesirable to publish all the letters on the subject which have been sent us from different quarters. It is equally impossible to ignore the fact that the indignation provoked by the letter increases every day.......... We earnestly believe that they who, in this dark hour of the world's history, undermine, by wild words and insolent conduct, the people's confidence and affections based on faith in England's freedom-mission to the world—they are infatuated jingoists, sectarian in their outlook and therefore not true servants of the Empire." [In the subsequent issue the paper writes:—"No more successful, no more unfortunate method could be found to crush all desire for recruitment, all enthusiasm for the War, than to direct ruthless attacks—as Mr. Webb and the Daily Gazette do—at the National Movement.......... If representatives of Anglo-Indian opinion in Sind, such as Mr. Webb and the Daily Gazette, be in the perverted temper they have recently shown, they may be sure they will annul the effects of Mr. Montagu's announcement and the Viceroy's great speech. Nothing to our mind is so mischievous in this hour of the Empire's need, as to utter wild words against our national aspirations and the activities of our political associations.......... Even the Negroes of German Africa are to be consulted in regard to the form of their Government, and if the people of the Sind have awakened to a sense of their duty and their mission in shaping the counsels of the Nation in the matter of India's demand for self-government, should we not all be glad of the hour and the opportunity?"]

Government should take steps against those who set up non-Brahmins against Brahmins.
Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 14th Sept.

16. The Praja Mitra and Pársi refers to the anti-Home Rule manifesto issued by non-Brahmins in the Madras Presidency and declares that they are being set up and instigated by those who are opposed to the political progress of India. It is of opinion that the present activities of the enemies of India in this direction will fail as miserably as those that were directed towards alienating the Muhammadans from the national cause. It draws the attention of Government to the attempts that are being made in various quarters to foment racial hatred and asks why the people who are guilty of such a crime are not prosecuted under section 153A of the Indian Penal Code. It asks Government not to connive at these harmful activities when they themselves want that the country should be quiet at the time of Mr. Montagu's visit.

Comments on the forthcoming visit of Mr. Montagu.
Young India (14), 12th Sept.

17. L. G. Khare writes in Young India :—"I need not remind readers of this Weekly that there are still some persons in our political world here who have not forgotton how when Mr. Montagu was here last time, his monocled vision became blurred, although he tried to have a peep into Indian politics with the best of intentions. Now he will be again with us, and we are expected to give him another chance, with the hope that he will persuade others to give us some little chance too in guiding the destinies of India.......... We in India must remember that we have to make the most of Mr. Montagu. It will be a mistake to adopt at this time an attitude of sullen resentment. That does not, however, mean that we should forget the main issue. We have still to chafe under the extremely un-British practice of limiting the right of movement and free speech of a British citizen simply by the fiat of Executive authority. No parleying with Mr. Montagu is possible until the interned are set at liberty and Government in India becomes again truly British. Those who see no other means of showing their resentment against such executive arbitrariness have had to discuss how far methods of passive resistance would have to be resorted to. We venture to suggest to the older Indian politicians that the Passive Resisters do not by any means imply that their personal hardihood ought to be blessed with the sanction of those who have been running arm-chair politics. There always yawns a gulf between the politics of protest and the politics of action. Nor is there any necessity for frittering away our energies in discussing with the people in the other camp what are the exact methods of passive resistance. The man who is impelled to resist authority passively does not generally require to be told how to do it."

What is the duty of Home Rulers.
Mahrátta (5), 16th Sept.

*18. "Two positions are now clearly formulated. One is that the Congress-League Scheme, and nothing less is the minimum that India must have immediately after the war. And the secoud is that no discussion regarding this minimum and allied matters will be entered upon with Mr. Montagu unless and until the fiat of a general amnesty goes forth in regard to all our 'politicals', great and small, Sinn Feiners or Home Rulers, active rebels and conspirators or merely 'fierce' constitutional agitators, self-exiled, transported, imprisoned, interned, externed or otherwise hampered in the exercise of their citizen rights.......... There are not wanting those amongst us who would fain go back on the Congress-League Scheme and leave our suffering compatriots to their fate. But these are, we believe, a very meagre minority....... Then there are some rajas (landholders) of the Raja of Kurupam type who taken along with Dr. Nair's Non-Brahman coterie and isolated groups of Muhammadans, Parsees, Indian Christians here and there form quite a decent corps of anti-Home-Rulers. The Bureaucracy counts on the help of these Anti's with as much confidence as it counts on the help of Anglo-India. Men of Mr. Basu's 'prudence' will also render valuable service to it.......... Against these forces have we—the 'impatient' Home Rulers—to struggle. It will not be an easy contest. What the result of the various forces in the field will be—cannot be divined. And it profits not to waste any thought over idle prognostications in regard to it. Our Dharma (duty) is to be loyal to the Motherland—to the Goal of Freedom within the Empire that we have set before us and to press forward to that Goal along the path consecrated by the sacrifices and sufferings of the devoted soldiers of Freedom of this and other lands, of this and other times. For us, the Congress-League Scheme and nothing less. For us, a general amnesty to our politicals a condition precedent to any co-operation with Mr. Montagu. Let others go what way they will. Let us keep steadfastly to this programme. For that is our duty under the circumstances."

Comments on the removal of the Home Rule flag at Coimbatore.
Prakásh (116), 5th Sept.

19. Of late the words " Home Rule " have begun to stink in the nostrils of the bureaucracy and the District Magistrate of Coimbatore thought it derogatory to his dignity to allow Mrs. Besant to fly the Home Rule flag at her place of residence. He could not, however, proceed against her as the law does not prohibit the hoisting of such a flag. He took shelter, therefore, behind a section of the Criminal Procedure Code and ordered it to be removed on the ground that its display endangered public peace. This incident clearly shows how the law is abused on the strength of authority. Anything is possible in the regimè of Lord Pentland who does not brook even the thought of Home Rule.

The law is not against Home Rule Leagues having a flag of their own.
Shubhodaya (89), 7th Sept.

20. Commenting on the Home Rule Flag case at Coimbatore (Madras) the Shubhodaya says:—" Though Home Rule Leagues are being conducted openly Government have not the courage to say that they are seditious. We do not know what law prohibits Home Rule Leagues from having a flag of their own. The flag of Home Rule is not the flag of rebels. It is not the flag held aloft insolently by seditious persons. It is a flag raised by the enthusiasm of the mind. We do not think that it is proper to remove it.

Comments on the Calcutta split regarding Congress Presidentship.
Prája Mitra and Pársi (28), 13th Sept.

21. The Prája Mitra and Pársi is grieved at the split that has bee caused in the Congress Reception Committee at Calcutta on the question of appointing the President of the ensuing Congress. It is afraid that the conduct of some of the Indian political leaders in refusing to abide by the decision of the majority will have an adverse effect on the mind of Mr. Montagu who is to be convinced that India is fit for Swarájya. It does not consider the election of Mrs. Besant as the President of the Congress to be very desirable at the present juncture, but still it asks the Congress Reception Committee to respect the wishes of the majority of the Provincial Committees and not to allow their individual opinions to outweigh the recommendation of the majority and thus convince Mr. Montagu and the British public that Indians are prepared to abide by the decision of the majority in all matters.

Kesari (106), 11th Sept.

22. The squabble in the Calcutta Reception Committee has given an opportunity to our Anglo-Indian friends to intervene, and they are making an attempt to advise the Moderates to separate themselves from the Nationalists and hold another Congress. The Moderates were deceived once and they are not likely to fall a prey again to such advice. They saw that the nation got nothing from Government and thus the real cause of the enténte between the Moderates and the Nationalists is the stinginess of Government in the matter of political reform. The methods of the Moderates may be milder than those of the Nationalists, but Government forget that they too in their heart of hearts want the rights of swarájya. A separate Congress of the Moderates will not advocate the cause of the Bureaucracy and decline to have swarájya. Even the Moderate leaders have been the bete noire of the Anglo-Indian Press and we cannot divine the causes that lead them to advise the Moderates to hold another Congress. Even the Moderates have come to realise that these Anglo-Indians are selfish like the fox in the story that advised the hen to come down from its safe place on the roof. The Anglo-Indians may well understand that the Moderates will not be deceived by such artful advice and that the Nationalist party will not leave its rightful place in the Congress. Though we may fight between ourselves we shall remain in the Congress and fight. Let the Anglo-Indian Press cease offering such advice and settle some course of action with regard to the impending death that threatens the monopoly of the Bureaucracy and along with it, its own monopoly of power.

Indu Prakásh (39), 13th Sept., Eng. cols.; Gujaráti* (16), 16th Sept., Eng. cols.

23. " Is the reign of all law—Congress law—to end and that of mob law to begin? If law is still to be respected, then the moral is plain. Mrs. Besant's election to the Presidentship of the Congress was ultra vires, because the meeting had been dissolved by the Chairman as no business could be transacted owing to the prevailing disorder. We have next to remember that, according to the Congress Constitution, the election of the President must be decided by the end of August. If it be not so decided, then the matter rests entirely in the hands of the All-India Congress Committee. Hence, the so-called meeting of the Reception Committee of yesterday, which confirmed the election of Mrs. Besant, was illegal and its decision is no decision.......... In the meantime, we give our hearty support to the proposition which Mr. N. M. Samarth will move at the forthcoming meeting of the All-India Congress Committee at Allahabad." [The Gujarâti writes:—"We would still welcome an honourable compromise if it can be arrived at by the friendly intervention of influential Congress leaders from the other provinces at this supreme juncture. But if both sides are irreconcilably opposed to each other and cannot arrive at some understanding, the only remedy is the one suggested by Mr. Samarth. He has, we understand, acted suo motu as he was at perfect liberty to do. We do not know how far it will exercise a sobering influence upon the contending parties in Bengal."]

Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 16th Sept., Eng. cols.

24. "How unfortunate and disastrous the split in the Bengal Congress Camp becomes when one realises that for the last 30 years the Indian National Congress has stood as a symbol of United India!......... We do not wish to enter into the discussion of the claims and merits of the various persons whose names have been proposed for the Presidentship. But we do maintain that the President of a national body like the Congress should be one who is in the confidence of the people and Government alike. The President is not only an accredited spokesman of the Indian people but also their responsible representative before the Government and the British Democracy. As such he should be above all blame, dishonour and suspicion."

Bombay Samâchâr (59), 14th Sept.

25. Referring to the split that has arisen in the Reception Committee of the Indian National Congress over the election of the President of the forthcoming Congress session which resulted in the appointment of Sir Rabindranath Tagore as chairman of that Committee in the place of Rai Baikunth Nath Sen, the Bombay Samâchâr observes that the last-mentioned act on the part of a section of the Reception Committee, of appointing another Chairman without awaiting the decision of the All-India Congress Committee, indicates that the union of the Moderates and the Extremists has not proved felicitous and conducive to the best interests of the country as was apprehended when the compromise between these two political factions was brought about. The paper disapproves of the removal, by a section of the Reception Committee, of their former duly elected Chairman in the manner they have done and remarks that their action cannot be regarded as being in accord with the constitution of the Congress. It believes that in view of the recent activities of the Reception Committee it is likely that the All-India Congress Committee will consider the question not only of electing the President of the Congress but also that of selecting some place other than Calcutta for holding the forthcoming session. Regard being had to Mr. Montagu's coming visit to India, the paper wishes that instead of fixing Bombay or Madras as the place for holding the session, as suggested by Mr. Samarth, Delhi may be selected for the purpose and hopes that such a step will better enable all concerned to act in concert and in a mander best calculated to advance the interests of India.

Râst Goftâr (30), 16th Sept. Eng., cols.

26. "The split in Calcutta is due to a small clique which as not infrequently happens overrated its strength.......... It is quite possible that in view of the serious differences that have taken place the All-India Standing Committee may decide that the venue of the next Congress should be changed if any other place can take the responsibility of holding the Congress at such short notice. Mr. Samarth has given notice of a motion to that effect at the meeting of the All-India Standing Congress Committee. He suggests that the Congress should meet either in Madrass or in Bombay. By this apparently simple device Mrs. Besant would be excluded from the Presidentship of the Congress, for she cannot come to Bombay and she cannot be President at Madras.......... The election of the President has been already made by the emphatic and unanimous voice of the country, and the Central Committee of the Congress has merely to ratify it. Mr. Samarth will find out his mistake at Allahabad, and he certainly cannot read the signs of the times."

27. Mr. Venkatesh Ganesh Deshpande of Mauje Dalaj (taluka Indapur, Poona District) has sent us some papers. He has sent applications to the authorities describing the troubles he had to undergo at the hands of the Mamlatdar about his contribution to the War Loan. He has also asked for an open inquiry into his case. We do not wish to write anything more about the matter but we think that the Collector should hold an inquiry as requested by the applicant.

Alleged highhandedness of the Mamlatdar of Indapur (Poona) for securing contributions to the War Loan.
Kesari* (106), 11th Sept.

28. A correspondent writes to the Message:—"That Germany's ideals are different and worse than those of Great Britain and that therefore, it is better to be under the latter than the former, no sensible man can deny. Indians have proved loyal to the Empire on account of this consideration among others. But, as suggested in a note in the Modern Review, it is a question worth pondering over, whether, after all is said and done, it would not have been better for some British dependencies to have been under Germany. The German connection would have assuredly proved detrimental to the dependecy till and during this war but it would have been perhaps emancipated after the war and got that form of Government which was desired by the people. Mr. Lloyd George and other responsible persons have more than once expressed the belief that the German Colonies cannot be restored to Germany and that in the settlement of the form of Government of those Colonies, the wishes of the people in the Colony will form the dominant factor. This means that after the hell of remaining under Germany and the purgatory of the war, the German Colonies will see the heaven of Freedom. But the irony of fate is that this heaven of Freedom will not be accessible to British dependencies soon after the war, as in the case of the German dependencies, but only after gradual and progressive and cautious stages, continued for how long a period God only knows."

German Colonies will get freedom sooner than India.
Message (6), 15th Sept.

29. "We are beholden to Sahebzada Aftab Ahmed Khan for his inspiring speech which he delivered at the Anjuman-i-Islam Hall, Bombay, on the eve of his departure to England. We commend the speech to Messrs. Pirbux, W. M. Hassanally and others of their way of thinking in Sind who will see that they are antediluvian in so far as the Mussalman opinion about the politics of the day goes.......... His Excellency the Viceroy is visiting Karachi towards the close of the next month. They, like the Three Tailors of Tooley Street, are anxious to assure His Excellency that the Mahomedans are against Home Rule—an expression synonymous with what the older generation of the Congressmen call Self-Government and what the Secretary of State has called Responsible Government. We know that the Honourable Khan Bahadur Pirbux and Mian Wali Mahommed Hassanally are the most loyal subjects of His Majesty, but they will have the grace to admit that Sahebzada Aftab Khan is none the less.......... We think the time has come when the educated and intelligent section of Sind Mussalmans should place their body politic on a sound and stable footing. The political body should rid itself of Government servants as its members. The Sind Mahommedan Association is, in our opinion, an antiquated anachronism in so far as its present constitution goes. We may, however, add a caution that no hasty action should be taken in this direction. The matter needs to be thrashed out in all its bearings."

Sind Mussalmans and politics.
Phœnix (8), 5th Sept.

30. Commenting on the letter of a Moslem correspondent in the Bombay Chronicle protesting against the amendment in the Moslem address to His Excellency the Viceroy suggested by the Honourable Mian Pir Bux, to the effect that the Sind Moslems dissociated themselves from the Home Rule movement, the Islámic Mail remarks:—"The Moslems in Sind have made no secret of their apathy to the Home Rule movement and many institutions have openly expressed themselves against the Home Rule movement. Our friend on fire cannot have forgotten the denunciations against the rabid agitation made by two districts in his province. Like the Madras Moslems the Musalmans in Sind do not favour the Home Rule movement and it was quite proper for the Honourable Mian Pir Bux to suggest the insertion of a clause in the address expressive of the Moslem feeling. It may be khushamad but it was a right step and we do not find any fault in it......... While on this subject, we are reminded again of the necessity of proclaiming the Moslem attitude towards the Home Rule movement. At the last Congress-League Conference at Bombay the Moslem tendency was to keep away from this pernicious movement. But why not make a bold declaration on the subject?"

Islámic Mail (4), 9th Sept., Eng. cols.

Comments on the suggestion that Mr. Mahomed Ali should be elected as President of the next session of the Moslem League.

Islamic Mail (4), 9th Sept., Eng. cols.

31. "The Musalmans of Calcutta suggest the name of Mr. Mahomed Ali of the Comrade for the Presidentship of the next session of the Moslem League but excepting the fact that it rhymes with the decision of the Congress to appoint Mrs. Besant to preside there is no attractive feature in this proposal. There is nothing in common between Mr. Mahomed Ali and Syed Wazir Hasan. We know Mr. Mahomed Ali to be a pucca Musalman and great believer in the dictum Muhammedan first and Indian afterwards. Then he does not belong to the lawyer class who hold the monopoly of communal works. Now that the League is merged in the Congress it is futile to keep up the old cleavage and hold a separate meeting. But if name and fame must be achieved by means of a separate pageant the most suitable names for the Presidentship would be those of Mrs. Besant, Mr. Bepin Chandra Pal, Mr. Gandhi and Mr. Tilak. They were treated as heroes and given ovations at the last meeting of the League, and it would be quite in keeping with the new spirit which moves Mr. Wazir Hasan and his friends to give them an opportunity of helping their protege."

Appreciation of the Bombay Government's decision not to move to Mábábleshwar for the October season.

Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 16th Sept., Eng. cols.

32. "While the idea of 'Government in the clouds' still lingers in the mind of those responsible for the governance of North Eastern India, we have on the other side the handsome and graceful announcement of His Excellency Lord Willingdon that the Bombay Government will not make their annual move to Mábábleshwar in October next. There have been many acts of Lord Willingdon's Government that have commendably appealed to the right-thinking and educated classes of the Presidency. The recent decision adds one more to the long list and the Government of Bombay are to be congratulated on their decision inasmuch as it gives practical proof of their desire for economy. .... We trust the example of the Bombay Government will be followed by other Provinces."

Parsis and the National movement in India.

Rást Goftár (30), 16th Sept., Eng. cols.; Jám-e-Jámshed (23), 15th Sept.

33. "If the Parsis hold aloof from the national movement they will suffer and not the movement. Is it forgotten that Dadabhai Naoroji and Pherozeshah Mehta were among the greatest national leaders and so is Sir Dinsha Wacha today? Their traditions should be the traditions of all Parsis. If the Parsis were now to call themselves foreigners in India they would be poor indeed without a homeland or a Motherland. Parsis have reason to be proud of the part their leaders have played in the public and national life of India, and any man who tries to alienate the Parsis from their Hindu and Muhammadan countrymen deserves to be publicly censured." [The Jám-e-Jámshed advises the community to keep aloof from the Extremists and to have an independent political party of its own. The few Parsi leaders who have joined the Congress may work on its platform, but they should not fail to denounce, whether on the Congress platform or elsewhere, the improper methods of the Extremists.]

Alleged settlement by arbitration of the dispute between the Hindus and Muhammadans of Barsi.

Mahrátta (5), 16th Sept.

34. "A religious dispute between Hindus and Muhammadans at Barsi which lately came to a head was causing grave anxiety. We are glad to annouoce that it is settled to refer the question of the dispute to Mr. Tilak and Honourable Mr. Jinnah, by whose decision leading members from both communites have agreed to abide. The parties have also agreed not to apply to Government to intervene. The Honourable Mr. Ibrahim Jaffer and Mr. N. C. Kelkar had gone to Barsi to persuade the parties to settle their dispute privately; their success in bringing the parties to agree to the terms noted above has been due to the friendly co-operation of the leading Hindu and Muhammadan gentlemen of Barsi, to whom we heartily offer our congratulations for the good sense they have shown."

Comments on the Mahar recruiting meeting at Poona.

Kesari (106), 11th Sept.

35. Referring to the Mahar recruiting meeting recently held at Poona, the Kesari remarks:—Mr. Devdhar, a member of the Recruiting Board, said that the Mahar community which was oppressed by all the four castes in former times has been given an opportunity to come forward only under the British Government and that it should not let go that opportunity. Mr. Devdhar seems to have forgotten the historical fact that the Peishwas had Mahar regiments of their own, that their camp used to be pitched close to the Peishwas' camp and that Mahar regiments were disbanded only under British rule. We, however, hope that the speeches delivered at the meeting will raise the warlike spirit of the up-country Mahars and that they will take advantage of the opportunity offered and enlist in large numbers.

Russian affairs.

Prája Mitra and Pársi (28), 10th, 13th and 14th Sept.; Akhbár-e-Islám (56), 11th Sept.

36. Affairs in Russia are going from bad to worse. The enemy is making rapid advances in Russian territory and the fall of Riga has endangered the safety of Petrograd and Moscow. With the fall of Petrograd and Moscow the enemy will get possession of the greater portion of European Russia and the war will be protracted owing to the supplies of food-stuffs and other commodoties that the enemy will be able to get from Russia. But we feel sure that the Allies will ultimately be able to crush Germany with the help of America next year. [In the subsequent issue the paper considers it a very foolish step on the part of the Provisional Government to have dismissed Korniloff and thus weaned away the sympathies and deprived themselves of the services of an able and influential officer. It is afraid this step of the Provisional Government will lead to serious consequences. In the next issue the paper expresses fear that the task of the enemy will be greatly facilitated by the internecine quarrel between Korniloff and the Provisional Government at a time when the country is being undermined by the Maximalists. The Akhbár-e-Islám writes:—Unfavourable weather has prevented the Allies from continuing their offensive on the Western front. The Germans have taken advantage of this situation and are advancing in Russia. The position of Russia has thus become very critical. Let us hope that matters will take a favourable turn and that the enemy will receive the punishment it deserves.]

Rást Goftár (30), 16th Sept., Eng. cols.

37. "While the German invasion is becoming a growing danger Russia is face to face with civil war. M. Kerensky has or seems to have supreme power, but General Korniloff instead of submitting to him is marching on Petrograd with the evident intention of seizing the capital and establishing a military dictatorship. According to later information issued by M. Kerensky General Korniloff's movement is collapsing, but the danger will not pass until the General submits or is arrested. The order of arrest has been issued but its execution means a conflict between Government troops and the troops who are standing by the General. The situation is about as grave as can be. There is no news of the operations of German troops in or beyond Riga, and this dearth of news is ominous. Germany will not hesitate a moment to take the fullest advantage of the internal trouble in Russia. That is where the real danger lies and any day we may hear of extraordinary developments."

Shubhodaya (89), 3rd Sept.

38. The Shubhodaya condemns the Russian revolution and says that the British Government who were friends of the Emperor of Russia thoughtlessly recognized the new Government of Russia. It further adds that the Russian Emperor was the moving spirit of the Great War and that when the Great War began there was no idea of the protection of small kingdoms and of the spread of the democratic spirit. It goes on :—It was after the defeat of Belgium that the Allies declared that the war had been undertaken for the protection of small nations and not for self-aggrandisement. It was only after the participation of America in the war that the cry of the democratic spirit has been raised. The British Government who had adopted the cry for some political purpose announced, lest they be charged with lip-sympathy, that something would be given to Indians and that Indians were honest folks. Indians are rightly pleased with this promise which is not three months' old and which is a wordy one. The Tsar who began the war never hesitated to sacrifice his men and money. He gave anything and everything the Duma and the officers wanted. The Russian officers utilising the Army in their hands arrested suddenly and foolishly the Emperor and gave an opportunity to the rise of anarchy. Modern historians think that under the Tsars, Finland and the Ukarine and other Provinces would possibly have unified. The war also was going on well under one man. All the disasters have taken place because there was a premature revolution effected by thoughtless officials. If they wanted a democratic Government, they should have expelled the King after the successful termination of the war.

Complaint that the accused in a gang case being tried at Sátára are being treated in an inhuman manner.

Shri Shdhu (123), 5th Sept. ; Prakásh (116), 12th Sept.

39. A correspondent complains in the Shri Shdhu that the accused numbering about 50 in a gang case, which is being tried at Sátára before a special Magistrate, are being treated in a manner prejudicial to their health. He says that according to a report this inhuman treatment that is being accorded to them has already resulted in the death of one or two of them and invites the attention of the authorities to the matter. [The Prakásh repeats the story of the death of some of the men and says that the accused, among whom are some very old and feeble men, are taken to the court through rain and mud without the least attention to their health.]

Comments on the report of the Immigration Conference.

Mahrátta (5), 16th Sept.

*40. " The Leader in commenting on the report of the Immigration Conference says that 'under the scheme proposed by the inter-departmental Committee, the Indian Government is presumably to appoint such agents and to pay the cost out of the public revenues'. The scrappy report that has been published by the Government of India certainly justifies such a presumption as the Leader has made. We hope, however, that the presumption is incorrect. For the Leader says, with perfect truth, that these recruiting agents with their prestige of being Government servants will carry great terror into the villages and will be almost irresistible. Indian opinion can never tolerate such a retrograde measure. Recruiting labour for the Colonies has been almost universally condemned in India, for the simple reason that experience has proved that the recruiters practise, as a rule, unthinkable frauds on their victims. If these traffickers in human lives are given the status of Government servants, it is certain that their power of doing evil will greatly increase. If, therefore, Government desire the support of Indian opinion to recruitment of Indian labour for the Colonies, the best thing that they must do is not to enhance the status of the recruiter, while introducing powerful checks to prevent abuse of the privilege conceded to him of going about the country and inducing men to 'try their luck' in the Colonies."

Comments on the suspension of the publication of the Eastern Chronicle, an Assam newspaper.

Mahrátta (5), 16th Sept.

*41. " No straightforward course seems to appeal to the bureaucrats. The Eastern Chronicle, we learn, is 'One of the few, if not the only paper, which has unreservedly advocated the cause of Home Rule.' In this fact, perhaps, lies the root of the D. C.'s refusal to accede to the request of the Company that the legal requirements of the case having been complied with he might be pleased to allow the press and the paper to work pending decision of the Public Debt Office.......... The District Magistrate who accepted the Notes in October 1913 was bound to see if they were properly negotiated and endorsed, and we may take it that he did see to this detail according to his lights and the legal advice that was then available to him. If the District Magistrate would say that he failed to investigate the legality of the endorsement, the fault would lie with him. Surely, no fraud was committed upon him, even supposing that the Secretary erred in the matter, and the Magistrate has no obligation to look carefully into the technicallities of endorsement, etc., before accepting the Promissory Notes. Under these circumstances, to subject a Printing and Publishing Agency to heavy loss even after it had ratified the Secretary's action (the only legal remedy that can be conceived in the matter) is pure oppression. But it is of a piece with the traditions of the bureaucrat."

Comments on the order of Government directing Kulkarnis to pass the Vernacular Final Examination.

Karnátak Vaibhav (82), 11th Sept., Eng. cols.

42. Referring to the recent order of Government directing Kulkarnis to pass the Vernacular Final Examination, a correspondent of the Karnátak Vaibhav remarks :—" No one can deny that it is exceedingly difficult to resume study and appear for the Examination at the age of thirty or so. In spite of this difficulty some of the Kulkarnis determined to appear for the Examination and sent in their applications ; but the authorities concerned rejected their applications with a remark that candidates of more than 25 years of age will not be admitted. It is a sad story indeed. The majority of them have to sit idle. It is strange why the Government violated their own principle 'Do not embasrass the Government, etc.,' by raising this controversial question.......... I hope that Government will be moved at the sight of the vatandar's deplorable condition and will cancel this order or will postpone the execution of the order to a distant date ; and I further strongly hope that our Honourable members will earnestly try to redress this grievance of Kulkarnis."

The question of the term of revenue settlements in Sind.

Sind Journal (10), 6th Sept.

43. " The question of enhancing the settlement period in Sind to at least 30 years as prescribed in the Bombay Land Revenue Code has not been set at rest by the publication of the Report of the Sind Settlement Committee after a long delay. The thinking public of Sind has been demanding the extension of the period of settlement to a sufficiently long term to produce a sense of security in the minds of zamindars who do not, as a rule, invest large sums of money for fear of the revenue assessment on their lands being raised at the next revisional settlement.......... The decision of the Bombay Government that the period of settlement should normally be for twenty years, except in areas in which important projects are under consideration or which are particularly exposed to the vagaries of the river, has failed to give satisfaction.......... In the Punjáb the term of settlement was sought to be increased by the non-official members of the Council by moving a resolution that 30 years should be the ordinary period of guarantee.......... Sind has not been placed on a footing of equality with the Punjáb which it much resembles. We must, therefore, press our claim for a 30 years' settlement which is by no means excessive."

LEGISLATION.

The Usury Bill in the Imperial Legislative Council.

Bombay Samáchár (59), 10th Sept. ; Sánj Vartamán (31), 13th Sept. ; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 14th Sept.

44. Dwelling upon the sorry plight of those who borrow money at usurious rates of interest, the Bombay Samáchár wishes that the members of the Imperial Legislative Council will see their way to support the Usury Bill that has been brought before the Council. It strongly supports the provision of the Bill which seeks to empower the judge to re-open and re-examine the whole transaction between lender and borrower if the conduct of the former towards the latter appears to be unfair or unconscionable.

It, however, feels disinclined to endorse the suggestion for fixing the maximum rate of interest or for inserting a provision precluding the lender from recovering at any time more than double the amount he had actually advanced to the borrower. [While expressing gratification at the aims and objects of the Usury Bill, the Sánj Vartamán doubts if the provision that has been actually made in that behalf will effectually prevent the money lenders from charging high rates of interest. It remarks that a Bill like the present which affects the interests of hundreds of thousands of people should be fully published, if not earlier, at any rate at its first reading for the first time in the Council. The paper believes that it is the duty of the State to liberate the cultivating classes of this country from the clutches of heartless money lenders by fixing the maximum rate of interest on the loans which the latter advance. It also suggests that Government should start banks particularly for the benefit of agriculturists and thus provide them with facilities for securing loans at the moderate rate of interest of four or five per cent. per annum. The Jám-e-Jamshed also welcomes the Bill and hopes that it will tend to give relief to the poor classes. It observes that Agricultural Banks started by the State and advancing money on the ordinary banking system will ordinarily prove to be of greater practical utility than an Act which aims at putting a check upon heavy rates of interest.]

Gujaráti (16), 16th Sept., Eng. cols.

45. "The retrospective operation that has been given to the provisions of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act, so far as the taking of past accounts and reopening of past transactions are concerned, has worked a serious hardship especially upon the heirs of the original creditors. We notice that not only a similar effect is proposed to be given to the provisions of the Usury Bill, but it goes even further. If after reopening old transactions there is found to be an excess in favour of a debtor, the creditor will be compelled to refund it. That is not the law even under the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act and we think the provisions of section 2(1) are excessively sweeping and stringent and will entail enormous hardships upon creditors and their heirs. We are strongly opposed to the reopening of old transactions entered into and settled before the commencement of the Act and especially against granting refunds.......... The present legislation affects the whole country and, although its aims and objects are unexceptionable, the provisions of section 2 are so wide and elastic, nay so sweeping, that they demand careful consideration not only at the hands of the Councillors, but also of money-lenders and the public in general. We readily concede that the poor and ignorant ryot deserves to be protected against the extortionate demands of grasping and unscrupulous sowkars. But money-lenders are of great help not only to the ryot, but even to Government whose dues would never be paid punctually without their timely assistance."

EDUCATION.

Comments on the Government circular regarding students and political meetings.

Gujaráti (16), 16th Sept., Eng. cols.

46. "We have already commented upon the circular No. 1405, issued by the Secretary to Government, Educational Department, prohibiting students from attending any political meetings, especially those convened by the Home Rule Leagues or any public meetings at which Home Rule is advocated.......... How the circular issued by the Bombay Government is apt to operate in an unreasonable manner is best illustrated by the petition which no less than five hundred students of of the Government Law School have addressed to His Excellency the Governor-in-Council. They are graduates of the University and are entitled to vote at municipal and university elections. But according to the circular they cannot be permitted to attend even a session of the National Congress or the Provincial Conference or a meeting held under the auspices of the Bombay Presidency Association or the Bombay Provincial Congress Committee at which the question of self-government for India within the Empire may be considered........ When parents and their boys feel strongly that a prohibitive order is unjust and unreasonable, Government cannot succeed in adding to their moral prestige by continuing an anomalous state of things like the one created by the precious circular in question......... The reports that have reached us regarding the conduct of some of the students of our local colleges are not altogether satisfactory.......... But we cannot stand up in support of sweeping prohibitive orders which are directly calculated to induce disobedience and positively weaken, instead of strengthening, their faith in the fairness and good intentions of the higher authorities who are responsible for such circulars."

Comments on the Government Press Note on Urdu education in the Presidency.

Political Bhomiyo (71), 14th Sept.

47. The Political Bhomiyo expresses its strong disapprobation at the Press Note issued by Government in August last in connection with the teaching of Urdu to the Muhammadan children in the Bombay Presidency. It remarks that there is no wonder if the Moslem community were to grow impatient at it. It believes that the present action of Government will greatly help the leaders of the Home Rule League and others in winning over the Moslems to their side. It cannot comprehend what reasons have led Government to abandon their experiment of teaching Urdu. The paper goes on to attribute the failure of the experiment to the system Government adopted of teaching all subjects in Urdu without providing satisfactory and requisite means for the purpose. It believes that no occasion would have arisen for Government to issue a Press Note like the present if they had decided to teach Arithmetic, Accounts, Book-keeping, etc., to the Muhammadan children in the local vernaculars and Geography, History, Object Lessons, etc., in Urdu after getting text-books on these subjects that are taught in Government schools, translated into Urdu. The paper regards the reasons assigned in the Press Note for the failure of the abovesaid experiment as quite untenable. It does not admit that communities like Mansuris, Kujafaroshes, Khojas, Memons, Borahs, and others speak local vernaculars in their homes, but remarks that they speak languages which are all corrupt forms of the Urdu language. The paper concludes with hoping that, regard being had to the importance of the knowledge of Urdu to Muhammadan children, Government would be kind enough to alter their present decision in a manner that may be in keeping with the wishes of the Muhammadans.

Comments on His Excellency the Viceroy's speech at the Simla Education Conference.

Shetkari (41), 9th Sept.

48. We have always been contending that the education we receive is unsuited to our requirements. Government do not give us the right sort of education themselves nor do they allow the people to do so. Their educational policy is directed towards making us what they wish us to be when we are grown up. When the rulers and the ruled differ from each other in race, religion, customs, etc., the former are always anxious to perpetuate the subjection of the people to the authorities and education that would strengthen the sentiment of self-respect among the people is scarcely ever given. Our present Viceroy entertains the unnatural and atrocious ambition of making English the lingua franca of the whole of India and with that object in view he desires that it should be taught to Indian boys at a very early age. In this connection we would commend to His Excellency's attention the report of the London Education Committee which shows how even educated Englishmen are unable to express themselves in good English though it is their mother tongue. Let His Excellency first study that report and then proceed with his project to teach English to Indians. Does he mean to reduce the whole of the Indian nation to barbarism by insisting upon the teaching of English to Indians from their childhood? The proposed step, if taken, will make us strangers both to English and to our own vernaculars.

RAILWAYS.

Comments on the shooting affray in the G. I. P. Railway workshop at Parel (Bombay).

Gujaráti (16), 9th Sept.

49. The G. I. P. Railway workshop at Parel was the scene of disturbance last week and a European foreman is reported to have fired a revolver at one of the operatives. If the foreman wanted merely to frighten the workmen he should have fired in the air, but he has inflicted a wound on one of them. A question naturally arises whether the foremen of the G. I. P. Railway workshops work with loaded revolvers in their belts. If it is so, it is a conclusive proof that the relations between the workmen and their superiors are strained. The matter calls for Government enquiry. We hope that His Excellency Lord Willingdon will do the needful.

Promises given to the G. I. P. Railway strikers have not been kept.
Kesari (106), 11th Sept.

50. The Kesari complains that the promises given to the G. I. P. Railway strikers by His Excellency have not been kept and that some of them have been transferred to distant places and that some had to resign their posts on account of the inconvenience caused to them by such transfers. It also refers to the recent rioting in the work-shop and the prosecutions launched against the workmen and says that the Company has begun to harass the workmen and that it is the duty of His Excellency to compel the Company to fulfil the terms settled before. The paper trust that His Excellency will settle permanently the question of the grievances of the workmen, whatever may be his personal inconveniences.

MUNICIPALITIES.

A complaint against the President of the Poona Municipality.
Kesari (106), 11th Sept.

51. A Poona Municipal Councillor writes to the Kesari and complains that the President of the Poona City Municipality holds back from the agenda paper resolutions duly submitted to him by the Municipal Councillors. He says that three such cases, out of which two have been privately settled by the President, have occured. He adds :—There was nothing objectionable in the resolution rejected by him in the third case. It was only asked that the Chief Executive officer should personally bear the expenses the municipality had to bear owing to his negligence in a civil case. The President should explain whether this is not pure repression and what right he had to delete the resolution from the agenda.

A controversial measure like the introduction of house tax in various places in Sind should not be mooted by Government during war time.
Sind Patrika (48), 1st Sept., Eng. cols.

52. "It is a pity that at this critical moment when the empire is engaged in a life and death struggle with a powerful and unscrupulous foe, the authorities in Sind should have thought it fit to arouse the most bitter controversy by throwing like a bomb shell the proposal in one way or the other of taxing houses in so many places in Sind. Government by an official declaration is pledged to moot no controversial question during the pendency of the war and it is a wonder that the authorities in Sind should have cleanly forgotten this pledge. It is unfortunate that the question of house tax has been raised at the time when the election franchise is being bestowed on the town. In our opinion the raising of this question pari passu with the bestowing of the franchise of election would take off much that is attractive in the said franchise. If will also then be hard to resist the conclusion that what Government is offering with one hand it is taking away with the other. .... We request the authorities not to leave this impression to gain ground......... If the Government is really enamoured of the merits of house Tax, let the question come before the elected Board. Should it find favour with them, there will be no opposition to it."

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 21st September 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 38 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 22nd September 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British rule:

Appeal to Jains to take part in the Swarájya movement . . . 36
Appeal to Mrs. Besant to decline the Congress Presidentship . . 26
Comments on a proposal that Muhammadans and Hindus should participate in each other's festivals 39
Comments on the announcement regarding procedure during Mr. Montagu's visit to India . . . . 17 & 18
Comments on the Calcutta Congress split . . . . 27 & 28
Comments on the decision of the District Magistrate of Coimbatore in the Home Rule flag case 35
Comments on the proposal to elect Mr. Mahomed Ali as President of the next session of the Moslem League 30
Comments on the release of Mrs. Besant . . . . 19—25
Comments on the restrictions imposed on the liberty of speech of Mr. S. M. Paranjpe of Poona 33
Expected release of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali . . 29
Indians must agitate to get all political prisoners freed . . . 34
Mr. Tilak's recent visit to Wái (Sátára) 37
The Congress-League scheme of reforms should provide for representation of backward classes and minorities. . . . . . . 31 & 32
The Government of India is not acting as a national Government . 16
The Muhammadan address to His Excellency the Viceroy at Karáchi should contain a demand for Home Rule 38
The Viceroy's announcement about the abolition of the Customs Line at Viramgam 15
Co-operative Societies: Comments on the progress of the Co-operative movement in the Presidency 47
Ganapati festival: Comments on the Poona District Magistrate's Notification about the Poona Ganapati Festival 45

Imperial Legislative Council:

Comments on Sir M. O'Dwyer's speech in the — . . . . . 1—5
Comments on the Honourable Mr. Sarma's motion in the — regarding recommendations of the Public Services Commission in respect of the manning of the Indian Civil Service 13
Comments on the Viceroy's opening speech in the — 14
Interpellations in the — . . . . 11 & 12
Suggestions regarding the publication of the proceedings of the — . 10
The Viceroy on Sir Michael O'Dwyer's speech . . . . . 6—9

workshops work with loaded revolvers in their belts. If it is so, it is a conclusive proof that the relations between the workmen and their superiors are strained. The matter calls for Government enquiry. We hope that His Excellency Lord Willingdon will do the needful.

Promises given to the G. I. P. Railway strikers have not been kept.
Kesari (106), 11th Sept.

50. The Kesari complains that the promises given to the G. I. P. Railway strikers by His Excellency have not been kept and that some of them have been transferred to distant places and that some had to resign their posts on account of the inconvenience caused to them by such transfers. It also refers to the recent rioting in the work-shop and the prosecutions launched against the workmen and says that the Company has begun to harass the workmen and that it is the duty of His Excellency to compel the Company to fulfil the terms settled before. The paper trust that His Excellency will settle permanently the question of the grievances of the workmen, whatever may be his personal inconveneiences.

MUNICIPALITIES.

A complaint against the President of the Poona Municipality.
Kesari (106), 11th Sept.

51. A Poona Municipal Councillor writes to the Kesari and complains that the President of the Poona City Municipality holds back from the agenda paper resolutions duly submitted to him by the Municipal Councillors. He says that three such cases, out of which two have been privately settled by the President, have occured. He adds:—There was nothing objectionable in the resolution rejected by him in the third case. It was only asked that the Chief Executive officer should personally bear the expenses the municipality had to bear owing to his negligence in a civil case. The President should explain whether this is not pure repression and what right he had to delete the resolution from the agenda.

A controversial measure like the introduction of house tax in various places in Sind should not be mooted by Government during war time.
Sind Patrika (48), 1st Sept., Eng. cols.

52. "It is a pity that at this critical moment when the empire is engaged in a life and death struggle with a powerful and unscrupulous foe, the authorities in Sind should have thought it fit to arouse the most bitter controversy by throwing like a bomb shell the proposal in one way or the other of taxing houses in so many places in Sind. Government by an official declaration is pledged to moot no controversial question during the pendency of the war and it is a wonder that the authorities in Sind should have cleanly forgotten this pledge. It is unfortunate that the question of house tax has been raised at the time when the election franchise is being bestowed on the town. In our opinion the raising of this question pari passu with the bestowing of the franchise of election would take off much that is attractive in the said franchise. If will also then be hard to resist the conclusion that what Government is offering with one hand it is taking away with the other. .... We request the authorities not to leave this impression to gain ground......... If the Government is really enamoured of the merits of house Tax, let the question come before the elected Board. Should it find favour with them, there will be no opposition to it."

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 21st September 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL. No. 38 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 22nd September 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British rule:

Appeal to Jains to take part in the Swarájya movement 36
Appeal to Mrs. Besant to decline the Congress Presidentship . . 26
Comments on a proposal that Muhammadans and Hindus should participate in each other's festivals 39
Comments on the announcement regarding procedure during Mr. Montagu's visit to India . . . . 17 & 18
Comments on the Calcutta Congress split . . . . 27 & 28
Comments on the decision of the District Magistrate of Coimbatore in the Home Rule flag case 35
Comments on the proposal to elect Mr. Mahomed Ali as President of the next session of the Moslem League 30
Comments on the release of Mrs. Besant . . . . 19—25
Comments on the restrictions imposed on the liberty of speech of Mr. S. M. Paranjpe of Poona 33
Expected release of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali . . 29
Indians must agitate to get all political prisoners freed . . . 34
Mr. Tilak's recent visit to Wái (Sátára) 37
The Congress-League scheme of reforms should provide for representation of backward classes and minorities. . . . . . . 31 & 32
The Government of India is not acting as a national Government . 16
The Muhammadan address to His Excellency the Viceroy at Karáchi should contain a demand for Home Rule 38
The Viceroy's announcement about the abolition of the Customs Line at Viramgam 15
Co-operative Societies: Comments on the progress of the Co-operative movement in the Presidency 47
Ganapati festival: Comments on the Poona District Magistrate's Notification about the Poona Ganapati Festival 45

Imperial Legislative Council:

Comments on Sir M. O'Dwyer's speech in the — . . . . . 1—5
Comments on the Honourable Mr. Sarma's motion in the — regarding recommendations of the Public Services Commission in respect of the manning of the Indian Civil Service 13
Comments on the Viceroy's opening speech in the — 14
Interpellations in the — . . . . 11 & 12
Suggestions regarding the publication of the proceedings of the — . 10
The Viceroy on Sir Michael O'Dwyer's speech . . . . . . 6—9

H 273—a CON

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

Police: Alleged deficiency of — protection in Dhárwár City . . . 46
Postal Department: The strike of Bombay postmen . . . . . . 41—44
Public Service: Alleged need of improving the pay and prospects of Mukhtiarkars in Sind 49
Revenue matters: Khots in Kolába should refuse to sign the new kabulayats 48
War: Reflections on the present political condition of Russia 40

EDUCATION—

Comments on the personnel of the Calcutta University Commission . . 50

MUNICIPALITIES—

Protest against the house-tax imposed by the Karjat (Kolába) Notified Area Committee 51

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Comments on Sir M. O'Dwyer's speech in the Imperial Legislative Council and his subsequent retraction.

Young India (14), 19th Sept.

1. "Sir Michael O'Dwyer gave unbridled expression to his fiery eloquence against all and sundry who have been agitating for Indian reforms. It is evident that he must have been labouring under a frenzy of supressed fury at the collapse of a policy which was pursued chiefly under his tutelage. The annals of the Imperial Legislative Council furnish nothing, as the Bombay Chronicle remarks, so stupid, offensive and cantankerous as this outburst of hysterical rage to which Sir Michael fell an easy victim."

Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 19th Sept., Eng. cols.

2. "Was it the expression of mere personal opinion and personal fury, or was it the result of calculated and concerted action on the part of a body of persons? In other words, was Sir Michael speaking merely for himself, or was he acting as the mouthpiece of any particular association or interest? Now there is sufficient internal evidence in the speech itself to show that it was a prepared and premeditated one.......... We might regard the whole speech as a piece of impertinence and an expression of bad temper. The question is, whether His Honour was speaking merely for himself, or was voicing the sentiments of a wider class. Had the other official members any knawledge of what he was going to say? Had the Viceroy and the Government of India any inkling of his intentions? Was Mr. Lowndes' peculiar attitude in the chair the result of anything more than personal sympathy and partiality?......... If Sir Michael spoke thus unseasonably and gratuitously, in consequence of any calculated plan and concerted action, then there is ground for grave fear. It means that there are strong forces, working under the surface, directed against the national movement, which must be reckoned with.......... The news of Mrs. Besant's release has come with dramatic swiftness upon his speech. Is it the Imperial Government's reply to His Honour's condemnation of the Indian politician?"

Indu Prakásh (39), 15th Sept., Eng. cols.

3. "The saner section of Indian politicians have always complained that the indiscreet utterances of some of the bureaucrats make the path of their—the Indian leaders'—duty more difficult. They are anxious for the victory of sobriety and moderation in Indian politics but often find that their attempts are counteracted by official indiscretions. The speech made by His Honour Sir Michael O'Dwyer, Lieutenont-Governor of the Punjab, at the Imperial Legislative Council is an instance in point.......... Sir Michael's speech has unhappily largely counteracted the good effect produced by the recent noble pronouncement of His Excellency the Viceroy.......... The lesson of this unhappy episode is that it should be the duty of the Government of India to courteously advise provincial rulers to be more discreet in their utterances and to avoid touching upon issues concerning the future of the country at large.......... Is there no Imperial statesman to tell some of our bureaucrats that by their unwise acts and utterances they only help the Extremists in Indian politics whom they so much abhor and condemn."

Mahrátta (5), 23rd Sept.

*4. "The Punjab autocrat, Sir Michael O'Dwyer, made a sorry exhibition of his poor-witted garrulity and want of prudence in the meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council held on the 13th instant......... Sir Michael was allowed to impose his 'regrettable' manuscript eloquence upon the Council in spite of repeated objectons raised by the Honourable Pandit Malaviya, Dr. Sapru, Mr. Jinnah and Mr. Mazarul Haque. The Honourable Mr. Lowndes who presided showed no regard for the feelings of the Indian members.......... Mr. Lowndes, who ought to have pulled him up, gave him a free hand and thus is responsible, in no less a measure than the Punjáb ruler, for having done violence to the feelings of the Indian Councillors and the Indian public......... Mr. Lowndes' conduct may be perfectly legal, but we cannot help saying that he must share a good part of the condemnation which has been rightly bestowed on Sir Michael."

Kesari (106), 18th Sept.

5. The Kesari condemns strongly Sir Michael O'Dwyer's speech and says that he gave a free rein to his tongue and that he venomously attacked every other province except the Punjáb. It complains that Mr. Lowndes did not call Sir Michael to order though repeated requests were made. It adds :—Mr. Lowndes connived at the unpardonable mistake of Sir Michael and gave a finishing touch to it by immediately adjourning the meeting. Public opinion is everywhere excited. The adjournment will not, however, dispose of the question. Government themselves ask us not to raise any controversial questions and big officials make speeches that wound the hearts of the people. How are we to characterise this piece of wisdom?

The Viceroy on Sir Michael O'Dwyer's speech.
Sandesh (118), 22nd Sept.

6. The most sensible speech made by His Excellency the Viceroy with a view to removing bitterness caused by the ill-considered oration of Sir Michael O'Dwyer cannot fail to excite the love and esteem of the people. His Excellency's speech clearly shows his anxiety to bring about a reconciliation between the rulers and the ruled. We can well understand His Excellency's disappointment at finding the excellent effect produced by his first speech marred by the reckless speech of Sir Michael who took advantage of His Excellency's temporary absence to give vent to his spleen. His Excellency's conciliatory speech, however, had an electrical effect in producing a feeling of confidence in the minds of the people. Indeed His Excellency's attitude augurs well for the early fulfilment of our hopes of attaining swarajya.

Rást Goftár (30), 23rd Sept., Eng. cols.

*7. "The amazing indiscretion and unprovoked ill temper that the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjáb displayed in the Imperial Legislative Council would have been followed by severe strictures from several Indian Members of Council who had been personally attacked by His Honour, but His Excellency the Viceroy threw oil over troubled waters, and the Lieutenant-Governor expressed regret for his ill-timed outburst....... Has the Lieutenant-Governor gained in public estimation by this exhibition? Many Anglo-Indian papers had nothing but praise for his extraordinary speech......... What have they got to say about his recantation? It is not a dignified spectacle to see a Lieutenant-Governor sitting on the stool of repentance."

Message (6), 22nd Sept.

8. "The calm, sober and dignified speech of His Excellency Lord Chelmsford at the meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council on Wednesday is indeed a remarkable pronouncement, and is the legitimate extension of the spirit of his first speech a fortnight ago.......... We are perfectly willing to extend the same generous consideration to the first and, as we hope, the last adventure of Sir Machael O'Dwyer into the realm of speechifying on such a controversial question as politics.......... We wish that His Honour's expression of regret was full and unqualified and also that he had gracefully withdrawn the offending portions of his speech. On the whole the impression left on one's mind on perusing the speech is that His Honour was acting under superior admonitions and tried merely to wriggle out of an uncomfortable situation. As compared with it, His Excellency the Viceroy's speech was fair and full. It is difficult to judge whether the spirit which animated the Viceroy animates all his colleagues in the Government of India. But it is clear that the Anglo-Indian elements are quite irascible over it, and that they are not in a mood to stand aside or assist the Government in conducting 'a calm and dispassionate examination' of the problems that confront British statesmanship in the country.......... It is now practically certain that the 'Anglo-Indians' are going to fight tooth and nail the Indian demand and resist it to the last drop of their blood and money. Therefore it behoves our countrymen to close up their ranks and while co-operating with Government to such extent as may be desirable in the interests of the commonweal, to be on the guard against being 'surprised' by the forces of Anglo-Indianism."

Sánj Vartamán (31), 20th Sept.; Hindusthán (20), 20th Sept.; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 18th and 21st Sept.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 20th Sept.; Shri Venkateshwar (80), 16th Sept.; Gujarát Mitra (17), 16th Sept.

9. Now that Sir Michael O'Dwyer has apologised for his speech we shall draw a veil on the subject. His Excellency the Viceroy did well in reprimanding Sir Michael and we hope he and other officials will take a lesson from this episode. [The Hindusthán writes:—This is the first time in history that a Lieutenant-Governor has taken back his words. It means that the higher officials have to be mindful of public feelings. The question now arises as to whether Sir Michael should be allowed to retain his post. It is likely that he will take indirect steps to create an opposition to the measures of reform that will be suggested by the Viceroy. It would be in the interest of India that men like Sir Michael, Lord Pentland and other bureaucratic Civilians should leave India before the arrival of Mr. Montagu. The Viceroy deserves our thanks for the tact he has used in compelling Sir Michael to express regret for his speech. The Viceroy has thus shown that he possesses a large fund of political wisdom. The Jám-e-Jamshed considers the speech made by Sir Michael on the motion of the Honourable Mr. Shafi as very hasty and inconsiderate and such as would spoil the effect of the Viceroy's conciliatory speech. It expresses a hope that the Government of India will openly rebuke Sir Michael. In a subsequent issue the paper thanks His Excellency Lord Chelmsford for the tact he has used in pacifying the perturbed feelings of the Indian public. It wishes Sir Michael had withdrawn his words after tendering the apology. The Praja Mitra and Pársi thanks the Viceroy for taking early steps to remove the ill-feeling caused in the public mind by asking Sir Michael to apologise for his speech and thus setting an example to Provincial Governments in the matter of respecting public feelings. The Shri Venkateshwar and the Gujarát Mitra expect that Sir Michael's bitter speech will evoke a protest throughout India.]

Suggestions regarding the publication of the proceedings of the Imperial Legislative Council.

Hindusthán (20), 18th Sept.

10. The Hindusthán cannot understand why the replies made by Government to the interpellations in the Imperial Legislative Council are not published, along with other matters in the reports of proceedings that take place in that Council. Regard being had to the fact that these replies affect public interests, the paper advocates their publication. It also urges Government to revive the old system of supplying to the Press, before the commencement of a session, a complete programme of the work to be done in the Council. It further dwells upon the necessity of publishing, along with the report of the proceedings, the names of members that may be present at a particular session, as was done formerly. The paper feels confident that these three suggestions will receive due attention at the hands of Government.

Interpellations in the Imperial Legislative Council.

Bombay Samáchár (59), 18th Sept.

11. Commenting upon the interpellations in the recent session of the Imperial Legislative Council, the Bombay Samáchár expresses gratification at the reply made by Government declaring that they were considering the question of the establishment of a university for the Central Provinces. It wishes that the deliberations of Government might soon show results. The paper remarks that the days of the one-man-rule are now over and, accordingly, welcomes the reply made by the Honourable Sir William Vincent announcing the willingness on the part of Government to examine the question of appointing a Lieutenant-Governor with an Executive Council for the Central Provinces if strong public opinion were to manifest itself in that behalf. It is of opinion that the people of the Central Provinces and Berar should now lose no time in presenting their demand in this matter before Government in an unmistakable manner. The paper then goes on to dwell on the importance of keeping High Court Judges independent of Imperial or Provincial Governments and referring to the belief entertained by a section of the public that the practice of giving high executive posts to these judges would expose them to the temptation of trying to secure the good graces of the Imperial and Local Governments, observes that the public will scarcely feel satisfied at the reply made by Government to the interpellation of the Honourable Mr. M. B. Dadabhoy regarding the appointment of Judges to high executive posts. The paper also does not approve of the present alleged policy of Government of not selecting persons holding particular sorts of political views as Indian members of Executive Councils and suggests that Government should be more liberal than at present in making these nominations.

Sánj Vartamán (31), 18th Sept.

12. The Sánj Vartamán characterises the reply given by Sir William Vincent on behalf of Government to the question put by the Honourable Dr. Sapru in the recent session of the Imperial Legislative Council with regard to the filling up of the vacancy of the post of Advocate-General of Bengal, as nothing but disappointing. It remarks that Dr. Sapru has, in a way, carried on a proper fight in the Council on behalf of the educated Indians by means of his interpellations on this subject. While admitting that nominations for the posts of High Court Judges and Advocate-Generals are made by His Majesty the King-Emperor, the paper observes that the Government of India have indirectly a hand in these nominations, inasmuch as recommendations in this behalf are generally made by that Government. In view of the express desire that has been proclaimed by His Majesty's Government in favour of giving competent Indians high and responsible positions in the administration of their own country, the paper raises a strong protest against the appointment of a lawyer unknown in India like Mr. Gibbons to the office of Advocate-General of Bengal to the exclusion of a capable lawyer like Mr. Mitra who was temporarily appointed to that post. It hopes that in future the Government of India will not be backward in exercising all their influence, direct and indirect, in order to enable competent Indians to secure such high positions. The paper further hopes that the Honourable Dr. Sapru will not fail to persevere with a view to securing, later on, a reply from Government to his subsidiary question as to whether the Government of India were in consultation with Lord Willingdon in connection with the above-mentioned vacancy and what the opinion of His Excellency was in the matter. It believes that the reply of Government will throw an important light upon the subject.

Comments on the Honourable Mr. Sarma's motion in the Imperial Legislative Council regarding the recommendations of the Public Services Commission in respect of the manning of the Indian Civil Service.

Sánj Vartamán (31), 21st Sept.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 22nd Sept.

13. The Sánj Vartamán endorses the arguments advanced by the Honourable Mr. Sarma in support of his resolution in the Imperial Legislative Council asking the Government of India not to accept the recommendations of the Civil Service Commission in the matter of keeping a preponderance of Europeans in the Indian Civil Service and the Police Service and adds :—The Government reply implies that Government have not yet formed any definite opinion on the subject. Sir William Vincent in his reply tried to justify the limitation placed on the Indians on the grounds of its being temporary. The question is whether the limitation placed on Indians is just or proper. How long should the Indians labour under disadvantageous conditions? The recommendation of the Commission is adverse to the best interests of the British Empire and if accepted will tend to spread acute disaffection in India. [The Praja Mitra and Pársi urges that all restrictions based on colour prejudices should be removed and that the recommendation of the Commission should be rejected.]

Comments on the Viceroy's opening speech in the Imperial Legislative Council.

Jágaruk (new), 14th Sept.; New Times (7), 12th Sept.

14. His Excellency the Viceroy's first opening speech at the Imperial Legislative Council meeting was on the whole satisfactory. We regret, however, His Excellency's omission to state clearly what steps Government propose to take to educate the masses. Although we welcome the announcement that the goal of British rule in India is to confer self-government on the country, we think that it would be injurious to the interests of the masses to confer increased political powers on Indians unless efforts are simultaneously made to fit the people for self-government. The duty of educating all the classes of the people automatically devolves upon Government when they undertake reforms in the direction of representative institutions. It would be absurd to suppose that men of the upper classes can represent the interests of the lower classes also, as the interests of the two classes do not coincide. The fact is, our Government are anxious to placate the upper classes owing to the great stir created by them. Obviously they think that it is unnecessary to make primary education compulsory as the lower classes, who are most in need of such a measure, do not clamour for it. This, however, is not just. Indeed the one great need of India to-day is the spread of education. Government should, therefore, give an undertaking that primary education will be made compulsory as soon as the war is over. [The New Times writes:—" The Viceroy's speech has the tone and spirit of a true statesman; it does not fit in with the speeches we heard from His Excellency on former occasions; it presents a welcome contrast to the speech His Excellency made when he was kind enough to receive the Press deputation."]

The Viceroy's announcement about the abolition of the Customs Line at Viramgam.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 18th Sept.; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 20th Sept.

15. The Praja Mitra and Pársi observes that the abolition of the Customs Line at Viramgam will remove the hardships not only of the people of Káthiáwár, but of all others who have to go to and return from that province. It remarks that the public feel grateful to the Governments of Lords Chelmsford and Willingdon for thus subverting the policy of Lord Curzon who give vent to his wrath against some of the Indian Princes by levying this impost at Viramgam and thereby harassing their subjects. The paper hopes that with the abolition of the levy of the customs duty at Viramgam its levy at Ranpur and other places connected with the above-mentioned Customs Line will stop mechanically. It, accordingly, expresses its belief that Government will do well to make an express declaration to that effect without any delay for the sake of reassuring the public. [While expressing gratification at the action of Government in deciding to abolish the levying of the customs duty at Viramgam, the Jám-e-Jámshed also hopes that the levy of the duty will be stopped at Ranpur too. It wishes that an official resolution may be soon published in connection with the present Government measure.]

The Government of India is not acting as a national Government.

Indian Social Reformer (3), 23rd Sept.

16. " The Government of India has not been acting in the same way as a purely national Government would have acted. The war has proved a touchstone. Is there that enthusiasm in this country for the war as there was during the first year of the war? Is the Government aware how much some of its own officials have done to damp public enthusiasm for the war? The way in which some of the petty men in power set about collecting funds in the mofussil for the maintenance of the hospital ship contributed by the Madras Presidency, has driven more men into Mrs. Besant's camp than all the might of her oratory. A truly national Government and its officials would have not relied upon fear as the motive power of public philanthropy. In this and other directions, the Government has been a failure, and its permanent officials have mainly contributed to the failure. They have lacked vision, these winders and re-winders of red tape. They have neglected opportunities of development which will never occur again, and for purposes of proof, I will take only one or two instances. Has the Government ever thought of the possibilities of an indigenous mercantile fleet? Yet nothing has been so disastrous to India as the absence of her own merchant navy. Had ours been a truly national Government, this would have been the first problem which would have engaged its attention, the moment the frightful situation caused by the German submarine activity presented itself on the horizon....... Even now it is not too late to begin. Let the Government deliberately set to work. Let it add a marine section to all the Engineering Colleges in the country. Let Japanese ship-wrights be called out here, and immediate steps be taken in laying down large shipyards in Calcutta and Bombay. The thing can be done, if only there is the will behind it. Things pronounced to be impossible have been done during the course of the war. Let the Government remember that this is what a truly national Government would have done. Then there is the problem of high prices. These high prices are India's opportunity. We are mainly an agricultural community and we stand most to gain at this juncture.......... But beyond a few sporadic attempts in the Punjáb, I see no definite movement on the part of Government to bring in more waste lands under cultivation. There never is a department of Government more attached to red tape than the Revenue Department.......... A truly national Government would be as much mindful of the production of revenue as of its collection. The present Government's efficiency is as collector of revenue and not as a producer. And by the two instances I have cited, it can be proved that the Government has been a failure judged by Mr. Gokhale's criterion."

Comments on the announcement regarding procedure during Mr. Montagu's visit to India.

Mahrátta (5), 23rd Sept.

17. Commenting on the announcement regarding the procedure that will be followed during Mr. Montagu's visit, the Mahrátta writes:—"The suggestions made in the announcement are made with the intention of distributing to the best advantage the time at the disposal of Mr. Montagu. So far as the intention goes, there can be no question that it is a worthy intention. But we are afraid that the suggestions are not quite such as would commend themselves to Indian opinion. In the first place, the announcement that all deputations will be received by Mr. Montagu and His Excellency the Viceroy jointly, will not be received without some misgiving.......... The people expected that Mr. Montagu would be a free man and would not be tied to the coat-tail of the busy Viceroy in the matter of meeting the deputations of the various sections of the community. Considering that the time of Mr. Montagu is very limited, it would be well if his programme in India is arranged with sole regard to the necessity of all variety of views reaching him in a full and exhaustive manner through accredited representatives of the several parties.......... Again, we are told that private interviews with selected members of deputations will be arranged after the presentation of the addresses. Who will select these members? We hope that this selection will be entirely left to the members of the deputations.......... Anglo-India hinted that if Mr. Montagu were to go round a free man, giving interviews to whomsoever he pleased, the Government of India would no longer be looked upon by the people with that feeling of awe (helpless dread?) which is a proper feeling in a subject nation!......... It is evidently to give no room for anxiety on this score that the 'Joint' reception of every deputation is proposed. And so, however much it may be desirable that Mr. Montagu should be a free man, it is not likely that he will be allowed to be.......... If individuals as apart from associations are, as a rule, denied interviews, more time will be available for distribution amongst representatives of the several associations in the land.......... The Associations that have a claim upon Mr. Montagu's time are at present not very many in number.......... The most important part of the affair will be to note correctly the numbers which each group represents. And here there will be difficulties of some gravity. Several groups are likely to arrogate the right of representing an identical section of the community, while putting forward views varying in principles as well as details. In such a case it will be possible for Government to know the true representatives from the false ones, only by a kind of referendum. As no such thing is likely to be attempted, and further as the Bureaucratic bias is bound to be in favour of views which condemn the Congress-League demands as too high-pitched, and as containing the seed of grave internecine troubles owing to the passing of political power from the alien bureaucrat to the native intelligentia (which, it is alleged, is out of sympathy with the masses of India and is dominated by Brahmans who, it is further alleged, will oppress the non-Brahmans)—it is to be feared that more than proportionate time will be allotted to the anti-Congress-League deputations and addresses. We are told that the announcement regarding the procedure to be followed during Mr. Montagu's visit is made in accordance with the desire of the Secretary of State. It behoves us to inform the Secretary of State that we are pained to see that this new announcement has not been preceded by one granting general amnesty to our politicals."

Kesari (106), 18th Sept.

18. The Kesari doubts whether Mr. Montagu would be left free to follow the bent of his mind during his visit. It also questions the propriety of the joint reception of deputations by the Viceroy and the Secretary of State. It says that though Mr. Montagu will have much time at his disposal, the Viceroy will not be free and that consequently it would be difficult for the people to have a free discussion with the Secretary of State. It, therefore, suggests that the restriction should be removed and that the Secretary of State should receive deputations alone. It adds:—Has the Secretary of State resolved to take so much trouble and travel so far only to suffer the restriction that he should not have a talk with anybody except under the supervision of the Viceroy?

Comments on the release of Mrs. Besant.
Dnyán Prakásh (36), 20th Sept.; Indu Prakásh (39), 19th Sept.; Sandesh (118), 20th Sept.

19. The release of Mrs. Besant and her co-workers shows that the repressive policy of Government is definitely at an end and that a new era of conciliation has now opened. Indeed it would have been impossible to reconcile Mr. Montagu's conciliatory attitude with the continued internment of the leaders. Indians could not have discussed political reforms with the Secretary of State with an open mind with their leaders who have suffered most in the cause of self-government still rotting in internment. The release of Mrs. Besant was deferred so long owing to the opposition of Lord Pentland. The wording of the communiqué of the Madras Government shows that he is still opposed to the step taken by the Government of India. It is indeed a great triumph of the popular party that Mrs. Besant was released unconditionally in the face of the opposition of the local Government. It is now to be seen whether Lord Pentland quietly submits to the new policy of the Imperial Government or whether he resigns his post as suggested by the Madras Mail. [The Indu Prakásh expresses its joy that in releasing Mrs. Besant Government did not allow the bogey of prestige to interfere with their desire to do an act of justice and considers her release to be a distinct triumph of the popular party. The Sandesh says the news of Mrs. Besant's release was received in Bombay with tremendous enthusiasm. It likens the joy felt by the people at her release to that of the people of Ayodhya when Sita returned from Ravana's captivity. The paper says that as people naturally regarded her internment as restriction placed on the swarájya movement, her release may now be regarded by them as the liberation of that movement. It further remarks that with her release the question of the presidentship of the forthcoming Indian National Congress has been automatically solved as eight Provincial Congress Committees have recommended her election and the objection based on her being not able to preside on account of her internment can no longer be urged. It hopes that Mrs. Besant's release would strenghten the people's confidence in the British sense of justice and encourage them to agitate with greater force for the achievement of Home Rule for India.]

Indu Prakásh (39), 19th Sept., Eng. cols.

20. "The release of Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues is a triumph of British Justice. There is no earthly Government that can never commit mistakes. The internment of Mrs. Besant was at once a mistake and a wrong. The mistake has now been rectified and the wrong righted. It was the nervousness and over-sensitiveness on the part of the authorities concerned which saw things in an exaggerated light and scented danger where there was none. The agitation and heartburning provoked throughout India by the internments created more unrest than could have been the case if there had been no internments. This is a lesson which, we respectfully suggest, some of the authorities in this country might advantageously learn from the unhappy episode which has now happily closed. The authorities have also to guard against their political vision being blurred by the foolish advice gratuitously offered to them by Anglo-Indian extremists of the type of the Madras

Mail. It is impossible to exaggerate the mischief of such papers flourishing their tiger qualities in the face of His Majesty's Ministers and other august representatives of the Crown in India with a view to overawe them into a surrender of their high principles and convictions."

Young India (14), 19th Sept.

21. "We do not wish to gloat over this great triumph of public opinion and the discomfiture of 'the White Brahmans' as the National Weekly calls the Indian bureaucrats. While one great load of anxiety has been taken off the public shoulders, there is yet another, which deserves the immediate and gracious attention of Government. We refer to the 'prohibition' orders passed against Mrs. Besant, Mr. Tilak and Mr. Bepin Chandra Pal, whose right of free entry into the various presidencies has been arbitrarily curtailed under the Defence of India Rules. There is also the case of those two great patriots, Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali, and the hundreds of young men who have been dealt with under the Defence Act. We do trust the Government of India will enlarge the circle of their sympathy and good-will so as to embrace all these cases and order the immediate withdrawal of the numerous orders. The state of public feeling is very acute in regard to these and similar other cases. A general amnesty to people who have suffered, not for any crimes committed, but for the sake of their political opinions, will be more graceful and generous and will certainly tranquilize the disturbed public mind."

Gujaráti (16), 23rd Sept., Eng. cols.

22. "From Mrs. Besant's message to New India it seems that she looks upon her release as the triumph of 'national constitutional agitation carried through without violence or disorder.' We think that this view is on the whole correct. All classes of Indians, whether her followers or not, whether they agree with her or not, sincerely rejoice that 'the Government of India are satisfied that these persons will abstain from unconstitutional and violent methods of political agitation during the remainder of the war' and that her release is unconditional. .... We have had serious differences with her in some matters, but that does not and cannot prevent us from heartily and unreservedly congratulating her and Messrs. Wadia and Arundale on their release. We also congratulate Lord Chelmsford's Government and Mr. Montagu on the generous and statesmanlike policy they have followed for the purpose of creating a political atmosphere in which questions of great importance to the political future of India can be calmly and impartially considered."

Mahrátta (5), 23rd Sept.

23. "It is undeniable that to our agitation, fervent and persistent, the release of Mrs Besant and her co-workers must be largely traced. Mrs. Besant's international reputation and the agitation thus caused in England by her internment has contributed its own share in bringing about the happy event of her release. And along with these two contributory causes, the good sense of the authorities in England and in India in realising the justice and expediency of the demand agitated for by the Indian public, deserves an equally prominent mention as the third contributory cause. We heartily congratulate the authorities upon the unconditional reversal of the internment orders passed against the illustrious three......... Strength, spiritual, moral and physical, bringeth us the best harvest of good things. Strength manifested in agitation has brought us back our revered leaders. To Strength, therefore, we offer our most heartfelt homage, and we call upon our people to build up Strength day by day and hour by hour in every field of national activity, for this way alone lies the hope of our early emancipation from bonds that bind us down to a stinted life in the political or in other fields."

Rást Goftár (30), 23rd Sept., Eng. cols.

24. "The release of Mrs. Besant is a triumph of constitutional agitation, and that triumph should be constitutionally celebrated.......... Her name is anathema maranatha to the majority of Anglo-Indians.......... We, therefore, attach no importance to the ravings of the Madras Mail and other papers of that ilk. All that we wonder at is the Madras paper being allowed repeatedly to threaten the Secretary of State for India with impunity. Is there no provision in the Press Act for dealing with an offence of this kind?"

Sánj Vartamán (31), 18th Sept.; Hindusthán (20), 18th Sept.; Deshi Mitra (63), 20th Sept.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 16th Sept.; Bombay Samáchár (59), 21st Sept.; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 19th Sept.; Akhbár-e-Islám (56), 20th Sept.

25. Making an appreciative mention of Mrs. Besant's activities in the fields of religion, education and politics, and dwelling upon her public services to India for the last thirty years, the Sanj Vartamán expresses its great joy at the order passed by Government releasing Mrs. Besant and her associates. It remarks:—The people believe that the internment of Mrs. Besant was nothing else but an attempt to stifle public opinion. It was for this reason that the public, including not only her admirers but even her opponents, had raised their strong protest against her internment. The continued protest extending over a period of three months has at last produced its effect and Mrs. Besant and her colleagues have been realesed unconditionally. The date of her release will be written in letters of gold in the annals of India. The public now request His Excellency Lord Willingdon as well as the Punjab Government to cancel their orders prohibiting Mrs. Besant from entering their territories. [The paper then goes on to advocate the release of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali and other political prisoners and wishes Government thereby to remove all bitterness and discontent from the minds of the people. The Hindusthán commends the action of Government in releasing Mrs. Besant and remarks that the public thank Lord Chelmsford for thus deferring to the voice of the people. The Government of India, observes the paper, must have now realised that public discontent does not decrease but increases as a result of repressive measures. It also suggests the withdrawal of the prohibitory orders passed by some of the Provincial Governments against Mrs. Besant. The Deshi Mitra reproduces the above article of the Hindusthán. The Praja Mitra and Pársi regards the release of Mrs. Besant and her colleagues as an effective rejoinder to the alleged fulminating and angry speech recently delivered by Sir Michael O'Dwyer at the Imperial Legislative Council. It construes Sir Michael's remark that his speech above referred to may be his last speech in India as a threat of resignation of his post and observes that it will remain anxious to see, now that Mrs. Besant has been released, when this threat as well as those conveyed by the Madras Mail about the resignation of other authorities are carried out. The Bombay Samáchár congratulates both Government as well as Mrs. Besant and her associates on the honourable manner in which the whole episode has come to a close. It believes that the best interests of the country lie not in regarding the release of Mrs. Besant as a victory of one party or the other but that they lie in all parties joining hands with one another in accordance with the appeal made by Lord Chelmsford in the recent session of the Imperial Legislative Council in the task of furthering the political progress of India. The Jám-e-Jamshed remarks that the release of Mrs. Besant will not fail to spread satisfaction among the whole of the general public. It, however, wishes that the advocates of the Home Rule League will follow the advice she gave, immediately on her release, of carrying on political agitation in a spirit of moderation. The Akhbár-e-Islám remarks that Mrs. Besant's release has naturally produced joy among a very large section of the public. It, at the same time, maintains that no farsighted person will be in accord with a section of the extremists who ascribe her release mainly to the Home Rule agitation and who believe that Government had been frightened into releasing her as a result of the hue and cry raised by the Home Rule party.]

Appeal to Mrs. Besant to decline the Congress Presidentship.

Indu Prakásh (39), 17th Sept., Eng. cols.

26. "Mrs. Besant has rendered great services to the cause of education and of religious and national revival. She has the best interests of this country at heart, and however keen may be the difference in the political angle of vision of herself and of many of us, none can question her sincerest desire to serve and help this country. And we respectfully suggest that Mrs. Besant, knowing that the Congress is again being brought to the verge of a disaster owing to the split occasioned by disputes over her election, should nobly and gracefully declare her resolve not to accept her election this year. There are noble examples of such glorious self-abnegation in ancient Indian history of which Mrs. Besant is so justly proud......... Will Mrs. Besant rise to the occasion, refuse to accept her election, and save the nation by saving the Congress?"

Comments on the Calcutta Congress split.
Young India (14), 19th Sept.

27. Commenting on the attitude of "Young" Bengal toward Mr. S. N. Banerjee and others, Young India writes:—"It is high time that those who still pose themselves as leaders took note of this new feeling in the country and adjusted themselves to the democratic feelings and sentiments of the people. The world is up in arms against autocracies and oligarchies. Oligarchies infinitely greater and stronger than the one which has survived in our midst have been given short shrift ere this and no less a fate is in store for our home-made oligarchy, if it strives to oppose the large volume of democratic feeling in the country. We, therefore, say and say it with emphasis that the time has now come when the members of the All-India Congress Committee should rise above the intrigues and underhand methods of their surroundings and act like men of sense and judgment."

Gujaráti (16), 23rd Sept., Eng. cols.

*28. "It is not at all encouraging to notice that Sir Rabindranath should have lent even post facto any countenance to the proceedings that resulted in the illegal deposition of Babu Baikunthanath at a meeting which was illegally convened and the proceedings of which were altogether ultra vires and void......... Let the whole country decide for itself whether it is going to tolerate the growth of such a rowdy spirit inconsistent with the past traditions of India and even with the modern ways of thought and modern manners. If this state of things is to be allowed to grow, the future of India is already doomed......... For our part, as events have turned out, we feel that there is no other alternative than to change the venue of the Congress......... It is quite possible that Mrs. Annie Besant might decide to stand aloof in view of the serious split or differences that have accurred and thus cut the Gordian knot. In that event it would be possible to hold the next session of the Congress at Calcutta under the presidency of the Raja of Mahamudabad. Otherwise, the All-India Congress Committee will be bound under the constitution to transfer the 32nd session of the Congress from Calcutta to some other place, notwithstanding the gross misrepresentations and audacious insinuations in which ignorant scribes and thoughtless critics are indulging to exhilarate their benignant and patriotic souls."

Expected release of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali.
Akhbár-e-Islám (56), 22nd Sept.

29. The Akhbár-e-Islám regrets that Government have not yet passed an order declaring the release of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali. It expects that they will be released very soon. It then refers to an association started by the latter called the Anjuman-e-Khuddám-e-Ka'aba for the benefit of Hajis proceeding to Mecca and praises the efforts that he made in the direction of starting a big fund for the relief of poor Hajis before his internment under the Defence of India Act. The paper believes that the best way of doing him public honour on his release, which it regards as quite imminent, is to appoint him President of the coming All-India Moslem Educational Conference and hopes that efforts will soon be made in that direction by the various bodies connected with Moslem education in India.

Comments on the proposal to elect Mr. Mahomed Ali as president of the next session of the Moslem League.
Al-Amin (133), 7th Sept., Eng. cols.

30. "To the circular of the Secretary of the Moslem League, inviting proposals for the Presidentship of the forthcoming annual sessions there should be, there would be, but one answer—Mahomed Ali, than whom none has laboured and suffered greater in the cause of Moslem democracy. As a proof of our steadfast adherence to him, 'the Cub of the Lioness' of Chindwara must unanimously be nominated for the presidential chair of the League. Though men much lesser than him have had that honour, and it is not a great honour for Mahomed Ali, yet at this juncture any indifference to the man who taught us all that Islam stands for, would be nothing short of ingratitude. We have every reason to hope that the Leaguers, of curious composition though they are, will show themselves to be—Musalmans."

The Congress-League scheme of reforms should provide for representation of backward classes and minorities.

Mahrátta (5), 23rd Sept.

*31. "The Congress-League Scheme gives special representation to Muhammadans. And now we see an agitation going on for a similar representation to Non-Brahmans. .... It is undeniable that the perpetuation of communal differences is undesirable and that for some years at any rate the quality of the communal representatives of the 'backward' classes will be more or less below the mark. But as we have said above, it is now too late to press these considerations on the attention of our brothers of the 'lower' castes......... We appeal to our leaders to amplify the Congress-League scheme so far as the matter of representation is concerned. The joint scheme lays down that adequate provision should be made for the representation of important minorities by election. The Non-Brahman classes including the untouchables should be dealt with according to this provision regarding minorities.......... Further, the memorial which will be sent to Mr. Montagu should expressly embody this demand of communal representation for Non-Brahman Hindu sections of the Indian community as an integral part of the Congress-League Scheme.

Kesari (106), 18th Sept.; Dnyán Prakásh (36), 19th Sept.

32. So far as the bureaucracy is concerned even the non-Brahmins want Swarájya. The non-Brahmins want only that the interests of their communities should be protected. Brahmins are willing to consider not only sympathetically but also generously all such claims. Though it may be necessary for every community to look after its own interests, the anti-Brahmin character given to the movement by dividing Indians into Brahmins and non-Brahmins is malicious. The charge that Brahmins denied education to other communities and put them down is absolutely false. We doubt whether the four-fold system of caste was ever in force. Whatever that be, is not the situation changing under modern conditions? The position occupied by Brahmins is due to their education. Even Government nominates Brahmins as Councillors though it is under no obligation to do so. The other classes do not care so much for education as for their occupations. Though we do not approve of communal electorates, we do not wish to oppose them. Brahmins, however, will refuse all such concessions for themselves. Non-Brahmins should confer amongst themselves and submit schemes to Mr. Montagu. [The Dnyán Prakásh says:—We are for giving some special rights and concessions to the backward classes. At the same time there is a fear that these things might come in the way of national development. Mr. Gokhale's suggestion that elections should be first on a territorial basis and that supplementary elections should be held when important minorities have received less than their due share in general elections, may be adopted.]

Comments on the restrictions imposed on the liberty of speech of Mr. S. M. Paranjpe of Poona.

Gujaráti (16), 16th Sept.

33. It is surprising that the people do not raise any protest against the restrictions that are imposed by Government on the liberty of speech of individuals. Mr. S. M. Paranjpe of Poona has been prohibited from making any speech without obtaining the sanction of a District Magistrate. Government seem to be adepts in the art of possessing reasonable grounds which lead them to believe that particular speeches or writings are objectionable. If Mr. Paranjpe has really done anything that would endanger public peace, why do not Government prosecute him? How can other innocent persons be kept from doing similar acts since Government do not say what they have found objectionable in Mr. Paranjpe? It is presumed that Mr. Paranjpe has been guilty of objectionable conduct more than once. But had Government ever pointed out his mistake or had they given him an opportunity to improve himself?

Indians must agitate to get all political prisoners freed.

Mahrátta (5), 23rd Sept.

*34. "The release of the Irish Sinn Feiner rebels must hearten us to make earnest and persistent attempts to secure the freedom of our politicals to whom no graver crime than that of the Irish rebels can be brought home.......... Deny our Sinn Feiner, if you will, the freedom that his fellow idealist enjoys in another part of the self-same Empire. But deny him not the bread of the free man and the opportunity of the free man of learning to think in ways agreeable to the Spirit of the Times. Such a demand would not have been made, if the Irish Sinn Feiners had been treated in a different manner. But since they have been treated as they have been, it does not lie in the mouth of British statesman to decry any agiatation for the enlargement of our Sinn Feiner politicals as an agitation for 'the moon'. We appeal, then, to our leaders, with all the fervour at our command, to agitate vigorously for the grant of a general amnesty in regard to all our politicals, great and small, Sinn Feiners or Home Rulers, active rebels, conspirators, or suspects or merely fierce constitutional, agitators, self-exiled, transported, imprisoned, interned, externed or otherwise hampered in the exercise of their citizen rights."

Comments on the decision of the District Magistrate of Coimbatore in the Home Rule flag case.

Kesari (106), 18th Sept.

35. Commenting upon the Home Rule flag inquiry conducted by the District Magistrate of Coimbatore, the Kesari says:—The whole procedure is a farce. The District Magistrate is the head of the police of his District and his subordinate the District Superintendent of Police makes an affadavit before him and the District Magistrate issues orders on the strength of the affadavit. If any one complains that the order is unjust the District Magistrate becomes a Judicial officer and the District Superintendent of Police appears before him as a witness and supports his former statement. He treats the evidence of many non-Brahmin gentlemen as worthless and issues his former order as a judgment. If the Judicial and Executive Departments cannot be separated, as least the head of the police and the court inquiring into the orders passed by him should be separate.

Appeal to Jains to take part in the Swarájya movement.

Jain Mitra (79), 20th Sept.

36. One Vishwambhardas Gárgiya Jain writes to the Jain Mitra urging upon the Jain communal leaders the necessity of casting aside their indiffenence towards political movements in India and taking part in the agitation for Swarájya with a view to safeguarding the interests of the Jains and securing for them adequate communal representation in the enlarged Legislative Councils which India will get as a prelude to the grant of Self-government within the Empire.

Mr. Tilak's recent visit to Wái (Satára).

Moda Vritt (110), 17th Sept.; Vrittasar (129), 17th Sept.

37. Referring to the visit which Mr. Tilak was recently to pay to Wái (Sátára) the Moda Vritt says that wherever he goes he is given such a rousing welcome as even Kings might envy. It declares he has made every sacrifice for the country and suffered untold hardships in its cause, and exhorts people to show their appreciation of his services by becoming members of the Home Rule League. [The Vrittasar also writes in a similar strain and says that the proposed visit of Mr. Tilak, who is the uncrowned King of Maháráshtra, is being looked forward to with feelings of the utmost joy by all the people.]

The Muhammadan address to His Excellency the Viceroy at Karáchi should contain a demand for Home Rule.

New Times (7), 3rd Sept.

38. "A Muslim" writing to the New Times on the subject of Mussalmans and Home Rule remarks:—"Moslems regard the present time as a peculiar one and they can not let it slip without aggravating their own sufferings. This is why they joined the Hindus at Lucknow to lay the foundation stone of Home Rule for India. Mussalmans are a democratic people in politics; and in the democratic spirit of the age they see their own glorious past reflected. Home Rule for India, they regard as a shadow of a far reaching Divine thought, indicating the vast expanse of the evolution of Muslim peoples. The spirit of the Quran, the traditions of the prophet, and the historical evidence of their brilliant achievements, sufficiently support any reading of the present age in that light. Muslims, therefore, have decided to steadfastly advocate the Rule in India by Indians.......... The educated youth of Sind disapprove of the near-sighted policy of compromise and silence as un-Islamic as much as they condemn any policy of reaction. Let this be understood once for all, that, if this time again their wishes are set at naught and a demand for Home Rule is not made in the address to the Viceroy, in very clear terms and without reserve, the leaders should expect no sympathy and confidence from the educated."

Comments on a proposal that Muhammadans and Hindus should participate in each other's festivals.

Muslim Herald (145), 14th Sept.

39. The Muslim Herald refers to the letter of Mr. D. V. Deshmukh published in the Bombay Chronicle of the 8th September, in which the contributor referred to the Muhammadans having taken a part in the last Dasahra festival celebrated in Bombay under the auspices of the "Utsav Mandal", and urged the Hindus to participate in the celebration of the forthcoming Muharram, thereby making the observance of Hindu and Muhammadan festivals truly national. The paper confesses its ignorance of the names of those Mussalmans who are alleged by Mr. Deshmukh to have participated in the festival or of their motives for it, and while it professes a desire for Hindu-Muhammadan union, it alleges that it is possible in worldly but not in religious matters and doubting if the participants (if any) were true Mussalmans, inquires if any Hindu can really believe in what the Mussalman festivals and observances stand for, or any Moslem can conscientiously participate in the Ganpati festival and worship the idol. It refers to the alleged injury caused by Shivaji to the Muhammadan Empire in India, and holds that no self-respecting Muhammadan can take part in the newly organised festival for commemorating his deeds and if any Muhammadan does so for the sake of show he is either wanting in a sense of regard for his religion or is a Hindu in disguise of a Mussalman. It recalls to mind how Mr. B. G. Tilak had attempted by his speeches to dissuade the Hindus from participating in the celebration of the Muharram, and refers to the murder of Mussalmans in the mosques of Poona and to their places of worship being also defiled. The paper is curious to learn why so much attention is being bestowed on the Muhammadans in these days, and concludes by remarking that the next move of Mr. Tilak may be a request for acting as an Imam (one who leads the prayers) on the occasion of Friday prayers.

Reflections on the present political condition of Russia.

Gujarâti (16), 16th Sept.

40. Will Russia be able to organise itself and fight against Germany? Should Russia not be able to organise itself, how will the future of Europe and Asia be affected thereby? Germany will continue to create two parties in Russia and make them fight against each other as it is doing at present. The Finns, Poles and other races want to have their old kingdoms re-established. Thus it is not possible to have peace in the internal affairs of Russia. Should Russia fall to pieces the peace for which the present war is being waged will not be secured for a generation or two. Rival nations will grab at Russian territory and fight among themselves. What will be the fate of Asiatic Russia? The Russian peril will forever be removed from India. But there is sure to be fighting for the distribution of Asiatic Russia. Britain will naturally refuse to take the responsibility of additional territory, but it will certainly take care to see that no powerful nation comes close to the Indian frontiers, and so it will see the necessity of making India very strong. Russian credit has diminished and the scarcity of foodstuffs is being felt in Russia. The cultivators have taken possession of land belonging to the nobles, but they have not the means of cultivation. The secret of Russia announcing its intention of making peace without annexations or indemnities lies in this. Russia seems to be convinced that it will come to harm if the war is prolonged, and so it wishes for peace. Russia has secured democracy, but it has afforded an example of how democracy sometimes proves harmful to the people who secure it.

The Strike of Bombay Postmen.

Rást Goftár (30), 23rd Sept., Eng. cols.

*41. "The latest strike among the postmen of Bombay is a most serious affair. Unless it is promptly ended there may be a deadlock followed by disastrous effects. For the present we shall say nothing about the attitude of the authorities. But for a place like Bombay the dislocation of the postal system is nothing short of a calamity.. No matter what steps may be taken it will be impossible to cope with the huge accumulation of arrears. Who knows how many letters and others articles have been already lost? It is impossible to replace satisfactorily hundreds of trained men in a day or a week."

Sánj Vartamán (31), 19th Sept.; Hindusthán (20), 19th Sept.; Shri Venkateshwar (30), 20th Sept.; Akhbár-e-Islám (56), 21st Sept.

42. The official gradation list of the postal peons enables us to say that the salaries paid to these peons are so low that they would not suffice for their maintainance in ordinary times. How can the peons then maintain themselves on these salaries in the present times when prices have gone up so high? We are glad to see that the higher Postal authorities have given an assurance about dealing sympathetically with the postal peons. The officials should manifest their sympathy in considering the case of the peons to bring the strike to an early close. This is a matter of grave importance to the public who will have to suffer serious inconvinence. The strike will not be prolonged if the popular leaders use their influence to get the grievances of the postal peons redressed. [The Hindusthán is also of opinion that the salaries of the postal peons are quite inadequate. It is afraid that the temporary arrangements made by the Postal authorities will result in great inconvenience to the public. The Praja Mitra and Parsi suggests that an arbitration board should be appointed by Government to settle the dispute that has arisen between the postal peons and the Postal Department. The Shri Venkateshwar is of opinion that the Post Master General should have given careful consideration to the representation sent by the postal peons through their solicitors and should not have forced them to go on a strike. The Akhbár-e-Islam, while admitting that the salaries of the postal peons are extremely low, wishes that they had not gone on strike and had resumed work when they were assured by the Post Master General that their salaries would be enhanced.]

Gujaráti (16), 23rd Sept., Eng. cols.

*43. "There is an impression in some quarters that the war has enormously benefited India. It is an assertion that will not bear examination in its sweeping form. Particular sections of the population have no doubt profited, but large classes have immensely suffered.......... Living has become costly all round and we are not surprised that the postmen have felt the bitter pinch of high prices and scarcity. Their daily task is a very burdensome one. Since the introduction of cheap cards their duties have become tenfold more taxing than before. Mill-owners have seen the wisdom of increasing the wages of their operatives from the month of June. They, too, were face to face with a grave problem and we are glad to notice they have solved it wisely. The B. B. & C. I. Railway authorities continued to be obdurate for some time. But they, too, have had to yield to the inexorable demands of justice. There is no reason why the head of an important Government Department which makes a large profit on the Postal and Telegraphic Services should higgle and haggle, thus causing intolerable inconvenience to the public.......... We think the authorities ought to meet their servants, whose services are so very useful to the public at large, in a generous spirit. The devices that have been resorted to for minimising inconvenience to the public have proved an utter failure in the native town. The state of things at the principal post offices in the town is chaotic and fruitful of intolerable delays. Surely a Government Department ought to know better how to forestall and meet such deplorable contingencies. We have no desire to encourage unreasonable or extravagant demands on the part of the postmen who have gone on strike. But we feel satisfied that their grievances are, on the whole, genuine and call for immediate redress."

Sánj Vartamán (31), 24th Sept.; Prája Mitra and Pársi (28), 24th Sept., Eng. cols.; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 25th Sept.

44. Expressing strong resentment at the unsatisfactory arrangements made by the Postal authorities for the delivery of letters, the Sánj Vartamán writes :—The mercantile houses in the Fort are, as far as possible, punctually served by the Post Office; but in the city itself the arrangements made for the delivery of the post are utterly unsatisfactory. The means adopted are extremely objectionable. Private letters pass into the hands of strangers. The Post Office has no right to put anyone's letters in the hands of strangers. There is great danger of private letters being put to wrong uses. Great dissatisfaction has been created by this method of delivering letters. We emphatically appeal to the authorities to stop this method of delivery at once. People are so dissatisfied that they would rather have their letters remain undelivered than see them heaped up in streets and handled by hundreds of passers-by. [The Prája Mitra and Pársi writes :—" With the strike of the postmen Bombay Island has been cut off from the mainland of India. Where is the postal system of which we heard so much in praise? Where are our letters, what about the postage paid for letters which have not been delivered and will never be delivered?......... The mails of Government will be always in order, whatever may be the extent of the strike. Otherwise, if Government were in the same position as the public, the strike would have ended by this time." The Jám-e-Jamshed writes :—In this struggle between the postmen and Government, the mercantile world and the ordinary public have to bear intolerable inconveniences. Perhaps it costs Government about Rs. 10,000 per day to bring the obstinate postmen round, but it involves a loss of lakhs of rupees every day to the public.]

Comments on the Poona District Magistrate's notification about the Poona Ganapati festival.
Kesari (106), 18th Sept.

45. The reader might remember our criticism of the Ganapati notification issued by the District Magistrate last year and the ridiculous and vexatious words contained in it. We are glad to note that the District Magistrate, Mr. Westropp, has tried hard to remove these defects this year. Officials as well as the people know the real object of the prohibitions contained in the notification. But as the officials have no courage to clearly state their intentions, they have to make the prohibitions needlessly comprehensive. They are willing to wound but afraid to strike. The District Magistrate has this year revised the notification and says that "cheering any others but gods" and "exhibition of pictures and photos of men except saints and gods" are prohibited. People will understand the real meaning of these words. Rules regarding previous notices of lectures stand in need of revision. But the District Magistrate has personally told the Secretary of the Ganapati festival that he would be generally sympathetic towards the festival and we thank him for it.

Alleged deficiency of police protection in Dhárwár City.
Loka Bandhu (84), 16th Sept.

46. The house of Dharmanna Doddumani was broken into on the 13th instant at night, at Dhárwár, and ornaments worn by his wife were forcibly removed. Dharmanna is much injured. Information was given at the police station in the city, but as the (Police) office is far from the city the police could not come just then; police officials came next morning and began the investigation. They arrested two men on suspicion and all the property has been found. The city is not properly guarded as it was before. We think the police would do well to open a Branch office in the city.

Comments on the progress of the co-operative movement in the Bombay Presidency.
Bombay Samáchár (59), 20th and 21st Sept.; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 20th Sept.

47. The Bombay Samáchár remarks that the principal object underlying all branches of the co-operative movement should be to collect people to consider their wants and to train them to remedy these wants without the help of officials. It, therefore, congratulates the Government of Lord Willingdon on their not putting into execution, as yet, the rules that have been drafted in connection with co-operative societies, which the paper thinks are calculated to defeat the abovesaid object. It admits that Government have thus far rendered valuable help in the development of the co-operative movement, but it considers it to be undesirable that Government control over co-operative bodies should increase. It then refers to the working of the Irish Agricultural Organisation Society and observes that if official control over co-operative societies in this Presidency is gradually removed it will not only help their satisfactory development and attract educated men to participate enthusiastically in their work, but will also encourage the various societies at different centres to work in concert and thereby facilitate progress. [In the subsequent issue the paper remarks that the speech delivered by His Excellency Lord Willingdon at Poona on Tuesday the 18th instant as President of the Bombay Provincial Co-operative Conference was one befitting a liberal statesman. It joins with His Excellency in expressing satisfaction at the step of holding the Conference this year, which bids fair to produce beneficent results during the continuance of the war as well as after its termination. The paper believes that since the movement has received the support of Government great advantages will accrue therefrom both to Government as well as the people. Though it is not against maintaining due Government supervision and control over the accounts, etc., of co-operative societies from considerations, among others, of preserving their prestige, it would prefer that this task of the preservation of their prestige may be committed to the care of public leaders. The Jám-e-Jamshed rejoices at the large measure of sympathy for the movement His Excellency expressed in his speech. It thoroughly approves of his suggestion to extend the scope of the movement so as to make it embrace agricultural as well as other industries. Referring to His Excellency's observations with regard to the development of the co-operative housing movement, the paper, while strongly recognising the efficacy of co-operation in the matter of providing poor people with sanitary and convenient houses, expresses the belief that as long as Government do not extend substantial pecuniary help to such co-operative enterprises they are not likely to make a sufficiently rapid progress.]

Khots in Kolába should refuse to sign the new kabulayats.
Kesari (106), 18th Sept.

48. A Khot complains in the Kesari of the new kabulayats introduced in the Kolába District and quotes conditions from a kabulayat taken from a khot in the Roha Taluka and says:—I wish to ask a few questions to those who sign the kabulayats. If you are the owners, why do you sign kabulayats containing adverse conditions? By what law can you be obliged to sign them? What kind of owners are you. if your mortgagors require the sanction of the Collector? These kabulayats are minimising the rights of khots and they should be rejected while yet the rights of ownership of khots are recognised.

Alleged need of improving the pay and prospects of Mukhtiarkars in Sind.
Sind Journal (10), 13th Sept.

49. "The meagre pay and prospects of the Mukhtiarkars in Sind, specially the Hindu Mukhtiarkars, calls for immediate and sympathethic consideration by the Government of Bombay......... The cost of living has increased considerably since the year 1905 and in order to enable the mamlatdars or mukhtiarkars to live decently and honestly, it is imperatively necessary that the scale of their pay should be revised...... This is specially applicable to the case of Hindu Mukhtiarkars who are threathened to be almost debarred from becoming Deputy Collectors during the regime of the present Comissioner in Sind. The filling of some recent vacancies in the ranks of Deputy Collectors has caused an impression on the public mind that the claims of Hindu mukhtiarkars to the post of Deputy Collector are sacrificed to racial considerations......... The policy which has hitherto been pursued by the Honourable Mr. Lawrence cannot conduce to the efficiency of the service, as no really competent Hindu would be induced to enter the Revenue Department. Besides, the disheartned officials cannot be expected to put forth their best efforts and the bitterest critics of Government are their own discontented officials.......... Under these circumstances we can only look up to the Bombay Government to exercise more vigilance and see to it that the claims of Hindu mukhtiarkars to Deputy Collectorships are not ignored."

EDUCATION.

*Comments on the personnel of the Calcutta University Commission.
Young India (14), 19th Sept.

50. "'Expert' service such as the Government of India have secured for the Calcutta University may after all end in the experts doing the greatest harm to the cause of University Education. With the memories of Lord Curzon's University Commission still fresh in our minds we cannot but view the undue preponderance of the European element with a grave sense of misgiving.......... In the case of the Calcutta University Commission, what is proposed now is, though not ostensibly, that it should override Indian opinion. The only two Indians—Sir Ashutosh Mukerjee and Dr. Zia-ud-din Ahmed—are both great educationists, it is true; but we fail to understand what useful purpose they are expected to serve against a strong majority of the European element. It was understandable if the Government of India had appointed a Commission of this type to inquire into the educational system of England with a view to assimilate the wonderful experiences, of Indian education. But the Commission is essentially for the purpose of investigating the problems of the Calcutta University and it seems quite clear from its one-sided personnel that reaction is once more in the ascendant in university education."

MUNICIPALITIES.

Protest against the house-tax imposed by the Karjat (Kolába) Notified Area Committee.
Kesari (106), 18th Sept.

51. In answer to an interpellation based on a note of ours published in the Kesari dated 19th June 1917, on the Notified Area Committee of Karjat (Kolába), the answer was given that our sentiments were baseless. This is an instance showing how the officials dare to give replies without consideration. Government said that they had no information whether the house-tax at Karjat exceeded that imposed in any other part of the Bombay Presidency. Why should Government have no information? If they did not have it, where was the difficulty to say that the information would be obtained? Though Government have not got the information we have it and we say that Government should either admit our statement that the house-tax imposed by the Karjat Committee is the heaviest in the Presidency, or should authoritatively rebut it. The Notified Area Committee should be either abolished or the house-tax revised by the Collector of Kolába. Otherwise it is open to those who have to pay the house-tax to resort to passive resistance.

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 28th September 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 39 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 29th September 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British rule:

Alleged harassment of Muhammadans by Hindus at Jubbulpore, Central Provinces 23
Alleged hollowness of Hindu-Muhammadan unity 22
Alleged neglect of duty by Government officers on the occasion of the recent fatality on the Narmada near Broach 19
Appeal to Government for the release of Mr. Shaikh Abdul Majid, the interned editor of the Al-Amin 24
Appeal to Government to release all political prisoners . . . . 12 & 13
Comments on the Anglo-Indian agitation against the release of Mrs. Besant . . . . 10 & 11
Comments on the Bombay Government Press Note rescinding orders served on Mrs. Besant and others under the Defence of India Act. 14
Comments on the suicide of a Bengali detenu 20
Communal representation for non-Brahmins in the Legislative Councils 21
Complaint that purchasers of War Loan Bonds in the mofussil are required to come down to the General Post Office, Bombay, to receive them 28
Mrs. Besant and the Indian National Congress . . . . 17 & 18
Release of Mrs. Besant . . . . 15 & 16
The internment of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali . . . . 25—27

Imperial Legislative Council:

Comments on the resolutions in the — regarding Indian element in the personnel of the I. C. S. . . . . 5—9
Comments on the speeches of His Excellency the Viceroy and Sir M. O'Dwyer in the — . . . . 1—4
Judicial matters: Comments on the Government Resolution on the administration of jails in the Bombay Presidency 32
Police: Suggestion that all Mangs in the Sátára District should be freed from — surveillance 33
Postal Department: The strike of Bombay postmen . . . . 34—39

Public Service:

Approval of the appointment of the Committee to consider the question of high prices allowance to low paid Government servants 40
Complaint about paucity of Muhammadans in the — of the Bombay Presidency 42
Hindu Government servants should be granted some more sectional holidays 41

H 283—a CON

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION,—concluded.

Sind :

The evils of Rasai in — 44
The — Muhammadans' address of welcome to His Excellency Lord Chelmsford 43

War :

Commissions in the Indian Army for Indians 29
How to solve the question of recruitment 30
Subjects of Native States should be allowed to join the University Corps 31

EDUCATION—

Comments on the expulsion of a student from the Dhárwár Mission School for writing a poem on Mrs. Besant 45
Students and parents should take vigorous measures to get "Student Circular" cancelled 46
The problem of Muhammadan education in Sind and alleged neglect of it by the authorities 47

MUNICIPALITIES—

Karáchi : Alleged grossly insanitary condition in — (Sind) 48
Rohri : Comments on the official attempts to introduce house-tax in Lárkána and — (Sind) 49

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Comments on the speeches of His Excellency the Viceroy and Sir M. O'Dwyer in the Imperial Council.

Young India (14), 26th Sept.

1. "In his speech, His Excellency the Viceroy tried to pour oil over the troubled waters of the Council. The effect of the Viceroy's pronouncement would have been greater, if in his desire for strict impartiality, he had equally censured the conduct of Mr. Lowndes in the chair. That conduct was, to say the least, extremely unsatisfactory and judged in the light of His Excellency's remarks on Sir Michael's feat, was thoroughly unbecoming on the part of one whose love and admiration for the English tradition of public conduct should be less tainted by the corroding influences of Anglo-Indian tradition.......... It would have certainly been in the fitness of things if Mr. Lowndes, too, had been allowed to make a personal statement and express regret for his conduct in the chair. Such an explanation would have helped to remove misunderstanding and restore the lost confidence of the Honourable members in the ability and sense of impartiality of their Vice-President. It was all the more necessary that such an opportunity should have been taken since under the present constitution of the Council and the existing rules for the conduct of business, the members have absolutely no voice over the appointment of their President or Vice-President and cannot, therefore, easily make their sense of displeasure and disapprobation felt."

Gujaráti (16), 30th Sept., Eng. cols.

*2. "We are sorry His Excellency the Viceroy in his closing speech somewhat went out of his way to re-open the O'Dwyer incident by showering praises upon the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab which he scarcely deserved. His Excellency's appeal to the Councillors to accept Sir Michael's explanation coupled with an expression of regret on his part induced them not to reply to his offensive strictures. .... The public outside followed the example of the Indian Councillors who had refrained from replying in response to His Excellency's wish. We have already commented at length upon the incident and do not desire to traverse the same ground. But His Excellency forgot to bear in mind that if Sir Michael had not done what he was in fairness bound to do, there would have been held meetings throughout the country to protest against his offensive strictures just as meetings had been held to protest against Lord Pentland's famous speech.......... As the incident had been closed already, it is a pity that the Viceroy referred to it again with a view to bestow high encomiums on Sir Michael and read an implied sermon to the Councillors who, too, had acted according to 'the highest standard of mutual dealing among men engaged in public affairs'."

Bombay Samáchár (59), 29th Sept.

3. Referring to His Excellency the Viceroy's closing speech at the last session of the Imperial Legislative Council, the Bombay Samáchár wishes that the whole country may respond to the appeal made by him to bring about a calm atmosphere and to concentrate attention on tackling the main problem of political reform to be introduced in India. It remarks that since Government have contributed their share in a practical manner towards the creation of such an atmosphere by means of their recent liberal actions, it now remains for all classes and parties from among the subjects to make a similar contribution. It admonishes all the communities in India to follow the advice of the Viceroy to sink all party differences at the present juncture and to work for the good of the State. The paper regrets the splenetic outburst of the Anglo-Indian opponents of Indian reforms against the sympathetic and liberal policy declared by Government. It asks the Indians not to lose their balance of mind but to behave in such a manner as would convince the Secretary of State for India that they do not mean to press for a scheme of reforms which is based on injustice to any other community.

Indu Prakásh (39), 28th Sept.

4. His Excellency the Viceroy while winding up the debate at the last Legislative Council meeting exhorted his hearers to be moderate and constitutional in their criticisms and movements. His Excellency's advice is well meant and our people will no doubt follow it. But what about the hostility of the Anglo-Indians? Can the antics of the Madras Mail and the Anglo-Indians who held a public meeting at Calcutta the other day be called constitutional? We are constrained to say that if there is any irresponsible criticism by our people it is provoked by the Anglo-Indians themselves.

Comments on the resolutions in the Imperial Legilative Council regarding Indian element in the personnel of the I. C. S.

* Mahrátta (5), 30th Sept.; Young India (14), 26th Sept.

5. "As the Honourable Mr. Sarma pointed out the 'British minimum' doctrine comes to this, that the Indians must agree to be governed by inferior Englishmen because they are Englishmen. This is a most humiliating position and the words with which the Honourable Pandit Malaviya closed his argument on the subject bear witness to the rankling sense of humiliation present in the heart of every Indian. The Pandit exclaimed: 'Do not take advantage of the fact that by our weakness and your strength you are in this country. For God's sake play up.' The appeal which is embodied in these words will not, we are afraid, move the 'practical' John Bull. The 'practical' man is never supposed to do anything for 'God's sake'......... We must expect the British to take what advantage they can of 'their strength and our weakness'. They will not 'play up,' simply because we ask them to play up in the name of God. If we want them to play up, we must build up, how we can, such a strength in the place of our weakness, as will touch the 'practical' instinct of the Britisher and make the granting us of our rights not only a matter of justice and fairness (i.e. one of doing homage to God), but a matter of political expediency......... The resolution of Pandit Malaviya was lost, 34 voting against and 20 voting for it......... The official majority in the Supreme Council has proved a great asset to Government. For were it not for this majority, Government could not have kept on the bar sinister in the face of emphatic and pronounced public opinion in India against the continuance of such a bar. The Pandit reminded the authorities of the recent announcement which declares Self-government to be the goal of British Rule in India and urged that the question of the services ought to be examined from the standpoint of this declared goal. But all this and other such argument is bound to fail, as we have said above, so long as it is not backed up by strength of the kind easily appreciated by 'practical' men. In the absence of such strength, or rather the absence of the manifestation of it, though the success in argument may be on our side, the success in result is bound to be on the side of the authorities!" [Young India writes:—"Notwithstanding Sir William's profuse protestations of sympathy for the object of the resolution, we are inclined to believe that it connotes very little at the end. The frame of mind displayed by the bureaucracy and its watchdogs further strengthens the case for a more vigorous agitation in this country as well as in England whether Mr. Montagu visits this country or not."]

Indian Social Reformer (3), 30th Sept.

*6. "Sir William Vincent, the Home Member of the Government of India, in opposing a resolution moved by the Honourable Pandit Madán Mohan Malaviya to the effect that not less than one-half of the total number of the posts included in the cadre of the Indian Civil Service should be thrown open to Indians, mentioned among the points to be remembered in deciding the proportion of Indians in that service that, unlike in countries like Japan and China, British capital had been sunk in India on the distinct understanding that the administration in India would be British in character, though, he added, not in personnel. The implication, notwithstanding the last qualification, is that the British character of Government can be maintained only by a preponderance of Englishmen in the Service, and indeed, the Public Services Commission, in defiance of Parliamentary statute and Queen's Proclamation, has laid this down in so many words......... We are unable to find any Act, Proclamation or other instrument in which it is laid down that the fact of the investment of British capital in India should influence the King-in-Parliament in determining the character or personnel of the Government of India.......... Except Lord Curzon, who once claimed that the Government of India and the European commercial community were jointly engaged in exploiting India, no responsible British statesman has ever entered into any such undertaking as that asserted by Sir William Vincent. It is obvious that if such an understanding was not found necessary in the case of Japan, China and the Native States, it could not have been and can never be necessary in the case of British India. And what is the British character of the administration? Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, whose singleness of purpose and purity of motive are now acknowledged by all, called his book 'Poverty and Un-British Rule in India'. His writings and speeches had only one object, and that was to prove that the British character of the Government of India, as defined by Queen and Parliament and responsible British statesmen, has been and was being widely departed from to the detriment both of the British and the Indian people.......... The Indian leaders are most anxious that the British character of Government should be maintained, but what they mean by the phrase is the sum of the pledges and promises made by the people and Parliament, and not the interests of those who have invested money in India. These men are entitled to a fair interest on their loans and a fair profit on their investments, but to nothing more. As citizens they have equal rights with every other class of His Majesty's subjects."

Sánj Vartamán (31), 22nd Sept.; Hindusthán (20), 24th Sept.

7. The Sánj Vartamán observes that the fate which the Honourable Mr. Malaviya's resolution about holding simultaneous Civil Service Examinations in India and England has met with in the Imperial Legislative Council will fill the Indians with regret. Referring to the proposed change in the present system according to which this examination is held only in England, the paper remarks:—Law, justice and expediency are all in favour of this change. The public have clamoured for it for upwards of 50 years, but hitherto their clamour has not produced any effect. Any delay made in bringing about that change can no longer be defended for a moment. The question is one affecting the glory and prestige of the British people. [The Hindusthán maintains that the resolution brought by the Honourable Mr. Malaviya was an opportunity given to the Government of India to satisfy the enthusiasm newly awakened among the people, to redeem promises made in the past by Parliament and contained in Royal Proclamations and to ward off the recommendation made by the last Public Services Commission in this behalf, but that the Government of India have, as usual, done nothing beyond expressing their barren "sympathy" towards the question. It regards the grounds on which Government opposed the resolution as imaginary. It writes:—The Honourable Pundit Malaviya's resolution has been defeated because of the official majority. We are sorry for it, but we still feel certain that the time has now drawn very near for the realisation of our hopes and aspirations, and though this resolution has been defeated at present the demands of new India will have to be granted.]

Bombay Samáchár (59), 24th Sept.; Hindusthán (20), 22nd Sept.

8. Commenting upon the resolution brought by the Honourable Mr. Sarma in the Imperial Legislative Council urging Government not to accept the recommendations of the majority of the Public Service Commissioners about maintaining a preponderating proportion of British officers in the higher ranks of the Indian Civil Service and the Police, the Bombay Samachár remarks that, regard being had to the stage which the agitation for Swarájya and public opinion have reached in this country, the arguments that have been advanced against the resolution are untenable. It observes that in view of the present condition of India it would not at all be commensurate with the requirements of the times if the Indians were to be continued, with some slight alteration, in the same condition in which they were 75 years ago, as far as higher public offices are concerned. The paper maintains that the apprehension entertained by Sir Hugh Bray and men of his type about the interests of the European community being endangered as a result of Government giving high positions to Indians in larger numbers is unfounded. It hopes that the Government of India will tackle this question in a manner satisfactory to the public when they settle other questions in consultation with Mr. Montagu. [The Hindusthán also supports the Honourable Mr. Sarma's resolution and remarks that if Indians are to be given their birthright everybody will concede that their demands, which have been neglected for the last 80 years, should now be satisfied. It believes that the opposition led by the Honourable Sir Hugh Bray was not of a dignified nature and that he was over-enthusiastic in the matter of safeguarding the interests of his community. The paper urges that in view of the strong disapproval the people have evinced against the recommendations of the Public Services Commission it is necessary for Government to give careful and mature consideration before carrying them into effect.]

Young India (14), 26th Sept.

9. Mr. L. G. Khare writes :—"'We may be numerically weak, but our stake in the country is enormous', says Sir Hugh Bray. Mr. Beatson Bell who, as a member of the Service, should be expected to know better, vaunts the fact that he and his forefathers have put in about a hundred years of service in this land and that the Englishman in India cannot be said to be a Bird of Passage.......... Now it will be aboundantly clear to any sensible reader of Indian history, that this ancient land has welcomed from time immemorial any race of men willing to eat of its salt.......... The English factor came and settled and his grandchildren now boast that they conquered India by a series of accidents. It is a step further in political charlatanism to say that they are of 'the people,' when the people do not forget and are not likely to forget that something like the 'Exchange Compensation allowance' exists in this land.......... They say in the Legislative Councils of this country that they are our fellow-subjects, they act in practice as if we Indians were subjects to each person with a European skin who can lord it over us. And then they are angry when we say that they are 'birds of passage'......... The argument will not 'wash down', it has always to be enforced with the threat that those who call them birds of passage are 'fellows that talk sedition.' The whole outlook of the English official in India is the outlook of a man who is conscientious enough to notice that he must make the best of a bad job; the immediate outlook of the English merchant in India is the perpetuation of privileges which he had associated with his skin, of ultimate outlook he has none. He does not understand it except in the sense that 'these fellows must be kept under'."

Comments on the Anglo-Indian agitation against the release of Mrs. Besant.

Young India (14), 26th Sept.; Indu Prakásh (39), 28th Sept., Eng. cols.

10. "A generration ago, a handful of Anglo-Indian firebrands could manufacture an agitation of a magnitude that was enough to scare away the wits of one of the best Viceroys India has had. But a generation of political education and agitation has taught Government and the people to appraise the bluff of Anglo-Indianism at its true value. Mr. Welby may cry himself hoarse; the European Associations may go mad over the advancing tide of Indian Nationalism; the vested interests may do their utmost to run counter to the aspirations of the Indian people. All these and more things may hapen; but they cannot deflect the course of Indian Nationalism by so much as a hair's breadth. Truly, has the present been regarded as the parting of the ways. In the titanic world struggle which has been in progress during the past three years, the issue is between the forces of reaction and progress. If it is true that Kaiserism is dead in Europe (pace the Russian Revolution), bureaucratic bahadurism cannot long survive in India, however powerfully it may be propped up for the time being. Any attempt, such as the worthy editor of our Madras contemporary has taken on himself, we suspect, at the instigation of forces behind the curtain, is bound to fail." [The Indu Prakásh remarks :—"We are not opposed to any community trying to defend their interests. There should be justice for every community. But why so much thunder and fury? The Government have no easy task before them. They will have to face vituperations and threats in satisfying even most moderate and reasonable Indian aspirations. It would be real 'weakness' to yield to the threats of extreme reactionaries."]

Sánj Vartamán (31), 28th Sept.; Prája Mitra and Pársi (28), 28th and 29th Sept.

11. It seems that Europeans and Anglo-Indians have been greatly alarmed at the prospect of Indians getting the political reforms they have been demanding from Government. They had created similar agitation at the time of the Ilbert Bill, and we fell sure that their present agitation will not create any impression on the Indian mind. The Indians will be confirmed in their opinion that the Anglo-Indians are opposed to giving political reforms to India and they will, therefore, lose all their respect for them. The speeches made at the Calcutta meeting will not in the least redound to the credit of Britain. The agitation of the European Association is directed not so much against Mrs. Besant as against Mr. Montagu and the policy of reform which he is going to introduce in India. The agitation that is being engineered by the Association convinces us that our movement for political reforms is just and proper and it stimulates us to persevere in our demands till we achieve success. [The Praja Mitra and Pársi is of opinion that the speeches made at the meeting were highly inflammatory and such as would bring Government into contempt, besides setting class against class. It asks Government to take strong measures so that such speeches may not be made again. In the subsequent issue the paper tries to show the hollowness of many of the arguments advanced at the meeting against giving political rights to Indians and opines that the alarmist view taken at the meeting is due to the ignorance of the Association about Indian aspirations. It suggests that Europeans in India should identify themselves with Indians and ask for special electorates in the Legislative Councils for safeguarding their own interests.]

Appeal to Government to release all political prisoners.
Message (6), 27th Sept.

12. "We think it is not inappropriate to appeal once more to the finer instincts of Government to grant a general amnesty to all the political prisoners and the hundreds of detenues who have been unjustly subjected to needless sufferings and harsh treatment. The case of suicide reported from Calcutta of one of the young detenues under somewhat startling circumstances emphasises the need of an immediate exercise of clemency and political foresight and statesmanship on the part of the Government of India.......... We cannot believe that all those or the large majority of those who are at present subjected to unjust suffering are criminally intentioned. Even assuming they were, the exercise of spontaneous clemency followed by instructions to the enthusiastic and zealous agents of the Criminal Investigation Department to refain from any sort of unnecessary interference will produce on the minds of the released a tremendous reaction in favour of those who show the clemency. The Government of India have the Irish precedent before them and should not in the least hesitate for a moment to take this step of a far-reaching character."

Young India (14), 26th Sept.

13. "We fully recognise the difficulties which confront Government and the stubborn opposition of the reactionary Anlgo-Indian elements is by no means the least among them. But it is the imperative duty of a good Government to override the narrow-minded opposition of an insignificant minority, particularly where the larger interests of the Empire are at take. We hope the Government of India will show sufficient promptitude, by rising above their stunting environments and granting a general amnesty to all political prisoners and detenues in this country. This is one of the first steps towards the attainment of the great goal which Government have now definitely set to itself."

Comments on the Bombay Government Press Note rescinding orders served on Mrs. Besant and others under the Defence of India Act.

Bombay Samáchár (59), 27th Sept.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 26th Sept.; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 25th Sept.; Akhbár-e-Islám (56), 27th Sept.; Message (6), 25th Sept.; Sandesh (118), 25th Sept.

14. Referring to the Press note issued by the Bombay Government rescinding their previous orders against Mrs. Annie Besant, Mr. Paranjpye and others under the Defence of India Act, the Bombay Samáchár remarks that the liberality thus shown by the Bombay Government is highly seasonable and observes that the public will not fail to thank Government cordially for this measure of theirs. It regards this action of the local Government as a practical step in the liberal and sympathetic policy initiated by the Secretary of State for India and the Indian Government. The paper, however, remarks that the joy created by the cancellation of the internment and other prohibitory orders against individuals is likely to be of an imperfect character until either the Act under which those orders were issued is repealed or suitable alterations are made in it after mutual co-operation between public leaders and the authorities. It maintains that the above-mentioned release and other orders recently issued by Government and the experience obtained by the latter of the working of the Defence of India Act, which has tended to prolong agitation and create public confusion, demonstrate that the time has now arrived for divesting the Executive of the authority of taking action under the Act, independently of any extraneous control. [The Praja Mitra and Pársi also commends the action of the Bombay Government in rescinding their former orders against Mrs. Besant and others. It remarks that this action is in keeping with the principles of the Liberal party to which Lord Willingdon belongs and it is for this reason that he has, at the earliest opportunity, taken the advantage of the changed policy of the Imperial Government in the matter of the working of the Defence of India Act. The paper wishes that other Provincial Governments will also similarly help in the creation of a "calm atmosphere" which is a thing desired at present by the Imperial Government. The Jám-e-Jamshed thanks the local Government for their present liberal action. It also advises the Indian leaders to bring about a wholesome change in their methods of political agitation in a corresponding manner and convince Government that the Indians are willing to co-operate with Mr. Montagu in the work that he is going to do in India. The Akhbár-e-Islám characterises the present cancellation by the Bombay Government of their former orders under the Defence of India Act as a piece of commendable farsightedness. The Message writes :—"All these acts are certainly gratifying, as the successful outcome of public agitation carried on vigorously, none the less very constitutionally, and we offer our sincere congratulations to His Excellency for the readiness with which he has undone a disagreeable policy that was forced on him from above." The Sandesh congratulates Lord Willindon on cancelling some orders issued a few days ago about Mrs. Besant and others under the Defence of India Act. It says that His Excellency has conducted the administration in accordance with his 'Liberal' spirit. It holds that His Excellency's remarks against Home Rule in a Town Hall meeting held recently were not his own but that they were in accordance with the Home Rule circular issued by the Government of India. Though some acts of Lord Willingdon have caused dissatisfaction he is not to be blamed as an individual for them. It is the settled policy of administration that is responsible for it.]

Release of Mrs. Besant. Kesari (106), 25th Sept.

*15. At last Mrs. Besant has been released. The Madras Government were holding out but the view of the Imperial Government seems to have prevailed. It is necessary to congratulate the Indian public on having won a victory in this contest. This three months' war will be ever memorable in the history of Indian national movements inasmuch as on one side were ranged all the weapons of official authority while on the other side stood the people—altogether helpless and without support. And yet the popular party floored its adversaries by reason of its mental strength. The condition of imprisonment of Mrs. Besant was as a matter of fact not irksome. But there was so much agitation because the British Government is a civilised one. How can we judge things by the Russian standard, under British rule? The victory won by the Indian people is also due to the British policy. No other Government would have allowed this agitation or listened to it. The release of Mrs. Besant shows that British statesmanship is still living. Though the action taken against Mrs. Besant was against an individual, it also involved the liberties of the nation. There was a great agitation also because the Madras Government meant to strike at the Home Rule movement through Mrs. Besant. Why did Government intern Mrs. Besant three months ago and why do they release her now? Government cannot satisfactorily answer this question. Everything was done in a fickle manner. But it is better to be charged with unsteadiness than with obstinacy. No doubt the Governor of Madras is lowered in the public estimation but he himself is responsible for it. Lord Willingdon also could have interned some persons but he did not adopt such an unwise course. Some Anglo-Indian papers are adding fuel to the fire and suggesting the resignation of Lord Pentland. Lord Pentland should not resign; he will make himself only ridiculous. But if he does the world will not be lost. It will mean only that the public opinion has removed a Governor from his place and constitutional agitation will be strengthened and it will feel self-confident.

Dnyán Prakásh (36), 27th Sept.; Subodh Patrika (42), 23rd Sept.

16. It would have been much better if Government had been magnanimous enough to declare that they released Mrs. Besant to mark the close of the repressive policy, instead of taking shelter behind the plea that they took the step on receipt of assurances about her future conduct from influential sources. Though they have done so for the sake of their prestige their action in releasing her will not fail to give general satisfaction. The circumstances attendant on the release of Mrs. Besant and that of the Irish leader Parnell from prison in days gone by differ in this that whereas the British Government of that time released the Irish leader first and then endeavoured to secure his co-operation, in India the leaders were released after Government had satisfied themselves that they would secure their co-operation. Thus even in doing this act of bare justice Government have put a taint upon it. Of course Mrs. Besant's assurance does not in any way modify her attitude. She would have endeavoured to obtain a calm atmosphere during Mr. Montagu's visit even without any assurance. We are constrained to say, therefore, that the demand for such an assurance detracts from the newly inaugurated liberal policy of Government. [The Subodh Patrika writes:—Popular opinion has triumphed at last and Government have released Mrs. Besant and her co-workers unconditionally. We are sure this step will enhance the prestige of Government. At the same time we hold that it was never necessary to intern Mrs. Besant. The Government of Madras has indirectly helped forward the cause which she advocated by interning her. On the other hand her admonition to her followers after her release to be sober in their comments implies an admission that at times their comments have been far from sober.]

Mrs. Besant and the Indian National Congress.
Indu Prakásh (39), 28th Sept., Eng. cols.; Dnyánodaya (35), 20th Sept.

17. Referring to the pledge reported to have been given by Mrs. Besant that she will co-operate in obtaining a calm atmosphere for Mr. Montagu's visit, the Indu Prakásh says:—"We think that as an earnest of this pledge, she should allay the bitterness of feeling that has been aroused here and elsewhere over her proposed Presidentship of the Congress by promptly announcing, in a spirit of self-abnegation, that she declines to preside over the ensuing Congress even if the All-India Congress Committee were, by a majority, inclined to elect her.......... Whatever decision may be arrived at by Moderates elsewhere, we feel almost certain that the large body of Moderates in the Bombay Presidency will decline to have anything to do with a Congress presided over by Mrs. Besant. She is the real author of that spirit of hatred of the veterans of the Congress which is manifesting itself in the different parts of the country. She it was who invented the hateful phraseology of "yesterdays" and "tomorrows" and from day to day and week to week poisoned the minds of the readers of New India and Commonweal by her envenomed attacks on those who had striven and struggled all these years to build up the reputation and prestige of the Congress. The reprehensible rowdyism and subsequent happenings in connection with the Reception Committee at Calcutta are the result of that gospel of hate, referred to above, which she has sedulously inculcated since 1915. It is in her hands, if she is so minded to make amends for it now by a spiritual oblation. Will she do it?" [The Dnyánodaya declares that to elect Mrs. Besant as the President of the National Congress would be to act in deliberate opposition to Government and would be fatal to the interests of the country.]

Rást Goftár (30), 30th Sept., Eng. cols.

18. "Any compromise that will not necessitate a change of venue will be welcomed by the whole country. Mrs. Besant's election as president of the Congress is no longer open to the slightest doubts. There is no likelihood of a serious split in the Congress, because what really matters this year is the election of the President, and that election has been made by the whole country. If the All-India Congress Committee were to set aside that election it would cease to represent the country, but of that there is no fear."

Alleged neglect of duty by Government officers on the occasion of the recent fatality on the Narmada near Broach.

Hindusthán (20), 22nd Sept.

19. The Hindusthán publishes a letter from a correspondent wherein the writer, after referring to the drowning fatality that took place near Broach some time ago, entailing the loss of about one hundred lives, strongly complains against the alleged neglect of duty on the part of the District officials of Broach. He remarks that although the incident occurred at a spot so near the city that it could have been observed from the Customs House and the bungalows of Government officials of Broach not a single police officer, from constable upwards, turned up on the scene till it was 4-30 P.M., though the occurrence took place at 8 o'clock in the morning. He observes that the poor people of Broach cannot comprehend what may be the reason of such serious neglect. The correspondent draws the attention of Government to this matter with a view that they might inquire as to who were at fault in this connection. He also expresses his dissatisfaction at the alleged apathy of the Ankleshwar police officers who, on arriving at the spot, at once began to hold Panch proceedings without bestowing the least attention upon those who had escaped death, but who were in a condition requiring prompt relief. He further takes exception to the unsympathetic conduct of the Jamadar of Ankleshwar towards the relatives of those who were saved. He suggests that if Government medical men are not at present bound by law to proceed to the scene of such accidents, Government should make some such provision enforcing the presence of medical officers.

Comments on the suicide of a Bengali detenu.

Mahrátta (5), 30th Sept.

20. "The A. P. I. gives the following news:—Another detenu, Shachindra Chandra Das Gupta, a fourth-year student of the Ripon College and son of a pleader, Rampur, has committed suicide. Before committing suicide he wrote a letter to the District Magistrate bitterly complaining of the treatment of the police and another letter of complaint to the local C. I. D. officer. Suicides of internees and detenus are a grave reflection on the way in which the whole business of interning suspects mostly, we believe, on insufficient and interested information and providing for their comfort (or rather discomfort) is carried. The public has persistently asked for an advisory board to go into the evidence against the suspects and for arrangements which would render the lot of the interned somewhat bearable. But the authorities have treated the demands of the public with scant respect. The 'Defence of India' surely does not necessitate unconscionable persecution of the interned and detenus, such as ultimately results in suicide. The authorities, in thus causing, though unwittingly, the death of our brothers against whom no crime of a heinous nature has been proved, are helping in the spread of angry resentment of a violent character amongst the friends and relations of the unfortunate youths who commit suicide."

Communal representation for non-Brahmins in the Legislative Councils.

Jágruk (new), 21st Sept.; Kesari (106), 25th Sept.

21. Our Brahmin leaders take credit for liberality in conceding, in the proposed Congress-League Reform Scheme, a third of the Legislative Council seats to Muhammadans although their number is only a fifth of the total population of the Bombay Presidency. We fail to see where the liberality lies. In our opinion there is no liberality in allowing 33 seats to Muhammadans when the Brahmins were certain of monopolising the remaining 67 seats. Their sympathy for their own down-trodden co-religionists of the backward classes is well known! It is sometimes argued that in the matter of separate representation the education of a community has also to be taken into account. True, but why was not this principle observed in the case of the Muhammadans? The explanation is that the Brahmins had no other alternative but to accept their demands. In their zeal for fraternizing with the Muhammadans the Brahmins clean forgot the bonds uniting them to their non-Brahmin brethren! The demand for communal electorates is also deprecated on the ground that it will lead to disunion and thus strengthen the hands of Government. If the Brahmins are really anxious to emphasise their unity with the non-Brahmins they should endeavour to remove the causes which separate the two classes. It is foolish to suppose that Government will be taken in by our concealing our differences. The necessity for communal electorates is proved by the very fact that the Brahmins are opposed to it. The inclusion of the representatives of all the classes in the Legislative Councils is real swarájya and those who oppose their inclusion may be said to be its opponents. The principle of class representation is also opposed on the ground that it will lead, if accepted, to the demand by the smaller castes and sub-castes for separate representation. This fear is groundless. Government can rule that communities whose numbers are very small should either be omitted or formed into groups and elect their representatives. At any rate if this difficulty cannot satisfactorily be overcome it does not follow that the interests of the vast majority of the non-Brahmins should be entrusted to a handful of Brahmin leaders. [The Kesari observes :—It is natural that non-Brahmins should want to see their own representatives in the Councils, but it is not absolutely necessary to have separate communal electorates for the purpose. Non-Brahmins can be elected even through mixed electorates by reserving seats for them. The majority of the present voters are non-Brahmins, and if they had only shown unity and public spirit, non-Brahmins could have been easily elected even in these days. So it is not the fault of the Brahmins that the non-Brahmins have not been elected. If the non-Brahmins act with determination they will be able to achieve their wishes even now as under the present system persons who can only sign their names can get themselves elected even to the Imperial Legislative Councils.]

Alleged hollowness of Hindu-Muhammadan unity.

Political Bhomiyo (71), 28th Sept.

22. The Political Bhomiyo writes at great length to show that the claim made by the advocates of Home Rule, who are mostly Hindus, about unity between Hindus and Muhammadans has no foundation at all and is actuated by selfish motives. It gives instances of malicious attacks made by Hindus on Muhammadans on their being elevated to high posts and of attempts made by them to take unfair advantage over Muhammadans and to browbeat them. It adds that the Hindus still continue to entertain feelings of jealousy toward Muhammadans but that they make a show of friendship for them with a view to securing Home Rule. It refers to the split in the Congress Reception Committee and remarks :—How long will swarájya endure in India if it is given at a time when disunion prevails among the inhabitants of the country? If the so-called leaders cannot control their followers how will they be able to govern the teeming millions of India? In all fairness we can say that swarájya will not last for four days in this country and its advent will give rise to internal dissensions. It is futile to hope for swardjya as long as the Hindus and Muhammadans are at variance. Swardjya can be secured without going in search for it if lessons of morality and unity are instilled into the hearts of the people. [Elsewhere the paper expresses its disapprobation of the view expressed by Sahebzada Aftab Ahmedkhan in Bombay to the effect that he was an Indian first and a Muhammadan afterwards and doubts if he could be called a Muhammadan after expressing such a view. It declares that a Muhammadan should place considerations of his race and religion far above the country of his birth. In another column the paper dwells upon the disabilities of Muhammadans in municipalities and particularly in Ahmedabad and remarks :—O Muhammadans! always bear in mind that your rights will never be safeguarded by the Hindus. You might mix with them with an open heart, but they will always try to take a mean advantage over you.]

Alleged harassment of Muhammadans by Hindus at Jubbulpore, Central Provinces.

Islámic Mail (4), 16th Sept., Eng. cols.

23. "It is one of the most patent signs of the times that in spite of all embracings and shakings of hands among the members of Congress and League, the Hindu-Moslem disunion is getting more and more pronounced every day.......... Jubbulpore appears to be enjoying something like swardj—all the officials there being Hindus. They have harassed the Muhammadans in diverse ways and the most recent is to interfere with their namaz. We are told that as a result of the aggressive attitude of the Hindus all the mosques are closed and the Muhammadan feeling is so strained that some of them are said to have left the town. The quarrel arose over the Dasara, when the Hindus flagrantly violated the Moslem feeling by playing music before their mosques. Ever since the Hindus have been harassing the Muhammadans and the latter have not been able to get any redress from the officials who are Hindus."

Appeal to Government for the release of Mr. Shaik Abdul Majid, the interned editor of the Al-Amin.

Al-Amin (133), 14th Sept., Eng. cols.

24. Referring to the statement made in the Imperial Legislative Council with regard to the release of interned persons, the Al-Amin writes :—"To the local Government we would earnestly appeal to consider the case of Mr. Shaik Abdul Majid, the late Editor of the Al-Amin and the Alhaq, whose internment over a year ago had come quite as a shock to the Sind Mussulmans and in whose innocence every one has the greatest faith. In the eyes of the public, he is still a victim of evil tongues. Though separated by religious beliefs, his aged mother now reduced almost to a skeleton has been incessantly raising her hands to Heaven. Mr. Lawrence has the reputation of being a sympathetic officer. Shall we hope that he would release this young man and earn the gratitude of the people?"

The internment of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali.

Mahrátta (5), 30th Sept.

*25. Referring to a letter to the Press by the mother of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali, the Mahrátta writes :—"We think that the undertaking promised by the two brothers ought to be considered quite sufficient in the circumstances......... Government seem to fear that these brothers will 'express their sympathy with the king's enemies', if they are enlarged without an undertaking in the form prescribed by the Director of the C.I.D. It is futile to expect any self-respecting person to put his signature to that form or any form of a similar nature. Mrs. Besant did not sign such a form. Nor did Messrs. Arundale and Wadia. Why should it be insisted that the two Moslem patriots must do what the others were not required to do? Government say that the brothers were interned for having expressed sympathy with the king's enemies. We fear Government misconstrued certain religious outpourings of the brothers as 'an expression of sympathy with the King's enemies.' Neither Hindus nor Muhammadans will believe that such a misunderstanding has not been at the bottom of the internment of the brothers, until the contrary is proved in broad daylight. There has been such a mystifying in connection with internments, that no Indian can think ill of his brother in internment simply because it is officially declared that such a brother has erred in a certain way. Doubt is invariably and universally cast in this country on such official declarations, for the simple reason that the people have been 'treated' almost uniformly to a policy of mistrust......... This release is bound to come, but not until the Moslems as a body, supported by the Hindus, 'show the teeth'. As more than one Musalman speaker pointed out at the Allahabad meeting, the release is delayed simply because 'they kept quiet relying on the old policy of depending upon the sense of justice of the Government and on the mabap theory and did not agitate in the modern ways.'......... In discussing the reply given by Sir W. Vincent in the case of the Moslem brothers we have assumed that Government are wrong in believing that the brothers expressed their sympathy with the king's enemies. But suppose for a moment that this allegation of Government is correct. It only means that the brothers did something, though very little, in the nature of those performances which collectively are called the Irish rising of 1916. The Irish rebels are now free, and as we know, one of them, who is now an M. P., declared in one of his speeches to the voters that his party 'contemplated revolution if necessary, but only at a time when England's difficulties would give another rebellion a chance of success.' Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali have surely sinned not so gravely as the Irishmen referred to above. So, in any case, we must have them back, as also all other politicals who for proved 'guilt' or mere suspicion have their freedom curtailed in any degree."

Dnyán Prakásh (36), 28th Sept.

26. The public will be disappointed to learn from the reply of the Home Secretary in the Imperial Legislative Council that Government do not intend to release Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali as their sympathies for the enemies of the king have not yet undergone any change. The people have no means to test the truth of the statement of Government and under the circumstances they cannot be blamed if they refuse to be convinced by the Government's allegations until the brothers are tried by a judicial tribunal. If Government possess evidence of their guilt, why do they not submit it for examination to a third party and publish his verdict? If they do so, the people's complaint about grave injustice having been done in the case of the two brothers will lose its force, and this will assist in the restablishment of a peaceful atmosphere so much desired by the Viceroy.

Kesari (106), 25th Sept.

27. Whoever may have pointed out their blunder to them Government deserve to be congratulated on their readiness to correct it on the matter of their orders under the Defence of India Act. Whatever eccentric Anglo-Indian papers of the type of the Madras Mail may want, the prestige of Government has been enhanced by their just and generous policy. Agitation takes place only about well known persons and it appears that people do not care for hundreds of innocent persons interned who are unknown to fame. How can people intercede for people whom they do not completely know? However the whole nation has recommended the release of Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali and Moulana Azad. It is a mystery as to why Government do not yet settle their question. But we request that all should be released, without any distinction. Even if the instance of Seinn Feiners be rejected because it is from a distant country, have not the officials before them the general pardon given by Lord Hardinge in the Cawnpore Mosque and Ajodhya rioting cases?

Complaint that purchasers of War Loan Bonds in the mofussil are required to come down to the General Post Office, Bombay, to receive them.

Rást Goftár (30), 30th Sept., Eng. cols.

28. "We are surprised to learn that persons who have purchased War Loan Notes through the Post Office are required to come down to Bombay to take delivery of the conversion warrant. We have a definite case before us. A gentleman residing at Nárgol purchased some war bonds and he got the receipt through the Post Office. He now wants the Notes and he has been informed that he must either come himself or send an agent to the Bombay General Post Office to get them. He sent his money from Nárgol and he is entitled to have his Notes through the nearest district post office, that is, Thána. If all War Loan Notes are to be issued by the Bombay Post Office it will entail a great hardship on many people who readily came to the help of the Government in subscribing to the War Loan."

Commissons in the Indian Army for Indians.
Gujaráti (16), 23rd Sept.

29. The Gujaráti reproduces an advertisement appearing in the Financier and Bullionist dated the 25th July wherein the War Office invites applications from persons who are over the age for military duties but who know Hindusthani and other Indian languages and have experience of Indian coolies for temporary Commisions in the Indian Labour Corps, and remarks :—It is very strange that applications should be invited from Europeans only for doing the work of supervising Indian coolies. [Commenting upon the grant of the King's Commission to nine Indians, the paper further remarks :—None of the nine names include an Indian from the educated classes. The selection is made from the classes from which men are usually recruited for the Army. The selection is, moreover, confined to those who were taken in the Army on the score of their high birth. It, therefore, seems that the ordinary sepoy will not rise to commissioned rank. The question now arises whether the Commissions are to be open to men of high birth selected from certain classes or to all educated Indians who have received military training.]

How to solve the question of recruitment.
Din Mitra (99), 19th Sept.

30. In olden times the prospect of getting loot and also jagirs and vatans from the then rulers proved the chief attraction for people to join military service. Although the attraction of loot is now out of the question, Government can induce a very large number of people to join their armies by promising the grant of plots of land, annuities, vatans, etc. If a few daring men who have been fighting at the front are now given such grants in their own villages or elsewhere it will act as a great encouragement to other villagers to enrol themselves. These rusties will not be attracted by titles or photographs or medals, though Brahmins and other advanced classes may be easily satisfied with such trifles. The grant of the inams we have suggested need not be for all generations, but for a limited number of generations, and the lands instead of being resumed at the end of the period should be kept in the family as rayatavari lands. Let Government show liberality in this matter and there is no doubt that the question of recruitment will be solved to a considerable extent.

Subjects of Native States should be allowed to join the University Corps.
Indu Prakásh (39), 26th Sept., Eng. cols.

31. Referring to the reported refusal to a subject of a Native State to join the Bombay University Corps, the Indu Prakásh remarks :—"We do not know if it be sinful to be born in a Native State. We are sure it is not. Why then this want of confidence? His Majesty is the only Sovereign Power in India and, therefore, everyone born in India is for all practical purposes a British subject. Will the Governments of Lord Willingdon and Lord Chelmsford remove their anxiety? We hope they will."

Comments on the Government Resolution on the administration of jails in the Bombay Presidency.
Bombay Samáchár (59), 26th Sept.

32. Commenting upon the recently published Government Resolution on the administration of jails in the Bombay Presidency during the year 1916, the Bombay Samáchár, while praising the efforts of Government towards reclaiming prisoners by teaching them various handicrafts, wishes that Government in this country might more completely follow the methods prevailing in America and Western countries in the matter of the administration of prisons. It considers the keeping of prisoners convicted of grave offences, such as murder, robbery, etc., with those who may have committed other less serious offences under the impulse of the moment to be a defect in the jail administration in India. The paper advocates the classification of prisoners on systematic lines and their being kept in separate prisons. It believes that the number of prisoners will go on increasing in India, as can be judged from the Jail Administration

Report of the Bombay Presidency for the year 1916, unless and until some such changes as have been mentioned above are adopted in this country. It is in favour of reducing the number of sentences awarding capital punishment, as has been the tendency in other civilised countries, provided that the aims of justice are satisfied and the interests of society are properly safeguarded by such reduction. The paper also advocates the adoption of scientific and humane methods of carrying out capital punishment, e.g., electrocution, as is being done in America. It observes that since the object of Government is to reduce crime, it behoves them to extend their help to the Released Prisoners Aid Society in a more liberal manner than at present.

Suggestion that all Mangs in the Sátára District should be freed from police surveillance.
Dnyán Prakásh (36), 25th Sept.

33. A correspondent writes to the Dnyán Prakásh:—Recently American Missionaries in the Sátára District have intervened on behalf of Mang converts to Christianity and freed them from police surveillance, and the effect has been that many Mangs have been embracing Christianity. I request that all Mangs should be freed from police surveillance as conversion to Christianity does not change human nature all at once.

The strike of Bombay postmen.
Rást Goftár (30), 30th Sept., Eng. cols.

34. "Hopes were naturally entertained that with the arrival of Sir William Maxwell, the Director General of Post Offices, in Bombay the strike would come to an end, but, if anything the position is worse than it was before. The first question to be considered on such an occasion is the interest of the public, and to put an end to the serious dislocation of business as soon as possible. Of that there are no signs. In spite of all the efforts that are being made business interests in Bombay are suffering very seriously, and if the strike really ends in a lock-out the result will be disastrous, and Bombay, so calm and absorbed with its occupations, will be convulsed. There is not only an industrial problem that has to be solved, but there is also a political situation that has to be faced. In the attitude of the Director General there is nothing but the usual departmental rigidity; the fetish of prestige must be maintained at all costs. There is serious discontent throughout the city and the business of Bombay is being seriously threatened by the prolongation of the strike."

Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 23rd Sept.; Hindusthán (20), 25th and 27th Sept.; Sánj Vartamán (31), 27th Sept.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 28th Sept.; Jám-e-Jámshed (23), 27th Sept.; Akhbár-e-Islám (56), 28th Sept.

35. The Kaiser-i-Hind wishes that the postal authorities had given some increase to the postal peons in view of the high prices and had not rejected their representation on technical grounds. [The Hindusthán complains that great inconvenience is caused to the commercial public by railway receipts not reaching them in time owing to the strike and their being made to pay demurrage. It is not satisfied with the arrangements made by the postal authorities in opening special centres for distributing letters where the paper alleges people have to waste time in finding out their own letters from the heap placed before them. It suggests that the undelivered letters should not be sent to the Dead Letter Office, but should be safely preserved for distribution after the strike comes to an end. In the subsequent issue the paper repeats its complaint about the inconvenience caused to the public by the strike and avers that the arrangements made by postal authorities to deliver post have proved a failure especially in the native town. It blames the Director General of Posts for treating the deputation of the postal peons in an unconciliatory manner and holding out a threat of dismissal before them. It asks the commercial bodies to inform the Government of India of the inconvenience caused to them by the strike and to bring it to their notice that there is no truth in the official reports about satisfactory arrangements being made to deliver letters to the public. The Sánj Vartaman is grieved to see that the Director General is not prepared to consider the revised demands of the postmen which in its opinion are very reasonable. It complains of irregularities in the delivery of letters and asks the postal authorities to give a sympathetic consideration to the demands of the strikers and to bring the strike to an early close The Praja Mitra and Pársi is of opinion that a false notion of prestige on the part of the Director General is responsible for the rejection of the revised demands of the postal peons. It complains of the failure of the new arrangements in spite of their costliness and asks the postal authorities to relent and accede to the demands of the strikers with a view to saving the public from the inconvenience and loss to which it is subjected. The Jám-e-Jamshed and the other marginally noted papers of various dates publish numerous letters wherein the correspondents complain of inconvenience and loss caused to the general public by the alleged failure of the arrangements made by the postal authorities to meet the strike and asking Government to put an end to the strike by acceding to the demands of the strikers. The Akhbár-e-Islám on the other hand asks the strikers to resume work on the terms given by the Director General and expresses its belief that the authorities will not fail to give a sympathetic consideration to the question of pay if the strikers rely on their mercy.]

Kesari (106), 25th Sept.; Indu Prakásh (39), 24th and 28th Sept.

36. The Kesari remarks that no one will object if the annual surplus of 25 lakhs in the Postal Department is spent upon its lower grade servants who lead a life of misery. It holds that the Postal service compares very unfavourably with the fat Abkári and Police Departments and that its condition is pitiable. It declares that postmen have gone on a strike because their condition has become unbearable and it insists that Government should settle the question sympathetically and immediately. [The Indu Prakásh suggests that the dispute between the Bombay Postmen and the Department should be referred to arbitration. It also declares that the authorities will not be able to find new men on low pay to do the work of postmen in the city in a satisfactory manner. It appeals to the Director-General to consider the case of the poor postmen sympathetically and thus to end the strike which is causing immense loss to the merchants of the city.]

Gujaráti (16), 23rd Sept.; Akhbár-e-Islám (56), 25th Sept.; Bombay Samáchár (59), 28th Sept.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 24th Sept.

37. The Gujaráti, while commenting upon the postal strike refers to the distress felt by all the low paid Government servants owing to the abnormal rise in prices and remarks:—It seems from the reports that reach us that the Post Master General instead of giving a careful consideration to the grievances of the postal peons wants to create a split among the strikers. The authorities should grant the reasonable demands of the postal peons and put an end to the strike. [The Akhbár-e-Islám on the other hand considers the demands of the postal peons to be quite unreasonable and expresses the hope that the strikers will see their mistake and throw themselves on the mercy of the authorities. The Bombay Samáchár suggests that a permanent Arbitration Board should be appointed to settle all disputes arising between employers and workmen. The Praja Mitra and Pársi suggests that the dispute that has arisen between the postal peons and the authorities should be left to the arbitration of the European Chamber of Commerce and the Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau.]

Sunday Tatler (13), 30th Sept.

38*. "It is unfortunate that the strikers have landed themselves in this situation, which is indeed a pitiable one, and for this they have only to thank their advisers and certain publicists who have fomented and kept up the strike. Serious objection was taken to the presence of Mr. Vincent and his assistants at the conference which the Director-General had with representatives of the strikers. The men themselves have not taken any objection, but the inspiration comes from other quarters where the Police are an eyesore and where nothing is spared to misrepresent the intentions and actions of these functionaries......... It is the duty of the public to help, and instead of doing this, every obstacle is thrown in the way of settlement, by some mischief-makers who take a delight in tasks like that and earn cheap notoriety." [Elsewhere the paper writes:—" At the same time, the authorities and particularly the Director-General should take a leaf from the Viceroy's book and take the men into confidence by showing them some concession. Lord Chelmsford has demonstrated that even the most contentious question can be approached with sympathy and moderation, and the Director-General can easily do likewise and effect a compromise. This will redound much to his credit and there will be no loss of prestige.]

Gujarati (16), 30th Sept., Eng. cols.

39. "The postmen's strike has not yet terminated and the public are still being subjected to great and even intolerable inconvenience. It is all very well for Sir William Maxwell, the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs, to think that only some inconvenience was being entailed on the public. But the fact is otherwise.......... That excellent and successful arrangements have been made in the interests of the inhabitants of Malabar Hill goes without saying, and we were much amused to read such an admission in triumphant language by Sir William Maxwell. That only confirms the complaint made by the Indian mercantile community as to the gross unfairness with which they are being treated.......... The question is no longer between the strikers and the Postal Department but between the suffering public and the postal authorities. The public are surprised to learn that the Director-General should have summoned a Conference where high Police officers including representatives of the C. I. D. were invited. What was still more extraordinary was the exclusion of the Postmen's attorney from the Conference when his services were urgently wanted. We have nothing to say against the Police officers. But the procedure was highly objectionable. The representatives of the Postmen should have been given full opportunity to speak out their mind undeterred by the presence of the police or other considerations. .... In England such a strike could have been easily brought to a happy issue by the officers talking to the men in their own tongue and taking them into their confidence. But in India such a free and cordial interchange of views is impossible because of the profound ignorance of the high officers of the language of their employés, and, secondly, because free and frank discussion is made impossible on account of the extraordinary notions the former entertain of their prestige and of the astonishing methods that are adopted for influencing the aggrieved employés." [In the vernacular columns the paper writes:—Officials here seem to think more of their prestige than the convenience of the people. They think low-paid employés are born to slave for ever; if they ask for higher pay they are disloyal! This is an intolerable libel. Why was an all-round increase given to the I. C. S. men as a compensation for loss in acting allowances, etc.? Why has Sir James DuBoulay again advocated an increase in their salaries on the ground of high prices? No notice is taken of the representation of the men for more than six months; and then if they strike, they are called disloyal! Sir W. Maxwell has played into the hands of local officials. The Post Office says that the post is regularly delivered in the Fort. We say this is an utter falsehood. The paper here enters on a long list of complaints about postal irregularities and suggests that the Post Office should be sued for damages by those whose business has suffered owing to its irregularities. If this were done the Postal authorities would show greater care in promptly disposing of the complaints of employés.]

Approval of the appointment of the Committee to consider the question of high prices allowance to low paid Government servants.

Indu Prakásh (39), 25th Sept.

40. The Indu Prakásh welcomes the appointment of a Committee to suggest a scale of allowances to low salaried Government servants in view of the present abnormal rise in prices of the necessaries of life. It declares that these prices have in many instances been put up by the shop-keepers for no valid reason and suggests the appointment of another Committee to ascertain the real cause of this rise and to fix the prices of the several articles of food, etc., after due examination of the circumstances.

Hindu Government Servants should be granted some more sectional holidays.

Hindu Missionary (New), 24th Sept.

41. The Hindu Missionary supports the representation made to Government by some of their Hindu employes praying that a few more holidays such as Ashadi and Kartiki Ekudashi, Bhaubij and Hindu New Year's day, may be included in the list of sectional Hindu holidays. It says that the High Court is closed on these days and in the mofussil also the Collectors are empowered to close their offices on these holidays. The paper thinks it unreasonable that whereas all other communities should get four or five sectional holidays, the Hindus should have only one such holiday, viz., Makar Sankrant, and urges Government to consider the prayer sympathetically.

Complaint about paucity of Muhammadans in the public service of the Bombay Presidency.

Islámic Mail (4), 16th Sept., Eng. cols.

42. "There is a widespread complaint of the paucity of the Muhammadan element in the provincial service of the presidency and Moslem claims are said to be overlooked. There is some justice in it and if we take up the Civil List we find that the Muhammadans are very sparsely intermingled with the Hindu majority......... Now so far as the Judicial Department is concerned the outlook appears to be good, but the Revenue service is deplorably lacking in the Muhammadan element. There are not even 5 per thousand Muhammadans in the Mamlatdar's rank and only 7 Deputy Collectors out of 53, which is very unsatisfactory. Now that the Hindus have agreed to give us 33 per cent. as our share we do not know why this settlement should be restricted to election and should not govern the public service. We do not say that unqualified Muhammadans should be admitted into service, but what we say is this that one-third of the appointments in the provincial service should be given to the Muhammadans whenever qualified men are available. We hope Government will consider this proposal and take the necessary steps to adopt it. We do not want any preferential treatment or favouritism. We want our share. The service is the place where one can do more good to his country and community than from the Councils but Muhammadans are being kept away from it."

The Sind Muhammadans' address of welcome to His Excellency Lord Chelmsford.

Al-Amin (133), 14th Sept., Eng. cols.

43. "Is an association, composed of officials and non-officials, wherein certainly the former predominate by reason of their position and influence, well qualified to pass any judgment on any political matter? The Sind Muhammadan Association is one of the greatest phenomena of modern times. With an aerial habitation, it manages to creep into existence on all ceremonial occasions.......... No sooner was the announcement of the forthcoming visit of His Excellency the Viceroy made, than this dummy of an Association has begun to have life such as it never had before. There are drafts and drafts of the address, and the air is full of mystery. The very silence of the Karachi draft on the Home Rule question is galling to K. B. Peer Buksh, a retired Deputy Collector and a nominated member of the Council, and it is no surprise that his effort should contain abhorrence for the Home Rule movement.......... All the defacto Government servants should not henceforth be allowed 'to dabble' in politics or to continue to remain, even on ceremonial occasions, members of the Associations, if it should try, as attempts are being made for the first time, to include politics within the scope of its activities. Surely if the Rules for the Conduct of Public Servants prevent Government servants from agitating for self-government 'misnamed Home Rule,' as some would like us to say, they would be applicable with equal force to all agitation directed against it."

The evils of Rasai in Sind.

Al-Amin (133), 14th Sept.

44. After pointing out that the evils of Rasai in Sind are still as rampant as ever, the Al-Amin remarks :—"The simple reason of people meekly submitting to the untold hardships of rasai, Chher and Lapo is that they have learnt it to their grief, that their cry would always be in the wilderness, that to protest against it is to court untold dangers. The circulars of the Commissioner have not succeeded in the least in checking it, it continues to flourish as ever. Considering the present state of the Zamindars, the demand of definite evidence in each and every case is nothing short of avoiding an unpleasant enquiry. The result of all this indifference is the systematic sucking out of the blood of poor helpless people who do not possess the capacity to resist. But their grumbling, if inaudible at Karáchi, does exist and no one who knows Sind or Sindhis can deny it."

EDUCATION.

Comments on the expulsion of a student from the Dhárwár Mission School for writing a poem on Mrs. Besant.

Ráj Hansa (85), 19th Sept.

45. Referring to the case of Rungaiyya Shenvi (vide paragraph 54 of Weekly Report No. 36 of 1917) the Ráj Hansa says:—Rungaiyya Shenvi composed some verses to be published on the covering page of the Vagbhushana. They were published without any fault of his, as addressed to Mrs. Besant. There is not a single word of direct praise of Mrs. Besant in the verses except mention of her name. It is regrettable that his educational career should be blasted for it. Government and the High Court have shown clemency even to rebels. We do not think that the Educational Department will sentence the student to life-long suffering for a charge against him due to no fault of his. We hope that the Educational authorities will reconsider his case.

Students and parents should take vigorous measures to get "student circulars" cancelled.

Mahrátta (5), 30th Sept.

46. "Mrs. Besant has in a message to the Madras students published in New India of the 22nd instant, asked them to memorialise for the withdrawal of G. O. 559. She is not in favour of students calling outside meetings, even for settling the question of National dress. Sir Subramania Iyer gave similar advice some time back. The Madras students have shown exemplary enthusiasm in resisting in a suitable manner the unconscionable order of Government forbidding them to attend political meetings. When elders, for some reason or other, find themselves unable to co-operate in resisting encroachment on students' rights (which, we may note in passing, flow directly from the right of the nation to develop itself as speedily as possible in all directions), it creates rather an awkward predicament for the younger generation.......... Under these circumstances, if the elders to whom the term 'students' cannot possibly be applied by Government, refrain from properly resisting the blow to the national future dealt by Government in the form of circulars of the G. O. 559 type, the sensitive students fired by patriotism must either brood silently and breed wayward fancies or must take up the work, which political tradition has taught them to look upon as the business of elders. If anybody is to blame for this action of students, it is not the students, but the elders. And there is another standpoint, from which action on the part of the students is expedient and therefore justifiable. The elders have grown up in a different atmosphere.......... As a matter of fact, the younger generation of the day is generally speaking much more advanced in outlook than their elders. In submitting to a worn-out reactionary tradition demanding an unreasonable obedience on the part of the student-community to directions and dictates flowing from educational and other authorities, the younger generation rightly feel that they are doing undue violence to their Reason and their Patriotic Emotion. Such submission becomes unendurable after a time, and the idea naturally suggests itself to the students that for the very purpose of moving their elders to action, action on their own part is vitally necessary.......... Whatever difference of opinion there may be in the camp of the elders as regards the holding of outside meetings by students, there is unanimity as regards the question of memorialising against unjust orders and of calling inside meetings, i. e., private meetings, to discuss and decide upon any course of united action on the part of large number of students, in the matter of 'National dress' or in other matters affecting students.......... 'Our elders—and no outside authority'—that must be the insistent demand of students of schools and colleges. The demand means that all the outside activities of students (i.e., activities outside the school and college) must be left to the exclusive guidance of their parents and guardians, or of themselves, if they are their own guardians. We learn that Poona students are thinking of memorialising the Governor in Council through proper authorities on the subject of the Students' Circular. We heartily approve of the movement." [Elsewhere the paper wites :—" The students' circulars are not an isolated piece of executive action. They were issued as part of 'a policy'. The policy which dictated the exclusion, internment and externment orders, which put an embargo on the tongues and pens of 'emphatic' patriots, which prohibited public meetings and processions—this same policy (probably outlined in the confidential circular of March last), rendered necessary the issue of the students' circulars. The student's circulars are part of a policy—the policy which turned out many other oppressive orders besides these circulars. And, in our opinion, the way to get them cancelled is that which has secured the release of the illustrious interned. Co-operation, vigorous protest and Passive Resistance. Students from all parts of India must co-operate and send respectful yet unfaltering memorials to the authorities concerned. Their elders must co-operate with them. And, if this does not suffice, Passive Resistance must be adopted, where feasible."]

47. "The laying of the charge at the door of the illiterate is not a difficult task; but has our Education Department honoured, in any decent measure, the specific recommendations of the Education Commission of 1882? Has 'the special encouragement of Muhammadan education been regarded as a legitimate charge on local, Municipal and on Provincial funds'? Have 'the indigenous Muhammadan Schools been liberally encouraged'? Has 'the Higher English Education been liberally encouraged amoung the Muhammadans'? Has any 'Normal school or class for the training of Muhammadan teachers been established'? Have 'the Muhammadan inspecting officers been employed more largely for the inspection of Primary Schools'? Has the Government of India Resolution No. 7—215—25 of 1885 (Education Department) helped us in Sind in any special degree? The Government of India may say that 'In Sind there is an urgent call for special measures', but what can the Education Department do when there is no demand from the people? Should we continue to be satisfied with the present number of students in the Training College, when so many Vernacular Final passed men are loitering outside it? Should we not expect the appointment of at least a Muhammadan Vice-Principal in the College to infuse that spirit among the boys which may make them pioneers of education in villages, instead of a grumbling lot? Is the appointment of a Muhammadan Deputy in Upper Sind, where perhaps others will not be able to hold their own, and a Deputy for Mulla Schools a sufficient answer to the Bombay Government Resolution 2034-A (Education Department) of 1885? Is the long-delayed affiliation of the Khairpur State High School a happy commentary?"

The problem of Muhammadan education in Sind and alleged neglect of it by the authorities.

Al-Amin (133), 14th Sept., Eng. cols.

MUNICIPALITIES.

48. Complaining about the neglect of sanitation by the Karáchi Municipality, the New Times remarks :—" The present insanitary condition of the town has, for some time past, assumed such magnitude that any continuance thereof, constitutes a positive menace to the health and safety of the unfortunate public who are doomed to live or die therein......... If any observer cares to walk round the streets of the Town, the old Town, the Market Quarter, the Machi Miani Quarter, the Jail Quarter, or for the matter of fact, any quarter of the city, he cannot but be struck by the general neglect of the most elementary measures for sanitation for which a Public Health Department necessarily exists in every city. It is no exaggeration to assert that the conservancy arrangements have utterly broken down.......... The disposal of rubbish is effected in the same Alleged grossly insanitary condition in Karáchi (Sind).

New Times (7), 24th Sept.

perfunctory manner. Metallic bins greet the eye at intervals in the streets. In these rubbish is thrown from day to day and it lies there under the powerful rays of a tropical sun to decompose, till a Municipal cart turns up to empty it....... Dirty water is thrown on Streets yet no effective means are taken to provant it. .... Fish hawkers go about the street throwing parts thereof on the pave-ment to rot and attract swarms of flies which now infest the streets the whole day, a prelude perhaps to some epidemic.......... Rotten fruit unfit for human consumption is hawked and sold near Bolton Market, the Karadur, the Town, Ranchore Lines and Joria Bazar with an impunity which suggests rightly or wrongly that there may after all be an understanding between these hawkers and the underlings of the Public Health Department. In short the sanitary condition of the Town simply beggars description. The inference seems to be clear that the executive machinery of the Health Department has utterly gone to pieces."

Comments on the official attempts to introduce house-tax in Lárkána and Rohri (Sind).
New Times (7), 21st Sept.

49. "The feeling over the question of the house-tax in Lárkána and Rohri has grown very intense and acute. At Lárkána Mr. Bolus and at Rohri Mr. Davis continue to put the pressure they can and the official attitude seems to have caused great alarm and anxiety amongst the people in both these places......... In the note he recently issued to the Press, Mr. Bolus laid down his arguments which were meant more to satisfy himself than to convince the people.......... The spirit of his whole note just contradicts the fundamental principle of local self-government which is, that the people themselves must legislate in local affairs. To tell the people that the tax is necessary in order to better their civic and social life and that the tax must be imposed in the interests of the poor who have no power to speak, or who somehow or the other do not speak, is to say the least, humbugging the people. Not a single body or association representing the poor peoples' views has so far approved of the tax.......... Mr. Bolus and several others of his class still seem to imagine that the people opposing the house-tax are rich. May we ask them to give us their definition of a rich man? The continued misrepresentation of the economic position of the middle class has become the basis of unfair attacks, violent anti-democratic legislation and is now becoming the inspiration of official reform—reform which mercilessly tramples down upon the sacred feeling of the people. To say the least this is carrying bureaucratic benignity too far. It is reform with a vengeance.......... We have throughout watched the official effort to impose the house-tax with grave concern as it shows a serious disregard for public feeling. If the people are not to be given any voice in the determination of the form of local taxes let there be no sham of local self-government. Let it be said frankly that the house-tax is being imposed because it is the will of the officials and with a consistent and deliberate opposition to peoples' will and judgment. To oppose public feeling so violently will be to sow the germs of discontent and restlessness in the province."

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 5th October 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 40 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 6th October 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British rule :

- A poem on Home Rule 34
- Agitation for the release of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali . . . . 16—21
- Appeal to the authorities to release two interned Sind Muhammadans 23
- Attacks on some mythological personages held sacred by Hindus . . 30
- Caste representation on the reformed councils 25
- Comments on the recent meeting of the European Association of Calcutta. . . . . 5—10
- Foreigners' have looked more to the interests of the backward classes than the Brahmins 26
- Higher officials should be Europeans in the interest of the backward classes 27
- Indians must be allowed to carry arms 28
- Passive resistance should be resorted to if political prisoners are not released 22
- Plea for a general amnesty for political prisoners . . . . 14 & 15
- Presidentship of the Congress 33
- Protest against the continuance of the Viramgam Customs line . . 31
- Suggested regulation of prices of foodstuffs by the Government of India 32
- Suggestion that the Secretary of State should not visit Bombay in Christmas week 4
- The release of Mrs. Besant . . . . 11 & 12
- The secret of Mrs. Besant's power over Indians 13
- Urgency of a political deputation to England 24
- What Muhammadans are to expect if they unite with the Hindus . 29

Complaint about inadequate steamer service between Bombay and Ratnágiri 44

Imperial Legislative Council :

- Alleged inspiration by the London Times of His Excellency the Viceroy's speech in the — . . . . 1 & 2
- The Honourable Pandit Malaviya's resolution in the — regarding the Indian element in the I. C. S. 3

Police : Need of strengthening the — force in the suburbs of Bombay . 45

Postal Department : The strike of Bombay postmen . . . . 36—38

H 303—a CON

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

Public Service:

Dissatisfaction at the amendment of the rule directing Kulkarnis to pass the Vernacular Final Examination 47

Vatandars when acquitted should not be dismissed from their offices . 46

Revenue matters: Criticism of the Land Revenue policy of Government . 35

Sind: The anti-Home Rule clause shall not be withdrawn from the — Muhammadans' address to the Viceroy 48

War:

Alleged possibility of Japan siding with Germany owing to the policy of exclusion adopted by the British colonies towards the Japanese. 43

Complaint about recruitment in the Sholápur District 40

Indians and commission in the Army 39

The Indian public should be taken into confidence about losses at sea . 42

The prisoners in the jails in the Presidency should be utilised for war purposes 41

EDUCATION—

Comments on the attitude of the Collector of Karáchi and the Commissioner in Sind in the matter of the D. J. Sind College principalship . 49

Necessity of having a Government Middle School at Dhárwár . . . 50

MUNICIPALITIES—

Lárkána and Rohri: Alleged official high-handedness in forcing a house-tax on the people of — (Sind) 51

LIST OF NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS.

(As it stood on the 1st October 1917.)

No.	Name of Publication.	Where Published.	Edition.	Name, caste and age of Editor.	Circulation.
	ENGLISH.
1	Bombay East Indian ...	Bombay ...	Weekly ...	J. L. Britt ; East Indian ; 70 ...	300
2	Commercial Gazette ...	Sukkur ...	Do. ...	Abdul Aziz Sheikh Mahomed Suleman ; Muhammadan ; 41.	200
3	Indian Social Reformer ...	Bombay ...	Do. ...	Kámákshi Natarájan, B.A. ; Hindu (Madrási Bráhmin) ; 46.	525
4	Islámic Mail ...	Do. ...	Do. ...	Saiyad Mohomed Abdulla Khan ; Muhammadan (Sunni) ; 33.	1,500
5	Mahrátta ...	Poona ...	Do. ...	Narsinh Chintaman Kelkar, B.A., LL.B. ; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman) ; 44.	700
6	Message ...	Bombay ...	Daily ...	Achyut Balwant Kolhatkar, B.A., LL.B. ; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman) ; 38.	2,000
7	New Times ...	Karáchi ...	Do. ...	Tikamdas Khemchand Jeswani, M.A. ; Hindu (Lohána) ; 23.	400
8	Phœnix ...	Do. ...	Bi-weekly ...	Jáffar Faddu ; Muhammadan (Khoja) ; 63...	425
9	Sind Advocate ...	Sukkur ...	Weekly ...	Pribhdas Kodanmal Gogia ; Hindu ; 42 ...	500
10	Sind Journal ...	Hyderabad ...	Do. ...	Karamchand Gurumukhsing Mirchandani ; 35.	500
11	Sind Moslem ...	Sukkur ...	Do. ...	Abdul Aziz Sheikh Mahomed Suleman ; Muhammadan ; 41.	800
12	Sind Observer ...	Karáchi ...	Bi-weekly ...	J. Leonard ; Anglo-Indian ; 50 ...	375
13	Sunday Tatler ...	Bombay ..	Weekly ...	C. S. Menon ; Hindu ; 60.	1,000
14	Young India ...	Do. ...	Do. ...	Jamnadas Dwarkadas Dharamsi ; Hindu (Bhátia) ; 27.	750
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
15	A'ryă Prakásh ...	Baroda ...	Weekly ...	Motilál Tribhovandás, B.A., LL.B. ; Hindu (Bania) ; 46.	1,000
16	Dnyán Prakásh ...	Rájkot ...	Fortnightly ...	Tribhovandás Damodardás ...	0
17	Gujaráti ...	Bombay ...	Do. ...	Manilál Ichchhárám Desái ; Hindu (Bania) ; 34.	16,000
18	Gujarát Mitră ...	Surat ...	Do. ...	Uttamram Umedram Reshamwala ; Hindu (Deolad Bania) ; 41.	1,200
19	Gujaráti Punch ...	Ahmedabad ...	Do. ...	Somálál Mangaldás Sháh ; Hindu (Mesri Bania) ; 40.	3,600
20	Hindi Punch ...	Bombay ...	Do. ...	Burjorji Navroji Apakhtyár ; Pársi ; 59 ...	550
21	Hindusthán ...	Do. ..	Do. ...	Ratanlál Atmárám Sháh ; Modh Bania ; 36.	1,500
22	Hindusthán and Akhbár-e-Soudágar.	Do. ...	Daily ...	Do. do. ...	2,000
23	Indian Loyalist ...	Wadhwán ...	Weekly ...	Ganeshji Jethábhái ; Hindu (Khatri) ; 64 ...	575
24	Jám-e-Jamshed ...	Bombay ...	Daily ...	Phirozsháh Jehángir Marzbán, M.A., Pársi ; 41.	5,000
25	Kaiser-i-Hind ...	Do. ...	Weekly ...	Erachshaw Rustomji Hirji Behedin ; Pársi ; 34.	5,000
26	Káthiáwár Times ...	Rájkot ...	Bi-weekly ...	Trikamji Govindji Kotak ; Hindu (Lohána) ; 37.	800
27	Pársi-Sansár ...	Karáchi ...	Weekly ...	Rustomji Kharsedji Sidhwa ; Pársi ; 32 ...	500
28	Praja Bandhu ...	Ahmedabad ...	Do. ...	Jagjivandas S. Trivedi ; Hindu (Shrimáli Bráhman) ; 38.	2,700
29	Praja Mitra and Pársi ...	Bombay ...	Daily ...	Mihirjibhai Palanji Madon ; Pársi ; 57 ...	3,000

No.	Name of Publication.	Where Published.	Edition.	Name, caste and age of Editor.	Circulation.
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI—concluded.
30	Praja Mitra and Pársi	Bombay	Weekly	Mihirjibhai Palanji Madon ; Pársi ; 57	1,700
31	Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	Dhanjibhái Jiváji Dhondi ; Pársi ; 48	825
32	Sánj Vartamán	Do.	Daily	Rustamji N. Vátcha-Gándhi ; Pársi ; 51	7,000
33	Suryá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly	Nagindás Dáyábhái ; Hindu (Nágar Bania) ; 71.	550
	ANGLO-KANARESE.
34	Chandrodayá	Dhárwár	Weekly	G. H. Honnapurmath ; Hindu (Lingáyat); 47.	475
	ENGLISH, KANARESE AND MARA'THI.
35	Kanara News	Kumta (Kanara)	Fortnightly	Krishna Keshav Shenvi ; Hindu (Goud Sáraswat Brahmin); 46.	400
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
36	Dnyánodayá	Bombay	Weekly	Alden Hyde Clark ; Christain ; 38	550
37	Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Daily	Gopál Krishna Deodhar, M.A. ; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman) ; 45.	3,000
38	Dnyán Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	Do. do.	4,000
39	Hindu Missionary	Bombay	Do.	Gajanan Bhaskar Vaidya, B.A. ; Páthare Prabhu ; 48.	100
40	Indu Prakásh	Do.	Daily	Dámodar Sávalárám Yande ; Hindu ; (Marátha); 55.	2,000
41	Pragati and Jinvijay	Belgaum	Fortnightly	Anna Babaji Latthe ; Jain ; 31.	300
42	Shetkari	Ahmednagar	Weekly	Ganesh Krishná Chitale, B.A., LL.B. ; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman) ; 48.	200
43	Subodh Patrika	Bombay	Do.	Dwárkánáth G. Vaidya ; Hindu (Goldsmith) ; 41.	500
	ANGLO-PORTUGUESE.
44	O Anglo-Lusitáno	Bombay	Weekly	Dr. W. F. Pais, L. M. & S. ; Goanese ; 36	1,000
	ANGLO-SINDI.
45	Frontier Gazette	Jacobabad	Weekly	Vishindás Pránjainmal ; Hindu (Bhátia) ; 35.	500
46	Hind Vasi	Hyderabad (Sind)	Daily	Jethmal Parsram ; Hindu ; 40	500
47	Lárkána Gazette	Lárkána	Weekly	Tahilrám Mulchand Tavarmaláni ; Hindu (Amil) ; 28.	700
48	Sindhi	Sukkur	Bi-weekly	Mulchand Bhágchand ; Hindu (Baláni); 39.	1,000
49	Sind Patrika	Lárkána	Weekly	Devsing Shámsing ; Hindu (Amil) ; 30	500
50	Sind Upkárak	Shikárpur	Monthly	Bhai Mohandev Ghanshamdas ; Hindu (Bhátia); 55.	300
51	Sind Vasi	Hyderabad (Sind)	Daily	Vasomal Kishanchand ; 37	725
52	Sookhree	Karáchi	Weekly	Jámatmal Lálchand ; Hindu (Chapráo) ; 44.	500
53	Trade Advertiser	Shikárpur (Sukkur).	Do.	Teckchand Verhamal ; Hindu (Gokláni) ; 45.	800
	ENGLISH, PORTUGUESE AND CONCANIM.
54	A Luz	Bombay	Weekly	Henry Anthony DeSouza ; Portuguese ; 36	500
55	O Amigo do Povo	Do.	Do.	Sebastian Xavier Vaz ; Goanese ; 40	800
56	O Goano	Do.	Do.	M. A. Fernandes ; Goanese ; 44	900

No.	Name of Publication.	Where Published.	Edition.	Name, caste and age of Editor.	Circulation.
	GUJARA'TI.
57	Akhbár-e-Islám	Bombay	Daily	Kázi Ismáil Kázi Muhammad Parbundri; Muhammadan; 47.	2,200
58	Baroda Vartamán	Baroda	Weekly	Javerbhái Dádábhái Patel; Hindu (Lewa Pátidár); 47.	1,700
59	Bombay Mazah	Bombay	Do.	Sorab Sheriar Irani; Pársi; 30	500
60	Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	Kaikhusru Máne[illegible] Minocheher-Homji, B.A.; Pársi; 42.	4,200
61	Broach Mitră	Broach	Weekly	Trikamlál Harináth Thákor; Hindu (Brahmă Kshatri); 35.	550
62	Broach Samáchár	Do.	Do.	Jehángirji Ardeshir; Pársi; 38	500
63	Chitramayă Jagat	Poona	Monthly	Tuljáshankar Gawrishankar Yádnik; (Audich Sahasra Bráhman); 35.	900
64	Deshi Mitră	Surat	Weekly	Maganlál Kikábhai; Jain (Visa Shrimáli); 41.	1,300
65	Hind Vijayă	Baroda	Do.	Dáyábhái Kasandás; Hindu (Shráwak Bania); 51.	1,000
66	Hitechhu	Karáchi	Do.	Harilál Válji Thákur; Hindu (Audich Bráhman); 32.	100
67	Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Do.	Somachand Panachand; Hindu (Jain Bania); 41.	500
68	Káthiáwár Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Do.	Bhaishankar Chhaganlal; Hindu (Bráhman); 47.	500
69	Loka Mitră	Bombay	Bi-weekly	Kaikhosru Mánekji Minochar-Homji, Pársi; 42.	700
70	Navsári Patrika	Navsári	Weekly	Harivallabhdás Pránjivandás Párekh; Hindu (Bania); 43.	400
71	Political Bhomiyo	Ahmedabad	Do.	Nurkhan Amirkhan; Muhammadan; 62 ...	...
72	Praja Mitră	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	Jaffar Faddu; Muhammadan (Khoja); 63.	375
73	Praja Pokár	Surat	Weekly	Uttamram Umedram Reshamwala; Dásálád Bráhman; 41.	700
74	Shri Sayáji Vijayă	Baroda	Do.	Máneklál Ambárám Doctor; Hindu (Dasha Shrimáli Bania); 39.	4,100
75	Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	Pirozsháh Edalji Patel; Pársi; 42	750
76	Vivechak	Lachhras (Nándod, Rájpipla State).	Monthly	Chaganlal Naranbhai Mesri; Hindu (Bhavsár); 32.	800
	GUJARA'TI AND HINDI.
77	Jain	Bháwnagar	Weekly	Devchand Damji; Hindu (Bania); 31	1,800
	HINDI.
78	Chitramayă Jagat	Poona	Monthly	Rámchandră Vásudeo Joshi; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhman); 30 and Shankar Narahar Joshi; Hindu (Deshasth Brahman); 41.	1,250
79	Jain Mitra	Surat	Weekly	Mulchand Kasandás Kapadia: Jain; 33	1,200
80	Shri Venkateshwar	Bombay	Daily	Pandit Chandulál Mehta; Hindu (Sáraswat Bráhman); 48.	1,000
81	Shri Venkateshwar Samáchár.	Do.	Weekly	Do. dc	10,000

No.	Name of Publication.	Where Published.	Edition.	Name, caste and age of Editor.	Circulation.
	KANARESE.
82	Karnátak Vaibhav	Bijápur	Weekly	G. R. Mannur; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhman); 50.	500
83	Karnátak Vritt and Dhananjayă.	Dhárwár	Do.	Krishnáji Hanumant Mudvedkar; Hindu (Vaishnav Bráhman); 44.	1,200
84	Lokă Bandhu	Do.	Do.	Gururáo Rághavendră Mamdápur; Hindu (Deshastha Bráhman); 49.	300
85	Raj Hansa	Do.	Daily	M. N. Tembe; (Karháda Bráhman); 34	600
86	Raj Hansa	Do.	Weekly	Do. do.	600
87	Rasik Ranjini	Gadag (Dhárwár)	Do.	Gaurishankar Rámprasád; Hindu (Kanoja Bráhman); 54.	50
88	Savigara	Agdi (Dhárwár)	Do.	(1) B. P. Kale; Hindu (Chitpávan Bráhmin); 30. (2) R. T. Karpur; Hindu (Deshastha Bráhmin); 35.	500
89	Shubhodaya	Dhárwár	Do.	Vasudevacharya Shrinivasacharya Kerur, Pleader; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhmin); 50.	800
	MARA'THI.
90	Arya Vaibhav	Dhulia (West Khándesh).	Weekly	Tulsidas Govind Joshi; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhmin); 27.	250
91	A'ryávart	Do.	Do.	Shankar Hari Joshi; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhman); 29.	200
92	Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	Hari Dharmaráj Gándhi; Hindu (Bania); 40.	400
93	Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do	Hari Bhikáji Sámant; Hindu (Gaud Sáraswat Bráhman); 55.	230
94	Bhárat Máta	Islámpur (Sátára)	Fortnightly	Vishnu Sitárám Athale; Hindu (Karháda Bráhman); 31.	400
95	Chikitsak	Belgaum	Weekly	Abáji Rámchandră Sávant; Hindu (Marátha); 54.	540
96	Chitramayă Jagat	Poona	Monthly	Rámchandră Vásudev Joshi; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhman); 30; and Shankar Narahar Joshi; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhman); 41.	10,000
97	Daily Report	Chopda (East Khándesh).	Weekly	......	...
98	Din Mitră	Somthána (Ahmednagar).	Do.	Mukund Ganpat Pátil; Hindu (Máli); 30	600
99	Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	Vishnu Vithal Mantri; Hindu (Gaud Sáraswat Bráhman); 52.	600
100	Hasya Vinod	Bombay	Do.	Vishwanath Purshottam Pendharkar; Hindu (Karháda Bráhmin); 41.	1,500
101	Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Do.	Káshináth Bahirav Limaye; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman); 66.	200
102	Jágaruk	Poona	Do.	Valchand Ramchand Kothari, B.A. (Jain); 26.	200
103	Jagad Vritt	Bombay	Do.	Ramrao Balkrishna Kirtikar; (Pathăre Prabhu); 42.	13,000
104	Kalpataru and A'nandvrit	Sholápur	Do.	Govind Náráyan Kákade; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhman); 60.	450
105	Karmanuk	Poona	Do.	Hari Náráyan Apte; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman); 49.	3,400
106	Kesari	Do.	Do.	Narsinh Chintáman Kelkar, B.A., LL.B.; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman); 44.	20,000
107	Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia (West Khándesh).	Do.	Yádav Bálkrishnă Bahálkar; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhman); 51.	500

No.	Name of Publication.	Where Published.	Edition.	Name, caste and age of Editor.	Circulation.
	MARATHI—concluded.
108	Modă Vritt	Wái (Sátára)	Weekly	Dámodar Laxman Lele; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman); 38.	50
109	Mumukshu	Poona	Do.	Lakshman Rámchandră Pángárkar, B.A.; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhman); 44.	1,700
110	Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	Rangnáth Vishnu Kále; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman); 37.	300
111	Pancham George Vijay	Belgaum	Do.	Balvant Ramchandra Sohoni; Hindu (Gaud Sáraswat Bráhman); 33.	1,000
112	Pandhari Mitra	Pandharpur (Sholapur).	Do.	Govind Sakharam Bidkar; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhmin); 55.	100
113	Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon (East Khándesh).	Do.	Náráyan Narsinh Phadnis; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhman); 54.	200
114	Prakásh	Sátára	Do.	Rámchandră Ganesh Soman; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman); 41.	350
115	Sahasrakar	Poona	Do.	Valchand Ramachand Kothári, B.A.; Jain Humad; 26.	850
116	Sandesh	Bombay	Daily	Achyut Balwant Kolhatkar, B.A., LL.B; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhmin); 37.	5,000
117	Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Weekly	Krishnáji Hari Limaye; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman); 32.	1,000
118	Shivaji Vijay	Sholápur	Do.	Madvalappa Sangappa Deomule; Hindu (Lingáyat); 32.	700
119	Sholápur Samáchár	Do.	Do.	Vithal Narsáppa Jakkal; Hindu (Telgu Máli); 36.	400
120	Shri Sayáji Vijayă	Bombay	Do.	Dámodar Sávlárám Yande; Hindu (Marátha); 55.	1,500
121	Shri Sháhu	Sátára	Do.	Váman Hari Dhavle; Hindu (Karháda Bráhman); 36.	300
122	Shubh Suchak	Do.	Do.	Dattátrayă Rámchandră Chitale; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman); 38.	250
123	Udyam Prakásh	Wái (Sátára)	Do.	Vishwanath Dhondi Teli; Hindu (Teli); 30.	50
124	Vaidyak Patrika	Poona	Do.	Mahadev Sakharam Date; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhmin); 38.	500
125	Vichári	Kárwár (Kánara)	Tri-monthly	Shaikh Adam walad Shaikh Abdul Karim; Muhammadan (Sunni); 43.	450
126	Vinod	Belgaum	Fortnightly	Dattátrayă Rámchandră Kulkarni; Hindu (Gaud Sáraswat Bráhman); 28.	200
127	Vrittasár	Wái (Sátára)	Weekly	Purushottam Ganesh Vaidyă; Hindu (Chitpáwan Bráhman); 26.	90
128	Vyápári	Poona	Do.	Náná Dádáji Gund; Hindu (Deshasth Bráhman); 61.	500
129	Wárkari	Pandharpur (Sholápur).	Do.	Vithal Keshav Limaye; Hindu (Chitpâwan Bráhman); 45.	300
	SINDI.
130	A'ftáb-i-Sind	Sukkur	Weekly	Sháms-ud-din walad Muhammad; Muhammadan (Abro); 50.	500
131	Al-Amin	Hyderabad	Do.	Shahnavaz Pirzada, B.A.; Muhammadan; 21.	500
132	Al-Haq	Sukkur	Do.	Abdul Aziz Sheikh Mahomed Suleman; Muhammadan; 41.	800
133	Bharat Vasi	Hyderabad	Daily	Viruram Vishindas; Hindu; 36	400
134	Khairkháh-i-Sind	Lárkhána	Weekly	Gurudinomal Tahilsing; Hindu (Khatri); 44.	250
135	Mirpurkhás Gazette	Mirpurkhás	Do.	Gurudinmal Tahiling; Hindu (Amil); 36	600

No.	Name of Publication.	Where Published.	Edition.	Name, caste and age of Editor.	Circulation.
	SINDHI—concluded.
136	Musáfir ...	Hyderabad (Sind)...	Weekly ...	Abdul Wahab Khan ; Pathan ...	900
137	Prabhát ...	Do. ...	Tri-weekly ...	Gopaldás Lekhráj Thadani ; Hindu (Amil) ; 29.	550
138	Sind Mail ...	Hyderabad ...	Weekly ...	Parmanand Rijhumal ; Hindu ; 60 ...	250
139	Sind Sudhár ...	Karáchi ...	Tri-weekly ...	Khánchand Rahtumal ; Hindu (Amil) ; 49...	800
	SINDHI, DEV NAGRI AND SANSKRIT.
140	Hindu ...	Hyderabad (Sind)...	Weekly ...	Lokram Nainarám ; 28 ...	400
	URDU.
141	Islámic Mail ...	Bombay ...	Weekly ...	Saiyad Muhammad Abdulla Khán ; Muhammadan (Sunni) ; 33.	1,500
142	Mufid-e-Rozgár ...	...	Do. ...	Hazi Munshi Mahamad Husein ; Muhammadan ; 46.	3,500
143	Muslim Herald ...	Bombay ...	Do. ...	Sheikh Mahamed Yusuf ; Muhammadan (Sunni) ; 38.	1,200

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the margin of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The system of spelling vernacular words followed in the report is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word as Arunodaya or the well-known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

D. The figures giving the circulation or number of copies published of each newspaper and periodical as furnished by the proprietor are not guaranteed as accurate, and in some instances must be regarded with caution.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Alleged inspiration by the London Times of His Excellency the Viceroy's speech in the Imperial Legislative Council.

Young India (14), 3rd Oct.

1. "One can hardly believe that it is a fortuitous coincidence that in some respects the leading article of the London Times of August 24 should bear a close resemblance to His Excellency Lord Chelmsford's speech of September 5......... It is not, however, difficult to guess that these resemblances may be due to the inspiring presence of some 'wandering ministrels' closely connected with Printing House Square. The Times has made an attempt to withhold from Mr. Montagu the credit which is almost entirely due to him, and certain Anglo-Indian journals, particularly those which have acquired notoriety for their semi-official character, have faithfully re-echoed those sentiments, there is little reason to doubt, on the inspiration of these 'wandering minstrels'. We may be wrong in our surmise; but it would be the greatest calamity to India and England alike, if journalists and super-journalists were ever allowed to pull the strings of Indian Government."

Message (6), 2nd Oct.

2. "The explanation may lie the other way and be the result of a great transfusion of thought. It is well-known that Sir Valentine Chirol has long been under the protecting wings of Lord Chelmsford and his colleagues and having matured his thoughts on the principles of Indian progress, might have communicated them in advance to our contemporary in London. Our contemporary has indulged in its usual 'lot of nonsense' about what the Secretary of State should or should not do when he visits India and here again one is painfully conscious of the resemblance of thought and expression, which too may perhaps be explained as being the result of the presence of 'the wandering minstrel' within the ante-chambers of the Viceregal Lodge.......... This followed by an over-flowing apology for the silence of 'Lord Chelmsford and his colleagues,' conceived in advance in a vein similar to the Viceroy's utterance almost a fortnight later leaves one in doubt whether a secret conspiracy exists between Simla and Printing House Square. It is not and it cannot be a mere accident that these resemblances exist and it is preposterous that public opinion should be influenced by any unhealthy combination or understanding such as seems to exist in this case. Mr. Montagu will do well to take note of the fact as the public in this country will. If Mr. Montagu's visit to this country is to be productive of any good results at all, possible political wire-pullers harboured at the expense of the public should be cleared out of the country. The change of regime at the India office must needs be followed by a change of the angle of vision towards 'wandering minstrels,' whose presence is not only resented by the public, but is a sign of weakness on the part of the Government of India."

The Honourable Pandit Malaviya's resolution in the Imperial Legislative Council regarding Indian element in the I. C. S.

Hindusthán (20), 2nd Oct.

3. The Hindusthán considers the resolution moved by the Honourable Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya in the Imperial Legislative Council to the effect that not less than one-half of the total number of posts in the cadre of the Indian Civil Service should be thrown open to Indians, as one that had the full sympathy of the Indian public. It is of opinion that the British character of Government would not have been affected in the least by the adoption of the resolution which would have gone a great way in allaying the discontent prevailng in the country. It expresses the hope that Mr. Montagu will give a careful consideration to the grievances of Indians in the matter of their share in the public services of the country and devise steps to do justice to the claims of India.

Suggestion that the Secretary of State should not visit Bombay in Christmas week.

Indian Social Reformer (3), 7th Oct.

*4. "A Press Note issued last week announces that Mr. Montagu will accompany His Excellency the Viceroy on a visit to Bombay between the 24th December and 2nd January next. We should like to bring it to the notice of His Excellency that this is the time when the Congress and the other important annual Conferences will be in session at Calcutta and that this arrangement places many men, who take an interest in public affairs from different points of view, under the necessity of either absenting themselves from the annual Conferences or foregoing the opportunity of meeting the Secretary of State. The object of Mr. Montagu's visit, we think, can be best served by his making Calcutta his headquarters during Christmas week. He will be able to meet there many leaders who will be attracted to Calcutta not only by the National Congress, but by the Social Industrial and Theistic Conferences, by the Muhammadan Educational Conference and other public functions which generally take place about the time at the place where the national gatherings are held every year. We are sure that the matter has only to be brought to the Viceroy's notice to receive sympathetic attention."

H 303—3 CON

Comments on the recent meeting of the European Association of Calcutta.

Indian Social Reformer (3), 7th Oct.

5. "We do not believe and have never believed in politics as the highest or most worthy form of human activity, and what little experience we have had of it has not in the least tended to alter our opinion. Nevertheless, we are forced into politics, so to speak, in self-defence. Since Lord Lytton's viceroyalty, the Government of India with a few short interludes has been steadily tending to become a department of the British Government, swayed by the same Parliamentary and sectional interests, and, in consequence, less of the Government of India in the interests of the Indian people. The tradition of the great succession of Governors-General and Viceroys, Bentinck, Dalhousie, Canning, Lawrence, Mayo, Northbrook, came to an end when Lord Lytton came out with orders to repeal the cotton duties. One has only to compare the public utterances of the earlier Viceroys with those of the later to realize the revolution that has taken place in their position. We quote the following sentences from one of Lord Mayo's public speeches, because it is typical of the way in which the earlier Viceroys regarded their position in this country. 'In the consideration of all these matters', said the illustrious Viceroy, 'we must first take into consideration the inhabitants of this country. The welfare of the people of India is our primary object. If we are not here for their good, we ought not to be here at all.' He would, indeed, be a bold Viceroy who would dare to speak thus in these days. Lord Mayo would have made short work of Sir William Vincent's 'distinct understanding' to European tradesmen and planters who do business in this country.......... We say the steady tendency to subordinate the interests of India and the Indians to that of the official and non-official Europeans in India is responsible for the origin and is a raison d'etre of Indian politics. And that, too, is the reason why we who dislike politics as much as Mr. Ironside, are forced to devote a large part of our time to the study of political questions. Until this tendency is definitely and finally checked there can be no social progress and no spiritual growth."

Bombay Samáchár (59), 1st Oct.; Hindusthán (20), 29th Sept.; Sánj Vartamán (31), 29th Sept.

6. Commenting upon the proceedings of the meeting recently held at Calcutta by the European Association, the Bombay Samáchár characterises as ill-placed the opposition raised at the meeting against the release of Mrs. Annie Besant and against the task Government have set before themselves of framing a scheme of political reforms to be introduced in India. The paper observes that the interests of the European community, for the safety of which the European Association has been so very apprehensive, have not yet been imperilled in any manner and adds that for effectually safeguarding those interests the Europeans would do well to throw aside their present attitude of opposition to the Indian demands and to heartily co-operate with the Indians for the mutual benefit of both the communities. [The Hindusthán remarks that the cry raised at present by the European Association is the outcome of an excited imagination and believes that it will not receive weight from any quarter. It maintains that Indians have no objection to Europeans setting forth their demands and to justice being done to them but adds that the European Association has, in doing so, exceeded all proper bounds. It remarks that their present attitude clearly shows how far they intend to contribute in bringing about the calm atmosphere desired by Lord Chelmsford. The Sánj Vartmán remarks that the present agitation which the Anglo-Indians have raised in spite of the Viceroy's assurance that in considering any scheme of reforms the interests of all parties and communities will receive the attention of Government is of a more violent kind than the agitation carried on by the worst type of Indian Extremists. The paper writes :—These boisterous persons, though they claim to be the well-wishers of the British Empire, have no faith in the promise given by the representative of the King-Emperor. We hope that His Excellency the Viceroy will bring them to their right senses by administering to them a few words of advice.]

Young India (14), 3rd Oct.

7. "So far as Indians are concerned, we venture to assert that they do not need to be told that the European vested interests view with alarm, amounting to positive dismay, the increasing assertiveness of public opinion and the more than usual deference, which even such a body as the Government of India has at last been compelled to show to it. This state of things is not certainly conducive to the continuance of the monopoly which European capital has exclusively enjoyed in this country for more than sixty years.......... We are perfectly well aware that the orientalised European is not eager to embrace the brown or black skinned native as his brother; though for the sake of political expediency, he is not slow in dubbing him as his equal fellow subject. He would not be sorry perhaps to kick him and spurn him as if he were worse than a dog, the moment it becomes a practical question.......... All that we can at present say is that if these shortsighted people are allowed to produce a tearing and raging campaign against Indian reform, they may rest assured that Indians will be in no mood to make light of the nonsense which these people are permitted to indulge in or treat it with the contempt which it so richly deserves and remain idle. That position it is no longer possible to maintain, nor is it reasonable to believe that Indians will allow their elementary rights to be determined according to the conveniences of Anglo-Indian vested interests. The issue is now too plain to be confused. India must in future be governed primarily in the interests of Indians themselves, and any other interests must needs share a secondary consideration." [Elsewhere Mr. L. G. Khare writes :—"Those estimable beings who exist in this country to supply us with whiskey, and wines, to import into this land motor cars, and shoddy Brummagem ware, and to take away from it the wheat and the cotton it grows—they are on the ramp. Their apologists in their press are pretending to be concerned—not about the welfare of the European merchant, you know, but about the welfare of the inarticulate millions in India for whom the hearts of the Pioneer and of the Englishman and of the planter in Champaran and of the European merchant who sells you his whiskey and fits you up in the latest sartorial monstrosity bleeds—simply bleeds. They are trying their best to shield the poor Indian ryot from the ravages of the Zamindar, the pettifogging lawyer, and the artful Home Rule agitator. So they are on the ramp."]

Rást Goftár (30), 7th Oct., Eng. cols.; Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 7th Oct., Eng. cols.

*8. "Is it for a handful of foreign traders to define the rights of the people of India and to lay down what rights shall be conferred on them and what not?......... We can only say that they must be blind to the signs of the times, and they have no conception of the strength of the national forces that have come into being in India. The World War is being fought for the rights of nations, and here we have a microscopic minority declaring that the people of India, a whole nation, have no rights. An agitation of this kind carries its own defeat with it." [The Kaiser-i-Hind remarks :—"It is to be sincerely desired that opinion in England, fired by the past traditions and the ideals of the present war, will definitely snub all pompous arrogance on the part of retired Anglo-Indians, and thus show that the petty class interests of Anglo-Indians shall not be allowed to triumph at the expense of British statesmanship and British justice. If Anglo-Indians are sincerely of the opinion that Home Rule would do more harm than good to India, it behoves them to rally the true moderate Indian opinion to their side. But they will not win this co-operation by ungenerous and unbalanced attacks against one of the most popular Secretaries of State that India has ever had."]

Message (6), 2nd Oct.

9. A contributor to the Message quotes from Sir A. Birkmyre's speech and remarks :—........ "Sir Archy's speech was saturated with this noxious idea, among others, that Europeans meant the best element in India: 'it is common knowledge to all, that the greater part of the commerce of India, that the basis of her prosperity, is controlled and financed by Britishers.' That is of course true—and just because that is true, I go in for Home Rule. It is an unnatural, unjust and unbeneficial system which allows foreigners to usurp the control of the commerce of the country. British capital and British enterprise may be utilised in India but it should not be allowed to have a preponderating influence as it has hitherto been allowed to have."

Kesari (106), 2nd Oct.; Sandesh (118), 4th Oct.; Dnyán Prakásh (36), 2nd Oct.; Prakásh (116), 3rd Oct.; Subodh Patrika (42), 30th Sept.

10. Really speaking what cause is there for anyone to be dissatisfied with the release of Mrs. Besant and the consequent blessings of the people earned by Government? We have to admit regretfully that there are some such mischief-mongers and among them there are some who call themselves Moderates. But to-day we intend to write about a big party of Anglo-Indians formed to protest openly against the release of Mrs. Besant. They are not satisfied with mere press-criticisms. They have begun a regular campaign against the Government policy of reforms. European officials cannot speak anything however obnoxious the Government policy may be to them. They speak through this party. The European Defence Association was originally formed to defend European accused if any. Though the old name has been dropped it works on the old model of protecting the honour of Europeans. Europeans engaged in commercial and industrial pursuits do not pay attention to the good of India and to its general administration. They move only when there is a question of Europeans versus Indians and we may infer that their agitation forebodes evil to India. [The paper here proceeds to give a description of European agitation against the Ilbert Bill.] The present-day Anglo-Indians have not gone to the length of anti-Ilbert Bill agitators. But we must also remember that they have no cause for agitation as compared with Ilbert Bill days. In what way are Anglo-Indians harmed if Mrs. Besant is released? Similarly if a few rights of swarájya are granted to Indians in what way will the privileges of Anglo-Indians be endangered? The Anglo-Indians in India represent the Conservatives in England. Whenever any question of granting even the smallest rights to Indians is started Anglo-Indians draw their sword using their loyalty as a shield. The major portion of Europeans in India lives in cities and some live in the jungle. European officials are mere birds of passage. They are concerned very little with the grant of full swarájya in connection with local bodies and provincial councils. Railways, Customs, etc., are left to the Imperial Government which is not likely to come under the control of the elected Councillors in the near future. What cause is there then for the European cry that they are ruined? The Anglo-Indian interests would be taken care of and they have no reason to argue that they would be destroyed if swarájya were granted. At present Europeans and Anglo-Indians get beyond their due Government posts and rights. If at all they would be reduced a little, there is no question of any injustice being done to Europeans and Anglo-Indians. So long as final control will be in the hands of Europeans, Europeans will get precedence beyond what is their due and also Anglo-Indians according to the proportion of European blood in their veins. They should remain content with this much. Indians have to bear this differentiation so long as final power is in the hands of Europeans. With reference to the Calcutta Town Hall meeting of all sorts and conditions of Europeans, may we ask, what right have Greeks, Armenians, Jews, etc., who have come over to India and who are after money, to put a spoke in the wheel of Indian swarájya? [The Sandesh refers to Sir Archibald Birkmyre's argument that the British must have control over the internal affairs of India because much of their capital is invested therein and points out that British money is also invested in many other countries and that no such condition was imposed when the money was originally invested. It further adds :—The profits of these merchants may be reduced a little if Home Rule is granted; but is Mr. Montagu to arrest permanently the growth of the strength of the British Empire in order to preserve the interests of a few merchants? The Dnyán Prakásh follows the Kesari in its comments and says that the interests of Europeans are closely watched from the moment they are born and even when they stand in the dock. It adds :—What more do they want? If they persist in their agitation we shall have to pay them in the same coin and the calm atmosphere of India will be disturbed. But the responsibility of it will not rest with us but with Europeans and Anglo-Indians who are pampered by Government. The Prakásh refers to the writings in the Madras Mail and the meeting of Europeans and says that Indians should not submit to the cry of Anglo-Indians and that they should expose the character of their movement and show that it is based on a selfish policy harmful to others. The Subodh Patrika says that it is good that Anglo-Indians declared that their interests differed from those of Indians, and remarks that European interests should be looked after but that the interests of crores of people should not be sacrificed to those of a handful of Europeans.]

The release of Mrs. Besant.

Vrittasár (129) 1st Oct.; Sandesh (118), 30th Sept.; Hásya Vinod (101), 1st Oct.; Dnyánodaya (35), 4th Oct.

11. Mrs. Besant's release has created great satisfaction throughout the whole country. Everyone will be gratified that constitutional agitation had the desired effect and that Government have at last curbed their own repressive policy. Mrs. Besant's release is indeed a great triumph of popular opinion and carries us nearer to our goal. The event has created unprecedented unity amongst all classes of the people who now proclaim with one voice that swarajya is their birthright and that they must have it. Persons like Mrs. Besant help the cause of the country by sacrificing their liberty. Her Home Rule League has secured thousands of adherents, many of whom are prepared to adopt passive resistance to promote the welfare of the country. We trust Mr. Montagu will not allow his judgment to be influenced by the Anglo-Indian outcry, but take the popular leaders like Mr. Tilak and Mrs. Besant into his confidence when he comes to India. We would also request Government to release all other persons interned under the Defence of India Act. [The Sandesh writes :—We must not abate our agitation or relax our efforts which have procured for us the liberty of Mrs. Besant. Mr. Montagu must realise the genuineness of our agitation when he comes here. The Hásya Vinod doubts the bonâ fides of Mrs. Besant's remarks that it is not quite correct to say that her release is a triumph of popular opinion as she has not been released unconditionally. The Dnyánodaya considers Mrs. Besant's message to New India to make sober comments as an admission that the paper occasionally indulged in intemperate language.]

Hitechhu (65), 23rd Sept.

12. The release of Mrs. Besant signifies the triumph of our legitimate political agitation. The agitation for Mrs. Besant's release has convinced Government that the public are in full sympathy with her. We must, therefore, congratulate the public on their having thus secured a substantial step in the direction of Swarájya. It is still a long way to Swarájya and the release of Mrs. Besant should give a further stimulus to the Home Rule movement. The Home Rule League and its various branches should direct their attention, in the first instance, to the question of the many Indians who have been interned under the Defence of India Act and move for their release.

The Secret of Mrs. Besant's power over Indians.

Hindu Missionary (38), 1st Oct., Eng. cols.

13. The Hindu Missionary publishes an article by Mr. Sutcliffe on Mrs. Besant in the course of which he remarks :—"No one but the mystic can really reach the Indian heart, which is essentially of the mystic, and Mrs. Besant possesses that heart. She will be known in future as the Mother of India, the India that will be free, for on that freedom she has set her heart and for that freedom she has devoted her life. To the Indian there is nothing more sacred than a mother, at whose domestic shrine all alike must worship. To cast aspersions upon the mother, is the greatest of all insults to the Indian.......... Her former opponents even immediately rally to her side, for, this filial instinct is an irresistible force in the Indian heart. The internment was a master stroke, not of men but of gods, and against these Olympian forces, the opponents of India's emancipation are pitting their puny strength. Let them beware."

Plea for a general amnesty for political prisoners.

Mahrátta (5), 7th Oct.

*14. "Neutrality in religious matters is a very good principle for the British rulers. It is the only principle that will pay. We beg to submit that the attitude of the Government of India in respect of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali is absolutely inconsistent with this paying principle of religious neutrality. We hope that our Government will reconsider its decision and make up its mind to set free the Moslem brothers who are badly wanted by their community and the nation. The New Era, one of the leading Moslem journals, voices the opinion of the Moslems and—we dare say—non-Moslems also when it says that our leaders should refuse to co-operate with Mr. Montagu when he comes here until the two brothers are released. Co-operation ought not to be expected from people whose earnest prayers for the freedom of their beloved leaders remains unheard by the authorities.......... But should we be satisfied with having back 'the three' and 'the two'? We do not see any reason why we should be. The Irishmen have set us an example which we shall do well to follow in this matter.......... Some may fear that if Indians press for the grant of a general amnesty with obstinate persistence, refusing to co-operate unless this their demand were granted, Mr. Montagu might not come at all or having come might go back displeased. Let us assure these doubting friends that if the National Leaders—the leaders of the Congress and the Moslem League and other Bodies holding views in harmony with and supporting the Congress-League views—if these leaders can co-operate in refusing to co-operate with Mr. Montagu, unless and until the proclamation of a general amnesty was issued, we, instead of being ill-thought of, will surely be looked upon by Mr. Montagu and men of his nation as worthy fellow-citizens of the proud Britisher, and our demands will command a respectful consideration at their hands.......... So let us declare with all the force at our command that the grant of a general amnesty is the sine qua non of any co-operation with Mr. Montagu."

Message (6), 4th Oct.

15. "X" writes to the Message :—"We now plead for a general amnesty for all our political prisoners not in the light of a legitimate demand emanating from the birthright of every free citizen to have his own ideas of Society and Statecraft—though that too may not be irrelevant here—but from the point of view of pure reason. Justice demands no two separate treatments for the same subjects of His Imperial Majesty the King Emperor. When a certain praiseworthy concession is given to an open revolutionary in Ireland, there is no reason whatever to deny the same concession to a meek Indian political agitator."

Agitation for the release of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali.

Young India (14), 3rd Oct.; Message (6), 29th Sept.

16. "Sir William Vincent's reply regarding the release of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali has already caused profound disappointment among all classes of Indians.......... We are constrained to regard the justification put forward here as an attempt at evading the issue and it seems to us that Government have fallen victims to the virulent and unhealthy agitation among the European commercial magnates in this country."

[The Message writes :—"Whatever the Government may have to say, the reply is uncovincing not only to Muhammadans but to all the other communities. We are afraid Sir William Vincent's laconic statement coupled with the Viceroy's omission of reference to their case suggests to one's mind the too obvious inference that the Government of India has allowed itself to be overpowered by the bluff and bullying of Anglo-Indian agitators.......... The appeal which His Excellency addressed in the hackneyed spirit of Macaulay's lines—'Then none was for a party, then all were for the State'—might well have been addressed to jute bag politicians and drug vendors and obsessed bureaucrats rather than to the whole Council or community. We, for one, extremely regret that the policy of conciliation was not carried to its legitimate conclusion."]

Muslim Herald (145), 28th Sept. and 5th Oct.

17. In the course of an article on the Bakr Id when Muhammadans offer sacrifices of animals the Muslim Herald observes as follows:—An ordinary sign of their (the Hindus') resolution, perseverance, and true patriotism is that they did not allow Government to keep Mrs. Besant interned for one month (sic), and compelled Government to release her. Mrs. Besant is at large again! A few well-wishers of the Muhammadan community such as Messrs. Mahomed Ali, Shaukat Ali, etc., lost their liberty over a year ago. Why did they lose it? For the sake of the community. Alas! no Musalman was moved by it. It is rumoured that they will also be released, not because the Muhammadans have laboured (in their behalf), but because our fellow-brethren have interceded for them. Shame, shame! [In a subsequent issue the paper refers to the refusal of Government to release Messrs. Muhammad Ali and Shaukat Ali, and declares that the Musalmans regard them as true followers of Islam and ardent lovers of their community. It is of opinion that Muhammadans believe that the charges levelled against the brothers are due to a misunderstanding and to misleading information, and it is amazed to find that Government accuses them of harbouring sympathy with the King's enemy. It avers that if the reference is to the Turks, there is no Muhammadan who does not sympathise with the Turks owing to community of religion, and refers to the telegrams by which the two brothers and others tried to dissuade the Turks from joining in the war. It questions if a Muhammadan can be interned merely because he sympathises with others of his own religion. It proceeds to point out that while Government refuses to release them, the Hindus are engaged in holding meetings, expressing sympathy with the detinues, requesting Government to set them at liberty. It also notes that Government have released Mrs. Besant after a short period of internment while the two brothers have been confined for two and a half years. It states that the Musalmans have begun to infer that might is right, that the agitators are bound to reap a reward of their efforts while the silent loyalists will be snubbed. It inquires if Government's obduracy and the Hindus' sympathy can bear any other fruit except the coalescence of the Muhammadans and the Hindus. The paper also refers to the revocation of the original partition of Bengal and the Balkan War both of which put a great strain on the loyalty of the Muhamadan subjects of the Crown, and draws particular attention to the decision of the Government of Bombay in respect of the teaching of Urdu, the common language of Indian Musalmans, which, it declares, will sweep it into oblivion. These and similar actions of Government, concludes the paper, are fanning the wrath of the Muhamadans, and the elders of the community who used to counsel moderation and preach loyalty have been forced to hold their tongue.]

Gujaráti (16), 30th Sept.; Sánj Vartamán (31), 4th Oct.; Bombay Samáchár (59), 5th Oct.

18. The Gujaráti is sorry to see that Government have not seen their way to release Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali on the guarantee which they offered instead of the one required by Government, and which in its opinion fulfils all the conditions of the official guarantee and suggests that Government should accept the guarantee offered to them by the two brothers, as there is nothing in the teachings of the Qurán which would debar a true Muhammadan from being a loyal British subject. [The Sánj Vartamán is of opinion that the two brothers have never expressed any sympathy with the enemy and asks Government to lay before the public any evidence they may be in possession of to prove their allegations. It sees no substantial difference between the guarantee offered by the brothers and the one required by Government. It refers to the teachings of the Qurán which require its followers to be loyal to their rulers and asks Government to release the two brothers without undue delay. The Bombay Samáchár on the other hand is of the opinion that the two brothers are ill-advised in not signing the guarantee required by Government and expresses the hope that they will see their way to secure a release by acceding to the wishes of Government. It reminds the two brothers of the solicitude shown by Government for respecting the religious susceptibilities of Muhammadans and asks them to help Government to calm the political atmosphere by securing their release.]

Gujaráti (16), 7th Oct., Eng. cols.

*19. "The authorities have arrived at a serious decision and must have in their possession facts and circumstances that have influenced their course of action. If so, there can be no harm in placing them before the public at large. It is a pity that an officer of the C. I. D. should have been asked to obtain the necessary undertaking from the two interned brothers. .... The Indian public is not prepared to prefer the reports of the C. I. D. to the statement made by the Rajasaheb of Mahmudabad that he was thoroughly satisfied, as the result of the interview he had with the two brothers, that they were absolutely loyal to the British Crown. That is further confirmed even by the assurance given in the draft of the undertaking they were prepared to give. Their assertion of their 'allegiance to Islam' was no doubt uncalled-for and has created needless difficulties and misunderstandings. But Government need not have attached any secret meaning to this reservation and supplied an occasion for complaining that the detinues were not given the liberty to profess their adherence to their Islamic faith. We do not think Government can possibly have any such intention. But the wide gulf that separates the rulers and the ruled and the readiness of the authorities to attach exaggerated importance to the one-sided reports of the C. I. D. are productive of grievous blunders, and the present blunder is of that type. We are really sorry the Indian atmosphere which bade fair to improve vastly for the better before Mr. Montagu's arrival is again going to be stirred up by hot currents of excited feeling. If Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali have shown less tact and prudence than one had a right to expect from them, we cannot say Government on their part have shown sufficient tact and foresight in handling the situation."

Indian Social Reformer (5), 7th Oct.

*20. "The Director of the Criminal Intelligence Department, Sir Charles Cleveland, sent down a draft by the hand of one of his officers which the interned brothers were requested to sign, but they preferred to make a draft of their own which, evidently, Government could not accept. So far as we can see, the only difference between the two is that, while Sir Charles Cleveland's does not make any mention of the religious duties incumbent on followers of Islam, the other draft gives prominent place to them and makes the undertakings embodied in the first draft depend upon their allegiance to their religious faith. Unless, therefore, we are to assume—which there is no reason to do—that there are any obligations of Islam likely to come in the way of their due observance of their promises to refrain from saying or doing anything of the nature referred to, we do not see why the incorporation of the clauses relating to their religious faith, should have been regarded as detracting from the value of the document. We are inclined to think that the Government of India should not accept the views of the Criminal Investigation Department on this point. We do not ourselves see that there is any special relevancy in introducing reference to religious beliefs in a document of this kind, but the two brothers would seem to have dedicated themselves to the service of Islam and to persons whose lives are so dedicated such allusions come naturally. Why not request some independent non-official gentlemen, say, Sir Stanley Reed, to see the brothers and ascertain from them what precisely they mean by their religious obligations? It is no use sending down C. I. D. men, as few Indian gentlemen like to have to explain matters to them. The individual officers are, no doubt, good men and true, but the Service is odious in the sight of the Indian people."

Kesari (106), 2nd Octo.; Sandesh (118), 2nd Oct.

21. The Kesari condemns the Government attitude towards the question of the release of Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali as wholly mistaken and says that the very fact that Government sent an emissary to negotiate the terms with the interned shows that the offence of Mahomed Ali was of a minor character and was pardonable and remarks :—Government say that they cannot release these interned leaders as they sympathise with the Caliph, the enemy of the British. Why should Government make a mountain of the molehill when the leaders are willing to give a guarantee that they would do nothing harmful to the Allies or helpful to the enemy? Their sympathy will exist only in their minds. Why should not Government earn the satisfaction of seven crores of Muhammadans by the release of Mahomed Ali? The sympathy of Mahomed Ali does not come in the way of his loyalty. Though politically Muhammadans are very loyal subjects of King George V they cannot forget their religion or cease to take pride in it. The intention of Government to maintain a calm atmosphere in India pending the visit of Mr. Montagu will not be so much gained by the internment of these leaders as by their release. [The Sandesh says :—Sham Sunder Chakravarti, Arjunlal Sethi, Rai Govind Prasad of Ajmer and Hajrat Mohani and many other leaders have been interned, but they have not been accused by Government of sympathising with the enemy. The case of hundreds of youths interned and unknwn to fame is the same. We do not know what comes in the way of their release.]

Passive resistance should be resorted to if political prisoners are not released.
Mahrátta, (5), 7th Oct.

22. Referring to the business before the All-India Congress Committee the Mahrátta writes :—"Then there is the question of passive resistance which was referred for opinion to the Provincial Congress Committees and on which the opinion in the country is somewhat divided........., Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali are still un-released, in spite of assurances from accredited Indian leaders as to their future course of conduct. There are still hundreds of Indians suffering as political convicts or political suspects. To leave these sons of the Motherland rotting in their holes and huts, when there is going to be a momentous discussion over the future of the land and the people they have so ardently loved and worked for (may be in an over-enthusiastic 'rebel' manner in some instances) is, to say the least, disgraceful.......... Whatever may be reasonable and honourable from the standpoint of the authorities. from our standpoint it is neither reasonable nor honourable to busy ourselves in a perfervid manner over the preparations for the promised Feast, without doing our very utmost to bring back our brothers-in-the-Cause to share with us the joy of this Hopeful Period for the coming of which they tried in their own way."

Appeal to the authorities to release two interned Sind Muhammadans.
Sind Moslem (11), 22nd Sept.

23. Pleading for the release of Mr. Shaikh Abdul Majid, the interned editor of Al-Amin, the Sind Moslem remarks :—"Now that nearly ten months have passed away the release of the five leaders has created hopes that the Honourable Mr. H. S. Lawrence who is considered a 'Ma Bap' by the Muhammadan community of the province, will exercise that Royal magnanimity and arrange for his immediate release...... Another internment to which we should like to refer at this moment is that of Maulana Maulvi Mahomed Sadik Sahib of Khadda (Karáchi). He was the religious guide of some thousand people residing at Khadda, Karáchi, and other places. His internment was ordered some two years ago and it is high time that royal clemency be exercised in his case too."

Urgency of a political deputation to England.
Mahrátta (5), 7th Oct.

24. "We give elsewhere some passages from letters written by Mr. Joseph Baptista to the Secretary of the Indian Home Rule League.......... We would draw particular attention to the suggestion of Mr. Baptista that our representatives, at least some of them, must be in England in November. He points out that the objection that the British people do not want to hear anything about anything except the War is not well-founded. They want to hear about India, and the Indian demands. It is important that they should know about our minimum—the Congress-League Scheme. If we have to gain our object through the sympathetic co-operation of the British people, and if we have to gain it at an early date, immediately after the war or even before its termination (if possible), it is not at all too soon now to think of agitating in England......... It will be well for our leaders to go to England from another point of view. We want a general amnesty for our politicals. From the known attitude of the Government of India in the matter of the release of political prisoners, internees and detinues, it seems more than obvious that our demand for a general amnesty will not be granted without some powerful agitation in England. Mr. Montagu may himself be in favour of doing everything to bring about 'a calm atmosphere', but it is not in the interests of Anglo-India and even the bureaucracy to have such an atmosphere in this country. Hence difficulties are being placed and will be placed in the way of the demand for the release of even our revered leaders like Messrs. Mahomed Ali, Shaukat Ali and others."

Caste representation on the reformed Councils.
Mahrátta (5), 7th Oct.

25. "A Lingayat Nationalist writing in the Times of India urges very strongly that the privilege of special electorates should be bestowed upon the important sub-divisions of the Hindu community such as the Lingayats, Mahratas and Jains. We heartily support this demand. Whatever may be the theoretical merit of putting communal and caste considerations aside in dealing with National political questions, this must be admitted that when the several communities and castes are themselves unwilling to forget these considerations, the latter must have due influence allowed them."

Foreigners have looked more to the interests of the backward classes than the Brahmins.
Jágaruk (new), 28th Sept.

26. Mr. Tilak's is reported to have remarked at Sátára to the following effect:—'Some people oppose the demand for Swarájya on the ground that it would lead to tyranny by the Brahmins. But I ask whether, for the matter of that, the tyranny by our own people would not be preferable to foreign domination?' What a wonderful argument this! Who are these 'our own people' and who are the foreigners? In our opinion those who threw open the gates of knowledge to the backward classes are 'our own people' and the Brahmins who claim social superiority and oppose the efforts of the backward classes to free themselves from their intellectual slavery are the strangers. It is not surprising that the Brahmins should claim the backward classes as 'their own people' as they have always been growing fat at their expense. We thank Mr. Tilak for his sympathy for the backward classes!

Higher officials should be Europeans in the interests of the backward classes.
Jágaruk (new), 28th Sept.

27. Commenting on the Honourable Mr. Shastris' remark at the last Imperial Legislative Council meeting that Brahmin supremacy would be much more welcome to non-Brahmins than British domination, the Jágaruk says:—A more glaringly false and misleading statement than this would be hard to find. Mr. Shastri appears to be entirely ignorant of the conditions prevailing in the villages. We know of the hardships of the poor people there owing to all the officials from the Mamlatdar down to the Kulkarni being Brahmins. We do not think there will be much to choose between Moglai and British rule if the higher European officials are also re-placed by the Brahmins. We are sincerely of opinion that it is to the interests of the masses that the higher appointments should continue to be held by Europeans. To say that the interests of the Brahmins and the backward classes coincide is to distort facts.

Indians must be allowed to carry arms.
Mahrátta (5), 7th Oct.

28. In a lengthy article on the Indian Arms Act the Mahrátta writes:—"Here in our own country we are compelled to go without all manner of things which in England are considered the sine qua non of 'citizenhood'. Here in our own country we see Englishmen and all kinds of foreign and semi-foreign people treated with far more respect and confidence than we are. Here we see them enjoying privileges which are withheld from us. We are, in short—to use Mr. Chamberlain's own words—

'hewers of wood and drawers of water' for our Masters. England need not expect us to tolerate this degradation any longer.......... The Viceroy's assurance that in the matter of arms exemptions based on racial distinctions will be discontinued in the near future (?), though not unsatisfactory as far as it goes, is scarcely calculated to inspire enthusiasm. So long as an Indian in his country is not what an Englishman is in England (and in India), no contentment can prevail in this awakened Land. The matter of the arms is only one of the many vital matters which are now seriously pondered by the people of India. They all raise the question of 'trust in the people'. We demand that England shall trust us, if England cares that we should continue to trust her. We have made it clear—as clear as we could possibly make it—that we mean to maintain our connection with England at all costs—except it mean the progressive degradation of the peoples of this land. To such a degradation England may not expect us to bow with resigned humility. She must hurry up and give us our citizen rights. For any undue delay will lead the Indians to suspect her aims in regard to this country. And the atmosphere of suspicion in these and comming days will be no valuable asset for England."

What Muhammadans are to expect if they unite with the Hindus.
Islámic Mail (4), 23rd Sept., Eng. cols.

29. "We have before us as we write the result of elections for the Central Provinces Legislative Council and regret to find that not a single Muhammadan has succeeded in going up to the Council from any district. Does this not give food for reflection to those who believe that the Hindus are inspired with a genuine fraternising spirit and would sink racial prejudice and religious hatred in order to serve the cause of Indian nationality? If this state of affairs is possible in the Legislative Councils where Government have generously provided adequate safeguards against Hindu monopoly, what may be said of District and Local Councils where the Muhammadans are at the mercy of the Hindus?......... In spite of all the sophistry and false promises of such of our men as have been captured by the Congress party, the Hindus would appear to be determined to cast us aside from any share in the local self-government. In the Local Self-government Conference held recently at Poona the false hopes held out to us by one of their great leaders, who, we regret to say, is a Mussalman, were shattered to pieces and it was openly declared that no communal representation would be tolerated, and past experience has shown that without communal representation no Muhammadan will ever get a seat in the councils or boards.' Not only this, but the implacable attitude of our 'brethren' was further demonstrated in the select committee of the Local Legislative Council which sat to consider the Bill introduced in the Council, when the three Hindu members composing it opposed the principle of Muhammadan representation. May we know how his attitude reconciles with the declaration made at Ahmedabad by the President of the Bombay Provincial Conference that the arrangement arrived at Lucknow will apply with equal force to local boards and municipalities? If the declaration then made by Mr. Jinnah is of consequence, then how can we rely upon other settlements arrived at through him?"

Attacks on some mythological personages held sacred by Hindus.
Political Bhomiyo (71), 14th Sept.; Arya Prakásh (15), 30th Sept.

30. The Political Bhomiyo publishes a rambling letter from a Moslem correspondent in which the writer resents the description of the love affair between Akilkhan and Zaibunnisa, daughter of Aurungzeb, in a Gujarati book, and remarks that these aspersions are cast upon Zaibunnisa on account of the animus the Hindus have against the Muhammadans. He repudiates the charge of being anáryas (i.e., uncivilised) at times levelled against the Musalmans by the Hindus and observes that the following examples will show what type of civilisation the Hindus had in the past. The writer then goes on to inquire what sort of civilisation it could be which permitted Draupadi, whom the Hindus regard as a model of chastity, to marry five husbands, the Pandava brothers. He further inquires what sort of chastity Sita was possessed of when she gave birth to two sons in a wilderness where she was staying with an ascetic. He then goes on to describe how the two queens of King Pandu brought forth the five Pandavas through their connection with the god Yama and others, in order to avoid the effect of a curse which condemned their royal husband to death if he enjoyed his marital rights, and satirically raises the question whether he avoided doing so because of the curse or of his impotence. [As a rejoinder to the above, the Arya Prakásh publishes a letter written by an anonymous writer in which the correspondent bitterly resents the attack made in the above mentioned letter against celebrities of Hindu mythology. He observes that the editor of the Political Bhomiyo, after failing in a number of pursuits for earning his livelihood, has for the last few months started a campaign of fomenting dissension between Hindus and Muhammadans by publishing in his paper a series of anti-Hindu articles. He regards the charges contained in the letter of the Muhammadan correspondent noticed above as a gross defamation of the Hindu religion and remarks that by vilifying the spotless honour of Sita the writer has given the Hindus cause for excitement. He also regards the doubt about the potency of King Pandu as an indecent attack upon him and as a libel of the Hindus and the Hindu religion. The writer observes that the entire tactics of the Political Bhomiyo for some time past have been aimed towards creating feelings of bitterness between the Hindu and Muhammadan communities who have up till now been living in peace at Ahmedabad. He wishes the police to deal strongly with the paper and concludes by observing that small matters like this are calculated sometimes to lead to undesirable results.]

Protest against the continuance of the Viramgam customs line.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 5th Oct.; Sánj Vartamán (31), 29th Sept.; Shri Sayáji Vijay (74), 4th Oct.; Hind Vijay (64), 3rd Oct.

31. Remarking that the levy of the customs duty at Viramgam has not yet been abolished as a result of the Government of India and the Native States of Kathiawar not yet having arrived at a unanimous settlement as to the amount of import duty the States should levy on foreign goods, the Praja Mitra and Pársi declares that the people, in consequence, have to bear the same amount of hardships as before. It observes that if the impost is to be abolished in recognition of the services done and the help rendered by the Native States during the war, as was declared by the Viceroy in the Imperial Legislative Council, there cannot be any condition attached to such a recognition. It maintains that, as the States apprehend, so hevy an import duty as 7½ per cent., which has been suggested by Government, is calculated to injure the development of their trade and commerce. Under any circumstances, the paper advocates an early abolition of this harassing customs line. [The Sánj Vartamán publishes the purport of a letter addressed to it from Rájkot in which a correspondent refers to the continuance of the levy of the duty at Viramgam in spite of His Excellency Lord Chelmsford's statement with regard to its early abolition and remarking that the goodwill of the hundreds of thousands of the Kathiawar people, resulting from the proposed abolition, should be more precious to Government than the revenue of a few thousand rupees, requests Lord Willingdon to issue an order in that connection without any more delay. The Shri Sayáji Vijay, though it does not entertain the slightest doubt about the prospective abolition of the Viramgam customs duty, remarks that the present delay has rendered the levy of the duty more unbearable to the impatient public. It prays Government soon to abolish the duty regardless of the delay that might take place in arriving at a mutual settlement between them and the Native States. The Hind Vijay also wishes that Government should promptly issue an order abolishing the duty and thereby relieve the public of the existing trouble.]

Suggested regulation of prices of foodstuffs by the Government of India.

Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 5th Oct.

32. The Jám-e-Jamshed refers to the steps taken by the authorities in England to check high prices by fixing the prices of commodities such as bread, butter, etc., and asks why the Government of India should not take similar steps in view of the high prices now prevailing in the country and the strikes of low paid employees in consequence thereof. It suggests that an experienced officer should be deputed to study the question of high prices in England and the steps taken to meet them so that he might be able to suggest the lines on which legislative measures might be adopted in India to relieve the distress caused by high prices.

Presidentship of the ensuing Congress.
Young India (14), 3rd Oct.

33. "The opinion all over the country is overwhelmingly in favour of Mrs. Besant's presidentship of the Congress this year, and of the Congress being held in Calcutta.......... We trust the Committee will show due deference to public opinion and act in accordance therewith. By following any other course, it will be setting the country on a path beset with serious dangers to the body politic. In such circumstances, we cannot but regard anyone who tries to thwart the country's deliberate verdict as a traitor to the great cause for which the Congress has laboured for over a generation."

A poem on Home Rule.
Hitechhu (65), 23rd Sept.

34. One Jamiyatram V. Acharya contributes some verses to the Hitechhu to the following effect:—We shall secure the boon of Swardjya by acquiring Home Rule. Dangers shall not abate our devotion or slacken our efforts. Even if the God of Death tries to oppose us we shall continue to cherish high ideals and shall not be disturbed by doubts or fears. We shall cherish the love of God, throw off all restrictions, and worship our motherland. We have become divine by drinking the nectar of patriotism and we shall be free by breaking the bonds of slavery and dependence on others. Unity and self-government shall be our motto and "Our motherland! Our motherland!" shall be our cry. We shall never rest content till we get Swardjya.

Criticism of the Land Revenue policy of Government.
Sind Journal (10), 20th Sept.

35. Discussing the Land Revenue policy of Government, the Sind Journal writes:—"The excessive latitude given to Settlement Officers to fix land revenue assessment leads to much hardship, specially in the case of such parts of the country where the settlement period is guaranteed for a short term as is the case in Sind. The paternal solicitude of Government to keep land revenue questions out of the purview of civil courts is really amusing. The Government of India pleaded for the hands of settlement officers being not tied by rigid rules which means leaving their discretion unfettered by any salutary checks. The right of laying down the principles of taxation and the methods of raising revenue belongs in every country which possesses the blessing of self-government to the Legislature composed of members elected by the people. Here in India the principle is reversed in practice and the Legislature is helpless in the face of executive omnipotence."

The strike of Bombay postmen.
Kesari (106), 2nd Oct.; Indu Prakásh (39), 3rd Oct.

36. Referring to the postal strike, the Kesari says that people are very much inconvenienced and that the postal officials are obstinate. It further remarks that both the parties seem to be determined and that the Bombay public suffers in the fight between the strikers and the officials. It holds that the money spent by the Department in making temporary arrangements could have sufficed to pay the increment asked for, for six months. The Bombay postal strike, it adds, got an increase for the Bombay Police just as the G. I. P. Railway strike got an increase for the mill-hands all-round. Adverting to the argument of the Police Commissioner that the proposals for the increment to the Police were under consideration for the last six months, the Kesari says that the immediate cause for the increase was the postal strike and it finally requests Government to settle the strike of postmen who have worked hard and rendered responsible service on small wages hitherto. [The Indu Prakásh in a general note on the "epidemic" of strikes says that both strikers and officials should consider the questions at issue trustful of each other, that they should not misrepresent one another's objects, that strikes should be prevented by a timely increment and that a lesson should be learnt from the example of the Police Commissioner.]

Gujaráti* (16) 7th Oct., Eng. cols.; Rást Goftár* (30), 7th Oct., Eng. cols.; Hindusthán (20), 5th Oct.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (28), 6th Oct.; Sunday Tatler* (13), 7th Oct.

37. "It is notorious that in Bombay an ordinary workman or labourer does not get less than eight annas and that living has become costly all round. More tactful and sympathetic officers would not have delivered an ultimatum to the men without trying their best to ascertain the real position from the men themselves in a spirit of conciliation and sympathy.......... The Department is now spending huge sums daily on the maintenance of the improvised arrangements which they have devised. In spite of what may be said by the officialised organs, the disorganisation of the postal service in the native town is so great that the inconvenience suffered by the public has become absolutely intolerable.......... Malabar Hill and other fashionable and influential quarters are no doubt well looked after. That was of course a foregone conclusion. The question is how the interests of the vast native population including native traders and merchants are going to be protected by the postal authorities.......... It is all very well for the Bombay Government to issue a Press Note and point out that the postmen are unreasonable, but that does not remove the difficulties of the public. Have Government ascertained what wages an ordinary labourer gets in Bombay and what amount a postman has to spend for rent and the maintenance of even a small family? That would have been a reasonable basis to go upon. It is deplorable beyond measure that whilst mill-owners were able to avert a general strike or conciliate strikers, the authorities of a Government Department should have so completely failed in dealing with a like situation." The Rást Goftár writes:—"The muddle in the postal arrangements is becoming hopeless while the patience of the public has reached the breaking point. The Department is spending money lavishly, but postmen cannot be improvised in a day or even in a month.......... The majority of letters are either not delivered or delivered very irregularly. The service has been thoroughly demoralised and public discontent is growing. Postmen in other parts of India have openly expressed sympathy with the postmen of Bombay, but the Department is heedless of other trouble that may be brewing elsewhere". [The Hindusthán expresses diasppointment with the Press Note issued by Government in the matter of the postal strike. It is afraid the slight increase in the postmen's pay offered by Government will not be sufficient to meet the requirements of the postman and his family during these times of high prices in Bombay and asks the strikers to modify their demands with a view to arriving at a compromise. It bitterly complains of inconvenience caused to the public by the strike and asks the postal authorities to take steps to redress their grievances. The Praja Mitra and Pársi also is disappointed with the Press Note and expresses fear that the strike will be prolonged and cause additional inconvenience to the public. The Sunday Tatler writes:—"The Government of Bombay should be congratulated on having issued its recent Press Communique in good time. It demonstrates the absurdity of the demands made by the postmen and the reckless, shameless and revolting allegations and statements made in a section of the local press.......... We fully sympathise with the men who are sadly misled through the misrepresentations in certain quarters".]

Sánj Vartamán (31), 1st Oct.; Hindusthán (20), 2nd Oct.; Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 4th Oct.; Kaiser-i-Hind (24), 30th Sept.; Rást Goftár (30), 30th Sept.

38. The Sánj Vartamán complains of serious inconvenience caused to the public by the continuance of the strike and alleges that the new arrangements made by the authorities to meet the strike have failed to satisfy the public. It is of opinion that Government have taken a very stubborn attitude in not giving a sympathetic consideration to the demands of the postal peons. It asks Government not to dismiss the peons who have served them for many years and to bear in mind that there is not much difference between the salaries offered to the new employees and those demanded by the strikers. It exhorts the people of Bombay to call a public meeting to protest against the inconvenience caused to them by the continuance of the strike. [The Hindusthán suggests that the authorities and the strikers should meet half way to put an end to the strike. It is of opinion that no good purpose will be served by the strikers adhering to their original demands and asks them to effect a compromise. The Jám-e-Jamshed asks Government to appoint a committee of arbitration to put an end to the strike and the consequent inconvenience that is caused to the public. The Kaiser-i-Hind expresses disappointment with the attitude assumed by the Director General in his interview with the deputation of the strikers and wishes that the strikers who are useful and honest public servants had been treated in a sympathetic manner. The Rást Goftár writes in a similar stain.]

Indians and commissions in the Army.

Dnyán Prakásh (36), 5th and 6th Oct.

39. The Secretary of State declared in the House of Commons on 20th August last that the bar which precluded the admission of Indians to commissions in the Army has been removed. People naturally thought this concession to be almost as great as the promise to grant Swarájya. Those who are aware, however, that this is not the first occasion on which Indians have been made eligible for commissions but that officers of the Imperial Cadet Corps have already received the King's commission before, will not value the present concession very highly. Eleven such Indian officers have already been given the King's commission prior to 1913. What is then meant by saying that nine Indian officers were given the King's commission for the first time on 25th August last? The declaration of the Secretary of State can only be justified on the technical ground that Indians are now made eligible for commissions in 'His Majesty's army' whereas the above mentioned eleven officers belonged to the 'Native Indian Land Forces' which are distinct from 'His Majesty's army'. Although the Secretary of State has thus left a loophole for escape, the question that we have now to consider is whether the step conduces in any way to our progress. It will be seen that it does not, since no new commissions have been issued under the present declaration. We, at any rate, are unable to appreciate the change of commissions from the 'Native Indian Land Forces' to 'His Majesty's army'. The change, however, is important in one respect. Although a definite undertaking was given in Lord Curzon's time that officers of the Imperial Cadet Corps would be treated as the equals of European officers, the Commander-in-Chief subsequently interpreted the commissions to mean that the Indian officers were to remain as regards command junior to all British officers in the regiment. The inclusion of these officers in the Indian Army, however, implies that this racial bar has been removed although Government have not even now given a definite promise to that effect. It is surprising that both the Secretary of State and His Excellency the Viceroy should be instrumental in making the people believe that a new concession has been given to them. [In a subsequent issue the paper suggests that the commissions instead of being confined to a few scions of noble families should be thrown open to Subedar Majors and Risaldar Majors who qualify for them.]

Complaint about recruitment in the Sholápur District.

Kesari (106), 2nd Oct.; Kalpataru (104), 30th Sept.

40. It is but reasonable that people should honour those who join the Army and it brings credit both to the people and Government if Indians realise their duties in the matter of recruiting. A friend from Bársi (district Sholápur) writes to us about the honour done to Bajirao Chimnarao, Deshmukh of Bársi Pargana. He also informs us that a Commission is likely to be given to this Deshmukh and it would encourage Marathas and other Kshatriyas who come forward to assist Government. But we must also make mention of the complaints we have received of undesirable proceedings in connection with recruiting in the Sholápur District. If what we have heard is true, recruiting will not be helped by these things; on the contrary the policy of Government will incur odium. It is said that recruiting is done through the Police in some parts of the district. Government have declared against recruiting men against their will. As the proposals of Government are attractive to ordinary labourers, they will surely enrol themselves. But the credit of getting 100 willing recruits is tarnished by the injustice and tyranny suffered by one unwilling recruit. We hear much of the good or bad name earned by Pandharpur (Sholápur) in this connection. As it is a place of pilgrimage, even single persons go there from distant places in a devotional spirit. Suppose some of these persons are handed over to the recruiting officer by the Police, what redress can they get? The Police are to inquire into any injustice done by the recruiting party. If the Police become themselves recruiting officers, it would be a betrayal of trust. What philanthropic man will come forward to help a man in difficulties at a distant place? What other way is there left for the wife and children of such a person but to weep at home and curse Government? The practice of the Police themselves handing over the people to the Army is so reprehensible that we do not dare to believe that such a report is wholly true. But a copy of a duly signed application personally presented to the Commissioner (Central Division) has been sent to us. How can we say then that it is false? What objection is there to believe that of ten such offences only, one comes to light? We understand that the Commissioner of the Central Division has been made aware of these complaints when he was at Sholápur. Whatever that be, we request Government to inquire carefully into the matter. [A Pandharpur correspondent of the Kalpataru writes that the fear of being forcibly enrolled in the army has apparently scared away young men from the bazar where only women and old men are now to be seen, causing a rise in prices. He adds that this want of labourers has also resulted in the closing down of some factories and in putting other trades to much inconvenience. He suggests that the authorities should make it clearly understood that no one will be enrolled against his will.]

The prisoners in the jails in the Presidency should be utilised for war purposes.
Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 2nd Oct.

41. Expressing a little dissatisfaction at the delay in publishing the Bombay Presidency Jail Administration Report for the year 1916, the Jám-e-Jamshed considers 1,10,000 (being the total number of prisoners accommodated in the Bombay Presidency prisons during the year 1916) to be an alarming figure. It believes that Government would do well to inform, by beat of drum, the class of would-be criminals that every person hereafter sentenced to imprisonment would be sent to the front for the purposes of the war. Why were not, inquires the paper, half the number of those who were fed in the jails at public expense during the year under report sent to Mesopotamia? It further suggests that new prisoners should be employed as labourers for carrying burdens at the docks. The paper believes that the best way of keeping the prisoners, who have been awarded long terms of imprisonment, out of the Presidency is to send them away to the front in battalions.

The Indian public [illegible]ld be taken into confidence about losses at sea.
Indu Prakásh (39), 3rd Oct.

42. Referring to the reticence of the Admiralty to publish an account of losses, the Indu Prakásh says:—It may be that from a naval point of view such information should be kept a secret. But enemy ships also must have gone to the bottom. What objection is there to publish these figures? Would not such publication increase our self-confidence? The information given by the Admiralty relates only to the ships sunk by the enemy. The mails were lost at such a place; the passengers of a particular boat were saved by a particular ship; nothing is heard of a ship that sailed from such a port on such a date. Such items of news have produced a dreadful sense of doubt about the doings of the unconquerable British Navy not only in India but also in England. In Parliament itself some members warned Government not to deceive the people but to lay before them the real seriousness of the situation. Thereupon the Prime Minister and his colleagues gave the necessary explanations. [The paper proceeds to give the shipping losses suffered by the British as given by the Prime Minister on 16th August.] The nett British shipping losses as given by the Germans is 4½ to 5 lakhs of tons per month. We should not forget that the figure is given by the enemy. But how very frightening it is! Mere dry figures cannot give us the idea. The enemy thinks that the British trade will be destroyed if there is such a loss of ships every month. But two ships are constructed for one sunk. [The paper then proceeds to complain that Indians are not taken into confidence and requests Government to trust Indians equally with the British and declares that Indians would then do wonders.]

Alleged possibility of Japan siding with Germany owing to the policy of exclusion adopted by the British colonies towards the Japanese and other causes.
Hindusthán (20), 1st Oct.

43. Under the headlines "Japan's Future" and "Threat of becoming Germany's ally" the Hindusthán publishes the following views alleged to have been expressed by Mr. Kazen Kaghara (?), ex-Editor of the Yorodzu and the Third Empire, during the course of an interview in New York:—The people of the United States are not the only nation who would like to expel the Japanese. There are other nations also who would injure the feelings of the Japanese by expelling them and the worst offender amoung them (in this respect) is England, the ally of Japan. South Africa, Australia and other British Colonies exercise greater stringency than the United States in excluding the Japanese. Japan will have to fight not only with the United States but with all the white nations of the globe to secure for her people admission into the countries inhabited by the Whites on a footing of equality.......... The Japanese nation will be ready to fight the very moment it begins to apprehend any sort of danger to Japan's supremacy in China. For being excluded (from other countries) only a section of the Japanese is anxious to fight. But the other question is one over which the whole nation is unanimous. It is a question of life and death with us. Isolate Japan and you will be able to crush her. But we do not want to let it be crushed without fighting. You know that when the time comes for nations to form new friendships Japan will not be without friends. If the United States, Great Britain and France press us hard we will not hesitate to form friendship with Germany. In Japan there is no enmity against Germany. To tell the truth the Japanese admire Germany. Our army has been formed on the German model. Our doctors are the students of German surgery. There is no anti-German feeling in Japan, and the events of the war have increased our devotion towards the German Government and the German people. In times of necessity we will naturally turn to Germany, and that necessity will arise at the time when her present enemies will dispute our supremacy in the Far East, that is, in China.

Complaint about inadequate steamer service between Bombay and Ratnágiri.
Satyashodhak (119), 30th Sept.

44. The Satyashodhak writes that people are put to considerable inconvenience as only one steamer plies between Bombay and Ratnágiri and passengers for intermediate ports have to wait a whole day at Jaigad for want of adequate steamer service. He says that the dearth of steamers will also affect the Bombay labour market as a large number of people in the Rátnagiri district seek employment in Bombay and suggests that Government should take early steps to release the Co-operative Company's steamers chartered by them.

Need of strengthening the police force in the suburbs of Bombay
Jám-e-Jamshed (23), 2nd Oct.

45. Referring to the dacoity recently committed at Goregaum (a suburb of Bombay), the Jám-e-Jamshed wishes that the police of that place would soon be able to hunt down the culprits implicated in the offence. It remarks that if the suburbs of Bombay are to be colonised for the sake of relieving the congestion in the city, the poor people staying in those parts should be guaranteed the safety of their lives and property. Alluding to the abovementioned dacoity the paper maintains that the incident will spread terror and disappointment among the suburban population. It hopes that, in view of the gravity of the present occurrence, the authorities wiil soon become more vigilant.

Vatandars when acquitted should not be dismissed from their offices.

Karnátak Vaibhav (82), 2nd Oct.

46. Refering to provisions of the Vatan Act disqualifying Vatandars who are convicted for certain offences from holding office, Venkaji Narso Kulkarni writes to the Karnátak Vaibhav.:—There is no provision that if the accused is acquitted he should not be reinstated. But after his acquittal, the Divisional Officer's report against him, recommending him for dismissal for the offences alleged, is sanctioned. For the same offence he is twice punished. He is not allowed even to appoint deputies. When once he is acquitted, he should be reinstated and no departmental action should be taken against him. If it be said that it depends on the discretion of Government to employ a Vatandar or not, even after acquittal, it is requested that departmental action should be first taken against him and that criminal proceedings should not be instituted in the first instance.

Dissatisfaction at the amendment of the rule directing Kulkarnis to pass the Vernacular Final Examination.

Karnátak Vaibhav (82), 2nd Oct.

47. We understand that Government have made a change in the new rules about Kulkarnis and declared that they do not apply to representative Vatandars but only to Deputies. Will the new rule about the necessity of passing the Vernacular Final Examination apply to Deputies who may be sons of representative Vatandars or the representative Vatandars of some other Kulkarniki? If it does, what is the use of the change? If Government want to confer a benefit let them do it completely. Though there is a rule that the regulation should be enforced sympathetically, there will be dissatisfaction among the Kulkarnis. Vatandar Gowdas and Kulkarnis are the only respectable persons in villages. Government do not gain anything by enforcing schemes that will lower their status. Such schemes are not justified in the least at present.

The anti-Home Rule clause should not be withdrawn from the Sind Muhammadans' address to Viceroy.

Aftáb-i-Sind (132), 22nd Sept.

48. "We have every reason to believe that Sind Muhammadans will be highly shocked if the Anti-Home Rule clause is withdrawn from the address and the feelings of the vast Majority of Muhammadans ridden rough shod. The aggrieved Muhammadans may very probably venture to do something to show to the Commissioner or the Viceroy himself that they are against Home Rule and that the address does not represent the entire community but only a small group of Muhammadan Home Rulers. Since the demands of Muhammadans for separate rights have been receiving due consideration at the hands of the Ruler of Sind who has taken a step forward by appointing benches of Honorary Magistrates and by granting full control of Local Board and municipal affairs to the people wherein Muhammadans have received their due share, it will be sheer ungratefulness for Muhammadans to embarass Government at this critical juncture."

EDUCATION.

Comments on the attitude of the Collector of Karáchi and the Commissioner in Sind in the matter of the D. J. Sind College Principalship.

Sind Advocate (9), 20th Sept.

49. "In reviewing the incident at the last meeting of the D. J. Sind College Board, we are most painfully struck by the extraordinary narrow and illiberal attitude of European officials—an attitude that was, we think most disedifyingly and most reprehensibly expressed by the Collector who said that if Mr. Shahani was to be continued even as a temporary Principal he would resign his chairmanship of Standing Committee.......... To be serious, if there was any grain of self-respect in the College Board, Mr. Rieu's threat should have been put to the test and the Board might have improved upon his intention by suggesting that he was quite welcome to resign his chairmanship. What did Mr. Rieu mean by holding out such a threat? And yet we find a public man in the position of the Honourable Mr. Harchandrai so unnerved by that threat that he tamely withdrew his proposition in favour of Mr. Shahani's continuance as Principal. What a pity that such a man should have surrendered an important principle in deference to the rooted prejudices of an unreasonable official! What was the reason urged by Mr. Rieu in support of the attitude he took up? That the discipline of the College had been at a very low ebb in Mr. Shahani's time. That is as far from the truth as is the north pole from the south pole. The discipline in Mr. Shahani's time has, as all Karáchi except a few narrow minded officials is aware, been far better than in the time of his lamented predecessor of whom we would speak nothing disaggreable, but that we are forced to it by the transparently partisan anti-Indian attitude of the Collector and the Commissioner in Sind, the latter having already enacted heroics worthy of the third rate electioneering tactician. In any case the discipline under Mr. Shahani would compare most favourably with that we had known for years before. The former is condemned because he happens to be an Indian while there is nothing but praise for his predecessor because he happened to be a European."

Necessity of having a Government Middle School at Dhárwár.
Shubhodaya (89), 28th Sept., Eng. cols.

50. A correspondent writes to the Shubhodaya:—"Dhárwár bids quite fair to become a University Town in the course of a very few years. This being the case, it is indeed a pity that Dhárwár should not have a model Middle School conducted by Government on modern and up-to-date lines.......... That several of the boys who finish their vernacular course should not even have admission into the first standard in any of the local schools for want of accommodation is really a great pity and the unfortunate children are consequently forced to take private tuition. Permanent residents of the city and Government servants find it sorely distresssing to send their infant sons to schools in distant towns their own big schools thus ruthlessly shutting their doors on them."

MUNICIPALITIES.

Alleged official high-handedness in forcing a house-tax on the people of Lárkána and Rohri (Sind).
New Times (7), 27th and 29th Sept.

51. "We have received a telegram from the Gazette Office, Lárkána, which shows with what high-handedness the Collector has imposed house-tax in Lárkána. The facts are all patent showing emphatically and without the least shadow of doubt that the 'people's voice' is against the imposition of the house-tax. Great excitement prevails at Lárkána, such as has never been witnessed in a mofussil place like Lárkána before. And inspite of five independant leading Hindu and Muhammadan Councillors denouncing the imposition of house-tax and throwing up their seats in protest and 2,000 people of all classes mustering strong outside the Council Hall praying the Collector-president to pity their condition and relieve them from the imposition of a tax which the poor people really consider as haoo-tax, 'The wolf tax', and further showing the futility of imposition of the tax, there being no financial deficit and the Octroi receipts* being quite sufficient to meet the demands, we ask if the proposition is carried with the help of the official members and others who have no interest of the people at heart, shall it not creat great discontent among the people?" [In the course of a contributed article in its issue of the 29th September the paper remarks:—"The moral of this cold-blooded official high-handedness is clear. It points to the hopeless want of political imagination which leads certain officials in this province to deny to the people of towns like Rohri and Lárkána where city Municipalities are soon to come into existence, the elementary right of local self-government, the right to decide through their elected representatives, the manner in which to improve municipal finance, whenever necessary."]

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 12th October 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 41 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 13th October 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

Bombay Legislative Council: Interpellation in the — regarding alleged undue pressure in collecting War Loan 22

British rule :

Anglo-Indian agitation against the Home Rule movement . . . 3 & 5
Comments on the election of Mr. Mahomed Ali as President of the forthcoming session of the Moslem League 20
Comments on the refusal of Government to release Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali . . . . 6—8
Condemnation of communal electorates 13
Government servants and Home Rule politics . . . . . . 16 & 17
Hindu and Mussalman unity 9
India cannot bear even the existing burden of the Indian Civil Service . 15
Mrs. Besant and the Congress presidentship . . . . 18 & 19
Suggested change in the programme of Mr. Montagu 1
The backward classes must press for special electorates . . . 12
There should be a united demand for Swarájya 10
The Viceroy should not accompany Mr. Montagu during his tour . 2
Verses on Home Rule 14
Why Brahmins hanker after Swarájya 11

Excise :

Complaint that there is no salt depôt at Ratnágiri 24
Government should place the liquor traffic under popular control . 23
Indians abroad: Indian indentured labour and the Emigration Conference . 27
Postal Department: The end of the strike of Bombay postmen . . . 25 & 26

Public Service :

Appeal to Government to handle with tact and sincere good feeling the question of the emoluments of Government subordinates in view of the rise in prices 30
Protest against the Government Circular directing Representative Vatandar Kulkarnis to pass the Vernacular Final Examination . 32
The Potgi scale for Kulkarnis should be increased 31
Revenue matters: Comments on the Bijápur Inamdars' petition against the orders directing them to keep a record of rights for their villages . 28
Sind: How Hindu Mukhtiarkars in — suffer through supersession by Muhammadans 29
War: Indians and the grant of army concessions 2

H 309—a CON

PARAGRAPHS.

LEGISLATION—

Comments on the rejection of the Honourable Mr. Patel's bill to amend the Medical Registration Act . . . . 33 & 34

EDUCATION—

Comments on the Government Press Note regarding Urdu education in the Bombay Presidency . . . . 37 & 38
Comments on the Sind College students' strike 35
Motion in the United Provinces Legislative Council regarding certain remarks of Principal Wood of Roorki College 36

RAILWAYS—

Grievances of third class passengers on Indian Railways 39

MUNICIPALITIES—

A complaint against the Dhárwár Municipality 42
An educational complaint against the Bijápur Municipality 43
An outsider should be appointed Chief Executive Officer of the Dhárwár Municipality 41
Comments on the decision of the Bombay Government on the subject of the Bombay Gymkhana boat-house on the Chowpatty Sands (Bombay). 40
Comments on the sanctioning of house-tax by the Larkána Municipality (Sind) 44

NATIVE STATES—

A general strike at Baroda 45

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Suggested change in the programme of Mr. Montagu.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 11th Oct.

1. The Praja Mitra and Pársi urges that the published programme of Mr. Montagu's sojourn in India should be changed so far as his visit to Bombay is concerned. He is expected to be in Bombay during Christmas week when all the public leaders in the whole of India will gather together in Calcutta on account of the sessions there of the National Congress and other Leagues and Conferences. The paper thinks Mr. Montagu should attend these sessions and see for himself what work they do and how they do it, and it thinks that the necessary change in the programme would be made if the All-India Congress Committee and the Moslem League request him and His Excellency the Viceroy to honour their deliberations by their presence.

The Viceroy should not accompany Mr. Montagu during his tour.

Shri Sháhu (121), 3rd Oct.

2. The Shri Sháhau declares that as Mr. Montagu is coming to India to personally ascertain the views of the people with regard to reforms in the administration, it is not at all desirable to allow the Viceroy always to accompany him. It argues that as the Viceroy will always be pressing forward the views of the bureaucracy, Mr. Montagu will have difficulty in giving proper consideration to the representations of the people and therefore expresses its desire that the Viceroy should not accompany the Secretary of State.

Anglo-Indian agitation against the Home Rule movement.

Rást Goftár (31), 7th Oct.; Hindusthán (21), 8th Oct.

3. Commenting upon the recent meeting of the European Association at Calcutta, the Rást Goftár writes:—If in future a conflict takes place in India it will not be between the Hindus and Muhammadáns but it will be between the Indians and Europeans. The Europeans in India do not want any diminution in their privileges or influence. They want to continue in their arrogance in the belief that matters will always remain in the stage they are at present and wish to continue in the enjoyment of the influence they wield to the great prejudice of the interest of the Indian people. Is it not strange that while England is fighting for safeguarding the rights of smaller nations the selfish Europeans in India are opposing the reforms which British Ministers wish to introduce in India. [The Hindusthán deprecates the unfavourable attitude taken up by the Association towards Indian aspirations. It considers this to be due to their not having progressed with the times, and expresses a fear that the Association might come to grief through its advocacy of special privileges for Europeans.]

Message (6), 9th Oct.

4. Referring to the speech of Sir Hugh Bray in the Imperial Legislative Council, the Message remarks:—"The European commercial community may be sympathetic and all that kind of thing. But this will avail them little in the struggle that must ensue for the transfer of power and authority to the rightful claimants—the sons of the soil. India is no longer a Juggernath, whose wheels have stuck up in a political mire. The 'wagon,' as Sir Hugh Bray has delicately called it, is now on dry ground and its move must be commensurate with the times in which we are living. Whether the European commercial interests will it or not, India is at last on the high road to self-government, thanks mainly to the efforts of her own children and she will not stop until she has reached it and obtained the coveted prize."

Mahrátta (5), 14th Oct.

*5. "'No political agitation' is a convenient formula for those who have nothing much to gain and something solid to lose by the success of the agitation. It is the 'status quo' cry of the fat belligerents, put in a form suited to the internal politics of a country. None that has a clear mind and a sound heart, and has a country to raise from a disgraceful status, will ever be taken in by tricks or be frightened out of his straight course by threats and blows proceeding from well-entrenched opponents. He will go on opposing trick to trick and accumulating strength to return blow for blow, in the faith that his God expects all this work of him, urgently and imperatively. Anglo-Indian officials and un-officials are welcome, therefore, to continue their campaign against the 'agitators' of India. The latter are demanding that in their country the will of their countrymen shall count. The whole of the Indian agitation is directed towards the achievement of this single purpose. Whether we are agitating for the release of the interned leaders or for the release of the nation from the restrictions imposed by the present antiquated and oppressive system, we are agitating for the self-same principle, for the triumph of the Will of the people. There is no fear whatever of any men of stuff slackening their efforts for the rightful elevation of the People's Will, because of the 'discontent' that is spreading amongst Anglo-Indians, and the danger which they threaten to the peace of the country in case our agitation succeeds."

Comments on the refusal of Government to release Messrs. Muhammad Ali and Shaukat Ali.
Kesari (106), 9th Oct.; Dnyán Prakásh (16), 9th and 12th Oct.

6. Hopes were entertained that the prejudiced vision of the Government of India would soon become quite clear, but something has happened and Government have declined to release Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali and they have thus bitterly disappointed Indians and especially Indian Muhammadans. Would not Government have released the brothers, if they had signed the Government draft without changing a word? What wrong have they done by adding the words 'without prejudice to our religious beliefs'? When there is a distinct promise in the Queen's Proclamation that none of her subjects will have to suffer anything because of their religious beliefs, why should the Ali brothers remain interned because of their verbal sympathy for their religious head? Had there been anything more against them than the expression of purely verbal sympathy Government would never have thought of a compromise. It is most unstatesmanlike to disappoint people on some trivial ground after carrying on so much negotiation and after so many other things had been done to secure a peaceful atmosphere. How highly Mahomed Ali is held in respect by the entire Muhammadan world can be seen from the fact that he has been elected President of the Moslem League. Is it not time for the officials to question themselves whether they have not been in the wrong? But in India, officials are never in the wrong! They were in the right when they partitioned Bengal and they were also in the right when they annulled it. Similarly with the question of the release of Mrs. Besant. But the same Mahatma who advised these infallible officials to release Mrs. Besant will, we are sure, also secretly advise them to release these two brothers! [The Dnyán Prakásh says that the reasons given by Government for the detention of the brothers are not satisfactory. It also objects to the deputation of a C. I. D. man to negotiate with Mahomed Ali. It remarks however that Mahomed Ali should not have raised the question of religion and also holds that Government too should not have made such a minute inquiry into the matter. It points out that Muhammadans have been bitterly disappointed and requests Government to release the Ali brothers. In a further issue the paper remarks:—When the Raja of Mahmudabad asked Mahomed Ali about his political belief he expressed adherence to the Congress-League scheme and said that he would fight against the Turks, if they invaded India. No other argument is needed to prove that the suspicion entertained by Government about the loyalty of Ali brothers is baseless. We are also surprised that Saiyad Reza Ali was not allowed to interview the interned.]

Akhbár-e-Islám (57), 9th Oct.

7. The Akhbár-e-Islám fully sympathises with the agitation for the liberation of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali and hopes that the difference between the guarantee demanded by Government and the one proposed to be given by the two brothers will be removed by the efforts of the general public. It fails to see, however, what reason the interned had to add the saving clause about their loyalty to Islam, and it thinks it is the duty of the people agitating for their liberation to prove to Government that the clause is really harmless and does not mean what Government understand by it.

Mufid-e-Rozgár (142), 7th Oct.; Islámic Mail (141), 1st Oct., Urdu edition.

8. The Mufid-e-Rozgár publishes an account of the communications addressed to, and interviews held with, Messrs. Muhammad Ali and Shaukat Ali in connection with their projected release, and describes how thousands of Hindus, Muhammadans, Parsis, men and women, undeterred by rain attended a meeting at Kandewadi, Bombay, on the 3rd instant to urge Government to set them free. It confesses its ignorance of why the Muhammadans should not take a leading part in urging such a course of action on Government, and while noting the Hindus' enthusiasm and Muhammadans' listlessness in this matter it declares it to be the prime duty of the internees' co-religionists to try every means for their release. [Referring to the resolution passed at an emergency meeting of the Council of the All-India Muslim League regarding the continued internment of Messrs. Muhammad Ali and Shaukat Ali, the Islámic Mail says:—It goes without saying that the Council of the Muslim League has correctly interpreted the feelings of Musalmans in this matter. The Muhammadan press cannot sufficiently well give expression to the anxiety and consternation now swaying the Musalmans as a result of the continued incarceration of Muslim internees.]

Hindu and Musalman unity.
Political Bhomiyo (71), 5th Oct.

9. The Political Bhomiyo enters at length into the relations between the Hindu and Musalman communities and concludes that the unity said to exist between them is unreal. It says the Hindu politicians have been feigning friendship for Musalmans only in order to make the latter their tools in achieving their own ends. Their efforts, it admits, have been successful so far as to win over a few so-called Musalmans who claim to represent the entire Musalman community in the whole of India. But the community, it continues, does not know who these men are, where they hail from and what views they hold as regards the real tenets of Islam; and it asserts that if a plebiscite were taken the community would clearly show that it has no confidence in these so-called leaders. If these persons, says the paper, cannot save the community from Hindu violence now, how are they going to protect its rights after they get swaráj? The paper then goes on to harp on its usual complaints against the Hindu community as a whole—its alleged jealousy of Musalmans, its contempt and hatred for them, the insulting references made to Islam and Musalmans in books written by Hindus, and so forth.

There should be a united demand for swarájya.
Kesari (106), 9th Oct.

10. The opponents of swarájya may be divided into three classes. The first is that of retired Anglo-Indians who have grown fat on India's money, and even Governors and Viceroys like Lord Sydenham and Lord Curzon help them at times. When the Bill of swarájya will come before Parliament this party will oppose it strenuously and we shall have to fight our last battle with it. Another class which is beside itself at the sight of the flag of swarájya is that of the local Anglo-Indians. But they had to make the request in Council that their interests should be guarded if swarájya is granted. The third class is that of bureaucratic officials. But they are bound by discipline and they have to enforce the policy laid down by the Ministry. They might be doing all they can through confidential reports and through the agency of others. But their open scheming is stopped. Our natural enemies have thus to give up the offensive and adopt a defensive policy. Now there remains the non-Brahmin class which used to oppose a little the demand of swarájya in the beginning, be it through ignorance or misunderstanding or through the instigation of others and envy. But the sphere of their opposition is being contracted as can be seen from the resolutions, passed at various centres by their representatives, approving of swarájya. There are very few demands which can be said to serve the interests of particular classes. When the number of the members of the Bombay Legislative Council will be increased to 100 or 125, can it be said that representatives of all classes can find room therein without any special electorates? Representatives may be assigned to different communities but they should be elected by mixed electorates. Communal representation is a question of distribution; the first thing that should occupy the energies of the backward classes is the demand of swarájya. It is not only desirable but necessary that there should be a united demand for swarájya. We should also see that our different schemes do not come into conflict with that of the Congress. The demand should also be made strenuously.

Why Brahmins hanker after swarájya.
Din Mitra (98), 10th Oct.

11. In the course of an article headed "Why are Brahmins hankering so much for swarájya?" the Din Mitra says:—These days Brahmins are as it were mad after swarájya. These rowdy and restless people do not like the peace and contentment prevailing in the country. The mass of the people want the present system of administration to continue. Then why are these Brahmins agitating for swarájya? If an administration admitted to be the best on the face of the earth exists in this country, why should the Brahmins dislike it? The secret lies in the fact that the establishment of the just British rule by the grace of God, has opened to the other castes the path of elevation and so deprived the Brahmins of the monopoly of power which they exercised in former times, and utilised it to oppress the Shudras. In those times Brahmins guilty even of murder were not hanged, but now they cannot escape the extreme penalty of the law. They are carrying on the present agitation to regain their lost privileges and supremacy and to prevent the non-Brahmins from raising their heads.

The backward classes must press for special electorates.
Jágaruk (102), 12th Oct., Eng. cols.

12. "The Kesari has at last admitted that the backward communities are prefectly justified in demanding special representation, though it is extremely unwilling to admit the desirability of special electorates. But the Kesari has also taken care to implore the non-Brahmins to stop their agitation, since, in its opinion, they are thereby likely to injure the political cause of their country. It is impossible to understand the meaning of our contemporary's warning. If the non-Brahmins or the backward classes form the bulk of the population and if it is essential that their interests should be safeguarded by their being given special representation, how can it be said in the same breath that their agitation is likely to prove injurious to the cause of their country? Perhaps the Kesari has, in its mind, the Brahmanic definition of 'country', according to which India is only Aryavarta or the abode of the Brahmins, while all the other communities are there only as Shudras or servants! Our contemporary seems to be labouring under the delusion that the agitators for special representation will be thrown off their guard and lulled into a sense of security by finding their claims conceded by the most influential of the organs of public opinion in the Maharashtra, while the Kesari will be free to take another somersault at the eleventh hour and oppose the non-Brahmin demand on the ground that the public opinion amongst the non-Brahmins themselves had never been strongly in favour of special representation. The Kesari evidently wants to deter our people from carrying on their agitation vigorously, when it says that they will thereby injure the cause of their country. The plea that communal representation is only a question of distribution and can very conveniently be deferred until after the favourable consideration of the Congress demand, is another dodge. Both the questions must be and can be considered only at one and the same time; and to say that the one is more important than the other is to affirm that the Brahmin rule is more akin to self-government than the one in which all the classes will be adequately represented."

Condemnation of communal electorates.
Shubhodaya (89), 5th Oct.; Rdj Hansa (85), 6th Oct.

13. The Shubhodaya strongly condemns communal electorates and says that no such elections are in vogue in England and that if swardjya is to be modelled on Parliamentary lines, the constitution of the British Parliament should be adopted. It further holds that the best men should be sent to the Legislative Councils and that no communal questions need be discussed in those assemblies. It points out that Brahmins do not form even five per cent. of the Indian population and that they are not likely to be elected, if the non-Brahmins do not want them. The Rdj Hansa also is against communal electorates and says that sub-divisions of Muhammadans have not been granted the right of election. It holds that it is ridiculous to form every caste into an electorate. It points out that a foreigner like Mrs. Besant, a Parsi like Sir D. E. Wachha and a Muhammadan like Mr. Jinnah are the country's political leaders and that a man comes to the front by his own merit and not on account of his caste.]

Verses on Home Rule.
Kaira Vartamdn (67), 10th Oct.

14. The Kaira Vartamdn publishes a poem entitled " Message of Home Rule to the sons of India ", which says among other things :—Rise with enthusiasm, O sons of India, and throw off your sleep. Wake up; this is the proper time. Be brave and accomplish your object. Fear not if hundreds of thousands of afflictions come in the way of your breaking the fetters of dependence on others and enjoying for ever the pleasing fruits of swardjya. Be Home Rulers, and elevate India. Freedom is the birthright of all; it is a gift of God; no one has a controlling right over it. Make swardjya firm by means of these principles ; be Home Rulers, and elevate India.

India cannot bear even the existing burden of the Indian Civil Service.
New Times (7), 10th Oct.

15. " Can India bear the increased burden recommended by the Commission ? Can India bear even the existing burden of this costly service ? Is not the Indian proverbially poor ? Is not the average income very small in India ? Is it possible for the poor peasantry to pay for the heavy salaries, the large number of allowances including the ' Pushtu allowance ', ' the Baluchistan allowance ', etc., of the official class ? Do the Civil Servants feel like ' exiles ' in India ? If not, can they argue that they must be paid fat salaries as a compensation for the ' miseries of exile ' ? Can't the Indian administration be at once efficient and cheap ? Hume—the one clear thinker of Great Britain—was certainly wrong when he said that ' all taxes are confiscation'. But to thrust a most costly service on a people whose taxable capacity is small is, to say the least, unreasonable."

Government servants and Home Rule politics.
Young India (14), 10th Oct.

16. " Young India refers to the cases of two Government servants at Broach and two at Karáchi, who had to leave Government service because they persisted in keeping up their connection with Home Rule Leagues, and writes :—" It will be seen from the order of the District Judge, Broach, that a Government servant cannot be a member of a political movement under Government rules. We concede that position willingly, though we are inclined to doubt whether these rules are applicable to poor, low paid servants alone. We raise this doubt because of a more notorious breach of Government rules which came to light during the last ' Congress week ' at Lucknow. It will be remembered that in connection with the Curtis-Round Table propaganda, the association of such ' superior officers ' as Sir James Meston and his Inspector-General of Police, Mr. Marris, to say nothing of the secret protagonists of the movement among the Indian Civil Service, was exposed to an astonished world. In both the cases, the gentlemen were highly paid and highly responsible officers, gentlemen who were supposed to set a wholesome example to the rest of the official hierarchy. What happened?......... When the public clamour became too loud to ignore any longer with safety or prudence, an attempt was made to condone their offence as if it were a matter of little or no consequence. The Government of India said that they would have nothing more to do with the Round Table movement and there the matter ended.......... The contrast offered by the dismissal of the Broach Karkuns and the Sind clerks is too glaring to be overlooked. The example set by these small men is really very commendable and we have no doubt the public will readily recognize the rare spirit of courage, patriotism and self-sacrifice shown by them."

New Times (7), 2nd Oct.

17. An anonymous correspondent quotes the instance of the dismissal of a clerk in the Karáchi Small Causes Court, and of the dismissal of one of his clerks by the General Officer Commanding, Karáchi, and continues:—"I believe if Sind officials take it into their heads to dismiss each and every servant of the Government, who is a member of the Home Rule League, I doubt if there will remain any young and low paid clerks left in Government service worth the name because most of the young men have begun to realize that it is just the thing which India requires and her regeneration will result by such actions on the part of the Bureaucracy.......... Let not young men forget that nothing noble can be achieved without self-sacrifice. I hope the leaders of the Home Rule League will not allow their young men to be so roughly handled and will take up the cudgels against such officers in Sind, who are adding fuel to the fire."

Mrs. Besant and the Congress presidentship.
Kaiser-i-Hind (25), 14th Oct., Eng. cols.

*18. The Kaiser-i-Hind stronly approves of the suggestion of the Indu Prakásh that Mrs. Besant should voluntarily resign the presidentship of the forthcoming session of the Congress and remarks:—"Now at least the violent Home Rulers ought to realise the depth of opposition to her election. But obsessed as they are with their own sense of importance, they can hardly be expected to do anything reasonable. Hence the alternative suggested by the Indu Prakásh is the only feasible one. We are not at all surprised that this suggestion should be characterised by the Home Rule organs as mischievous. They trot out the wild talk about the majority and so on. But they forget that usually in the case of candidates for the Congress presidentship they can be characterised merely in terms of good and better. But in Mrs. Besant's case opinion is most radically divided. Her election means a definite split in the Congress camp, and this split will only be averted by Mrs. Besant's self-denial. No particular purpose will be served by her election, while her refusal to be smuggled into the presidential chair will show her at her best: as the self-sacrificing saint that her followers say she is."

Bombay Samáchár (60), 8th Oct.; Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 8th Oct.

19. The Bombay Samáchár expresses gratification at the amicable and satisfactory manner in which the dispute that created a split in the Congress Reception Committee over the appointment of Mrs. Besant as the President has been settled. It congratulates both parties on the tact and foresight they showed in arriving at a settlement. It is of opinion that the assurance given by Mrs. Besant to His Excellency the Viceroy was a sufficient guarantee of her anxiety to maintain the traditions of the Congress, and it hopes that Mrs. Besant will be able to bring about closer relations between Government and the people. [The Jám-e-Jamshed on the other hand considers it a weakness on the part of the Moderate section in the Reception Committee to have given in and voted in favour of Mrs. Besant. It quotes with approval the arguments advanced by Mr. P. C. Ray against the appointment of Mrs. Besant and opines that there is some truth in the statement made in certain quarters to the effect that India is not yet fit for swarájya.]

Comments on the election of Mr. Mahomed Ali as President of the forthcoming session of the Moslem League.
Kaiser-i-Hind (25), 14th Oct., Eng. cols.

*20. The Kaiser-i-Hind expresses surprise at the election by the Council of the All-India Moslem League of Mr. Mahomed Ali as President of the forthcoming session of the League and remarks:—"Apart from the validity or otherwise of the internment we think that after all he is a man who is held in suspicion by Government and we are of opinion that the Muhammadans in India are not so poor in possessing capable leaders who could be trusted to guide the deliberations of the League. We must admit we do not understand the wisdom of electing a man interned by Government and expecting him to do what he has not the freedom to do. Is this a lesson of the Besant incident? If so, we are afraid our Moslem friends are mistaken."

Indians and the grant of Army Commissions.
Kesari (106), 9th Oct.

21. Mr. Gupte, Pleader, has published an article on the question of the nine commissions granted to Indians recently. He says there is nothing new in them as the right had been already granted to us in the Queen's Proclamation and the Charter Act of 1833. He says also that these nine men already held Commissions under Lord Curzon's scheme. But they were not regular Commissions. But why do the words 'your orders will be obeyed by Native Sepoys and officers' occur in the Commissions granted to these men? According to the interpellation of the Commander-in-Chief of India, it appears that Indian Commissioned officers will always be inferior to all British officers. Mr. Gupte's suggestion that arrangements should be made to recruit $\frac{1}{3}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ officers in India, is good. But how far it is practicable, taking into consideration the stinginess of Government, is another question!

Interpellation in the Bombay Legislative Council regarding alleged undue pressure in collecting War Loan.
Mahratta (5), 14th Oct.

*22. "The Honourable Mr. Upasni by his interpellations in the meeting of the local Council on the 11th instant brought to public notice some cases of undue pressure used in the War Loan collection business. A Marwadi in the mofussil was detained at the chavdi and his house kept locked on the 28th June 1917, while there was a marriage at his house on the next day. In another case the house of a Maratha was similarly kept locked for ten days. Government's reply in regard to these incidents was to the effect that Government did not propose to call for the information asked for, as no representation had been received from the Marwadi and the Maratha named by Mr. Upasani that they were dissatisfied with the action taken by the local officer. Who will deny the 'expert' propriety of Government's reply? He must cry out whom the shoe pinches, is an excellent rule. But a Government that styles itself 'paternal' ought to have a different notion of its duties towards its 'subjects' than the reply bears witness to. It may be excusable in the highest executive officials of the Local Government to be in the dark about the War Loan mal-activities of lower officials in the mofussil for months after they have been 'perpetrated'. But once such abuses of power have been brought to their notice, it becomes their business, in our humble opinion, to at once call for the necessary information and render justice to the mute sufferers."

Government should place the liquor traffic under popular control.
Dnyán Prakásh (16), 9th Oct.

23. Commenting upon the increased consumption of liquor in India, the Dnyán Prakásh suggests that the Abkári Department should be under some non-official not interested in the sale of liquor. It complains that the Abkári Committees have no constitution and that representatives of the people on them have no real power. It declares that it is not creditable that Government are not willing to make any change in their settled policy when, on account of the war, nations in the west are making strenuous efforts to check the evil. It adds:—Some notable changes have been proposed by the Bangalore Committee and it appears that Mysore will excel British India in this connection also as in education, Punchayats and separation of judicial and executive functions. We think it our duty to tell Government that there is no better way for them than to accept Sir Herbert Roberts' proposals to the Secretary of State for popular control of the liquor traffic in order to remove the people's belief or misunderstanding that Government are not willing to transfer power to popular representatives because of the lure of revenue.'

Complaint that there is no salt depôt at Ratnágiri.

Satya Shodhak (117), 7th Oct.

24. The people are complaining that salt is selling at 13 seers a rupee at Ratnágiri. The authorities have already declared that whenever salt becomes dear, the people should go to the fish-curing yard to purchase it: they should now accordingly cross the ferry with their baskets and enjoy the odours of the fish yard. The authorities are reported to be determined not to have a salt depôt in the town. There is no help ! !

The end of the Strike of Bombay Post men.

Rást Goftár (31), 14th Oct., Eng. cols.; Kaiser-i-Hind (25), 14th Oct., Eng. cols.

25. "Bombay has had an experience which, we fervently hope, will not come to us again or even to the next generation.......... We need not inquire very closely into the terms of the settlement. The Director General's announcement says that the men have come back unconditionally and have left their demands to be favourably considered by him. So be it. Let prestige stand with an undiminished head on its high pedestal; if we have had a glimpse of its feet of clay let them be covered up again decently." [The Kaiser-i-Hind writes:—"We congratulate the postal authorities on the successful issue of the strike. But we are sorry we cannot say that they are in any way free from blame. We do think that they are certainly responsible for the long duration of the period of the strike. The end could certainly have been brought earlier if the question of prestige had not upset them. In fact we believe that it was in the hands of the authorities to prevent the strike."]

Sanj Vartamán (32), 9th Oct.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 9th Oct.; Message (6), 9th Oct.

26. The authorities have at length seen their mistake and the postmen have unconditionally surrendered on their being given an assurance that their demands will be favourably considered. Their surrender shows that the strikers had no intention of assuming an unreasonable attitude. The authorities have acted with foresight and liberality and we hope they will forget the past and not think of bringing either the men or their leaders into trouble. [The Praja Mitra and Pársi is gratified at the end of the strike and hopes the authorities will take a lesson from it and never again cause any inconvenience to be inflicted on the public by the recurrence of such a strike. The Message remarks:—"The way in which the strikers held out during all this time must have, no doubt, convinced the authorities of the acute economic discontent which lay at the bottom of the present deadlock.......... Our congratulations to all concerned in this matter--the postal authorities, the postmen and the general public who particularly had to endure great inconvenience and loss of business. All's well that ends well."]

Indian indentured labour and the Emigration Conference.

Young India (14), 10th Oct.

27. Commenting on the proposal of the Emigration Conference regarding Indian labour, Young India writes:—"It is unnecessary for our purpose to go into a detailed examination here of the so-called substitute which the Conference has dangled before the Indian public. The proposal now put forward greatly militates against the happy announcement—made in the resolution—that 'the Secretary of State has desired that it should be made known that His Majesty's Government in agreement with the Government of India have decided that indentured emigration shall not be reopened.'......... The reassuring effect of this statement is greatly disturbed by the proposals that have been put forward by the Conference for an assisted system of labour emigration to the Colonies......... The Conference may have been perfectly within its rights in suggesting a scheme of this kind—and we do not think it was possible to expect it to do better. But it was open to His Majesty's Government and also the Government of India to give, particularly in the light of the strong feeling in this country against Indian labour emigration, greater weight to the counsel of Indians in such a vital problem as the one presented here.

It is evident throughout that that was the last thing which either of the two Governments ever seriously regarded for a moment as a great obstacle in the way of a simple settlement such as the one proposed by the conference.......... 'So long as India does not in reality occupy the position of an equal partner within the Empire and so long as her sons continue to be regarded by Englishmen in the Colonies and English employers even nearer home to be fit only as hewers of wood and drawers of water,' it is clearly impossible to have patience with any proposals that seek to perpetuate the badge of helotry which any scheme of emigration to the Colonies must necessarily mean."]

Comments on the Bijapur Inamdars' petition against orders directing them to keep record of rights for their villages.
Kesari (106), 9th Oct.

28. Referring to the petition submitted by the Inamdars' Association of Bijápur against the orders of Government directing the Inamdars of the district to keep a record of rights for their villages, the Kesari remarks:—The khots have complained, the kulkarnis have complained, and now the Inamdars are complaining. It remains to be seen if there now remains any class which has escaped the shears of Governmunt. It is desirable that Government should not gratuitously hurt these classes. But as Government entertain quite a different point of view, who can help it?

How Hindu Mukhtiarkars in Sind suffer through supersession by Muhammadans.
Sind Journal (10), 4th Oct.

29. "The meritorious services of some of the Hindu Mukhtiarkars who are University graduates to boot, have been light-heartedly ignored and junior Muhammadan Mukhtiarkars appointed as Deputy Collectors over their heads. This attitude of the Commissioner in Sind is calculated to wound the feelings of Hindus who want only fair play and no favour. The Hindus of Sind have been practically debarred from becoming Deputy Collectors in the Provincial Service by the door of nomination, as every time such an appointment is filled it goes to a Muhammadan in preference to even better qualified Hindus. But when in addition to this injustice the claims of Hindu Mukhtiarkars to Deputy Collectorships are brushed aside the situation calls for the exercise of due vigilance by His Excellency the Governor in Council.......... The policy of giving preference to Muhammadans when they are the equals of Hindus can be understood, but it is inexplicable why the Hindus should go to the wall even in competition with Muhammadans of inferior qualifications and calibre. If such appointments are made only to serve as a sop to self-seeking Muhammadans in Sind, to cry down the Home Rule movement, we can only regret the short-sightedness of such a policy. For how long can the Muhammadans be satisfied with mere crumbs that fall from the table of the bureaucracy?"

Appeal to Government to handle with tact and sincere good feeling the question of the emoluments of Government subordinates in view of the rise in prices.
Rást Goftár (31), 14th Oct., Eng. cols.

30. "If the lot of the menial is heart-breaking, let it not be forgotten that the great number of those who live on the borders of poverty (e.g., the subordinate clerks of the various Government Departments) own to a condition that is almost too hard to be borne. And poverty ever engenders dissatisfaction and discontent and is the mother of all crime. The situation of these unfortunates should be well grasped and taken in hand duly with tact and the sincerest good feeling. Our profoundest sympathies go towards Government at this hour when they are tasked to the fullest extent. But necessity is all over-ruling."

The Potgi scale for Kulkarnis should be increased.
Shubhodaya (89), 5th Oct.

31. A Vatandar Kulkarni from Belgaum writes to the Shubhodaya:—The Potgi scale of Kulkarnis was fixed 70 years ago and it has not been revised as yet. It is reasonable to quadruple it, as pay in all other Departments has been revised. The condition of many Kulkarnis is worse than that of slaves, peons and sanadis. Of late some Kulkarnis have been made to commute their vatans forcibly, illegally and fraudulently. We do not see any necessity of the adoption of the Talati system only in the case of Kulkarnis, leaving alone other Vatandars like Gowda, Talvar, Kolkar, Holiya, Chougula, etc. The right of Bhaubands cannot be destroyed by the surrender of his turn by a Kulkarni.

Protest against the Government circular directing Representative Vatandar Kulkarnis to pass the Vernacular Final Examination.

Message (6), 6th Oct.

32. Commenting on the recent orders of Government directing representative Vatandar Kulkarnis to pass the Vernacular Final Examination, a correspondent of the Message remarks :—" The circular has caused a great flutter among the Representative Vatandar Kulkarnis whose turn of office begins this year, and it wants strict homage to it from every representative Vatandar let him be young, middle aged or old. I call this circular marvellous because it orders the Kulkarnis to complete the course of seven years in a single year and I style it as pernicious because it sweeps away Kulkarnis from the stage......... Will Government answer the following queries satisfactorily? What room is left by the Government in the case of Kulkarnis who have duly passed the old Kulkarni test and whose age is more than twenty-five? Has Government made any exception in the case of the representative Vatandar Kulkarnis who have discharged their duties once or twice and whose age exceeds 25? What steps have been taken by the Government in the case of Kulkarnis who are nearly 40 or 50 and have served Government with zeal and integrity for their lives and who are the sole representative Vatandar Kulkarnis and have not passed or cannot pass any of the School Finals?......... How can old and young Kulkarnis finish the six years' course in a single year? The circular comes off in January last and wants every Kulkarni to satisfy the said conditions within 1st of January 1918. Has Government considered the impropriety and the inconsistent nature of the said circular?......... Though the present pernicious circular appears mild in its outward form, it is more efficacious in removing the Kulkarnis young as well as old from the stage than the 'Kulkarni settlement' movement started some three years ago by the Government. That settlement wanted some sort of consent to it from the Kulkarnis, let it be forced or otherwise. Anyhow it was based on the principle of consent. The Government is grown wise in selecting a new weapon to do away with the Kulkarnis, based on the ground of efficiency, as the standard rests with Government only."

LEGISLATION.

Comments on the rejection of the Honourable Mr. Patel's Bill to amend the Medical Registration Act.

Dnyán Prakásh (16), 12th Oct.; Gujaráti* (17), 14th Oct., Eng. cols.; * Indian Social Reformer (3), 14th Oct.; Message (6), 13th Oct.; * Mahrátta (5), 14th Oct.

33. Commenting on the rejection of the Honourable Mr. Patel's Bill to amend the Medical Registration Act the Dnyán Prakásh says that nobody expected that Surgeon-General Lyons would oppose a majority of elected members in the Bombay Medical Council when the United Provinces Medical Council and the Punjab Medical Council have already a majority of elected members of 3 and 1 respectively and it declares that it is at a loss to understand how unqualified persons would have got into the Council by the adoption of Mr. Patel's amendment. It further remarks that assurances were given at the time of the passage of the Medical Registration Act that it would not interfere with Ayurvedic medicine and that it is strange that a Doctor should be served with a notice for keeping connection with an Ayurvedic school. It adds :—How can Ayurveda be improved if Doctors have nothing to do with it? If it is not an offence to keep connection with an Ayurvedic school, why should not a clear mention of it be made in the Act itself as proposed by Mr. Patel? It is regrettable that Government should oppose the first reading of such an innocent Bill. [The Gujaráti writes :—" The Medical Act of the United Provinces embodies the very principle that was embodied in the Honourable Mr. Patel's Bill and does not insist upon the exclusion of a medical practitioner from the medical register on the ground of his adoption of a theory of medicine and surgery not in accordance with the accepted views for the time being or of his association with a Vaidya, Hakim or Homœopath. We fail to see why different principles should be followed in two provinces in determining whether the conduct of a medical practitioner is 'infamous'. It is murdering the English language and common sense to say that Dr. Popat's conduct is 'infamous' because he is actively associated with the Ayurvedic College and with the promotion of the Ayurvedic system of medicine." The Indian Social Reformer writes:—"'Infamous', of course, has a technical significance, but even so, if this pretension does not mean that the Ayurvedic and Unani doctors are to be regarded as 'untouchables' and pariahs of the profession, we do not know what it does mean.......... The only effect of the Bill being thrown out by the Council will be to deter the medical graduates of our Universities from interesting themselves in the indigenous systems. This is a pity, because it is they that can best sift the chaff from the grain, and assimilate to Medical Science, which belongs neither to the East nor to the West, all that is valuable in the Indian systems. Any one who ventures to openly associate himself with Ayurvedic or Unani studies may be branded for 'infamous conduct.'......... His Excellency the Governor threw out the suggestion that the indigenous systems must have their own separate organisation. This can be done only if Government extend to them some measure of patronage as in the case of the modern orthodox system." The Message writes:—"Mr. Patel's Medical Registration Act Amendment Bill has been rejected by the Bombay Legislative Council and we do not think the public were prepared for any other result, after the first day's demonstration of interested opposition in the Council. It does indeed seem in view of the line taken up by the temporarily nominated 'expert' members that the triumvirate were chosen merely to strengthen the voting on the Government side. The division which was very close—20 for the Bill and 25 against including the three 'experts'—discloses the real strength of public feeling on this question of vital importance. Although Mr. Patel's Bill has been lost for the time being, the spirit, we are sure, is not yet dead and we may hear more of it before long." The Mahrátta writes:—"None but the merest interested bigot can assert that the indigenous systems have not contributed and are not contributing to the alleviation of the suffering of the teeming millions of India. Once this service of the indigenous systems is recognised (we will not refer here to the special excellences of not a few native drugs and of some methods of native treatment, which put the alien system into shade), it follows as a matter of course that any authority that is responsible for the well-being of these millions owes it to these millions that it should endeavour directly and indirectly to put these native systems of medicine in train for improvement on modern lines. The Medical Act which indirectly empowers the Medical Council to penalise as infamous conduct the association of a registered practitioner with a practitioner of native medicine cannot be characterised truly except as an infamous measure.......... The defeat of this Bill we look upon as the success of the party of self-interest and unreason and irresponsible attachment to things Western combined with indifference to the requirements of 90 per cent. of the population of India."]

Bombay Samáchár (60), 13th Oct.; Sánj Vartamán (32), 12th Oct.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 12th and 13th Oct.

34. The Bombay Samáchár expresess itself in full sympathy with the Honourable Mr. Patel's Bill further to amend the Bombay Medical Registration Act and is of opinion that it was not fair on the part of Government to have appointed two Indian medical practitioners who were confessedly antagonistic to the indigenous system of medicine as additional members of the Legislative Council as long as the Bill was before the Council, and wishes that Government had appointed an equal number of additional members who were advocates of the indigenous systems of medicine. It considers that a great hardship has been inflicted on the public in general by the Registration Act requiring medical men not even to study these systems or to have any connection with hospitals or dispensaries where these systems are practised and expresses its regret at the rejection of the Bill. [The Sánj Vartámán considers it unjust on the part of Government to have appointed additional members who were antagonistic to the indigenous systems of medicine. It does not think there is any cause for the public to despond at the fate of the Bill as almost half of the Legislative Council voted in its favour. It suggests that the cause of the Ayurvedic and Unani systems of medicine should be publicly agitated to secure for them the consideration they deserve. The Praja Mitra and Pársi also deprecates the attitude taken up by Government towards the Bill. It is of opinion that the rejection of the Bill was due to the desire on the part of Government to maintain the prestige of the Medical Council.]

EDUCATION.

Comments on the Sind College students' strike.

Indu Prakásh (40), 12th Oct.; Message (6), 13th Oct.

35. Referring to the strike of the students of the Sind College, the Indu Prakásh remarks :—It is extremely difficult to say whether the liking for strikes is good or bad. Nobody would say that strikes should take place in our country simply because they are frequently occurring in civilized countries. It is true that even a worm turns when things become unbearable. But it is wrong to have resort to strikes at every turn. Severe steps must be taken to break such strikes. The public must keep a calm attitude in showing sympathy to either side. To express sympathy with strikers on each and every occasion has undesirable results. It is well that the Sind College students have listened to the advice of Mr. Mehta and ended the strike. [The Message remarks :—"There is a bumper harvest of strikes everywhere in the country, not the least important among which are the Students' strikes. There is nothing in them which should be disquieting to the minds of sober and thoughtful people, though to men of an antiquated type, the phenomena may appear strange and inexplicable......... In educational as in political institutions the spirit of antiquity dominates and if anything is their distinguishing characteristic, it is their obsoleteness. Things that have been discarded in Europe are the fashions in this country......... It is no wonder that the growing national consciousness of the people, both old and young, should manifest unrest with antiquarianism."]

Motion in the United Provinces Legislative Council regarding certain remarks of Principal Wood of Roorki College.

Indian Social Reformer (3), 14th Oct.

36. With reference to a motion in the United Provinces Legislative Council by the Honourable Pandit Motilal Nehru regarding certain remarks of Principal Wood of Roorki College, the Indian Social Reformer writes:—"We see that the Honourable Pandit has been blamed for bringing the matter before the Council. We think he was fully justified in doing so. Government have issued longwinded resolutions on the supposed decay of parental authority and respect for elders among Indian students, and prepared at considerable cost moral text-books to restore these vanishing virtues. But here is the Principal of a College traducing Indian gentlemen and Indian homes, and it is right that the public here and in England should know the share of the Principal of one at least of the Government Colleges in undermining parental authority.......... If Sir Michael O'Dwyer abuses Indian politicians, and they venture to protest, they are endangering the good relations between Europeans and Indians. If Principal Wood vilifies 'a great many Indian homes' as dens of intrigue before the sons of these 'homes'—in itself a most ungentlemanly proceeding—and Indians insist on his being asked to withdraw and apologise, His Honour must needs point to the maintenance of good relations between Europeans and Indians as a reason for their sitting quiet."

Comments on the Government Press Note regarding Urdu teaching in the Bombay Presidency.

Indian Social Reformer (3), 14th Oct.

37. "We wish to raise the central issue whether Government have any right to prevent a community from adopting, if it desires to do so, whatever language seems best to it, as its vernacular. The Government of India does not seem to claim any such right, because His Excellency the Viceroy expressed the other day the hope that English will some day be spoken in Indian homes. The Government of Bombay, however, have for years past laid down that Indian children shall not be educated in English for the first four years of their school life. They now lay down that Muhammadan children shall not be educated in Urdu, and shall be educated in the local vernaculars. We have protested against the first prohibition, we can on no account acquiesce in the second. Our fundamental objection is this; that the parents know much better than any Government—whose personnel and policy are constantly changing—what is good for their children from every point of view. Now, this question of Urdu is a vital one for Muhammadans and more particularly in places where they form a small minority......... We cannot understand the frame of mind which has produced this resolution. In the Indian States of Mysore and Baroda there are Urdu schools for Muhammadans. No scruples such as have led Government to reverse the policy of their predecessor in this matter have ever affected these states. We cannot help saying that the Muhammadan community has some excuse to feel that Government have, without sufficient reason and in face of the unanimous opinion of the Muhammadan gentlemen whom they themselves had selected to advise them on this question, not quite kept faith with it.......... We do hope that Government will not be in haste to give effect to their resolution."

Bombay Samáchár (60), 12th Oct.

38. The Bombay Samáchár discusses at great length the arguments advanced by the advocates of Urdu in this Presidency against the Press Note issued by Government and is of opinion that the Press Note can in no wise be said to be a blow to Urdu education as is alleged against it, and it asks them to consider carefully the reasons that have actuated Government to decide in favour of giving instruction to Muhammadan children through the medium of the languages they speak at home instead of inflicting upon them the hardship of receiving their education through Urdu. It asks the advocates of Urdu to take advantage of the position given by Government to Urdu as a second language in schools for Muhammadan boys and take steps for the development of the language instead of insisting upon having Urdu as the medium of instruction and thus indirectly retarding the progress of education among Muhammadans.

RAILWAYS.

Grievances of third class passengers on Indian Railways.
Gujaráti (17), 7th Oct.

39. The Gujaráti fully endorses the views expressed by Mr. M. K. Gandhi on the grievances of third class passengers on the Indian railways in a letter to the Times of India and remarks that no improvement in the lot of the third class passenger will be effected as long as the railways continue to provide comforts for the first and second class passengers from the profits made from the third class passenger traffic. It is of opinion that the appeal made by Mr. Gandhi to honourable members of the Legislative Council, big officials and Maharajas to travel in third class carriages will fall on deaf ears.

MUNICIPALITIES.

Comments on the decision of the Bombay Government on the subject of the Bombay Gymkhana boat-house on the Chowpatty sands (Bombay).
Kaiser-i-Hind (25), 14th Oct., Eng. cols.

*40. "The reply of Government to the representation of the Municipal Corporation requesting that the Bombay Gymkhana boat-house standing on the Chowpatty sands be removed from that position is a sample of the ways in which Indian public opinion is so often flouted by the bureaucracy. Laborious arguments have been brought forward in support of the undesirability of having this boat-house removed. Recreation for a chosen few may spoil the look of a beautiful promenade. Where are our aesthetic lords who always glory in the aesthetics of the West? What city in the West could put up with such a disgraceful shed? The bureaucrats want the boat-house and they will have it a beauty spot only. Here is a matter for the public of Bombay and we trust it will not sit quiet."

An outsider should be appointed Chief Executive Officer of the Dhárwár Municipality.
Karnátak Vritta (83), 9th Oct.; Ráj Hansa (85), 8th Oct.

41. Referring to the appointment of Mr. Kadkol, Chief Officer of the Dhárwár Municipality as Chief Officer of the Dhárwár District Local Board, the Karnátak Vritta says that though the Municipality will have to appoint as its Chief Officer some person who is selected for Mamlat by the Commissioner as according to the new Government Resolution the Chief Officers' posts of Gadag and Dhárwár Municipalities are included in the grade of Mamlats, it would be better if the Municipality appointed an outsider as its Chief Officer. It adds :— It is needless to mention who will be appointed as Chief Officer looking to the influence of the majority in the Municipality and the disorderly state of its administration. We still hope that the city fathers now in power will do nothing unconstitutional that would leave a stain on local self-government. [The Ráj Hansa also suggests that an outsider should be appointed as Chief Officer of the Dhárwár Municipality and that the Municipality should follow the example set by Hubli (Dhárwár) and Guledgud (Bijápur).]

A complaint against the Dhárwár Municipality.
Karnátak Vritta (83), 9th Oct.

42. A merchant writes to the Karnátak Vritta :—There is no doubt that the affairs of the Dhárwár Municipaliy are conducted with great partiality. So long the Chief Officer was bent upon prosecuting a number of merchants for evading payment of toll. There was a thick rumour that Mr. Rudrayya Hiremath would also be prosecuted for a similar offence, but somehow the whole thing was hushed up. There is a thick rumour that Mr. Basappa Minajagi brought bodice cloth from Hubli 25 days ago and tried to pay less toll by making a false statement about its value. It is also said that Pachnama was made. I do not know why Mr. Minajagi has not been prosecuted till now. Can it be that the Chief Officer has not prosecuted Mr. Rudrayya and Mr. Basappa because they are councillors of the municipality? Is there one law for municipal councillors and another for other merchants under British rule?

An educational complaint against the Bijápur Municipality.
Karnátak Vaibhav (82), 2nd and 9th Oct., Eng. cols.

43. "One of the standing grievances of the Kanarese people in this city of Bijápur is the necessity of a Kanarese Girls' School in its centre. The absurdity of teaching Maráthi to the Kanarese Girls attending the Victoria Memorial Girls' School and the disproportionate expenditure incurred by the Municipality over this item was for the first time pointed out to the Municipality by Mr. R. C. Brown, when he was the Collector of this place. In subsequent years all the Educational Inspectors suggested, at the time of inspection, to the Municipality to put a stop to the absurd practice of giving instruction in Maráthi to the Kanarese girls of this school. The result of all this was that a Kanarese class was started in this school which promised to flourish in a short time and could have developed into a full-grown Girls' School in the centre of the city. But the Municipality was pleased to discontinue the class on the ground that it was not desirable to have a Kanarese class in a Marathi school." [In the next issue the paper writes :—"If we classify the school-going girls of our Municipality according to their mother-tongue, the Kanarese girls are entitled to receive the first consideration of our Municipality and the claim of the Urdu girls will stand prior to that of the Marathi girls. But the real state of things is quite the reverse. The best and suitable buildings erected by the Municipality for the use of girl schools are being utilized for Marathi girls, while the Kanarese girls are being locked up in rented houses which are as a rule ill-ventilated and dilapidated. The position of the Urdu girls is still worse. In some cases they had to resort to mosques, as the Municipality could not get even rented buildings for these poor girls."

Comments on the sanctioning of house-tax by the Lárkána Municipality (Sind).

New Times (7), 3rd and 4th Oct.; Sind Journal (10), 4th Oct.; Sind Advocate (9), 27th Sept.

44. "The Crown Prince of Germany is reported to have said that the submarine is the last argument of kings; and if the reports which have reached us concerning the way in which a house-tax has been imposed on the Lárkána people be correct, we are constrained to say that the submarine method has proved to be the last argument of the mighty Collector of Lárkána.* The new tax is apparently imposed by the local Municipality: but is really thrust upon a poor people by the President who is no other than Mr. Bolus. The Municipality of Lárkána is a nominated body; not a single member is elected by the people." [In the next issue the paper writes:—"It is impossible for any people with any grain of self-respect in them to keep quiet over the affair; the house-tax imposed on them in the teeth of opposition is a blow to self-respect; it is arbitrary; it is unjust; it is a burden which is rightly resented in these days when retrenchment is our cry; it is a monstrosity born of a foolish conception of official prestige; it should be an eye-opener to all who may not know that the so-called local self-government is a farce in places like Lárkána where Municipal bodies are officialised and presided over by petty bureaucrats." The Sind Journal remarks:—"The principle of local self-government has been reduced to a farce by the Collector of Lárkána inasmuch as he has relied upon official members and outsiders to foist a most unpopular tax on the people of Lárkána." The Sind Advocate remarks:—"The much talked of question of house-tax was disposed of by the Lárkána Municipality on the 24th instant in a manner which reduces local self-government to a farce......... The public mind is greatly excited, and it is expected that the matter will not be allowed to rest here, as it affects rich and poor like. All classes of the community—Hindu and Mahomedan alike—are opposed to the house-tax, as it affects them all."]

NATIVE STATES.

A general strike at Baroda.

Hind Vijaya (65), 10th Oct.

45. The Hind Vijaya reports a general strike at Baroda and gives a detailed account of the incidents that led to the people of Baroda closing their shops and refusing to conduct their business for about five days owing to a belief on their part that some people were being forcibly enlisted in the army for war service and to the attempts made by the people to secure their release, the calling of the military to disperse the mob and the alleged unwarranted assault made by some members of His Highness the Maharaja's Body Guard on the people. It remarks that the unfortunate incidents would have been prevented if the officials had taken pains to allay public feeling by punishing the petty officials whose conduct was responsible for excitement on the part of the people, instead of trying to shield them. It asks for a commission of enquiry.

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 19th October 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 42 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 20th October 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

Bombay Legislative Council:

Comments on His Excellency Lord Willingdon's remarks in the — on the subject of resolutions moved by non-official members . 33 & 34
Comments on the debate in the — on the question as to who should be Chairman of a Select Committee to which a Bill is referred . 36
Comments on the replies to interpellations at the last meeting of the — . . . . 31 & 32
Complaint that much time is needlessly wasted in the debates in the — 35
The Honourable Mr. Paranjpye's resolution regarding the Modi script in the — . . . . 27—30

British rule:

A warning to non-Brahmins 8
Alleged need of a Parliamentary Commission of Inquiry into the Indian administration 1
Alleged persecution of Mr. B. G. Horniman, editor of the Bombay Chronicle, by high Government officials 15
Approval of the decision of Government not to apply the orders in the student's circular to students of the Government Law School .. 23
Attempts are being made to invest Mr. Montagu's visit with a halo of official glory . . . . 2 & 3
Comments on the Bishop of Bombay's address at the Deccan Sabha, Poona, on Indian politics 22
Comments on the internment of Shivaprasad Varma by the Central Provinces Government 16
Comments on the recent meeting of the European Association in Bombay . . . . 17—21
Condemnation of some of the speeches delivered at a recent backward class meeting in Poona 7
Demand for separate representation for the Parsi community . . 6
In what circumstances should Muhammadans join with the Hindus in demanding Home Rule for India? 24
Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali . . . . 11—14
Need of an all-India agitation for the release of all political prisoners . 10
The claims of the Lingayats for special electorates 4
The Indian wheat merchants of Karáchi and the Wheat Commissioner 26
The Maratha community is not prepared to call itself backward . 9

H 328—a CON

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

British rule—concluded.

What is to be the position of Brahmos in a system of communal representation? 5
Why Sind Muhammadans are opposed to the grant of Home Rule . 25
Indian National Congress: Mrs. Besant the first female President of the — 40
Indians in the Colonies: Comments on the scheme proposed by the Emigration Conference as a substitute for indentured labour . . 42
Portuguese India: Grant of Swarájya to Goa postponed on the advice of some other nation 41
Postal Department: Dissatisfaction among the Bombay postmen . . 46—48

Public Service:

Claims of members of the Subordinate Medical Service to Commissions in the I. M. S. 44
Government should give up their attempt to destroy the Kulkarnis . 43
Parsis and the Bombay Provincial Service 45

Sind:

Alleged cow-killing by a European at Karáchi 49
Comments on the strike of the — College Students as a protest against the reversion of Professor Shahani from the post of Principal . 50

War:

Comments on the progress of the — 37
Complaint about excluding a large number of undergraduates from the Bombay University Corps 39
The situation in Russia 38

LEGISLATION—

Comments on the rejection of the Honourable Mr. Patel's Medical Registration Act Amendment Bill . . . . 51—53

EDUCATION—

Comments on the order of the Director of Public Instruction prohibiting students of the Broach High School from serving as volunteers at the Educational Conference at Broach 56
Complaint that boys attaining the age of 18 are being made to leave schools. 57
Need of educational reform in India on the lines of Mr. Fisher's innovations in England 54
Students' strikes in the Central Provinces and the Berars 55
Urdu teaching in the Bombay Presidency . . . . . . 58—61

NATIVE STATES—

Administrative reforms in Native States are for purposes of mere show . 65
The general strike of Hindus at Wadhwán (Káthiáwár) . . . . 62—64

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Alleged need of a Parliamentary Commission of Inquiry into the Indian administration.
New Times (7), 15th Oct.

1. In the course of an article in which it supports the suggestion for a Parliamentary Commission of Inquiry into the Indian administration, the New Times writes:—"We easily understand that some interference with freedom of speech and movement is inevitable in a time of War; but surely when interference becomes gratuitous, whimsical, frankly autocratic—when meetings are suppressed and the Press is muzzled and respectable persons arrested and interned on charges which are 'unproven' before the tribunal of justice and are repudiated by unanimous verdict of the people, surely, the time is then to cry halt. We cannot easily forgive Lord Hardinge for the Press Act which, by a clever move of that diplomacy of which he was a master, he imposed upon India when the Indian leaders were in an unwary mood; and we know, by this time how the India Defence Act can be applied by a bureaucracy that feels secure in its saddle, do what it will. A Parliamentary Commission of Inquiry will convict the administration of irregularities and show that the Prussian ideal of Government is inconsistent with English ideals not alone in Europe but also in India."

Attempts are being made to invest Mr. Montagu's visit with a halo of official glory.
Message (6), 18th Oct.

2. "The various communiques on the subject of Mr. Montagu's visit leave one in no doubt that attempts are being made to stage-manage the whole affair and invest it with a halo of official glory. It seems to us that the public have overlooked the re-shuffling of personnel that is now going on at the Simla Secretariat. The personnel, whose selection the Government of India have taken in hand, is apparently being selected in such a way as to surround the Radical Secretary of State with out-and-out bureaucrats. What the effect of such a step will be in the long run, Indians do not need to be told. The placing of a number of sun-dried and sun-cured bureaucrats including the distinguished Home Member of the Government of India on special duty offers food for serious reflection and Indians who seem to be determined in placing too great a premium on the Secretary of State will be well advised in being warned betimes of the risks they run in believing that the visit will lead them to the coveted goal. The Indian authorities backed up by the non-official European elements are evidently taking care to see that the Radical Secretary of State does not give them away when he comes here. If Indians fail to take cognisance of this fact and regulate their conduct in accordance with the exigencies of the situation they are bound to succeed in defeating the splendid object of the visit or minimising its value."

Message (6), 20th Oct.

3. "In a communique issued by the Chief Commissioner of Delhi, only the other day, it is stated that 'the names of those who will form the deputation should be given as well as the names of those who are proposed for the interview'. It is added that the number of persons composing the deputation should be kept as low as possible and so on. All these preliminaries might have been considered necessary if the Secretary of State was going to visit this country in a purely and exclusively official character. But that the visit is not to be an official one, we have the authoritative declaration of Mr. Montagu himself. It is, therefore, difficult to understand where lies the necessity for all these and more elaborate precautions. The more we ponder over these little incidents the more pessimistic do we become of any decent amount of good resulting to us from the visit. We would rather wish under such circumstances that the Secretary of State did not visit this country at all and allowed the Government of India to economise thereby and appropriate the savings in connection with the more vigorous prosecution of the war. Such a course will do much good to both; it will save the Indian bureaucracy from an embarrassing situation and it will prevent the waste of the Indian taxpayer's money to however small an extent."

The claims of the Lingayats for special electorates.
Karnatak Vaibhav (82), 16th Oct., Eng. cols.

4. Referring to a recent letter in the Times of India putting forth the claims of the Lingayats for special representation, the Karnatak Vaibhav writes:—"When the non-Brahamin communities in the Madras Presidency clamour for their rights and cry against the iniquities supposed to be done to them we can understand their feelings. But for the Lingayats to protest in the same strain is to deliberately ignore the real facts and the past history; for in social and religious matters, they disown the authority of the Brahmins, and are a different sect in themselves. Let them by all means try to have their status improved, but let them not raise this false chorus of protest like the other communities. They being a separate sect in themselves, and mostly traders by profession, have flourished at all times without being subjected to any extraneous influence of any community.......... If they fritter away their energy in vilifying and calumniating the Brahamins they will lose that status and position which they are likely to occupy by remaining faithful to their genius and profession.......... To claim separate representation on the basis of caste or religion is to embarrass the good working of the administrative machinery. We are disposed to think that it would be an evil day for India if provision be made for the representation of the important minorities on the basis of caste. It would serve only to create endless heartburning and to widen the gulf between the various sects of the Hindu Society which it is not desirable to perpetuate."

What is to be the position of Brahmos in a system of communal representation?
Subodh Patrika (43), 14th Oct., Eng. cols.

5. "It was to be expected that when the Government decided upon granting special representation to the Muhammadan community in the Legislative Councils, there should arise the much larger question of communal representation. And now that we are on the eve of substantial constitutional reforms, the demands from non-Brahmins, Lingayats, Indian Christians and the Depressed Classes for recognition as separate political entities grow apace. We have not seen anything so categorical as the scheme of communal representation outlined at the special Andhra Conference recently held at Bezwada. [Here the paper quotes the resolution which demands communal representation for non-Brahmin Hindus, Brahmins, Christians, Panchamas, etc.] For our part, we are opposed to anything which tends to enhance the fissiparous condition of Indian Society, and our opinion is that the Andhra Conference took an extremely reactionary step in passing such a resolution. Supposing a scheme such as the one recommended by the Conference be adopted by Government, what would be the position of a Brahmo? Is he for the purposes of franchise to be counted among the Brahmins, or non-Brahmins? Or will he be regarded as having closer affinities to Indian Christians and Panchamas? Or are Brahmos to claim special representation for themselves?"

Demand for separate representation for the Parsi community.
Praja Mitra and Pârsi (29), 16th Oct.

6. The Praja Mitra and Pârsi refers to the history of communal representation in India and opines that the granting of special elecIorates to Muhammadens opened their eyes and made them perceive that their interests were identical with the rest of the people. It believes that the demands of the Europeans in India for special electorates will similarly lead them to sympathise with the aspirations of the Indian people. It refers to the agitation that is being made in certain sections of the Parsi community for special representation and trusts that nothing but good will come out of it as the granting of the demand by Government will make the Parsis more keen in safeguarding their own interests and thus securing the ultimate good of India by infusing enthusiasm in them for political reform.

Condemnation of some of the speeches delivered at a recent backward class meeting in Poona.
Sandesh (116), 14th Otc.

7. The Sandesh condemns some of the speeches delivered at the recent backward classes meeting held at Poona to demand special electorates for these classes as thoughtless and says:—To those who are distrustful of Brahmins we would ask the question as to whether they can point out a single measure which the Brahmins have got passed, which has benefited the Brahmins alone and done harm to non-Brahmins. On the contrary it can be conclusively shown that the non-Brahmins alone have benefited by the agitation carried out by the Brahmins. Such being the case it is fatal to the interests of the country for men like the Rev. Mr. Tilak to raise a false outcry against the Brahmins. Are his friends prepared to interdine and intermarry with Mahars and Chamars? Then why abuse the Brahmins alone? If we secure Home Rule, neither Brahmins nor the Marathas will be particularly benefited, but all, including Hindus, Parsis, Muhammadans and Christians, will be equally benefited.

A warning to non-Brahmins.
Sandesh (116), 20th Oct.

8. Himatrao Pawar writes in the Sandesh:—As a non-Brahmin I am very much pleased to see the present awakening among the non-Brahmins. But at the same time I am very much grieved to see that this awakening has its origin at least indirectly not in self-interest but in the hatred of others. Those who are taking a lead in the present agitation never cared to see uptil now that their fellowmen had remained backward nor have they ever tried before to remedy the state of things. Who originated and developed the idea of the depressed classes mission? How many non-Brahmins helped in the foundation of the Social Service League? Who has laboured to spread the temperance movement among the mill-hands? Many of the leaders of the present movement have shown themselves to be actuated by Brahmin hatred in their conduct. Brahmins are being hated not on account of any particular quality, but simply because they are Brahmins. All agitation, not based on high principles, is bound to fail. The present non-Brahmin leaders are no doubt actuated by good intentions, but they are unconsciously leading the non-Brahmins to the wrong path.

The Maratha community is not prepared to call itself backward.
Kesari (106), 16th Oct.

9. Balkrishna Malhar Lad of Belgaum writes to the Kesari stating that no Maratha leader was present at the meeting of the backward communities held in Belgaum on the 10th instant. He says that the Maratha community is not willing to style itself backward or non-Brahmin and thus lose its self-respect. He declares that the Marathas do not oppose the Congress-League scheme and adds that though the Marathas want to ask for some special rights they will be in accordance with that scheme.

Need of an all-India agitation for the release of all political prisoners.
Mahrátta (5), 21st Oct.

10. Comparing the views expressed by Mr. Mahomed Ali in 1914 with those expressed by him in a recent interview with the Raja of Mahomedabad, the Mahrátta writes:—"So we have really no change in the 'political creed' of the brothers. What it was in 1914 it is now in 1917. In view of these and other proofs of the continued loyalty of the brothers and in view of the authorities not giving to the public any 'other' reliable information, the latter have reason to infer that Government in prolonging the internment of the brothers are only playing a political game. Whai is this game? While the bureaucracy honestly believe in more and stronger measures of 'public safety', the new Secretary of State with, of course, the consent and suport of the Cabinet in England, has desired of them quite another course of action. As subordinates, the Indian bureaucrats must be 'loyal' to the orders coming from Home. But this much is in their hands. They can be grudging in their execution of the directions received from their superiors. When you cannot say a direct 'nay,' you can still try evasion hoping to succeed materially by that method. That is what our authorities seem to be doing. That is the game they seem to be playing. For 'a calm atmosphere' such as Mr. Montagu seems to desire, a general amnesty is the only effective path. But our bureaucracy do not like the idea of what they must be looking upon as a great danger to their prestige and future prospects. So our authorities, bent upon making the best of a bad bargain, determind upon yielding as little as they possibly can, are higgling over every case of injustice that is being brought to their notice by the 'agitators.' We would urge an immediate all-India agitation for the release of our politicals. The policy of 'confidence' adopted by the British Government in dealing with the Irish irreconcilables—why should that policy not be adopted here?......... The policy of a general amnesty is the only policy that will suit the hour, from the above standpoint. The bureaucracy think otherwise and are acting accordingly. It rests upon our shoulders to make it impossible for the bureaucracy to commit a gross blunder and thereby to give a hand to the spread of inveterate Sinn Feinism in this land. We, therefore, regard it as a grave dereliction of duty on our part not to give a due place to the question of a general amnesty in our present agitation......... The first All-India Deputation that should wait on Mr. Montagu, as soon as he comes here—uninvited and disallowed (if so it must be !)—should, in our firm opinion be one with the sole business of 'praying for' the announcement of a general amnesty and an immediate effectuation of such an announcement. We are driven to suggest this course, because we feel that the bureaucracy will not 'respect' any prayers on our part for such 'a bold course.' But whatever the bureaucracy may choose to do in this respect, the necessity for our moving immediately in the matter is most urgent." [Elsewhere C. V. P. Shivram writes :—"With all the hue and cry raised, the bulk of our political workers are yet either in the Andamans or confined in jails inland or interned, not because they have waged war against His Majesty the King-Emperor, not because they have helped the enemies of our King in this war, but because they hold some opinions with regard to the system of government obtaining in this country and that which should replace it—opinions which are not palatable to the vested interests of this land. Some of them are suffering because, altogether innocent as they very probably are, they are 'suspected' by the 'efficient' police of our country, whose infallibility our bureaucracy has no reason to doubt ! People in this country are not even allowed the liberty of having their own 'opinions' ! Are opinions so great a 'crime' as to necessitate internments, transportations and all the rest of it ? Even the universally accursed Russia of the olden days has become 'civilised'. Will Britain remain behind Russia ? Will she not do to India the same justice she has done to Ireland ? Will she not follow here that generous and humane policy towards India's politicals which she followed in regard to the Sinn Fein rebels who ransacked Dublin Castle ? The case of V. D. Savarkar, Bar.-at-Law, is well known. A cultured son of our motherland, he was caught up by the authorities in connection with the Násik conspiracy case.......... Who can maintain that Mr. Savarkar has been as bad as the Sinn Fein Rebels of Ireland ? And there are so many others who are suffering, like Mr. Savarkar ! As regards internees, etc., the Bengal Government has officially admitted the truth of some astounding revelations regarding the solitary confinement of political 'suspects'. There have been cases of internees having been driven by their surroundings to commit suicide. Shall we still continue to be indifferent to the honour of our Motherland ? Shall we still hesitate to demand the immediate release of this Army of our political prisoners ?"]

Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali.
Mahrátta (5), 21st Oct.

* 11. "The stiffness of the authorities appears to be simply a part of the policy of evasion. They want to do as little as they can in the way of reversing repressive orders and so they are making difficulties where none need be made. Who could have thought that the Honourable Syed Riza Ali, Mr. Zahur Ahmed, Bar.-at-Law, and Mr. Khaliq Uzzaman, B.A., LL.B., would not be allowed to see the Moslem brothers to give them legal advice ! .... The Honourable Syed Riza Ali says that this most high-handed action of the ruler of the Central Provinces may be taken to mean that 'the Central Provinces Government want to place it beyond Mr. Mahomed Ali's and his brother's power to take any legal steps for the withdrawal or reversal of their internment orders'. What answer has the Central Provinces Government to make ? Undertrial prisoners, as also those who are actually serving a sentence of imprisonment, are allowed to be visited by their legal advisers. This fact makes the treatment given to the Honourable Syed Riza Ali and his companions all the more condemnable. The Defence of India Act has indeed served as an occasion for demonstrating to what lengths our bureaucrats can go, once they get a loosely worded law to lean upon. Blessed will be the day when the accursed Act will be erased from the statute book of this unfortunate country."

Al-Amin (131), 5th Oct., Eng. cols.

12. Expressing regret at the fact that Muhammad Ali and Shaukat Ali have not yet been released, Al-Amin remarks:—"In the present war the attitude of the Indian Mussalmans has been one of faultless straightforwardness, of free, whole-hearted, nay, one of uncommonly generous co-operation, and no one can more legitimately claim to have created that sense of responsibility than those two for whose release the community is so unanimous in its demand. Governmnent have had a unique opportunity of rallying to themselves still more closer the Moslem opinion, and even now that chance is not lost. The Mussalman sacrifices of blood and money entitle the community to be heard and heard well. Already the Moslems all over the country have begun to rub their eyes in perfect astonishment and we trust Government would not be slow in making the Mussalmans continue to believe in 'Much more is wrought by prayer than this world dreams of'."

Akhbár-e-Islám (57), 20th Oct.

13. The Akhbár-e-Islám gives its support to the meeting of Musalmans held at Muzaffarabad Hall, Bombay, praying to Government to release Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali, though it is of opinion that the elite of the community were absent from the meeting. In view of the opinion expressed by Mahomed Ali in his interview with the Raja of Mahmadabad—that he would fight against the Turks if they invaded India—the paper thinks there can be no doubt as to the loyalty of the interned brothers. It believes that if released the brothers will be very useful to Government in winning over to the right path the other interned Musalmans. In conclusion it calls upon the Anjuman-e-Islam of Bombay to call a similar meeting.

Muslim Herald (143), 19th Oct.

14. Referring to the meeting of Muhammadans held in the Muzaffarabad Hall, Bombay, on the 14th instant, to consider the question of the release of Messrs. Muhammad Ali and Shaukat Ali, the Muslim Herald declares that unrest is spreading among the Musalmans like an electric current. The generality of Musalmans, says the paper, argue from the fact that while Mrs. Besant and her companions have been set free these Moslems are still in confinement, that therefore the Government does not care to listen to their complaints, and considers them to be a negligible quantity as they are a quiet sort of people. It refers to the letter of the internees' mother giving an account of the interviews held in September last and declares that it has created strange feelings among the Muhammadans with the result that even the opponents of the two brothers now sympathise with them. The paper makes a loyal appeal to Government, and states that the inaction (lit. silence) of Government in this matter is quite inexpedient.

Alleged persecution of Mr. B. G. Horniman, editor of the Bombay Chronicle, by high Government officials.

Young India (14), 17th Oct.

15. Commenting on Mr. Horniman's resignation of the editorship of the Bombay Chronicle, Young India writes:—"Few people will ever succeed in realising the trials and difficulties which Mr. Horniman has had to endure in editing the paper: for his fearless independence and his open and sympathetic espousal of the Indian cause, he was subjected to a sort of social ostracism in the society of his own countrymen: at one time Government officials and non-official Englishmen did not disdain to talk away his reputation at private meetings and employ some of the worst and most reprehensible methods, from which every honest Englishman and Indian will shrink with horror, to bring pressure to bear on him to change his views and policy. But like a true Englishman, he refused to listen to the voice of intrigue and calumny and was not to be turned away from upholding the cause of justice and righteousness, at the bidding of high placed officials, be they his own countrymen......... What petty tyrannies he has had to endure from short-sighted, none the less high placed and high salaried, English officials is perhaps the least known chapter of his editorship of the Bombay Chronicle."

Comments on the internment of Shivaprasad Varma by the Central Provinces Government.
Message (6), 16th Oct.

16. "Messrs. G. S. Gupta, LL.B., and O. B. Ghate, LL.B., Pleaders, writing in the Message complain that though they travelled a good deal of distance to see their friend Shivaprasad Varma, B.Sc., LL.B., Pleader, interned under the orders of the Central Provinces Government at Lakhnadan, a place 38 miles distant from the nearest railway station, they were not allowed to put up with him by the Police. They also complain that though the internee expressed a desire to have his relations with him, his request was not granted, that 'the house in which he lives is wanting in sufficient light and ventilation,' and that 'the small allowance meted out to him is hardly sufficient to maintain himself.' They further declare that 'the Government of the Central Provinces must have been led astray in this particular case at least by very doubtful and worthless reports. The present atmosphere is such that the Government can win over even the worst conspirators by dealing liberally with them'." [The Sandesh does not seem to have published the communication referred to above.]

Comments on the recent meeting of the European Association in Bombay.
Indian Social Reformer (3), 21st Oct.

17. Commenting on the proceedings of the European Association meeting in Bombay, the Indian Social Reformer writes:—"The opinion which the people of India had of British rule when it was established is not in all respects the same as they hold to-day. Does Mr. Wardlaw Milne think that the masses do not feel being looked down upon as an inferior race? Does he think that the soldiers who have fought and are fighting in the battlefields of France, Egypt, the Dardanelles, East Africa and Mesopotamia, feel that it is in the natural order of things that veterans of their own race should be placed under the orders of mere striplings because the latter happen to be English?......... Does Mr. Wardlaw Milne know what the feeling among the ablest of the Indian officers of Government is? Does he think that they accept gladly their never ending task of training young lads from England in the routine of the administration? We can assure him that they have enough of human nature—of the devil, if you like to call it so—in them to resent this role of perpetual ladders for other men to climb over to places from which they are all but excluded.......... So far as we are concerned, the one great reform in Indian administration we are anxious about, is the immediate abolition of all trace of race superiority and inferiority as between Indians and Englishmen. Only because, and so far as, constitutional reforms are calculated to ensure this supreme reform, do we attach importance to them. If our European friends object to them, then, let us have a pure, simple autocracy without any humbug about Legislative Councils and so on, and let us all, Englishmen and Indians, bow to it. We are not going to put up for a day longer than we can help with invidious race distinctions in this country. That is the fundamental fact which European Associations will do well to mark, learn and inwardly digest thoroughly. Some of the speakers at the meeting invited the co-operation of Indians in infusing moderation in political propagandism in this country. They must see that, unless absolute equality is conceded as between Englishmen and Indians, it is impossible for any Indian with any sense of decency to co-operate with our European friends in a campaign which, under the present conditions, is virtually a campaign to perpetuate the Indian's position of political inferiority."

Message (6), 16th Oct.

18. "That people who have for years and decades enjoyed in a foreign land an unnatural and untenable position of authority and power and influence should feel apprehensive at the general awakening in the land is not to be wondered at. But what is really astonishing is the claim set up by those very people who have not disdained, in the not far-off past, to regard the sons of the soil as no better than hewers of wood and drawers of water, that their attitude, firstly of unquestioned opposition to any kind of change, and secondly, if change is inevitable, of presumption that they have the large majority of sober minded men on their side, is both belated and ridiculous......... We really pity those members of the European community, who try to delude themselves or others that there is still such a party as "Moderates" in this country......... Notwithstanding their profuse protestations of love and good-will towards the Indians, we refuse to believe in the unquestionable sincerity or absolute disinterestedness of those who took active part in last Friday's meeting at the Skating Rink......... As we ponder over the fatuous logic of the 'European' movement, we begin to despair more and more of our European commercial brethren ever learning to respect the inevitable and immutable laws of progress. They are one and the same in Europe and Asia, and yet such is the incomparable irony of things that our European brethren, sun-cured in the tropical climate of India, will not hesitate to talk in the same breath of the 'righteous war waged in the cause of the weak and the oppressed', and of an unrighteous campaign to oppose the irresistible divine forces of nature."

Kesari (106), 16th Oct.

19. The Kesari complains that Europeans who point out that Indians pass violent criticism against Government have themselves used very strong language like the following "Government have shown their weakness by releasing Mrs. Besant and her two colleagues", "Government have shamelessly surrendered to disorderly people", "Government have lowered their flag before unconstitutional agitators" and invites Government to consider how far their prestige has been maintained by these remarks. It further adds:—If their criticism had been true, it would have been something. But these big Sahebs are either more ignorant than an ordinary educated man or they feign ignorance purposely. Otherwise we cannot explain some mistaken and some foolish statements made by them. Our Bombay European brethren say that it is even dangerous to discuss the reform schemes during war-time. Do not those who boast of their wisdom really know that Mr. Lloyd George who has quite endeared himself to the English people has vowed to solve the Irish question? Many political questions are being discussed in England while it is in the whirlpool of war. What sin has India committed that she should not even talk of the impending reforms? The vision of these men has become perverted. They have expressed their sympathy with Indian aspirations, but they want to maintain their predominance. Europeans should give up their ideas of dominance; then only their words will be valued. They are already over represented in higher branches of public service and in Councils. Still they have set up an outcry that their interests should be looked after. The President of the Bombay meeting has said that India was conquered by their forefathers and not by Government and that they will not allow their rights to be taken away. We can see what rights they will give us if we bear in mind their selfishness and their threatening words. It will then be seen why we have called them a new enemy of swarájya. We should meet their agitation with counter agitation and we should guard our interests as they have guarded theirs.

Dnyán Prakásh (37), 19th Oct.; Indu Prakásh (40), 13th Oct.

20. At the European meeting at Bombay, Mr. Wardlaw Milne referred to the demand "India for the Indians", and contrasted it with the old adage "India for the Empire and the Empire for India". Indians had indeed identified themselves for a long time with the sentiment expressed by the latter adage, but they have found by experience that while its first part is being literally acted upon, the latter part is being completely forgotten and attempts are always being made by the countrymen of Mr. Wardlaw Milne and the Colonials to create a monopoly for the whites in all the higher posts of the administration and all lucrative professions. Indians are not allowed to enter the Colonies and when allowed to do so are treated just like coolies. Nay even those Indians who have shed their blood for the sake of the Empire are not treated with even a tenth part of the respect due to them by the Colonials. The agitation carried on by the Anglo-Indians against the liberal policy of Government is utterly selfish. They appear to be afraid that there would be a reduction in their present easy conditions of life if the Indians are granted political rights. But the times are now changed, and the selfish agitation of the Anglo-Indians will not help to stop the tide of progress which has set in [The Indu Prakásh writes:—Why is the advice given only to Indians not to embarrass and harass Government?

Why is it not given to Australians, Canadians and some of the English people? What is there of embarrassment and harassment in the Congress-League scheme? No Indian can make it out, except Europeans whose powers will be reduced thereby and the bureaucracy. We welcome the sympathy of Europeans and their advice to proceed slowly. But what is there of hastiness in the Congress-League scheme?]

Sánj Vartamán (32), 13th and 15th Oct.; Hindusthán (21), 17th Oct.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 15th and 16th Oct.; Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 15th and 16th Oct.

21. The European Association would have proved their loyalty better by expressing their approval of the step taken by the Imperial Government in inviting Mr. Montagu to India than by finding fault with them. It is very strange that the Association should have declared that the rights of Indians would be safeguarded by maintaining the privileges of the Anglo-Indians. We do not see any reason why the European community should entertain any fears that they will be treated with neglect in the proposed scheme of reforms. The speeches made in the meetings at Calcutta and Bombay lead us to believe that the Europeans are opposed to the scheme of reforms prepared by the representatives of the people. They are no doubt professing sympathy with the aspirations of the people, but if they had any real sympathy with the people they would not have stood aloof from the Congress for the last thirty years. [In a subsequent issue the paper condemns the attack made by the Morning Post on Mr. Montagu and exhorts all the political bodies in India to join in the condemnation and asks them to inform Government that the Indian people are of opinion that the adoption of any policy other than that outlined by Mr. Montagu will be harmful to the interests of the Empire and that the removal of Mr. Montagu from the India Office will spell disaster to India. The Hindusthán asks the Europeans to co-operate with Indians in asking for political reforms and warns them that their opposition and protests will stimulate the Indians in pressing forward their claims and carrying on their agitation in a more vigorous manner. The Praja Mitra and Pársi disapproves of the agitation that is being engineered by the Anglo-Indians and expresses hope that the monster petition that is being signed by the people supporting the popular demands will conclusively prove the futility of the opposition of the European Association. The Jám-e-Jamshed characterises the opposition of the European Association as shortsighted and asks the Europeans in India to submit a scheme to Government on the question of reforms.]

Comments on the Bishop of Bombay's address at the Deccan Sabha, Poona, on Indian politics.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 14th Oct.; Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 17th Oct.; Kesari (106), 16th Oct.

22. Referring to the address delivered by the Lord Bishop of Bombay on the 11th instant under the auspices of the Deccan Sabha in the course of which he praised the Prussian methods of administration from the standpoint of efficiency, the Praja Mitra and Pársi declares that the Lord Bishop has awakened from Rip Van Winkle's sleep inasmuch as he has shown himself ignorant of the objects for which the Allies are at present fighting the German enemy. It expresses surprise that when the Allies wish to free the German Empire from the present Prussian methods of administration, the Lord Bishop should have spoken in support of the introduction of those methods in the administration of India. The paper also remarks that in holding the beliefs that the democratic form of Government is contrary to the very principles of the Hindu and Muhammadan religions and that the masses do not take any interest in political matters but prefer to be ruled by others, he has been misled by some selfish persons or sycophants. In refutation of these two charges it refers the Lord Bishop to the past literatures of India and to the present methods followed by the Indians of submitting social matters for solution to their máhájans and jamáts and asks him to ascertain for his own enlightenment with what amount of concern and enthusiasm political questions are being discussed by the general mass of the Indian public. [The Jám-e-Jamshed remarks that in adducing the plea that parts of India have always been under autocratic rulers, in support of the contention that Indians have shown no predilection for self-government, the Bishop forgets that those rulers were themselves Indians and that made all the difference between them and an alien bureaucracy. While admitting that one man's rule like that of Akbar may find favour with the Indians, it remarks that it is futile to expect under a foreign rule anything like the prosperity that was possible for India under the rule of an Akbar. The Kesari writing on the same subject refers to the reply given to the Lord Bishop by Professor Limaye who presided on the occasion and remarks:—The Lord Bishop had to admit himself to be convinced by the crushing arguments put forth by Professor Limaye. Will not the Lord Bishop now at least support the demand for Home Rule as the Bishops of Calcutta and Madras have done?]

Approval of the decision of Government not to apply the orders in the students' circular to students of the Government Law School.

Message (6), 16th Oct.; Young India (14), 17th Oct.

23. "It will be remembered that sometime ago the students of the Bombay Law School memorialised His Excellency Lord Willingdon to do away with the humiliating restrictions placed on their right of attending political meetings. It is gratifying to learn that His Excellency has been pleased to respond to the appeal of the Law students. In reply to a question by the Honourable Mr. Patel, it was stated the other day that the Government have directed that the orders contained in circular No. 1405, dated the 7th June 1917, regarding the participation of students in public meetings should not apply to students in the Government Law School at Bombay. We are sure everyone will be pleased with this ready act of sympathy from His Excellency and pray that he may withdraw altogether the needlessly harsh circular. It has done no good whatever. On the other hand, it has been the cause of great unrest and excitement among the student community." [Young India also urges that the circular itself should be bodily cancelled.]

In what circumstances should Muhammadans join with the Hindus in demanding Home Rule for India?

Islámic Mail (141), Urdu Edition, 8th Oct.

24. Discussing the part which Muhammadans should play in relation to the demand for Home Rule, the Islámic Mail declares that they will not reap an advantage by joining in the agitation for its conferment on India, and advises them to refrain from partaking in it altogether. At the same time it disclaims any intention of dissuading them from engaging in agitation of all sorts, firstly because it is the day of the agitator, and secondly because it is open to them to bargain with the Hindus in the matter of getting one-third of all government appointments, at present monopolized by Hindus. If, says the paper, the Hindus agitate for getting us our share of the appointments we should willingly agitate for Home Rule. Otherwise the Musalmans of whose loyalty to the King-Emperor the British officials themselves are proud and which has stood the test of the present war, should continue to ask for their rights from the Government itself, and not break away from it for the sake of others.

Why Sind Muhammadans are opposed to the grant of Home Rule.

Aftáb-i-Sind (130), 6th Oct., Eng. cols;

25. "It is our humble suggestion that as the Muhammadans have boldly and rightly shown their dissent in the Home Rule question and objected to the withdrawal of the Anti-Home Rule clause from the address, they should muster strong to represent to the Secretary of State that Sind is differently circumstanced from the rest of India, that it consists of an overwhelming majority of Muhammadans who are quite backward in education and who have already a small or practically no share in the public service of the country, that if any kind officer has ever tried to make up this deficiency our Hindu brethren have put in very strong protests and that, therefore, the grant of Home Rule in a country where one community is high up on the top and the other low down in the bottom will be suicidal to the interests of the latter. .... It is highly necessary for the Sind officials to impress upon the Secretary of State that memorials or petitions presented to him during his sojourn here do not show the real voice of the country and do not represent the masses but only the educated people in the country who by posing as leaders of the people want to encompass their own ends.......... It is incumbent on every literate Muhammadan to make it known that all Sind Muhammadans are opposed to the grant of self-government or 'Home Rule' as they call it until they have proved themselves fit to claim it."

The Indian wheat merchants of Karáchi and the Wheat Commissioner.

New Times (7), 16th Oct.

26. Commenting on the memorial of the Karáchi wheat merchants to His Excellency the Viceroy complaining of the action of the Wheat Commissioner in directing his European agents to stop purchasing wheat from Indian merchants, the New Times remarks:—"We confess we are unable to understand the rational basis of the wheat Commissioner's action specially when the Indian merchants undertake to sell the wheat at the same price to him. The Indian wheat merchants of Karáchi, the 'granary of India', are the biggest grain dealers in India' and it would be a pity if the local grain market is so disorganised by the thoroughly unreasonable action of the Wheat Commissioner. About 15,000 tons of grain is at present lying in Karáchi. There appears to us to be absolutely no wisdom in the wheat Commissioner's suggestion that the Indian merchants might send their wheat up-country where it may be bought from them when the merchants offer to give the wheat at the same price at Karáchi which is now paid for the up-country wheat brought to Karachi. The situation created by the Wheat Commissioner's order is unreasonable, ridiculous and is putting the wheat merchants and their friends up-country to a great loss.......... It would be a great blow to the indigenous grain trade if the greatest wheat market in India is interfered with in this arbitrary manner. To us the attitude of the Indian grain merchants appears thoroughly reasonable and their grievance just and we hope His Excellency the Viceroy will investigate the matter and redress the grievance."

The Honourable Mr. Paranjpye's resolution regarding the Modi script in the Bombay Legislative Council.

Young India (14), 7th Oct.; Message (6), 16th Oct.

27. "At the close of the last session of the Bombay Legislative Council at Poona, Government sustained a crushin defeat on a question of exceptional public interest. Those who have followed carefully the controversy over the 'Modi versus Balbodh Script' will understand at once how unreasonable was the opposition of Government to the restoration of a script which has been in popular use for over six centuries. In the face of grave differences of opinion among the officials themselves and the strong protests of the public, Government attempted to do away, by a stroke of the pen, with a familiar and popular form of writing because it did not suit the tastes and inclinations of a few dozens of European Civilians, and order the substitution of the Balbodh.......... If Government were fully alive to the state of public opinion, they could have easily discovered from the discussions that non-official opinion in the Council was too strong to be discounted. Apparently very little regard was paid to that opinion and Government persisted in their unreasoning opposition." [The Message writes:—"The resolution was carried in the teeth of strong official opposition, 18 voting for and 17 against. The non-official speeches on the resolution have revealed the the strength of public feeling against the arbitrary, and we may say the high-handed, enforcement of an untenable position on the people, simply because it was supposed to subserve the convenience of a handful of officials. Now that the resolution has been carried and public opinion allowed to prevail, we trust Government will see its way to restore the old order of things."]

Kesari (106), 16th Oct.

28. The Kesari says that the work turned out by the Council was small and that only some rules regarding the procedure of the Council and the Modi resolution of the Honourable Mr. Paranjpye were the only topics discussed. It points out that there are still 36 resolutions, some held over from July and questions whether they will all be discussed at least in the December sessions. It further remarks that officials do not correct their mistakes if otherwise brought to their notice and that therefore Honourable Members have to propose so many resolutions. It proposes that meetings should be held more frequently and that they should also be prolonged and it holds that the real remedy lies in Government correcting their mistake before a resolution is moved. It refers to the Modi resolution and thinks that Government needlessly took the step of abolishing Modi on account of the prejudices of Mr. Kincaid and of the selfish encouragement given by lazy civilians. It congratulates the Honourable Mr. Paranjpye on the success won by him and the Honourable Sir M. B. Chaubal on his keeping neutral. It hopes that Government will give up their obstinacy now at least. [It proceeds to discuss the rules of procedure proposed and says that Government rejected the Honourable Mr. Pathan's and the Honourable Mr. Patel's suggestions empowering the proposer of a Bill to become the Chairman of the Select Committee on account of their notions of prestige and it quotes a passage on the 'vices' committed in India by the officials for the sake of prestige from a speech delivered by Mr. Montagu five years back.]

Gujaráti (17), 21st Oct., Eng. cols.; Indian Social Reformer (3), 21st Oct.

*29. "The debate on the resolution moved by the Honourable Mr. Paranjpye for restoring the Modi script to its former position in Government records showed how the convenience of a few officers and their personal influence with the executive Government plays an important part in the decision of Government on questions affecting millions of people.......... It is a most significant circumstance that the Honourable Mr. Chaubal refrained from voting. But it was a deplorable feature that high officials should have stooped to the level of insinuating that the Honourable Mr. Paranjpye and the supporters of his motion were inspired by the wish to maintain the monopoly of Brahmins in public servie. It was an undignified imputation unworthy of any member of Council. Are we to suppose that those who trotted out the difficulties of Mahrattas, Muhammadans and Parsis were touting for their sympathy and vote and seeking to set up one class against another? Such a supposition would be absurd on the face of it. Arguments like these cut both ways and it is a pity that any such insinuation should ever have been made in the debate upon the motion." [The Indian Social Reformer writes:—"Government deserved the defeat which they experienced in the Legislative Council last week on the question of the disuse of the Modi script in Government offices in Marathi documents......... There are so many serious matters demanding the attention of Government that we wonder that they have the time to conceive and carry out these petty schemes which serve no purpose but to add a little fuel more to feed the fire of unrest. We sympathise with Mr. Seddon's plea that the use of Modi (which cannot be learnt in the ordinary way) operates as a serious handicap to the employment of persons not belonging to the literate classes of Maháráshtra in the subordinate Public Services. The remedy for it is, not to introduce a violent innovation in the way of writing Marathi, but to extend steadily the use of English in the subordinate services and ultimately to make it the general language of the administration in the higher as well as in the lower grades. This will put all classes on a footing of absolutely equal opportunity and will ensure uniformity not only throughout this Presidency but throughout the Indian Empire.]

Sánj Vartamán (32), 17th Oct.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 19th Oct.; Bombay Samáchár (60), 17th Oct.

30. Referring to the debate in the recent session of the Bombay Legislative Council on the Hon'ble Mr. Paranjpye's resolution regarding the Modi script, the Sánj Vartamán expresses its disapprobation of the official view on the subject which favours the substitution of Balbodh on the ground of the convenience of the executive. It remarks that since the Modi script has been in vogue for over 600 years and is used by ten millions of people it is not quite desirable that it should be tabooed from the official records so lightly. It is of opinion that in the matter of a script regard should be had not to the convenience of a few officers but to the convenience of hundreds of thousands of subjects. The paper hopes that since the resolution has been carried in the Council the Government of Bombay will soon give effect to it. [The Praja Mitra and Pársi cannot find much weight in the arguments advanced on behalf of Government in favour of retaining Balbodh in official records. It regrets that in support of the official contention in favour of Balbodh recourse was had to the plea that the use of Modi restricts the scope of selection of men for Government establishments. It maintains that in the Marathi-speaking districts men belonging to communities other than the Marathas have to learn Modi and that no section of the public has ever made any representation to Government to substitute Balbodh for Modi. The Bombay Samáchár, on the contrary, is in favour of retaining Balbodh in the official records on the ground that there is a preponderance of opinion in favour of that script. It remarks that the apprehension entertained by the advocates of Modi that in future, after Balbodh has come to be established for a considerable time, registration of documents written in Modi may be refused and they may not be admitted in evidence is ill-founded.]

Comments on the replies to interpellations at the last meeting of the Bombay Legislative Council.

Kesari (106), 16th Oct.

31. Discussing the replies to interpellations at the last meeting of the Bombay Legislative Council the Kesari remarks:—What do Government mean when they say that no further inquiry is needed because the Police Inspector was not present at the meeting of the Hubli Rate Payers' Association? Have they forgotten their own Penal Code? Is not an attempt to commit an offence, an offence in itself? Is it not an offence to try to force his way into a meeting where he had no authority to go? It is quite an independent matter that his attempt was not successful. It does not make the conduct of the Police Bahadur excusable. Another mistake of the officials brought to light at the Council meeting occurred at Panvel. A man's land was taken possession of in 1915 and the notification was issued in 1917 and in the meantime the assessment on the land taken possession of was also recovered! Look at another instance of Government's vigilance in excusing the misconduct of officials under them. Government say that they do not wish to inquire into alleged forced contributions of Khusalchand Marwadi and Saya Appaji for war-loan as the parties concerned have not complained to them! Government must inquire into unjust and tyrannical conduct, whatever be the channel of their information. But the prestige of Government comes in the way. The higher officials try in all ways possible to put off inquiries about complaints regarding war-loan. But people become confirmed in their suspicion by the evasive replies given by Government. It is undoubtedly true that lower officials misuse their powers in collecting war-loan contributions. The Mamlatdar of Dapoli has issued summonses under S. 189 of the Land Revenue Code against those who have not paid up their constributions for the war-loan and has threatened them with fines, if they do not attend. Is not this misuse more typical than that of the Defence of India Act and of the Press Act? The higher official says that subscription to the war-loan is a matter of discretion and the lower officials issue summonses to pay up! It is a question whether Government will even call for an explanation from the officer who has so perverted matters.

Jám-e-Jámshed (24), 18th Oct.

32. The Jám-e-Jamshed says it has nothing to say against the steadily increasing number of interpellations that are being put in the sessions of the Bombay Legislative Council, but it wishes that the interpellations may be more carefully and clearly worded. Referring to the interpellation in the recent session held at Poona with regard to the Co-operative Housing Association, it remarks that the objects of the Association are not likely to be realised unless and until Government extend pecuniary support to it in a substantial manner and give the investors a lead by first constructing model chawls at their own expense. The paper expresses surprise that only six students should be under training in the pottery school attached to the Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy School of Arts, while that school is maintained at an annual expenditure of Rs. 16,000. It wishes that Government would devote their attention towards increasing the usefulness of this institution in order to give the public proper benefit of the money spent over it. The paper expresses gratification at Government proposing to remove the restriction upon law students taking part in public meetings and suggests that the same concession should be extended to students attending colleges. Alluding to the Government declaration that the means to relieve the agricultural classes from their chronic indebtedness are the practice of economy, improvements in the methods of agriculture, spread of education among them, etc., the paper wants to know what Government have achieved in these directions. Regard being had to the slender annual income earned by an agriculturist, it considers an admonition to him to practise economy to be quite out of place. The paper emphasises the necessity on the part of Government to appoint a commission or a committee to inquire into the poor condition of the agricultural classes and to suggest means to remedy it.

Comments on His Excellency Lord Willingdon's remarks in the Bombay Legislative Council on the subject of resolutions moved by non-official members.

Kaiser-i-Hind (25), 21st Oct., Eng. cols.

*33. The Kaiser-i-Hind dwells on the importance of the privilege of moving resolutions enjoyed by members of Council under the Morley Minto Reforms, and remarks:—"To Lord Willingdon they seem difficult of management. We agree it is trying for His Excellency to sit up and listen to unpleasant things, which, it must not be forgotten, Government themselves are very often responsible for creating. We see that the hit that certain Honourable Members seemed to have the whole floor to themselves in the Council was directed against the Honourable Mr. Patel whose energetic efforts are relished by the people. Mr. Patel is in the Council on behalf of the people and the people look up to and support him. The itching caused by exposures conveyed in resolutions is perhaps troublesome. But there are other ways to avoid it."

Sandesh (116), 14th Oct.; Dnyán Prakásh (37), 16th Oct.

34. At the last Legislative Council meeting His Excellency Lord Willingdon warned Honourable Members that the steady increase of resolutions on the agenda will have to be met by adopting the procedure followed at the drawing of a lottery. His Excellancy also remarked that the importance of resolutions lay not in their number but in their value. We are sure Honourable Members will feel grateful to His Excellency for his advice. We are afraid, however, that the advice is likely to prove out of place so long as the Provincial Legislative Councils are the only media for obtaining redress even for minor grievances and so long as the meetings of these Councils are few and far between. [The Dnyán Prakásh writes in a similar strain and says that Council meetings should be held at least once in two months. Referring to the Modi resolution, it says that though the resolution has been passed, it is in the hands of Government to enforce it or not. It further remarks:—His Excellency advised the members not to form non-official and official parties. It lies in the hands of Government to put an end to these differences. But it appears from the opposition of Government to many proposals that they do not want to forget differences.]

Complaint that much time is needlessly wasted in the debates in the Bombay Legislative Council.

Mahrátta (5), 21st Oct.

*35. "Much waste and little work is the usual programme of our Councils. Our Local Council sat for the third time in the year in the last week. The four days which it devoted to its 'work', could have, in the opinion of any impartial critic, turned out much more work than they actually did—if the President of the Council had regulated the speeches properly. The debate on the Medical Act Amendment Bill could have been very much shortened. The Honourable Mr. Patel in moving the first reading of the Bill had eschewed all discussion on the Western and Eastern systems of medicine and had requested His Excellency to disallow any such dissertation as being irrelevant to the matter in hand. But this request went for nothing. More than one speaker was allowed to wax eloquent on irrelevant points in spite of repeated appeals to the Chair for a proper ruling. The debate on the rules of business might similarly have been curtailed without any disadvantage. As it was, much time was wasted and as a result only one out of 38 resolutions on matters of public importance could be taken up. What is the remedy? The regulation of the debate being a matter for the President, it seems almost hopeless to expect this matter being properly dealt with so long as the angle of vision of the President of the Council remains unchanged. It is only when the President is made amenable in a measure to the opinion of the Council and the Council itself made really representative of the people concerned, that the time of the Council will not be wasted so carelessly as it now is. But meanwhile, we can have more meetings of the Council in a year than we have now. There was a resolution on the agenda of the last session to the effect that the Council should meet six times in a year instead of three times only as at present. And we think that the adoption of this proposal would be an undoubted improvement."

Comments on the debate in the Bombay Legislative Council on the question as to who should be Chairman of a Select Committee to which a Bill is referred.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 15th Oct.

36. The Praja Mitra and Pársi lends its full support to the amendment proposed by the Honourable Mr. Patel to one of the Rules for the Conduct of Business, in the last sessions of the Bombay Legislative Council, viz., that the member in charge of a Bill shall be the chairman of the Select Committee to which the Bill is referred. It considers as unjust the practice, which has been allowed to continue, of appointing the member in charge of the department to which the Bill pertains as the Chairman of the Select Committee. It refers to the remarks made by His Excellency during the discussion to the effect that the Chairman's duty is to keep his mouth closed and observes:—We are glad that His Excellency Lord Willingdon set before the Council the Parliamentary practice with respect to the duties of the Chairman and we would very much like to see that practice introduced in the Legislative Council and the Select Committees. It must, however, be noted that His Excellency himself takes part in the discussion in the Council in spite of his being the President, and in the select committees the chairman generally takes part in the debates like other members. [Referring to His Excellency's remarks asking the Honourable Members not to entertain any party spirit, the paper remarks:—The advice given by His Excellency the Governor was meant for the non-official members and not for himself to follow. The attitude assumed by His Excellency in the matter of the Medical Bill in appointing three experts who were antagonistic to the Eastern systems of medicine affords the latest example of how he acts up to his precepts.]

Comments on the progress of the war.

Rást Goftár (31), 21st Oct., Eng. cols.

37. There is absolutely no sign of the war coming to an end, because practically nothing has been achieved to bring peace in sight.......... The Allies have not been beaten; neither have the Central Powers.......... From the outset the one determination of the Allies has been to crush Prussian militarism. So far it has been found impossible to achieve this object. Whatever the British gains in Flanders or however heroic the French stand at Verdun Germany is very far from being beaten. German forces have not yet been expelled from Belgium or France, while on the east the menace to Petrograd is every day coming nearer. The hope that the Russian army will rally and drive the invader out of Russia is becoming remote. For the ultimate defeat of Germany a great deal of hope now rests on the Americans, but can it be approximately calculated how many millions of American troops will be necessary to thoroughly beat the armies of the Central Powers on the west, drive Germans out of Belgium and the still occupied parts of France, invade Germany and then compel the Central Powers to sue for peace? The truth, however bitter, must be faced and it is being faced by English publicists and statesmen. It may be said that the coming in of America makes a great change and when that great country completes her Brobdingnagian preparations the defeat of Germany will rapidly follow. That should be the general expectation, but it must not be forgotten, on the other hand, that Russia from whom so much was expected, has proved a broken reed, and it is extremely unlikely that she will be able to retrieve the situation on the eastern front. The most sanguine view that may be taken is that on the western front although the British have covered themselves with glory and the French have created an unparalleled record victory such as will lead to the headlong flight of the Germans or Germany being exposed to invasion is nowhere in sight, and at the rate the war in going on it may become another Seven Years' War unless economic pressure decides it sooner."

The situation in Russia.
Kaisar-i-Hind (25), 16th Oct., Eng. cols.

38. "News from the Riga region is positively depressing. The Hun has gained a victory of an important nature there. Divisions have been landed on Oesel and Dago islands in the gulf of Riga, and on Hapsal on the mainland. This capture deprives the Russians of their predominant positions in Riga. Experts recognise the seriousness of the move, but do not consider that Petrograd is immediately menaced. The gravity of the situation is, however, realised and the Government has decided to put aside political and domestic affairs and concentrate all its strength on the defence of the country. This grim determination is a sufficient indication of the seriousness of the situation. It is doubtful that such determination will achieve anything against well-organised and long-prepared plans. Russia is the last of Allies at the present moment to be able to resist the Hun onslaughts. Petrograd is certainly in danger and we can only hope that the worst won't come off."

Complaint about excluding a large number of undergraduates from the Bombay University Corps.
Sánj Vartamán (32), 17th Oct.

39. The Sanj Vartamán observes that it cannot understand why out of 300 students who were medically declared fit to join the Bombay University Corps, and who were accordingly even drilled for about three weeks, only 124 have been selected and the rest have been refused admission into the Corps. It does not know on what grounds the latter have been rejected. It declares that great disappointment has spread among those who have been refused admission. The paper hopes that the Bombay University Senate will promptly institute proper inquiries into this matter.

Mrs. Besant the first female President of the Indial National Congress.
Subodh Patrika (43), 14th Oct.

40. Mrs. Besant will enjoy the unique honour of being the first female President of the Indian National Congress. She has completely identified herself with our cause and suffered for it, and, therefore, very naturally commands our respect. It may perhaps be true that she has not that experience of Indian politics which would enable her to pronounce definite and authoritative opinions on certain delicate questions. But her many qualities of head and heart and her self-sacrifice will surely make up for this deficiency. We are aware she does not even now command the confidence of many people and we also doubt very much whether she would have got so many votes if she had not been interned. But as she has been honoured by the whole of the nation, all will join to show due respect to her wherever she may go.

Grant of Swarájya to Goa postponed on the advice of some other nation.
Sandesh (116), 20th Oct.

41. The Goa correspondent of the Sandesh writes:—The Bill granting Swarájya to Goa has been passed in Parliament and also published in the official Gazette. But it is rumoured here that the Portuguese Government has postponed its enforcement on the advice of a certain other nation.

Comments on the scheme proposed by the Emigration Conference as a substitute for indentured labour.
Sind Advocate (9), 4th Oct.

42. The Sind Advocate expresses entire dissatisfaction at the scheme proposed by the Emigration Conference as a substitute for indentured labour, and remarks:—"Indian leaders should not waste a moment to raise their voice against the so-called proposed reforms, contents of which bottle remain almost the same but pass under a different name, and we should demand once more that no Indian should be allowed to migrate if he enters into a bond for any service as a labourer. We shall also demand that an Indian should be allowed to emigrate only when he has sufficient funds to maintain himself for a few days after landing in the colony and wants to return to India finding the restriction too severe for him. What we want more is to make the recruitment penal. These are in short the demands which should be satisfied if the colonies require Indian labour for their benefit."

Government should give up their attempt to destroy the Kulkarnis.
Shubhodaya (89), 12th Oct.

43. The Collector of Dhárwár speaking at the District Darbar said that 88 representative watandars and 22 sharers have consented to the commutation of their watans and he called upon the other Kulkarnis to follow in their footsteps before Government withdrew the concessions offered to those who commute. We thought that Government had let alone the poor Kulkarnis. From the words of the Saheb Bahadur we find that the question is still before Government. We have often said that the idea of destroying the Kulkarnis is unnecessary, prejudiced and wholly unjust. The official who is responsible for the idea which does not benefit Government but only brings the Kulkarnis into trouble must indeed be a very wise man. We again advise Government to pause in their attempt to destroy Kulkarnis.

Claims of members of the Subordinate Medical Service to Commissions in the I. M. S.
Sind Observer (12), 31st Aug.

44. Complaining of the exclusion of members of the Subordinate Medical Service from the grant of Commissions in the I. M. S. the Sind Observer remarks :—"For some time it was objected that these Assistant Surgeons do not possess British diplomas and were therefore not suitable for Commissions in the I. M. S. With the progress of the war the shortage of medical men has grown so acute that it has been found necessary to grant commissions to candidates with Indian qualifications and in no way superior in this matter to the Assistant Surgeons. The objection formerly advanced is thus no longer valid. The splendid work which the Assistant Surgeon class have done on the battlefield and elsewhere has been acknowledged by the award of decorations and unstinted praise, but the bar for some reason which we find it difficult to understand, remains as before. Government will in future find it very difficult to induce the stamp of men they require to take on in the I. S. M. D. as the memory of the treatment this deserving service received in the great war will live for many years. It is a question which we commend to the notice of the authorities. The policy which underlies the attitude towards the I. S. M. D. is unsound."

Parsis and the Bombay Provincial Service.
Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 19th Oct., Eng. cols.

45. "Every year the Government of Bombay issue a notification in the Revenue Department inviting applications for one or more posts of Probationary Deputy Collectors. We read one such notification only about a month back, and so we presume that Government will soon proceed to nominate one or more probationers for Deputy Collectorships. Appointments to the Provincial Civil Service used, at one stage, to be made by means of a competitive examination. But for some unknown reason, after only two or three years' experiment, the examination was abolished. In fact one admitted, though scarcely legitimate, reason for abolishing the examination is, that it was found that the system of competition led to an over-representation in the service of the Brahmins and Parsees, and that the other communities were practically excluded. The result was that, on grounds of policy, Government thought it imperative to interfere in the interests of the less intellectual communities. The motive of Government is no doubt very good. The idea is to encourage the educationally backward communities. But why should the intellectually and educationally advanced communities pay for it? If we are not mistaken, even a member of the depressed classes has been nominated. We have no objection to it. On the contrary, we heartily approve of it. So also Anglo-Indians, Native Chistians, Indian Jews, have all had their turn. But why should a fully-qualified first-class Parsee or Dakshni Hindu have his prospects blasted, in order to make room for an inferior Muhammadan or Native Christian? That is the essential injustice and impropriety of the method of nomination. We do not like to raise this racial question in connection with Government posts. But it has unfortunately been given prominence to already by the vicious system in vogue. Preferential treatment of particular communities, Government would probably consider inherent in the problem of the administration of India. But it may be pushed too far, and result is gross injustice, not merely to individuals, but even to whole communities. Of this the case of the Parsees furnishes a conspicuous illustration. In the time of the competitive test, in three years two Parsees got in. Under the system of nomination, in fifteen years not one."

Dissatisfaction among the Bombay postmen.
Young India (14), 17th Oct.

46. "The profuse protestations of solicitude for the men's welfare so vociferously expressed by Mr. Murtrie and Sir William Maxwell and the repeated assurances given by them, too, to the men, left one under the impression that the postal bureaucrats were in a chastened mood over the failure of their tactical and strategical plans to inflict a crushing defeat on the strikers and had learnt a rather costly lesson at the expense of Rs. 70,000 of public money that they would no more be prepared to leave the sore unhealed. But it was a mere snare and delusion—this excellent impression. The concessions that were published after the men had resumed work were only partial and cannot certainly be regarded either as adequate or satisfactory.......... As regards the so-called concessions we feel that they have belied the grandiloquent promises and assurances. The men have been very badly served apparently for having been too trusting.......... What they will do or how they will act, we do not wish to suggest or anticipate. But if any fresh and untoward developments take place, the public will hold the authorities entirely responsible for acting in a penny wise and pound foolish spirit."

Sánj Vartamán (32), 18th Oct.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 19th Oct.

47. The Sánj Vartmán characterises the resolve made by the Bombay postmen to postpone for the time being going on strike again, which they once intended to do, as a very wise act on their part. It remarks that their present resolve demonstrates that they wish to deal with the situation in a spirit of patience and forbearance. It expresses the hope that the Director-General of Post Offices, the Postmaster General of the Bombay Presidency and the Presidency Postmaster will sympathetically reconsider the demands made by this poor, quiet and hardworking class of people. The paper observes that according to the new scale of pay fixed by the Director-General only a portion of the men who had been on strike will get a satisfactory increase in their pay whereas the lot of others will scarcely be affected in an appreciable manner and that, therefore, such an arrangement can hardly be called "liberal" as the Government of India characterise it. The paper appeals to the Director-General to reconsider the case of the 83 men who will not at all be benefited by the revised scale and that of a large number of others who will only get an increase of one or two rupees in their monthly salaries under the new arrangement. [The Praja Mitra and Pársi remarks that the show made by the postal authorities at the time when the strike of the Bombay postmen came to a close, that the latter had unconditionally surrendered, is not in keeping with the subsequent action of the Presidency Postmaster, Bombay, in calling the postmen before himself and assuring them that their grievances, if placed before himself, would be duly considered. It further believes that such action on the part of the Presidency Postmaster coming on the top of the Government of India communique, warning the postmen that they would be severely dealt with if they again went on strike, is only calculated to jeopardise the prestige of the Imperial Government. The paper regards the attitude of the postal authorities in connection with the postal strike as a vain attempt to uphold their own prestige and requests the Government of India to impress upon the minds of their officials what the prestige of Government really means.]

Indu Prakásh (40), 16th Oct.; Subodh Patrika (43), 14th Oct.

48. Referring to the recent Press Note issued by the Government of India on Bombay Postmen's grievances, the Indu Prakásh writes :—Although the pay of the appointments has been increased there is no corresponding increase in the number of men who would actually be benefited. Indeed the authorities may be said to have taken away with one hand what they gave with the other. Under the new scheme Government agreed to the additional expenditure of Rs. 1,375 which, however, is not considered adequate. The course adopted by the authorities is certainly not straightforward. It is not fair to intimidate poor people. The threat to adopt stringent measures will certainly not solve the whole problem. [The Subodh Patrika writes that the Postal Department which spent more than Rs. 2,000 a day during the strike could very well have spent the money in giving increments of pay to its servants. It says that the Department in its anxiety to maintain its prestige uselessly wasted public money. The paper does not consider the new scheme to be satisfactory and exhorts the authorities to benefit by their recent experience.]

Alleged cow-killing by a European at Karáchi.

Gujaráti (17), 14th Oct.

49. One Chhaganlal Ghelabhai writes to the Gujaráti from Karáchi, under date 3rd October 1917 :—A European of this place, Bucklan by name, has shot and killed a poor cow. It has been sent to the veterinary hospital for examination. Two men of the Jámnagar Lancers heard the firing of the rifle and saw the cow coming out of the compound of the European and falling dead at some distance. What use do the Europeans make of the arms they carry! The general public is eagerly awaiting the decision of the court of law.

Comments on the strike of the Sind College Students as a protest against the reversion of Professor Shahani from the post of Principal.

Kaiser-i-Hind (25), 21st Oct., Eng. cols.

*50. " The students of the Sind Arts College have gone on strike as a protest against the appointment of a new European Principal. The demand to have a voice in the government of the country is not the same as the demand to govern an educational institution according to the dictates of students. Does this come out of the present agitation or the misunderstanding of it? In either case the stupid and impudent step taken by the students of the Sind College deserves to be punished with an iron hand. We are glad that Mr. Mehta, the Vice-President of the Karachi Municipality, urged the strikers to desist. At the same time we must say that they did not deserve the encouragement that was given to them by the promise made by Mr. Mehta to take up the cause in earnest. Our agitators had better beware lest they carry matters too far. The present strike is an instance of the highest pitch of impertinence."

LEGISLATION.

Comments on the rejection of the Honourable Mr. Patel's Medical Registration Act Amendment Bill.

Message (6), 18th Oct.

51. " The rejection of Mr. Patel's simple and straightforward proposal to relieve the Medical Council of its obsession regarding the infallibility of the Western system, has created a new intolerable situation and it has now become the imperative duty of the general public not to take the defeat of the proposal lying down. It devolves on the public to organise public opinion and carry on an endless and vigorous agitation until the wrong is remedied. The public are already sufficiently preoccupied with more urgent things, it is true; but it cannot be difficult to induce the public to take up this vital question in right earnest. It affects directly the interests of the large masses of humanity, who in spite of all the Government patronage and propping up of the allopathic system have still clung to the indigenous systems. In the interests of all concerned, it should be open to all medical practitioners, registered or unregistered, to practise all or any of the systems in the art of healing. Those who are in any way opposed to such course cannot but be extremely selfish, impelled solely by motives of personal interest. As Mr. Paranjpye remarked in his speech, they were merely showing a spirit of trade unionism and it is the height of absurdity to allow it to be practised upon the public with the support of Government."

Kesari (106), 16th Oct.

52. We had no idea that Government would oppose so much the Honourable Mr. Patel's innocent and just amendments to the Medical Registration Act. One of these amendments is to be adopted by Government themselves and introduced by them in the form of a Bill. Non-official majorities on the Medical Councils have been adopted by other local Governments. No reasonable man could oppose the demand for the definition of "infamous conduct". How are we to characterise the obstinacy of Government who defeated the amendments by creating two new Councillors, when all the amendments proposed were universally acceptable? Compare the assurances given by Sir Richard Lamb when the Medical Registration Act was passed that it would not interfere with native medicine and the proceedings under the Act we had to experience later on. The Honourable Mr. Asadkhan has got a resolution to give encouragement to native medicine passed in the Imperial Legislative Council. And local Governments are driving out medical practitioners for the unpardonable crime of working in co-operation with native medicine. How are we to reconcile these conflicting attitudes? Will Government themselves declare how they intend to give encouragement to native medicine?

Gujaráti (17), 14th Oct.; Hindusthán (21), 13th Oct.; Bombay Samáchár (60), 15th Oct.; Islámic Mail (141), 15th Oct., Urdu edition.

53. There is truth in the statement made in the Council to the effect that many of the people passing as Vaids and Hakims are quacks and they practise medicine without any systematic study. But such people will not be prevented from so doing as long as Government do not give any encouragement or help to the study of the Ayurvedic and Yunani systems of medicine. It would, however, be unjust to compel medical men educated according to the Western system to have no connection with any institution that imparts instruction according to the Eastern systems of medicine or to consider their conduct as unprofessional if they are connected with such institutions merely on the score that there are many quacks who profess to practise those systems of medicine. [The Hindusthán writes:—We wish Government had not listened to the advice given to them by selfish doctors and had accepted the Bill and submitted it to a special Committee as requested by the Honourable Mr. Patel. No distinction should be observed between the Eastern and Western systems of medicine, for we know of many cases in which patients have been cured of serious ailments by Vaids and Hakims after they had been given up as incurable by medical men educated according to the Western system of medicine. The Bombay Samáchár asks the advocates of the Ayurvedic system of medicine to prepare a scheme for organising the study of Ayurvedic medicine as suggested by His Excellency the Governor and to submit it to Government for their approval and help.] The Islámic Mail while expressing regret at the speeches of some of the Honourable members of the Legislative Council running down the Hakims and Vaids asserts that the Yunani and Ayurvedic systems of treatment are superior to the western system which is unrivalled only so far as surgery is concerned. It expresses approval of His Excellency the Governor's suggestion regarding the maintenance of a separate register of Hakims and Vaids.]

EDUCATION.

Need of educational reform in India on the lines of Mr. Fisher's innovations in England.

New Times (7), 11th Oct.

54. "Compulsory attendance at school upto 14 and later at continuation schools, upto 18—here is a significant provision of Mr. Fisher's Bill; it has been welcomed in England and a similar provision will be welcomed in India. In Canada, everybody is educated upto 16; in Germany, compulsory education is continued upto 21; and the French Minister of Education has a scheme making education compulsory upto 20.

Indu-Prakásh (40), 16th Oct.; Subodh Patrika (43), 14th Oct.

48. Referring to the recent Press Note issued by the Government of India on Bombay Postmen's grievances, the Indu Prakásh writes :—Although the pay of the appointments has been increased there is no corresponding increase in the number of men who would actually be benefited. Indeed the authorities may be said to have taken away with one hand what they gave with the other. Under the new scheme Government agreed to the additional expenditure of Rs. 1,375 which, however, is not considered adequate. The course adopted by the authorities is certainly not straightforward. It is not fair to intimidate poor people. The threat to adopt stringent measures will certainly not solve the whole problem. [The Subodh Patrika writes that the Postal Department which spent more than Rs. 2,000 a day during the strike could very well have spent the money in giving increments of pay to its servants. It says that the Department in its anxiety to maintain its prestige uselessly wasted public money. The paper does not consider the new scheme to be satisfactory and exhorts the authorities to benefit by their recent experience.]

Alleged cow-killing by a European at Karáchi.
Gujaráti (17), 14th Oct.

49. One Chhaganlal Ghelabhai writes to the Gujaráti from Karáchi, under date 3rd October 1917 :—A European of this place, Bucklan by name, has shot and killed a poor cow. It has been sent to the veterinary hospital for examination. Two men of the Jámnagar Lancers heard the firing of the rifle and saw the cow coming out of the compound of the European and falling dead at some distance. What use do the Europeans make of the arms they carry! The general public is eagerly awaiting the decision of the court of law.

Comments on the strike of the Sind College Students as a protest against the reversion of Professor Shahani from the post of Principal.
Kaiser-i-Hind (25), 21st Oct., Eng. cols.

*50. "The students of the Sind Arts College have gone on strike as a protest against the appointment of a new European Principal. The demand to have a voice in the government of the country is not the same as the demand to govern an educational institution according to the dictates of students. Does this come out of the present agitation or the misunderstanding of it? In either case the stupid and impudent step taken by the students of the Sind College deserves to be punished with an iron hand. We are glad that Mr. Mehta, the Vice-President of the Karachi Municipality, urged the strikers to desist. At the same time we must say that they did not deserve the encouragement that was given to them by the promise made by Mr. Mehta to take up the cause in earnest. Our agitators had better beware lest they carry matters too far. The present strike is an instance of the highest pitch of impertinence."

LEGISLATION.

Comments on the rejection of the Honourable Mr. Patel's Medical Registration Act Amendment Bill.
Message (6), 18th Oct.

51. "The rejection of Mr. Patel's simple and straightforward proposal to relieve the Medical Council of its obsession regarding the infallibility of the Western system, has created a new intolerable situation and it has now become the imperative duty of the general public not to take the defeat of the proposal lying down. It devolves on the public to organise public opinion and carry on an endless and vigorous agitation until the wrong is remedied. The public are already sufficiently preoccupied with more urgent things, it is true; but it cannot be difficult to induce the public to take up this vital question in right earnest. It affects directly the interests of the large masses of humanity, who in spite of all the Government patronage and propping up of the allopathic system have still clung to the indigenous systems. In the interests of all concerned, it should be open to all medical practitioners, registered or unregistered, to practise all or any of the systems in the art of healing. Those who are in any way opposed to such course cannot but be extremely selfish, impelled solely by motives of personal interest. As Mr. Paranjpye remarked in his speech, they were merely showing a spirit of trade unionism and it is the height of absurdity to allow it to be practised upon the public with the support of Government."

Kesari (106), 16th Oct.

52. We had no idea that Government would oppose so much the Honourable Mr. Patel's innocent and just amendments to the Medical Registration Act. One of these amendments is to be adopted by Government themselves and introduced by them in the form of a Bill. Non-official majorities on the Medical Councils have been adopted by other local Governments. No reasonable man could oppose the demand for the definition of "infamous conduct". How are we to characterise the obstinacy of Government who defeated the amendments by creating two new Councillors, when all the amendments proposed were universally acceptable? Compare the assurances given by Sir Richard Lamb when the Medical Registration Act was passed that it would not interfere with native medicine and the proceedings under the Act we had to experience later on. The Honourable Mr. Asadkhan has got a resolution to give encouragement to native medicine passed in the Imperial Legislative Council. And local Governments are driving out medical practitioners for the unpardonable crime of working in co-operation with native medicine. How are we to reconcile these conflicting attitudes? Will Government themselves declare how they intend to give encouragement to native medicine?

Gujaráti (17), 14th Oct.; Hindusthán (21), 13th Oct.; Bombay Samáchár (60), 15th Oct.; Islámic Mail (141), 15th Oct., Urdu edition.

53. There is truth in the statement made in the Council to the effect that many of the people passing as Vaids and Hakims are quacks and they practise medicine without any systematic study. But such people will not be prevented from so doing as long as Government do not give any encouragement or help to the study of the Ayurvedic and Yunani systems of medicine. It would, however, be unjust to compel medical men educated according to the Western system to have no connection with any institution that imparts instruction according to the Eastern systems of medicine or to consider their conduct as unprofessional if they are connected with such institutions merely on the score that there are many quacks who profess to practise those systems of medicine. [The Hindusthán writes:—We wish Government had not listened to the advice given to them by selfish doctors and had accepted the Bill and submitted it to a special Committee as requested by the Honourable Mr. Patel. No distinction should be observed between the Eastern and Western systems of medicine, for we know of many cases in which patients have been cured of serious ailments by Vaids and Hakims after they had been given up as incurable by medical men educated according to the Western system of medicine. The Bombay Samáchár asks the advocates of the Ayurvedic system of medicine to prepare a scheme for organising the study of Ayurvedic medicine as suggested by His Excellency the Governor and to submit it to Government for their approval and help.] The Islámic Mail while expressing regret at the speeches of some of the Honourable members of the Legislative Council running down the Hakims and Vaids asserts that the Yunani and Ayurvedic systems of treatment are superior to the western system which is unrivalled only so far as surgery is concerned. It expresses approval of His Excellency the Governor's suggestion regarding the maintenance of a separate register of Hakims and Vaids.]

EDUCATION.

Need of educational reform in India on the lines of Mr. Fisher's innovations in England.

New Times (7), 11th Oct.

54. "Compulsory attendance at school upto 14 and later at continuation schools, upto 18—here is a significant provision of Mr. Fisher's Bill; it has been welcomed in England and a similar provision will be welcomed in India. In Canada, everybody is educated upto 16; in Germany, compulsory education is continued upto 21; and the French Minister of Education has a scheme making education compulsory upto 20.

Surely it is time for the Government of India to shake off its inertia to move forward in obedience to the call of the spirit of the New Times and send a quick response to the demands of the Indian leaders who represent the inarticulate masses and have repeatedly asked for a national, efficient, free, compulsory, organised education for the Indian people."

Students' strikes in the Central Provinces and the Berars.
Sandesh (116), 16th and 20th Oct.

55. Referring to the strikes of students in the Central Provinces and Berar the Sandesh says that the charges made against students that they are wayword and undisciplined and mischievous are baseless. It holds that it will be difficult to find elsewhere than in India such obedient, disciplined and harmless students. When these boys go on a strike, it continues, it may be taken that circumstances have become so difficult that they cannot but go on a strike. It hopes that the authorities and parents and guardians in the Central Provinces will arrive at some satisfactory settlement of the question. [In a subsequent issue it refers to the rustication of Abdul Hamidkhan, an M. A. student, for presiding at a students' meeting and says:—The students instead of being frightened by this step, again called a meeting of students, and publicly honoured Mr. Abdul Hamidkhan and also held a procession in his honour. This is one of the visible signs of the sentiments of self-respect and self-confidence which are rising among the boys. We do not mean to say that our boys should raise the flag of revolt against their teachers. But the fact is that when the orders of the Educational authorities transgress the proper limits, the students are left no recourse but to disobey them. When orders not to attend public meetings are utilised to prevent students from attending innocent bhajans, they are naturally encouraged to disobey the orders. Students are not inanimate things. If they are treated like convicts and prohibited from listening to the thoughts of the leaders of the people, should they not even appeal to the authorities to withdraw the restrictions? The Risley circular has so much exasperated the students and the guardians of the Central Provinces that it deserves to be withdrawn at an early date.]

Comments on the order of the Director of Public Instruction prohibiting students of the Broach High School from serving as volunteers at the Educational Conference at Broach.
Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 17th Oct.

56. Disapproving the action of the Director of Public Instruction of the Bombay Presidency in prohibiting students of the Government High School, Broach, from serving as volunteers at the session of the Educational Conference recently held in that city, the Praja Mitra and Pársi regards the Director of Public Instruction's order as a rigid, though unintelligent, adherence on his part to the letter of the Government circular prohibiting students from attending or taking part in any public meeting. It cannot comprehend how such an order can help the realisation of the objects underlying the circular, which are to inculcate discipline among students and to keep them away from extreme political views. It observes that the prohibition of students to act as volunteers in connection with a function like the session of an educational conference is antagonistic to the policy of Government of introducing the boy scout system among Indian students. The paper advises the promoters of the Educational Conference to appeal to the sympathy of His Excellency the Governor in this matter, and, failing in that appeal, to bring a resolution in the local Legislative Council with a view to fixing the proper scope and extent of the circular appertaining to students. It further suggests that some such resolution should be brought in the Imperial Legislative Council if its coming session is to be held prior to the next session of the Bombay Legislative Council. It also observes that since the wording of the circular estops students from acting as volunteers for preserving order and discipline at gatherings that will be held to welcome Mr. Montagu during his forthcoming visit to India, it is the duty of public leaders to appeal to the Viceroy and get his decision in this matter before bringing a resolution in the Imperial Legislative Council.

Complaint that boys attaining the age of 18 are being made to leave schools.
Shubhodaya (89), 12th Oct.

57. A teacher writes to the Shubhodaya:—Many days ago Government issued a Circular that boys over 18 should not be allowed to attend schools, but it was not acted upon. But of late it is being enforced and as soon as boys attain the age of 18, they are asked to leave the school. Government should withdraw the Circular. Though it now lies with the Head Master and the Educational Inspector to keep boys over 18 in the school, they are driving out the boys.

Urdu teaching in the Bombay Presidency.
Islamic Mail (4), 14th Oct., Eng. edition.

58. In the cousse of the first instalment of an article headed "The life and death of Urdu," the Islámic Mail. writes:—"Muhammadans regard Urdu as their national language. It is a fallacy, a grievous error, we admit. But the feeling is there and the Hindu opposition to Urdu has intensified the feeling. The extinction of Persian as a medium of instruction has made the teaching of Urdu a necessity and the fact that all the Muhammadan religious and moral books are in Urdu has, if anything, made this necessity doubly felt. If the Muhammadan boys are to get an elementary knowledge of morals and religion the teaching of Urdu is indispensable. Also if Urdu is anywhere necessary it is in primary schools to satisfy the wishes of Moslem parents who desire their boys to know something of their religion first. There may be men like Mr. Jinnah who are not Muhammadans first and Indians after it. They may not consider it necessary to teach the rudiments of religion and morals to their boys; but their number is infinitesimal. The majority of the Muhammadans consider it a duty and a necessity to make their sons pucca Muhammadans, and so far as we know the reason why they have not taken advantage of the facilities offered by Government for primary education is that it does not fulfil their wishes and requirements. The Government of India say that it has to be recognised that there are considerable tracts in which the Muhammadans have dropped the use of Urdu. We cannot vouchsafe the truth of this assertion. We can claim to speak with knowledge of many parts of India and we will attest that Urdu is still the medium of primary instruction everywhere. Even in our Presidency where Gujarati and Marathi are the dominant languages Urdu holds its own and is taught to all the Moslem boys whether in public schools or in private maktabs. The prejudice shown against Urdu by the Hindus on the ground of its being a Moslem language and the efforts that they have made to promote the obsolete Hindi language has naturally strengthened the Muhammadan attachment to Urdu; and gradually as the Hindus are winning the game and making Government believe that Urdu is dropping out the Muhammadan attitude in favour of Urdu becomes stronger and their desire to adopt it as their language keener. In Bombay, we admit, it is not racial jealousy which has prompted the desire to promote Urdu, although the advocacy of the use of the Modi script has to a certain extent created the feeling. It is bare necessity which compels the Muhammadans to adopt Urdu for use in primary schools, in order, as the Honourable Mr. Edroos said in the Council, 'to ensure moral and religious education'. During the debate on the Urdu resolutions in the Bombay Council a few years ago, even that eminent educationist, the Honourable Mr. Sharp, was forced to acknowledge that 'Muhammadans had to learn Urdu for the sake of their religion'."

Muslim Herald (143), 12th Oct.

59. The Muslim Herald states that the decision of Government regarding the abolition of Urdu as the medium of instruction has generated unrest among the Musalmans. Besides advancing old arguments such as Urdu being the lingua franca of India, it declares that religious and moral books exist only in that language and adds that Moslems are too poor to undertake the preparation and publication of a series of books of equal merits in Gujarati and Marathi. It asserts that Government view the question from the standpoint of those Moslem leaders who speak Gujarati or Cutchi in their homes. It goes on to declare that the number of families to which the above class of men belong is infinitesimal as compared with those whose mother tongue is Urdu, and the young members of which stand in great need of education through that language. The paper maintains that it is not so important to learn the local vernacular, which, however, may not be neglected, as to acquire the use of one's mother tongue through the medium of which alone can sound education be given to children. It concludes by requesting Government to reconsider their decision.

Political Bhomyio (71), 19th Oct.

60. The Government of Bombay have recently issued a Press Note and have ordered that primary education should not any more be given in this Presidency in Urdu, a leading language of this province and the lingua franca of India. This is very much to be regretted. This attack on their mother tongue, without their knowledge, has caused profound sorrow among the entire Musalman community. There is every chance that incalculable harm will be done to the community by this attempt to deprive them of their own language and thrust an alien tongue into their mouths. The number of Urdu-knowing people in the Presidency is greater than that of those knowing any other language. If that is the case, why have Government made this attempt to deprive Musalmans of their language? They ought to know that this will entail great hardships on the Musalmans, and will reduce them to a miserable condition.

Akhbár-e-Islám (57), 16th Oct.

61. The Akhbár-e-Islám, while regarding the Press Note recently issued by Government on Urdu teaching in the Presidency as a blow to the Urdu language, absolves Government from blame as, in its opinion, they have arrived at the decision after consulting Muhammadan opinion. It holds the Muhammadans themselves responsible for the Press Note and asks them to take steps to encourage the study of Urdu independently of Government who have shown solicitude for the welfare of the Muhammadans and have done everything in their power to stimulate the love of education amongst the Muhammadans.

NATIVE STATES.

The general strike of Hindus at Wadhwán (Káthiáwár).

Young India (14), 17th Oct.

62. Commenting on the general strike at Wadhwan consequent on certain orders issued by the Administrator of the State, Young India writes:—"The whole trouble seems to have arisen over the untenable attitude taken up by the so-called Administrator of an essentially peaceful and Hindu State towards the conduct of the Hindu public in Wadhwán. From the facts we have been able to glean, it would seem that some people in authority have made deliberate attempts to sow dissensions between the Hindu and Muhammadan subjects of the State, and create needless differences among them. We are reliably informed that before the present incumbent was appointed Administrator, the Hindu and Muhammadan subjects of the State had pulled on together exceptionally well for centuries together without any mutual dissensions whatsoever. Our own knowledge of the state of affairs in some of the Native States leads us to think that Hindu-Muslim differences under Native rulers are a matter of recent creation, fomented by blind or self-seeking men, for reasons which it is not difficult to conjecture. In this case, it has been alleged that since Mr. Kadri took charge of the Administratorship—the legitimate ruler has been deposed and is now residing in Bombay—insidious attempts have been persistently made to create a split between Hindus and Muhammadans. How far the attitude of Mr. Kadri is responsible for it, or how far that gentleman himself was directly the contributory cause of it, it is very difficult to say. But the fact remains that since he was appointed Administrator, the two great communities which seem to have lived in peace, amity and goodwill for centuries and decades, began to show signs of dissension and disagreement.......... It would be the greatest mistake to regard these manifestations of public unrest and excitement as of no serious import and treat them lightly. We trust, therefore, that His Excellency Lord Willingdon, who is politically the immediate overlord of the Native States in the Presidency and is directly responsible for their good or bad administration, will kindly lose no time in looking into the complaints and remedying them. In the case of Wadhwán especially, such responsibility is doubly great and it should be hardly necessary to emphasise it here."

Message (6), 20th Oct.

63. "Mr. Kadri seems to have administered the Wadhwán State so ably and successfully that during the comparatively short period of his tenure, he has succeeded in infusing among the quiet and peaceful subjects of Wadhwán an altogether new spirit, which is wonderful to relate. It might seem incredible but is indeed a fact that all the Hindu shops at Wadhwán have remained closed for well over 20 days, as the result of the new spirit created among the people by Mr. Kadri's administration. It has been stated that Mr. Kadri, ever solicitous for maintaining peace and good will among the various classes of the population, issued on the 24th ultimo an order prohibiting all Hindu processions except under specific conditions and upon a license to be granted by himself on the recommendation of the Police Superintendent—an equally able and zealous co-religionist of the Administrator. Representations are said to have been made to Mr. Kadri by leading and respectable Hindu citizens of the place; but representations were unavailing as they were bound to be. While, thus, the doctrine of efficiency, put into practice by Mr. Kadri, proved successful in preventing the processions, the aggrieved people were not less slow thereafter in imitating the excellent example and proved their efficiency by closing down all the Hindu shops in the town. It is over 20 days as we said since this happened; the other side has shown no disposition to settle up the matter, while the affected people are said to be going from pillar to post for the redress of their grievances. Attempts to get a hearing from the Political Agent did not succeed, that omnipotent authority having perhaps deemed the complaint as one beneath contempt."

Sánj Vartamán (32), 16th Oct.; Dnyán Prakásh (16), 16th Oct.; Surya Prakásh (33), 13th Oct.; Akhbár-e-Islám (57), 17th Oct.; Political Bhomiyo (71), 19th Oct.

64. In a letter dealing with the fracas that took place at Wadhwán some time ago between the Hindus and the Muhammadans culminating in a general strike, a Wadhwán correspondent of the Sánj Vartamán remarks that before the Hindus passed by the mosque in procession they had not the slightest desire to create any disturbance, or else they would not have, at first, quietly walked away even after their Thákarji (idol) had been polluted and they had been stoned by some Muhammadans. He admits that custom required that there should be no music in the vicinity of the mosque when prayers were being offered in it, but denies that there was any long-standing custom at Wadhwán disallowing all sorts of music near the mosque during all hours of the day. In view of the present political situation when the Hindus and Muhammadans have united in making a demand for swarájya the correspondent wishes that the strike may end soon. [The Gujarati paper Dnyán Prakásh cannot understand what must have led a capable and popular officer of the type of Khan Bahadur Kadri, Administrator, Wadhwán State, to issue orders putting restrictions on the playing of music in public streets which are calculated to injure the feelings of the Hindu subjects of Wadhwán and which have led to the strike among the Mahajan of that place. Should the time-honoured religious processions and festivities of the Hindus, inquires the paper, which are generally accompanied by music, be completely stopped? It observes that the Muhammadans are bound, equally with the Hindus, to respect the religious feelings of the latter and, therefore, some middle course should be devised which might give satisfaction to both the communities. The Surya Prakásh, on the other hand, strongly deprecates the action of the Wadhwán Mahajan in going on strike, which it attributes to their notions about imaginary grievances, and greatly praises the patience and forbearance exercised by Khan Bahadur Kadri in maintaining peace in the city. Why should the Hindus, inquires the paper, disgrace themselves by insisting upon playing music near the mosques when even the British Government in India respect the religious susceptibilities of their Indian subjects and allow the Muhammadans to perform sacred rites near their tombs whenever they are situated within the precincts of Government buildings? The Akhbár-e-Islám ascribes the opposition of the Hindus at Wadhwán against the recent orders issued by the Administrator, restricting the playing of music in streets, and the protest raised by the Wadhwán Hindus in a meeting held in Bombay in the same connection, to their intolerance of the idea of a Muhammadan officer ruling over them. It remarks that if in spite of all conciliatory attempts on the part of Khan Bahadur Kadri the Hindus feel such antagonism against him, it believes that in spite of the union of the Congress and the Moslem League the unity between the Hindu and the Muhammadan communities cannot be relied upon as one of a very substantial character. Though wishing that the demands of Swarájya and Home Rule may be granted to India, the paper prays to the Almighty that they may not be granted at the expense of the Muhammadans. The Political Bhomiyo declares that the Mahajan of Wadhwán are an arbitrary set of people and that they have been accustomed frequently to organise strikes. It is inclined to attribute this state of things to the tameness of the other sections of the public and also to weakness on the part of the rulers of Wadhwán. A Wadhwán correspondent sends to the same paper his version of the affairs at Wadhwán, according to which the strike has been engineered by factious people in spite of the patient and conciliatory attitude of the Administrator.]

Administrative reforms in Native States are for purposes of mere show.
Káthiáwár Samáchár (68), 17th Oct.

65. The Káthiáwár Samáchár dwells at great length on the defects in the administration of Native States and expresses the opinion that there is no truth in the assertion made to the effect that the subjects of Native States are happier than British subjects. It declares that the reforms effected in some of them are merely a show for being trumpeted abroad, while in reality the Native Chiefs enjoy autocratic powers and use them in a manner that is prejudicial to the interests of the people to such an extent that many of them prefer to sever their connection with Native States and come to settle in British territory. The paper asks the Native Chiefs to introduce legislative and advisory councils in their States and make them really representative of the people they govern, lest their subjects be placed under the necessity of agitating for reforms and giving publicity to their grievances.

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 26th October 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

Officers [illegible] weekly Report on Indian Papers equested to [illegible] the Manager, Government Central the moment they find that the copies have not properly addressed to them by name.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 43 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 27th October 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British rule :

Alleged attempt of the Indian Government to put Mr. Montagu among reactionary surroundings 3

Comments on Lord Sydenham's article on Indian affairs in the Sunday Times . . . . 7—9

Comments on Mr. Montagu's statements in Parliament with regard to the release of Mrs. Besant and political reforms in India . . 5 & 6

Comments on the Anglo-Indian agitation in India . . . . . 15 & 16

Comments on the internment of a correspondent of the Amrita Bazar Patrika under the Defence of India Act 14

Hindu-Muhammadan relations 18

Home Rule agitation entirely a Brahmin movement 19

How to end the quarrels between Mahars and the rayats in the Bijápur District 20

It is possible that collisions between Hindus and Muhammadans like the Bakri-Id riots are fomented by Anglo-Indians and others who are hostile to Indian aspirations 17

Necessity of sending an Indian deputation to England 10

The agitation set up by the Madras Mail against the Secretary of State for India 4

The non-release of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali . . . 11—13

What should be done if Mr. Montagu's visit to India is to prove fruitful . . . . 1 & 2

Excise :

Comments on the Abkari policy of Government 27

The continuance of the Viramgam Customs Line 28

Indians in the Colonies : Comments on the scheme of assisted emigration devised by the Inter-departmental Conference 24

Police : A complaint against the — from Bilgi (Bijápur) 26

Public Services Commission : Comments on the Government of India's letter to the Provincial Governments regarding recommendation of the — in the matter of the Educational Service 25

Sind : Comments on the shooting down of a cow by a European at Karáchi 29

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

War:

Alleged scare in the Sholápur District due to forced recruiting . . 21
Comments on the report of the Controller of Currency with regard to contributions to the Indian — Loan 23
The situation in Russia 22

EDUCATION—

Muhammadans should be employed as teachers in primary schools in Sind to a larger extent than at present 35
Reflections on students' strikes . . . . 33 & 34
The Gujarat Educational Conference at Broach . . . . 30 & 31
Urdu teaching in the Bombay Presidency 32

RAILWAYS—

Grievances of third class railway passengers 36

NATIVE STATES—

Comments on the Hindu strike at Wadhwán (Káthiáwár) . . . . 37 & 38

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

What should be done if Mr. Montagu's visit to India is to prove fruitful.

New Times (7), 22nd Oct.

1. "If Mr. Montagu's intended visit to India is to be fruitful, it is essential that the demand of the politically conscious element in India be satisfied without delay.......... The old argument of 'bureaucratic 'efficiency' is now found to rest on an empty major premise; the bureaucracy have been proved to be inefficient; and we refuse to believe in the old stupid view that Indians are fit only to practise the virtues of what Nietzsche called 'slave-morality.'......... Not to respond quickly to the Nation's demand would be to commit a colossal blunder.......... The policy of coercion was tried; it failed because it came in conflict with the national sentiment which we believe nothing can conquer. The Indian Reform are over-due; and true statesmanship requires that a new policy be tried—the policy of co-operation with the forces and sentiments and activities of our National Life. Such a policy will vindicate again to a people impatient of the conduct of the bureaucracy and the attacks of the Anglo-Indian press, the way, the promises, the ideals, the freedom mission of England; such a policy alone will strengthen the bonds of Civilization and save the Empire in the East."

Kesari (106), 23rd Oct.

2. Since the announcement of Mr. Montagu's visit, the advocates as well as the opponents of swarájya are trying in their way to convince Mr. Montagu about their own views, but technically speaking the decision does not rest with the Secretary of State but with the British Ministry and British Parliament. But if the Ministry take up the question it will not be difficult for them to get the assent of Parliament. Mr. Montagu can pilot the Bill for swarájya through Parliament, if he is thoroughly convinced of its necessity. There is a party in Southern India which wants special representation but it cannot be classed as an opponent of swarájya. There is also a party which is afraid of losing the monopoly hitherto enjoyed by it and which is thus affected by jealousy. It will try in various ways to influence the Secretary of State. Mr. Montagu himself has answered many of the arguments brought forward by the opponents of swarájya. We have also to note that Mr. Montagu is coming to India with a spirit to translate what he has spoken for the last seven years into deeds. [The paper proceeds to give a summary of Mr. Montagu's views on Indian questions.] He has not contented himself only with answering the criticisms of Anglo-Indian critics. He has some settled views about the Indian administration and he has advocated them on suitable occasions. He has expressed himself favourably on the following points:—The pay of the Secretary of State to be placed on the British estimates, a thorough change in the constitution of the India Council, responsibility of local and Imperial Executive Councils to public opinion, Provincial autonomy, etc. He is courageous enough to put into practice what he has preached. His mind is prepared but it is for our leaders to make use of the opportunity. Mr. Montagu had said once that very few people demand swarájya. The first duty of Home Rulers is to prove this to be baseless and untrue. Signatures are being taken on the swarájya petition and everyone should hurry to get a form and sign it instead of waiting to be approached.

Alleged attempt of the Indian Government to put Mr. Montagu among reactionary surroundings.

Young India (14), 24th Oct.

3. "While the Anglo-Indian press is busy manufacturing its agitation to defeat the object of Mr. Montagu's visit to this country, it is significant how in silent and subtle ways Government seem to be assisting that movement. When the Secretary of State visits this country he is to be kept surrounded—not exactly like a gosha lady—by a thick veil of bureaucratism. Thus, all those or at any rate most of those who have been deputed to be in charge of Mr. Montagu's visit are out and out bureaucrats. The communiques which have literally flooded our tables during the past few weeks regarding the elaborate procedure to be observed in connection with the visit make us think that even His Majesty the King-Emperor's visit was not so much burdened with wearisome hints and instructions to be observed in receiving the first among the Secretaries of State to visit this country for purely political reasons. The Indian public who are naturally pleased at the prospect of Mr. Montagu's visit will do well to take timely note of the silent and subtle influence which reactionaryism might exercise on him and thwart the object of his great mission to this country."

The agitation set up by the Madras Mail against the Secretary of State for India.

Gujarati (17), 28th Oct., Eng. cols.

*4. "The Madras Mail writes as if it were the Madras Government, which has been set at naught by the 'Jew' in the person of the Secretary of State, because it insists on a guarantee from His Majesty's Government in Great Britain and His Excellency the Viceroy that henceforth the authority of the Provincial Governor will be respected and that this country will not be governed by cable from Whitehall, or by private conferences with Indians of dubious loyalty and in 'co-operation' with Mrs. Besant. Why does the Madras Mail so completely identify its extremist views with those of the Madras Government? His Excellecy the Viceroy expressly stated in his closing speech at the last session of the Supreme Legislative Council that he was in complete harmony with the Secretary of State for India and that the relations of his Government with those of the Provincial Governments were of a cordial character. How is the Madras Mail justified in going behind this statement? If it is not justified in doing so, what right does it possess to pose as the spokesman of the injured and slighted Madras Government? We are sorry Lord Pentland who was so very communicative weeks ago has not come forward to support the Viceroy and discourage the mischievous agitation that has been started by the Madras Mail just as if it had been specially deputed by the Madras Government to vindicate their honour and prestige. Have not the Government of India any prestige to maintain? Has not the Secretary of State for India any prestige which ought to be respected by Anglo-Indian scribes?"

Comments on Mr. Montagu's statements in Parliament with regard to the release of Mrs. Besant and political reform in India.

Sánj Vartamán (32), 20th Oct.; Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 22nd Oct.

5. The Sánj Vartamán expresses its satisfaction at the replies made by Mr. Montagu in Parliament with regard to the interpellations on the subject of the release of Mrs. Besant which in its opinion make it clear that the initiative in the matter was taken by His Excellency Lord Chelmsford with the best of motives and that the latter has thereby rendered incalculable service to India. While referring to Mr. Montagu's reply with respect to the political reforms that will be introduced in India the paper draws the attention of the Anglo-Indians to the assurance given by him that the interests of all classes and communities would be duly safeguarded and asks them not to make an unnecessary fuss about their own privileges, as Mr. Montagu will not do anything to prejudice their position in India. [The Jám-e-Jamshed regards the reply as a fitting rejoinder to the various allegations made against Mr. Montagu and the attempts made by Anglo-Indians to misrepresent the object of his visit to India. It hopes his convincing statements will set at rest the fears of the Anglo-Indians and induce them to help Mr. Montagu in his mission to India by submitting to him a scheme of constructive reforms.]

Dnyán Prakásh (37), 23rd Oct.; Indu Prakásh (40), 20th Oct.

6. The release of Mrs. Besant and her co-workers has terribly upset the Europeans in India. They declare that the step constitutes a deliberate insult to the Provincial Government and is a blow to British prestige which is the foundation of British rule in India and they also predict a considerable increase in the present agitation. The explanation given by Mr. Montagu in the House of Commons regarding the release of the internees would satisfy any fair minded person. But there are reactionaries even in the House of Commons. This time the honour of opposing Indian interests was shared by Mr. Joynson Hicks and Colonel Yate between them and strange as it may seem Sir John Rees sided with our Secretary of State. We wish Mr. Montagu had been more explicit in his disapprobation of the conduct of the Madras Government in reluctantly carrying out the instructions of the Supreme Government as is seen from the Press Note issued by them. Of what practical utility is the so-called Supreme Government if it is unable to check a Provincial Government? On the whole we regard Mr. Montagu's explanation to be satisfactory. He was in an awkward predicament being unable to disavow the policy of his predecessor although he did not approve of it. Was it just and statesmanlike to deprive people of their liberty because they insisted upon demanding an outline of the reforms? We liken such thoughtless and barbarous conduct to the stupidity of a father who beats his son for his own faults. Although India has been clamouring for a declaration of policy for the last two years and more the attitude of the Government of India and the British Government was one of indifference and neglect. It has, however, undergone a change since the advent of Mr. Montagu at the India Office. We do not wish to expatiate upon this subject at greater length and only urge upon our leaders the necessity of being prepared with their schemes and arguments to be placed before Mr. Montagu. [The Indu Prakásh also welcomes Mr. Montagu's explanation in the House of Commons.]

Comments on Lord Sydenham's article on Indian affairs in the Sunday Times.

Young India (14), 24th Oct.

7. Commenting on Lord Sydenham's recent article in the Sunday Times on the Indian political situation, Young India writes:—"The article for all it is worth seems to be full of the stock-in-trade of the rabid Tory and Anglo-Indian press, namely silly invective and stock phraseology. Knowing as we do the quandom ex-Governor of Bombay, we are not surprised that in the extremity of his mental convulsion, His Lordship has fallen back upon an attack on the Indian caste system! 'India's most pressing need is the abolition of the caste system and here lies a magnificent field of work for real Indian patriots.' That is the diagnosis at which our ex-satrap has arrived after mature incubation. Lord Sydenham seems to be oblivious of the fact that 'real Indian patriots' are ruled out of this 'magnificent field of work' by the super-imposition over them of a new caste —the hide-bound caste of bureaucrats. The real Indian patriot desires, in order that he may the more readily enter on his field of work, to do away first of all with this super-imposition, which the century-old, cumbrous machinery of the Government of India has left over the Indian caste system. The real Indian patriot has realised that he cannot bring about the 'abolition of the caste system', so long as it is dominated by an overweening and all powerful caste of bureaucrats, and he is, therefore, working steadily and consistently to abolish the new-fangled caste system of bureaucratic Brahmins. We are glad to have His Lordship's unconscious admission that the 'real Indian patriots exist,' and we have no hesitation in endorsing the fact that they do not exist among the small body of sycophants and flunkeys who pose as leaders and haunt Government Houses, seeking political power for their own ends—a class with which Lord Sydenham is well acquainted. Lord Sydenham may feel shocked at the unconscious admission he has made. But none the less he should feel in his heart of hearts—provided, of course, he has enough political honesty—that that is an indisputable fact. As for the rest of the article, we must frankly confess that it is the worst kind of political hypocrisy to say that 'as soon as the Indian people are fit for self-government, it will instantly be given them." As Mr. Ramsay MacDonald remarks in his article in the September Contemporary Review, 'If we were to continue to rule India as we are now doing for a hundred decades, these tales (of unfitness of Indians for self-government) would not diminish but increase with time'."

Mahrátta (5), 28th Oct.

8. Addressing Lord Sydenham with reference to his article in the Sunday Times, the Mahrátta writes:—"You assert, good Sir, that the first interest of the masses is peace and order, 'which the British rule alone can secure'. Without subscribing to the first proposition, we are tempted to ask Your Lordship whether British Rule alone can secure that first interest to the masses of India. Cannot the Germans do it? Surely, pessimistic as Your Lordship may be about our ability to secure peace and order in our country, you cannot have any doubts about the ability of the Germans to do that for us—and for your countrymen! Will you ask whether we desire Germans in the place of your countrymen? Let us tell you frankly, on behalf of the masses, that we want your countrymen to vacate the place which they now occupy in our country—but we do not want Germans or any other nation to step in and take that place. And why? Because the first interest of the masses of India is not peace and order at any price—but progress, steady and unhampered progress. Neither the Englishman nor the German nor any other '—man' with mere 'police' ability and propensity will do for us as master in our home affairs. We must have for master in our home affairs our own countrymen. You and your countrymen think of this land as 'a vale of tears' where they live away from all that they hold in love and reverence. With all most spontaneous and energetic thought and sentiment consecrated to the betterment (and aggrandisement) of your far-off Home across the 'black waters' you and your countrymen ask us—our masses—to be content with the most primitive 'peace and order' menu provided for our benefit! Now, good Sir, this cannot be! We are no longer in our swaddling clothes. Even India moves, Your Lordship. Since your countrymen did succeed in ousting indigenous sovereign rule and substituting English rule in its place—let it be said (according to the wont of some people) that God willed it to be so. But good Sir, if God willed it 'to be so' at one stage of this nation's perennial life, God wills something else at this hour. He wills that Sydenhams shall cease to 'lord' it over this nation. He wills that this country in which many races and many religions have met for mutual benefit shall no longer bow its head to Sydenhams of the peace-and-order-at-any-price clan.

Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 26th Oct.

9. The Jám-e-Jamshed makes adverse comments on the views expressed by Lord Sydenham in the Sunday Times on the unfitness of India for self-government and on his allegations that the present political agitation is engineered by an infinitesimally small minority of educated Indians who do not represent the masess. The paper lends its support to the scheme of political reforms prepared by the Joint Committee of the Indian National Congress and the Moslem League and repudiates the allegation that the demand is made only by Brahmins and lawyers. It refers to the exclusiveness of the Europeans in India which has gained for them the appellation of "White Brahmins" and the class distinctions observed by Government recently in granting Commissions in the army to Indians belonging to the ruling classes in the country. It reminds Lord Sydenham of the fact that India does not want self-government all at once and that it does not wish to drive away the Europeans out of India. It wishes that Lord Sydenham had submitted a scheme of political reforms instead of trying to do harm to Indian interests by his criticism while professing to be a friend of India. It heaves a sigh of relief at the fact that Lord Sydenham is not the Viceroy of India and hopes that Lord Chelmsford in consultation with Mr. Montagu will take steps to satisfy the aspirations of Indians.

Necessity of sending an Indian deputation to England.

Sandesh (116), 23rd Oct.

10. Referring to Mr. Baptista's telegram from England announcing that the labouring classes there wholly sympathise with the demand of Home Rule for India, the Sandesh expresses its regret that adequate measures have not yet been taken for awakening public opinion in the United Kingdom in favour of India's demands and valuable time has been lost in fruitless discussions since the Lucknow Congress. It goes on:—It is true that Mr. Montagu is coming out to India, but that is no reason for narrowing down our activities. Our leaders seem to think that it will suffice if they place their arguments before Mr. Montagu; but that would not suffice. It will be seen from his speeches that however sympathetic he may be for our aspirations, he is not prepared to carry out any radical reform in the administration of the country, for that does not depend on his personal opinions in the matter.

It lies in the hands of Parliament to effect the reforms and therefore its members must first be won over to our side. That would be the best way to help Mr. Montagu and if we fail in our duty in the matter the blame will wholly lie with us. Mr. Baptista has appealed for sending Indian delegates to England and our leaders will be guilty of short-sightedness if they do not respond to his appeal. Want of funds is not the real difficulty in the matter. It is something else. When Mr. Bhupendranath Basu was requested to proceed to England as the member of a deputation, he put forward the plea of the dangers of submarinism, but that plea disappeared as soon as he was appointed member of the India Council! People apparently want to dance attendance on Mr. Montagu when he comes to India instead of going to England to enlighten the British public!

The non-release of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali.

Akhbár-e-Islám (57), 25th Oct.

11. Referring to a Moslem meeting held in Bombay a few days ago to request Government to release Messrs. Muhammad Ali and Shaukat Ali from their internment, and expressing its gratification at the action of the Hindus and Parsis present at the meeting in supporting the request of the Muhammadans, the Akhbár-e-Islám regrets that the Bombay Moslem leaders did not see their way to attend that meeting. It also disapproves of the inaction of the Anjuman-e-Islám in this connection. It remarks that this body has not failed in the past in dealing with political matters affecting the Muhammadans and that it need no longer make any delay on the present occasion in discharging its duty not only towards the two brothers but towards the community by raising its voice in the matter. The paper observes that Government need not infer from this silence on the part of the Anjuman-e-Islám that the Moslem community is divided on the subject of the release of the brothers.

Kesari (106), 23rd Oct.

12. Mrs. Besant was to have visited Mahomed Ali after her return from Simla where she had been to make an attempt for his release. But as she went to Madras direct there appears to be no hope of the release of the Ali brothers. The Raja of Mahmudabad has testified to the willingness of Mahomed Ali to fight against even the Sultan of Turkey if he invaded India, and yet Government say of such a man that he sympathises with the enemy. Even if the allegation be true he can do no harm to the mighty Government of India. Government however are losing the sympathy of all Indians by persisting in keeping Mahomed Ali in confinement. Any reasonable man will say that the judgment of Government is quite mistaken.

Sind Moslem (11), 6th Oct.; New Times (7), 20th Oct.

13. While discussing the question of the release of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali, the Sind Moslem exhorts the Muhammadans to refrain from doing anything that might embarass Government. It then addresses the following appeal to Government:—"As regards our Benign Government, we would earnestly request them not to ignore the innumerable meetings that are being held throughout the length and breadth of the country and to apply the soothing balm to the wounded feelings of our co-religionists. Also, the feeling that the statement of the Home Member has begun to create should not be ignored. The idea that is gaining ground among our co-religionists that Government was unmindful of Moslem feeling without agitation, should be immediately removed. In the interest of the British Empire it is absolutely necessary that the leaders of our community should co-operate with the Secretary of State when he comes here in December, and to achieve that object the release of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali like Mrs. Annie Besant and her two colleagues is incumbent." [The New Times writes:—"The Government, it is true, has certain information to go upon, but why not prove the alleged charges in a Court of law? The people believe that the internment of the Ali brothers is due to a misapprehension which can be easily removed if the Government discloses the alleged facts or the real facts of the case. It is perfectly clear that Moslems do not believe that Ali brothers are in any way in league with the enemy.

Besides their sympathy with their co-religionists outside is not inconsistent with their loyalty to the crown. All that can be said for the Ali brothers is that they are nationalists who would not hesitate to fight against Turkey if she invaded India."]

Comments on the internment of a correspondent of the Amrita Bazar Patrika under the Defence of India Act.
Kesari (106), 3rd Oct.

14. Though Hindu and Muhammadan leaders are united, some riots take place occasionally as the feeling of unity has not yet become rooted amongst the masses. But none can argue therefrom that there is no possibility of union of both the communities. In Arra District in Bihár rioting took place on a large scale but the Bengal leaders have raised a fund to compensate the sufferers. But the officials have interned Asesh Kumar Banerjee, correspondent of the Amrita Bazar Patrika, on the ground that he sent false reports to Calcutta papers about the riots. Many officials have misused the Defence of India Act in various ways uptill now but no one had yet been wise enough to intern a correspondent under the Act. We thought that the practice of misusing the Act ended with the release of Mrs. Besant, but the Bihar Government has soon disillusioned us. Let us see on how many other grounds the Defence of India Act will be enforced.

Comments on the Anglo-Indian agitation in India.
Gujaráti (17), 21st Oct.; Rást Goftár (31), 21st Oct.

15. Commenting upon the Anglo-Indian agitation against the Government of India and Mr. Montagu, the Gujarati writes :—The Indians look upon the Anglo-Indians as birds of passage who come to India for self-aggrandisement. It is in the interest of these Anglo-Indians that the administrative authority should be vested in the hands of their fellow-countrymen. They, therefore, support the bureaucratic form of Government with a view to maintaining the influence they enjoy and safeguarding their interests. It is one of the characteristics of the Anglo-Indians that they keep themselves aloof from all social, industrial and political movements organised by Indians. The Anglo-Indian organs, like the Englishman, Statesman, Pioneer and the Madras Mail, always oppose Indian aspirations and support all measures that tend to keep the authority in the hands of bureaucratic officials. There would have been some justification for the present agitation of the Anglo-Indians for a voice in the administration if they had taken any interest in the activities of the Indian people. But so far they have done nothing beyond making money, enjoying costly luxuries and keeping the Indians at arm's length. [The Rást Goftár writes :—The Anglo-Indians who are making merry at the expense of India have been greatly alarmed by the fear of losing the power and influence they have enjoyed so far. We are constrained to say that these Anglo-Indians have earned for themselves the name of enemies of the country by giving rise to ill feeling during the continuance of the present war. They have just roused themselves from their inactivity and lethargy and they imagine that there is nothing but dark clouds around them. If they are afraid that they are likely to be treated in a manner that would be prejudicial to their interests, why do they not set about preparing their suggestions to be laid before the Viceroy? Why do they carry on a selfish agitation for opposing the political aspirations of the Indian people?]

Shubhodaya (89), 19th Oct.

16. Referring to the Bombay European meeting the Shubhodaya says :—The Honourable Mr. Wardlaw Milne proudly said that the European in Indian will not allow his rights to be menaced and his voice to be unheard. Oho! What are your rights, Saheb? The ordinary rights of British citizenship you will get, so long as you are loyal. If you say that you have the right to force from our hands our trade which justly belongs to us, we shall not give you anything, even if you howl, hereafter. No one will listen to you even if you harangue in the Council to have such rights. We need not be in the least afraid that all Europeans will unite and create difficulties in our way. We have created the present situation by our agitation and not by the favour of Europeans. It is quite certain that we shall be victorious in the end if we carry on our agitation in such a way that public opinion will be respected despite the little difficulty created by European resistance. The European Association of Bombay wants to think only of the war. All right! Do. Nobody objects. But you who are engrossed in this idea, why do you make the agitation against Mr. Montagu? Why do you unnecessarily hold meetings in Bombay, Madras and Calcutta? Why are you engaged in this uncalledfor agitation, instead of thinking about the war?

It is possible that collisions between Hindus and Muhammadans like the Bakr-Id riots are fomented by Anglo-Indians and others who are hostile to Indian aspirations.

Akhbár-e-Islám (57), 23rd Oct.

17. Regretting the riots that were reported to have broken out between the Hindus and the Muhammadans at various places in India on the occasion of the last Bakr-Id festival and referring to the apprehensions entertained by the Hindus about similar disturbances taking place on the Dassera festival which synchronised with the Moharram this year, the Akhbár-e-Islám writes:—Can it be that this lamentable situation has some connection with the visit the Secretary of State for India is going to pay to India for settling a suitable scheme of reforms? Can it not be that the Anglo-Indians who, out of a narrow spirit, anticipate that the new chapter which the Secretary of State and the Viceroy have determined to open (in the annals of India) will be incompatible with their interests, or, the opponents of India, have a hand in these disturbances? We cordially wish that we may be wrong in this conjecture of ours; but this much is certain that the people hostile to this country have taken advantage of the Dassera and Moharram festivals coming off simultaneously this year after an interval of 30 years and that it is they who have unnecessarily excited the religious feelings of the two communities. They have succeeded, to a large extent, in thus creating disturbances and (fomenting) discontent between these two communities and by these means they intend to set Government thinking as to what these communities might not do after the attainment of swarájya, since they quarrel among themselves even before obtaining it. Their object is not to create bad blood between community and community, but to bring one or the other of, or both, these two communities into collision with Government. [The paper then goes on to admonish the Hindu and the Muhammadans to be circumspect and concludes with remarking that if the task of introducing reforms in this country receives a check as a result of want of foresight and coolness on the part of the two communities on the occasion of religious festivals the responsibility for it will rest with both of them, but more particularly with the Hindu community.]

Hindu-Muhammadan relations.

Indu Prakásh (40), 23rd Oct.

18. In a rambling article on the Hindu-Muhammadan question, the Indu Prakásh says:—Muhammadans came to India when Hindus began to quarrel amongst themselves. While Muhammadans and Marathas were fighting against one another, the topiwallas introduced themselves very skilfully in 1612 and the wise English traders established a kingdom soon and proclaimed supremacy over India. It will be a century in 1918 since the event took place. Why should Hindus and Muhammadans quarrel now? What is the use of vain talk? What is the sense of saying "we were deceived by some one", "some one took advantage of our ignorance"? Mighty men came brushing aside the weak. The world follows the principle of the survival of the fittest. Those who are now in the rear should try to come to the front. What cause is there now for Hindu-Muhammadan hatred? [The paper then refers to Hindu-Muhammadan rioting in Northern India and to the settlement of the celebrations of festivals in Bársi and Calcutta by the people themselves.] The Nizam of Hyderabad should come forward to bring about the compromise. But we understand that he has ordered Hindus not to beat any drum in the streets or at home, in short not to celebrate the Dussera festival as usual. Might is right. 75 per cent. of his subjects are Hindus and they will have to give up their festival for the sake of their ruler! Historians say that such an order was not issued even by Aurangzeb. No one will feel any difficulty in following the example of Calcutta. [The paper then appeals to Hindus and Muhammadans to give up their prejudices and effect a compromise.]

Home Rule agitation entirely a Brahmin movement.

Jâgaruk (102), 19th Oct.

19. A correspondent writes in the Jâgaruk :—The present Home Rule agitation is confined to the Brahmins and a few of their non-Brahmin satellites. In attacking the British bureaucracy these people give unbridled license to their tongue and pen and try to undermine as much as they can the love and respect usually felt by the masses for the British Râj. They have also the temerity to assert that the masses would prefer a Brahmin bureaucracy to the present one. A reference to the proceedings of the law courts, however, will prove the falsity of this claim. It will then be seen that people put more faith in the impartiality of English officials than in that of the Brahmins. In short the sentiments of the Brahmins and those of the non-Brahmins differ as much from each other as light does from darkness. The recent Besant affair also tells a similar tale. The antecedents of this lady are well-known to all. Consistency is not her strong point. She was never a strong supporter of the Congress. She, however, established her fitness for the Presidentship of the Congress by compelling the Madras Government to intern her. Her devotees suddenly discovered many virtues in her as soon as a period was put to her unbridled license. It was concluded that her activities must needs conduce to the welfare of the country because they are viewed with disapproval by Government. The contagion of teasing Government and of purposely running counter to their wishes is spreading to our Muhammadan brethren also. By electing Mr. Mahomed Ali to be President of the Moslem League they have indirectly admitted that they are completely under the influence of the Brahmins.

How to end the quarrels between Mahars and the rayats in the Bijâpur District.

Karnâtak Vaibhav (82), 23rd Oct.

20. Mr. Venkaji Narso Kulkarni writes to the Karnâtak Vaibhav referring to the differences that have arisen in Indi and other talukas in the Bijâpur District between Mahars and rayats. He says, that these quarrels lead to the poisoning of cattle and requests Government not to issue orders under section 13 of the Vatan Act, but to settle the dues of Mahars and rayats themselves and order the village officers to pay Mahars their dues and take their receipts. He refers to the Devasthan lands and says that a general circular should be issued by Government prohibiting the mortgage of Devasthan lands. He also requests Government to send to the Pujaris cash allowances below Rs. 5 direct and not through the the village officers as at present.

Alleged scare in the Sholâpur District due to forced recruiting.

Mahrâtta (5), 28th Oct.

*21. The recruiting for the war is going on in some places with inordinate ill-regulated zeal on the part of the recruiting officers. In the Sholâpur District, the result of this zeal has been a panic among the villagers. Sholâpur, Bârsi, Pandharpur, Madha and other towns in the district are now avoided by the villagers. Many markets have been closed and the internal trade of the district is very seriously affected. In many villages, agriculturists go about in solid bands. They take with them axes, lathis and other available means of self-defence. Agricultural operations in the fields are carried out by such bands. Speaker after speaker on the resolution regarding recruiting vagaries [at the Sholâpur District Conference] cited specific instances in which Varkaris (pilgrims) and village-people going to towns to sell their goods or returning home were caught hold of by recruiting officers, and forcibly removed to the depôts. Who is responsible for these acts of oppression? It is the duty of the Local Government to look into the matter and punish the over-zealous officials concerned. Recruiting as it is being carried on at present cannot inspire confidence. Every intending recruit ought to be brought before a committee of popularly elected respectable gentlemen of the village or town to which he belongs. Before such a committee, the intending recruit should declare his wishes in respect of enrolling in the army. If the man declares his willingness to join the army before such a committee, then alone should he be enlisted. This is the right way of doing the recruiting business. Another way would be to entrust the business to local leaders. But to do so would require a liberality of such magnitude on the part of the authorities as, under the present circumstances, we cannot expect them to show."

The situation in Russia.
Rást Goftár (31), 28th Oct., Eng. cols.

22. "The situation in Russia is now becoming very grave indeed. In the Gulf of Riga, the German navy is practically having everything its own way. The Russian civilian population are withdrawing from Reval. Petrograd has been declared to be within the war zone and evacuation of that city by the Russian Government is imminent. Although the situation on the Western front is favourable and the British and French Armies are steadily driving the Germans before them there has been no relaxation of the pressure on the eastern front and it does not seem that any considerable number of German troops have been transferred from the east to the west. The fall of Petrograd would be a heavy blow to the Allies, but we do not see what help can be given to Russia by the Allies on the west."

Comments on the report of the Controller of Currency with regard to contributions to the Indian War Loan.
Bombay Samáchár (60), 23rd Oct.

23. The Bombay Samáchár takes an appreciative note of the report issued by the Controller of Currency with respect to contributions to the War Loan. It extolls the action taken by the Controller in affording all possible facilities to the small investors but is of opinion that the Controller has erred in believing that the contributions made by the Presidency Banks and other banks conducted by Europeans are by Europeans alone. As it is of opinion that these banks are largely financed by Indians it suggests that their contributions should be shown separately as the joint contribution of Europeans and Indians. On making calculations of its own it finds that the total contribution of Indians to the War Loan far exceeds that of the Europeans in India.

Comments on the scheme of assisted emigration devised by the Inter-departmental Conference.
Indian Social Reformer (3), 28th Oct.; Gujaráti (17), 28th Oct., Eng. cols.

24. "The Inter-Depatmental Conference recently held in London has devised a system of what is called 'assisted emigration' to British Guiana, Trinidad, Jamaica and Fiji, all Crown Colonies, to be substituted in the place of the indentured system.......... The scheme reads well on paper, and shows that the members of the Conference have done their best to prevent the gross evils associated with the indenture system. How will it work?......... We are very doubtful of the utility or the effectiveness of the safeguards provided in the scheme, so far as the Indian emigrant is concerned. Moreover, his position for the first six months at any rate will not be materially different from that of the labourer whose indenture runs to five years. The Conference have not considered the psychological effect of this six months' probation, as they call it, on the labourer. Six months in jail are as effective as five years in it to make a man feel that he is an outcast from society. All schemes of this kind, in our opinion, sin against the dignity of labour........ The Indian labourer must be a colonist and be treated as such from the moment he sets foot in the Colony. The six months' probation, and the three years' qualification under registered employers, must be set aside.......... With each such group of colonists, should go a priest, a school-master and other village functionaries of their own choice. If these Colonies want Indian labour, they must be prepared to make the labourers perfectly at home from the moment of their arrival in them. The Government of every such Colony must be subordinate to the Government of India, it must have direct steamer communication with India, and should be brought in every possible way into the closest contact with the mother-country. If the scheme is improved in these respects, we are sure Indian public opinion will welcome it." [The Gujaráti writes:—"The proposals of the Inter-departmental Conference which met in London some months ago under the presidentship of Lord Islington to consider the question of indentured labour emigration from India to British Guiana, Trinidad, Jamaica and Fiji, have been published...... The proposals appear good on paper, as usual, but one is not sure how the system of probation and recruitment will work in practice. India will not certainly grudge assistance 'in developing the natural resources of the Crown Colonies to the benefit of the Empire, but her people ought to be excused if they entertain serious doubts as to the beneficent character of schemes so benevolently devised for supplying labourers to the Colonies."]

Comments on the Government of India's letter to Provincial Governments regarding recommendations of the Public Services Commission in the matter of the Educational Service.
Mahrátta (5), 28th Oct.; Indian Social Reformer (3), 28th Oct

*25. The Government of India have done well to embody in their note to Local Governments the popular view of the future Indian Educational administration. 'The main bulk of the Educational work in this country should be discharged by Indians serving on Indian rates of pay and the guidance and control of education should be very largely in their hands.' This presentation of the popular view does not err on the side of exaggeration. It is an understatement. We desire that the control and guidance of our education should be entirely in our hands. Further, we desire that rates of pay shall not be distinguished as 'Indian' and 'European', but shall be based purely and simply on considerations of the work allotted to particular posts, and the qualifications required in the men filling the posts. We are not averse to the idea of attracting 'the best possible material, European as well as Indian, into educational employ', but we cannot have patience with any scheme which exaggerates the virtue of 'European training' and undervalues that of "the knowledge of Indian minds and habits' and the natural sympathy with 'Native' aspirations, which are as a general rule to be found only in a true-born son of this country. The Government of India must be congratulated on having indicated in their note to Local Governments that, in their opinion, the proportion of Indians and Europeans in class 1 should be immediately fixed at half and half. This is a distinct improvement on the proposals of the Commission, though it does not go very far. We do not propose to go into other matters dealt with in the note. The Local Governments are invited to send their views and suggestions by the 30th of the next month, and before the whole cycle of routine references and counter-references, etc., is completed, we shall have most probably more pressing questions demanding our attention than the partial removal of a real grievance in one particular department of the administration." [The Indian Social Reformer approves on the whole of the letter of the Government of India.]

A complaint against the police from Bilgi (Bijápur).
Karnátak Vaibhav (82), 23rd Oct., Eng. cols.

26. "We learn from a reliable source that the Police in the town of Bilgi showed some unusual activity on the occasion of a meeting held there a few days ago to form a Petha Congress Committee and to get signatures on the Gandhi Petition to be submitted to the Secretary of State for India.......... A Petha Congress Committee was formed and a respectable citizen of that place accepted its presidentship......... Our correspondent writes that at night of the same day some respectable persons including the President of the Committee were sent for by the Sub-Inspector of Police and questions pertinent and impertinent were put to them and that people came to him and asked him if there was any offence in signing the petition and two or three persons even requested him to omit their names from the Committee.......... We are surprised to see that a responsible officer like the Sub-Inspector of Police should interfere in this manner in the peaceful and constitutional work carried on by the people.......... We frankly tell the Police that this sort of activity is not in keeping with the present policy of the Government of which they are the servants. The days of such petty threats are over and our police friends should learn that the present policy of the Government is not to discourage such lawful movements."

Comments on the Abkari policy of Government.
Dnyán Prakásh (37), 24th Oct.

27. Government make a pretence of consulting the public while settling their Abkari policy but nothing is so much opposed to public opinion as their Abkari policy. The Abkari Committees are a farce. If Government really want to check the vice of drinking, they should establish Committees with a non-official majority everywhere and new shops should not be allowed to be opened without their consent. They should widen the powers of the Committees and revenue officers should not be allowed to override them and the final decision should vest with the Committees as with the Licensing Board of Calcutta. The views of local Governments on the proposals of Sir Herbert Roberts are published and most of the suggestions have been rejected. If the Committees are to remain only advisory, nothing will be gained by any change in their constitution. The Bombay Government is not willing to reduce the official majority on the Committees. There are regulations in most of the Provinces about the opening of new shops but the Abkari officials are not bound to obey them. In some cases in Bombay the Abkari committees have not met for four years. No local Government is willing to hold the decision of the Committees as final. The opinions recorded show how much the local Governments oppose the movement of total abstinence.

The continuance of the Viramgam Customs Line.
Indian Loyalist (23), 25th Oct.; Bombay Samáchár (60), 24th Oct.

28. While remarking that those suffering inconvenience from the levy of the customs duty at Viramgam will be disappointed to learn that the levy of that impost will not cease till after about three months more, the Indian Loyalist regrets that the delay should be due to the insistence on the part of the maritime states of Káthiáwár to levy, on foreign goods entering their harbours, an import duty of 3½ instead of 7½ per cent. as suggested by the Government of India. It declares that the duty of 7½ per cent. cannot be said to be calculated to injure the commercial interests of these states when the import duty that is being levied on foreign goods in British Indian territories ranges between 7½ and 10 per cent. It observes that allowing these states to impose a lesser duty, though beneficial to themselves, is likely to injure the commercial system of the the whole country. The paper hopes that, regard being had to the fact that the raising of the import duty to 7½ per cent. is a temporary measure necessitated by the war, the Native States will not hesitate to accept the suggestion made by the Indian Government. [The Bombay Samáchár remarks that the interval that has elapsed since the time His Excellency the Viceroy made a declaration with regard to the early abolition of the customs duty at Viramgam, without that abolition having actually taken place as yet, has again created anxiety among the people of Káthiáwár. It hopes that Government will soon take steps to relieve them from that anxiety.]

Comments on the shooting down of a cow by a European at Karáchi.
Hitechhu (66), 14th Oct.

29. The Hitechhu publishes a communication from an anonymous correspondent in which the writer, after adversely commenting upon the present system of indiscriminately allowing the members of the ruling community to possess arms and after dwelling upon the irony of fate involved in the fact that the Indian aristocrats and magnates cannot possess arms while their watchmen and chauffeurs belonging to the above class can do so, refers to the recent incident at Karáchi in which one Mr. Buckland shot down a cow that had trespassed into the compound of his bungalow on the 3rd instant. He regrets the slaughter, in this manner, of an animal believed to be very sacred by the Hindus, and dilating on its utility which has led the Hindus to hold it in high reverence, inquires who can tolerate such wanton slaughter of it as the one above referred to. The correspondent then alludes to the meeting that took place in the city to express regret at and to protest against the said act of slaughter and, approving the resolution that was carried at the meeting, requesting Government to deprive Mr. Buckland of his privilege and to disentitle him from possessing arms during his stay in this country, hopes that the just Government will deal with this matter in a way calculated to pacify the feelings of the Hindus which have been wounded by the act in question.

EDUCATION.

The Gujarát Educational Conference at Broach.

Gujaráti Punch (19), 21st Oct.; Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 23rd and 24th Oct.; Sánj Vartamán (32), 22nd Oct.

30. The Gujaráti Punch takes appreciative note of the presidential address delivered by Mr. M. K. Gandhi at the recent sessions of the Gujarat Educational Conference and, while referring to the defects in the present system of education as noted by Mr. Gandhi writes :—Mr. Gandhi has awakened us to the defects in our educational system. Mr. Gandhi is trying to remedy these defects in the seminary he has established near Ahmedabad. We do not think Government will open any schools on Mr. Gandhi's model, nor are they likely to make any alteration in the present mode of imparting education through the medium of English. The difficulties encountered in getting books written by Indians sanctioned for use as text books in schools lead us to fear that Government will not adopt Mr. Gandhi's system of teaching history and other subjects from the Indian point of view. The people must take it into their hands to remove the defects and this can best be done by opening national schools and colleges. [The Jám-e-Jamshed is of opinion that the defects pointed out by Mr. Gandhi deserve careful consideration at the hands of all those who are interested in education. It endorses the suggestion made by Mr. Gandhi that a special curriculum should be framed for girls and opines that the Educational Conference would do well to give a practical shape to its deliberations by undertaking to start a certain number of schools every year. The Sánj Vartamán endorses Mr. Gandhi's views about making vernaculars the medium of instruction and suggests that the English language should be assigned a subordinate place in the scheme of education as it cannot become the national language of the Indian people.]

Gujaráti (17), 25th Oct., Eng. cols.

31. "Mr. Gandhi is wholly in favour of teaching boys through their vernacular. There cannot be the slightest doubt that a good deal of time and energy is wasted over the study of the English language which might just as well be usefully spent upon the rapid acquisition of sound knowledge through the medium of one's mother-tongue. From the published summary of Mr. Gandhi's address it is not clear how he proposed to get over the tremendous difficulty of supplying students with a wide range of books in vernacular in the various branches of knowledge comprised in the curriculum prescribed by the University for examinations in Arts, Law, Medicine, Science, Engineering and Agriculture, and of securing professors to lecture through the medium of Gujarati, Marathi, Canarese, Sindhi and Urdu. The administrative difficulties which are already great even under the present system of examinations would be enormously greater, even if Mr. Gandhi's proposal were practicable in other respects."

Urdu teaching in the Bombay Presidency.

Political Bhomiyo (71), 26th Oct.

32. Commenting upon the Press note issued by the Government of Bombay in August last embodying their decision against allowing Urdu to continue to be the medium of instruction for Muhammadan children in primary schools, the Political Bhomiyo finds fault with Government for arriving at such a decision, which, it opines, will retard the general progress of Moslem education. It is surprised to note that Government have come to the conclusion that the experiment of teaching Urdu has failed when after the introduction of that new system the number of students attending Urdu schools has, on the whole, increased, when no one has raised any complaint against that system and when it has been actually supported by the Bombay Muhammadan Educational Conference. Does it redound to the credit of Government, inquires the paper, to create disaffection among the whole Moslem community by disregarding the voice of its leaders and the large bulk of its members? It also declares that instruction in Urdu was not properly given with the object that the new Urdu standards may prove unsuccessful and that Government may not be involved in additional expenditure on that score in the future. The paper wishes that Government may appoint a commission thoroughly to probe the matter and ascertain the wishes of the Moslems. It maintains that the question of the teaching of Urdu is essentially one affecting the Moslem community individually and, accordingly, the task of arriving at a conclusion in the matter should not be left in the hands of alien officers. The paper also appeals to the Moslem leaders to approach Government in a deputation to represent their grievances in this connection.

Reflection on students' strikes.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (29) 24th Oct., Eng. cols.

33. It is impossible, under the circumstances, to extend any sympathy for the students of the Sind College in their very extraordinary and misguided step; and a little straight talking on the subject would be for their own interest. We do not think the right of appointing their own principal and professors—which is what the Sind College students claim in effect—could for a moment be conceded to students in any well-regulated educational institution.......... Strikes of students threaten a blow at the root of all educational progress and disciple; and strikes, on grounds such as this, would make the work of education simply impossible.......... At the same time, there have been cases in which these outbursts of unrest have not been without justification. Indian students have been, at times, provoked to disaffection, by a policy of undue restrictions, suspicion and unsympathetic treatment generally. These are legitimate, or at least natural, grounds of discontent; and care must be taken to see that these are removed, whenever they exist. Very soon, it appears to us, this question of the right attitude of the educational authorities towards students, and of the students towards them, will become the most important of Indian problems. The awakening and unrest among the Indian students, their desire towards a more complete self-realisation and self-respect, have already become a most significant feature of the national awakening. In this there is immense possibility for both evil and good."

Subodh Patrika (43), 21st Oct.

34. Referring to the students' strike and the consequent closure of schools and colleges at Nagpur, the Subodh Patrika writes:—"The parents and guardians of the students contend that the boys should be subject to their control out of school hours inasmuch as they are more solicitous for the welfare of the boys than Government can be. In our opinion the authorities should yield a little in this matter. There would be no breach of discipline if students attend meetings with the consent of their guardians. Why should the educational authorities saddle themselves with a task which the guardians are prepared to undertake themselves?"

Muhammadans should be employed as teachers in primary schools in Sind to a larger extent than at present.

Sind Moslem (11), 6th Oct.

35. In the course of an article in which it dwells on the backwardness of Sind Muhammadans and shows how Hindu Deputy Inspectors and their Assistants try to keep down Muhammadan teachers in the Educational Department in Sind, the Sind Moslem writes:—"In all departments the plea advanced against Musalmans is that no qualified Musalmans are available. That plea cannot be put forward in the case of vernacular schools. We can get any number of Musalmans for vernacular schools. Many Musalmans who in spite of their poverty have managed to pass Vernacular Final Examination are rejected. They are obliged to become either cultivators or coolies. They stand as examples of the uselessness of sending children to school, and so the people's ardour for education is considerably damped. The question is that since Musalmans are available why should they not get three-fourths of the posts, Musalmans forming three fourths of the population of Sind. Similarly the proportion of Musalman masters selected for the Training College should be three-fourths, not one-half as it is now. We appeal with all the earnestness that we can command to the good sense and kind feelings of the Commissioner and Educational Inspector in Sind to help our backward community which is struggling hard against great poverty and other unusual handicaps."

RAILWAYS.

Grievances of third class railway passengers.
O Anglo-Lusitano (44), 20th Oct., Eng. cols.

36. "We are indeed very glad to note that the lot of third class passengers is being discussed in the papers......... Packed up like sardines, these unfortunate beings are subjected to the most fearful torments for the lack of the common amenities of life. What with sleepless days and nights passed in a sitting posture for absolute want of accommodation, the scarcity of requisites for the relief of nature's wants, a most criminal disregard for the most ordinary laws of sanitation on the part of the railway authorities, the terrible sufferings of the dumb millions on whose support many a Company waxes wealthy may be better imagined than described. A hue and cry is rightly raised about cruelty to animals, but what about the exquisite agonies patiently undergone from day to day by several thousands of human beings? The time has come for radical reforms, and, now that the ball has been set a-rolling, we do trust and pray that the eyes of Government will be opened and the most stringent measures will be immediately adopted to alleviate the fearful lot of the third class passenger."

NATIVE STATES.

Comments on the Hindu strike at Wadhwán (Káthiáwár).
Young India (14), 24th Oct.

37. "The representation of the leading citizens of Wadhwán to the Political Agent has proved unavailing. That high functionary, to meet whom the chosen representatives of the people of Wadhwán had to run first to Rájkot and thence to Verával, told them, when they met 'His Honor' after great difficulty, that he had no time to receive a deputation on the subject of the deadlock. The people thereafter resorted to the other remedy open to them, i.e., of petitioning 'His Honor'. A private telegram from Verával says that 'His Honor' read the petition hurriedly and laconically informed the petitioners that he would not interfere in the subject-matter of the representation unless the strike of shop-keepeers was closed. As if it was not enough, the Political Agent is said to have very gratuitously expressed his love and admiration for the Administrator's zilla work.......... The reply of the Political Agent might remind people in Bombay of what happened in connection with the postal strike. But then it is nonsense to suppose that citizens are the humble, obedient servants of autocratic officials. At any rate in this case, there was not the least justification for the indifference with which he treated the representation.......... Whether Mr. Kadri had done excellent zilla work for 20 years or not, did not arise from the petition. In the face of the grave and categorical allegations made against the Administrator, we had expected that the Political Agent would lay aside for a moment the austerity of the District Collector, which we believe, he was, not long ago, and consider the matter in the light of an arbitrator between conflicting interests. In view of what has happened, we can only advise the people of Wadhwán to approach His Excellency Lord Willingdon, who is in the last resort responsible for their contentment and good government. We wonder, however, whether Mr. Maconochie is still labouring under the impression that the Administrator is the Maharaja and he the Maharaja's Private Secretary."

Praja Bandhu (28), 21st Oct.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 26th Oct.; Political Bhomiyo (71), 26th Oct.

38. In an article on the general strike at Wadhwán the Praja Bandhu refers to the rules recently issued by the Administrator of the State placing certain restrictions upon the playing of music in and near the public streets, and regrets that the Musalman Administrator should have considered it wise to pass such a stringent law in a peaceful State like Wadhwán. The paper observes that the passing of this law should be regarded as regrettable if it has any connection with the remark contained in the last Wadhwán State Administration Report about the unreasonable obstinacy of the Hindu máhájan of Wadhwán. The paper expresses the hope that Mr. Kadri, being an experienced official, will withdraw the stringent rules above referred to and will restore tranquility among the Wadhwán people. [The Praja Mitra and Pársi requests the Government of Bombay that, regard being had to the wishes of the Secretary of State for India and the Viceroy for the creation of a calm atmosphere in the country in view of the approaching visit of the former, they should promptly take steps calculated to spread quiet in Wadhwán. It declares that the public entertain the apprehension that the present condition of things at that place is due to the sinister machinations of the opponents of Indian progress who cannot brook that cordial relations should spring up between India and the British Government and the British public. The Political Bhomiyo remarks that the Wadhwán máhájan has organised the present strike without any reasonable cause whatever. It advises the máhájan not to accentuate unnecessarily the differences between the rulers and the ruled. From its editor's long experience in the past of similar strikes in Káthiáwár the paper believes that some self-interested intriguers must be at the bottom of the present Wadhwán strike and observes that Government as well as the authorities at Wadhwán should, in the interests of justice, firmly deal with the situation that has arisen there.]

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 2nd November 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 44 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 3rd November 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British rule:

- Alleged attempt by Christian Missionaries to convert a Brahmin family to Christianity by means of starvation 23
- Alleged genesis of the anti-Home Rule para in the Sind Muhammadan Association's address to His Excellency the Viceroy . . 25
- An appeal to non-Brahmins 17
- Comments on the Anglo-Indian agitation in India . . . . . 5 & 6
- Comments on the Government attitude towards the question of the release of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali 12
- Comments on the Bakr Id riots in Arrah District (United Provinces) . 20
- Comments on the Ram Lila contretemps in Delhi 21
- Comments on the establishment of the Indo-British Association in London under the presidency of Lord Sydenham . . . . 1—4
- Communal representation will go against the progress of Nationalism in the country 15
- Hindu-Muhammadan relations 18
- Muhammadans should assist the Hindu backward classes in securing independent electorates 16
- Native States and the government of British India . . . . 13 & 14
- Plea for State fostering and regulation of the indigenous systems of medicines 24
- Reflections suggested by the Bakr Id riots in Bihár 19
- Rumours that Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas is going to be prosecuted for sedition 22
- Suggested change in Mr. Montagu's Indian programme . . . 10 & 11
- The debate in the House of Lords on the political situation in India . 7—9

Excise: The delay in the abolition of the Customs Line at Viramgaum . 32

Muharram:

- Hindu-Muhammadan entente at Poona during the — 36
- Muharram in Bombay 37

Public service: Government should not deprive shet sanadis of their lands 35

Public Service Commission: Comments on the Government of India's letter to the Provincial Governments regarding recommendation of the — in the matter of the Educational Service . . . . 33 & 34

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

Viceroy:

His Excellency the Viceroy's Durbar at Quetta 26
Comments on His Excellency the Viceroy's reply to the address of the Sind Muhammadan Association 27
Comments on His Excellency the Viceroy's speech in answer to the Karáchi (Sind) Municipality 28

War:

Comments on the Premier's reference to the War services of India in his speech in moving the vote of thanks to the Army, etc. . . 29
Comments on the retreat of the Italian Army 30
Officials do not allow actual facts about the — to be published in Indian newspapers 31

LEGISLATION—

Rejection of the Honourable Mr. Patel's Medical Registration Act Amendment Bill 38

EDUCATION—

Comments on the closing of several colleges and schools in the Central Provinces . . . . 39 & 40
Government should arrive at a compromise with the guardians of students in connection with their attendance at public meetings 42
Strikes are being forced on students 41
The problem of Urdu teaching in the Bombay Presidency . . . . 43 & 44

MUNICIPALITIES—

Lárkána:

Alleged shortcomings of the — Municipality, Sind 46
Justification of the imposition of house-tax at — (Sind) 45

NATIVE STATES—

Comments on the general strike of Hindu merchants at Wadhwán (Káthiáwar) . . . . 47—49

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Comments on the establishment of the Indo-British Association in London under the presidency of Lord Sydenham.

Gujaráti (17), 4th Nov., Eng. cols.

*1. "Those who wish to shut their eyes to the ulterior effects of the Anglo-Indian agitation in India and England, the debate in the two houses of Parliament and the activity of the Indo-British Association that was started on 30th October in London under the presidency of Lord Sydenham are, of course, at liberty to do so. They are, in our opinion, putting the country on a wrong track. Only a week ago we observed that the affairs of the world are not a little influenced by passion and prejudice and even misrepresentations and falsehoods that are allowed to go unchallenged, and although we hold that the Anglo-Indian agitation is hollow and unsubstantial, we are not prepared to say that those who have engineered that agitation have not succeeded in the object they had, viz., to rouse the Tory reactionaries into activity, to weaken Mr. Montagu's credit and prestige and even to frighten him so as to put serious obstacles in the path of Indian reform. .... Facts are more stern and inexorable than mere enthusiasm or prejudice, and it is impossible to ignore the far-reaching consequences of the anti-reform agitation that has been started in England and India. It is a pity that there is no effective machinery of our own in or outside Parliament to counteract the harm that has been done by the opponents of Indian reform. Lord Sydenham has now assumed the role of an uncompromising enemy of educated Indians. In the course of his speech in the House of Lords, reviewing the Besant case, he gave expression to the hope that 'the reforms would not take the form of concessions to a noisy party aiming at establishing an oligarchy in India which would take the utmost advantage of Britain's present difficulties'. It is impossible to conceive a more audacious falsehood and libel than are involved in this statement, and it is deplorable that there was not one ex-Governor or ex-Viceroy in the Upper house to expose effectively the atrocious character of this wicked and cowardly attack. It is gratifying to note that Lord Curzon protested against the attacks made against Mr. Montagu and maintained that he was quite justified in going to India when the Viceroy and the whole of his colleagues had invited the Secretary of State to visit India."

Message (6), 3rd Nov.; Indian Social Reformer* (3), 4th Nov.

2. "The Anglo-Indian reactionaries in London have not yet spent themselves. We have heard of one more faint echo, whose magnitude Reuter has benevolently tried to magnify—the echo of retired bureaucratic fossils meeting at Cannon Street Hotel. Lord Sydenham was, of course, in the chair—and none else could be. His Lordship having hopelessly broken down as an unattached member of the late Government in England, is trying hard to keep his head above the waves; but it seems to us that this fight against the elements is merely one of seconds, and his Lordship must needs be compelled to give in. For the present, however, he is bleating for succour that does not come. After the crushing manner in which he was snubbed by a pronounced reactionary of his own sect, we mean Lord Curzon, it is remarkable that he has had the effrontery to revive his old cry that the release of Mrs. Besant was one of the greatest mistakes ever made in India. Assuming that it was, we think the British Government is making the greatest mistake in letting alone political lunatics of Lord Sydenham's type to do mischief as they like." [Commenting on the creation of the Indo-British Association, the Indian Social Reformer writes:—"The creation of this organisation in England places Indians, who have not completely identified themselves with political parties in this country, in a false and difficult position. Mrs. Besant's release was beginning to make the situation easier for such people, but this Sydenham-Hewett combination imposes on them an obligation not within their views."]

Indu Prakásh (40), 29th Oct.; Dnyán Prakásh (37), 2nd Nov.

3. Since the release of Mrs. Besant the activities of Lord Sydenham have become varied and numerous. We had a taste of his Lordship's sympathy for us when he was in India. The release of Mrs. Besant and her co-workers and the prospect of reforms in India have made him most uneasy. He warned his hearers in the House of Lords not to yield to the clamour of a handful of men who would not fail to take advantage of Britain's difficulties. This is a gross perversion of facts. Lord Sydenham knows full well that not India but other units of the Empire took advantage of Britain's difficulties. But his vision is jaundiced and he trotted out the worn-out argument that a mere handful of men wanted to monopolise power in India and that they alone were clamouring for it. Such arguments have been successfully met so many times that it is not necessary to flog a dead horse now. [The Dnyán Prakásh writes:—Lord Sydenham warned his hearers to avoid creating the impression that Government carried out the reforms in deference to the agitation of a few self-seeking persons. This warning is always uttered whenever there is a demand for reforms. On the other hand, if there is no agitation reforms are opposed on the ground that there is no demand for them.]

Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 3rd Nov.; Hindusthán (21), 2nd Nov.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 3rd Nov.

4. Commenting upon the proceedings of a meeting of Anglo-Indians recently held in London and the formation of an Indo-British Association with the object of protecting British and Indian interests in India, the Jám-e-Jamshed remarks that, whatever be his professions the actions and movements of Lord Sydenham, who presided at the abovesaid meeting, reveal what sort of real sympathy he cherishes for India and the Indians. It observes that in describing the present situation in India as serious His Lordship has exaggerated matters only to strengthen the crusade which the Anglo-Indians have started against the Indian political reform movement. If the object of the new Association is to 'protect loyal Indians', the paper inquires, how is it that its promoters have suddenly waked up now after His Majesty's Government has actually declared the policy of granting swarájya to India? It maintains that the arguments advanced in meetings recently held by European Associations in India as well as the pleas urged by Lord Sydenham himself are not in keeping with the alleged aims and objects of the Indo-British Association and consequently that Association will never win the confidence of the Indian public. [The Hindusthán cannot understand on what authority the Anglo-Indians in London have come forward to protect the rights of the Indians when no Indians, individually or collectively, have sought for any such help in that direction. It maintains that it is necessary for India to protest against this impertinence on their part by holding meetings in repudiation of this sort of intervention by the Anglo-Indians. The Praja Mitra and Pársi ridicules the aims and objects of the new Indo-British Association and describes the meeting which brought it into being as a collection of fossilised Anglo-Indians who have failed to produce any effect upon the minds of the British public in spite of their crying themselves hoarse.]

Comments on the Anglo-Indian agitation in India.

Indu Prakásh (40), 29th Oct.

5. Europeans in India must be keenly feeling their prospective loss of power. That, however, is inevitable. England has repeatedly declared that India was held as a sacred trust by her which she was going to return to its owners when the proper time arrived. The time for redeeming this promise is now at hand if the utterances of responsible statesmen and the charters of sovereigns have any value. People will certainly lose all confidence in British justice if the present opportunity is not taken to fulfil the pledges. All parties including the extremists are agreed that India must remain an integral part of the British Empire and no one dreams of subverting the present rule. Anglo-Indians need not entertain any fears about their future. There is one more consideration which ought to weigh with these people. At present as all power is centred in their hands, every conceivable calamity such as plague, famine, etc., is laid at their door. If they were to share their responsibilities with Indians a considerable part of the public criticism for such misfortunes will necessarily be diverted to the latter.

Kesari (106), 30th Oct.

6. The Kesari says that the Anglo-Indians are burning with anger all the more just as the day of Mr. Montagu's visit to India is approaching nearer. It further adds:—The sum and substance of the Anglo-Indian agitation is that Indians should not be granted swarájya and that if it is at all given Anglo-Indians should be given special representation in the local bodies as well as in the Legislative Council. The handful of Anglo-Indians are already over-represented and their lamentations are without cause and selfish. The tactics of these actors who have set up a false cry are known to the British ministry and it is to be noted that Lord Sydenham had to withdraw his motion in the House of Lords.

The debate in the House of Lords on the political situation in India.
Message (6), 30th Oct.

7. Commenting on the debate in the House of Lords on the political situation in India, the Message remarks:—"After the fairly complete statement made by Mr. Montagu, in the House of Commons only the other week, Lord Sydenham would have been better advised if he had imposed on himself a kind of self-denying ordinance. But then, as sure as anything, it would have deprived him and the narrow brotherhood to which he belongs, of the mischievous pleasure of hauling the Radical Secretary of State over the coals. That that was their objective, it does not require great foresight to understand. They want to create as many difficulties in the way of Mr. Montagu as possible and show to him before he leaves the English shores the magnitude of the opposition which they are ready to engineer the moment he and the Cabinet to which he belongs intend doing justice to the Indian people. That this is their whole game, there can be hardly any doubt. The game might have succeeded at one time; but now it is all up and we are bound to see better progress made in the direction of Indians obtaining a tolerably full amount of justice at the hands of the British democracy.......... The hasty withdrawal of the motion leads us to think that the forces of reaction were taken aback by the dramatic disclosure of the tragic fact of Lord Chelmsford's courageous admission that the responsibility for releasing Mrs. Besant and her colleagues was his and his Government's. .... We hope that after their disgraceful failure, the Sydenhamites will learn to keep their peace at least for a decent period of time to come."

Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 31st Oct., Eng. cols.

8. "Lord Sydenham's notice of motion produced one good. It led to the Viceroy unequivocally declaring that, in the matter of Mrs. Besant, he acted 'on his own responsibility'. Even after Mr. Montagu's reply, the opponents of Indian progress pretended to believe that Mr. Montagu was at the bottom of it. After the Viceroy's message, it would be impossible to further persist in laying the blame on Mr. Montagu's devoted head. There remains nothing now except to hope that this mischievous agitation against the Secretary of State will be dropped. 'The task before those in India was difficult and intricate in the extreme, and success would largely depend on the effort of British and Indian people working in harmony. Our task at home was to do nothing to disturb that harmony.' Lord Sydenham and his friends have long been engaged in doing this work of disturbing the harmony. We hope their recent experiences in Parliament would teach them to give it up as profitless and mischievous."

Hindusthán (21), 29th Oct.; Sánj Vartamán (32), 29th Oct.

9. The Hindusthán, while commenting upon the debate in the House of Lords on the question of Mrs. Besant's release, remarks that the termination of the debate showed that Lord Sydenham and his Anglo-Indian friends in India had to suffer the humiliation of a discomfiture in their attempts to thwart Mr. Montagu and to throw impediments in the way of India's political progress. It expresses satisfaction at the explanation given by Lord Islington to the effect that Lord Chelmsford had taken upon himself the responsibility of releasing Mrs. Besant and hopes that the Anglo-Indians will now give up their antagonism to Indian aspirations and join hands with them in suggesting constructive schemes for their mutual welfare and advancement. [The Sánj Vartamán asks the Anglo-Indians to take their defeat in good part and put an end to their agitation. It asks Lord Chelmsford to give the Anglo-Indians a warning to stop their harmful activities. It also asks the Anglo-Indians to work in co-operation with the Indians for India's uplift.]

Suggested change in Mr. Montagu's Indian programme.

Young India (14), 31st Oct.

10. "We hope it is a mere accident that those who were responsible for drawing up the programme of Mr. Montagu's Indian tour have so arranged that while the leaders from all parts of India will be meeting in Conference at Calcutta, Mr. Montagu will be visiting Bombay. It is needless to say that during the Christmas week the city will be bereft of all its leaders as also of the more important sections of the community. Even the European community will be mostly away from the city to spend the holidays abroad. It is, therefore, difficult to understand what those who are responsible for this grand arrangement intend Mr. Montagu should do in a forlorn city like Bombay. If his object is to acquaint himself at first hand with the views and opinions of the Indian leaders, we cannot think of a better and more suitable opportunity than the meeting of the Congress and the Moslem League. The elite of Indian thought will all be assembled in Calcutta and Mr. Montagu will surely find Calcutta more attractive to him than the deserted city of Bombay. .... He is coming here with a pre-conceived purpose and when that purpose can be better satisfied by his going to Calcutta, may we enquire to whose admirable judgment and wisdom we owe the present plan of placing him under a veritable political 'quarantine' during that busy week? We are glad that the Home Rule League has protested against this plan, and trust that it will lead to a suitable modification in the tour programme."

Gujaráti (17), 28th Oct.

11. Unfortunately Mr. Montagu's programme has been so arranged that the popular leaders of the Bombay Presidency will not be able to take any part in the deliberations of the Congress and the Moslem League if they want to have an interview with Mr. Montagu in Bombay. They will thus be debarred from knowing the views of those bodies and will forfeit their right to nominate their representatives on the deputations that will wait upon Mr. Montagu. Under the circumstances, it will be very desirable on the part of Mr. Montagu to visit Calcutta first and be present at the sessions of the Congress and the Moslem League and then come over to Bombay. We hope, therefore, the Government of India will be pleased to change Mr. Montagu's programme.

Comments on the Government attitude towards the question of the release of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali.

New Times (7), 27th Oct.

12. Commenting upon the Honourable Mr. Syed Reza Ali's letter to the Pioneer on the subject of the internment of Messrs. Mahomed Ali, and Shaukat Ali, the New Times remarks:—"The conduct of the Government has given a rude shock to the people. The promise—or what almost amounted to a promise—of release has been suddenly changed into a strange 'charge'!...... The Moslem brothers have not the powerful friends Mrs. Besant has; but surely we had believed that British justice was no respector of persons. Sympathy with the Muslims of Turkey has naturally been felt by their co-religionists all over the world; the Muslims regard themselves as members of one World-Brotherhood in Islam; but religious sympathy does not mean political co-operation with Turkey; and to intern men on account of their religious sympathy with members of an 'enemy' nation would be to exhibit a political rage unworthy of the traditions and ideals of the English nation....... The only honest course open to the Government is either to prove the serious charges it has made or to make good its earlier promise to release them. The people refuse to believe that the two Muslim leaders expressed and promoted political sympathy with the king's enemies; they regard the conduct of the Government as unfair, therefore it is that Mr. Mahomed Ali is elected as President of the next Moslem League session; therefore it is that the Congress-League elected him as one of the persons who are to present to Mr. Montagu an Address on behalf of the people; therefore it is that the people have from the platform and through the Press demanded, again and again, the release of these Muslim leaders."

Native States and the government of British India.

Sánj Vartamán (32), 27th Oct.; Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 30th Oct.; Shri Venkateshwar (80), 28th Oct.

13. The Sánj Vartamán falls foul of the suggestion made by the Dewan of the Mysore State in his speech before the Representative Assembly of the State, to the effect that the Native States should be given the right of sending representatives to the Imperial Legislative Council, on the ground that such representatives will side with the officials and oppose the popular members of the Council. It refers to the backwardness of many of the Native States and suggests that they might be given a separate deliberative Council which might be authorised to send its recommendations to the Imperial Council for consideration. [The Jám-e-Jamshed is of opinion that this controversial question should be discussed at a Conference of representatives of British Indian subjects, Anglo-Indians and subjects of Native States so that there might be some unanimity of opinion in the matter of the position of Native States in the Indian policy. The Shri Venkateshwar is of opinion that the Native States must be prepared to give a voice to their subjects in the administration of their States before they can claim any representation in the Imperial Legislative Council.]

Kesari (106), 30th Oct.; Dnyán Prakásh (37), 30th Oct.

14. Commenting upon Sir M. Visvesvarayya's speech advocating the claim of the Native States to have their representatives in the Legislative Councils with voting power only when questions pertaining to the Native States are raised, the Kesari observes:—So long as the British officials had a clear majority in the Legislative Councils the Chiefs did not care. Why should they then be afraid if Indians had the majority? It is not very desirable that Sir M. Visvesvarayya should prefer his claim and have a share as soon there was a possibility of getting a few rights of swarájya. Until it is proved that the future scheme of swarájya would be more harmful to the subjects of the Native States than the present autocratic Government, it is not reasonable to press for the admission of representatives of the Native States into the Council. It would be an absurdity to have a representative from every Native State just as from every caste! It is regrettable that such a clever Dewan as Sir M. Visvesvarayya should not realise the impracticable nature of his suggestion. [The Dnyán Prakásh remarks:—There should be a federation of British Provinces first and then there should be a further federation of the Native States and British Provinces. This second federation should have the power to levy customs duty and arrange for the defence of the country. At present the Native States do not contribute much for the defence of the country and they have no voice in the levy of customs duty. Both these things are not reasonable. But this arrangement would protect the interests of Native States; what of the subjects of Native States? If the British Government were not here, a rebellion would have corrected matters in a Native State when there was too much of tyranny. But now under the British Sovereignty the subjects of the Native States have to suffer many a time anything and everything. We suggest, therefore, that only such Native States as have introduced democratic Government in their territories should be admitted into the federation.]

Communal representation will go against the progress of Nationalism in the country.

Message (6), 3rd Nov.

15. "Just as we have been approaching the gates of national unity, after long drawn-out battles and fierce struggles, the ranks of Indian Nationalism seem to be threatened by an internal and external reaction. Thus the Pseudo-non-Brahmin Movement which, truth to say, has been deliberately encouraged for ulterior reasons by some persons in high position, is not merely the result of a disintegrating tendency, which has been for two centuries the bane of Indian society and political life, but is undoubtedly the work of some selfish people, whose love of India and Indians is all sham and hypocrisy. It is a pity that Indians, who are supposed to be educated and at one time stood in the forefront of the national struggle should have succumbed to the temptations to which weak humanity is liable and taken up an ill-advised attitude towards the National goal.......... We are on principle opposed to the perpetuation of the fissiparous and disintegrating tendencies in the community which the so-called communal representation and separate electorates will tend merely to exaggerate and prolong."

Muhammadans should assist the Hindu backward classes in securing independent electorates.
Jágaruk (102), 26th Oct.

16. We do not understand how our self-appointed Brahmin leaders could arrogate to themselves the right of allotting one-third of the seats on the Legislative Councils to Muhammadans in the proposed scheme of reforms. What right had these men to enter into this agreement with the Muhammadans without consulting the leaders of the backward classes who form an enormous majority of the population? We do not of course grudge the Muhammadans a few more seats. But if they wish that the agreement entered into with them by the Brahmin leaders should be binding on all Hindus they should endeavour to secure independent electorates for the backward and the untouchable classes. Otherwise the arrangement arrived at by unauthorised persons is likely to fall through. Unfortunately, however, the leaders of the Muhammadans are apathetic in this respect. They are at present trying to bring about the release of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali by the same methods as those adopted by the Home Rulers for the release of Mrs. Besant.

An appeal to non-Brahmins.
Sandesh (116), 28th Oct.

17. The terms Brahmins and non-Brahmins are very much in evidence of late. When the Swarájya movement gained considerable strength, people who thought that their own interests were jeopardized, first gave undue prominence to the differences between the two classes. Those who argue that the interests of the Brahmins and the non-Brahmins differ from each other have no true conception of Swarájya. The demand for separate electorates by the different communities is evidently a sign of their awakening. Anyone, however, who has the welfare of his country at heart, will be grieved to find that the whole attitude of these people is characterised by bitter hostility towards the Brahmins. The assertion that the Brahmins are bent upon the destruction of all other communities is most ungenerous, short-sighted and suicidal. We, therefore, earnestly appeal to our non-Brahmin brethren not to create needless difficulties in the path of our leaders when their labours are about to be fructified. We likewise appeal to all to support whole-heartedly the petition to be presented to Mr. Montagu and to remember that we are all sons of mother Ind and are, therefore, interdependent. Will you not all unfurl the banner of unity and place your demands before Mr. Montagu with one voice?

Hindu-Muhammadan relations.
Kesari (106), 30th Oct.

18. Referring to the Dussera and Muharram celebrations the Kesari says that the festivals were celebrated without any hitch whatsoever in places where the whole thing was left to the good sense of the two communities and where the officials did not interfere. [It then proceeds to give an account of the strike of Hindu shopkeepers at Delhi on account of the prohibition of Ramlila procession. It then remarks:—] What did the haughty officials of Delhi gain thereby? We are always reminded of Mr. Montagu's remarks "Oh India! If the word Prestige were not in the English Dictionary, how happy would you have been" when we witness the acts of officials who rely upon their bludgeons.

Reflections suggested by the Bakr Id riots in Bihár.
Islámic Mail (141), 29th Oct., Urdu edition.

19. The Islámic Mail publishes an account of the riots which took place in some districts of Bihár and remarks that these were perpetrated with a view to prevent the Musalmans from fulfilling their religious obligations. It inquires if any further proof of the deceitfulness and selfishness of the Hindus is necessary, and also asks how the Moslems would fare when the former are masters of the situation. It opines that the reason why the Hindus are anxious to become friends with the Musalmans is that they cannot attain their object, viz., Home Rule, without the assistance of the latter. It admits that the country's progress and contentment depend on union between the two communities, but doubts the usefulness of an imaginary friendship when racial antipathy and religious prejudice are still rampant. It refers to the advice of Maulana Abdul Bari to the effect that the Musalmans should keep aloof from the agitation for Home Rule, and should formulate proposals for the benefit of their own community if they are at all desirous of preserving their religious and communal existence. It concludes by suggesting that the rulers or the Christians, the Muhammadans in whom the right to rule inheres, and the natives of the soil or the Hindus should each be entitled to a third of all appointments and seats on representative bodies, or at least the same proportion of Government appointments be placed at the Musalmans' disposal as the Hindus have agreed to allow to their representatives in the Legislative Councils and that in those provinces where the Muhammadans preponderate their share should be proportionately increased. The paper invites the leaders of the Muhammadans to ponder over these proposals before they submit any scheme to the Honourable Mr. Montagu.

Comments on the Bakr Id riots in Arrah District (Behár).
Mahrátta (5), 4th Nov.

*20. " One account of how Arrah became a scene of disturbances lays the blame of the sad happenings on the shoulders of an overzealous official. We are told that at Shahabad a compromise was arrived at between the Hindus and Muhammadans, according to which there was to be no cow-sacrifice, the Hindus undertaking, among other things, to provide a certain number of goats instead. The official seems to have disliked this settlement. He got a cow sacrificed in his presence, some Muhammadans, of course, being of the official's view and not having adequate respect for the settlement arrived at by the sober majority of their community. This account may be somewhat exaggerated. But seeing how officials in other places and on other occasions have thought fit to treat contemptuously compromises arrived at between the Hindus and Muhammadans, we might well believe that the account before us is substantially true.......... After the actual mishappenings those whose interest it is to make capital out of such incidents in order to obstruct the progress of the country have been very busy. Reports of all sorts of unconscionable misdeeds on the part of Hindu rioters have been spread broadcast. It has been said that that the Hindus have been guilty of outrages on women and children. Such reports have done some mischief. But we are sure that such mischief will not be long lasting. Responsible Muhammadan gentlemen have gone to the disturbed area and after personal enquiries are assuring their excited brothers that ' not a single case of such outrage has occurred.'......... The Behar disturbances seem to be the result, in a way, of the highhandedness of tactless officials. The leaders of the people count for nothing in the eye of self-sufficient officers, armed with powers under this, that, or the other Code. This attitude of the officials is most reprehensible. It is this attitude which not infrequently creates muddles where there need be none. We do hope that the Behar Government in dealing with the situation created by the Bakr Id disturbances will constantly consult the honoured leaders of the province and not foist on the disturbed area any measure that in the opinion of such leaders is likely to widen instead of covering up the breach which has unfortunately occured in the relations between the two premier communities."

Comments on the Ram Lila contretemps in Delhi.
Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 30th Oct., Eng. cols.

21. "It is a matter of common knowledge that the Deputy Commissioner and the Chief Commissioner of Delhi are bureaucrats and reactionaries of the most pronounced type. So long as they had a free hand, they suppressed all demonstrations of even a constitutional character with the utmost vigour.......... The announcement of the Secretary of State for India made on the 20th August last, followed by the speeches of His Excellency the Viceroy, the gentle rebuke administered to His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, the rescission by certain Provincial Governments of certain orders they had passed, had naturally a restraining influence on the Delhi Administration, and latterly public meetings have been held there without hindrance. The Dusserah, Ram Lila and the Mohurram appear to have afforded an opportunity to the Delhi authorities to reassert themselves......... Of course the authorities will seek to justify their action on the ground that it was necessary for the preservation of the public peace, but what explanation will be forthcoming in regard to the notice that was served on a number of prominent Hindu and Muhammadan citizens of Delhi to appear before the Deputy Commissioner of Delhi, who informed them that in future a license should be obtained under the Police Act for holding public meetings? No public meeting to which any exception can be taken has been held in Delhi, and this order is an outrage which should be resented by every constitutional means."

Rumours that Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas is going to be prosecuted for sedition.
Mahratta (5), 4th Nov.

22. "We do not know what credence to give to the Bombay rumours that Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas is going to be prosecuted for sedition under 124 A. Mr. Jamnadas combines political zeal with industrial ability, and a man of wealth and influence, and a devoted Home Ruler, his position in this Presidency is distinctly an eyesore to certain people in official and unofficial ranks. But it is hard to believe that in the circumstances as they stand at present, such a leader as Mr. Jamnadas will be hauled up before the Court under 124 A. The Bureaucracy are not noted for their sobriety and far-sightedness of the right kind, and it may just be that they are going to make another wrong move. We can only hope that the rumours will turn out false."

Alleged attempt by Christian missionaries to convert a Brahmin family to Christianity by means of starvation.
Message (6), 3rd Nov.

23. "Some of the Muhammadans in centuries long past by tried to convert people to their religion by the sword. Some Modern Christian misssionaries, being of course more 'civilised', have improved upon the method and are apparently using starvation instead of the sword to achieve their end. The Sandesh publishes a heart-rending tale of a Brahmin family, which seems to have been peremptorily asked to embrace Chiristianity, on pain of certain economic death. The family, we are told, lived in a Missionary Boarding School where the head of the family served as a teacher on a very meagre pay. He was being paid regularly for his work for some months, but recently his due pay was not for certain unknown reasons given to him......... In such a situation the teacher was asked to renounce his religion before a certain day, on pain of certain unpleasant things happening to him and his family. To make the situation worse, the family had no easy access to friends or even men of their community, egress and ingress to the building being controlled by the authorities of the mission. Somehow or other the teacher, however, found a way to get out and report the matter to Mr. G. B. Vaidya of the Hindu Missionary Society, who took up the matter in his hand, gave support to the family and averted the attempted conversion by starvation."

Plea for State fostering and regulation of the indigenous systems of medicine.
Islâmic Mail (4), 21st Oct., Eng. edition.

24. Commenting upon the discussion in the Bombay Legislative Council on the Honourable Mr. Patel's Bill to amend the Bombay Medical Practitioners' Act, the Islâmic Mail remarks:—It is quite natural that Indian politicians and Home Rulers should want to promote their home system of medicine in preference to the foreign systems. To say that the Indian system is nonsense is to betray gross ignorance and lack of judgment. It has been perfected by the practice of centuries, popular with the people and suited to Indian conditions. It is wrong to suppose that it is still empirical. Those who see the bacteriological laboratory attached to the Tibbia College at Delhi or the surgical theatre and anatomical class in Hakim Shifa-il-Mulk's Takmilu Tibbi Institution at Lucknow will be surprised at the radical improvement in the Unani system. There are many such colleges in India, Unani as well as Ayurvedic. The medicines, too, are undergoing a reformed process of dispensing, and certain Hakims get all their medicines prepared on modern lines in Europe and America. Many extracts and tabloids have also been prepared. Even many doctors trained in the Western system prefer to use Indian medicines. The Indians are yet averse to the Western system, and it will take a long time before it can make headway among the masses. It is, therefore, highly impolitic and unwise to throw overboard the Indian system altogether. It is necessary to check the growth of quacks among the Hakims no less than among the doctors. His Excellency the Governor's proposal strikes us as the best solution of the problem. There ought to be two Councils, one for the doctors and the other for Vaids and Hakims. The latter should register all certificated Vaids and Hakims who have passed some recognised institutions. Some provision should also be made in the rules for those distinguished physicians who have not attended any school, but received instruction from their fathers or other relations. We hope Government will take some action to solve the problem before a fresh attempt is made to bring the matter before the legislature.

Alleged genesis of the anti-Home Rule para in the Sind Muhammadan Association's address to His Excellency the Viceroy.

New Times (7), 30th Oct.

25. "A Musalman" writes as follows to the New Times on the subject of the address presented to His Excellency the Viceroy by the Sind Muhammadan Association:—"I wonder if the Viceroy is aware of the history of the division among the Muhammadans of Sind on the question of the inclusion of the para against Home Rule. I wonder if he knows that the Commissioner in Sind, Mr. Lawrence, gave two long extensions to the anti-Home Rule section for the submission of their para against Home Rule, or that both the Karáchi and Hyderabad branches of the Association voted against the insertion of the para against Home Rule and stuck to that opinion to the end, or that officials who are members of the Association took a very active part in the prolonged struggles to insert an anti-Home Rule para in the Address, or that the Vazir of Khairpur (an Indian State in Sind), who is a Deputy Collector in Sind, has not only taken an active part in the prolonged struggles on the side of the anti-Home Rulers but was appointed President of the Sind Muhammadan Association at the meeting where the anti-Home Rule para of the address was passed, that the meeting was held in the Khairpur State Bungalow, that most of the members of the Association attending the meeting were invited by him to be his guests, or that several other officials are not only members but have been elected members of the Managing Committtee of the Association, which, on the occasion of the last meeting of the Bombay Council, was admitted by Government to be a political body, or that the Secretary of the Association had before 1st September 1917 forwarded to the Commissioner the Address as originally drafted and containing no clause against Home Rule, but subsequently the Commissioner in Sind accepted the famous 'para' against Home Rule (to be substituted for the para in the original Address dealing with the question of Reforms) even before this famous para had been sanctioned by the general meeting of the Association, or that suddenly and very curiously the number of the members of the Association rose from about 30 to about 280 within the week preceding the special meeting of the Association, which was held not in Karáchi, the place of the Head Office, as usual but in Sukkur against the wishes of the Head Office at Karáchi and the Hyderabad branch, or that a public meeting of the Muhammadans of Hyderabad held on the day previous to the date of the Sukkur meeting condemned the impending Sukkur meeting as illegal and against rules and dissociated itself from the proceedings of the meeting, or that many leading and other Muhammadans of Karáchi and Hyderabad abstained from attending the Sukkur meeting .... or that several Muhammadan leaders of Karáchi and Hyderabad have refrained from joining in the Address which must have been presented to-day to the Viceroy on behalf of the Sind Muhammadan Association."

His Excellency the Viceroy's Durbar at Quetta.

Indu Prakásh (40), 27th Oct.

26. His Excellency Lord Chelmsford held a Durbar at Quetta and impressed upon the tribesmen the necessity of maintaining peace and warned them that failure to do so would involve intervention on the part of Government. It is absolutely necessary that quiet should prevail at the present time in countries bordering on India and Government is showing its foresight in taking up the matter for the safety of India. Perhaps the purpose of the Durbar at Quetta was to ensure the tranquillity of the tribal territory which is the most vulnerable point in our boundary line.

27. Referring to His Excellency Lord Chelmsford's reply to the address recently presented to him by the Sind Muhammadan Association, the Bambay Samáchár observes that the reply proves him to be a true friend and well-wisher of the entire Moslem community. It remarks that it will be to the interests of the community to follow His Excellency's advice as to the way in which they should prepare their case for presentation to the Secretary of State for India during his forthcoming visit to this country. The paper lays special stress upon that portion of His Excellency's reply wherein he declared that the object underlying Mr. Montagu's visit was the desire to hear, in conjunction with the Viceroy, 'all opinions honestly held on the subject of Indian political reform,' and it exhorts the Muhammadans to express their opinion fearlessly and honestly without becoming a tool in the hands of others. It draws their attention to the unique circumstances that have arisen and reminds them that such opportunities do not recur often.

Comments on His Excellency the Viceroy's reply to the address of the Sind Muhammadan Association.
Bombay Samáchár (60), 2nd Nov.

28. "It is really difficult to refrain from commenting on the somewhat platitudinous utterance of His Excellency Lord Chelmsford in reply to the address of the Karáchi municipality. In the light of the notoriously undeserved treatment of local self-government by the Sind executive, we cannot understand how any personage of high authority could calmly advise his auditors, 'Circumspice, prospice,' meaning 'look ahead but at the same time look around you'. Before tendering this advice to the Karáchi municipality had His Excellency kindly taken the pains to enquire into the progress of Municipal Government under the benevolent despotism of a practically uncontrolled executive, we feel quite sure His Excellency would have realised the irony that rendered that advice inappropriate to be repeated at the capital of Sind. If in enumerating the two duties of a municipality, His Excellency had kindly reminded the executive of their one duty, i.e. of abstaining from too much and too frequent interference, the public not only in Sind but throughout India would have been really grateful to him."

Comments on His Excellency the Viceroy's speech in reply to the Karáchi (Sind) municipality.
Message (6), 3rd Nov.

29. Quoting the words uttered by Mr. Lloyd George in connection with India, while moving the resolution in Parliament for thanking the Navy, Army, etc., for their work in the present war, to the effect that the memory of the powerful aid which India readily accorded in the hour of trouble would not be forgotten when the affairs of India came up for examination and action after the close of the war, the Sánj Vartamán remarks:—These words of Mr. Lloyd George will not fail to fill the heart of every Indian with joy. When the Anglo-Indian merchants and Eurasians of India try to belittle the services rendered by India during the war, it is gratifying to note that no less responsible a British statesman than Mr. Lloyd George has not only duly appreciated those services but has given definite hopes of political privileges to India. Indians build upon such hopes and the assurance given by the Premier shows that that these hopes are not ill-founded. [The Jam-e-Jámshed observes that the words of Mr. Lloyd George are worth being studied by the Anglo-Indian community. It maintains that these sentiments of the Prime Minister will spread joy among the Indians. What more does India want, inquires the paper, than the resolve which responsible British Ministers have made of rendering justice to India in appreciation of her services during the war? It hopes that after the words of the Premier above referred to the selfish cry of the Anglo-Indians against Indian aspirations will cease. The Praja Mitra and Pársi regards the words of Mr. Lloyd George about India as a precious asset for this country. In them it finds a final and effective rejoinder to what

Comments on the Premier's reference to the War services of India in his speech in moving the vote of thanks to the Army, etc.
Sánj Vartamán (32), 31st Oct.; Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 1st Nov.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 1st Nov.

it calls the hubbub raised in Parliament a few days ago by Anglo-Indian pigmies in connection with Indian affairs.]

Comments on the retreat of the Italian army.

Bombay Samáchár (60), 31st Oct. and 3rd Nov.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 29th, 30th and 31st Oct.; Sánj Vartamán (32), 30th Oct.; Hindusthán (21), 30th Oct.; Akhbár-e-Islám (57), 3rd Nov.

30. Commenting upon the present situation of Italy in the war, the Bombay Samáchár remarks that, though the enemy has placed that country in a difficult position by his recent onrush upon her and though the Italian Cabinet has had to resign, he has not succeeded in his aim of dealing such an effective blow upon the Italian army as would render it unable to defend its own country. It does not consider it likely that the enemy will succeed in accomplishing his object of severing Italy from the Allies and compelling her to conclude a separate peace, inasmuch as the Italian army, though it had to withdraw before the enemy's attack, has not been put out of action. The paper does not believe that the present manœuvre of Germany will prove to be of any greater use than helping him to revive the drooping spirits of Austria and the morale of the German people. [In the subsequent issue the paper commends the resolution arrived at by the Allies to send reinforcements to the help of Italy and hopes that this resolve on their part will encourage her to fight the enemy with greater firmness. It does not believe that Germany will succeed, before America more effectively intervenes in the war, in disabling Italy on the present occasion as she succeeded in the case of Belgium, Montenegro, Servia and Roumania for want of timely help to them from the Allies. The Praja Mitra and Pársi, on the other hand, considers the Italian situation to be disappointing. It refers to the doubts entertained by many about the military prowess of Italy before she actually entered into the war and declares that it is on the strength of such opinion about Italy that the enemy has made his present attack upon her. The paper wishes that instead of being dispirited the Italians may yet make a better stand against the enemy. In its next issue the paper regrets that Russia and Italy have failed even to keep the enemy engaged on their respective fronts at present when the allied British and French Armies are in a condition to deal an effective and crushing blow upon the enemy on the Western front. While sharing in the hope entertained by the Italian newspapers about their army being able to stem the onrush of the enemy in their own country, the paper does not regard such an assurance to be of any value. In its next issue the paper fails to understand why Italy fared in the way she did on the present occasion in spite of her possessing an overwhelmingly large army. It is inclined to attribute the result to treachery in the Italian camp or to the unpreparedness of the Italian army inspite of its consciousness of the danger it had to encounter. The Sánj Vartamán observes:—For Italy the situation has become grave indeed. We trust that the Allies will give timely help to Italy and will save her from the plight which overtook Roumania. We hope that the Italians will employ all their resources to cope with their present grave situation. The Hindusthán remarks that, regard being had to the strategy of the German commanders during the first three years of the war, the present difficult situation of Italy does not cause any surprise. It, however, does not believe that the enemy will succeed, by his present operations, in compelling Italy to conclude a separate peace. German victory, observes the paper, on any one front does not mean conclusion of the war; nor, it adds, should the prolongation of the war be taken necessarily to imply the steady augmentation of the enemy's difficulties. The Akhbár-e-Islám considers the Italian situation to be very critical. It believes that the enemy will very easily enter Italy unless the latter makes a very strong and united stand against him.]

Officials do not allow actual facts about the war to be published in Indian newspapers.

Gujaráti (17), 28th Oct.

31. In an article discussing at length the proposed changes in the Indian administration, the Gujaráti declares that in this country the question of political reforms takes precedence over any other question including the war. The reason for this is given as follows:—Even though winning this war is a matter of paramount importance, and the good of India is involved in winning the war, the circumstances here are such that the public cannot discuss the war, and if they do discuss it they are stopped from doing so. The officials believe that if the actual facts were placed before the people there would be a panic, and therefore optimistic articles on the war are preferred by the authorities. The people on the other hand say that if the war is going on all right, if political reforms are discussed in England and if such discussion does not interfere with the successful prosecution of the war, what objection is there to the same thing being allowed here?

The delay in the abolition of the Customs Line at Viramgaum.

Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 2nd Nov.

32. Commenting upon the reference made by the Honourable Sir William Meyer to the Customs Line at Viramgaum in reply to the representation of the Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau, the Jám-e-Jamshed writes :—It is now the Bombay Government who are responsible for the delay in removing the Customs Line at Viramgaum. We hope His Excellency Lord Willingdon's Government will see their way to removing the hardships of the people at Viramgaum at an early date. We fail to understand why the Bombay Government should delay the carrying out of the promise made by the Government of India months ago. Perhaps they are busily engaged in arriving at a settlement with Native States in the matter. We hope there will be no further delay in settling the matter.

Comments on the Government of India's letter to the Provincial Governments regarding recommendation of the Public Service Commission in the matter of the Educational Service.

Bombay Samáchár (60), 30th Oct.; Hindusthán (21), 24th Oct.

33. Commenting upon the letter of the Government of India to Provincial Governments regarding the recommendations of the Public Services Commission in the matter of the Educational Service, the Bombay Samáchár writes :—The recommendations of the Commission in the matter of fixing the proportion of the European element in the Educational Service evidently go against the pledges given by the Queen's Proclamation. It is undesirable to recruit Europeans for the Educational Service when competent Indians can be easily had. How can Indians be considered incompetent for being Professors or Inspectors when some of them can hold the Educational Portfolio as Executive Members of the Provincial and Imperial Governments? It is strange that the Commission should make such recommendations when the anomalies of the service were clearly exposed before them. In our opinion the reluctance of the professors to take to administrative duties is greatly due to the faulty machinery of the administrative system and not to the incompetence of the professors to take up such posts. The Commission which sat in the year 1886 had recommended that European professors should be recruited only when competent Indians cannot be had, and it is a pity that there should be only three Indians in the Imperial Service after the lapse of thirty years. It is both impolitic and inadvisable from an economic point of view to get men from Europe when competent Indians can be secured in India to take up the posts in the Department. [The Hindusthán writes in a similar strain and emphasises the need of paying more attention to primary education with a view of uplifting the illiterate masses.]

Dnyán Prakásh (37), 31st Oct.

34. The Dnyán Prakásh congratulates the Government of India on its calling for opinions from the local Government on the recommendations of the Public Services Commission regarding the Indian Educational Service and requests Government to take similar action regarding other recommendations of the Commission. It disputes the statement of the Government of India that mediocre men will come in if recruiting for the Educational Service is confined to India and says that except experts in some branches all should be Indians in the Educational Service. It also questions the propriety of the Government of India proposing a reduction of the initial pay of Europeans in the service to Rs. 300 and proposing a special allowance of Rs. 200. In its opinion there should be no difference of pay when similar work is turned out, and it declares that it is necessary to enter a protest against the proposal of the grant of a special allowance.

Government should not deprive shet sanadis of their lands.

Shubhodaya (89), 26th Oct.

35. The Shubhodaya discusses the shet sanadi question at length and says:—If Government do not want the services of Walikars and Talvars, let them dispense with them but we cannot agree that Government can take away their lands from them. Shet sanadis did not come into existence with the British Government. They were also to be found in ancient régimes. Properly speaking, their inams are not service Inam but Jat Inams granted in consideration of their services. They have been true to their salt. What more injustice can there be than that Government should think of taking away their bread from them? Government have dispensed with the services of Desais and Deshpandes but they continue their vatans to them. What objection is there to describe Government's view as "small-minded" if they consider the poor shet sanadi inams to be eye-sores? Government want to take away the lands of these shet sanadis and grant them to Haran Shikaris and other barbarous people. But why have they not thought of the fact that they are creating another class of Haran Shikaris by doing so? The question of ownership of shet sanadi lands has been raised by the High Court in a Murgod (District Belgaum) case. A poor Walikar woman is fighting against Government for her rights. Government have appointed a Special Deputy Collector to study the question and present the Government view. Are not Government trying to kill a sparrow with a howitser? Walikars are an ignorant class and they have not preserved their papers with them. They have full confidence in Government. In the particular case the plaintiff is a woman. Government should find out papers for her also and produce them from their records. Shet sanadis should assist the plaintiff in every way as their rights depend upon the decision of this case.

Hindu-Muhammadan entente at Poona during the Muharram.

Sandesh (116), 1st Nov.; Kesari* (106), 6th Nov.

36. The Poona special correspondent of the Sandesh writes:—The Tabut procession in Poona was of an unprecedented character this year, the usual quarrel over the right of precedence between the Darga Tabut and Banekar's Tabut having disappeared. Lokamanya Tilak was invited to take part in the procession by Messrs. Jadhav, Mule and others and Sheikh Amin, Hamjekhan Bimtan, Apabhai and others. He with Messrs. Khadilkar, Kavade, Babasaheb Vidwans and Shankarraoji Joshi joined the procession at the spot where generally the fight takes place and as soon as he joined the centre of the procession, the Honourable Mr. Ibrahim Haroon Jaffer, Gulam Dastagir Khan walad Hamjekhan and other prominent Muhammadan leaders advanced to shake hands with the Hindus and resounding cheers were raised and flowers showered. Lokamanya and the Muhammadan leaders were garlanded and cries of 'Hindu-Musalman ki jai', 'Ram-Rahim ki jai', were raised at intervals by the processionists. Poona was indeed fortunate to witness the happenings of that fortunate day. As the Honourable Mr. Jaffer remarked on that occasion, will the whole of India be fortunate enough to experience similar happenings? [The Kesari gives a list of places (Poona, Wái (district Sátára), Sátára, Mathura (United Provinces), Saharanpur, Láhore, Multán and Bhágalpur) where Hindus and Muhammadans celebrated the Muharram festival cordially. It says that the celebration of the festival was stopped only at places like Delhi and Wadhwán where the officials needlessly meddled and interfered and thereby spread discontent. Referring to the Poona procession it says that Lokamanya Tilak and others joined the procession at the invitation of the Honourable Mr. Ebrahim Haroon and others. It also states that Muhammadans had constructed their Tabut pandals in such a way as to allow passage to the procession of Balaji's chariot during the Navratra holidays.]

Muharram in Bombay.

Muslim Herald (143), 2nd Nov.

37. Describing the celebration of the last Muharram in Bombay the Muslim Herald remarks that with the abolition of foolish customs which used to mar its observance in past years the public attention has been directed towards more sensible objects, and states that the people hold mujlisses (meetings of condolence) in larger numbers and attend them in great force.

LEGISLATION.

Rejection of the Honourable Mr. Patel's Medical Registration Act Amendment Bill.
Subodh Patrika (43), 28th Oct.

38. The indigenous system of Ayurvadic medicine is no quackery and Government's attitude thereanent is most short-sighted. They appointed two medical men who had never studied the Ayurvedic medicine and who were avowedly opposed to it to be additional members of the Legislative Council when Mr. Patel's Bill came up for consideration. Does not this step mean an indirect attempt on the part of Government to put down the advocates of Ayurvedic Medicine? If Government really wanted the question to be thoroughly sifted should they not have appointed as well men well-versed in the indigenous system? In view of the provisions of the medical Registeration Act, no medical man will in future be tempted to study the Ayurvedic system of medicine, which is sure to result in an irreparable injury to that system.

EDUCATION.

Comments on the closing of several colleges and schools in the Central Provinces.
Mahratta (5), 4th Nov.

39. Commenting on the closing of several schools in the Central Provinces, the Mahratta writes:—"There are three parties in this students' affair: Government, the elders of students and the students. And, in our firm opinion, Government are the worst offenders, the elders stand next and the students last, if they are to be held culpable at all....... Every fresh instance of the flouting of clearly expressed popular will by self-opinionated officialdom strengthens the cause of Home Rule. The Students' Circulars, oppressive as they are, have been in a way very 'valuable'. They have served as 'Home Rule Circulars'. They have taught the people that the authorities, as they are now constituted, have strong temptations to put a thousand obstacles in the way of the proper growth of the younger generation. And this is a very valuable lesson indeed. The younger generations are the makers of the Nation of the morrow. And as such must be carefully tended. Any system of Government, therefore, which make it the interest of the administrators to keep the youth of the country dwarfed stands, for this very reason, thoroughly condemned. The Central Provinces authorities, as the reply recently given to the memorial of the Graduates' Association makes it clear, will not for some time to come think of 'making terms' with the guardians of students. But we cannot believe that they will remain unyielding for long. If, as we have insisted now and again, students and guardians of other places affected by the Circular support by appropriate action the Central Provinces students and guardians, the Circular must go, or at any rate, its operation must be greatly modified. The Students' Association, Nagpur, appeal to people all over the country to hold meetings and to protest against 'the perverse and cruel attitude' of the Central Provinces educational authorities. We hope that the appeal will not be fruitless. We hold that the Students' Circular question has become an All-India question of great importance and that the Congress and the League must take it up. Mr. Montagu must also be approached with an appeal for doing justice to the students and guardians."

Indian Social Reformer (3), 4th Nov.

40. "The Government of the Central Provinces have closed two colleges and three high schools in Nagpur. The Chief Commissioner has issued a Press Communique lamenting the necessity for this drastic measure and blaming the parents and guardians of the students for forcing it on him. Apart from the merits of the case, we ask ourselves if such a thing as the summary closing of five educational institutions, involving the careers of, perhaps, more than a thousand young men, would have been tolerated in any other civilised country. We certainly do not approve of students going on strike. Nor at the same time can we admire the action of a Government which calmly decides to take a year out of the lives of over a thousand young men, granting that the fault was all on the side of the young men. We can not help thinking that the Chief Commissioner would have resigned his office rather than do this thing if the students had stood in such a relation to him as would have kept him awake of nights to think of the blight which would fall on their young lives in consequences of this high-handed action of his Government. We refuse to discuss the question of the right or wrong of the strikes. We maintain that a Government which can bear to see a thousand of the young men waste a year of their lives, without being able to persuade them of its concern for their well-being, has failed to prove its capacity to control the destinies of the population entrusted to its care. It is quite evident to us that this action of Sir Benjamin Robertson's Government clearly establishes the urgent need of giving a fresh chance to the Central Provinces under another administrator."

Strikes are being forced on students.
Subodh Patrika (43), 28th Oct., Eng. cols.

41. "One of the most anxious things in the present troubles is the way in which disaffection is being forced on the student classes of the country. This disaffection is taking the form of wholesale strikes, and they are now being reported from places so far apart as Karáchi, Nágpur and Pálghát. In every one of these cases, we are convinced, it is the school or college authorities that are at fault. Instead of sympathising with the students in the strange situation they are in, they have sought rigorously to enforce absurd regulations set on foot by the Government regarding non-attendance at political meetings. These regulations are absurd and impracticable, and it was the duty of the school and collegiate authorities to represent their views on the matter in the strongest possible terms to the Local Governments, and in the interval to deal with the boys with tact and moderation. We regret to note that it is in a missionary college in Nágpur that these regulations were most strictly enforced. There was a time when missionaries stood out boldly for the political rights of Indians, and at least one missionary spoke the truth that was in him during the Ilbert Bill agitation. It pains us greatly, especially as we of the Prarthana Samaj are most sincere friends of Christian missionaries, to observe the indifference with which the ministers of the Christian religion in this country treat even our most acute political grievances, and, as if indifference were not enough, some of them actively assist in the perpetuation of un-Christian political and social ideals. We have been expecting some prominent missionary engaged in educational work to speak out his mind freely on this question of the maltreatment of the tender minds of the students by autocratic regulations copied from Germany and Austro-Hungary; but we have waited in vain. Instead we have to endure the spectacle of a Principal of a Scottish Missionary college rusticating a student for asserting what is but an elementary right in a European country, barring of course the two mentioned above."

Government should arrive at a compromise with the guardians of students in connection with their attendance at public meetings.
Kesari (106), 30th Oct.

42. Whatever students do, society as well as Government should treat them sympathetically just like parents, for after all "they are boys". The treatment of students is a very delicate matter and a man requires a good deal of practical wisdom to correct the faults of students without injuring their virtues. We have to say with great regret that Government do not follow this policy towards students. The above ideas are suggested by the enforcement of the Risley circular in some of the provinces at present. The country is more peaceful now than it was when the circular was first issued and we fail to understand why only students should be prohibited from attending Home Rule meetings. Government are behaving in an extraordinary manner by chasing students with a bludgeon in the name of discipline. Some schools and colleges in the Central Provinces have been closed and some more may follow suit. We do not wish to discuss in detail the merits of the question. The crux of the question lies in the prohibition of students from attending meetings. Government should now treat with the parents and guardians and settle the whole question. Our advice to the students is that they should distinguish between the essential and non-essential things and that they should not strike wholesale and that they should assist their parents and guardians in other ways in fighting out the question constitutionally. It is the birthright of the students to go quietly to public meetings and obtain education in public questions. If Government wickedly attempt to prohibit them, the question may have to be decided by the adoption of passive resistance. But this resistance should as far as possible be first made by parents. Matters would have assumed a different shape if there had been independent arrangements for the education of the students in the country. Students should wait for a few a years and obtain education as far as possible in the existing schools. They should be diplomatic. Parents should adopt passive resistance individually as they may think proper. . Why should the police attend public meetings to watch students if they do not watch students going to tamashas and liquorshops? Why should the teachers be converted into policemen for this purpose? Are Government under the delusion that students do not hear of politics in other ways? Government are deceiving themselves if they imagine that the students do not read newspapers. Even students who are penned in boarding houses are not more backward than other students in politics. Have Government considered how many of the students who were found to be political offenders during the last ten years belonged to Government institutions? To think of prohibiting students from receiving political education by barring them from attending meetings is as ridiculous as trying to sweep the ocean back with a broom. If we are to suppose that it is the honest opinion of Government that the mental calm of student is ruffled by attendance at public meetings why should high officials go to public institutions and obtrude themselves and advise them against the common political agitation? Is popular politics the only politics? Is not pro-Government politics politics? Government should withdraw the circular, leave the control of students to their parents or at least form some compromise with them. Otherwise the nation will have to take up the question just as it did the internment of Mrs. Besant. The Calcutta Congress ought to take up the question, condemn the Risley circular and inform Government in time what the nation thinks of it.

The problem of Urdu teaching in the Bombay Presidency.
Islámic Mail (4), 21st Oct., Eng. edition.

43. Continuing its discussion on the question of Urdu teaching in the Bombay Presidency, the Islámic Mail writes:—"We do not for a moment entertain the base calumny, as some mischief-makers are imputing, that the underlying object of Government's action is to deprive the Muhammadan boys of an opportunity of receiving instruction in the tenets of their religion. So far as we know, Government are inspired by a very sympathetic and well-meaning desire to remove the burden of double learning which handicaps Muhammadan boys.......... There can be no gainsaying the fact that many of us recognise the disadvantages of Urdu teaching where the mother-tongue of the the boys is not Urdu.......... But that does not dispense with the absolute necessity of Urdu teaching. For as Sir Fazulbhoy then (in 1910) said 'the Muhammadan parents are anxious that their children should learn Urdu and it is I think necessary for the regeneration of the nation'. But it is not only Muhammadans who consider Urdu as essential for their national development; their claims were acknowledged and advocated by Government themselves, as a consideration of the early history of the introduction of Urdu would show. In 1871 the Government of India issued a resolution upon the condition of Muslim Education. In their report the Educational Commission made numerous recommendations exclusively for the benefit of the Muhammadans, of which those adopted by the Government of India are embodied in their resolution published in the Gazette of India of July 1885. They were forwarded to all local Governments for their guidance so that they are the law of the land by which Muhammadan education is to be governed in every province. The principles therein laid down cannot be changed without the sanction of the Imperial Council similarly promulgated in the Government Gazette.......... This gives a precise idea as to the introduction of Urdu as a medium of instruction for Muhammadan boys. It shows that at one time Government recognised it to be the 'language of the Mussalmans' and afforded facilities for its instruction in public schools. It is also a noteworthy fact that almost all the Provincial Governments are paying special attention to the teaching of Urdu and making increasing efforts for its development. In Upper India where the separatist tendencies of the Hindus have succeeded in establishing Hindi or Gurumukhi (as in the Punjáb) as the vernacular, Urdu still holds its own and is taking the place of English in secondary schools. Indeed, there were proposals before the Government of the United Provinces to abolish the teaching of English in all secondary schools and substitute the teaching of Urdu instead. Much stress is laid upon the address presented by the Anjuman-i-Islam, District Kolába, to the Governor in which it was said that 'the curriculum of studies in our Urdu schools is not fully in accord with our requirements. Our medium of religious instruction is Urdu and our social functions are performed mostly in Urdu.' We are afraid it strengthens the cause of Urdu rather than weakening it. Our contention is that the small success of the Government experiment in regard to Urdu is due to the oft repeated complaint of the inefficiency of the teaching staff and the worthlessness of the curriculum of studies in Urdu schools. Our columns bear testimony to this fact and we have often said that it is better to abolish Urdu altogether than teach it in the present form."

Political Bhomiyo (71), 2nd Nov., Eng. cols.

44. "The Press note says that there is no genuine demand on behalf of the Muhammadans for Urdu education in this presidency. It may be asked what is the test of the genuineness of a popular demand? The most constitutional and genuine test is popular agitation and popular representation. With regard to popular agitation, the press note itself admits in paragraph 7 that Government had to change their attitude and revise their opinion about Urdu owing to popular Muhammadan pressure. The agitation would have assumed larger proportions but for the conciliatory attitude of Lord Sydenham and the wise policy of Sir Claude Hill which subsided it. There was no need for its continuance when Government were acting in co-operation with Muhammadan wishes and aspirations. It is bound to revive when Government appear to thwart the popular will and adopt a reactionary policy. Government have been deliberating over the question for the last three and a half years, and what is the result? They have thrown overboard the recommendations of the Muhammadan committee, they have ignored the resolution of the Conference, they have disbelieved the opinions of representative men in the Council, indeed they have defied Moslem public opinion. No self-respecting people can put up with such a treatment. The press note further adds insult to injury by declaring that—'from the reports of officers who have personally sounded local Muhammadan opinion it appears that there is actually a strong feeling against the adoption of Urdu standards'. So that the opinions of their own subordinate officers are after all preferred to those of the responsible Moslem representatives and to the authoritative expression of the community. What farce it is to talk of consulting the community."

MUNICIPALITIES.

Justification of the imposition of house-tax at Lárkána, Sind.

Al-Haq (132), 27th Oct., Eng. cols.

45. "Local papers of Lárkána, which are now making a childish protest against the house-tax, used to cry only a short time ago that they wanted a High School, a regular drainage system, and various other improvements in the town of Lárkána. The funds of the Municipality were, however, quite inadequate. The high school alone required an initial expenditure of about 48 thousand for building and equipment, the old building of the A.-V. School being quite unfit for the purpose. The drainage system was something exceedingly important, but it also required a lot of money. Those who have undergone the bitter experience of heavy rains, have keenly felt the necessity of a regular drainage system in the town. Besides, the building of the Vernacular School which was in a bad condition required to be re-built. Another Vernacular school started in Lahori also required a building of its own. All these things could not be done without a substantial sum of money. The credit balance of the Municipality was insufficient, and the problem was how to raise funds to meet the anticipated expenditure.......... When the proposal regarding house-tax was first made known to the residents of the town, all the Musalmans unanimously agreed and asked Serai Shah Mahomed Lahori to intimate their acquiescence to Government. Soon after that, some of the rich Hindus raised an alarm against the tax, and boldly gave out that they would be required to pay more than what other people of ordinary circumstances would pay. As they could not do anything individually, they made it a sacred resolution to spread rumours that even the poorest people would be taxed at very high rates, and in case they failed to make punctual payments, their houses would be sold and they would thus be left homeless. They did not stop here. Two or three Musalmans, who had business connections with them, were threatened that their Hundies would be dishonoured, and their credit jeopardized, if they did not join the Hindus to make a combined protest against house-tax. This obliged those few Musalmans to take the side of Hindus. Similar other steps were also taken by them to win over the Muhammadans to their side. It is a pity that while our readers are trying to make a union between the Hindus and Musalmans, the Hindus are trying to their utmost limit to prejudice the interests of the Musalmans in every possible way they can. The Municipality wants funds to carry out various schemes contemplated, for which the town-people of Lárkána had besieged the ears of the municipal authorities with their repeated request, and it is obvious that any tax, other than house-tax, would fall mostly on the poor Musalmans. Hindus possess valuable houses, and the house-tax will be mostly paid by them. How can they possibly tolerate this? Their earnest desire is that the whole town should be theirs and let poor Musalmans build their houses in the air and be sacrificed to the interests of Hindus. In the interest of Muhammadans themselves we have on several occasions written on this problem advising them to refrain from protesting against the proposed house-tax, and, we hope the Muhammadans will realize the benefits thereof and support the municipal authorities in carrying out the measure with success."

Alleged shortcomings of the Larkana Municipality, Sind.
New Times (7), 31st Oct.

46. "A citizen of Lárkána" writes to the New Times:—"Like the remnant of the Long Parliament, the remnant of the Larkana Municipality, until it is reconstituted, will appropriately be described as the 'Rump Municipality of Lárkána'. This Municipality since the resignation of the famous Five, has been performing extraordinary acts in a most irresponsible manner. It has decided by an unconstitutional procedure to impose the house-tax in Lárkána in the teeth of popular opposition regardless of all consequences and against reason and decency and sense of justice and proportion (Hyderababad and Shikárpur bigger and richer towns not being subjected to any house-tax). The Municipality is so constituted and managed at present that it will not be surprising for the public to learn that it has decided to impose a table-tax, cot-tax, lamp-tax, dog-tax, cat-tax, or a mouse-tax on the people of Lárkána. The Municipality managed by a Board, presided over by a despotic bureaucrat, devoid of all regard for public opinion and consisting of members who being the nominees of the Prrsident are under his thumb and being outsiders are ignorant of the needs of the town and out of sympathy with the townsfolk, is capabale of doing anything absurd and unreasonable. If proof were wanting of this capability of the Municipality it is supplied by the following facts. [Here follows a list of the alleged misdeeds of the Municipality:—] For these reasons the people are living in a state of great exasperation. Is this local self-government, or sham?"

NATIVE STATES.

Comments on the general strike of Hindu merchants at Wadhwán (Káthiáwár).
Young India (14), 31st Oct.

47. "Although it is more than a month, the strained relations between the Administrator of Wadhwán and the Hindu community continue unabated. On the contrary, it seems from the copy of a telegram addressed to His Excellency the Viceroy that Mr. Kadri is pursuing a method of administration which was in high favour in the declining days of the Mogul Empire. After all, Mr. Kadri must know that such a method might intimidate poor, helpless people, but it cannot certainly break their spirit. It might have been supposed, therefore, that a man who holds a very delicate and responsible office would take to more tactful methods and win back the confidence of the people. Mr. Kadri seems to be following just the contrary course and has already taken some drastic measures, which, we think, are hardly yet parallelled. He has practically dismissed some of the old officers of the State absolutely without any rhyme or reason and compelled them to quit the State without any notice whatsoever. In one case at any rate, the officer is a 'native' of the State and to force him to leave his native land within less than six hours is an act of despotism for which we have no precedent yet in British India. The incident appears all the more extraordinary, considering that at present the ultimate responsibility for the good administration of the State vests in the Local Government. .... Considering that the present deadlock has been the source of great suffering and annoyance to the poor population, we trust the Local Government will lose no further time in causing a full and independent inquiry to be made into its causes and terminate the unhappy situation that has already lasted now long enough."

Message (6), 30th Oct.

48. "The way in which the situation has been met, does not redound to the credit of the Agent to the Governor and amounts to a severe reflection on the competency of the Administrator of the State to be in continued charge of the destinies of 40,000 people. The responsibility of His Excellency the Governor, under circumstances like those which have arisen at Wadhwán, is great, and in the peculiar condition of the State being deprived of its legitimate ruler, that responsibility becomes all the more delicate. Now that the local authorities have by their tactless acts of omission and commission aggravated the seriousness of the situation, it is becoming His Excellency should graciously intervene to bring about a happy settlement of the dispute. It would also be of great advantage if His Excellency seriously considers whether in the light of the full circumstances, Khan Bahadur Kadri should not be asked to relinquish his post as Administrator. Whatever else he may be fit for, it seems to us that that office is the last which he should be allowed to hold for any length of time."

Hindusthán (21), 27th Oct.

49. Referring to the Wadhwán strike, the Hindusthán remarks that the reason why the strike which commenced on the 27th of September last has not yet come to a close is that the Wadhwán State as such has nothing to lose from such a general strike. It observes that such strikes do not produce any effect upon British officials who have been entrusted with the affairs of Native States because the party that has to suffer from these strikes are the people. It declares that differences have arisen between the Hindus and Muhammadans of Wadhwán since Khan Bahadur Kadri was appointed Administrator of that State. The paper maintains that he has wounded the feelings of the Hindus by issuing the present rules requiring the taking out of licenses for playing music in streets and thereby interfering with the long established usages of the Hindus, instead of having recourse to conciliatory methods. It remarks that as long as the bulk of the people of this country are ignorant, statesmanship requires that religious beliefs of any section of the public, whether reasonable or otherwise, should not be wounded. The paper hopes that if His Excellency Lord Willingdon were to depute a trusted officer to Wadhwán to inquire into the situation, it would reveal to him whether the local authorities or the people are at fault. While not favouring intervention on the part of British authorities in the affairs of the Native States, the paper regards it to be the duty of these authorities to listen to the complaints of the people of these States when their administration is committed to the hands of British officials.

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 9th November 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 45 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 10th November 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British rule :

Alleged shortcomings of the bureaucracy in India 1
Alleged sowing of disunion among Indians by interested Government officials 6
Comments on the anti-Musalman riots in Arrah District (Behár) . . 9
Comments on the speeches delivered at the Anglo-Indian meeting in London 5
Complaint about the programme of Mr. Montagu's tour in India . 2
Hindu-Muhammadan entente 8
It is the policy of Anglo-Indians to make a mere figurehead of Mr. Montagu when he is in India 3
Passive resistance must be resorted to if Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali's case is not considered by Mr. Montagu . . . 7
Suggestion for the formation of a National Volunteer Corps for each district 11
The Champaran enquiry and Mr. Gandhi 10
What representations of "backward" classes against the Congress-Moslem League scheme, which are engineered by Anglo-Indians, mean? 4
Chiefs' Conference at Delhi : Comments on the — . . . . . 12 & 13
Complaint against the Konkan steamer service 18
Gujarat Political Conference : Comments on Mr. Gandhi's presidential address at the Political Conference at Godhra 16
Public Service : Comments on the dismissal of certain officers in the Excise Department (Bombay) 17
Sind : Comments on the address presented to His Excellency the Viceroy by the — Muhammadan Association 19
War : Comments on the critical situation in Italy . . . . . 14 & 15

EDUCATION—

Necessity of raising the pay of untrained teachers 21
Students' strikes in the Central Provinces 20

H 348—a CON

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

RAILWAYS—

Suggestion to Government to issue communiqués explaining the necessity for dismantling the Hyderabad-Badin Railway Line in Sind, etc. . 22

NATIVE STATES—

Anti-Hindu riots at Vanthali (under Junágadh) 24
Comments on the general strike at Wadhwán 23

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Alleged shortcomings of the bureaucracy in India.

New Times (7), 2nd Nov. and 6th Nov.

1. "The Indian bureaucracy has neither been benevolent nor efficient and national evolution demands a Government controlled by the Indian people. The long story of reaction, retrogression, repression and political persecution in India is writ in the History of our Nation and will show to the democracies of the world how severe can be the swinging of the bureaucratic whip not alone in Russia but also in the Indian Empire. Indeed the inevitable result of a bureaucratic system is, as pointed out by an American thinker, 'a centralised government with a dictator'. But democracy has been the death of dictatorship all over the world, and will take its irresistible course in India also. This is why the National movement is growing; this is why the Nation-wide aspiration for self-government will be realised; this is why we of the People's Party are going to win." [In a subsequent issue the paper writes:—"The Indian bureaucrat has been more anxious to play the rôle of a police official than of a Friend of the People; he has been afraid to be on the side of the forces which are at work to make democracy safe for the world; he has been insolent in his conduct, autocratic in his methods, and reactionary in his policy; he has repeatedly raised the spectre of violence and sedition; he has not been tired of telling the world that India is not a Nation, that the Indian people lack political genius and must not be trusted with self-government. And he has not hesitated to secure for the pains of his office a fat salary, a comfortable pension and several titles and all sorts of allowances; he is a member of a Heaven-born caste and draws a salary which no other people on the face of the earth will pay to any of its administrators. The verdict of the Civilized World on the bureaucracy has been given: its machinery is ante-diluvian: its system is out of date. The verdict will not change."]

Complaint about the programme of Mr. Montagu's tour in India.

Gujaráti (17), 11th Nov., Eng. cols.

*2. "We can well appreciate the desire of the Home Government that Mr. Montagu should not make any political speeches during his stay in this country, though even this restriction is hardly in keeping with the practice of responsible ministers of the Cabinet or with the traditions of British politics.......... But it is impossible for the Indian public to understand why Local Governments have refused invitations to Indian social functions extended to Mr. Montagu.......... It has been repeatedly dinned into our ears that British politicians leave aside political controversies in their social relations, and it is difficult to conceive why the people of India should be prevented from offering him their hospitality. Mr. Montagu comes to India as the official representative of His Majesty's Government and of the British democracy, and are an Oriental people with their traditional hospitality to be told that he is prevented by the Home Government from attending an Indian social gathering held in his honour? Anything more graceless and churlish we Indians cannot conceive.......... We do hope that Lord Chelmsford's Government will not create an occasion for a bitter but legitimate complaint throughout the whole country that Mr. Montagu was not allowed to come into close contact with the people of India, thus defeating the object of his mission by preventing him from knowing their real thoughts and feelings. His Excellency Lord Willingdon well knows the mind of the people under his rule and may fairly be expected to remove all grounds for misunderstanding and meet the natural desire of the Indian public to offer a cordial reception and extend their hospitality to Mr. Montagu."

It is the policy of Anglo-Indians to make a mere figurehead of Mr. Montagu when he is in India.

Young India (14), 7th Nov.

3. "We are anxious to impress upon Mr. Montagu as well as our readers that a systematic, and it seems to us, a deliberate attempt is being made by the bureaucracy and their adherents to belittle, as much as they can, the prestige and influence of the Secretary of State as an accredited representative of His Magesty's Government and to show him to the people of this country as a virtual nonentity in British and Indian politics before the inspiring presence of the mighty little tin-gods that inhabit the hill-tops. The statement made by the Viceroy that Mr. Montagu is not going to supersede the Government of India even temporarily and that his movements in this country will be carefully governed and regulated by the bureaucratic machine, with the Viceroy himself at the head of it, and Lord Curzon's well-concealed hypocrisy about Mr. Montagu going out to India on 'conditions', lead us to think that it is part of an attempt to convince the Indian public that the Secretary of State is a mere figurehead in the Government of India, installed at the India Office to interpret to Parliament the views, wishes and inclinations of the infallible bureaucratic machine in India. This view is, of course, nonsense of a dangerous type. As against this, we have the authoritative and perfectly genuine declaration of no less a politician than Lord Morley himself. The latter on one occasion described the Indian Viceroy as an 'agent of the Secretary of State', which is perfectly true.......... And it is preposterous that because the agent has been treated with some amount of indulgence, he should put forward a claim to equal voice with the principal in determining his relations with his charge.......... It is very necessary that the public at large should realise the exact situation of Mr. Montagu during his visit to this country. It is to be bureaucracy-ridden throughout and carried out in the ways that best suit bureaucratic convenience. It is of the highest importance, therefore, that the public should be wide awake to the dangers of the situation and exert all their influence to counteract the unhealthy pressure of the reactionaries on a well meaning and liberal politician. The time is short at our disposal and energetic action against the bureaucratic and Anglo-Indian reaction is very urgently called for."

What representations of "backward" classes against the Congress-League scheme, which are engineered by Anglo-Indians, mean?

Mahrátta (5), 11th Nov.

*4. "We give elsewhere an extract from the Bengalee dealing with the proceedings of a meeting of the Namashudras. This meeting is a vivid instance of how our 'lower' classes are being worked up by Anglo-Indians. The principal resolution adopted at this meeting speaks of the interests of the Namashudras and other backward communities as contradictory to those of the few advanced castes and prays that any great advance towards the progressive realisation of responsible government as contemplated in some of the Post-War Reform schemes should be disallowed by the authorities. It is idle to argue with those who would not see, as also with those who cannot see. But to any person who can see and is willing to use his sight, the Anglo-Indian statement of the case of the backward classes will appear in its true colours.......... These laws cannot surely go counter to the interests of the backward classes! Invested with the local and national franchise, educated and supplied with a thousand and one opportunities for making the most of their abilities, the backward classes in Home Rule India will certainly not curse the day of the grant of Home Rule to their country. No labourers in England desire German rule in their country, because the capitalists and landlords in England oppress them from day to day. They know that a German capitalist and landlord would, for all his professions, be a regular nuisance in England; for he will pocket English wealth and transmit it to his German Home there to fatten German industry, German agriculture, German everything. Anglo-Indians are in India what such Germans would be in England under German rule. There are ignorant Namashudras and others who understand this not. But facts do not change, because some cannot see them. And even these some will not be allowed to remain in ignorance for long. We are working apace and each home in the land will receive the necessary light in due course."

Comments on the speeches delivered at the Anglo-Indian meeting in London.

Kesari (106), 6th Nov.

5. Commenting upon the foundation of the Indo-British Association in London and the speeches delivered on that occasion the Kesari writes:—The poor Anglo-Indians since they came over to India have been ever looking after our interests. But they are not fully successful in their attempt; that is all. The East India Company came here for our benefit; if it had not been here, with whom could we have traded? Our products would have rotted in India! The Company acquired territories in India for our benefit; otherwise the French and the Portuguese would have acquired them! The Company annexed Native States for our benefit. Had it not done so, Indians would have had to pass their days under the tyrannical rule of Indian Chiefs! English merchants took away repeatedly the mineral wealth of India for our welfare, as otherwise it would have rotted where it lay. Dairy produce is decreasing in India and prices have gone up and we cannot get as much nutritious food as we want as we did formerly; it is for our benefit alone as the rise in prices is a western sign of civilisation! Our arms were taken away for our benefit; otherwise thieves and dacoits would have used the very arms against us or we would have fought amongst ourselves! We are not given commissions for our benefit because we would have suffered if we had joined the forces as there would have been no one to look after our fields! We are not given high civil posts for our welfare as otherwise we would have been obliged to perform responsible and troublesome work. To sum up, Anglo-Indian officials and merchants have looked after our interests alone and have indeed displayed a sense of equality with regard to us. We do not thank them because we are ungrateful! [The paper then turns to the speakers.] Lord Sydenham dwelt mainly on the release of Mrs. Besent. People in India know full well that this saheb likes to put people into prison and not to release them. The Government of India thought of releasing Mr. Tilak one or two years before the expiry of his sentence. But Lord Sydenham opposed the idea and also induced some Chiefs and parasites to raise a cry that riots would take place if Mr. Tilak were released. It would be better if Lord Sydenham lives long enough to see that the days of 'martial law' are gone by in India. If mere repression can make a régime successful in these days, why should the Secretary of State have thought of visiting India? If Lord Sydenham is to secure for us our national status, why should not a butcher advertise that he is going to start a Pinjrapole for cows? Really educated men will be always few, whatever be their caste. Uneducated men are not to be given swarájya because they have no education and educated men are not to be given swarájya because they are few. India is not so dull headed as not to realise that this only means that swarájya is not to be given to us anyhow. Sir John Hewett said that only 25,000 people know English in the United Provinces. The real struggle is for power; the question is not about the language. English education would be welcome but no one need think of not demanding and not giving power because we do not know English. Sir Francis Younghusband wants a mixed swarájya of black and white. Who denies it? Considering their population, is the power of the whites in any way inadequate? Would it be reduced by the adoption of the Congress-League Scheme? Lord Harris said that Mrs. Besant was evil personified. We need not inform the readers of the Kesari that Lord Harris was as troublesome as a bear, as his name signifies, during his régime. What is the use of speaking in a polite tone with a boor? This concert of all the Anglo-Indian nobles against swarájya will not prevent what fates have decreed.

Alleged sowing of disunion among Indians by interested Government officials.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 6th Nov.

6. The Praja Mitra and Pársi refers to the order issued by Mr. Thorne, I.C.S., administrator of the Calicut Estate, prohibiting the use of certain roads in Calicut to members of lower castes and characterises the order as unjust and against the very spirit of British rule. It insinuates that efforts are being made by responsible officers of Government to sow disunion among the people of India with a view to proving their incompetence for self-government. It is of opinion that some of the unpleasant incidents that occurred during the recent Muharram and Dussera holidays were due to the enforcement of very stringent rules by the officers of Government.

Passive resistance must be resorted to if Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali's case is not considered by Mr. Montagu.

Mahrátta (5), 11th Nov.

*7. "We have been given to understand that it will not be possible for Mr. Montagu to receive deputations, addresses or memorials on any subject other than that of the Post-War Reforms, his stay in India being limited. But this is one of those directions which need not be, for they are not meant to be, literally interpreted. If we insist adequately, we are certain to be allowed to put before Mr. Montagu not only the Ali Brothers' case but also that of the hundreds of political internees and prisoners of all descriptions, whom we desire to be released and restored to us. The question of the students' circulars may also be allowed. But supposing for a moment that even the Ali Brothers' case is rejected and we are called upon to speak on nothing but the Reforms,—what shall we do? What shall we do? Satyagraha would, in our opinion, be a justifiable method of meeting such a situation. But the Agraha (Insistence) will be reasonable, only if a substantial majority, if not all, of the leaders in the Congress-League Camp (or at any rate such a majority in the camp of the League alone) make up their minds to employ this method. Satyagraha would require of us that we should respectfully excuse ourselves from touching the subject of Reforms before Mr. Montagu, until the Ali Brothers are restored to us."

Hindu-Muhammadan entente.

Message (6), 10th Nov.; Sandesh (116), 6th Nov.

8. "It is not at all surprising that cordial relations should continue between Hindus and Muhammdans. Regrettable as the disturbances at Arrah are, the position of things is eminently satisfactory and during the last Dussera-Muharram festivities, we have received fresh proofs of the entente between the two communities. A Lahore report refers to the very cordial manner in which the Muhammadans treated the Hindus during the Bharat Milak procession.......... It was an unique sight, says the same report, to see the Muhammadans garlanding their Hindu brethren and showering flowers over them as the procession passed through the streets. It is not only in Lahore that these cordial demonstrations have taken place. At Poona, for instance, it is hardly known outside, Mr. Tilak accompanied the Muharram procession, and it was the occasion of happy demonstrations. The Poona Muhammadans, both educated and uneducated, vied with one another to do honour to the great National leader. The Hindus fully reciprocated the good feelings and showed by their conduct how the so-called differences between the communities were either a great myth or the work of calculating forces of reaction in their midst." [The Sandesh writes:—The unity of the Hindus and the Muhammadans at Delhi was such as to be the envy of the gods. Unfortunately both of them could not benefit by this unity owing to the obstinacy of the authorities. The atmosphere of Poona is an excellent nursery for wholesome nationalistic ideas. The unique plant of Hindu and Muhammadan unity planted at Poona by Lokamanya Tilak will surely yield excellent fruit.]

Comments on the anti-Musalman riots in Arrah District (Behar).

Akhbár-e-Islám (57), 6th, 7th and 8th Nov.

9. Referring to the piteous accounts of the Arrah and Shahabad riots appearing in the Moslem newspapers of Upper India and to the stir the disturbances have created in those journals, the Akhbár-e-Islám remarks that, in view of this earnest of the cordiality of the Hindus towards the Muhammadans, the latter should bless their own participation in the Home Rule League propaganda. It further observes that the fact that the Muhammadans are reported, in connection with those riots, to have been helpless before the Hindus, demonstrates how far the union of the Indian National Congress and the Moslem League will prove beneficial to the Muhammadans and how far the League will, after this union, be able to protect Moslem interests. [In the issue dated the 7th November the paper deprecates the acts of violence committed by the Hindus during the above-mentioned riots against the Muhammadans who have been chiefly instrumental in securing a large measure of success for the swarájya movement by bringing about union between the Moslem League and the Congress. It refers to the Hindu-Muhammadan disturbances that have recently taken place in various parts of India and remarks that the present actions on the part of the Hindus lead one to believe that they have, as it were, resolved to drive out of India by force every Muhammadan after they have obtained swarájya. In the next issue the paper remarks that cow-slaughter by way of sacrifice has been enjoined upon the Muhammadans by Islam, in celebration of the Bakri-Id festival, and it raises the question if it is proper for the Hindus to allow themselves to be excited at cow-slaughter under these circumstances to such a pitch as to commit murders, particularly if the animal is slaughtered by the Muhammadans in their own houses or compounds. It maintains that the intervention of the Hindus in this matter amounts to an interference with the religious freedom which is vouchsafed by British rule to the entire Indian community.]

The Champaran enquiry and Mr. Gandhi.
Kesari (106), 6th Nov.

10. Mr. Gandhi has done a great national work by releasing the rayats of Champaran from the grip of indigo planters, shortly after his return from South Africa. It cannot be said that nobody knew before of the tyranny of planters over the rayats in Bihar. But the tyranny was put an end to only when a real passive resister like Mr. Gandhi came forward. This fact contains a valuable lesson for all of us. We cannot say, however, that the matter has quite ended because Mr. Irwine representing the planters says that the recommendations of the Committee will not be accepted by them. The Bihar Government, however, has ordered that the recommendations be enforced. Mr. Gandhi is returning to Champaran to see that the Government orders are duly enforced. Now Mr. Gandhi will be there to enforce Government orders and the planters will oppose them! It illustrates how Anglo-Indians care for Government orders when their selfish interests are affected.

Suggestion for the formation of a National Volunteer Corps for each district.
Kesari (106), 6th Nov.

11. The Kesari supports the suggestion of Mr. Damodar Vinayak Deshmukh, Secretary of the Bombay National Volunteer Corps, Bombay, that a Corps of volunteers should be raised in every District and taluka place in Maháráshtra on the model of the Bombay Corps. It further says that those who do not want to take part in political agitation can join the non-political division of the Corps and perform public service.

Comments on the Chiefs' Conference at Delhi.
Gujaráti (17), 4th Nov.; Bombay Samáchár (60), 8th Nov.

12. The Gujaráti discusses at great length the position of Native States in the Indian polity and while giving the history of the Chiefs' Conference which met at Delhi last week, remarks that the Indian Chiefs should not be allowed to have any voice in the government of British India since their territories are governed according to the whims and fancies of the Indian Chiefs without the latter being responsible to the people governed and since their revenues are collected and disbursed without the least consideration being given to the interests of the subjects. It is, however, prepared to consider a scheme whereby the subjects of Native States may be allowed to co-operate with those of British India for the better governance of the country provided the Indian Chiefs are willing to adopt the system of government followed in British India; but on no account does it favour the suggestion of the Dewan of Mysore for the representation of Native States on the Imperial Legislative Council. Under the circumstance it looks forward to the Chiefs' Conference as likely to throw some light on the position Indian Chiefs will enjoy in the Indian polity. [The Bombay Samáchár is of opinion that the advice given by His Excellency Lord Chelmsford to the Indian Chiefs to wait a little longer for the realisation of their ideal of a Council of Princes is meant as a hint to them first to give an effective voice to their subjects in the government of their States. The paper hopes that the States will act according to this advice.]

Message (6), 8th Nov.

13. "We have found it solemnly reiterated that the Native States represent one-third of the Indian Empire and one-fourth of its population; and one of our morning contemporaries has pompously argued that 'they can therefore claim to be the exponents of a considerable proportion of Indian thought and influence.' We cannot help thinking that it is fortuitous logic. The mere fact that the Native States form territorially a large portion of the Indian Empire, does not so easily permit the inference to be drawn that they constitute the exponents of Indian thought and influence. This is not only to confuse the issues but actually misstate facts. It is not even accurate to say that these States really constitute the exponents of at least 'Native Indian thought and influence'. For, in many cases, there is a vast divergence of feelings and views between the States and their populations. Notwithstanding the outward symbols of apparent unity many of the members of the Conference that was opened by the Viceroy on Monday are perpetually at loggerheads with thei own subjects, who are often helpless against the arbitary doings of their Rulers and administrators. Our contemporary, which has virtually pleaded for an interfusion between the Native States as represented by their Rulers and Chiefs and the Government of India, has deliberately lost sight of the fact that it is impossible and impracticable. In the first place, we are afraid, many of the rulers of important States do not countenance the idea, and those who countenance it are merely people of little or no consequence. The reactionaries led by the Pioneer and the Times, must no doubt be looking forward to a time when these States can be interposed to act as a drag on Indian political life. But the public will not mistake their mischievous object for a generous recognition of the magnificent services voluntarily rendered by the States during the war. Of course, we have nothing to say against a conference which, as the Viceroy stated last October and again reiterated on Monday, is convened in order to counsel him on the various questions affecting his relations with the States and of the several States themselves.......... The moment they want to leave this object behind and take up a new position of suggesting that these States should be incorporated in the administrative machinery of India as a Second Chamber with sundry others thrown in, they will have to face not only very strong feelings of suspicion from the States, but a serious opposition from the people of British India."

Comments on the critical situation in Italy.

Bombay Samáchár (60), 7th and 10th Nov.; Rást Goftár (31), 4th Nov.; Prája Mitra and Pársi (29), 10th Nov.

14. The Bombay Samáchár expresses confidence that German strategy and intrigues will fail to crush Italy owing to the timely help that England and France are determined upon rendering to their ally. [In a subsequent issue the paper takes a careful review of the Italian situation and comes to the conclusion that treachery on the part of some of the Italians themselves is responsible for the critical position into which the country has been drawn and hopes that the Italians will now rouse themselves and unite to vindicate their national honour and to make good the loss they have suffered. The Rást Goftár is of opinion that Germany has undertaken the invasion of Italy with a view to securing an early peace that would enable her to get back her lost Colonies. It also feels confident that the timely help of England, France and America will go a great way in bringing out Italy victorious from the struggle which at present has assumed a glooming aspect. The Praja Mítra and Pársi, on the other hand, expresses a fear that the news of Russia being prepared to enter into a separate peace with Germany will have a demoralising effect on a certain section of the Italian people and that there is a great likelihood of their anxiously coming forward to seek peace.]

Rást Goftár (31), 11th Nov., Eng. cols.

15. "From the brief particulars that have appeared it is evident that the Germans and Austrians not only displayed superior strategy but attacked in such strength that the Italians were outnumbered by ten to one. Whole regiments were completely wiped out while large masses of Italians were captured. The loss suffered by death and capture is not yet published, but it must have been enormous, and the army of the Central Powers is reported to be occupying a position from which it can easily debouch into the plains. It is impossible to exaggerate the gravity of the situation. If the Germans and Austrians overrun Italy we shudder to think of the fate of that unhappy country. Belgium, Poland and Roumania have suffered nothing compared to what may be in store for Italy, because it must be remembered that if Italy had not seceded from the Triple Alliance she would have been to-day fighting on the side of the Central European Powers instead of against them.......... To the German frightfulness will be added a vengefulness of which perhaps the world never has had any parallel. This is the fate that now threatens Italy and the Allies are right in doing all they can to help her.......... It is only when the armies of the Central Powers are driven beyond the passes and the line originally held by the Italians restored that the Italian position can be considered safe. This will not by any means be an easy task.......... The experience gained during the war is that the German High Command never fails to push an advantage to the utmost, and the advance of the German and Austrian troops through the plains of Italy will not be delayed an instant and the line behind will be strongly held. Every hour is now full of fate for Italy, and the utmost that can be done to extricate her from her great peril should be done at once. The moral and political effect of the invasion or fall of Italy would be appalling and it is impossible to prefigure it. With the seaboard of Italy in the possession of Germany and Austria the Mediterranean would become fifty times more dangerous than at present. The Allies realise this fully and that is why their statesmen and military commanders are putting their heads together, and devising means to avert this great danger. We can only hope that Italy will be extricated from her pressing peril and all will yet go well with the cause of the Allies."

Comments on Mr. Gandhi's presidential address at the Political Conference at Godhra.

Sánj Vartamán (32), 3rd Nov.; Hindusthán (21), 6th Nov.; Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 6th Nov.

16. The Sánj Vartamán quotes with approval the views expressed by Mr. M. K. Gandhi on the growing poverty of India at the first sessions of the Gujarát Political Conference, which was recently held at Godhra, and endorses his opinion that truth should be the basis of all political movements and that municipal government is the key to self-government which is the only remedy for India's poverty. [The Hindusthán considers it a pity that India should not at present possess the moral and spiritual qualities which are necessary, in the opinion of Mr. Gandhi, for securing Swarájya. It expresses the hope that people will ponder over Mr. Gandhi's advice and try to acquire the qualities which will fit them for Swarájya. The Jám-e-Jamshed asks the people who advocate the immediate grant of Swarájya to India to give a careful consideration to Mr. Gandhi's speech and exhorts the Indian people to carefully follow the steps pointed out by him with a view to reaching the goal of Swarájya.]

Comments on the dismissal of certain officers in the Excise Department (Bombay.)

Hindusthán (21), 9th Nov.

17. Dwelling upon the necessity of keeping Government departments free from the vice of corruption and particularly those departments which come in close touch with the public, the Hindusthán refers to the fact of a number of Excise Inspectors having been dismissed and of other officers tendering their resignation, as published in the last Bombay Government Gazette, and emphasises the necessity of publishing the reasons which have led Government to dismiss these officers. It believes that Government would be setting a bad example if they would rest content with dismissing them and opines that such a course would detract from the prestige of the Excise Department. The paper wishes Government to prosecute those against whom they have got strong proofs, for the purpose of setting an example to other officers belonging to the Department. It also wishes that some honourable member of the local Legislative Council would, by means of an interpellation, require Government to publish reasons for dismissing the Excise officers and also the reasons for showing leniency by not instituting criminal proceedings against them. The paper congratulates the head of the Abkári Department on the bold step he has taken on the present occasion by bringing the delinquents to book but characterises the leniency he has shown towards them as mercy misplaced.

Complaints against the Konkan steamer service.

Satyashodhak (117), 4th Nov.

18. Owing to the vagaries of the Konkan steamer service passengers are being put to great inconvenience. A steamer from Bombay had recently to halt for a pretty long time at Janjira owing to stress of weather. Had its departure from that port for Ratnágiri been communicated to the latter place by telegram arrangements could easily have been made to send out barges to take down the Ratnágiri passengers from the steamer. But nothing of the kind was done and the passengers had to remain on the steamer and land at the next port after undergoing great privations. It is the duty of the Customs authorities to take notice of this negligence on the part of the ship's officers. Similar complaints are being heard from Bankot. Although the steamer can conveniently touch that port it is taken to Hareshwar thus compelling the passengers from Bankot and the adjacent places such as Wesvi, Mhapral, etc. to proceed to Hareshwar in barges, which is very dangerous. Recently two barges proceeding to Hareshwar, one from Wesvi and the other from Mhapral, foundered causing the death of five persons. We invite the attention of the steamship company to these grievances of the people and request them to remedy them at an early date.

Comments on the address presented to His Excellency the Viceroy by the Sind Muhammadan Association.
Phœnix (8), 31st Oct.

19. Commenting upon the address presented to His Excellency the Viceroy by the Sind Muhammadan Association, the Phœnix remarks:—"To anyone acquainted with the leading Muhammadans of Sind the absence of the signatures of men like the Honourable Mr. Bhurgri, Messrs. Ghulamali G. Chagla, Yusifalli Allibhoy, Ghoolam Hoosain Kassim and Mir Ayub Khan must have been a great surprise. But it is an open secret that the leading Muhammadans of Karáchi and the Honourable Mr. Bhurgri from Hyderabad declined to sign the address or be a party to it as the para dealing with the Home Rule League was introduced therein not only without their consent but in spite of their protest. The address of an Association of a local body ought not to deal with politics. On this ground the War League omitted from their address all mention of politics though at one time they entertained the idea of doing so. It is no use reiterating here the influences which were at work in getting this para inserted in the address and the way in which the association held its meeting at which the inclusion of this para was agreed and brushed aside all objections and protests. The whole episode is a painful one and does not in our opinion redound to the credit of the Muhammadan community. A perusal of the names of the signatories of the address shows that many signatories are obscure persons......... The allegations in the address that the Muhammadans in this province are sufficiently educated and that they have not got their due share of appointments as yet are also according to us not correct. There is not a sufficient number of educated Muhammadans in Sind who can come up to the standard of Hindu servants of Government. As regards their employment the present Commissioner in Sind has been doing his best to appoint as many Muhammadans in the Government service as he can. Some of them quite young in age and service are being appointed to high post of Mukhtiarkars and Deputy Collectors over the heads of old and experienced Hindus. It is rumoured that almost all the Daftardars to the Collectors of the various districts in Sind will be Muhammadans so that more lower appointments may also in future go to Muhammadans. We think that in this regard the grievance of the Association is not a genuine one at least so far as the present régime in Sind is concerned."

EDUCATION.

Students' strikes in the Central Provinces.
Kesari (106), 6th Nov.

20. Sir Benjamin Robertson is known for his cool-headedness and spirit of compromise. But it appears that he is guided by some bureaucratic official in his attitude towards students. He rejected the application of the Nagpur Graduates' Association. His ire was not satisfied by the rejection and he has issued a press note on the subject and made some charges against Indian leaders. A responsible officer like Sir Benjamin should not speak in such an irresponsible manner. It is not true that the circular prohibiting students from attending meetings is an old one. Needless changes that would excite indignation have been made in its new edition. No evidence has been given of the breach of discipline amongst students to justify the re-issue of the circular after a lapse of eight years. New strict and unpractical restrictions have been imposed on students. The third oppressive point is that parents are being forced to sign a declaration approving of the circular. It is the height of high-handedness to drive out students from schools because their parents declined to sign the declarations! Teachers were asked to watch the students; students were fined for attending non-political meetings; and partiality was shown in imposing the fines. All this contributed to make the situation worse. Till things came to this pass, did the students go on a strike? Did anybody encourage them? Students were driven out of High Schools. Did not the College students sign a declaration as soon as they were assured by the Principal that he would allow them to attend meetings? Did not the Principal refuse to keep his word? Any number of Sir Benjamin's Press notes would be of no use. He should not allow himself to be solely guided by his subordinates, and it would be better if he settled the question after a consultation with public leaders. Students who have been held by school authorities to be undisciplined are working enthusiastically, unselfishly and in an orderly manner to save the city from a flood caused by the breach of the dam of Ambazari Tank. People can judge for themselves how far the cry of want of discipline raised is true.

Necessity of raising the pay of untrained teachers.
Kesari (106), 6th Nov.

21. Referring to Government's reply to the interpellations of the Honourable Mr. Upasani regarding untrained teachers, the Kesari says:—There is no need of criticising these figures. Even the lowest Hamal in a mill is paid more. Government cannot do without untrained teachers and they should not disregard their welfare. Is it not unjust to fix their maximum pay at Rs. 11? Mr. Montagu while Under Secretary had promised that the minimum pay of untrained teachers would be Rs. 12 and that a Provident Fund would be started for them. It is now five years since the speech was made. Mr. Montagu is now Secretary of State and he is coming over to India soon. Will the Local Government introduce these desirable reforms before his arrival? Or we shall have to remind Mr. Montagu of his words and show to him, by a practical instance, how much his words are regarded by the local officials.

RAILWAYS.

Suggestion to Government to issue communiques explaining the necessity for dismantling the Hyderabad-Badin Railway Line in Sind, etc.
Sind Observer (12), 26th Oct.; Sind Journal (10), 11th Oct.

22. "Our Hyderabad correspondent informs us that in consequence of the dismantling of the Hyderabad-Badin Line, all kinds of silly rumours are circulating among the ignorant population, and it is therefore necessary to issue a sort of communique mentioning authoritatively the reasons which have necessitated Government dislocating the traffic at such short notice. It is also in the air that another section of the N.-W. Railway line in Sind, namely, Kotri-Dadu-Ruk, is also marked down for dismantlement, if needed. Before this actually occurs, would it not be better to prepare the people likely to be affected by the uprooting of this line, so that they may have sufficient time, unlike the case of the Hyderabad-Badin Railway, to decide on some make-shift to meet the transport difficulty." [The Sind Journal writes:—"The dismantling of the broad gauge line from Hyderabad to Badin has at last been decided upon and it would commence from the 1st proximo. The military requirements in Mesopotamia are said to be the cause of this dismantling.......... We trust that every step would be taken to remove any signs of panic, if they manifest themselves among the illiterate masses. Further it is imperatively necessary that the land revenue assessment which had been enhanced at the revisional settlement in view, among other factors, of the growing prosperity of the Tando Division would be reduced in proportion to the fall in the price of grain which would surely be affected by the closing of the Badin line. The former facilities of traffic and communication have been almost ruined since the opening of the line which is about to be closed."]

NATIVE STATES.

Comments on the general strike at Wadhwán.
Gujaráti Punch (19), 4th Nov.; Káthiáwár Times (26), 4th Nov.; Surya Prakásh (33), 3rd Nov.

23. The Gujaráti Punch regrets that the usual liberal and conciliatory policy of Lord Willingdon has not been employed to bring to a satisfactory solution the question of the present Wadhwán strike. It is inclined to attribute the strike not to any differences between the Hindus and the Muhammadans of Wadhwán but to the action of the Administrator in issuing rules which placed restrictions upon the playing of music in public streets. The paper does not approve of the attitude of Mr. Kadri in insisting upon the strike being first discontinued before he would cancel the rule regarding licenses. It then goes on thus:—We would state with regret that, regard being had to the existing hardships of the Hindu population of Wadhwán, Khan Bahadur Kadri ought to have acted on the present occasion with great foresight. In view of his refusal to cancel the rule above referred to and of the disappointment caused to the people of Wadhwán by the reply of the Political Agent it behoves Lord Willingdon now to intervene in the matter and to soothe the injured feelings of the Hindus. [The Káthiáwár Times publishes the purport of a letter addressed to it by a Wadhwán correspondent, wherein the writer, after referring to the strike, declares that the relations between the Hindus and Muhammadans at Wadhwán were and are friendly and that the present difficulties are simply due to the local Muhammadan officers. The correspondent prays to Government to come to the help of the Hindus, who have already suffered much, and render them justice. He also remarks that the religious feelings of the Hindus have been further wounded deeply by the pollution and mutilation, by some unknown person, of the idol of Hanumán which stood in Bapubhá's garden in Wadhwán. The Surya Prakásh in defending the administration observes that the system of licenses for playing music in public streets is in vogue in British territory and other Native States and inquires why the Hindus of Wadhwán should have regarded the rule enjoining such a course as a grievance and gone on strike. It describes Khan Bahadur Kadri as an impartial officer free from any racial feelings. The paper then publishes a letter from a correspondent in which the latter dwells upon Khan Bahadur Kadri's impartial attitude both towards the Hindus and Muhammadans and in support refers to the orders recently issued by him, directing a change in the usual route of Tábut processions for the sake of preserving the public peace. He further declares that the present strike is a sham one inasmuch as the merchants take away goods from the shops to their houses and carry on their business there.]

Anti-Hindu riots at Vanthali (under Junágadh).

Káthiáwár Times (26), 4th Nov.

24. The Káthiáwár Times publishes a letter from a Hindu correspondent in which the writer refers to the disturbances alleged to have been created by the Muhammadans at Vanthali (under Junágadh) on the 27th and 28th of October last in connection with the Muharram processions. He describes the various acts of violence perpetrated by the assailants and declares that the Hindus were so terrified that they locked themselves up in their houses. According to the correspondent, the Hindus pray that the Administrator of Junágadh and other authorities will, for the sake of their future safety, take strong and effective measures, and he also requests the Vakils and other well-to-do Hindus and Jains to render all possible help to the poor Hindu population of Vanthali.

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 13th November 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 46 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 17th November 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British rule :

- Alleged participation by Mr. Justice Kajiji in the political affairs of the Muhammadan community 13
- Arrival of Mr. Montagu . . . . 4—6
- Comments on Mrs. Besant's communication to the Press about the non-release of Ali Brothers 10
- Comments on Sir Valentine Chirol's letter to the London Times regarding Indian political reforms 3
- Comments on the Anglo-Indian agitation in Sind . . . 11
- Comment on the Bakr Id riots in Arrah District (Bihár) . . . 14
- Comments on the continued internment of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali . . . . 8 & 9
- How Muhammadans would fare if Home Rule were given to India . 12
- There is no check in India on the reckless expenditure of public money 2
- Treatment of political prisoners in Indian jails 1
- What Mr. Montagu should do while in India 7

Chiefs' Conference at Delhi : Comments on the — 15

Excise :

- Complaint about the high price of salt at Ratnágiri 24
- Complaint about the high price of salt in the Surat District . . 23

Judicial matters : Was the Advocate-General, Bombay, right in undertaking the defence of Surajmal in the case Surajmal versus Horniman? 21

Police : Comments on alleged insult offered by Mr. Hayter, District Superintendent of Police, Hyderabad, to the Honourable R. B. Tekchand Udhavdas 20

Revenue matters : Complaint against the system of acknowledging payment of land assessment on slips of paper 22

Viceroy : Comments on His Excellency the Viceroy's visit to Sind . . 16

War:

- Comments on the anarchy in Russia 18
- Comments on the situation in Italy 17
- Criticism of the training given in Poona to the I. D. F. 19

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

LEGISLATION—

Comments on the Primary Education Bill before the Bombay Legislative Council 25

EDUCATION—

Complaint about the stringent application of the Students' Circular in the Bombay Presidency 28
Primary education in Bombay City 27
Problem of Urdu teaching in the Bombay Presidency 26
The Central Provinces Government and students . . . . . . 29 & 30

MUNICIPALITIES—

Ahmedabad: Complaint against the — Municipality 34
Bombay: Storage of Cinema films in — . . . . 31—33

NATIVE STATES—

Comments on the general strike at Wadhwán (Káthiáwár) 35

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Treatment of political prisoners in Indian jails.
Young India (14), 14th Nov.; * Sunday Tatler (13), 18th Nov.

1. "The treatment of political prisoners in India has always been a subject of serious complaint against Government, and has exposed it to unfavourable comparisons. We are not concerned here with the legitimacy or otherwise of punishing people who entertain political beliefs contravening the limits set down by men in power and authority. But what we are concerned for is the needless harshness and severity with which punishment has been meted out in most of the cases. It is, therefore, of peculiar interest to us in this country that even the Irish bureaucracy has since the Ashe incident, learnt to discriminate more clearly between ordinary criminals and political prisoners. In Ireland at any rate, this discrimination has not been altogether without precedent. Mr. Swift MacNeill, M. P., has quoted the precedent set by Lord Spencer, when, as Viceroy of Ireland, the latter had to deal with the case of Mr. T. M. Harrington, M. P.......... What we want here is that the same generous treatment should be accorded to Indian political prisoners in the future, and that following a later precedent of the British Government, a general amnesty should be granted to the political prisoners already incarcerated. The demand has been made in more than one responsible quarter and it is difficult to think that it will not meet with a sympathetic and generous response from Government. [Commenting on the above article the Sunday Tatler writes:—"We are seldom in agreement with the views of that contemporary, but in this instance, we are in a position to endorse and say that the complaint made is, in the main, true though not in every detail. In India all classes of prisoners are treated alike—whether they are old jail lords (birds ?) guilty of the most heinous crimes or persons convicted of offences involving no moral turpitude and undergoing only simple imprisonment or political prisoners, with the only difference that the latter are not locked up in the cells during the day and are allowed books (one book at a time to read) and some writing materials by way of paper and pencil. As for bedding and diet, it is a matter left to the discretion of the Medical Officer and not of the jail authorities. Unless you are ill and in the infirmary, you cannot expect any change in the diet or bedding. However, there is a good deal of room for improvement in this direction as the idea of keeping those who are not guilty of any heinous crimes and undergoing only simple imprisonment along with other criminals is against all civilized notions and ideas. This is a matter that must arrest the sympathy of the Inspector-General of Prisons whose attention has already been drawn to it, and it is in keeping with the advance of civilization that some reforms should be effected in this direction. His Excellency Lord Willingdon has already viewed the position of prisoners in jails with sympathy, and it is hoped that something will be done in this line."]

There is no check in India on the reckless expenditure of public money.
Sind Observer (12), 6th Nov.

2. "In England they have a Committee of Public Accounts whose business it is to scrutinise every item of public expenditure and has power to call before it any minister or official to question him about any payment which in the opinion of the Committee needs elucidation. In this way extravagance is kept under control—to a certain extent. In India there is no such check and public money is being paid out recklessly. Under the Indian method there is no one to question the payment of preferential rates to a contractor for work which others are prepared to do at lower rates. A case in point is the stevedoring charges paid to a certain firm at Keamari. Why this firm should receive a larger sum for what others are willing to take on at a smaller cost to the State we fail to understand. Perhaps General Fowler is not aware of the arrangement."

Comments on Sir Valentine Chirol's letter to the London Times regarding Indian political reforms.
Dnyán Prakásh (37), 14th Nov.

3. The long stay of Sir Valentine Chirol at the Government Houses in India, be it for a private purpose, seems to have given him a true idea of Indian public opinion. But it would be for the most part a mistake to imagine that Sir Valentine subscribes to the Swarájya or any other comprehensive scheme. Sir Valentine has indeed protested against the local Anglo-Indian agitation to drive out Mr. Montagu from his office and the Times also supports him. He, however, does not say that powers should be given to Indians but that responsibility should be thrown upon their shoulders. We are afraid that the scheme of reforms drawn up by Sir Valentine resembles that of Lord Islington and Mr. L. Curtis who want to throw responsibility on Indians without investing them with any real power. It is a device to make a flank movement against the Congress-League scheme rather than boldly lead a frontal attack against it. But this attempt to give as little power to Indians as possible will not be successful just as the attempt of Anglo-Indians to maintain the dominance of their caste will not.

Arrival of Mr. Montagu.
Young India (14), 14th Nov.

4. "Mr. Montagu and party landed in Bombay on Friday afternoon. Notwithstanding the great veil of secrecy which was put on the arrival, the news leaked out somehow and hours before the landing many enthusiastic people had repaired to the Apollo Bunder, only to be turned back after patiently waiting for hours together to have a look at Mr. Montagu. The police were inspired with so much zeal and devotion that they would not allow anybody outside the 'chosen' of the gods even to get within sight of the landing. To add to the disappointment of the curious, Mr. Montagu was driven straightway to the Yacht Club, which was comprised within the 'danger zone' defined by authority of the police Commissioner. The reason, it appears to us, is not far to seek. If no barriers had been raised against the public and if the police had not opened a fusillade on them, we feel quite sure that Mr. Montagu would have been accorded a most sincere, genuine and hearty welcome, even in the absence of a rehearsal beforehand. To many Anglo-Indians such an idea is positively abhorrent and it is thought that in order to preserve their own izzat they took the precaution of making the Secretary of State a great object of curiosity that may be exhibited only on occasions, lest familiarity should detract—from the charm of the object or the community, we shall leave the readers to conjecture for themselves."

Sánj Vartamán (32), 10th and 16th Nov.; Shri Venkateshwar (80), 11th Nov.; Rást Goftár (31), 11th Nov.

5. The Sánj Vartamán regrets that no opportunity was given to the people of Bombay to accord a welcome to Mr. Montagu on his landing or to show their joy at his coming to India, owing to the extreme secrecy observed in the matter of his landing and movements in Bombay. It is sorry to see that the officials should have come to the conclusion that any public welcome given to Mr. Montagu would lower the position of the Viceroy. It hopes that Mr. Montagu will give careful consideration to the schemes of reform that will be placed before him and urge Parliament to introduce political reforms in India on the lines suggested by the Joint Committee of the Congress and the Moslem League. [In a subsequent issue the paper expresses dissatisfaction at the very formal manner in which deputations are received by the Viceroy and Mr. Montagu. It wishes Mr. Montagu had been given an opportunity to come into closer contact with the people and to know their views. The Shri Venkateshwar welcomes Mr. Montagu and wishes him success in his mission. The Rást Goftár endorses the resolution passed at a public meeting held at Madras requesting the Prime Minister to remove the restrictions placed on Mr. Montagu in the matter of expressing his opinions or making speeches and exhorts people in other cities to make similar representations with a view to allowing Mr. Montagu to have some freedom during his stay in India.]

Satyashodhak (117), 11th Nov.

6. People naturally do not understand why they were denied the opportunity of welcoming the Secretary of State at Bombay and why so much secrecy was observed in the matter of his arrival and departure. This does not augur well for the mission of Mr. Montagu who has come to ascertain personally the aspirations of the people. His public arrival would certainly have given very great satisfaction to the people. What can possibly be the object of the authorities in making such a mystery of this affair? We trust there will be no repetition of this secrecy when Mr. Montagu arrives in Bombay in December next with the Viceroy.

What Mr. Montagu should do while in India.
New Times (7), 10th Nov.

7. In welcoming Mr. Montagu to India, the New Times remarks:—"Mr. Montagu will get a real insight into the Indian political situation if he comes in contact with Indian India. The India of the villages, the India of the masses who get only one meal a day and who cannot, and in fact do not, make their both ends meet, will convince him more than any association of the much maligned educated Indians that what India needs at the present critical period in her history is the amelioration of her political status in the British Empire and in the scale of nations. The official incubus and the extremely formal atmosphere with which he has been invested, partly due to the clamour of Anglo-Indians for overcautious action, may, to a certain extent, prevent the realisation of the actual state of things by the Secretary of State. But it is our duty to say that Mr. Montagu has opportunities to come in contact, even under official reserve, with genuine Indian opinion."

Comments on the continued internment of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali.
Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 12th Nov., Eng. cols.

8. "After the revelations made by Mrs. Besant the agitation for the release of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali, if it is not to cease altogether, must at least become much more temperate. For, in view of the facts, it is impossible to assail their internment as a mere act of repression. It is a war-measure, however unnecessary and over-cautious, and now must be accepted as such.......... Mr. Mahomed Ali is a true Moslem and a God-fearing man, as he claims to be. His religious zeal and sincerity do him honour. But could he not express an assurance of loyalty to the King-Emperor, without gratuitously importing his religious sentiments? He knew that the guarantee was being demanded from him, in view of his alleged sympathy with Turkey. Turkey is as much an enemy of the Empire as Germany.......... Nor does the Turkey of to-day deserve the sympathy which under the influence of religion the Indian Muhammadans may be led to extend to it. The Turks have shown scant respect and consideration for the sentiments of the Indian Moslems. And the present-day Turkey to all intents and purposes is not an Islamic power, but a vassal of Germany."

New Times (7), 13th New.

9. "Mr. Montagu replying to Commander Wedgwood said the two Moslem leaders 'were interned because they openly sympathised with His Majesty's enemies'. Can Government prove that the Ali brothers expressed any political sympathy with Muslim Turkey? Why not ask, then, these Muslim leaders to face the charges and take the consequences? Drowning men will catch at barbed wire, and the Government in its last extremity has framed a charge, 28 months after the internment order was issued—a charge, which, it is honestly believed, is without a rational foundation! We are afraid Mr. Montagu and the Indian Government have simply swallowed the pill supplied by the C. I. D. This is not the first time that the authorities have missed the facts and their true meaning. Cases of grotesque misrepresentation can easily be recalled by all who have passed through the painful period of the political persecution launched against the National Movement only a few years ago......... It is not difficult for a Government which suffers from insular prejudice, and a Secretary who depends on the versions and views of the 'man on the spot' to be misled; and it will be the height of stupidity to ask any Indian who knows the situation to confess the creed of official infallibility!"

Comments on Mrs. Besant's communication to the Press about the non-release of Ali brothers.
Sandesh (116), 11th and 15th Nov.

10. After dwelling upon Mrs. Besant's services to India in the matter of awakening public opinion in the country and the "great wave of gratitude which moves the hearts of Indians" in thinking about her, the Sandesh refers to her communication to the Press after her visit to Simla in connection with the case of the Ali brothers, and says:—Mrs. Besant says that the last remedy now is to petition for the release of the Ali brothers. She emphatically says that the motive of Government in interning them is honest. But no Indian has ever thought of questioning the motive of Government. Mrs. Besant also was interned with an honest motive and for proper reasons as Government thought. Should our leaders consider any question with the eye of Government or with that of the public? If the point of view of Government is to be adopted, there remains no need of any political agitation. It would be but natural to connect this change in the views and conduct of Mrs. Besant with the word she is said to have passed at the time of her release. The change in the policy of New India and the way in which she spoke to the Nágpur students point in the same direction. We do not think it would do any good to suppress the opinions that are being freely expressed among the reading public about her. It would be a mistake, however, to suppose that the presidential speech of Mrs. Besant would be a disappointing one. We are sure she would not pull us back as Sir S. P. Sinha did. She may be feeling the sense of responsibility rather too strongly but we do not think that she will not be as plain-spoken as she was formerly. [An anonymous correspondent writes to the Sandesh:—Mrs. Besant has gone back to her old self. Her suggestion of an appeal to the Privy Council for the release of Ali brothers is ridiculous. It is our misfortune that she is to be our President this year.]

Comments on the Anglo-Indian agitation in Sind.

New Times (7), 9th Nov.

11. "The Sind Branch of the European Association met on the 25th October to support the protest of the Parent Society at Calcutta. This is what we expected; but what we did not expect was that the Anglo-Indian agitators would be so insane as to indulge in the studied contempt of Indian aspirations, the superman's self-consciousness, the supercilious self-righteousness which characterised the various speeches made on the occasion.......... But no Prussian pugnacity, no bullying 'Potsdamnation' can silence the National agitation in Sind. The Sind Public refuse to be bullied, refuse to be overawed by overweening jingoism. And in the Day of Readjusment which is nigh the Anglo-Indian extremists of Sind will regret that they lost a splendid opportunity, of proving to the people of this Province the sincerity of their professed devotion to the great Ideals for which England and India fight to-day in the Army of Freedom......... It is a strange spectacle this, to find a community of capitalists scrambling in India for India's gold, rolling in luxury, and telling a people, the majority of whom are in poverty and several in actual destitution:—'You have suffered no anxieties as we have in the war which has seemed far distant to you and your leaders'! To be serious, to speak in this disparaging way to a people who though poor have fought and bled for the Empire in all these anxious years of the world-war, is a damnable thing; it is a blasphemy, a sin against the holy spirit of our Race."

How Muhammadans would fare if Home Rule were given to India.

Islámic Mail (4), 11th Nov.

12. "Our friends in the Home Rule camp serve no useful purpose by belittling and even ridiculing the opposition which is growing in the country against their movement. They may deride the European community and pooh-pooh the Mussalmans of Bihar, but that will not stop the wave of opposition to their movement which is slowly sweeping over Moslem India. A corner of the veil has been lifted and the Mussalmans have got only a glimpse of Home Rule in its true perspective, but that glimpse has been enough to sober their wild enthusiasm and in spite of what Messrs. Mazharul Haq and Wazir Hasan may say Muhammadans will have nothing to do with it.......... In India, the surface education has not changed the psychology and nature of the people. The racial prejudices and religious differences are as keen today as they were in the darkest days of the Brahmanical rule. The hatred of the Muhammadans forms part of their creed and a Moslem is still regarded as a malech (unclean). Your friends who allure you by their fraternising spirit and preach lofty ideals of equality and religious tolerance would not eat of the food touched by you. The most liberal minded and educated of them would not allow you to mention the word beef in their presence much less to allow cowkilling, etc. And even if they did, if the westernised Brahmin allowed the sacrifice of the goddess cow (we hope they would not consider this a libel upon their religious feeling, would the mass of the people educated or uneducated allow a thing which they regard as a sacrilege?......... The blood-curdling incidents in Bihár, at Arrah and other places, have a moral which cannot be lost upon any sensible man. They show as plainly as anything can, that in a community, call it a congeries of nations if you will, where religion plays such an important part as to overshadow every other sense, no political cohesion is possible on the basis which is set up by Home Rule. We do not think it necessary to dwell upon the painful and unfortunate episode of this display of Hindu savagery. We do not wish to excite the feelings of our co-religionists by a description of the horrors perpetrated by the Hindus of both the types, educated and uneducated, in a moment of religious excitement. They stand condemned all round.......... We have to think and consider our own attitude towards Home Rule in the light of them. The Hindu leaders are very kind and may be well intentioned. But the Arrah incidents have laid bare the fact that where religious feeling is concerned they have no control over the masses one way or the other. They may hold out glowing prospects and brilliant promises to us, but the people with whom we will have to live would not care a jot for them when their religious feeling is excited. When such dreadful things as happened in Arrah are possible now when the British troops are there to protect us and the British officers to do justice to our plaints, what would happen when the power is vested in the hands of the Hindus? .... We have just said the grant of one-third seats in the Legislative Councils is in our opinion no concession. What we want is our adequate share of the public services, for it is the men in the service who govern the country and influence the progress of the country and community for good and bad. A Mamlatdar or Deputy Collector wields more power for good or for evil than even a member of the Imperial Council, and the most cogent reason why our community has not progressed rapidly is the total absence of the Moslem element from the public services. Wherever they hold their share their progress in political and social matters is markedly observable as in the United Provinces and the Punjáb....... The Hindus want every thing for themselves and would not tolerate any encroachment upon their monopoly. If they are inspired with a genuine feeling of good will and sympathy they should give at least one proof of it. Let them show that they are desirous of co-operating with us and we will not be slow in extending the hand of friendship and working for the common good of the country; but so long as it is not so we are bound to regard Home Rule as another name for Hindu Rule.

Alleged participation by Mr. Justice Kajiji in the political affairs of the Muhammadan Community.

Islámic Mail (141), 5th Nov., Urdu edition.

13. A Committee has been formed to arrange for a deputation to be presented to Mr. Montagu on behalf of the Anjuman-e-Islam (of Bombay). Mr. Kajiji is the president of the said Committee. We remember that the Honourable Mr. Bhurgri recently objected to the meeting held under the chairmanship of the Vazir of Khairpur in Sind, at which opposition was offered to the Home Rule scheme. Mr. Bhurgri's contention that Government servants should not take part in political affairs is legitimate. We wonder how Mr. Kajiji has consented to participate in this affair relating to discussions about Home Rule and the political needs of the Musalmans. It would have been proper if no servant of Government had taken part in it, so that the critics would not have been in a position to say that the Muhammadan representatives did not support (the demand for) Home Rule owing to the influence of Government. Kazi Kabiruddin and Mr. Jinnah are also members of this Committee. How have they allowed a Judge of the High Court to take part in their deliberations?

Comments on the Bakr Id riots in Arrah District (Behar).

Akhbár-e-Islám (57), 13th and 15th Oct.

14. The Akhbár-e-Islám publishes a letter from one A. K. Shaikh in which the writer, without considering it necessary to draw a harrowing picture of the helpless condition of the Muhammadans of the Arrah and Shahabad districts as a result of the Hindu-Moslem riots that took place on the last Bakr Id festival, appeals to the well-to-do Muhammadans of Bombay to take measures for alleviating the distress of the Moslems of those districts. He suggests that, in view of Committees having been appointed in different parts of India to collect funds for affording relief to the afflicted Muhammadans, a similar Committee of rich and influential Moslems should be appointed in Bombay to collect money for the above-mentioned purpose. [In a subsequent issue of the paper appears another letter from one 'Amir' in the course of which the correspondent, after referring to the Arrah riots, declares that the Hindus maltreated the Muhammadans during these riots because of their superior numbers, and significantly remarks that these riots are an indication of the unity which is alleged to exist between the Hindus and the Muhammadans. He wonders as to what would happen after the attainment of swarájya when unfair advantage is thus taken by the Hindus over the Muhammadans, even before its attainment, on account of the latter being in a minority. The writer considers it to be the duty of the Bombay Muhammadans to assemble in public meetings to express their contempt for the Hindus who have perpetrated violence upon the Muhammadans and also to start funds for the relief of the latter. He further maintains that Mr. Montagu should be convinced as to how far India is fit for swarájya by allowing him to visit the districts above referred to and listen to the evidence of those who have been rendered helpless and destitute as a result of the riots.]

Comments on the Chiefs' Conference at Delhi.

Bombay Samáchár (60), 14th Nov.

15. The Bombay Samáchár, while approving of the suggestion made by His Highness the Maharaja of Bikaner at the Chiefs' Conference recently held at Delhi for the organisation of a well-constituted Chamber of Indian Chiefs, refers to the backwardness of many of the Native States and the absence in them of any agency by which the people can have any voice in their own administration. It, therefore, asks the Native States to raise their subjects to the level of British Indian subjects before aspiring to have a Chamber of their own or having their representatives in the Imperial Legislative Council as suggested in certain quarters. It is of opinion that the affairs of Native States and those of British India should, as far as possible, be kept apart from each other and doubts whether the Indian Chiefs would like any interference in their affairs by the Imperial Legislative Council.

Comments on His Excellency the Viceroy's visit to Sind.

New Times (7), 8th Nov.

16. "Indeed Lord Chelmsford gave indications, on more than one occasion, during his brief stay in our midst of his sincere desire to look at problems from the people's point of view to help the development of local self-Government. We are glad of these indications concerning a change in the spirit of his administration; every expression of sympathy by him with the aspirations and ideals of the people comes to us with a glad assurance that India well may expect some real Reforms in the immediate future. The bureaucracy in Sind continue to drive the system in the old unpopular, anti-popular way. It is time for officials—Europeans and Indians in the Province—to awake to the new situation; it is time for them to read the face of New Sind's Destiny; Sind is now awake and if the sounds of old mirth have died even in small quiet villages, a new sound of Freedom is on the lips of our village-folk, our citizens, our shop-keepers, our women, even the little boys who whistle in the streets. It is time for all to listen to the trumpet—call of the Time-Spirit."

Comments on the situation in Italy.

Sánj Vartamán (32), 12th Nov.; Hindusthán (21), 12th Nov.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 14th Nov.; Baroda Vartamán (58), 12th Nov.; Bombay Samáchár (60), 17th Nov.

17. Dwelling on the situation in the war, the Sánj Vartamán remarks that though it has become grave as a result of the present Italian crisis, there is no reason for arriving at any hasty conclusion. It believes that the Franco-British reinforcements that have been sent to the help of Italy, though they will not enable the latter forthwith to drive out the enemy from her territories, will at least enable her to make a stand against him. [The Hindusthán is inclined to endorse the view held by some that the present crisis in Italy is partly due to the enemy being able to withdraw his troops from the Russian front and partly to the disaffection created in the Italian army by German spies. It remarks that the despatch of the British and French reinforcements to Italy will knock the bottom out of the story circulated by the enemy that the Allies had left Italy unaided in the war. The Praja Mitra and Pársi observes that, in view of the declaration of America to the effect that she has entered into war only with Germany, it remains to be seen whether it will send any help to Italy which is being invaded by Austria. It remarks that America can ostensibly maintain her neutrality towards Austria and yet indirectly help Italy by sending large reinforcements to the Western Front so as to enable more British and French troops to be withdrawn from that front for the help of Italy. The Baroda Vartamán observes that though on account of the Austro-German dash into her territories Italy has suffered a heavy loss from a military point of view she is likely to gain politically inasmuch as the attack has made the Italians more united than before. It remarks thot the enemy must be dreaming at present of frightening France by weakening Italy and of pleasing his Turkish ally by making naval movements on the African coast with the help of the Austrian fleet if he could possibly deal a smashing blow to Italy at the present juncture. In view of the Allied reinforcements to Italy the paper, however, maintains that there is no reason for apprehension so far as the Italian situation is concerned. The Bombay Samáchár refers to the Franco-British reinforcements sent to the succour of Italy on the present occasion and commends this change in the Allies' military policy of leaving each of the Allied nations to defend its own boundaries. Regard being had to the almost certain necessity of Britain and America having steadily to supply reinforcements to the various fronts in the future, the paper urges the authorities not to lose time in utilising the man power of India and raising large armies in this country.]

Comments on the anarchy in Russia.

Bombay Samáchár (60), 13th Nov.; Hindusthán (21), 16th Nov.; Shri Venkateshwar (80), 16th Nov.

18. The Bombay Samáchár refers to the ascendancy obtained by the Socialists and Maximalists over M. Kerensky and the confusion into which they have thrown Russia owing to the success of German intrigues and declares that in spite of Russia going out of the fight the Allies will be able to muster sufficient strength to defeat the enemy in the ensuing spring. It believes the confusion in Russia will have very little effect on the ultimate success of the Allies beyond depriving Russia of the benefits it would have derived by a firm adherence to the Allied cause. [The Hindusthán also expresses confidence that England will be able to stand the strain thrown upon her by the confusion in Russia. The Shri Venkateshwar expresses hope that M. Kerensky will be able to rally the country to his side and restore order.]

Criticism of the training given in Poona to the I. D. F.

Sind Observer (12), 6th Nov.

19. "The Calcutta I. D. F. contingent which went to Poona for training have returned and are full of the fatuity of the system which sent them several hundred miles by railway to a distant military station where they learnt nothing new. The contingent spent three weeks at Poona and the course of instruction contained nothing more than they could have done in Calcutta. Thanks to the military arrangements the men were provided with insufficient and unpalatable food. They had to wash down windows and swab floors, but all this useful work could have been performed at Calcutta. We can understand how the 35 lakhs which the I. D. F. is costing is being spent. It seems there still exist persons in authority who do not yet realise that we are at war."

Comments on alleged insult offered by Mr. Hayter, District Superintendent of Police, Hyderabad, to the Honourable R. B. Tekchand Udhavdas.

Sind Journal (10), 8th Nov.

20. "The reprehensible conduct of Mr. Hayter, District Superintendent of Police, Hyderabad, towards the Honourable R. B. Tekchand Udhavdas, the foremost lawyer of Sind, on the occasion of the recent fire that broke out here has aroused considerable feeling in the town. That a man of the position, attainments, and age of Diwan Tekchand should be so light-heartedly insulted by a Police official who is in no respect fit to hold a candle to him, raises the question whether we can expect to be well treated by the average European official in India until we get self-government when the officials will realize that they are the servants and not the masters of the people. Mr. Hayter, who does not enjoy the reputation for sobriety, has on this occasion overstepped the limits of all decorum. The Honourable R. B. Tekchand was on account of his being Vice-Chairman of the Committee of Management, Hyderabad, as much interested in watching the operations for bringing the fire under control as was Mr. Hayter himself, but the latter would not tolerate his presence on the spot and asked him in a most insulting manner to go away. That things should come to such a sorry pass would be keenly regretted by all well-wishers of the British Government. It is understood that Diwan Tekchand had written to the Collector and Chairman of the Committee of Management, Hyderabad, about this affair and that an apology has been made to the aggrieved gentleman by Mr. Hayter on the intervention of Mr. Gibson. We, however, trust that Diwan Tekchand would rest satisfied with nothing short of a public apology by Mr. Hayter who has insulted the whole city, so to say, in the person of the Honourable the Vice-Chairman of the Committee of Management, and who must be made to realize that Indians have as much self-respect as Europeans."

Was the Advocate-General, Bombay, right in undertaking the defence of Surajmal in the case Surajmal versus Horniman.

Kaiser-i-Hind (25), 18th Nov., Eng. cols.

21. Commenting upon the various High Court judgments in the case of Surajmal versus Horniman, the Kaiser-i-Hind remarks:—"We should like to raise the question whether it was right for the Honourable the Advocate-General, a public servant and the leader of the Bar, to have accepted a brief to defend a lawyer and an officer of the Court, against whom most ugly allegations had been made, and really left 'unanswered' in spite of Mr. Justice Macleod's interpretation? Does not public interest require that there be a clear line of demarcation between cases which the Advocate-General can take up without any harm to public interests and cases which he cannot and ought not to take up? Here is a palpable conflict between legal etiquette and public morality. The conflict is by no means impossible of solution. If the discretion of individual Advocate-Generals cannot be safely trusted, it becomes the duty of the Government to interfere and evolve some broad principle, whereby the spectacle of a high public servant openly using his talents in defence of another public officer with a reputation under a cloud may not give a rude shock to a public that is ignorant of the principle of legal etiquette."

Complaint against the system of acknowledging payment of land assessment on slips of paper.

Kalpataru (104), 11th Nov.

22. A correspondent writes to the Kalpataru:—The old practice of acknowledging receipts by village officers for land assessment paid by rayats in books maintained by them at their own expense has been discontinued and receipts are now given on very small slips of paper. The land-holder's receipts for assessment play an important part in law-suits. The books were, therefore, far more convenient than the loose acknowledgment slips. I, therefore, request that the old system of receipt books should be revived.

Complaint about the high price of salt in the Surat District.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 15th Nov.

23. One Bhulabhai Bhaidas writes to the Praja Mitra and Pársi complaining of the hardships suffered by the people of the Surat District owing to the high prices which the salt merchants charge to the people of the district. He adds:—The merchants have cornered all the salt manufactured in the Dungri Salt pans and sell it at their own price. Formerly a bag of salt weighing two maunds was sold for Rs. 3-12-0, and now the same quantity is sold for Rs. 5-8-0 or Rs. 6.

Complaint about the high price of salt at Ratnágiri.

Satyashodhak (117), 11th Nov.

24. A correspondent writes in the Satyashodhak:—It is most unfortunate that salt which is produced with very little labour from sea-water should sell dearer than rice in a coastal town like Ratnágiri. The increase in prices of commodities such as sugar, etc., imported from abroad can be explained by the situation created by the war. There is, however, no such justification for the dearness of salt the scarcity of which can be substantially mitigated by manufacturing it locally in salt-pans. This new industry will also provide work for some people of this poor district. The restriction on the storage of salt beyond the prescribed limit of one maund also presses heavily upon the people who are prevented thereby from storing it when it is selling cheap.

LEGISLATION.

Comments on the Primary Education Bill before the Bombay Legislative Council.

Jám-e-Jámshed (24), 14th Nov.; Akhbár-e-Islám (57), 12th Nov.

25. Commenting on the report of the Select Committee of the Bombay Legislative Council on the Bill to provide for the extension of primary education in municipal districts in the Bombay Presidency other than the City of Bombay, the Jám-e-Jámshed hopes that the changes made by the Select Committee in the original Bill will meet with the approval of the people of the Presidency. In view of the financial condition of the large majority of the people in the districts, the paper welcomes the amendment which seeks to make compulsory primary education free. It observes that the liberal spirit with which Government have allowed the section to be expunged from the Bill, which exempted the Provincial revenues from any additional burden incidental to making primary education free and compulsory, will spread great joy among the public. It supports the Honourable Rao Bahadur Sathe's suggestion to keep the cases of failure to attend school outside the jurisdiction of magistrates' courts in order to prevent compulsory education from being made unpopular. In view of the steady rise in the demand of labour, both agricultural and industrial, the paper declares itself to be in accord with the view held by the Honourable Mr. Chunilal Mehta and the Honourable Rao Bahadur Sathe against a complete prohibition of children of school-going age from employment and remarks that the question should be viewed not from the standpoint of idealists but from that of practical persons. [The Surat Akhbár believes that the provision in the Bill prohibiting children under the age of 11 years from all sort of employment will greatly handicap children of the lower classes from acquiring technical knowledge of various arts and crafts calculated to prove helpful to them in after life. The paper is also against making primary education free and observes that such a system will tend to make people less and less self-reliant.]

EDUCATION.

Problem of Urdu teaching in the Bombay Presidency.

Islámic Mail (4), 4th Nov., Eng. edition.

26. In the course of the third instalment of its article on Urdu teaching in the Bombay Presidency, the Islámic Mail writes :—"The decision of Government has come as a surprise to many of us. Indeed Government have taken a difficult position. Side by side with the growth of national spirit the need for a common or national language is being felt more keenly every day. Mussalmans all over India are adopting it and such outlying provinces as Burma and Madras are opening up special Urdu schools, although the Urdu speaking population there does not bear any comparison whatever with the huge mass of population in this presidency which not only speak but use Urdu. The movement for the promotion and development of Urdu is spreading fast and even in such tracts as may be said to have dropped Urdu, people are striving to push it on.......... The Government has not been able to find one single representative Moslem institution disavowing the need for Urdu being the medium of instruction. Even the straw to which they cling, the Anjuman-i-Islam, Kolába, declared Urdu to be the medium of religious instruction and to be the language in which the social functions were performed.......... Muhammadan representatives in the Council and outside it are clamouring for it, and we understand resolutions were proposed, by Muhammadan members of Council, in favour of Urdu, but they could not be introduced being time barred. Almost all the representative Muhammadan institutions are demanding it, the Committee of educationists appointed by Government to deal with the subject urge it to be the medium of instruction, and yet Government have formed the curious and inconsistent conclusion that it is not wanted by the Muhammadans in this Presidency. The Government appear to be under a strange delusion as regards the language requirements of the people. They ignored all the clamour in favour of Modi till at last they were disillusioned by their defeat in the Council. The Muhammadans are unfortunately not so strong as the Hindu community and cannot bring Government to their knees as the supporters of Modi have done. But will not the Government be pleased to generously climb down from their high altitude and give sympathetic attention to the universal demand of the Moslem Community? We are obliged for their generous regard for Muhammadan advancement and appreciate their good intentions to give the Muhammadans equal opportunities of getting the billets in the subordinate service by acquiring the vernacular of the district without being handicapped by the burden of Urdu.........

We admit that a knowledge of the vernacular of the district is essential, nay, indispensable. But the best way to tide over the difficulty is to follow the practice in vogue in private maktabs and institutions. Let Urdu be the principal language and the vernacular of the district the second language.........
It is always easy for a Commissioner or a Collector to find one or two Muhammadans to support his views whether against Urdu or even against religion. Our leaders share the general degeneration of the community and would say any thing to please the powers that be. But it is not commensurate with the liberality and public-spiritedness of Government to take advantage of our weakness and create obstacles in the realisation of our national aims. Arabic and Persian have passed away and there only remains Urdu to teach our boys the rudiments of religion, and will Government take that away? But as a friend pointed out, now that the all-powerful Home Rule League organ has taken up the case of Urdu supported by the Times of India the chances are that Government will have to climb down."

Primary education in Bombay City.
Bombay Samáchár (60), 17th Nov.

27. Referring to the scheme framed by the Bombay Municipal Schools' Committee on the subject of the extension and improvement of primary education in Bombay, in the course of which the Committee has urged upon the Bombay Corporation the supreme necessity of ultimately making elementary education free and compulsory in the city, the Bombay Samáchár expresses its strong belief that the Corporation will not fail to give due respect to this weighty opinion of the Schools' Committee which was composed of experienced and farsighted educationists. It regards as practical the recommendation made by the Committee for levying a small Education Cess on landed property to meet the increased expenditure involved in carrying out the proposals it has made. The paper expresses the hope that, in spite of the provisions of the Bombay Municipal Act of 1888 which enacts that Government would contribute their share in the increased expenditure incurred by the Bombay Municipality on primary education if the Municipality made it free or free and compulsory at the instance of Government, the latter will help to make this great and laudable scheme of education successful by extending to it their pecuniary assistance.

Complaint about the stringent application of the Students' Circular in the Bombay Presidency.
Young India (14), 14th Nov.

28. "We think the time has come for entering our emphatic protest against the arbitrary manner in which the 'Students and Politics' Circular is being applied. From a letter which the Secretary of the last Gujarat Educational Conference, Broach, received from the Secretary to Government, Educational Department, it becomes painfully evident that the authorities, not content with fostering indirectly unrest among the students, their parents and guardians, are determined to carry their hostile demonstration against public meetings whether they be political, educational, social or economic, to its legitimate conclusion. At the last session of the Educational Conference which met under the presidency of Mr. Gandhi, the students of Broach were prevented from taking part even as volunteers. An appeal to the Private Secretary to the Governor was referred back to the Department, with the result that the Secretary of the Conference was informed as politely as official etiquette would allow that Government saw no reason to interfere with the decision of such an infallible officer as the Director of Public Instruction!"

The Central Provinces Government and students.
Indu Prakásh (40), 10th, 12th and 13th Nov.

29. The authorities have taken out of their armoury the famous Risley Circular and have made it more deadly. We are constrained to say that the Educational authorities in the Central Provinces did not display any far-sightedness in closing the schools and colleges. They could have solved this question by taking the guardians of the students into their confidence. The students, however, were not well-advised in taking the extreme step of striking. [In its subsequent issues the paper remarks:—The administration of India is carried on by a handful of men coming from England. The decisions arrived at by the Local and Supreme Governments and their councils become operative whatever people may think about them. The regrettable events in the Central Provinces have resulted from the authorities overlooking the fact that even the tender hearts of students possess the spark of patriotism. The poor students are accused of taking too much part in politics. But why should this disturb anyone? Such occurrences only betoken the awakening of a nation.]

Subodh Patrika (43), 11th Nov., Eng. cols.

30. "The reply given by the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces to the considered representation of the Nagpur Graduates' Association, regarding what we cannot but describe as the oppression of the students by German disciplinarian regulations about attending public meetings, is disappointing in the extreme. The Honourable Mr. Slocock's main argument seems to be that there is nothing new in these regulations and that they were promulgated ten years ago. But bad laws do not become good by lapse of time. What was a bad law ten years ago is indeed a worse one to-day, as India has not stood still for the past decade, as even the most sun-dried bureaucrat will admit. The student classes have shared in the general advancement. There is a new spirit among them such as never animated them in previous years. To attempt to bottle up this new spirit is a most grievous error, as the history of political anarchism in Bengal has proved conclusively."

MUNICIPALITIES.

Storage of cinema films in Bombay.
Indu Prakásh (40), 13th Nov.; Rást Goftár* (31), 18th Nov., Eng. cols.

31. The recent outbreak of fire at the Ekadashi building in Girgaum is supposed to be due to an explosion caused by cinema films. It is much to be regretted that within six months of the disastrous fire at Prag Mahal there should be another outbreak due to the same cause, viz., the storage of cinema films. There was considerable discussion at the time about the desirability of allowing cinema films to be stored in tenanted buildings. Who is responsible for this state of things? Why is the Bombay Municipality apathetic in this matter? It is surely time that drastic steps were taken to prevent similar disasters in future. If the Bombay Municipality will not bestir itself redress must be sought from other quarters. [The Rást Goftár writes:—"It is almost criminal to allow such a state of things to continue, and the Bombay Corporation should take steps without delay to prevent a further recurrence of these tragic accidents.......... The danger is quite preventible, for if it is laid down under the municipal regulations or bye-laws that no inflammable material is to be stored in any part of a house the upper floors of which are used for residential purposes, people living in Bombay houses could go about their business and sleep at nights with a sense of safety.......... Accordingly, we call upon the Corporation and appeal to the Government of Bombay to take early steps and introduce legislation if necessary to prohibit absolutely the storage of inflammable articles in houses in which a large number of people live, move and have their being."]

Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 12th Nov.

32. The Jám-e-Jamshed remarks that the public are entitled to demand from the owner of the Ekadashi Building as well as the Municipal authorities an explanation as to why, after the Prag Mahal fire incident, a portion of the said building, which was inhabited by a large number of tenants, was allowed to be used as a shop for storing cinematograph films. It also refers to the alleged delay that took place before the fire escape arrived at the scene of the present fire. As a few safeguards against similar incidents taking place in the future, the paper suggests that the storing of dangerous goods, such as cinema films, on the ground floors of buildings occupied by tenants should be prohibited; that the proprietors of such shops should be compelled to keep the films in fire proof boxes; that the shops should be located as far as possible from staircases; that they should be fitted with automatic sprinklers; and that the owners of large buildings should be compelled to provide two fireproof staircases for their buildings instead of the single ordinary ones as at present.

Gujaráti (17), 18th Nov., Eng. cols.

33. "The Ekadashi building was insured and the house owner is safe. So is the proprietor of the films in whose premises the fire is said to have first broken out. But the tenants have heavily suffered. Their only consolation is that their lives have been saved by Providence, though some of them have received very serious injuries. General sympathy is being felt for the unfortunate sufferers. But that is not enough. In an overcrowded city like Bombay the public ought to insist that every house should be provided with an external staircase or with staircases of stone as suggested by the Chief Officer, and that fire escapes are brought on the scene of fire as quickly as the fire engines. With regard to the storage of cinema films, the Municipal Act ought to be amended to bring it under more effective control and the existing provisions of the Act more vigilantly enforced than they have been hitherto. We hope the Municipal authorities, the City Improvement Trust and Government will not delay the adoption of suitable preventive and protective measures until the occurrence of a more frightful tragedy in the native quarters of the city. It is a shame and disgrace that in a city like Bombay even common-sense precautions are not rigorously enforced in the construction of even huge buildings or of buildings raised on plots leased from the City Improvement Trust. Its career has hitherto shown that it is a body without a soul, otherwise it would have first endeavoured to remove the slums from the city and shown greater solicitude for the safety of the people than for the external appearance of the buildings occupied by them. The Bombay Municipality also has not been as vigilant and exacting as it should have been in dealing with those who store inflammable materials in buildings occupied by tenants. Government, too, have taken an unconscionably long time in amending the Municipal Act as suggested by the Corporation."

Complaints against the Ahmedabad Municipality.

Hindusthán (21), 11th Nov.

34. A correspondent of the Hindusthán complains that in spite of the increasing death-rate due to plague in Ahmedabad the Health Department takes great pains to persuade people to get themselves inoculated, while neglecting to clean insanitary areas and thus allowing plague to play havoc with the lives of the poor people. He suggests that some of the very insanitary and filthy areas might be set fire to and burnt down. He further suggests that the mills should be closed so that the poor people may be forced to go out of the city. He complains of the inconvenience felt by the people of the city in the matter of water-supply, which is very deficient after 11 A. M., and suggests that some arrangement may be made to meet the requirements of the people. He also complains about the choking up of the drains, which he ascribes to the neglect of the Engineering and Drainage Departments.

NATIVE STATES.

Comments on the general strike at Wadhwán (Káthiáwár).

Young India (14), 14th Nov.

35. "A Wadhwán subject" writes in Young India :—"It is now over a month and a half since the business people of Wadhwán city suspended their business as a protest against the arbitrary and highhanded administration of the State by Mr. Kadri.......... It is evident that the Administrator was altogether unprepared for such a result from his unjust interference with the time-honoured customs and usages. He seems to have been so infuriated at the audacity of seven-eighths of the people passively resisting in a body his mandate, that he has tried various methods to break down the spirit of the opposition. All these have failed as they deserved to. And having failed in his half-hearted attempts to conciliate the great body of public opinion, Mr. Kadri set about discovering other means and has in effect dismissed some of the old and trusted officers of the State and compelled them to withdraw from the State, without any rhyme or reason. In other ways, too, he is harassing, I hear, those whom he regards as the prominent people in the city and their relations and dependants in a manner that is not easy to believe. The pity of it is that the Agent to the Governor who is the immediate authority over Mr. Kadri seems to have been entirely misled by the interested misrepresentations of the latter to believe that the people are in the wrong and the Administrator is in the right. Representations made by the people have been ignored by Mr. Maconochie and this has accentuated the feeling of anxiety and apprehension that exists among them already. I am not at all surprised that Mr. Maconochie should be indifferent to the complaints of the people. For, according to my information, he was responsible for forcing Mr. Kadri on the choice of the Local Government, and naturally, therefore, his sympathies would be with Mr. Kadri. Besides, the failure of repeated representations to His Excellency the Governor, made by the citizens of Wadhwán resident in Bombay, must have led both the 'superior' and 'inferior' authority to think that the central Government does not care a jot for the grievances and complaints of the people. On the other hand, the people have further strengthened their resolve not to resume business until the provocative orders against processions, etc., have been withdrawn. In this resolve they have the whole-hearted support of the Khoja Muhammadans, who are at one with their Hindu fellow-subjects in disapproving of the action of the Administrator. The Khoja Muhammadans, who form a small but important part of the business community of Wadhwán, have passed a resolution against any one of their members resuming business, until the whole community has resumed business."

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 23rd November 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 47 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 24th November 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION —

British rule :

Comments on a case of outrage due to the fanaticism of the Borah community of Ujjain (Central India) 19
Comments on an alleged insult to a Pathan by an Anglo-Indian in a Railway train at Ráwalpindi Station 20
Comments on Mr. Montagu's programme in India 14
Comments on the Bombay Presidency Association's memorial to the Secretary of State 2
Comments on the demands of the Moslem League meeting at Lucknow 15
Comments on the joint scheme of reforms drafted by some Indians and Europeans at Calcutta . . . . 11 & 12
Comments on the proposed Committee to inquire into the cases of persons interned under the Defence of India Act in Bengal . . 18
Comments on the recent pronouncements of Sir Valentine Chirol and Sir Bamfylde Fuller on the question of Home Rule for India . 16
Comments on the Secretary of State's reply declining the invitation to attend the next session of the National Congress . . . 13
Government should ask Mr. V. R. Shinde to sever his connection with the Depressed Classes Mission 10
Lingayats and the reforms 9
Muhammadans and the forthcoming political reforms 3
The backward classes and the reforms 8
The bureaucracy is the representative of Kultur and the cause of most of the ills in India . . . .
The Cotton Commission is sitting for the good of Lancashire, not India 17
The Parsi memorial regarding communal representation to the Secretary of State . . . . 4—7
Excise : Complaint about the high price of salt 25
Indian Press : The policy of the Young India newspaper 23
Public Service : Alleged failure of Mr. B. N. Athavle as a Presidency Magistrate, Bombay 24
War : Comments on the progress of the — . . . . 21—22

H 362—a CON

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

LEGISLATION—

The Honourable Mr. Patel's compulsory Education Bill 26

MUNICIPALITIES—

Ahmedabad : Alleged gross neglect of sanitation by the municipal authorities of — 29
Bombay : Grievances of people frequenting the Kennedy Sea Face . . 28
Comments on the recent orders of Government conferring on all City Municipalities the right of electing their presidents 27

NATIVE STATES—

Comments on the Wadhwán strike 30

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

The bureaucracy is the representative of Kultur and the cause of most of the ills in India.

New Times (7), 17th Nov.

1. "The bureaucracy in India have been the partisans of Kultur; they have been anxious to assure 'the greatness' of the official class, to identify that class with the State, to stifle the national ideal of liberty, the prevent India from entering into the Modern Movement of Freedom. What has been the result? Indians, with a few exceptions are not, even when qualified, allowed to have high offices lest 'homogeneity' at the top be disturbed! Indian talent is not pressed in the service of the administration; anti-English (?) colour-bar is scrupulously maintained; an economic policy, in the name of a free trade which has not been fair to the claims of Indian industry, throws the stupendous 'white man's burden' on the people; the men and women are stricken with the weight of poverty rather than of years; there are very few who got two meals a day; 'the hungry look up and are not fed'; the painful story of famine and plague and cholera and malaria is repeated year after year; and any casual visitor to India has only to look into the faces of the labourer, the peasant, the boy in the school or the street, the clerk in the office, to understand that the bureaucracy have been so 'efficient' that the very physical vitality of this ancient People is progressively declining. The bureaucracy represent Kultur; the National Ideal is one of Civilization, the Ideal of self-realisation for the service of man. The struggle between the bureaucracy and the people is, thus, inevitable; it is a struggle between privilege and freedom, between vested interests and the People's happiness, between oligarchy and democracy. It is not a struggle for some posts, some offices for educated India; it is a struggle of National Freedom against the decrees and demands of a bureaucratic system of Government."

Comments on the Bombay Presidency Association's memorial to the Secretary of State.

Sánj Vartamán (32), 20th Nov.; Bombay Samáchár (60), 21st Nov.

2. The Sánj Vartamán strongly supports the Bombay Presidency Association's memorial to the Viceroy and the Secretary of State for India. It regards it as a very weighty political document and hopes that it will produce a deep impression upon the mind of Mr. Montagu. The paper gathers from the memorial that the demands made by the Indian National Congress and the Moslem League in 1917 are substantially the same as those that Bombay had made in the year 1852. It then writes:—The Indian public have been waiting for these same political reforms for a period of 65 years. During this period a vast change has been brought about in the education and sentiments of the people, and the Indians will be completely disappointed if they are still told that they should advance slowly. They have observed patience for the last 65 years and it is only the people of India that can exercise such commendable patience. Those who belittle the reforms suggested in the Congress-League scheme by characterising them as "catastrophic" and "hasty" betray their ignorance of the political history of this country. [The Bombay Samáchár regards the memorial of the Bombay Presidency Association as a document embodying thoughtful, relevant and practical suggestions. It prays that the outlines of provincial autonomy to be introduced in India that have been laid down in the memorial will receive the serious consideration they deserve. The paper remarks that the Presidency Association has rendered a valuable service not only to the people of Bombay but to the people of the whole of India by showing through its present memorial how the interests of all parties and communities could be effectually safeguarded in the matter of representation, and hopes that it will help to impress upon the minds of the opponents of the Congress-League scheme and upon the mind of Mr. Montagu the practical nature of that scheme.]

Muhammadans and the forthcoming political reforms.

Islámic Mail (4), 18th Nov., Eng. edition.

3. "The Secretary of State is to receive a deputation of Mr. Wazir Hasan's League this week and his party is mustering in full strength to make a great show so far as we know (and it is not always easy to know the doings of this League as it usually works behind the Purdah). They propose to submit the same scheme on behalf of the Mussalmans as was settled between them and their monitors in the Congress camp. The League has lost its all-India character and represents only a clique whose working has been admirably illustrated by the Pioneer in an article which we publish on the next page. An all-India deputation of Mussalmans was therefore a great necessity and we are glad to learn that Nawab Ishaq Khan, Honorary Secretary of the M. A. O. College, Aligarh, is arranging for one.......... His scheme of reform which has been drafted by Saikh Abdullah of Aligarh is a comprehensive scheme based on the principle we have been so strenuously advocating, viz., one-third share for the Mussalmans in every public body, Councils, District Boards, Government service or Universities.......... We could understand the Hindu objection to this arrangement if they were prepared to make any concession whatever. If they had agreed to give equal shares to us in all the Provinces, then we would have understood their objection to a Muhammadan majority in Eastern Bengal, the Punjáb and the Frontier Provinces. They want us to make the sacrifice without giving us anything in return. The best scheme that suggests to us is that there should be three equal shares allotted to Hindus, Mahammadans and other minorities such as Christians, Europeans, Parsis, &c., &c. Let Hindus get one-third as their share, one-third should go to Muslims, one-third should go to other important minorities according to the population of the Provinces. This will keep the balance of power between the two communities and work as a lever against the aggressive tendencies of either. Where the two parties differ the third party will throw its weight to maintain the equilibrium. But it is essential that this allotment of power should operate all through the various ramifications of administration. It should embrace not only the Legislative Councils but public services, universities, local self-government and wherever authority may be vested in the hands of popular representatives. Our one great complaint is that our proportion in the Provincial Service, which is the pivot upon which the whole administrative machinery revolves, is inadequate, in fact the absence of Muhammadan element from it jeopardises Muhammadan interests. We confess, however, we do not understand the claims of certain sects among the Hindus for separate representation. The non-Brahmins or Sikhs are pure Hindus and as such they are entered in the Census Reports. They are a part of the great Hindu community and if their point of distinction is only that they are untouchables then every sect will claim differential treatment as one sect is regarded as untouchable by another sect. If so, the Shias will get up and claim separate representation and so will the Sunnis, Wahabis, Ahmadiyas and diverse other sects whose creeds differ so materially from each other."

The Parsi memorial regarding communal representation to the Secretary of State.

Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 19th Nov.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 20th Nov.

4. Referring to the announcement in the Times of India regarding the Parsi memorial to be presented by Sir Jamsetji Jeejibhoy, Bart., and other Parsis, to His Excellency the Viceroy and the Right Honourable E. S. Montagu, Secretary of State for India, the Jám-e-Jámshed considers it necessary emphatically to declare, in order to avoid all possible misunderstanding, that this memorial is not a memorial of the Parsi community, that it has not been submitted on behalf of the Pársi community and that the community has never been consulted by anybody in connection therewith. It further adds that the Pársi community and its respected leaders, i.e., the Trustees of the Parsi Punchayat as such, have in fact, been excluded from preparing the memorial and that the community as a whole has nothing to do with it.

[The Praja Mitra and Pársi remarks that the opposition raised in some quarters against the memorial on the ground of the alleged insult to the Pársi community and the Trustees is ill-founded inasmuch as four out of the seven Trustees of the Punchayat are included in the deputation which is going to submit the memorial to Mr. Montagu. It observes that it is expressly stated in the memorial that it represents the views of Sir Jamsetji and other signatories thereto and adds that the Secretary of State for India will attach as much importance as the number of those signatories and the prestige of the leading men among them will merit.]

Sánj Vartamán (32), 19th Nov., Eng. cols.

5. "The memorandum drawn up by Sir Jamsetji Jeejeebhoy and other leading Parsis on the question of communal representation, and to be submitted to the Secretary of State for India, has set many throughtful minds a thinking within the community. Without a doubt the question is a serious one and deserves consideration without passion and without heat. Mr. S. R. Bomanji the other day tried to decry the movement and spoke heatedly on the subject. We are afraid this line of conduct will not in any way facilitate the solution of the question which after all like all other questions has two sides. It ought also to be remembered that the clause of communal representation is still standing on the statute book and that, in spite of the awakening of the enlightened minds amongst the community, on the basis of this clause, Muhammadan elections to the councils take place. Now let us admit that we are not the lovers of this clause. But when all is said and done, we come to the conclusion that it is after all a necessary evil. In the consideration of questions of national importance abstruse questions of mere sentiment ought not to be allowed to intrude. Facts are to be looked at straight in the face and, taking our position from this standpoint, we are bound to admit that this necessary evil—we mean this clause of communal representation—is bound to prevail at least for some time. We must confess that in our present stage of political development, communal representation for safeguarding the rights of important minorities must still hold the ground for some time yet. We believe that in the new India of the future it is most essential that the Parsis, both for themselves and for the country, should have an ample representation commensurate to the community's status, intelligence and past services. Now to express an opinion on this most important question the community has every right. We most emphatically declare that the community had no opportunity to exercise this right. We deny the right of 'Sir Jamsetji and other Parsis' to speak on behalf of Parsis unless they had a mandate from the community, which could only be given by a special meeting of the whole Anjuman convened by the Trustees of the Punchayat. Sir Jamsetjee and his friends, influential or otherwise, have every right to meet in a hole-and-corner meeting and send any representation to Government. But let it be understood once and for all that these worthies represent their own worthy selves only. Nothing more, nothing less."

Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 21st Nov., Eng. cols.

6. "We very much regret that some of our contemporaries should have thought fit to raise a storm over the proposed Parsi memorial to Mr. Montagu. The memorial does not profess to be a memorial of the whole Parsi community. It is explicitly stated in the very beginning that it is 'the humble memorial of Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy and other members of the Parsi community'. If the Times of India, or any other paper, chooses to call it the memorial of the Parsi community, how are the memorialists responsible for that? As a matter of fact, all that even the Times of India says is that the memorial is to be presented by Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy and other Parsis, 'on behalf of their community'. And that is true in the sense that the memorial is intended to obtain a benefit or a privilege for the Parsi community. The memorial is made on behalf of the community, even though those who are to present it may not have been formally authorised by the community to do so. The efforts of the memorialists are on behalf of the community. Even a single individual may address a memorial to Govenment on behalf of a whole community. What weight to attach to such a memorial lies with Government."

Rast Goftar (31), 25th Nov., Eng. cols.

7. "Is it any use squabbling over the deputation which will be headed by Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy and will wait on the Viceroy and the Secretary of State for India?......... Is it desirable or not that the Parsis as a community should press their claims on the Secretary of State for India? To this question there can be only one answer and it is in the affirmative. That being so has any other attempt been made, except that of Sir Jamsetjee, to get up a representation and deputation? If not, who is to blame? There is yet time to call a meeting of the community and associate other leaders with the Parsi Baronet and modify the nature of the representation if that happens to be the opinion of the majority. But merely to sit on the fence and to fling stones cannot be considered a public service to the community."

The backward classes and the reforms.

Kesari (106), 20th Nov.; Dnyán Prakásh (37), 23rd and 24th Nov.

8. Communities that were perfectly indifferent to politics so long and have made no sacrifices till now for the sake of politics, or their self-constituted leaders, have begun to make wild demands on their behalf. It is satisfactory to note, however, that the dog in the manger policy is possessed by very few heroes or communities. Is it not the misfortune of the country that there should be some at least who would not hesitate to cut their own noses in order to spite others? But though these mean-minded and envious few may kick the celestial cow of swarájya, nobody, we hope, will form wrong views about these communities from these instances. The huge mass meetings in Bombay and Poona supported the Congress-League scheme. Hole and corner meetings attended by about a hundred persons were held in opposition. But people know how to value these meetings. The All-India Maratha Conference of Belgaum and the Athani (Belgaum) District Conference adopted a reasonable attitude. It has been proved that in Karnátak as well as in Maháráshtra, there is no opposition to the demand of swarájya and that the masses do not insist upon caste-electorates. Some wanted to sow seeds of opposition in Gujarát but they failed. The Jain and Parsi communities have disapproved of communal elections. In Northern India also no question of communal elections has been raised. The whole of India, excepting a few self-constituted and mischievous leaders in Maháráshtra and four or five meetings attended by a handful of persons and engineered by them, supports the Congress-League scheme. There should be extension of suffrage so that all may take advantage of the reforms and Proportional Representation as suggested by the Honourable Mr. Paranjpye may also be adopted. If caste-electorates are insisted upon our Legislative Councils will not be composed of able and select men, but they will only be ridiculous museums of the castes and sub-castes in India. [The paper here refers to the proceedings of a Belgaum public meeting under the presidentship of Mr. Ankale, a Jain, condemning caste-electorates.] Swarájya will benefit mercantile classes like Jains, Lingayats, Marwaris and Gujaratis more than Brahmins. In India power is centred in the hands of three British bureaucracies, political, commercial and military. Nine Indians have been admitted into the military bureaucracy, but the commercial bureaucracy is intact. If this commercial monopoly is broken by Swarájya, Indian merchants will be greatly benefited. [The Dnyán Prakásh suggests that some arrangements should be made for the representation of backward and depressed classes in the Legislative Councils. It adds:—Though special electorates are objectionale the Congress has accepted them, so far as Muhammadans are concerned. The Honourable Mr. Paranjpye suggests the adoption of Proportional Representation in order to provide for non-Brahmins, but he thinks that some seats should be reserved for backward classes. It is possible that the backward classes will give up their insistence on special electorates, if they find that a reasonable number of their representatives are returned. Brahmins also may themselves set a limit to their number of representatives in the Council. The Honourable Mr. Shastri has suggested such a self-denying ordinance in the case of Madras. Though it is not necessary to use such stringent measures in this Presidency it is necessary that Brahmins should allow non-Brahmins to share their powers. In its issue of the 24th the paper condemns non-Brahmin leaders for not supporting the Congress-League scheme. It expresses its surprise that non-Brahmins do not give their consent to the scheme, subject to such conditions as they may think it necessary to lay down to safeguard their interests.]

Lingáyats and the reforms.

Karnátak Vaibhav (82), 20th Nov., Eng. cols.

9. "We regret to learn that some of the Lingayats of Bijápur have decided to ask for communal representation through separate electorates on the ground that their community is an important minority. The hollowness of this plea is revealed by resolutions of their own community elsewehere and it is not a fact that compared to the Brahmin or any other sub-community of the Hindu society they are numerically weaker. Yet these our Lingayat friends, who must be pretending to represent their community, take pleasure in echoing the cry of separate representation which is raised in some parts of the country and create a discordant note in the universal demand for political reforms......... We are pained to learn that they have further exhibited their wisdom by receding from the Congress-League scheme and raised the standard of 'not yet' and 'step by step,' a hateful phraseology in our current politics.......... It may be that they laboured under the unfounded apprehensions of a possible supremacy of the Brahmin or other educated community if reforms under the joint scheme be granted and have been therefore led to take this contemptible course of minimising the value of the country's demand for political reforms. All this, however, betrays a littleness of mind which is deplorable in a great community like the Lingayat and we believe that all this is the activity of only a few busybodies and that the contagion has not affected the whole community."

Government should ask Mr. V. R. Shinde to sever his connection with the Depressed Classes Mission.

Jágaruk (102), 18th Nov., Eng. cols.

*10. "Mr. V. R. Shinde of the Despressed Classes Mission is now a confirmed Home Ruler. At Athani he made a public declaration to the effect. But he is not merely a Home-Ruler; he is dead opposed to any scheme of special representation of the Backward Classes!...... The only obstacle in the way of Mr. V. R. Shinde is in our opinion the Mission. It prevents him from becoming a second Tilak or Besant! We humbly propose that the Government should free him from the shackles of the Mission, which is no proper field for a man of Mr. Shinde's patriotism and political dash (!) We, therefore, insist that the Government ougth to implore him to give up his connection with the Mission, which is only a deadweight on the neck of his roaring ambition. When Mrs. Besant turned politician and joined the extremist party, the whole organisation of the Theosophical Society was transformed into an association for decrying the Government and demanding complete Home Rule! Mr. Shinde perhaps thought that he would be able to do the same in the case of the depressed classes. But the memories of these people proved more tenacious than those of the high-class theosophists; and they found it impossible to forget the warning that Mr. Shinde had so often administered to them that the 'Untouchables' ought to remain aloof from political agitation! The depressed population in all places has declared itself against Home Rule—even the Bombay people, whom the Swarajists tried in vain to hoodwink into giving a consent to the Congress-Scheme."

Comments on the joint scheme of reforms drafted by some Indians and Europeans of Calcutta.

Mahrátta (5), 25th Nov.

*11. "It agrees with the Congress-League scheme in some respects, as we shall show, but differs from it in many important particulars. It has one recommendatory feature that it is supported by no less than 14 Anglo-Indians, and from the close resemblance of it with Mr. Curtis's scheme in his studies it appears that he has drafted it. If it be so, then the 'Round Table' organisation is likely to vote for it. Sir Hugh Bray also says that the proposals 'seems to him to offer a fair basis for a scheme of constitutional change'. In view of the fact that the European interests are likely to weigh more with the Cabinet and Parliament, the support of such men is certainly invaluable. We cannot, however, assume at present that the European Association will approve of it in toto, perhaps they may even reject it. .... To put the matter in a nutshell, the Congress-League scheme and the new scheme agree in respect of the number and personnel of the excutive of the quasi-representative Governments, the non-official character of the Imperial and Provincial legislatures, and the grant of powers of criticism on army, navy and other matters even as in the Congress-League scheme. The new scheme is in advance of the Congress-League scheme in respect of making a tiny provincial government genuinely responsible to a separate, directly elected legislature within certain limits. In all other matters the Congress-League scheme is far in advance of the new scheme and as such Congressmen will certainly hesitate to accept it. However, if the framers of the new scheme would see their way to submit it to the Congress and if the two schemes are fused together, then the product will certainly be better than any one of them."

Dnydn Prakdsh (37), 21st Nov.

12. As Mr. Lionel Curtis' preposterous scheme of giving self-government to India by compartments had already made a little headway and also secured the adherence of some influential Indians, its exposure by the Honourable Mr. Shastri must be considered opportune. The simple fact that the Madras Mail has lent its support to this scheme is enough to convince anyone of its utter worthlessness. However attractive it may appear to be on the surface it will hardly confer any real power on the Indians. The Hindu of Madras clearly showed how worthless the present project appears to be when compared with the Congress-League Reform scheme and we imagined that the views expressed by this paper would find universal acceptance. We are, however, disappointed to find that the recent conferences of Europeans and Indians at Darjeeling and Calcutta have decided to support Mr. Curtis' scheme. It is surprising that its glaring drawbacks should escape the notice of men like Sir K. G. Gupta and others and we are confident that it will not meet with the approval of the Congress. We do not think that the Congress will ever consent to an arrangement under which the autocratic powers of the Government of India are confirmed and Indians are debarred from having any share in the administration of the principal departments of State in exchange for the doubtful privilege of controlling some minor departments. It would be most undesirable to mutilate our scheme of swardjya in the pursuit of this policy of conciliating the fastidious Anglo-Indians.

Comments on the Secretary of State's reply declining the invitation to attend the next session of the National Congress.

Young India (14), 21st Nov.

13. "Agreeably to the tour programme drawn up for him by his bureaucratic counsellors, Mr. Montagu has declined the invitation to attend the next session of the Congress. Of course, as our contemporary of the Bombay Chronicle, has remarked, if the Secretary of State were master of his own movements, he would have surely acted differently and would have been glad to avail himself of the invaluable opportunity afforded by the invitation. But in these days, even the 'Great Moguls' of the India Office seem to have become the dutiful servants of the bureaucracy, ever ready to obey their infallible and irrepressible mandates. It is to put it very mildly to say that his declining the invitation has caused disappointment among Indians. On the other hand, we think every self-respecting Indian will strongly resent it as he believes that this obvious discourtesy to Indian opinion is due to the interference of his bureaucratic guardians. We hope that this reply will not be taken as 'a settled fact' and that some of our leaders will impress him with the necessity of reconsidering his reply, which might otherwise give rise to feelings of bitter disappointment and indignation among Indians."

Comments on Mr. Montagu's programme in India.

Kesari (106), 20th Nov.

14. We do not think that a public reception of Mr. Montagu would have spoiled the policy of the Government of India. It is proper and reasonable that the Secretary of State should not give any public promise while in India. But we think it unreasonable that such a distinguished guest should not be allowed to be publicly honoured by the citizens. Mr. Montagu's programme was so arranged that he could not visit the Congress and a special invitation to that effect has been refused. What more proof of his subjection is needed than that he cannot even offer formal thanks to those who wait upon him? Though Mr. Montagu's tongue is not free, he has control over his brains and mind and when he goes back to England, we shall have a declaration showing the effect of Indian influences over him. We wish him a safe return and we hope that he will properly decide about the demand of Swarájya with a generosity natural to him when he will be free from the bureaucratic guard.

Comments on the demands of the Moslem League meeting at Lucknow.

Kesari (106), 20th Nov.; Sandesh (116), 18th Nov.; Dnyán Prakásh (37), 21st Nov.

15. In order to make up the split between the two principal Indian communities the Congress took up a conciliatory attitude and did not object to special Muhammadan electorates and allowed them more representation than was warranted by their population in some Provinces. Muhammadans were thus satisfied and the scheme of Swarájya gained universal support. But lured by this gift Muhammadans are becoming more and more grasping in their demands, and they want half the number of Executive Councillors, Under Secretaries and members of the Secretary of State's Council to be Muhammadans. Not content with this demand, the members of the Moslem League meeting at Lucknow did not feel any scruples to ask that Muhammadans only should be allowed to bear arms in those Provinces putting forth the Bakr-Id Riots as a plea! The demand shows one-sided partiality and it is insulting to the Hindus. The demand that there should be a mixed committee of Europeans and Muhammadans to inquire into the Arrah riots and that no Hindu should be included in the commission, has completely shattered the Hindu-Muhammadan entente. It is the height of selfishness to appeal on the one hand for the co-operation of the Hindus to agitate for the release of the Ali Brothers and to exercise pressure on Government in that connection and on the other to demand that Hindus should have nothing to do with the Arrah Commission of inquiry. We have only to say that Muhammadans are not in their senses and are raving anything they like, influenced as they are by the news of the recent riots. When this mood passes away, we may take it that the members of the Moslem League will again recover their balance of judgment. Nobody should think that they are giving vent to their settled opinions now, when they have become wild. [The Sandesh writes in a similar strain and regrets that Muhammadans have made baseless charges against Hindu leaders and suggests that Hindu and Muhammadan leaders should themselves control the ignorant masses of both the communities and declares that Government orders cannot bring about a union of both the communities. The Dnyán Prakásh writes:—Demands put forward by the Lucknow meeting are most unjust and will never be accepted by the other communities. In order to enlist the co-operation of our Muhammadan brethren the Congress not only admitted the principle of communal representation but also consented to the Muhammadans being represented in the Legislative Councils in a proportion largely in excess of their actual numbers. Their present demands are, therefore, not only improper but ludicrous. Unless the sensible section of Muhammadan opinion disavows these exaggerated claims the unity which has so far been achieved stands in danger of destruction. We trust that contingency will not arise.]

Comments on the recent pronouncements of Sir Valentine Chirol and Sir Bampfylde Fuller on the question of Home Rule for India.

Kesari (106), 20th Nov.

16. The Kesari considers that a new era has dawned in politics and refers to the recent pronouncements on the political situation by Sir Valentine Chirol and Sir Bampfylde Fuller. It quotes Sir Valentine's criticism that the Home Rule movement has not yet spread to the villages, and exhorts the Home Rule Leagues to take heed of the warning and work hard. It admits the truth of the criticism of Sir Valentine that political agitators can suggest nothing beneficial to the ryots when they visit villages, but it remarks that the Home Rule movement need not stop till such well-versed agitators are found. It further holds that the agriculturists realise that more agricultural reforms will take place under swarájya than is the case now. Though Mahatma Gandhi knows nothing of indigo plantation, it continues, his recent agitation has had a value of its own. It opines that it is more practicable for the agriculturist to become a Home Ruler than for a Home Ruler to become an agriculturist. It exhorts villagers to remove the illusion of Sir Valentine Chirol that agriculturists are not Home Rulers.

The Cotton Commission is sitting for the good of Lancashire, not India.

Gujaráti (17), 18th Nov.

17. In whose interest is the Cotton Commission working? Since there are no mills in India which can use long staple cotton the inquiry is of no use to India. In fact the inquiry is not being made in the interests of India or Indian mills, but because the mill-owners of Lancashire have to pay high prices for American cotton. Will the mill-owners of Lancashire touch the Indian produce when American cotton gets cheap? Why should the Agricultural Department waste the country's money in cultivating long staple cotton? Cannot the Department better utilise its energies in improving the cultivation of cereals? Should the cultivation of food-stuffs be neglected for providing long staple cotton for Lancashire? If the cotton grown in India could not find a market, better cotton might be grown. But such is not the case. Why then should efforts be made to cultivate cotton which is not suitable to the Indian climate and which is not likely to bring any gain to the cultivator? Why does not Lancashire finance the Indian Government for carrying out the experiments? The interests of Lancashire should not be promoted in the name of the Empire at India's expense and risk.

Comments on the proposed Committee to inquire into the cases of persons interned under the Defence of India Act in Bengal.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 23rd Nov.

18. Referring to the speech recently delivered by His Excellency Lord Ronaldshay in the Bengal Legislative Council in justification of the Bengal Government's measures under the Defence of India Act to combat the seditious movement in Bengal, the Praja Mitra and Pársi, while thanking Lord Ronaldshay for securing the appointment of a committee, composed of Indians and Europeans with a judge of the High Court of England at its head, to investigate the cases of all detenus under the Defence of India Act, remarks that the mere submission of the evidence possessed by Government to the committee is not enough. Alluding to the sensational prosecution, based on a fictitions document, against Mr. Parnell, the Irish leader, on a charge of treason and to some of the cases in Bengal in which innocent persons were accused of sedition and conspiracy against His Majesty the King-Emperor on concocted evidence, as decided by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, the paper suggests that those interned under the Defence of India Act should be allowed to appear before the above-mentioned committee with their counsel and to have the opportunity of sifting the evidence against them by means of cross-examination. It believes that this sort of inquiry will not only be calculated to pacify the minds of the public, but will help to get justice done to Government.

Comments on a case of outrage due to the fanaticism of the Borah community of Ujjain (Central India).

Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 23rd Nov., Eng. cols.

19. "A correspondent from Ujjain relates the story of a hideous crime committed in August last. From a bare recital of the facts, it appears that a mob of about 500 Borahs brutally maltreated a Borah family, consisting of an old man of ninety, a widowed daugther-in-law of his, and a lad of 17, his grandson. The mob frightfully mutilated and disfigured the old man, barbarously assaulted the widow, and the youth's head was dashed against the wall fracturing the skull.......... The pity and horror of it is increased a thousandfold, when we reflect that these atrocities have resulted from the so-called sentiment of religious devotion. In order to understand the motives and influences under which the incident occurred, we must go back to the disputes which have agitated the Borah community for some months past. The disputes started in Bombay, but soon spread to all the important centres of the Borah community in India. At a meeting of the Dawoodi Borahs held in Bombay about July last, His Holiness the Mullaji, in view of these disputes, declared that certain gentlemen in the community were his enemies, and announced that they had been excommunicated. The representatives of the High Priest, all over India, were informed of this by wire, and were instructed to excommunicate those who held views different from those of the High Priest. The Amil of Ujjain, who is a cousin and brother-in-law of the High Priest, accordingly convened a meeting of the Borahs at Ujjain, where he is said to have exhorted his hearers to stand by His Holiness, and urged that those who helped the Mullaji with their lives and property would be doing a righteous thing. The Amil on this occasion announced the names of five Borahs who were to be excommunicated. Among them was the name of the unfortunate old Sheikh Ali Mahomed, who has been the victim of the brutal outrage we are commenting upon.......... An outrage of this character is bound to discredit all those in whose behalf it is professed to be committed. We know that His Holiness the Mullaji has been exhorting his followers to remain calm and desist from acts of violence.......... We have no doubt that His Holiness will promptly dissociate himself from all acts and expressions of mere fury and fanaticism. But it is not enough to dissociate oneself from crimes, after they are committed. Care must be taken to see that no excuse is furnished for the commission of crimes.......... All influences, therefore, which tend to encourage violence and bigotry must be checked and put down. One of the most reprehensible of such influences has been the deliberate instigation of the forces of fanaticism by some of the local papers. In the name of religion these papers deliberately excite and inflame the violent passions of the mob. They profess to serve the community, when the obvious and ill-disguised object all the while is to increase their sale, and make money out of the situation that has arisen. The function of a public paper is to spread light and dispel darkness. It is painful to reflect that some of the dailies and weeklies in our midst have consistently acted in a contrary spirit. They deliberately take the wrong side, because it is the side of the majority and pays. The result of their good offices is to influence the inflammable, and make the blind blinder. Incidentally and in the end, they lead to the fiendish and fanatical outrages of which the Ujjain incident is a type."

Comments on an alleged insult to a Pathan by an Anglo-Indian in a railway train at Rawalpindi Station.

Hindusthán (21), 22nd Nov.

20. The Hindusthán reproduces the story of an old Pathan, one of whose sons is said to be fighting in Mesopotamia and another to have lost his life in France, and who is alleged to have been asked to get down from the second class compartment he was occupying at Peshâwar and insulted by an Anglo-Indian for having got into an Intermediate class compartment reserved for Europeans, with the following comments of the Indian Opinion published in South Africa:—Whose blood will not boil on hearing such incidents occurring in India? Such incidents happen in South Africa because it is said to be a White man's country; but it is strange that an old man, belonging to the fighting races of India and who has made such sacrifices for the Empire, should be submitted to such insults in his own country. There is much talk of passive resistance (in India), but much good will surely come out of it if it is put into practice at such a juncture.

Comments on the progress of the war.

Sánj Vartmán (32), 21st Nov.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 24th Nov.

21. Dwelling upon the present war situation and referring to the desire of the Maximalist party, which has gained ascendancy in Russia, to conclude a separate peace with the enemy, the Sánj Vartmán remarks that it now remains to be seen whether Germany will be ready to restore the conquered territories of Russia or whether the Russians will be willing to allow Germany to retain those territories. It maintains that when the Russian political extremists commence discussing peace terms with Germany they will realise how suicidal their step of concluding a separate peace will prove to Russian interests. The paper then goes on to refer to the newly formed War Council of England, France, Italy and America and expresses the hope that the co-ordination will enable these four powers to cope with the present Italian situation and will not allow Italy to share the fate of Servia and Roumania. It then alludes to the failure of the German submarine campaign and expresses its belief that the future of Germany will be settled on the soil of Italy and that the Piave or the Adige will decide the question of the freedom of Europe. [Touching the Russian situation, the Praja Mitra and Pársi observes :—Russia has taken a most disgraceful step after involving in difficulties the Allies who entered the war for the preservation of its prestige. It almost amounts to playing false with the Allies and it will not fail to result in launching Russia into great trouble. The thing which is now more to be dreaded is the possibility of Russia withdrawing its army from Asiatic Turkey and Persia. Such a contingency will add to the burdens of His Majesty's Government, but, regard being had to the growing powers of the Empire, we hope that Government will be in a position to cope with that new situation also.]

Rást Goftár (31), 25th Nov., Eng. cols.

*22. "In the course of the present war there have been many occasions when attempts have been made to minimise a serious crisis or a grave disaster by declaring that it implied no advantage to the enemy.......... France and England are striving to their utmost to expel the Germans from Belgium and France. That is the whole history of the war on the western front. Now, if it is asserted that the occupation of Belgium and part of France is of no military importance or that it is a barren invasion or conquest it would be a misleading assertion, for the acquisition of territory is always profitable, and that is why so much blood is shed in acquiring it. The Germans have destroyed beautiful cities and towns and committed gross outrages of every kind, but they have also looted the people, levied heavy tribute upon them, and cultivated the land for produce. This means eking out the sinews of war and this is one reason why inspite of repeated reports to the contrary Germany is not yet showing any marked signs of exhaustion. The conquests of Serbia, Poland and Roumania were all supposed to be barren conquests, but surely the wheat plains of Poland and the natural resources of Roumania and Serbia have not disappeared, and the inhabitants are compelled to cultivate the land so that the harvest may be reaped by the victorious Germans. Finally, the imminent peril of Italy means a likely addition to the supplies of Germany and Austria. If the line of the Piave cannot be held it will be difficult to save Venice, the Queen of the Adriatic. All the priceless national possession, the sculptures and pictures, are being removed to Rome and elsewhere, and it is alleged that if the Germans and Austrians come to Venice they will find it empty and almost deserted, and it will be as barren a victory as Napoleon's entry into Moscow.......... Will the Teutonic armies leave Venice if they enter it? On the contrary, once established it will be as difficult to expel them as from Belgium and north-east France, while merciless tribute will be laid on men and land. The full gravity of the situation must be squarely faced and it is wrong to raise false hopes by incorrect analogies."

The policy of the Young India newspaper.

Young India (14), 21st Nov.

23. "With the present number of Young India, we are entering upon the third year of its existence. The journal, which has now come to occupy a recognized place of importance in Indian journalism, was called into being in the stormy times following the outbreak of the European war and has been from the very outset maintained as a fearless and independent exponent of Indian Nationalism, which had already entered upon its advanced phase with the entry of Mrs. Besant into the arena of Indian politics. In the two years that have now passed, Young India has steadfastly adhered to the great cause of 'Home Rule for India' and consistently striven to advance that cause by all constitutional means, and since the formation of a branch of the Home Rule League, which Mrs. Besant helped to found, it has become the recognised organ of the League in Western India.......... During the past two years Young India has been maintained at great self-sacrifice by two of our most patriotic and devoted workers—Messrs. Jamnadas Dwarkadas and S. G. Banker, who have grudged neither personal service nor money to make the journal worthy of the high place to which it has attained. But in response to a desire to broadbase the foundations of the paper, proposals were matured during the year to entrust it to the keeping of a small body of patriotic citizens including its founders, who have formed themselves into a limited concern under the name and style of 'The Young India Syndicate, Limited'. The policy of Young India will remain as before—to advance the cause of the nation."

Alleged failure of Mr. B. N. Athavle as a Presidency Magistrate, Bombay.
Kaiser-i-Hind (25), 25th Nov., Eng. cols.

24. In the course of an article in which it dwells on the alleged failure of the exclusively Indian régime in the Bombay Police Courts during the absence of Mr. Aston, whose return to duty it welcomes, the Kaiser-i-Hind thus criticises the work of the Acting Fourth Presidency Magistrate :—" Mr. Athavle has been a conspicuous failure. Without strict judicially impartial turn of mind, without due patience, he has been unpopular with the bar and the public alike. Mr. Aston has been able to keep up the dignity of the Court without forced threatenings and excessive punishments ; Mr. Athavle almost made a system of the latter. The public of Bombay will at least heave a sigh of relief at being rid of all chance of his magisterial somersaults and inconsistencies, whatever the worth of these be from the mere spectacular point of view." [The paper then goes on to dilate on the inadequacy of the salaries of Bombay Presidency Magistrates and pleads for improvement in them with a view to attracting competent men to these posts.]

Complaint about the high price of salt.
Surat Akhbár (75), 19th Nov.

25. Dwelling on the present high price of salt, the Surat Akhbár remarks that Government can check it, if they like, in the twinkling of an eye. It attributes the dearness of salt to speculators cornering it and selling it to shop-keepers at a high price. In order to remedy this state of things, the paper suggests that Government should stop the sale of salt to speculators and should open additional salt depots.

LEGISLATION.

The Honourable Mr. Patel's Compulsory Education Bill.
Kesari (106), 20th Nov.

26. The Kesari objects to the Honourable Mr. Pathan's note of dissent suggesting that compulsory education should not be introduced amongst Muhammadans till Urdu schools are started and says that most of the Muhammadan boys have learnt and will continue to learn the respective vernaculars of the divisions of this Presidency, Kanarese, Marathi and Gujarati and that the Muhammadan persistency for Urdu is due to Aligarh teachings. It hopes that the Council will properly dispose of the matter without minding Mr. Pathan. It supports Messrs. Mehta and Sathe's suggestion that children should be allowed to work for some hours if necessary during their primary stage of instruction and thinks that such permission will minimise the opposition of ignorant and greedy parents.

MUNICIPALITIES.

Comments on the recent orders of Government conferring on all City Municipalities the right of electing their presidents.
Bombay Samáchár (60), 22nd Nov.

27. We would like to thank His Excellency Lord Willingdon for promoting the cause of local self-government by issuing a Resolution giving all the city municipalities in this Presidency the right of electing their own presidents. But this is not all that can be done in the interest of local self-government. The District Municipalities and Local Boards also should be freed from official control, and they should be given the right of electing their own presidents. We hope His Excellency will take steps to remove the disabilities of municipalities in this Presidency which have been enumerated in the memorial presented by the Presidency Association to the Secretary of State for India and do all in his power for the efficient working of local self-government in the Presidency.

Grievances of people frequenting the Kennedy Sea-face.

Bombay Samáchár (60), 20th Nov.

28. The Bombay Samáchár dwells at great length upon the hardships and inconvenience caused to the people who go out for an airing in the evening on the Kennedy Sea-face in Bombay, owing to the clouds of dust raised by the horsemen who frequent the place and the absence of lights after dark, which gives ample opportunities to bad characters to harass and waylay respectable people. It suggests that the former practice of watering the ride may again be followed and arrangements made to provide lights on the Kennedy Sea-face. Should considerations of economy come in the way of watering the ride and lighting the sea-face, the paper suggests that the building of the sea-face wall be discontinued to meet the expenses.

Alleged gross neglect of sanitation by the municipal authorities of Ahmedabad.

Gujárati (17), 18th Nov.

29. The Gujaráti voices the popular complaint that the prevalence of plague at Ahmedabad is largely due to the choking up of the drains and expresses surprise that matters should have been allowed to come to such a pass when the affairs of the Ahmedabad Municipality were managed by Government officials for more than seven years out of the fifteen years the drains have been in existence. It expresses surprise and indignation at the explanation given by the Superintendent of the Drainage Department to the effect that it was not his business to inspect the drains, and asks Government and the Municipality to enquire into the matter and to devise means for the prevention of the choking of the drains.

NATIVE STATES.

Comments on the Wadhwán strike.

Shri Sayáji Vijay (74), 22nd Nov.; Akhbár-e-Islám (57), 19th Nov.

30. Referring to the Wadhwán strike, the Shri Sayáji Vijay regrets that the people of Wadhwán have not yet obtained any redress of their grievance in spite of their approaching the Administrator and the Agent to the Governor in connection with it. It observes:—The people of many Native States are not protected by law in the proper sense of the term. They have to submit without demur to the whims and fantastical orders of officers in authority, and very often they cannot obtain redress in spite of their supplicating the State as well as the sovereign authority. The Wadhwán strike is a fresh illustration of this state of affairs. It is hoped that peace will be immediately restored if His Excellency the Governor will intervene in the matter and try to remove the discontent of the people as requested by the Wadhwán citizens residing in Bombay. [The Akhbár-e-Islám, on the other hand, remarks that since the cry of Home Rule has come into existence in this country the attitude of the Hindus towards the Muhammadans has been characterised by a prejudiced and domineering spirit, and it regards the present Wadhwán strike as an instance in point. The paper observes, however, that if the chief aim of the Hindus is to bring about the removal of a Muhammadan officer placed over them by approaching His Excellency the Governor with imaginary grievances, it does not believe that such objections of theirs, due to mere prejudice, would induce His Excellency to give them one-sided justice.]

M. K. SHAIKH,

Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,

P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 30th November 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

10398
6 12 17
1 12 17
G R 1st

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 48 of 1917

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 1st December 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British rule:
- Alleged ill-effects of the Bohra meeting recently held in Bombay . . 25
- Appeal to Government to regulate the prices of foodstuffs, etc., in the Bombay Presidency 27
- Comments on the evidence of Mr. Karimbhoy Adamji Peerbhoy before the Indian Industrial Commission . . . . 18 & 1
- Comments on the Governor of Bengal's decision to submit cases of political conspirators to a judicial tribunal . . . . . 20 & 21
- Comments on the proscription of Mr. Lala Lajpatrai's book "An open letter to the Prime Minister of England" 24
- Comments on the reported raid on the London Office of the Indian Home Rule League 23
- Duty of Musalmans of Bombay Presidency to help the victims of the riots in Arrah District (Behar) 26
- Mrs. Besant's communication to the Press regarding the non-release of Ali brothers 22
- The system of issuing Treasury Bills should be continued even after the war 28

Comments on the Bombay Exhibition of foodstuffs, etc. 36

Indian Political Reforms:
- Comments on the Curtis Scheme of Reforms . . . . . . 1—3
- Comments on the Home Rule League's address to the Secretary of State 4
- Comments on the memorial of the non-official members of the Bombay Legislative Council to the Secretary of State 5
- Comments on the Parsi Memorial for separate representation for the Parsi Community . . . . 6 & 7
- Comments on the refusal by the Secretary of State to receive the address of the All-India Moslem League 10
- Communal electorates will accentuate caste differences 9
- Government are aware as to who helped them and who did not at present juncture 17
- Inadvisability of constituting Indian Chiefs as an Upper Chamber in India 12
- Lingayats not opposed to the Congress-League Scheme 8
- Non-Brahmins should keep aloof from the Extremists. 15
- Spuriousness of the Muhammadan-Hindu entente 16
- The lesson to be learnt from the reception of Mr. Tilak and Mrs. Besant at Delhi 14
- The position of Native States in relation to British India in the Congress-League scheme of reforms 11
- Village officers have intimidated members of the untouchable classes into signing the Home Rule petition 13

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

Irrigation: Grievances of garden landholders in Bhimthadi Taluka (Poona). 32
Plague: Plague at Ahmedabad 38
Police: Alleged spread of lotteries in Surat City 37
Post and Telegraph Department: Bombay Postmen and their last strike . 34
Press Act: Comments on the security taken from the Hindusthán newspaper 29
Public Service:
Hardships of talatis 30
Necessity of increasing the pay of Vaccinators 31
Revenue matters: Petition of Kaira agriculturists for remission of revenue. 33
Sanitary matters: Comments on the last annual report of the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of Bombay 35
Sind: Alleged tendency of officials in — to interfere unduly and high-handedly in matters vitally affecting the principle of local self-government 39

EDUCATION—

Comments on the proposed Joint Board for the conduct of Matriculation and School Final Examinations 40

MUNICIPALITIES—

Alandi: Complaint against the — (Poona) Municipality 43
Comments on the Government Resolution reviewing the working of the Municipalities in the Bombay Presidency during the year 1915-16 . 41 & 42
Lárkána: The house-tax at — (Sind) 44

NATIVE STATES—

Comments on the state of affairs at Wadhwán (Káthiáwár) . . . . 45 & 46

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Comments on the Curtis Scheme of Reforms.

Kesari (106), 27th Nov.; Dnyán Prakásh* (37), 3rd Dec.

1. Commenting upon the Curtis scheme the Kesari says that it attracts people because Mr. Curtis proposes to hand over some Departments to be managed by the Legislative Councils. Another good point noticed by the paper is that Mr. Curtis wants the Legislative Councils to be wholly elected, Government members being called in only to explain matters. But the paper adds that there is a great defect in the scheme inasmuch as it does not make the decision of the Legislative Council binding upon the Executive Council, even if it is passed twelve times over whereas the Congress provides that the Legislative Council resolution will be binding upon the Executive if it is repeated twice. It continues:—Even the resolutions regarding the Departments transferred to the Council will not be mandatory but advisory. Mr. Curtis has provided for appeal to Parliament in case of the Executive's refusal, but it would be impossible under the present circumstances to secure Parliament's consent when the Viceroy repeatedly opposes the resolutions. Mr. Curtis has also thrown open to discussion all matters, including the military. With all this, however, we think that Mr. Curtis scheme will be fit only for a brand new Negro State. We Indians are capable of managing everything from the work of Local Boards to that of the Secretary of State's Council. It is therefore adding insult to injury to suggest to us that we should train ourselves first only in certain Departments. Provincial Governments themselves are to be dependent upon others and we are to get $\frac{1}{4}$ of their powers which means that we are to have control of only an enlarged edition of Municipalities and Local Boards. Mr. Curtis provides that all members should be elected. But so long as they have no executive power and cannot make the change of even a pie in the Budget, is not their vote worthless? He has also taken much care to guard the interests of Anglo-Indian capitalists. The proposals to split up Provinces into Divisions, to transfer servants from Bureaucratic Departments to Popular Departments, to take the consent of Commissioners for raising loans and taxes, and the anxiety shown to compensate Anglo-Indian capitalists are ruinous, disastrous and troublesome. A protest against the Curtis scheme is necessary. It has been already entered by the Madras leaders. If the proposal comes before the Congress, it will be dealt with as it deserves. [The Dnyán Prakásh says:—Mr. Curtis interprets the words 'Responsible Government' used by the Secretary of State to mean Cabinet Government and says that every Scheme of Reforms should provide for a change of Ministry. It is a mistaken view. Our greatest objection to the scheme is that it wants to introduce Reforms as an experimental measure. The scheme is unpractical and unsatisfactory as it wants to split up Provinces and place every Division under a Commissioner with the powers of a Governor. If he be an I.C.S. man, he will interfere in everything and the powers of the Cabinet will be very limited.]

Gujaráti (17), 25th Nov.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 27th Nov.

2. We do not think that Indians can accept the joint scheme of Indians and Anglo-Indians prepared under the guidance of Mr. Curtis. No Indian should commit the mistake of accepting any scheme of reforms except the one outlined by the nineteen members of the Viceregal Legislative Council and endorsed by the Congress and the Moslem League. The Indian people should, therefore, express their emphatic disapproval of Mr. Curtis' scheme. Indians do not wish to forego any of the reforms demanded in the Congress-League Scheme and they would, therefore, agitate for its acceptance by Government as a first step towards the grant of Swarájya. [The Praja Mitra and Pársi, on the other hand, deprecates the hostile attitude assumed in certain quarters towards the joint scheme and urges its readers to treat it with the consideration it deserves and to move for its careful consideration at a sitting of the representatives of the National Congress, the Moslem League and the Anglo-Indian Association.]

Indian Social Reformer* (3), 2nd Dec.; New Times (7), 28th Nov.

3. “We do not think that *the scheme of the Joint Address is at all satisfactory. It makes the mistake of ignoring the essential incompatibility between the bureaucratic and the responsible systems of government. It expects the lion and the lamb to lie down together until such time as the lamb develops the thews and sinews which, in the lion's view, would render his presence and protection unnecessary. It overlooks the fact that institutions develop a life of their own, and with it an instinct of self-preservation, as truly as organisms endowed with life. The history of local self-government in this country should teach us to put little faith in schemes which make the political education of the people depend on the goodwill of a bureaucracy. And it is no fault of the bureaucracy either. It is not in its nature to foster responsible government, just as it is not in the nature of thorns to grow figs. The proposed Provincial State will be no better than a glorified municipality, and we all know that between municipalities and the executive administration in this country there is not much love lost.......... We have no hope that the Provincial State of the Joint Address scheme will fare any better at the hands of the Provincial bureaucracy than municipalities and district boards in the past. It is too much to expect it.” [The New Times strongly condemns the joint Indian and European scheme of reforms, and remarks :—“The scheme is foredoomed to failure; the might of modernism is arrayed against it; the national ideal is arrayed against it. It is a limping scheme, not moving forward in response to the call of the nation; it is largely an Anglo-Indian scheme, not interpreting the real Indian mind. .... The so-called ‘joint scheme’ does not know the Indian mind; it is suspicious of Indian abilities; it ignores the faith of the nation that Europeans are not nearly as well qualified as the Indians themselves for the Indian administration; it lacks a comprehension of the contemporary phase of the Indian situation; it rests on a vicious pre-supposition that India is still unfit for self-government.”]

Comments on the Home Rule League's address to the Secretary of State.

Dnyán Prakásh (37), 1st Dec.

4. With reference to certain sentences in the Home Rule League's address to the Secretary of State requesting that India should be placed on a position of equality with self-governing dominions after the war, the Dnyán Prakásh contends that the Congress-League Scheme has been deliberately misrepresented in the address and says that the Congress-League Scheme is itself a post-war scheme and that it was not intended to be introduced during war-time as is contended by Mrs. Besant, and that though the resolution of the Congress is ambiguous, the Moslem League definitely provides that the Scheme of Reforms is a post-war one and that the third section of the Congress Scheme demanding equality with self-governing units of the Empire is with reference to ‘inter-imperial’ relations. The paper continues :— Some may think it advisable to introduce the reforms during war-time, if the war be prolonged. But let an amendment to the Congress Scheme be passed to that effect in the Congress. Nobody has any right to pass it off as a Congress Scheme before obtaining the consent of the Congress.

Comments on the memorial of the non-official members of the Bombay Legislative Council to the Secretary of State.

Bombay Samáchár (60), 28th Nov.

5. Apropos of the representation which the non-official members of the Bombay Legislative Council are going to submit to the Honourable Mr. Montagu and His Excellency the Viceroy in connection with the constitutional reforms, the Bombay Samáchár remarks that the fact that the various signatories thereto, though differing among themselves in matters of detail, have joined hands in signing the representation and have expressed themselves to be in general agreement with the Congress-League Scheme, demonstrates the extent to which educated public opinion has become unanimous in support of that scheme. It believes that the allotment of 32 seats to Muhammadans from among the 100 seats on the Local Legislative Council to be filled by election, as has been suggested in the abovementioned memorial, will gratify the Moslem community and will strengthen their claim for separate representation. The paper, how ever, cannot agree with the memorialists in their disapproval of any further extension of communal representation, and in this connection supports the suggestion made by the Bombay Presidency Association for reserving 10 seats for the representation of important minorities. It also does not approve of the suggestion made both by the Association and the non-official members of the Council about giving, as far as the city of Bombay is concerned, the right of electing members for the local Legislative Council to University Graduates and estate holders only, and wishes that the right were also extended to those who are paying income-tax up to a particular amount.

Comments on the Parsi Memorial for separate representation for the Parsi community.

Pársi Sansár (27), 17th Nov., Eng. cols.

6. Commenting on the memorial to His Excellency the Viceroy and the Secretary of State submitted by Sir Jamsetjee Jijibhoy and other praying for separate representation for the Parsis, the Pársi Sansár writes:—"In spite of its teeming millions, the Islamic world could get a separate communal representation on the score of the preponderance of the Hindu element in India. This precedent is a strong argument for a separate electorate for all the other smaller communities of India, such as, the Parsis, Jews, Anglo Indians, Native Christians, etc. If the demand made by the Parsis does not embarrass the Indian Government we give it the weight of the support of all the Karáchi Parsi population, and so far as we can judge from the trend of present policy it does not embarrass the Government who actually want to know the mind of the different peoples of India."

Sánj Vartamán (32), 26th Nov.; Kaiser-i-Hind (25), 25th Nov.; Rást Goftár (31), 25th Nov.

7. Apropos of the memorial to be submitted to the Secretary of State and His Excellency the Viceroy by Sir Jamsetjee Jijibhoy and other Parsis in connection with the political reforms to be introduced in India, the Sánj Vartamán remarks that the entire Parsi community is unanimously in favour of having separate representation for the Parsis in the Legislative Councils if other minorities are going to be accorded that privilege. It, however, maintains that a large section of the community is opposed to the way in which the memorial was drafted and the deputation appointed to submit the memorial. The paper, accordingly, points to the probability of the authorities drawing the inference, from the controversy in the press in that connection (which inference the paper itself does not endorse), that the community is divided over the question of separate representation. It is of opinion that difficulties would arise, as the present "self-appointed" deputation would not be in a position to determine, without further consulting the community, the composition of the Parsi electorate in case Government decided to give the Parsis the right of separate representation. The paper, therefore, suggests that a general meeting of the Parsi community should be held promptly in order to get its consent to the memorial, and it confidently hopes that the meeting will not only support the memorial but will confirm the composition of the present deputation. [The Kaiser-i-Hind regards the opposition raised in some quarters against the memorial as quite unnecessary and based on flimsy grounds. It does not believe that the Trustees of the Parsi Punchayat have been slighted in any way simply because all of them are not included in the deputation. The paper asks the members of the community not to be swayed by party considerations in political matters but to sign the memorial in large numbers in order to make it as weighty as possible in the eyes of the authorities. The Rást Goftár also supports the memorial in a whole-hearted manner and believes that the movement for submitting it to the authorities bespeaks farsightedness on the part of those concerned. It is of opinion that in political matters the convening of a meeting of the Anjuman was neither desirable nor necessary.]

Lingayats not opposed to the Congress-League Scheme.

Kesari (106), 27th Nov.

8. Mr. N. R. Bamangonkar writes to the Kesari from Belgaum:—I visited Nipáni, Athni, Belgaum, Sholápur, Bijápur, Hubli and Dhárwár to see whether there was any opposition to swarájya as the outcome of the split between Brahmins and non-Brahmins. The differences owe their existence to some Belgaum gentlemen, and certain Jain, Lingayat, Maratha and Mahar individuals who form the opposition to the Congress-League scheme are not influential persons in their own communities. Exaggerated descriptions in Anglo-Indian newspapers of hole and corner meetings led people to doubt whether the split was real or false. Those who could not tolerate the Hindu-Muhammadan entente effected in Lucknow by the grant of over-representation to Muhammadans, tried to create a split between Brahmins and non-Brahmins and to show that the classes and masses are not one. The outcome was the Madras non-Brahmin movement which was imitated in some Belgaum villages. But the All-India Maratha Conference at Belgaum and the Lingayat Conference at Sholápur supported the swarájya scheme. The latter also supported caste electorates but only in case other communities were granted the same. But Government are not likely to make their administration complicated by adopting caste-electorates. A meeting of all communities was held at Hubli (Dhárwár) under the presidentship of a leading Lingayat pleader Mr. Kambli to support the Congress scheme. Another Lingayat pleader Mr. Pawate is the President of the local Home Rule League. In Dhárwár also a meeting was held under the presidentship of Mr. Sangangowda Patil, a Lingayat Pleader, and all adopted the swarájya resolution unanimously. No one should suppose that the Lingayat community is opposed to the swarájya movement judging from the irresponsible utterances of one or two Belgaum Lingayats. These individuals may be criticised but the community should not be attacked.

Communal electorates will accentuate caste differences.

Kesari (106), 27th Nov.; Ráj Hansa (85), 29th Nov.; Shubhodaya (89), 23rd Nov.; Chandrodaya (34), 26th Nov.

9. Nobody can have any difference of opinion on the point that representatives of the various castes should have an entrance into the Council. But the question is whether they should be returned by communal electorates which would accentuate caste differences or whether they should come in through some other electorates that would have nothing to do with caste. Many impartial and intelligent men hold that the principle of caste electorates would strengthen the caste system. When Government invited opinions in 1907, many non-Brahmin leaders of Madras, the Madras Government itself, and three Bombay Commissioners had given their opinion against caste electorates. The representation sent by 19 non-official members of the Bombay Legislative Council—and they include many non-Brahmins—definitely condemns communal electorates. But as the members want their educated brethren belonging to different communities in the Council they have suggested the adoption of Proportional Representation, the fresh grouping of districts and direct elections. Undoubtedly this proposal is better than that of caste-electorates. If two or three districts are grouped together, the non-Brahmin voters will outnumber Brahmin voters and there is a danger that no Brahmin will be returned, if the former mean it. We want qualified men in the Council whether they are Brahmins or non-Brahmins. No candidate should think of contesting the election on the strength of his caste. Brahmins, Marathas and Lingayats like Messrs. Shinde, Deshmukh, Savant and Bamangaonkar oppose caste electorates because they would make caste rigid and because they would be harmful to the country and because they would enable ignorant men to enter the Council. [The Ráj Hansa and the Shubhodaya condemn communal elections and the Chandrodaya supports them.]

Comments on the refusal by the Secretary of State to receive the address of the All-India Moslem League.

Indian Social Reformer (3), 2nd Dec.; Rást Goftár (31), 2nd Dec., Eng. cols.

*10. Commenting on the refusal by the Secretary of State to receive the address of the All-India Moslem League, the Indian Social Reformer writes:—"We do not see what serious consequences would have ensued if the reference (to the interned Mussalmans) had been allowed to stand in the address. The Muhammadan public would have been satisfied that they had been accorded the opportunity of placing their grievances before the King's Viceroy and the Indian Minister, while the two dignitaries would not have been inconvenienced in any way. The right of the subject to audience is an immemorial tradition in India, and we cannot but regret the effect which the incident is likely to have on the public mind." [Commenting upon the refusal to accept the address of the Moslem League deputation, the Rást Goftár remarks:—" Perhaps the Government of India are right in their decision since it has been announced that the Secretary of State for India will concentrate his attention on constitutional reform while he is in India, but some way should be found for the reconsideration of the prolongation of the internment of certain Moslem leaders, specially the brothers Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali."]

The position of Native States in relation to British India in the Congress-League scheme of reforms.
Young India (14), 28th Nov.

11. Commenting on the criticism levelled at the Congress-League scheme of reforms, that "it has failed to take cognisance of the Native States", Young India writes:—"Political honesty and consistency would demand that the States should be assured not only of the amount of independence that they already possess but also of an effective voice in the settlement of the many 'questions connected with currency, fiscal and commercial policy, imports, exports, salt duties, emigration, army, navy, foreign affairs'. These questions, as rightly observed by Sir M. Visvesvaraya in his address to the last session of the Mysore Representative Assembly, 'affect the subjects of Indian States quite as much as they do people in British India'. As the same authority stated, 'many of the States pay subsidies; several contribute a substantial share of the indirect taxes of the Government of India and maintain Local as well as Imperial Service Troops which add to the fighting strength of the Empire'. None-the-less, they have absolutely no part or lot in the determination of common questions that affect them for better or worse. It is the duty of statesmanship to remove such anachronisms as at present exist. And this, we think, cannot be done by reducing the States to a position of virtual dependence on the Government of India but by giving them a direct and equal voice in the Councils of that Government, so far as questions common to them and British India are concerned. The suggestion of a Federated Chamber in which the Rulers of the Indian States, great and small, will sit may be commended as a solution of the question of securing some sort of deliberative body in which matters of interest common to them and the British Provinces can be discussed and legislated upon; but care must be taken to see that its powers are strictly limited to this sphere. Any idea of the inclusion of the Native States in the legislative machinery of India must be strongly discountenanced, not only as radically unsound and dangerous to British India but as undermining the status of the Rulers themselves."

Inadvisability of constituting an Upper Chamber of Indian Chiefs in India.
Indu Prakásh (40), 24th Nov.

12. Suggestions are sometimes made for constituting an assembly of Indian chiefs as a sort of Upper Chamber. It is difficult, however, to understand why Indians should accept this mill-stone round their neck in view of the scant courtesy shown to the House of Lords in England and the threat sometimes held out in that country that the crown itself will have to go into the melting pot if necessary. The proposed arrangement can only be justified by allowing Indians in British India to have a voice in the internal affairs of the Native States. If it is intended to recompense the Indian Chiefs for their services in the war the amount of their tribute may be reduced and they may be freed somewhat from the control of Political Officers. To offer them a share in the administration of India would be like inviting America or Japan to send representatives to the British Parliament for their invaluable assistance in the war.

Village officers have intimidated members of the untouchable classes into signing Home Rule petition.
Jágaruk (102), 23rd Nov.

13. A gentleman of the untouchable class sends us from Pandharpur the names of about a hundred men of the untouched classes. He says the kulkarnis and the other village officers intimidated them into affixing their signatures or thumb impressions to the demand for Home Rule. We are unable to give their names for want of space. Will the authorities inquire into this matter? A visit to a village will not fail to convince the Secretary of State of the hollowness of the demand for swarájya.

The lesson to be learnt from the reception of Mr. Tilak and Mrs. Besant at Delhi.

Sandesh (116), 27th Nov.

14. At Delhi Mr. Montagu has been able to see for himself the evidences of the esteem in which Mr. Tilak and Mrs. Besant are held by the people. He must also have realised the falsity of the statement made to him by some people that a bitter hostility exists between the Hindus and the Muhammadans and that although the leaders of the two parties have joined in making suggestions, the people of the two communities will make their adoption impossible. But, as a matter of fact, in spite of occasional minor differences between the two communities their hearts are at present solely filled with nationalistic sentiments. An excellent illustration of the cordial relations existing between the Hindus and the Muhammadans was seen at Delhi the other day. When Mr. Tilak reached that city he was welcomed by five thousand persons on the station platform while more than ten thousand assembled outside to greet him. The welcome accorded by the Muhammadans to Mr. Tilak and by the Hindus to Mrs. Besant and Mr. Jinnah can only be accounted for by the deeply planted sentiments of nationalism in the minds of the two communities. We trust Mr. Montagu will now realise that the statement which he made before coming to India that the Home Rule movement was confined to a few educated men was due to his ignorance.

Non-Brahmins should keep aloof from the Extremists.

Jágaruk (102), 23rd Nov.

15. We have repeatedly asked our non-Brahmin brethren to keep the Extremists at arm's length. Their duplicity is well-known. Whereas Mr. Kelkar recently declared that he not only did not oppose the movement for communal electorates but supported it, Mr. Khadilkar another Extremist, characterized the movement as suicidal! The Extremists are well accustomed to air such contrary opinions, the object of all this jugglery being to appropriate all the benefits accruing from swardjya. They oppose communal representation on the ground of the division of the community into several castes and sub-castes. As a matter of fact we demand only two separate electorates, one for the backward classes and the other for the untouchables and we are quite sure Government will grant these demands. The Extremists should bear well in mind that the demand for separate electorates cannot now be stifled. We shall continue to carry on the agitation until Government concede our claims.

Spuriousness of the Muhammadan-Hindu entente.

Jágaruk (102), 23rd Nov.

16. The Kesari recently declared that the Hindu-Muhammadan unity was a fait accompli. But at the special meeting of the Moslem League at Lucknow the Hindu leaders were blamed for their reticence in connection with the riots in Behar. This has stirred the bile of the extremist papers and the Kesari which only recently was indulging in the fiction of Hindu-Muhammadan unity now declares that the Muhammadan leaders have lost their balance of mind and that the Hindu-Muhammadan unity is now definitely at an end. Our Brahmin leaders will, however, agree to any demand that is made by the Muhammadans but they will never accept a demand made by their own co-religionists of the backward classes. The only result of this policy will be that they will forfeit both the spurious sympathy of the Muhammadans and the confidence of their own co-religionists.

Government are aware as to who helped them and who did not at present juncture.

Jágaruk (102), 23rd Nov.

17. Mr. Tilak recently declared that it was the efforts of the Brahmins that induced Government to grant swardjya and that the other communities were now coming forward to claim a share therein without labouring for it. This is a gross perversion of facts. Government were neither dazzled by nor pleased with the loyalty of the advanced classes. They had already correctly gauged their sincerity! As a matter of fact they feared lest some of the malcontents should succeed in spreading disaffection among the masses. Government were pleased because that fear proved groundless and because men of the backward classes proved their prowess on the battlefield. It is most unfortunate, therefore, that a man of Mr. Tilak's experience should claim all the benefits of swardjya for his caste people. Government are of course well aware which class helped them and which embarrassed them still further at this critical juncture, and we are quite sure they will act accordingly.

Comments on the evidence of Mr. Karimbhoy Adamji Peerbhoy before the Indian Industrial Commission.

Rást Goftár (31), 2nd Dec., Eng. cols.

*18. "Mr. Karimbhoy supplied the ginger which is not always to be found in the dishes served up before the Commission. In his written as well as oral evidence Mr. Karimbhoy strongly contended that in army contracts European firms receive preferential treatment and patronage as compared with Indian firms. This is covered by one of the printed questions of the Commission in which the witness is asked whether he has any criticism to offer regarding the working of the present rules relating to the purchase of stores by Government Department. Instead of giving Mr. Karimbhoy the fullest latitude and allowing him to prove his contention or cross-examining him for the purpose of disproving his theory, Sir Thomas Holland took up the strange attitude that the matter was outside the scope of the inquiry which is being made by the Commission. There was in fact a brisk passage at arms and Sir Thomas Holland almost lost his temper. All that, however, is no answer to Mr. Karimbhoy's complaint, which, it is scarcely necessary to add, represents the feelings of many of his countrymen. It is not an accusation against a particular individual or a particular department, but a matter of common knowledge. The witness said he was prepared to quote chapter and verse in support of all statements that he has made in his written statement. He should have been allowed to do so instead of being put out of court, as it were, though his allegations were germane to the inquiry which is being made by the Commission."

Sánj Vartamán (32), 30th Nov.; Hindusthán (21), 30th Nov.; Shri Venkateshwar (80), 1st Dec.

19. The Sánj Vartamán remarks that the evidence given by Mr. Karimbhoy Adamji Peerbhoy before the Indian Industrial Commission with regard to the leather tanning industry in India was as important as it was sensational. It cannot accept the argument advanced by the President of the Commission in support of of his disinclination to examine Mr. Karimbhoy publicly in respect of the charges he had brought against some Government officers in the written statement he had submitted to the Commission. The paper observes:—We make bold to say that this question is not only one affecting the interests of the public but that it is a question of Imperial importance. It is a question affecting the advancement of industries. What would be the condition of a particular industry when injustice is done to an Indian firm connected with that industry, by Government unduly extending their patronage to European firms, after the former firm has invested a large capital in the introduction of a new industry in the country at the suggestion of Government officials? It is the primary duty of the Commission to make a public inquiry as to whether such injustice has been done. We strongly appeal to the Indian Government not to drop the matter at this stage but to appoint a small committee to make investigations into the complaints made by Mr. Karimbhoy and to place the results of the inquiry before the public. [The Hindusthán remarks that the evidence of Mr. Karimbhoy A. Peerbhoy furnishes the key to the problem why Indian industries do not thrive in this country. It expresses its disapprobation of the preferential treatment given by Government to non-Indian firms as suggested by Mr. Karimbhoy's evidence, and observes that the latter will afford the Government of India food for reflection and induce them to inquire as to how far such complaints have been affecting other industries. The paper hopes that a just Secretary of State like Mr. Montagu will take necessary measures on the basis Mr. Karimbhoy's evidence, which has thrown light upon the mysteries connected with the system of military contracts in India. The Shri Venkateshwar also expresses its disapproval of the alleged favouritism shown to European firms and opines that a more thorough inquiry into the subject-matter of Mr. Karimboy's complaint will promote both Government as well as public interests.]

Comments on the Governor of Bengal's decision to submit cases of political conspirators to a judicial tribunal.

Kesari (106), 27th Nov.

20. With reference to Lord Ronaldshay's decision to have Bengal political cases decided by a tribunal presided over by a Judge from England the Kesari remarks:—Bengal was demanding an inquiry and Lord Ronaldshay has done well in meeting their request. A regular inquiry and decision by a Judge will silence the critics. But why did his Lordship begin an open campaign against political conspirators at this time? What is his object? From the pompous and threatening speech of the Governor in the Legislative Council, the first impression created is that officials have discovered a convincing mass of evidence unexpectedly. But as we go through the whole speech, we cannot but laugh. [The paper here gives details of Lord Ronaldshay's speech.] We shall hold the case proved, after the judicial decision is given. But it is a matter for consideration why all this dirty linen is being washed, when Mr. Montagu is here and the swarájya question is being discussed seriously.

Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 26th Nov.

21. The Jám-e-Jamshed publishes the speech delivered by Lord Ronaldshay at the opening of the Bengal Legislative Council and commends the leniency shown by Government towards juvenile culprits who have repented of their folly and confessed their crimes. It adds:—It is really very good of the Government of Bengal to have decided to appoint a Judicial Committee to try the cases of all persons interned under the Defence of India Act. Had such an arrangement been arrived at at the outset, the minds of the people of Bengal would have been set at rest. The Government of Bengal deserve praise for appointing the Judicial Committee composed of Indian and European Judges and presided over by a Judge of the King's Bench. The people of Bengal will have no hesitation in accepting the finding of the Committee if one or two Bengali Judges are appointed on the Committee. The culprits will thereby have the satisfaction of securing impartial justice.

Mrs. Beasant's communication to the Press regarding the non-release of Ali Brothers.

Dnyán Prakásh (37), 27th Nov.

22. Mrs. Beasant's letter in connection with the non-release of the Ali brothers has apparently exasperated the Muhammadans. During her internment her followers used to declare that Indians should insist on her release prior to the discussion of any reforms. Her advice, however, about the Ali brothers is of quite a different character. She counsels Indians to have recourse to the Law Courts in this matter and not to allow anything to dissuade them from discussing the reforms with Mr. Montagu. The New Era of Lucknow, however, says that her advice may be in consonance with the undertaking she gave to the Viceroy to obtain a calm atmosphere during Mr. Montagu's visit but that it will never be acceptable to the Muhammadans.

Comments on the reported raid on the London Office of the Indian Home Rule League.

Young India (14), 28th Nov.

23. "The news which was published on Monday last of a raid on the London Offices of the Home Rule for India League is astonishing, but it need not unduly disturb our equanimity. The Home Rule League Office in London is the last place where sedition and incitement to assassination would receive encouragement, and Commander Wedgwood is the last person in the world to have written a preface to a book which contains such incitement. At present we have only the opinion of a Tory Home Secretary to go upon, and Sir George Cave's record at the Home Office is not of a character to engender any great respect for either his judicial or liberal qualities. We suspect, ourselves, that the search for this so-called seditious book was regarded by the Scotland Yard authorities as a useful occasion for the examination of the correspondence of the League Office."

Comments on the proscription of Mr. Lala Lajpatrai's book 'An open letter to the Prime Minister of England'.

Dnyán Prakásh (37), 27th Nov.; Indian Social Reformer* (3), 2nd Dec.

24. Government have already proscribed Lala Lajpatrai's book Young India. It appears they have now proscribed another publication of his entitled 'An open letter to the Prime Minister of England'. We are unable to pronounce any opinion on it as it never reached this country. No one will, however, believe that an experienced politician of the type of Lala Lajpatrai would propound objectionable views. Indeed his former publication Young India was praised by the English newspapers. People will naturally conclude, therefore, that Government proscribed the present pamphlet with their usual arbitrariness. [The Indian Social Reformer remarks :—" Those, who know something of Lala Lajpatrai's religious and philanthropic work in India, will be extremely slow to believe, without definite proof, the Home Secretary's information as to his having been subsidised by German agents."]

Alleged ill-effects of the Bohra meeting recently held in Bombay.

Deshi Mitra (64), 29th Nov.

25. Commenting upon the decision of a police case in which certain Bohras of Ujjain were sentenced and fined for inhuman attacks upon an old Bohra and his son and daughter-in-law, the Deshi Mitra writes :—The fanaticism displayed at Ujjain is proved to have been due to the public meeting of the Bohras held at Bombay. Some Bohras of Surat had to be fined owing to being thrown into an excitement by the proceedings of the Bombay meeting! The fracas at Nágpur was also due to the Bombay meeting. The Bombay meeting of the Bohras is thus responsible for sowing the seeds of disunion and discord. The main dispute has arisen because certain members of the Bohra community want an account of the charitable property administered by the Mullaji who is said to have refused to give any account of the property held by him. The Vaishnav Maharaj once exercised power similar to that now enjoyed by the Mulla. But those days are gone. The Bohras and their Mullaji would, therefore, do well to recognise the change time has wrought and act accordingly.

Duty of Mussalmans of Bombay Presidency to help the victims of the riots in Arrah District (Behar).

Akhbár-e-Islám (57), 26th Nov.

26. Referring to the Arrah riots, the Akhbár-e-Islám remarks that the time that is passing at present is not only critical for the Muhammadans but one calculated to inflame the minds of orthodox Moslems. It severely deplores the apathy of the Muhammadans in the country as a whole, and of those of the Bombay Presidency in particular, towards the innocent Muhammadans of Arrah who have, observes the paper, fallen victims to the oppression of men belonging to alien communities. It characterises the silence of the leading Moslems of Bombay City as unpardonable. The paper then proceeds :—How many meetings have been held by the Muhammadans of Bombay and of the Presidency to show their sympathy and render help to the Muhammadans of Arrah who, together with their children, have been done to death by the Hindus, and to others who have been living in abject misery? We have to say with regret that not a single one has been held; and if there was one in an obscure corner, what weight could it carry? Even in that meeting there was no mention made of any help (to be rendered to those in want) as if Bombay did not possess any Muhammadans. Many attempts have been made to blow the Home Rule trumpet among the Muhammadans with the help of up-to-date-looking Moslems, and purblind and unwary Muhammadans contribute their help to the cause to the tune of hundreds of rupees, but it is both surprising and regretable that these same Muhammadan Home Rulers have not a pie to give to the oppressed Moslems of Arrah. Perhaps they think that by rendering pecuniary help to the Arrah Muhammadans they would give offence to their Hindu guides who are to obtain temporal and spiritual salvation for them.

Appeal to Government to regulate the prices of foodstuffs, etc., in the Bombay Presidency.

Rást Goftár (31), 25th Nov.; Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 1st Dec.

27. Dwelling upon the high prices of commodities generally and of foodstuffs and other necessaries of life in particular in all parts of the Bombay Presidency, the Rást Goftár declares that the middle classes are suffering great hardship owing to the heavy rise in prices. It supports the complaints made by the people of Broach in the petition they submitted to the Bombay Government in this connection. In common with the petitioners, the paper inquires why the prices of indigenous products should increase so heavily and, suggesting that Government should not allow the prices of necessaries of life, such as ghee, milk, fuel, flour, vegetables, grain, etc., to be steadily increased, remarks that they should no longer delay in coming to the rescue of the poor subjects. [The Jám-e-Jamshed is also entirely in accord with the suggestions made by the Broach petitioners and remarks that the state of things that has been deplored in the above-mentioned petition obtains in the whole of the Presidency. It also favours the appointment by Government of a committee to control the prices of foodstuffs and to enforce them upon the merchants.]

The system of issuing Treasury Bills should be continued even after the war.

Dnyán Prakásh (37), 29th Nov.

28. The Dnyán Prakásh approves of the decision of Government to issue Treasury Bills and writes :—Although this arrangement is intended to be a war measure we trust that it will be continued even after the war ends. It is necessary that our Government should borrow, as far as possible, all the money that they want in the country itself. The present method of utilising the balances at the disposal of Government requires to be radically changed if it is to be made more profitable. It is neither desirable nor possible to continue the existing system and our Government should benefit by their experience of the last three or four years.

Comments on the security taken from the Hindusthán newspaper.

Hindusthán (21), 24th Nov.

29. Referring to the recent order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Bombay, demanding two securities totalling Rs. 1,000 from the Hindusthán under the Indian Press Act, the paper remarks that since its proprietorship has been now transferred from an individual to a Limited Company the question of security is one more directly affecting its new proprietors, i.e., the public, rather than an individual. It then observes :—We shall say this much in connection with the policy of this paper that while remaining completely loyal to the British Government we have made endeavours to fight for the rights of the public. Our loyalty towards Government does not abate by reason of their demanding security from us, but at the same time the fact shows to what extent the Press Act robs the leading public journals of their independence. We shall not be backward in discharging our duty towards the public because of the present Government demand for security. Having regard to the manner in which the Press Act was administered in other Presidencies, we believed that under the regime of Lord Willingdon the said Act was worked in our Presidency with less rigour ; but it is natural that such steps taken under the Press Act against public journals may spread feelings of regret among the public at a time when the Secretary of State for India has come on a visit to this country for pacifying the Indian people. The Hindusthán had appeared before the public in order to serve both the King and the people, but it is our regret that that policy has not found favour with the authorities. We shall discharge our duty. We shall not falter in doing our duty by the State, but (at the same time) we shall pray to the Almighty to give us strength to fulfil our duty towards the public.

Hardships of talatis.

Sandesh (116), 27th Nov.

30. A correspondent writes in the Sandesh :—The talatis are rightly classed amongst the most honest servants of Government. But whereas the men in the Police and the Forest Departments are provided with clothing and have comfortable quarters to live in in addition to a handsome salary, the poor talatis have to work on a miserably low stipend. The treatment that they receive at the hands of the mamlatdar and the other subordinate officers in the Revenue Department is also most unsympathetic. Last year the talatis in the Bhiwandi Taluka of the Thána District were directed to work for four days in the taluka office and for three days in their own villages during the week. As this order was most inconvenient they endeavoured to get it cancelled and being unsuccessful they tendered their resignations hoping thereby to attract the attention of the Collector to their grievance. That official, however, showed his readiness to accept their resignations and the poor talatis had ultimately to resume work on reduced grades!

Necessity of increasing the pay of Vaccinators.
Kesari (106), 27th Nov.

31. One "Hari Sharma" writes to the Kesari saying that the grades fixed in 1872 in the Department of Sanitation and Vaccination have not yet been revised and complains that the pay is very low, that Vaccinators have to vaccinate 1,920 children every year, that Talatis do not help them as the Kulkarnis did in the work and that Birth and Death Registers according to which the Vaccinators have to work are not properly kept by the uneducated Police Patels. He adds:—If they ask for promotion they are told it is war-time. But what other expenditure of Government has been stopped? The Police are given increments during war-time. Prices of all articles have gone up, but Vaccinators do not even receive grain compensation allowance. We hope some Honourable Member of the Council will ask some questions regarding the pay of Vaccinators.

Grievances of garden land holders in Bhimthadi Taluka (Poona).
Kesari (106), 27th Nov.

32. The Kesari supports in general the representation of the holders of garden lands in Bhimthadi Taluka (Poona) to the Superintending Engineer and says that many of the grievances regarding the supply of canal water are due to new orders issued according to the whims of officials. It adds:—Why should the rule about the height and breadth of mounds round sugar-cane fields be rigidly enforced? The construction of mounds costs a good deal more than formerly and the Bagayatdars should be given some concessions. Who would say that the request of these men for the grant of new stocks in exchange as the old ones have become too soft by watering, is unreasonable? It is also quite necessary that water rates should be realised in March and not in January. The one great defect in the recovery of assessment is that the rayat has to pay it before he has gathered his crops and consequently he has to resort to the savakar. What wisdom is there in sticking rigidly to the dates of recovery? The officials should remove of their own accord the grievances of rayats. The contentment of rayats is a source of great strength to Government. Should the officials then add to this strength or weaken it through obstinacy?

Petition of Kaira agriculturists for remission of revenue.
Kaira Vartamán (67), 28th Nov.

33. The Kaira Vartamán endorses the petition submitted by the cultivators of the Kaira District bringing to the notice of Government the loss suffered by them owing to excessive rains and praying for remission of land revenue. It expresses a hope that Government will be pleased to enquire into the matter and grant the favour asked for. It expresses confidence that the Honourable Mr. Patel and the Honourable Mr. Parekh will make all possible efforts in the Bombay Legislative Council to secure the relief asked for by the cultivators. It asks the Home Rule League of Kaira to send a deputation to His Excellency the Governor in the matter.

Bombay postmen and their last strike.
Sánj Vartamán (32), 29th Nov.

34. The Sánj Vartamán, after referring to the dissatisfaction prevailing among the postmen of Bombay over the settlement arrived at after the recent strike and the Government promise to give them further increase in their salaries, makes mention of the refusal of the postal peons to draw their salaries for the months of September and October last unless they are paid for the period of the strike. It asks Government to give the postal peons their salaries as requested by them as a special case to avoid the infliction of further hardships upon the poor people.

Comments on the last annual report of the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of Bombay.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 28th Nov.; Bombay Samáchár (60), 1st Dec.

35. Praja Mitra and Pársi remarks that the Government Resolution on the report of the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of Bombay for the year 1916 affords melancholy reading. It regards the Government policy of effecting economy in the matter of sanitation as erroneous. It maintains that the attempt on the part of Government to vindicate the failure of the Sanitary Department to combat malaria effectually produces mingled feelings of surprise and regret. The paper does not approve of the action of Government in raising the price of quinine, which is being sold to the public through the Post Office, when the efficacy of that drug has been recognised in keeping down malaria, which is, on the whole, claiming a heavier toll of mortality than the plague itself. It requests the Governor in Council to make provision, at any cost, for enabling all classes of the public to procure it with ease. It also cannot agree with the Government policy of expecting the public to take what precautionary measures they like to prevent the spread of plague in particular areas which might result from the influx of people from other plague-infected parts and suggests that Government should, in order to prevent such exodus, provide temporary abodes, with light, water and other facilities, on the outskirts of the infected areas. [The Bombay Samáchár refers to the virulent nature of the plague epidemic raging at present at Ahmedabad and wishes that Government would come to the succour of Ahmedabad before the disease there extends to other parts of the Presidency. It believes that Government ought to have given precuniary help to the Ahmedabad Municipality as they had done to the Poona Municipality for the extermination of rats. The paper also regrets that Government could not see their way to send Sub-Assistant Surgeons to parts of the Bombay Presidency other than Sind and the Kaira District in the year 1916 to assist in fighting malaria, as was their wont in previous years.]

Comments on the Bombay Exhibition of Foodstuffs, etc.

Gujaráti (17), 2nd Dec., Eng. cols.

36. "The present exhibition is doubtless a great success, so far as it goes. But if it leads to the establishment of at least one or two Swadeshi Stores on a large scale containing the foods and household requisites that are to be seen at the Exhibition, it will have achieved lasting good. Otherwise, there will be left behind the bare catalogues which, so far as the general public is concerned, are of little practical value. The articles must be made easily accessible to all in a city like Bombay, and the object which the organizers of the exhibition had in view will only then be attained. We hope Lord Willingdon's Government, the Executive Committee and public-spirited citizens will consider this suggestion and not delude themselves with the belief that bare spectacular shows, however dazzling and tempting, will afford genuine help to the householder and consumer in general after the Exhibition has been closed."

Alleged spread of lotteries in Surat city.

Deshi Mitra (64), 29th Nov.

37. The Deshi Mitra complains that lottery tickets of various Native States are allowed to be sold in Surat without any hindrance from the Police. It further complains that bogus lotteries are started by various commercial firms to promote the sale of their own goods in the city. It draws the attention of the authorities to the provisions of the Penal Code which prohibit lotteries, the opening of offices for the sale of lottery tickets or the advertisement of lotteries, and asks them to put down the evil and save the people from falling victims to the mania for speculation or gambling.

Plague at Ahmedabad.
Gujarāti Punch (19), 25th Nov.

38. The Gujarāti Punch complains of lack of proper supervision on the part of the Health Department of Ahmedabad and of failure to take measures to combat the ravages of plague in that city. It also complains of the hardships of the people owing to the scanty supply of water which the Municipality allow owing to the choking up of the drains. It refers to the faulty system of registration of deaths in the city and suggests that a more efficient system should be adopted particularly in the case of those communities that bury their dead. [Elsewhere the paper protests against the opening of the Gujarat College at a time when plague is raging very furiously and suggests that the College be closed and the students granted their terms as was done when plague prevailed in Poona.]

Alleged tendency of officials in Sind to interfere unduly and high-handedly in matters vitally affecting the principle of local self-government.
New Times (7), 28th Nov.

39. "While the Secretary of State for India along with the Viceroy is considering schemes for the progressive realisation of responsible self-government, serious efforts are being made by District Collectors to impose house-tax on the various towns in Sind.......... Only recently a storm was raised in Hyderabad by the proposal to impose house-tax, and Lárkána was set ablaze with excitement by the high-handed action of Mr. Bolus. The little peaceful town of Rohri has been disturbed and unduly excited by the proposal to impose Shahukari tax. And an esteemed correspondent from Shikárpur now informs that the new Collector Mr. Rothfeld is trying his best to persuade the municipality to accept the proposal to impose house-tax there. The Collector was interviewed by the panchayat and some respectable citizens who entered a strong note of protest.......... The situation created by such excessive, undue and high-handed interference of the officials in matters vitally affecting the principle of local self-government requires united action on the part of public bodies and municipalities throughout Sind. The official efforts to encroach upon the rights of local self-government and to create factions between the two communities—Hindus and Muhammadans—must be checked by united public protests from all parts of Sind. The protests of individual towns have proved insignificant and are unable to produce any effect on the minds of officials and we believe it is high time that a representation by all municipalities be made to the Commissioner in Sind. The people in Sind feel helpless against official executive defying all public voice and public sentiment; and it is necessary in the interests of public peace and contentment that a joint representation be made without delay. The question is not simply that of paying the tax. It is one of principle, a principle respected and cherished by every civilized Government, that of respecting the will and sentiment of the people in matters of local legislation. The principle is being mercilessly trampled upon by official high-handedness and we earnestly appeal to all public bodies in the Province to seriously consider the question."

EDUCATION.

Comments on the proposed Joint Board for the conduct of the Matriculation and School Final Examinations.
Jam-e-Jamshed (24), 29th Nov.

40. The Jam-e-Jamshed strongly deprecates the compromise arrived at between the University and Government in the matter of appointing a Joint Board which will conduct the Matriculation and the School Final Examinations and supervise the work of the schools which prepare candidates for these examinations, on the ground that the loss of direct control on the part of the University over the Matriculation Examination will mean the loss of control over secondary education in the Presidency. It reminds its readers of the exhortation of the late Sir Pherozshah Metha not to allow the control over the Matriculation Examination to go out of the hands of the University, and alleges that those who have consented to the compromise have not heeded his advice. It is afraid the Joint Board will be dominated by officials.

MUNICIPALITIES.

Comments on the Government Resolution reviewing the working of the Municipalities in the Bombay Presidency during the year 1915-16.

Rást Goftár (31), 2nd Dec., Eng. cols.

*41. Commenting upon the Government Resolution reviewing the working of the Municipalities in the Bombay Presidency during the year 1915-16, the Rást Goftár remarks:—"We think the reports from the Commissioner in Sind and the Commissioners of the three divisions in the Presidency proper should be published so as to allow the public to judge those reports for themselves.......... 'The Hyderabad Municipality was superseded during the year, while the municipalities of Rájápur, Erandol and Vámbori continued under supersession'. We are left entirely in the dark as to the circumstances under which these Municipalities came to be superseded. The Sind Hyderabad Municipality had a non-official Chairman for many years, and its supersession is a serious blow to local self-government in Sind. Hyderabad is the second most important Municipality in Sind and its supersession is a serious matter. A change of President or a reconstitution of the Municipality might have met the situation, but the extremely drastic step of supersession requires a full explanation which cannot be found in the Government Resolution. We find that the Erandol and the Dharangaon Municipalities, which were under supersession, have been reconstituted. Hyderabad is a more important Municipality and should be reconstituted without unnecessary delay. It was superseded on the 6th December 1915."

Bombay Samáchár (60), 26th Nov.

42. Referring to the resolution recently published by Government on the administration of municipalities in the Bombay Presidency, the Bombay Samáchár remarks that the opinion expressed by Government as to the satisfactory working of municipalities with non-official presidents will help to remove the differences between Government and the public on the question of non-official municipal presidents, which has a close bearing on the subject of the development of local self-government. It hopes that, in view of the success that has attended the experiment of allowing city municipalities to have elected presidents, the difference between the city and other municipalities in this connection will also be done away with. The paper also wishes that, in order to remove the chances of a tussle, such as at times goes on in some cases between the Chief Executive Officer of a municipality and its non-official president, the position and functions of each should be defined by statute. It further dwells upon the necessity of improving the resources and financial condition of the municipalities and, referring to their steadily increasing wants in matters of education, sanitation, etc., it maintains that their progress cannot be expected to be rapid or even substantial as long as they have to remain dependent upon Government loans and grants from time to time. The paper, accordingly, believes that the time has now come for Government to place at their disposal additional sources of revenue, or failing that to make provision for systematically distributing among them a particular portion of the provincial revenues.

Complaint against the Alandi (Poona) Municipality.

Kesari (106), 27th Nov.

43. Messrs. Bapu Balkrishna Joshi, Shripat Vithal Deshpande, Balwant Babaji Kushade, Kashinath Bhau Golande and Virachand Hatichand write to the Kesari from Alandi (District Poona):—At present people in our town are being subjected to a great tyranny. Till now, we had only one Municipal tax, the house-tax. But it has been enhanced so much from this year that we shall have to abandon our houses and go away. Some houses have to pay 10 times the original tax. Estimates of house-rent have been made according to the sweet will of the authorities and 12½ per cent. on that estimate has been assessed as house-tax. Many people are ready to hand over their houses to the Municipality at a lower rental than that estimated by the Municipality. Houses in the same locality have been very differently assessed. Prominent people have no other course but to leave the town. Our misfortunes are not at an end. 25 per cent. of the house-tax is to be paid as sanitation tax and we have to pay also conservancy cess and Bhaji tax. As all the members are not elected and responsible to the people, the officials are dominating the Municipality and the people are being subjected to such tyranny. Will Government redress the grievance?

The house-tax at Lárkána (Sind).

New Times (7), 24th Nov.

44. In the course of a lengthy letter in the New Times on the resolution finally passed by the Lárkána Municipality to impose house-tax, an anonymous correspondent remarks:—"The conservancy for which the halalkhore cess is being levied and gives an income of Rs. 4,000, already costs the Municipality Rs. 6,000. Thus the savings of 2 or 3 thousand rupees from the new house-tax will be absorbed by the above conservancy expenses. May we therefore understand that the house-tax was being imposed to meet these 2 thousand rupees, the excess expenditure on conservancy? Was it thus worthwhile to disturb the minds of the people and cause such a genuine dissatisfaction for realising Rs. 2,000 or 3,000? The people never raised the least cry that the halalkhore cess was not a suitable one or was pressing hard upon them. It was a tax paid for direct service done to the people, and the poor and the rich paid it most willingly from time immemorial. Even the increase of 2 or 3 thousand rupees towards this cess would not have been grudged by the public. But there was absolutely no necessity for realizing about 2 or 3 thousand rupees from the people since the terminal tax lately introduced has already been giving to the Municipality a profit of about Rs. 12,000 a year. No one who has full insight into this house-tax question, and who knows that most of the assessable houses in Lárkána are ancestral, in the occupation of the owners themselves, most of whom are poor, can in fairness urge that the remission of the halalkhore cess by imposition of the house-tax would in any way relieve the poor. The poor having assessable houses paid a lighter tax and paid it for service done but now they shall have to pay a much heavier tax which they so much hate. Is this relief to the poor or a hoax?"

NATIVE STATES.

Comments on the state of affairs at Wadhwán (Káthiáwár).

Young India (14), 28th Nov.

45. "The Wadhwán trouble does not seem to have ended yet. The Administrator, who was baffled in his attempt to break the strike of the Banias, has now resorted, we learn, to more refined methods of harassing the people. One of these is to insist on the people of Wadhwán city obtaining licenses to visit the camp. Now anyone who knows the intimate relations which exist between the city and the camp will be able to realise the amount of trouble which people are put to by this order. So far as one can see there is no justification whatever—not even the prevalence of plague, because the camp is free from it—for this action of Mr. Kadri. It is amazing that the vagaries of this retired Indian bureaucrat have yet failed to earn the disapproval of the Local Government."

Hindusthán (21), 26th Nov.; Káthiawár Times (26), 28th Nov.; Akhbár-e-Islám (57), 29th Nov.; Indian Loyalist (23), 30th Nov.

46. Prefacing its comments upon the present general strike at Wadhwán with the remark that the Chief of Wadhwán has been unfortunately deprived of his authority by the British Government, the Hindusthán observes that by issuing his orders placing restrictions on the playing of music in public streets Khan Bahadur Kadri might have perhaps intended to secure for the Muhammadans of Wadhwán the rights enjoyed by their co-religionists in other parts of the country. It understands that not only did the Muhammadans never raise any objections in the past against the playing of music near the mosques but they themselves played music there. It inquires if Khan Bahadur Kadri ever received any petition on the subject from the Muhammadans before he issued the orders above referred to, and if he did, whether he ever consulted any leader of the Hindu community in connection with any of their demands. The paper does not believe that the prejudiced opinion Mr. Kadri has formed about the Hindus of Wadhwán is likely to undergo any change for the better. It observes that the present situation at Wadhwán is due to Mr. Kadri, and regard being had to the fact that the public mind has not yet been satisfied it is necessary that another capable officer who can treat the public with sympathy should be appointed as Administrator of Wadhwán in the place of Mr. Kadri. The paper also appeals to the Agent to the Governor in Káthiáwár to appoint a special officer to ascertain whether the present Administrator or the people are in the wrong. [The Káthiáwár Times publishes the purport of a letter from a Wadhwán correspondent in the course of which the writer wants to know, in connection with the strike, how long the kind British Government wish to see the loyal people of Wadhwán continue in their present state of misery. He maintains that in spite of the repressive attitude of Mr. Kadri and Mr. Amanatulla, the Superintendent of Police, the Hindus of Wadhwán have a high respect for the British Government. He concludes with requesting the latter to satisfy the Hindus by doing them prompt justice. Taking exception to the above comments of the Hindusthán, the Akhbár-e-Islám inquires if it is proper to maintain that the partial and chaotic regimé of the former ruler of Wadhwán should be continued even by a Moslem representative of the British Government? It remarks that restrictions upon the playing of music are not in any way antagonistic to the religious tenets of the Hindus and that if Mr. Kadri had failed to respect the religious feelings of the Muhammadans on considerations of Hindu opposition he would have proved himself to be a weak Administrator. The Indian Loyalist does not lay the fault of the present strike entirely at the doors of Mr. Kadri. While hoping that the latter will not fail to satisfy the minds of the public in the matter of the restrictions on music if their objections are properly placed before him, it advises the Hindus of Wadhwán to beware of the instigations of their ostensible friends who are really their enemies.]

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 7th December 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 49 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 8th December 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

- Bombay Legislative Council: Interpellations in the— 30
- British rule:
  - Comments on Mr. Karimbhoy A. Peerbhoy's evidence before the Industrial Commission . . . . 8—11
  - Comments on the proceedings of the last meeting of the Madras Legislative Council 21
  - Government should take measures against the undue raising of house rents 20
  - Government should take measures to alleviate the hardships of people owing to high prices 19
  - Lala Lajpat Rai's book and the London Police 15
  - Protest against Government servants like Mr. Justice A. M. Kajiji mixing themselves up in political movements 17
  - Reflections on the Bakr-Id Riots in the United Provinces . . . 18
  - The Bengal Government and the internees . . . . 12 & 13
  - Treatment of Bengalis interned under the Defence of India Act . 14
  - Young men in India often join the malcontents because Englishmen forget their manners and adopt a snarling superior attitude towards Indians 16
- Excise: Protest against the proposed re-introduction of the system of auctioning liquor-shop licenses 33
- Indian Political Reforms:
  - Alleged conflict between a Home Rule propagandist and the Talati of Bedia (Godhra) 5
  - Comments on the memorial of the non-official members of the Bombay Legislative Council to Mr. Montagu 3
  - Comments on the refusal to accept the All-India Moslem League address 6
  - Government should put forward their own Reforms Scheme for discussion 2
  - Only some important and qualified communities should be given special electorates 4
  - The Bombay Presidency Social Reform Association's representation to the Secretary of State for India 7
  - What will be the result if the demands of the Congress-League Scheme are not granted? 1
- Judicial matters: Comments on a recent libel case disposed of by Mr. Oliveira, Third Presidency Magistrate 32

B 374—a OCN

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

Medical matters: Comments on the triennial report of the Surgeon-General with the Government of Bombay 34

Press Act: Comments on the demand of security from the Hindusthán newspaper 31

Public service:

Comments on the extension of Sir Mahadev Chaubal's term of office . 29

Comments on the extension of Sir Michael O'Dwyer's term of office as Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjáb 28

War:

Comments on Lord Lansdownes letter regarding terms of peace . . 22

Comments on the Russian situation . . . . 24—26

Probable effects of the capture of Jerusalem on Muhammadan feeling in India 23

The British should place more confidence in Indians if they want to win the— 27

LEGISLATION—

Comments on the Compulsory Education Act passed by the Bombay Legislative Council . . . . 35—37

EDUCATION—

Disapproval of the rejection by the University of the proposal to permit matriculation candidates to answer in vernaculars. 38

Suggestions for the utilization of the grant of Rs. 1,00,000 for scholarships to Muhammadans in Sind 39

MUNICIPALITIES—

Broach: Appeal to Government to inquire into the alleged misuse of the space cleared under the Borahwad Improvement Scheme in— . . . 41

Comments on the grant of right to elect Presidents to certain— . . . 40

Larkána: Agitation regarding the house-tax at—(Sind) 42

NATIVE STATES—

Comments on the formation of Cutch-Káthiáwár political association in Bombay 47

Comments on the strike at Wadhwán (Káthiáwár) . . . . . . 43—46

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

What will be the result if the demands of the Congress-League Scheme are not granted?

Mahrátta (5), 9th Dec.

*1. "Will British statesmanship decide to flout the Indian National Congress? 'Strong men' are capable of anything! Do we not know that the All-Moslem demand for the release of the Alis supported by non-Moslems is still treated with scant courtesy? That is only one of a number of instances in which public opinion has been flouted. .... But we submit that even weak men become transformed into giants—by any continued ill-treatment which they receive at the hands of their strong masters. Changes in Russia are a living testimony to the truth of our proposition. Gone is the autocrat of all the Russias, and many another autocrat with him and after him and M. Lenin, a choice of the workmen of Russia is now at the top. Whatever changes may hereafter take place, the very fact that a M. Lenin has come to the top and guided Russian policy for a month has a significance which not only the crowned heads but also the land and money monopolising classes throughout the world will not undervalue, if they are sane. The too patient, too ignorant, too apathetic, too credulous, in fine, the too weak Russian peasant and workman has, thanks to the self-sacrificing work of the Russian Intelligentia through 4 or 5 decades, been transformed into the chastiser of autocrats and plutocrats!"

Government should put forward their own reform schemes for discussion.

Kesari (106), 4th Dec.

2. When the Indian capital was removed to Delhi, the question of Provincial autonomy also was discussed. After a time, however, it was sought to explain away the phrase, but as God has the good of India at heart, there was the great war in Europe and He made British statesmen sing the glory of Freedom of the People and of National Independence. He created a feeling of shame in the heart of Englishmen that the whole world would laugh at them and revile them if they sacrificed their all for the independence of a petty nation with whom they had nothing to do while they did nothing for India, useful, generous and friendly to them. Thus the question of Swarájya came to the front unexpectedly and it has ended in the arrival of the Secretary of State in India and the reception of deputations by him. The discussion of a Minister of the Crown with the representatives of the people will strengthen the British Empire in India a hundred times more than the stones used in the foundation of New Delhi. We leave the reader to imagine what ideas must have been inspired by the pompous procession of Lord Curzon at Delhi and by the plain reception of Indian leaders in a beggarly tent by Mr. Montagu, in the hearts of the people. It is unmistakably proved by Mr. Montagu's preliminary work in India that British statesmen now realise the true way of maintaining the Empire. Just as it is important to know the right way, it is equally important to travel rapidly by that way. We doubt how far Mr. Montagu will be successful in this respect. We do not know as yet what Government are going to give us and people cannot do anything more than indulge in speculations. Lord Morley was a simple and straightforward man and he laid before the nation his draft scheme. Then the people had no scheme of their own but Government's was ready. Now the case is reversed. Before discussion is to go on, it must have something to proceed upon. What is the use of a baseless discussion? It would have been very satisfactory if Government had accepted the Congress-League Scheme as a basis and suggested some changes in it. If they had produced a scheme of their own without any binding force, the representatives of the people could have had useful discussion with Mr. Montagu thereupon. But real discussion is impossible as there is no Government scheme. There are no signs that the Congress-League scheme will be fully accepted, and attempts should be made throughout the nation to inform Mr. Montagu through all ways and means that unless the whole scheme is accepted, there will be no contentment. Till Government submit to popular criticism their own scheme, they have no right to pass vain criticisms on the Congress-League scheme or to cross-examine those that wait upon them. Unless we know the value of the Government scheme, we say plainly that it would be ridiculing and reviling public opinion to ask any person: "Will you accept a scheme more restricted than the Congress-League scheme? Will you remain contented in that case?"

Comments on the memorial of the non-official members of the Bombay Legislative Council to Mr. Montagu.

Jágaruk (102), 30th Nov., Eng. cols.

3. "The non-official members of the Bombay Legislative Council have submitted a memorial to the State Secretary for India in which they have expressly stated that they are opposed to making any special arrangements for the adequate representation of the Backward Classes! The list of the signatories includes a number of names from the Moderate camp and yet the Moderate paper of Poona is ready to support our demand and actually asks us to state the conditions on which we are willing to support the Congress-League Scheme of reforms! Really, if incoherence, internal dissensions and utter want of unity are the unmistakable signs of the approaching death of an institution, the above illustration testifies to the truth of Mr. Prithwish Chandra Roy's statement that the Moderate party is dead!"

Only some important and qualified communities should be given special electorates.

Chandrodaya (34), 3rd Dec.

4. We do not think that the demand of Hindu backward classes for special electorates is against the Congress scheme. But some leaders have suggested the formation of mixed electorates as special caste electorates would strengthen caste differences. What is wanted is the inclusion of representatives of important castes that are in minority whether it be through mixed or special electorates. We do not insist upon any particular form of electorates. We are of opinion that the Swarájya scheme should be accepted without any such conditions. We suggest to those who want special members and special electorates that they should first advocate the Swarájya scheme and then ask for rights for their castes. We can never support them if they think that their merit lies in their caste. We support them only if educated and independent men of different castes come forward with the object of performing national service. We may even admit that this question of division of powers should be taken up after the Swarájya scheme is sanctioned. We think that some important backward classes who have acquired fitness by education will certainly get the right of special electorates. But it would be ridiculous if every backward class asks for it. It is but proper for some important backward communities to ask for the right on the strength of their fitness.

Alleged conflict between a Home Rule propagandist and the Talati of Bedia (Godhra).

Hindusthán (21), 3rd Dec.

5. The Hindusthán writes:—A correspondent from Godhra writes to us to the effect that on the 16th November one Lallu Bapu who had undertaken to ask the people of Bedia to sign the Home Rule League memorial was roughly treated by the Talati of the place and his papers were snatched away from him. The papers were handed back to the said Lallu Bapu at the intervention of the Fouzdar of the place. But the Talati sent for him again, used abusive language towards him and again snatched away the papers from him. The Godhra Home Rule League is going to take legal steps in the matter.

Comments on the refusal to accept the All-India Moslem League address.

Kesari (106), 4th Dec.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 6th Dec., Eng. cols.

6. The Kesari says that there was very little life in the reception of deputations that waited upon Mr. Montagu as the Government of India resolved that there should not be the least change in the programme already fixed upon and as Mr. Montagu has placed himself entirely at the disposal of the Government of India. It further remarks:—Even this lifeless reception did not pass off without any accident. We have already alluded to the one-sided, selfish, impracticable demands insulting to the Hindus made by Muhammadans. The Government of India objected to the deputation not on account of these selfish demands, but because the question of the Muhammadan internees was raised in the address and as the Muhammadans declined to make any changes, the deputation was not received and the entire Muhammadan community was disappointed. The Government of India should have adopted a more statesmanlike and sympathetic attitude in the matter. It was Government that encouraged the idea of the release of the interned, but very few except Mrs. Besant and her colleagues got the benefit of the changed policy of Government. That a person who is given the honour of an interview with the Secretary of State should not be allowed to be present at any public meeting in Delhi is not only an insult to the individual concerned (Mr. Tilak) but also to the Secretary of State himself. Many minor deputations have been received but the deputation of All-India Muhammadans has not been received. It has made the already enraged Muhammadans more indignant still. We say it is impolitic because Government do not see that this disappointment will be many times more dangerous than the evils anticipated by Government if they released Mahomed Ali. Is there no cool-headed, farsighted adviser with the Government of India now as at the time of Lord Hardinge? [Commenting on the refusal by the Government of India of the address of the All-India Moslem Deputation, the Praja Mitra and Pârsi writes:—"We can only say that this incident is being deplored throughout India while it will unnecessarily embitter the Muhammadan community. There would have been some justification for the action of the Government of India if the Viceroy or the Secretary of State had to reply to the address, but as no reply is made to any address, no exception need have been taken to a passage which referred to a widely-felt grievance."]

The Bombay Presidency Social Reform Association's representation to the Secretary of State for India.

Indian Social Reformer (3), 9th Dec.

*7. "We are surprised and sorry to learn that permission has not been granted to the presentation of the memorial drafted by the Bombay Presidency Social Reform Association to his Excellency the Viceroy and Mr. Montagu. The memorial was printed in the Reformer of November 18. We do not know what the reasons were which actuated Government to adopt this attitude which is completely at variance with the expressions of sympathy, often uttered by the Governor and other members of Government, with social reform. Lord Sydenham has been telling people in England that Indians are doing nothing for social reform and are, therefore, unfit for self-government. The attempt to place before the Secretary of State an authoritative refutation of this view by one of the most important and influential social reform associations in the country is curtly refused. It may be noted here that representations have been presented to the Secretary of State advocating all sorts of fantastic schemes, one of them, for example, suggesting that the Muhammadan population should henceforth be judged according to Muhammadan civil and criminal codes. We are sure that it is not the wish of Government that Mr. Montagu should go home with the impression that absolutely nothing is being done for social reform by Indians, and yet they could not have acted worse if that had been their aim. A meeting of the Council of the Association is to consider the situation created by this arbitrary and unjust refusal, and we would suggest that steps should be taken to bring it to the notice of His Majesty's Government and Members of Parliament."

Comments on Mr. Karimbhoy A. Peerbhoy's evidence before the Industrial Commission.

Young India (14), 5th Dec.

8. "Speaking for ourselves, we must frankly admit that we have never entertained any high regard for such bodies as the Industrial Commission. It is a well-known method with a bureaucratic Government, whether in India or elsewhere, of shelving important public questions and has been systematically followed on every conceivable occasion. When in response to the strong feeling that existed in the country, on the subject of industrial development, Government appointed the Commission, instead of taking more practical measures, it was felt—and felt very rightly—that Government did not view their responsibilities in the proper manner. The Commission started on their progress a year ago but then took a prolonged holiday, while the Chairman was engaged on war duties. They resumed their progress early last month, and busied themselves with the examination of witnesses who were generally regarded as 'safe' and approved of by a Secretary to the Local Government. Much of the evidence recorded by the Commission is of that prosaic description, with which most of us were already familiar. Only towards the close of the session was any new ground broken by a Muhammadan witness—Mr. Karimbhoy Adamjee Peerbhoy.......... The part played by Sir Thomas on this occasion does not add to his credit, nor does it help to exonerate Government, of which he seems to consider himself an indispensable limb.......... We do not wish to say much of his colleagues, who supinely allowed themselves to be led away by his prejudices.......... We believe the European colleagues of Sir Thomas were quite justified in their quiescent reception of the allegations; for it seems to us from the past records of some of them—particularly Mr. Chatterton, who was very kindly nicknamed by somebody as 'Mr. Chatter-box'—that they were there not to find out damning evidence against officials but to help to suppress it. Turning to Mr. Karimbhoy's allegations against Government—to let alone individual officers—they are indeed very serious and merit immediate attention. If the allegations are not openly met, Government stand to suffer very severely in their reputation for fairplay, which is most undesirable.......... We trust Government will realise the full significance of these allegations and furnish a full and satisfactory answer. If the allegations are true, it seems to us that the professed solicitude in the past for Indian industries was non-existent and the state of decadence to which they have been reduced conveys its own moral regarding the part played by Government in the field of Indian industries."

Mahrátta (5), 9th Dec.; Indian Social Reformer (3), 9th Dec.

*9. "Sir Thomas's ruling that the Commission would not publish Mr. Karimbhoy's evidence because it contained allegations against various officials was most preposterous. A statement concerning the working of the rules relating to the purchase of stores by Government Departments to be any way useful for the purpose for which the Indian Industrial Commission is brought into existence (the purpose, namely, of assertaining what are the difficulties of Indian industrialists and how they may be met with a view to make the industrial progress of the nation smooth and rapid) must, wherever necessary, contain detailed accounts of how Indian and European firms are treated by Government officials responsible for Government purchases. Of what earthly use is an Industrial Commission's report, if matters of the above character are strictly eschewed? Sir Thomas did not stop with giving his ruling so far as his Commission was concerned. He was so anxious to suppress Mr. Karimbhoy's 'allegations' againt officials and his evidence in support of these allegations that he gave a gratuitous warning to press representatives. Sir Thomas's assurance that Government were not partial to any firm—what does it indicate? It indicates that Sir Thomas carries with him an attitude which cannot but hamper (as it has hampered) an impartial inquiry into our industrial conditions. A Commission of Inquiry must not take any sides. The men appointed to a Commission should be as far as possible men with a balanced mind, prepared to find even Government (which is admittedly 'human') 'partial to some firms'.......... Sir Thomas in pleading with Mr. Karimbhoy for an inquiry in private said that the accusations such as the latter made against individual officials ought not to be made in public. We are unable to understand this 'ought'. We firmly hold that as Mr. Karimbhoy was asked to give his criticism of the working of certain rules, he was perfectly justified in 'adding a few words regarding his firm's experience of the want of encouragement accorded by Government to purely Indian concerns and the partiality displayed for giving patronage to rival European firms in this country' and that when this evidence came before the Commission, the latter 'ought' to have gone into it fully and cross-examined Mr. Karimbhoy in public, inasmuch as the latter was prepared for such an examination. Sir Thomas in avoiding such an examination has shirked an obvious duty and the Indian members of the Commission who silently acquiesced in Sir Thomas's ruling cannot be congratulated on their conduct."

[The Indian Social Reformer writes:—" Mr. Karimbhoy's complaints may be true or not, but having been invited to give evidence, he had every right to be heard, and we cannot but regret the Chairman's attempt to shut him up."]

Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 4th Dec., Eng. cols.

10. " Sir Thomas was from the start disinclined to go into the very important questions which Mr. Karimbhoy's allegations raised, and in any event seemed eager that the evidence should not be taken in public. It was only Mr. Karimbhoy's exceptional firmness and courage that enabled him to ventilate his grievances, in spite of the Chairman's unsympathetic and somewhat amazing attitude. It almost seems as if the Chairman, in anticipation of the unpleasant disclosures made by Mr. Karimbhoy, tried to frighten him out of his purpose by reading him a lecture, at the very start, on the witness's want of courtesy to the Secretary of the Commission, and of consideration for ' the importance of the Commission and convenience of the members '. We feel that Sir Thomas might have spared us this unedifying spectacle of the Chairman of a public commission rating a witness in the manner of a school-master. But this piece of frightfulness does not seem to have produced the desired effect.......... It seems to us that the charges of preferential treatment and favouritism made out by Mr. Karimbhoy are a matter of grave interest for the Indian public. It is also a matter which falls clearly within the scope of the Commission's inquiry, and should have been closely and carefully investigated, instead of being attempted to be evaded.......... The members of the Commission, or its chairman, instead of being annoyed at these somewhat unpleasant disclosures, should have instituted a most searching inquiry into the allegations. Especially as Mr. Karimbhoy was not indulging in vague assertions, but was quite definite and deliberate in his indictments, and was prepared to substantiate them by facts and documents. How can a matter of this sort be kept private and concealed from the public ? Why should it be concealed, and in whose interest ? Sir Thoma's attempts to justify his view, that this evidence should not be published, and also to persuade Mr. Karimbhoy that he was mistaken in his impression of unfair treatment of Indian concerns, appear to us to be disingenuous in the extreme."

Gujaráti (17), 2nd Dec.; Bombay Samáchár (60), 3rd Dec.; Akhbár-e-Islám (57), 5th Dec.; Shri Venkateshwar (80), 4th Dec.; Kesari (106), 4th Dec.; Dnyán Prakásh (37), 4th Dec.

11. Are Indians to remain hewers of wood and drawers of water ? Can European members of commissions appointed to investigate into the question of the commercial possibilities of India do any substantial good to India ? Such questions suggest themselves to the mind of the Indian people after the evidence of Mr. Karimbhoy A. Peerbhoy before the Industrial Commission in Bombay. It is but natural that Indians should be disappointed with and protest against the manner in which the evidence was taken. The evidence makes it clear that new industries in India will receive encouragement from Government only if they are conducted by Europeans and not by Indians. Sir Thomas Holland ought to have called for the details of Mr. Karimbhoy's allegations instead of trying to prevent his evidence from appearing in the Press. Should not Government institute an enquiry into the matter when it has been brought to light that the tenders of the European firm were accepted when their quotations were higher than those of Mr. Karimbhoy's firm ? Should not the officials who are responsible for such a waste of public money be punished ? What weightier argument can be brought forward for insisting upon the control of the exchequer being placed in the hands of the Indians ? [The Bombay Samáchár draws the attention of Government to the evidence given by Mr. Karimbhoy and asks them to use every means in their power to encourage indigenous industries so that India should be self-supporting after the war. The Akhbár-e-Islám asks Government to take note of the evidence and to encourage Mr. Karimbhoy's enterprise and recognise his services to the country and the Empire. Shri Venkateshwar expresses surprise that a commission should stoop to colour prejudices and that the Indian members should not raise a word of protest against the attitude taken up by the President. The Kesari congratulates the Bombay Chronicle and Mr. Karimbhoy

Peerbhoy for bringing everything to light and says that the conduct of Sir Thomas Holland in trying to keep the whole thing secret was objectionable. The Dnyán Prakásh publishes in extenso Mr. Peerbhoy's evidence and says that a Government enquiry is necessary and that favouritism in these methods should necessarily be put down by Government.]

The Bengal Government and the internees.
Chandrodaya (34), 3rd Dec.

12. Commenting upon Lord Ronaldshay's speech at the Bengal Legislative Council, regarding internees and the impending inquiry, the Chandrodaya thinks it greatly surprising to infer the existence of a conspiracy from some murders of officials and dangerous dacoities and thefts of munitions. It further remarks:—Nobody will think it just to charge the whole of Bengal with anarchism and to intern many youths because of the deeds of some anarchists. Lord Ronaldshay has evidence with him from 1907 and if Governmet believe in it, why did they not openly prosecute Bengalees so long? It is a straightforward way to prove their guilt and hang them instead of harassing them in secret to death. It is not proper for big men like the Governor to dishonour the nation on the strength of incomplete and untrustworthy evidence gathered by the C. I. D. We all feel sorry that Lord Ronaldshay deliberately spoke in the Council about this dangerous charge and that Lala Lajpatrai was charged with being in German pay at the time when Mr. Montagu is in India to consider further grant of Reforms. It is not clear whether the special tribunal to be created will take independent evidence or deliver its judgment on ex parte evidence collected by the C. I. D. Lord Carmichael used to mix with the people and secretly do something harmful to them. But Lord Ronaldshay, arming himself with fierce weapons and thundering terribly, has come forth to battle against the Bengalis. Let us see what will be the outcome.

Subodh Patrika (43), 2nd Dec., Eng. cols.

13. The Subodh Patrika writes:—"If we are to believe Lord Ronaldshay, every one of the 'internees' justly deserved the incarceration, and critics like Sir Rabindranath Tagore, when they maintain that many innocent young men have suffered for the guilty, are grievously in the wrong. In other words, the C. I. D. of Bengal are a most impeccable body, and whomsoever they lay their hands upon is a rightly condemned criminal. Unhappily for the Government, the public in India can never be persuaded to agree to this apotheosis of the C. I. D. The public distrusts the C. I. D. and no words from Lord Ronaldshay will mitigate one jot of the distrust. The reason is that the public has become familiar with their activities, which are clumsy, tactless at best and relentless always in dealing with suspected people, who may be perfectly innocent, and yet by some mischance have come to be in the black books of the department."

Treatment of Bengalis interned under the Defence of India Act.
Mahrátta (5), 9th Dec.

*14. Referring to interpellations in a recent meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council regarding detenus, the Mahrátta writes:—"Quite a large number of questions at the meeting mentioned above referred to Sachindra Nath Das Gupta, Haridas Das and Surendra Nath Kerr who committed suicide. The answers to these questions were not such as would induce the public to put any confidence in Government arrangements in regard to the detenus. We learn from these answers that pending the arrival of adequate financial aid from the higher authorities or from the detenus' own people, the thana police make such advances as are required, but have no funds placed at their disposal for such purposes. It can be easily imagined how the thana police must be treating the detenus' prayers for advances, when no funds for such purposes are placed at their disposal. 'Will the Government be pleased to state how many applications or other representations have been made by detenus or their relatives up-to-date with regard to the non-payment or inadequacy of maintenance allowances and what action has been taken thereon?' To this question the reply was:—'The collection of the information asked for would involve an additional burden on already over-worked officers and Government do not think that the public utility of the information when obtained would be commensurate with the labour entailed.' We do not think that the public have the same idea of 'the public utility' of the information asked for, as Government have. Hundreds of young men, many of them promising students, are interned, and the public, which means men and women with hearts and minds and not some intangible abstraction, cannot congratulate Government on holding so mean an opinion of their duties towards these unfortunate members of their Nation."

Lala Lajpat Rai's book and the London Police.
Kesari (106), 4th Dec.

15. Even an accused person is given an opportunity to meet evidence against him. But Lala Lajpat Rai is being charged with sedition in his absence and it is a question whether he will have an opportunity to defend himself. The Police ruse of searching some individual or institution with some motive of their own, though under another plea, is not a new one. Accordingly the London Police searched the London Home Rule League office. [The paper then refers to Commander Wedgewood's question in Parliament.] As Young India has been prohibited in India, we cannot say anything for or against the book. But the conscience of every Indian will tell him that it can not be objectionable, as Lajpat Rai is the writer and as Commander Wedgwood has written the introduction and as favourable comments have been made on it by influential journals in England like the Nation. The entire Indian nation will protest against the statement of Sir George Cave that it would bring a stain on the reputation of Lala Lajpat Rai. We are surprised that Sir George has charged Lala Rajpat Rai with the still worse crime of receiving a bribe from the Germans. But he declined at the same time to prosecute the company that published the book. We do not know how to characterise the policy of making the worst charges against Lala Lajpat Rai when the minister has no courage to charge Commander Wedgwood who was present or of prosecuting the company. Whatever be the heinous charges against Lala Lajpat Rai, the respect of Indians for him will not at all be lessened till they are proved in the law court. Indians will also strongly protest against any charges made against him in his absence without giving him an opportunity to defend himself.

Young men in India often join the malcontents because Englishmen forget their manners and adopt a snarling, superior attitude towards Indians.
New Times (7), 4th Dec.

*16. The New Times relates the story of a young Egyptian who had been brought up at Cambridge and who addressed his English official superior with the familiarity of language he had learnt at Cambridge; which familiarity being resented by the Englishman, the young Egyptian in disgust joined the Nationalists. The paper then continues :—" The story is true of several young men in India: they 'join the malcontents' because some Englishmen in India not unoften forget their manners and their ideals and adopt a snarling, superior attitude to the Indians. In those suggestive books by the famous Russian novelists—Gogol's 'Inspector General,' Turgenev's 'Mumu,' Dostoyevsky's 'The House of the Dead' and Artzibashev's 'Sanime'—books which are a powerful exposure of the Russian bureaucracy and official inequity, the idea is repeatedly developed that repression is the cause of sedition and revolution. And it seems to us the Indian bureaucracy cannot shake off their responsibility for unrest in the country. The remedy for unrest is not repression, not the Defence of India Act, not a special law, not a 'special Judicial machinery', not the bureaucratic policy of checking free discussions on the platform and in the Press; the remedy for unrest is the tolerance due to every opinion, the justice which rises above all considerations of prestige and privilege, the sympathy which appreciates the new national impulses that are thrilling the Indian people. The remedy for unrest is Freedom."

Protest against Government servants like Mr. Justice A. M. Kajiji mixing themselves up in polical movements.
Islámic Mail (4), 2nd Dec.

17. "The Leader of Allahabad has some reason for being dissatisfied with the Persian Consul at Madras who promoted a Muhammadan Anti-Home Rule Meeting. The Honourable Mr. Bhurgri of Sind recently took objection to the part played at a similar meeting in Sind by the Vazir of Khairpur. We very much regret that Muhammadans holding superior Government posts often indulge in a lapse of this kind and it not only detracts from their position and influence, but it also creates the suspicion that Government is behind their activities.

In Bombay we find a prominent Government servant mixing himself with Moslem political movements in a way which might give rise to undesirable questions. Mr. Abdeali Kajiji is a High Court Judge and yet he is President of the Anjuman Islam—a political body decidedly—and what is more anomalous, he is president of the subject committee which is considering the draft of the Moslem address to the Secretary of State. We wonder how he agreed to work on a committee which is considering a highly controversial subject. The advanced party—and by the way there is a large number of them on the committee—is in favour of inserting a clause in the address in support of the Moslem League Scheme. There are others who believe that it ought not to be. Now we would like to know which side the High Court Judge would support? Would he espouse the Home Rule cause, or bring the weight of his influence to bear against it? That is a paradox which must needs be solved before he can sit on the committee."

Reflections on the Bakri-Id riots in the United Provinces.

Islámic Mail (4), 2nd Dec.

18. "The Allahabad disturbances, coming on top of the riots in Bihár, have been too much for the over-inflated Home Rule on which India was to be carried so swiftly and so comfortably to its political ruin. There has been the inevitable explosion, and Home Rule pretensions have vanished into thin air. The politicians and the journalists who were once so clamorous in making their 'demands' are busy searching for means to restore their damaged reputation....... While from every quarter of India come Muhammadan protests against the manner in which Muslim interests have been betrayed by the so-called 'All-India Moslem League', the little clique at Lucknow feel it necessary to bestir themselves. A letter has been issued inviting leading Muhammadans of all shades of opinion to attend a consultative meeting called on the 14th November 1917 by the Honourable the Raja of Mahmudabad and the Honourable Syed Wazir Hasan. In other words, Lucknow has began to hedge, it realises that it has gone too far, that the fiction of an unanimity of opinion does not please nor deceive, and that the time has come to propitiate a more than indignant community. The only question is whether the Muhammadan community as a body will permit those who have been so false to the teaching of the great Sir Syed Ahmad Khan and have mistaken intrigue for political sagacity, any longer to act as their official spokesmen. In Bihar at least they seem to have made up their minds on the subject, the provincial branch of the Moslem League and its 'wirepullers' being denounced in no uncertain terms. To the high priestess of Home Rule cum Theosophy the events of the last few weeks must have come as a terrible shock, Anti-Home Rule Leagues springing up everywhere—even in one of her twin 'spiritual homes', viz. Benáres, and no more bunting and flags to grace her progress through a city's streets. The return visit to Allahabad found all her clientele sorely depressed, the very students have been shamed into discarding their Home Rule emblems. It is a pathetic ending to a story of glorious agitation. But what concerns most people in this country today is not grief of Mrs. A. Besant and her following over the disaster that has befallen their beautiful schemes of reform, but the danger that pandering to such agitation involves."

Government should take measures to alleviate the hardships of people owing to high prices.

Gujaráti Punch (19), 2nd Dec.; Surat Akhbár (75), 3rd Dec.; Hindusthán (21), 3rd Dec.

19. Remarking that the people of the poor and middle classes have to suffer from great hardships as a result of the prevailing high prices of commodities generally, the Gujaráti Punch inquires if, in spite of all admonitions to them to practise economy, they can be expected to do without food and clothing. It refers to the three petitions made to Government respectively by the Postal employees, by trained and untrained teachers in the primary schools in Surat for increasing their scale of pay and by the agriculturists of the Kaira District for remission of land assesment, and appeals to the authorities concerned to consider sympathetically the requests made in those petitions. [The Surat Akhbár commends the action of certain Municipalities in the Punjáb in opening shops for selling grain and fuel with a view to alleviating the sufferings of the poor people. It remarks that in difficult times like the present it is the duty first of the State, then of the municipalties, then of public bodies and lastly of the well-to-do classes to save the poor people from the jaws of disease and death. It maintains that next after salt it is the question of fuel which should engage the attention of Government. The paper suggests that Government should suspend their forest restrictions for the time being in order to enable the poorer classes to satisfy with ease their needs in the matter of fuel. The Hindusthán refers to the unduly inflated prices of cloth due to speculation and calls upon Government to intervene and fix the maximum prices with a view to avoiding further hardships upon the general public.]

Government should take measures against the undue raising of house-rents.
Bombay Samáchár (60), 3rd Dec.

20. The Bombay Samáchár refers to the hardship inflicted upon the poor and middle class people living in Bombay by the continuous increase in the rents they have to pay for houses and asks Government to take measures by which house-owners would be prevented from increasing house-rents during the continuance of the present war. It asks Government to issue a warning to house-owners before taking further steps in the matter.

Comments on the proceedings of the last meeting of the Madras Legislative Council.
Kesari (106), 4th Dec.

21. In the Reform Schemes suggested by the Congress and the Moslem League the demand is made that every Legislative Council should elect its own president and frame its own regulations. At present the local Governors and the Viceroy possess these powers, and the rights of popular representatives are therefore circumscribed. The Honourable Mr. Rangachariar of Madras was not allowed to move a resolution about the Madras Mail in the Council and there were many resolutions and questions thus suppressed at the last Madras Legislative Council meeting. It may be inferred from this how all-embracing are the powers of the President and how ruthlessly they are enforced. The Madras Government wants to hold the Honourable members responsible for the complaints they embody in their questions. To threaten a member with legal responsibility for the question he asks is to further lessen the already too limited powers of interpellation possessed by the councillors.

Comments on Lord Lansdowne's letter regarding terms of peace.
Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 3rd, 5th and 8th Dec., Eng. cols.; Rást Goftár* (31), 9th Dec., Eng cols.

22. "Is peace in sight? It almost seems so from Lord Lansdowne's letter and the conflicting comments upon it in the English Press. But there is no note of surprise. Lord Lansdowne is not in the Cabinet, but he is a statesman of high rank and his letter can scarcely represent an individual view. It is too early yet to judge of the real significance of this letter. But we can put two and two together. There is this letter. Then there is the revival of the project of the international Socialist Conference. The restoration of Samoa to Germany is being discussed. Everything seems to point to the fact that peace is in the air. What kind of a peace will it be, if there is going to be peace? It is not wise to be inquisitive before the event. But if there is really peace Bombay bazaar reports of some weeks ago will be fulfilled. As to the war being fought to a finish, that is a longer way than the one to Tipperary. The world is war-weary and the announcement of an armistice with a view to peace will bring respite to the whole world." [The paper reiterates the same view in its Gujarati columns. In its issue of 5th December the paper writes:—"Whatever else may be said, Lord Lansdowne cannot be curtly dismissed as an irresponsible pacifist without any thought for the honour and safety of the British Empire. Indeed, the remarks and comments of various papers show that Lord Lansdowne is by no means alone in the views that he holds and that he has the support of quite a considerable section of the British public. In order to understand this attitude a brief retrospect of the history of the war will be sufficient. Considering all the enormities that Germany and her Allies have committed during the war, the ruthlessness and frightfulness that have characterised the conduct of the war by the Central European Powers, there can be but one opinion as to the desirability of putting an end for all time to the menace to civilisation from Prussian militarism. This is why great Powers like England, France and Russia formed an alliance and were afterwards joined by Italy.........

Pursuing the equation of the belligerents on either side, we find the position greatly altered after three years of war. The German colonial possessions may be eliminated from the equation as they have no bearing on the tremendous struggle which is going on in Europe. On the side of the Allies Serbia and Roumania have disappeared, both having been invaded and conquered by Germany and Austria. Russia in revolution is in a state of anarchy and fighting on the Russian front has practically ceased. There may be no stable or even a provisional Government in Russia, but it is not difficult to understand that Germany will make peace with any one so long as it may obviate the need for employing German and Austrian troops on the Eastern Front. Against the elimination of Russia we may include the coming in of the United States of America, but it is obvious that it will be a considerable time before America can take an effective part in the war, or so stiffen the offensive on the Western Front that the German opposition will be shattered, the Teutonic armies will be driven pell-mell from France and Belgium and Germany will be invaded in the same way as Belgium and France. That is a far-off prospect indeed. Italy, which for two years more than held her own against Austria, has been invaded and the immediate question is whether the reinforcements hurried up from France and England will stop the Austro-German advance and save Venice. The Teutonic Alliance, on the other hand, remains very much the same as it was at the beginnning of the war. Turkey has suffered some reverses and has lost Baghdad and Mesopotamia, but that does not materially change the aspect of affairs in Europe. As regards the economic phase of the war, the Central Powers of Europe have no access to the sea and never did have it since the outbreak of the war, but, besides such neutral countries as Denmark, Holland, Scandinavia and Switzerland, they have had fresh sources of supply and even of the sinews of war from countries occupied by the force of arms, such as Poland, Serbia and Roumania, to say nothing of Belgium and the occupied portion of France. Even the invaded part of Italy has been laid under heavy tribute. Impartially considered there is no near prospect of the war being brought to a conclusion by the economic exhaustion of the Central Powers, for the map of Europe has considerably changed in their favour in the course of the war, and they have got larger sources of supply than they had at the beginning of the war. That has been the equation of the war and if there is still a determination for crushing Prussian militarism the modus operandi for attaining that object is beyond reasonable speculation. Thus whether Lord Lansdowne is given a hearing or not it cannot be said that his suggestion is inopportune or undeserving of consideration." In its issue of 8th December the paper dwells on the present attitude of the party in power in Russia and remarks :—" It is undeniable that the present stage of the war is an anxious one." In the course of a lengthy discussion of 'The significance of the Papal plea for peace' in the Rást Goftár, 'R. B.' remarks :—"That a great wave of yearning for peace is sweeping over the world no well informed person can doubt. The English parliamentary crisis over the question of the participation of English Labour representatives in the Stockholm conference has been the most spectacular of these signs. Though less dramatically brought to an issue the defiance of the French Government by both the Socialist and the Labour party in France, and the resultant position of M. Thomas, has been scarcely less significant. The reticence of American Labour and the general aspect of Socialism generally in its attitude to the war are signs which the Papacy has not overlooked in the launching of the last peace note. Controlling, as it does, a large share of the population in all the countries involved, the Catholic Church holds in its hands a weapon which the belligerents will not fail to recognise."]

Probable effects of the capture of Jerusalem on Muhammadan feeling in India.

Islámic Mail (4), 2nd Dec.

23. "The British troops are said to have reached a point 30 miles from the Holy City of Jerusalem and Moslem feeling is naturally one of anxiety and concern. It was our 'kibla' before 'kaaba' in Mecca was made the 'kibla', and our religion enjoins greater respect for this ancient and holy city than even for Mecca or Medina.......... The very name of Baitul Mukaddas associated as it is with the struggle between Islam and Christianity cannot but send a galvanic thrill through every Moslem heart and Muhammadans are naturally uneasy at the trend of affairs in this theatre of war. It would be criminal on our part to conceal Moslem feeling in this connection and to say that Moslems regard with indifference the prospect of the capture of Jerusalem by the British forces. But our contemporary the Chronicle, which professes to be a friend of the Mussalmans, either ignorant of the Moslem feeling or in flagrant disregard of Moslem susceptibility invites the British to dispossess the Turks of Jerusalem. We have heard of the story of the Kaiser's conversion to Islam and of the rumours that it has given rise to in certain remote parts of India where some fanatical people have been led to put faith in this German trick. The article which was published last month in the Chronicle about the Kaiser's conversion to Islam did create some feeling among ignorant people but we lost no opportunity in contradicting it and exposing the insidious object which the Germans had in disseminating these false reports. Even if for argument's sake we accepted the Germans' conversion to Islam will it place them in any better position than our own brethern of the faith—the Turks—whom we are fighting? No Moslim soldier has got any scruples in crossing swords with the Turks in discharge of his duties to the King whose salt he eats and to the country whom he is sworn to serve. Hundreds of thousands of true Moslems are fighting the Turks on the side of Great Britain which owns their temporal allegiance.......... The resolution passed at the recent meeting of the Moslem League as regards Jerusalem may be futile but it indicates the trend of Moslem feeling. We call it futile because it is foolish for any one sitting in India to dictate strategy to the British General Staff. They will do as the necessities of the situation may demand. If it is necessary in the interests of war to occupy Jerusalem it will be done. But to say that Muhammadans have no feeling over it or that they rejoice at the British occupation is adding insult to injury. Their sense of supreme loyalty and devotion to Government may not allow them to make hostile demonstrations as our friends in the Home Rule camp are in the habit of doing but there is not one single Muhammadan who does not feel and deplore the event. So it is with Jerusalem. If the British troops are impelled to occupy it we cannot do any thing but deplore the suicidal action of the war party in Turkey which has brought this day; but it is hardly fair on the part of the Chronicle which poses as a friend of the Mussalmans to hurt Moslem feeling by advising the occupation of this holy place of Islám. It shows too plainly how little these Home Rulers care for our feeling. They appear to take some satisfaction in reminding us that one of our Holy places, Baghdad, has fallen into the hands of non-Moslems, and that another is going to fall into their hands. Their object may be to excite the Mussalmans, but thank Government, Mussalmans understand the thing much better than they ever used to do. The distinction between religious and temporal war is clearly understood and no one is going to let the name of the Moslem be tarnished by perfidy. Even Mr. Mohamed Ali has declared that if the Turks invade India, his clear duty, as that of every true Moslem would be, to fight against them for the country in which we live, and for the Government to which we are pledged to be loyal."

Comments on the Russian situation.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 7th Dec.

24. Referring to the protests of the French and American attachés at Russian headquarters against a separate armistice by Russia and adversely commenting upon the remonstrance addressed to the Allied diplomats by the Russian Minister for foreign affairs, to the effect that a repetition of such acts would provoke grave complications, the Praja Mitra and Pársi remarks that this threat of Russia demonstrates to what extent the Russians have fallen a prey to the guiles of the enemy and also to what lengths they are prepared to carry their faithlessness. It maintains that this remonstrance can admit of one meaning only and it is that Russia is seeking for an excuse to enter into a war with the Allies. The paper characterises this change in the Russian attitude as highly disgraceful.

Gujaráti (17), 2nd Dec.

25. Russia has at length played false with the Allies and opened negotiations of peace with Germany. If Russia makes peace the German armies on the Russian front will be withdrawn and sent to Italy, France and Flanders and thus the war is sure to be prolonged. The sad plight into which Roumania will be placed can only be left to imagination. It now remains to be seen what strategic moves Germany makes in Macedonia and Albania where small Allied forces are posted, as also in Mesopotamia and Palestine. The Allies, no doubt, will exert their utmost to prevent Russia from making peace, but the internal condition of Russia is so bad and its army is so disorganised that even if it does not make peace it will not be able to help the Allies in the year 1918. The war would have come to an end in the current year if Russia had continued to fight. The Allies were making good progress on all the fronts, but the confusion in Russia has spoiled matters and given a fresh lease of life to German militarism. It is to be regretted that Lord Lansdowne should have come forward to advocate peace at such a juncture. A premature peace will be of no use to the world. England should, therefore, continue to fight till Germany is crushed. The safety of the world and the British Empire will depend upon the Germans not being allowed to pride themselves that they are invincible.

Rást Goftár (31), 9th Dec., Eng. cols.

26. "There is scarcely any doubt left that Russia is about to drop out finally from the alliance of the Entente Powers....... ... The protests of the French and American attachés against a separate armistice have elicited almost a threatening remonstance from M. Trotzky. He has declared that 'he cannot allow Allied diplomats or military agents to interfere in the internal affairs of Russia or to endeavour to rekindle civil war'. He concluded that 'a repetition of such acts would provoke the gravest complications.' What does that mean? It is certainly a cry of hands off! and the menace is unmistakable. If the Allies insist that Russia cannot conclude a separate peace will the irresponsible and chaotic Government of Russia enter into an offensive and defensive treaty with Germany? Everything is now possible in Russia, but in that case complications would rise between Japan and Russia. In any case the position in Europe has become very critical, because although America is staunch and the President's last speech is firm the United States cannot at once play the same part in the war that Russia was expected to play. It was expected that the pressure on east and west would act as a vice, and eventually crush Prussian militarism, but this is no longer possible. How long will it take America to put two or three million men in the field and to help Italy if war is declared against Austria? And what will be the course of the war in the interval?"

The British should place more confidence in Indians if they want to win the war.

Indu Prakásh (40), 4th Dec.

27. Referring to Mr. Lloyd George's speech pleading for the unity of direction and control in the conduct of the war the Indu Prakásh writes:—The situation is serious and is likely to become still more serious in the future. The Allies not only should trust each other but England should also have much more confidence in the Indians than she has at present. If we are really citizens of the Empire why are we not treated as the equals of Englishmen like the inhabitants of the other units of the Empire like Australia, New Zealand, Canada and Ireland? Let a veil be drawn over the past. Let bygones be bygones. A wise man gives up half if the whole is threatened: in this spirit should the present situation be met. Why is distinction being made between the whites and the coloured? It is a truism that confidence begets confidence. In order to defeat the Germans England and her allies should imitate the ancient Greeks in their wars against the Persian Emperors in which they defeated them.

Comments on the extension of Sir Michael O'Dwyer's term of office as Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjáb.

Young India (14), 5th Dec.; Kesari (106), 4th Dec.

28. "Extensions of the term of office to proved bureaucrats seems to be the order of the day under the benign providence of the Government of India. Not long ago, an extension was given to Mr. Hailey, whose 'efficiency' is still a matter of wonder in the Delhi Province. Now comes the announcement of Sir Michael O'Dwyer's extension of his term as Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjáb. The achievements of this Irish gentleman are too fresh in the minds of our readers to need recalling here. While the whole country has viewed his reactionary and stultifying regimé with disgust, we are seriously told by that arch-apologist of the bureaucracy—the Civil and Military Gazette of Láhore—that Sir Michael has distinguished himself for 'efficiency' in the administration of the Province. If reactionaryism is the sort of 'efficiency' to be admired and belauded, our Láhore contemporary is right. But we would seriously ask Government: Is it worth while always to be flying in the face of public opinion? Sir Michael O'Dwyer is probably the most unpopular official in the country to-day, in and outside of the Punjáb. Is that why the bureaucracy make a sort of god of him?" [The Kesari says that the extension given to Sir Michael O'Dwyer will make the people feel sorry. It adds:—He will get another opportunity to speak in the Imperial Council but he will not let his tongue run riot after the experience he had. Next year the Punjáb leaders wish to invite the Congress to Láhore. Government have strengthened their position from their viewpoint by giving an extension to Sir Michael.]

Comments on the extension of Sir Mahadev Chaubal's term of office.

Young India (14), 5th Dec.; Kesari (106), 4th Dec.

29. "Our own presidency has not been without its due share of suffering in respect of officials who are marked out for bureaucratic approval as a result of public disapproval. Sir Mahadev Chaubal, the Indian Member of the Executive Council, has also received a short extension. The reason may be, as has been stated by a contemporary, that when Mr. Montagu comes to Bombay there should be an Indian Member well conversant with the wonderful doings of the Local Government, to bring home to the Secretary of State the special needs of the Presidency. Of course, this is an absurd plea, which only absurd people can take up. However, the fact is Sir Mahadev Chaubal gets his extension until March 1918 and we are not altogether sorry. Though in matters pertaining to administration, he has behaved as a born and bred-up bureaucrat, it must be set down to his credit that he has consistently supported the Governor in resisting the pressure of reactionaries during the past year or so to apply the policy of repression rigorously to this country. As against this there is a record of departmental and ministerial barrenness and orthodoxy which makes it impossible to be glad that Sir Mahadev is to stay on. Of one thing we may be sure, the extension would not have been given if Sir Mahadev had not been on the whole an 'amenable' councillor." [The Kesari says:—The extension given to Sir M. B. Chaubal is so brief that we do not know whether we are to congratulate or console him. As he has got repeated extensions, his work must have been considered to be satisfactory by Government and the inference must be drawn that Indians are not unfit for any post. But the Honourable Sir Mahadev does not yet think, be it because he is modest or otherwise, that Indians are fit for swarájya. Whether he is convinced or not, if Sir Mahadev can do the work of Executive Councillor for seven years, no Indian can be considered to be unfit for any post under the present routine system of administration. If Sir Mahadev had written a separate minute like Mr. Justice Rahim, instead of signing the majority report, his work would have been considered to be specially important. But even now he has noted his difference of opinion on many points. It is also important. As the term of Sir Mahadev is short now, people will be interested in the appointment of his successor.]

Interpellations in the Bombay Legislative Council.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 5th Dec.; Bombay Samáchár (60), 7th Dec.

30. Referring to the Honourable Mr. Patel's interpellation in the recent session of the Bombay Legislative Council inquiring as to whether any officials in the Bombay Presidency were connected with any Anglo-Indian Associations, the objects of which were wholly or in part political, the Praja Mitra and Pársi expresses its regret at the reply given by Government. It remarks that the reply shows that the officials now connected with the Anglo-Indian Empire League would have, in spite of the warning contained in the Government Order of 1915, continued their confront will be withdrawn and sent to Italy, France and Flanders and thus the war is sure to be prolonged. The sad plight into which Roumania will be placed can only be left to imagination. It now remains to be seen what strategic moves Germany makes in Macedonia and Albania where small Allied forces are posted, as also in Mesopotamia and Palestine. The Allies, no doubt, will exert their utmost to prevent Russia from making peace, but the internal condition of Russia is so bad and its army is so disorganised that even if it does not make peace it will not be able to help the Allies in the year 1918. The war would have come to an end in the current year if Russia had continued to fight. The Allies were making good progress on all the fronts, but the confusion in Russia has spoiled matters and given a fresh lease of life to German militarism. It is to be regretted that Lord Lansdowne should have come forward to advocate peace at such a juncture. A premature peace will be of no use to the world. England should, therefore, continue to fight till Germany is crushed. The safety of the world and the British Empire will depend upon the Germans not being allowed to pride themselves that they are invincible.

Rást Goftár (31), 9th Dec., Eng. cols.

26. "There is scarcely any doubt left that Russia is about to drop out finally from the alliance of the Entente Powers....... ... The protests of the French and American attachés against a separate armistice have elicited almost a threatening remonstance from M. Trotzky. He has declared that 'he cannot allow Allied diplomats or military agents to interfere in the internal affairs of Russia or to endeavour to rekindle civil war'. He concluded that 'a repetition of such acts would provoke the gravest complications.' What does that mean? It is certainly a cry of hands off! and the menace is unmistakable. If the Allies insist that Russia cannot conclude a separate peace will the irresponsible and chaotic Government of Russia enter into an offensive and defensive treaty with Germany? Everything is now possible in Russia, but in that case complications would rise between Japan and Russia. In any case the position in Europe has become very critical, because although America is staunch and the President's last speech is firm the United States cannot at once play the same part in the war that Russia was expected to play. It was expected that the pressure on east and west would act as a vice, and eventually crush Prussian militarism, but this is no longer possible. How long will it take America to put two or three million men in the field and to help Italy if war is declared against Austria? And what will be the course of the war in the interval?"

The British should place more confidence in Indians if they want to win the war.

Indu Prakásh (40), 4th Dec.

27. Referring to Mr. Lloyd George's speech pleading for the unity of direction and control in the conduct of the war the Indu Prakásh writes:—The situation is serious and is likely to become still more serious in the future. The Allies not only should trust each other but England should also have much more confidence in the Indians than she has at present. If we are really citizens of the Empire why are we not treated as the equals of Englishmen like the inhabitants of the other units of the Empire like Australia, New Zealand, Canada and Ireland? Let a veil be drawn over the past. Let bygones be bygones. A wise man gives up half if the whole is threatened: in this spirit should the present situation be met. Why is distinction being made between the whites and the coloured? It is a truism that confidence begets confidence. In order to defeat the Germans England and her allies should imitate the ancient Greeks in their wars against the Persian Emperors in which they defeated them.

Comments on the extension of Sir Michael O'Dwyer's term of office as Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjáb.

Young India (14), 5th Dec.; Kesari (106), 4th Dec.

28. "Extensions of the term of office to proved bureaucrats seems to be the order of the day under the benign providence of the Government of India. Not long ago, an extension was given to Mr. Hailey, whose 'efficiency' is still a matter of wonder in the Delhi Province. Now comes the announcement of Sir Michael O'Dwyer's extension of his term as Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjáb. The achievements of this Irish gentleman are too fresh in the minds of our readers to need recalling here. While the whole country has viewed his reactionary and stultifying regime with disgust, we are seriously told by that arch-apologist of the bureaucracy—the Civil and Military Gazette of Láhore—that Sir Michael has distinguished himself for 'efficiency' in the administration of the Province. If reactionaryism is the sort of 'efficiency' to be admired and belauded, our Láhore contemporary is right. But we would seriously ask Government: Is it worth while always to be flying in the face of public opinion? Sir Michael O'Dwyer is probably the most unpopular official in the country to-day, in and outside of the Punjáb. Is that why the bureaucracy make a sort of god of him?" [The Kesari says that the extension given to Sir Michael O'Dwyer will make the people feel sorry. It adds:—He will get another opportunity to speak in the Imperial Council but he will not let his tongue run riot after the experience he had. Next year the Punjáb leaders wish to invite the Congress to Láhore. Government have strengthened their position from their viewpoint by giving an extension to Sir Michael.]

Comments on the extension of Sir Mahadev Chaubal's term of office.

Young India (14), 5th Dec.; Kesari (106), 4th Dec.

29. "Our own presidency has not been without its due share of suffering in respect of officials who are marked out for bureaucratic approval as a result of public disapproval. Sir Mahadev Chaubal, the Indian Member of the Executive Council, has also received a short extension. The reason may be, as has been stated by a contemporary, that when Mr. Montagu comes to Bombay there should be an Indian Member well conversant with the wonderful doings of the Local Government, to bring home to the Secretary of State the special needs of the Presidency. Of course, this is an absurd plea, which only absurd people can take up. However, the fact is Sir Mahadev Chaubal gets his extension until March 1918 and we are not altogether sorry. Though in matters pertaining to administration, he has behaved as a born and bred-up bureaucrat, it must be set down to his credit that he has consistently supported the Governor in resisting the pressure of reactionaries during the past year or so to apply the policy of repression rigorously to this country. As against this there is a record of departmental and ministerial barrenness and orthodoxy which makes it impossible to be glad that Sir Mahadev is to stay on. Of one thing we may be sure, the extension would not have been given if Sir Mahadev had not been on the whole an 'amenable' councillor." [The Kesari says:—The extension given to Sir M. B. Chaubal is so brief that we do not know whether we are to congratulate or console him. As he has got repeated extensions, his work must have been considered to be satisfactory by Government and the inference must be drawn that Indians are not unfit for any post. But the Honourable Sir Mahadev does not yet think, be it because he is modest or otherwise, that Indians are fit for swarájya. Whether he is convinced or not, if Sir Mahadev can do the work of Executive Councillor for seven years, no Indian can be considered to be unfit for any post under the present routine system of administration. If Sir Mahadev had written a separate minute like Mr. Justice Rahim, instead of signing the majority report, his work would have been considered to be specially important. But even now he has noted his difference of opinion on many points. It is also important. As the term of Sir Mahadev is short now, people will be interested in the appointment of his successor.]

Interpellations in the Bombay Legislative Council.

Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 5th Dec.; Bombay Samáchár (60), 7th Dec.

30. Referring to the Honourable Mr. Patel's interpellation in the recent session of the Bombay Legislative Council inquiring as to whether any officials in the Bombay Presidency were connected with any Anglo-Indian Associations, the objects of which were wholly or in part political, the Praja Mitra and Pársi expresses its regret at the reply given by Government. It remarks that the reply shows that the officials now connected with the Anglo-Indian Empire League would have, in spite of the warning contained in the Government Order of 1915, continued their connections with that body but for the Honourable Members' present interpellation and that it was this interpellation which brought the existing state of affairs to the knowledge of Government. The paper does not also approve of Government's reply to the Honourable Mr. Manmohandas Ramji's interpellation in connection with the Government circular prohibiting students from attending public meetings, etc., on the ground of its being vague. It wishes that Government should, in such matters involving important principles, give their reply in clear instead of round-about terms. From the reply of Government to an interpellation about the order of the District Magistrate, Panch Mahâls, prohibiting the singing of some songs on the occasion of the Gujarât Political Conference, the paper infers that the District Magistrate had exceeded his authority and wishes that Government would give proper instructions to their officers in connection with such matters. [The Bombay Samâchâr also expresses its disapprobation at the alleged round-about and stereotyped replies sometimes given by Government. It also finds fault with the nature of the questions put by Honourable Members on some occasions. It remarks that the Government reply to the Honourable Mr. Belvi's interpellation demonstrates the necessity of broadening the constitution of the Senate of the Bombay University so as to place it on a more popular basis. The paper does not view with satisfaction the reply to the question put by the Honourable Mr. Devjee Kanjee, declaring Government's ignorance about the number of industrial factories in the Bombay Presidency and the amount of capital invested in them. It also wishes Government to abandon their present policy of remaining aloof from helping industries like glass, etc.]

Comments on the demand of security from the Hindusthân newspaper.

Gujarâti (17), 2nd Dec.

31. Commenting upon the demand of a security from the Hindusthân, the Gujarâti writes :—No one besides Mr. Aston knows so well how to bring old presses under the operation of the Press Act. The demand of a security from the Hindusthân affords an example as to how security is demanded from the newspapers on the plea of change of the place of printing or change in the location of the press. Security should be demanded from newspapers in exceptional cases, but in the magisterial courts exemption from security is regarded as an exception to the rule. These securities are demanded on the Police reports or the reports of the Political Department, and the reports are not known to the public. Mr. Aston always depends on the report of the Police before the declaration of a newspaper is registered. The law does not require the magistrate to get a report from the Police. We object more to Mr. Aston's method of demanding securities from all newspapers without exercising his discretion than to the Police report.

Comments on a recent libel case disposed of by Mr. Oliveira, Third Presidency Magistrate.

Gujarâti (17), 2nd Dec.

32. We do not think that there is any country in any part of the world except India where justice is administered to the people in a foreign language and through translations. In India the chief trouble lies in the fact that the dispensers of justice have no knowledge of the vernaculars of the country and they have, therefore, to depend on translations. Mr. Bhukhandas Bhanabhai lodged a complaint in the Court of Mr. Oliveira for defamation against the Secretary of the Pandit Gattulalji trust property administered by Sheth Tribhowandas Varjiwandas for having published a book called 'Tipno' which contains certain allegations against him. The said book contains nothing but abuse of all those who ask for an account of the trust property and vilification of the Vaishnav Maharajas. Mr. Oliveira dismissed the suit on the ground that the Secretary had published the said report of the trust property with a view to answering the criticism levelled in the columns of the Gujarâti against the trust! Had Mr. Oliveira been conversant with the Gujarâti language he would not have made such a mess of things and called a book a report, while it calls Jesus a Brahma-rakshasa, vilifies Hindu Acharyas and other people and spreads false reports about people taken to the war from India.

Protest against the proposed reintroduction of the system of auctioning liquor-shop licenses.
Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 7th Dec.

33. Referring to the petition recently submitted by the Licensed Victuallers' Association to His Excellency the Governor of Bombay and descanting on the various disadvantages associated with the system of putting up liquor and toddy licenses to auction, the Jám-e-Jamshed declares that the latter system is ruinous not only to the interests of the licensees but to the health and well-being of the public. It refers to the current report that Government contemplate the reintroduction of that system in the Bombay Presidency and observes that it cannot understand what charm it has for Government that they, time and again, should think of reintroducing it, particularly when its disadvantages have become patent to the Abkári authorities and when it does not reduce the consumption of liquor. The paper maintains that if the object of Government in adopting the auction system is to increase their revenue, it could be, to a certain degree, accomplished even if the fixed-fee system in force at present continues, inasmuch as the policy, now in vogue, of almost regularly increasing the rate of still-head duty as well as the license fees has the effect of steadily increasing the revenue. It concludes with expressing the hope that Government will, before effecting a departure in the present system, at least listen to what the licensees may have to say against it and satisfy their minds by showing how the fixed-fee system has proved a failure.

Comments on the triennial report of the Surgeon-General with the Government of Bombay.
Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 4th Dec.

34. Commenting upon the resolution published by Government on the triennial report of the Surgeon-General with the Government of Bombay for the years 1914—16, and referring to the fact recognised by Government that during the said period of three years women took the benefit of public medical institutions in a larger proportion than men, the Jám-e-Jamshed regrets that Government should have expressed their inability to open additional maternity wards and wards for the treatment of diseases of women, on the ground of financial stringency arising from the war. It is of opinion that Government should somehow see their way to spare a portion of the Provincial revenues for such an important object. For the purpose of effectually combating malaria the paper recommends Government to distribute quinine with a free hand among the public even at some loss. It expresses its surprise that Government should also be able to do nothing towards fighting tuberculosis on the ground of financial difficulties. It does not believe that the distribution, among the village people, of booklets containing directions for taking precautions against the disease will entail great expenditure upon Government.

LEGISLATION.

Comments on the Compulsory Education Act passed by the Bombay Legislative Council.
Young India (14), 5th Dec.

35. "In spite of all the improvements the Bill has undergone in the committee stage, it must not be supposed that as now passed by the Bombay Council it brings the educational millennium within a measurable distance of the people. It represents a very modest step in advance. Compulsion will be operative only under strict limitations and entirely subject to the ultimate control of Government. Clause 4 of the bill, as amended, appears to us to be more dangerous than as it stood originally. It practically reduces every municipality desirous of introducing compulsion to the mercy of the bureaucracy. The clause runs: 'A notification shall not be issued under section 3 unless the municipality satisfies the Local Government that it is in a position to make and will make adequate provision in municipal or other recognized schools for free and compulsory primary education.' We have reason to apprehend that this power may be used by the Local government whenever it so chooses, to retard rather than promote the object in view.......... Taking, however, the most optimistic view of things, we have reason to congratulate ourselves in this Presidency on the result which has now been achieved."

Gujaráti (17), 9th Dec., Eng. cols.; Indian Social Reformer (3), 9th Dec.

36. "There is no doubt that the new legislation marks an important step in furtherance of the cause of primary education and it is a matter of proud satisfaction that the Bombay Presidency has taken the lead in the matter. Its example has already stimulated some other provinces into activity, and the Punjáb, Bengal and Madras have already taken up the matter in right earnest. His Excellency Lord Willingdon's Government have approached the subject in a sympathetic spirit, and the Honourable Mr. Patel acknowledged in cordial terms the encouragement he had received from His Excellency Lord Willingdon and his Government in framing and pilotting the Bill through the Council." [The Indian Social Reformer writes:—"It is the first measure of the kind in British India, and, though its scope is limited, it is one of the most important measures of legislation which have been enacted at the instance of a non-official member of an Indian Legislative Council."]

Hindusthán (21), 6th Dec.; Bombay Samáchár (60), 7th Dec.

37. Expressing extreme gratification at the passing of the Honourable Mr. Patel's Primary Education Bill in the local Legislative Council, the Hindusthán remarks that the passing of this measure has laid a deep and solid foundation for the advancement of the people of this Presidency. It believes that this piece of legislation will produce very beneficent results in the country in the direction of industrial and agricultural development. The paper congratulates the Government of Bombay on the sympathy and liberality of heart shown by them in securing sanction from the Imperial Government for the introduction of the Bill in the Bombay Legislative Council. The paper expresses regret at the passing of the Honourable Rao Bahadur Sathe's amendment which imposes the liability of a fine not exceeding 25 rupees upon a person who takes into employment, on his own behalf or on behalf of another, a child so as to interfere with its efficient instruction under the Primary Education Act, and maintains that the said amendment will, on account of the niceties of construction its wording will give rise to, nullify the good effect of the original provision in the Bill. The Bombay Samáchár observes that the passing of the Honourable Mr. Patel's Education Bill will add a bright page to the annals of India. It hopes that elected members of Legislative Councils in other parts of the country will imitate the Honourable Mr. Patel in this direction. The paper supports the Honourable Rao Bahadur Sathe's amendment above referred to on the ground that, while effectually safeguarding the object underlying the system of compulsory education, it gives relief to the employers of child labour.

EDUCATION.

Disapproval of the rejection by the University of the proposal to permit Matriculation candidates to answer in vernaculars.

Dnyán Prakásh (37), 7th Dec.; Indu Prakásh (40), 6th Dec.

38. Referring to the rejection by the University Senate of the proposal to allow Matriculation candidates to answer some of the papers in the vernaculars, the Dnyán Prakásh remarks:—At last the Bombay University gave the go-by to the vernaculars! The result would have been otherwise if reason had any weight. But the views of the majority prevailed. We must of course submit to the decision of the majority in these days of democracy. But the opinion of this majority was as worthless as that of the majority in the Supreme Legislative Council. There was a large number of European voters and although two of them recognised the difficulties of Indian students their sympathy for them proved of no practical use. Apparently, the proposal was rejected with the help of Bombay men. It is unjust that the opinion of Bombay fellows should override the wishes of the rest of the Presidency. Either there should be a larger number of mofussil fellows in the Senate or we must have separate Universities for the mofussil. Naturally the duty of bringing this about will devolve on the people of Poona and Maháráshtra. [The Indu Prakásh writes in a similar strain.]

Suggestions for the utilisation of the grant of Rs. 1,00,000 for scholarships to Muhammadans in Sind.

Sind Moslem (11), 24th Nov.

39. The Sind Moslem suggests that 12,000 rupees from the grant of one lakh of rupees for scholarships should be reserved for higher education under the following heads:—(1)—Arts Course—20 scholarships at Rs. 30 each per month = Rs. 7,200. (2)—Engineering College—3 scholarships of Rs. 50 each per mensem = Rs. 1,800. (3)—Medical College—20 scholarships of Rs. 50 each per mensem = Rs. 1,200. (4)—Law—3 scholarships of Rs. 50 each per mensem = Rs. 1,800. It then continues:—"So far we know not a single Muhammadan student has ever been sent from our Province to the Sanitary Institute, Bombay, since its foundation in 1912. It is a matter of regret that Muhammadans who form 90 per cent. of the total population of the Province have not been able to get a single Muhammadan Sanitary Inspector from that Institute during the last 6 years.......... A Muhammadan student, if sent to Bombay from our Province, would require Rs. 500 only. May we, therefore, hope that the Honourable Mr. Lawrence, the Commissioner in Sind, and Mr. Hesketh, the Educational Inspector in Sind, will reserve 3 scholarships of Rs. 500 each per annum from the grant for this purpose? Similarly the Sind Mussalmans are backward in Commerce and Forest Service. To achieve the latter object suitable Muhammadans should be sent to the Dehra Dun College and some provision should be made for Commercial education also. We think 2 scholarships of Rs. 30 each per mensem for each of the above Colleges would suffice at present. Sind being a Muhammadan Province and Karáchi its capital being near to Mesopotamia, it is absolutely necessary that students be encouraged to take up Arabic as their second language, and to achieve that end 2 scholarships of Rs. 30 each per mensem be given to such students at the matriculation whose second language is Arabic. In order to encourage Muhammadans to take up medicine, at least 5 scholarships of Rs. 25 each per mensem be reserved for students desiring to join the medical school at Hyderabad."

MUNICIPALITIES.

Comments on the grant of right to elect Presidents to certain Municipalities.

Kesari (106), 4th Dec.

40. Referring to the grant of the right of electing their Presidents given to 28 municipalities by Government the Kesari says that it is necessary that District Local Boards also should be given similar concessions. It further holds that the condition of Local Boards is very backward as compared to that of the municipalities. It adds:—Why should there be so much difference between municipalities and Local Boards? Should not Government take into consideration the moral loss suffered by the people in being always at the beck and call of officials? [The paper then refers to the resolution of the Láhore District Local Board asking for the retention of officials as office-bearers of the Board.] What moral weakness! All this is due to the long standing habit. It is better that the Board should commit blunders and incur financial losses than that there should be such a moral downfall though it be that the administration is conducted well. The Anglo-Indians of Láhore are pointing to this instance as a proof of the unfitness of Indians for Swarájya, but we think that it is necessary to give the rights of Swarájya as early as possible in order to remove the habit of dependence upon others, seeing from this instance how terrible is the moral downfall of subjects under foreign rule. Otherwise what can be remedied to-day with great difficulty will be without any remedy tomorrow.

Appeal to Government to inquire into the alleged misuse of the space cleared under the Borahwad Improvement Scheme in Broach.

Rást Goftár (31), 2nd Dec., English cols.

41. In the course of a lengthy letter contributed to the Rást Goftár Mr. Nusserwanji S. Ginwalla traces the history of the Broach Bohrawad Improvement Scheme, pointing out how the space cleared at the expense of Rs. 90,000 to Government is being made a wrong use of by the Municipality who have built an office and other municipal buildings on it and allowed a Borah gentleman to construct a three-storied building on it. The Borahs, he adds, brought the matter to the notice of the Collector but without receiving any redress. The writer then continues :—" This little history of the Bohrawad Improvement Scheme suggests three questions :—(1) Whether the Municipality had made a porper exercise of their legislative powers in having permitted a big house to be constructed and thus stultified the benevolent action of Government for sanitary improvement. (2) Whether the Municipality has any shadow or shred of right to appropriate to their own use, and build upon, lands acquired with the help of Government grant, made for a special purpose, and not pay any value for them, besides helping to undo the good already achieved. (3) When the Collector refuses to interfere in matters affecting the vital interest of Government as well as of the public, and a Municipality go on like this, who is to arrest such mad reckless career....... It would be well if a searching enquiry be ordered by Government in the matter of this Bohravad lands, and of the erection of the three-storied house, and of other things stated above. It is also desirable that Government should resume their lands with their super-structures and re-sell them if necessary to these evicted Borahs, who are in so much need of them, and will be grateful for this little grace. The above facts furnish a latest instance justifying the recent observations of the Bishop of Bombay that self-government in municipal matters has proved a dismal failure and a sore disappointment. His Lordship therefore wisely cautions Government against weakly yielding to meaningless clamour and the hysteric shrieks for extensive political power of the so-called ' Home Rule '. It is needless to say how these agitations and clamours are engineered, got up, and fanned for dazzling the eyes of ignorant masses. If acts like these be meant to be understood as the enchanting ' Home Rule,' one would certainly devoutly pray :—' But of all plagues, good heaven thy wrath can send ', ' Save, oh save me, from a Home Rule friend '."

Agitation regarding the house-tax at Lárkána (Sind).

Mahrátta (5), 9th Dec.

*42. " The Lárkána people are to be congratulated on their energetic campaign against the house-tax.......... We have written more than once on this affair. The Government of Lord Willingdon will do well to go through the case of the Lárkána house-tax imposition, without unnecessary delay. People's feelings and sentiments have surely some value! To trample upon them deliberately cannot but lead to evil results. When the lower authorities have made a mess of things, the higher authorities are expected by the people to grant relief. If no such expected relief comes within a reasonable time, the people naturally come to think that the opinion of one or two officials weighs more with the Government than the united opinion of thousands of people whose pockets and sentiments are subjected to a most ruthless treatment by that opinion. It is undesirable that people should be given reasons to expect no relief from the higher authorities, even in such a flagrantly unjust case as the Lárkána house-tax affair. May it be that the prospect of losing much of the power to ride roughshod over public feeling (which the discussion of Reforms has opened) has hardened certain officials and made them take a secret resolve that, while the ' season ' lasts, they would indulge their apprehensive selves in a right ' royal ' manner ?"

NATIVE STATES.

Comments on the strike at Wadhwán (Káthiáwár).

Hindusthán (21), 2nd Dec., Eng. cols.

43. Commenting on the Wadhwán strike, the Hindusthán writes :—" We are at a loss to understand why in spite of serious public complaint against the deeds (or misdeeds ?) of the retired bureaucrat, the Local Government have chosen to be unconcerned spectators in a matter of such serious import. Here is a whole population protesting against the administration of the State and more than two months have elapsed, without the authority ultimately charged with the well-being of the poor, innocent subjects of the State, coming to their rescue. It is not even possible to imagine whether Lord Willingdon's Government are aware that strained relations exist between Mr. Kadri and the whole Hindu community. We cannot think that Government credit the whole community with mischievous intentions on the strength of the entirely one-sided allegations of Mr. Kadri. We have, on the contrary, the testimony of very high authority that Mr.

Kadri has not given any indications of any outstanding ability and his whole administration during the past ten months is a chapter of mistakes, due more or less to the coloured vision which he began to exercise from the very moment he entered upon his charge. Knowing as we do the high and unimpeachable position and integrity of our authority, we cannot entertain the view that the whole people were being led away by mischivous agitators solely with the object of discrediting Mr. Kadri and his work. Any way, it was the clear duty of the Local Government to hear the people and remedy their grievances if they were substantiated. The only explanation that the apparent indifference of Government is capable of is that they have been led away by the interested reports of Mr. Kadri, whose boast is, it seems, that he has got several godfathers in the Government. The refusal of the Agent to the Governor to treat the representation of the people seriously and the subsequent conduct of Mr. Kadri in behaving, as it is alleged, as if he were the veritable ruler of the State have created consternation in the minds of the poor helpless people."

Surya Prakásh (33), 1st Dec., Eng. cols.

44. "We have been hearing so long of the 'Strike' in Wadhwán that we thought it best to visit the place and ascertain personally the true state of affairs and its causes. During our visit, we have come across people of all classes, and the first thing that surprised us the most was that in Wadhwán City there was nothing like a 'Strike' or 'Suspension of business.'......... The real state of things gives a direct lie to the misrepresentations so unscrupulously made in some newspapers both vernacular as well as English. The only object seems to be to mislead the outside public. The high opinion that the respectable people of various castes including Maharaj Kunj Bihariprasad, head of the Swami Narayen sect (whom we had the pleasure to see and talk to freely), entertain of the presesent Administrator and the lines on which he has been carrying on the administration has thoroughly convinced us that all this ado is the outcome of the premeditated conspiracy of a handful of agitators and mischief-mongers. The masses are entirely satisfied with the prompt and evenhanded justice that they have been getting at the hands of their Administrator. Even in spite of the increase in assessment on account of the Revision Settlement recently made by the present Administrator, the agriculturists love and admire him on account of his sincere sympathy for them and his amiable disposition, and they make no secret of it.......... Several State servants, all Hindus, have seen us and expressed their highest satisfaction with the just and kind treatment of the Administrator. They are all pleased with the impartial and fair Budget proposals just announced in the Darbari Gazette. The efficiency of Mr. Kadri's administration is evident from the very fact that during the last year there has been a net saving of Rupees three lacs and a half to the State......... We really pity the Wadhwán people that they are blindly led by the nose by a handful of agitators and turn a deaf ear to the sound sincere advice given to them quite in time both by the Agent to His Excellency the Governor as well as the Political Agent."

Praja Bandhu (28), 2nd Dec.; Akhbár-e-Islám (57), 3rd Dec.; Surat Akhbár (75), 3rd Dec.

45. Referring to the estrangement between the Administrator of the Wadhwán State and the Hindus of Wadhwán as a result of the general strike existing in that city at present, the Praja Bandhu dwells on the necessity on the part of high Government officials to intervene in the matter and put a stop to further embitterment of feelings. Among the acts done by Khan Bahadur Kadri, after the strike, that are calculated to displease the public the paper mentions the dismissal by him of a few Hindu officers of the State on mere suspicion. It regrets that Mr. Kadri has, after an experience of 35 years of Government service, failed to understand the popular feeling even after the long duration of the strike and the public petitions submitted to the authorities. It maintains that whether the present strike be of a mild or aggravated type it is natural that the poor people must suffer great hardships as a consequence, and that the results of such protracted hardships are at times undesirable. The paper advises Mr. Kadri to remove the cause of the strike and pacify the public before the present state o fthings gives rise to grave results. [In continuation of its remarks on the subject (vide paragraph 46, W. R. No. 48 of 1917), the [illegible] observes that the Wadhwán strike is merely a manœuvre [illegible] of the mahajan of that city to put Government on the wrong scent with a view to secure the removal of a Muhammadan high official. It ascribes the present condition of things at Wadhwán not to the want of tact and sympathy on the part of Mr. Kadri, as suggested by the Hindusthán (vide paragraph above referred to), but to the prejudice and bias of the Hindus against the Muhammadans. The Surat Akhbár ridicules the so-called strike as a sham, and remarks that it is well known to Government as well as the public that Mr. Kadri is a man who would not take any wrong step.]

Dnyán Prakásh (16), 1st Dec., Eng. cols.

46. "When we first heard of this affair we never dreamt of the black cloud being any bigger than the palm of a child's hand. Gradually it has taken such a huge turn as to cast a veil over the realities. The music regulations thought to be offensive by the Mahajan are contained in a short notification numbered 227. The unfortunate document has been a subject of much criticism, fair and foul. We do not wish to take up to-day a detailed survey of the notification as the situation at Wadhwán is still very complex, and nothing is further from our mind than to abstain from embarassing the administration. It seems not a little curious, however, that the provisions of the notification and the manner of its publication were at variance with the spirit of British policy in Káthiáwár, and also with the usual procedure obtaining in British districts, which the ex-Collector could not have forgotten so soon. The deadlock has now lasted for an unbearably long period and it is the sacred duty of all concerned to bring it to an end with all possible speed. We confidently look to Colonel C. F. Harold, the Political Agent in charge of the Jhálláwád Prant, whom the Mahajan of Chotila remember with a sense of gratitude in connection with their strike. Distorted versions, probably inspired from both sides, have appeared in papers. Reading between the lines, it is apparent that Mr. Kadri was guided mainly by the advice of the ex-Chief Constable of Rajkot Civil Station in this matter, and once having launched upon it he could not retrace for the sake of 'prestige.'......... We sincerely hope that better counsels will prevail over the deliberations of both the parties and thus avoid the necessity of Government inferference which becomes more pressing day by day."

Comments on the formation of a Cutch-Káthiáwár political association in Bombay.

Hindusthán (21), 5th Dec.

47. With reference to the proposal to form a Cutch-Káthiáwár political association of Káthiáwádis residing in Bombay with the object of carrying on agitation for securing for the Native States in Káthiáwár that type of swarajya that may be from time to time given to British India, if not government on an entirely democratic basis, and with the object, among others, of enlightening the people of those States on their birthright of national independence, etc., the Hindusthán expresses sympathy with the proposal and writes:—We would, at this stage, recommend the Native Chiefs in Káthiáwár and the British Agency in that province not to be displeased with the idea of young Káthiáwádis of carrying on agitation in favour of securing democratic forms of government for the Native States in their province. On the contrary they should feel proud that these States can produce men who hold such aspirations and who are desirous of serving their country in that manner. If they look at these men with such feelings of pride and affection we hope that a time will come when the inheritors of these States will have occasion to appreciate their services. We would similarly advise those concerned with the movement that, while keeping an eye on securing democratic government by means of completely loyal methods, they should base all their efforts on lines that are well thought out.

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 14th December 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 50 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 15th December 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

Bombay Legislative Council: Comments on the debate on the various resolutions in the— . . . . 21—32

British rule :

Comments on Mr. Karimbhoy A. Peerbhoy's evidence before the Industrial Commission 17
Comments on Sir R. Tagore's letter to a friend in England about interned persons in Bengal 15
Comments on the hunger-strike of interned Bengalis . . . . 13 & 14
Comments on the personnel of the Bengal Conspiracy Committee . 9 & 10
Comments on the prohibition of Mr. Horniman's proposed address to the students of the College of Agriculture, Poona . . . 19 & 20
Government and Lala Lajpatrai's book 16
Government and the interned Ali Brothers 11
Indian industries are neglected because the interests of the rulers and the ruled are not identical 18
The necessity of making things inconvenient for the authorities . 12
Excise: Comments on the recent Government Press Note on the constitution of — Advisory Committees . . . . 37 & 38
Forest Department: A complaint against the regulations for the issue of fire-wood permits 41
His Excellency the Governor: Comments on His Excellency the Governor's speech at the Agricultural Conference at Poona . . 33

Indian Political Reforms :

Adverse comments on the discrimination shown by Government in selecting bodies for sending deputation to the Secretary of State . 8
Comments on the composition of the All-India Muhammadan Deputation 2
Constitutional reforms in Native States 4
Indians cannot expect any redress of their grievances at the hands of the Europeans . . . . 6 & 7
The Bishop of Madras and Indian political movements 3
The European official's insularity has produced unrest even in small towns and villages, and an Indian administrator is preferred to an English official even by the peasants and the villagers . . . 5
The unity of the demands made by the various addresses and deputations to the Viceroy and the Secretary of State 1
Police: Some defects in the working of the Bombay — Courts . . 36
Press Act: Comments on the demand of security from the Bombay Chronicle 35

H 389—a CCN

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

Revenue matters:

Difficulties of rayats in the Kárwár District 39
Alleged failure of crops in the Kaira District 40

War: Comments on the present situation in Russia 34

LEGISLATION—

Comments on the passing of the Honourable Mr. Patel's Compulsory Education Bill . . . . 42 & 43

EDUCATION—

How the backward class students are prevented from entering the Training Colleges 44

MUNICIPALITIES—

Hyderabad: Comments on the alleged appallingly insanitary condition of—(Sind) and the total failure of the Municipal Committee of Management 45

NATIVE STATES—

Comments on the formation of Cutch-Káthiáwár political association in Bombay 46

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

The unity of the demands made by the various addresses and deputations to the Viceroy and the Secretary of State.

New Times (7), 8th Dec.

1. "It must be a vast and difficult task for Mr. Montagu to receive several deputations in a single day—to listen to the addresses and possess his lips in silence! The advocates of bureaucracy would regard some of the addresses as a stroke against the National Demand set forth in the Congress-League Scheme. Indeed, some of the sentiments expressed in a few of these addresses suggest influences ab extra; we seldom heard before of the political activities of some of the bodies now permitted to present addresses at Delhi. It apparently suits the bureaucracy to create an impression on Mr. Montagu's mind that India is not united in its demands, that the people have conflicting programmes, and that in the 'multiplicity of councils is the evil thereof'. But we may well believe that Mr. Montagu is too acute a statesman not to see that notwithstanding the diversity of programmes presented to him by particular sections of the Indian population, there is such a thing as the National Demand; and we hope he will not fail to realise that that Demand is embodied in the Congress-League Scheme."

Comments on the composition of the All-India Muhammedan Deputation.

Islámic Mail (4), 9th Dec.

2. The Islámic Mail publishes without comment the following article contributed by a correspondent:—"I have been very much pained to hear of the indignity which the Moslem deputation suffered at the hands of the Home Department of the Government of India specially so as it has lowered the position of the Honorary Secretary of the M. A. O. College in the public. But Nawab Ishaqkhan must excuse me if I say that he courted the discomfiture. In the first place I fail to understand what dragged the Nawab Saheb from the solitude which he had chosen at the time when the youths of the community under the leadership of Mr. Mohomadali chalked out a different line of policy which was quite in opposition to the traditional policy of Aligarh. Ever since the day when the Moslim League adopted the self-government resolution, the Nawab has kept himself aloof from the League and from other political movements. Suddenly he emerges to give shoulder to the Congress-League scheme, and offers to lead a deputation to the Secretary of State. Although it is not clear what new light his deputation would have thrown on the Reform Scheme since all the points contained in his deputation were embodied in the League representation, yet we may assume he had carefully considered the expediency of the step he was taking. However we are unable to account for the puerile way in which he quarrelled with the Government of India. As the Secretary to the Government said in his letter, "Mr. Montagu has come to gather the views of the people in regard to the Reform Scheme and not to interfere with the action of the Government of India." However we may feel the justice or injustice of the Moslem Leader's internment it was no reason for us to forego an opportunity of representing the Moslem views to the Secretary of State and we wonder why the deputation turned so strong headed over such a trivial matter. Incidentally there arises another point which concerns Bombay. I need not remind you that Bombay Muhammedans have a long time since—ever since the coalition of the Congress and the League—refused to take part in the movements initiated in Upper India, and no responsible man from Bombay took part in this deputation. But to keep faces, the Nawab put down the name of one or two plebians to represent Bombay at least one of whom does not belong to Bombay. Has Mr. Umar Sobani any status in Bombay or any title to play the role of the representative of Bombay Moslems? It is another thing for him to fly on the Home Rule wings of his friend, Mr. Horniman, but he has no right to lead the Mussalmans of Bombay."

The Bishop of Madras and Indian political movements.
Dnyán Prakásh (37), 13th Dec.

3. The Lord Bishop of Madras has recently in an article exhorted his Christian brethren to take an active part in politics. Although we never expected the Anglo-Indian community, engaged in materialistic pursuits, to sympathise with our aspirations it was a source of gratification to us that at least the Christian religious leaders sympathised with our demands. The Bishop's present article, therefore, is most disappointing. Although we welcome his advice that the Christians should no longer eschew politics but take a prominent part therein, we regard his exhortation to them to support the Anglo-Indian authorities to be most depressing. We would rather see the Christians keep aloof from politics altogether than use their energy in supporting the Anglo-Indians. If any party stands in need at present of outside help it is the Indians and not the bureaucracy who are well able to take care of themselves as they have monopolised all the power during the last several years.

Constitutional reforms in Native States.
Indian Social Reformer (3), 16th Dec.

4. "We are inclined to think that it is not fair to the Ruling Chiefs to expect them to adopt constitutional reforms on their own unaided initiative. Even the Government of India does not do this, though Secretaries of State, Viceroys, Governors, Lieutenant-Governors and members of the Indian Civil Service, have been bred up in the free democratic atmosphere of England. Such being the case, we cannot help agreeing that the Government and people of British India have a duty to do all they can to ensure for the people of the States a measure of constitutional government not wholly incommensurate with what may obtain in British India. There are already complaints that the policy of let-alone followed since Lord Minto's time has resulted in a deterioration of the standard of administration in several Indian States. If Lord Minto had made his policy conditional on the States putting their administration on a constitutional basis, this would not have happened. This, coupled with the Government of India's pre-occupations in regard to the war, is having a retarding influence on the position of the subjects of several Indian States. But the wave of democracy which is sweeping over the whole world will not be deterred by treaty rights from invading the territories of Indian States. We hope that the more thoughtful ruling princes at least will note the signs of the times, and hasten to 'broad-base' their gadis firmly and lastingly upon the will of their people."

The European official's insularity has produced unrest even in small towns and villages, and an Indian administrator is preferred to an English official even by the peasants and the villagers.
New Times (7), 7th Dec.

5. "The vast majority of Indians, we are being told to-day by Anglo-Indian extremists, 'would infinitely prefer the rule of Englishmen to the rule of one of their own countrymen'. 'It is only the English-knowing agitator' in the city—we are told—who is against the bureaucracy; the villager simply loves the Sahib! Scarcely one-tenth of the population lives in cities; so that nine-tenths of India prefer an English breaucrat to an Indian administrator! Is this true to facts? Sir Valentine pointed out in his notorious book on Indian Unrest that the rural population of Bengal was disaffected, not alone Calcutta, in the days of the anti-partition agitation; the villagers in the Deccan have political conciousness and are dissatisfied with bureaucrats; the Punjáb villages are penetrated with a patriotic spirit; the peasant in Gujerát often complains of the rigid land revenue policy and does not like the Sahib; the Rawalpindi riots were due to the peasant's unfaith in the bureaucrat; the men in Central Provinces were, only a short time ago, a centre of unrest; the workmen of Bombay have given demonstration of their unrest more than once; heavy assesments, poverty, famine, plague, cholera, malaria, and the Sahib's insularity have produced unrest even in small towns and villages; and an Indian administrator is preferred to an English official even by the patient peasant and the poor villager.......... A review of the Indian administration will show to any unbiassed student that though the English official professes to 'cherish the poor', his practical sympathy with them is almost nil......... Surely there must be something very wrong with a system of administration that is unable to help the poor people carried off every year in thousands by preventible diseases such as malaria, cholera, plague, and succumbing almost every year to famine in a Land of Plenty."

Indians cannot expect any redress of their grievances at the hands of the Europeans.

New Times (7), 10th Dec.

6. "An Indian" writes to the New Times:—"Mr. Webb asks us, no doubt in all honesty, to keep quiet now and he and his European friends will attend to all our ills after the war. Would he tell us what ills of ours were attended to by these friends before the war? What did these friends of ours do when they used to see us kicked at Railway platforms, driven out of Railway compartments on the ground that they were marked for Anglo-Indians, packed in third class compartments like fish in sardine tins, and ousted from all public offices which Anglo-Indians could occupy, nay, which even non-British subjects like the Goans could occupy? I am afraid the Indians have gone beyond the stage of trusting these guardians of our interests. There was nothing in the attitude of these friends of ours in the pre-war days to incline us to lay any reliance on their present advice. How often has Mr. Webb seen his kith and kin, turning up their noses at 'native jobbery, native nepotism, native cliquism, and native—what not ill? And has he read Mr. Peerbhoy's evidence, I mean the addendum before the Indian Industrial Commission, and what name does he give to the partiality of these Official and Commercial Bureaucrats?"

Kesari (106), 11th Dec.

7. The Curtis scheme was referred to indirectly by the Honourable Mr. Curtis in the Bombay Legislative Council and he said that it had the support of big officials. Though the allusion in His Excellency's speech was very vague, it still appeared that he meant to refer to the scheme. We are afraid that the first instalment of reforms may be restricted only to local self-government. Therefore, the other deputations that are to wait upon Mr. Montagu should not only support the Congress scheme but also condemn the Curtis scheme. The Calcutta European Association says that the refroms should not even be discussed. A cry has been raised that swardjya should not be given in the interests of Indians themselves, and not because of the harm it may do to the interest of European Merchants, as it was argued formerly. It appears that these inveterate and selfish Shylocks have neither generosity nor courage and honesty enough to give out the true cause (of their opposition).

Adverse comments on the discrimination shown by Government in selecting bodies for sending deputations to the Secretary of State.

Sánj Vartamán (32), 14th Dec.

8. Quoting the instance of the Bombay Municipality, the premier Municipality in the whole of India, which is allowed only to send a representation to Mr. Montagu, the Sánj Vartamán observes that the arrangements made for the receiving of deputations are quite unsatisfactory. It is true that the time at the disposal of the Secretary of State is very short. But if the deputation of the Municipality of a city like Bombay had waited upon the Secretary of State for India, the latter would have been able to come in personal contact with persons conducting local self-government successfully. In Madras, too, the public have been dissatisfied with the arrangements made to receive deputations. Deputations of all Anglo-Indian bodies are allowed to wait with their addresses while the request of the Madras Presidency Association to send its deputation has been refused. A deputation of non-Brahmins who are opposed to Home Rule is to wait on Mr. Montagu, while another deputation of persons of the same community who are in favour of Home Rule has been refused by the Government of Madras. The planters' deputation has been accepted, while the request of rich Indian merchants carrying on the leather industry to allow their deputation to present an address has not been acceded to. The address of the latter is quite harmless. It lends simply its practical support to the Congress-League scheme. But it demonstrates that merchants demand political rights. The Madras Government has failed to carry out its duty which was to arrange the receiving of deputations in such a way as to enable Mr. Montagu to understand effectively what the opinion of the Madras public is.

Comments on the personnel of the Bengal Conspiracy Committee.
Young India (14), 12th Dec.

9. "The appointment of the Bengal Conspiracy Committee has been made by the Government of India. The personnel of the Committee is as disappointing as the terms of reference are belying the hopes roused in the public that at last Government were going to do justice to the hundreds of young men and old, who have been clapped into jail without even the pretence of a public trial or enquiry. We had understood from Lord Ronaldshay's speech that the Committee whose appointment he then foreshadowed would be disinterested in the real sense of the term......... While, rightly or wrongly, 'a strong (official) judicial element' has been deemed 'essential' in the committee, public interests, which it was even more essential to secure, have been allowed to go by the board. Of the six members including the 'I. C. S.' Secretary, four are Europeans and two only are 'Indians', in whose sense of independence or freedom of thought the public do not possess the utmost confidence that is requisite to make their findings acceptable. Whatever may happen, justice must be done to the hundreds of unfortunate people, who have now lived for months together under the grave shadow of suspicion and calumny. If Government have such 'documentary evidence' connecting them all with the 'revolutionary conspiracies' in this country as it is professed they have, we think there should no longer be any delay in bringing the alleged conspirators to public trial. Nothing short of this will convince the country of the justice of these internments."

Mahrātta (5), 16th Dec.

*10. Commenting on the appointment of the Committee of enquiry into the revolutionary movement in Bengal, the Mahrātta writes:—"Our concern is with the question of how an otherwise sane and sober man (and an Indian) at all becomes a revolutionary. We submit that such a man becomes a revolutionary when he despairs of any peaceful propaganda doing anything substantial for his country within a reasonable time. He may be quite wrong in his reasoning. But he reasons and is led to his (let us grant) unsound conclusion, not because anything is the matter with his heart or head, but because he feels too strongly for his people.......... Government are anxious to be able to deal effectively with criminal revolutionary conspiracies. Now, in our humble opinion, you cannot deal effectively with any situation unless you diagnose it fully and carefully. One of the references to the Committee appointed by Government ought to have been to investigate and report on the political and economic causes and conditions which, in the opinion of the Committee, have served, are serving and will, unless remedied, serve as the breeding ground for revolutionaries. If this investigation had been entrusted to the Conspiracy Committee, the latter would have been able (assuming of course that its personnel were different from what we find it to be) to suggest truly effective means for dealing with the conspiracies complained of. As we have hinted above, there are economic and political causes and conditions in this country which have it in them to drive even some sane and sober men to the extreme path of revolutionism.......... It is this accession of sane people to the ranks of Revolutionism which must be prevented by all reasonable means, for in the preventing of this accession lies the effective remedy. And how can this prevention be effected? Let Government concentrate their mind on this root-query and we promise them that they will not be long in finding out the right solutions. Popular leaders have time and again suggested these solutions directly and indirectly. But all this has been more or less a cry in the wilderness. Now that Government are seeking to deal effectively with Indian revolutionism, it becomes our duty to draw their attention to the neglected cry. Will Government respond?"

Government and the interned Ali Brothers.
Kesari (106), 11th Dec.

11. The ideas of Government about justice, evidence and the benefit of doubt being given to the accused seem to have changed altogether of late. Formerly the pride of British Judicial officers was that it did not matter even if a hundred guilty men escaped so long as one innocent man did not suffer. But of ~~late~~ this tradition seems to have been given up. As hundreds of persons are arrested on suspicion and as no one is openly tried, how can we say that one innocent man is not crushed along with a hundred guilty persons? A worse and more contemptible method is to defame a person behind his back and not to give him an opportunity to defend himself. Its foul character is revealed in Lala Lajput Rai's case. What is more regrettable is that similar rumours are afloat about distinguished detenus in India. The Bombay Chronicle has protested strongly against such rumours about the Ali Brothers. The public should understand that such charges are not worth a cowrie and no one should prejudice himself by believing in Bazar rumours. If Government have unimpeachable evidence, they will produce it before the Court and prove it. It is a great sin to hold a person guilty, judging by mere rumours. Why should we knowingly commit the sin?

The necessity of making things inconvenient for the authorities.
Mahrátta (5), 16th Dec.

12. Commenting on the reference to the interned Ali brothers in the All-India Moslem address to the Secretary of State, the Mahrátta writes :—" If unanswerable argument were sufficient to bring the authorities to reason we should have had many of our demands satisfied by now. Argument is only one part of the activity that is necessary to get wrongs righted and justice done. The other equally, if not more, important part is organised effort on as large a scale as the case demands 'to make things incovenient for the authorities' (to use an expression used by the Islamiah in writing on this very subject of the release of the Alis). We are afraid we are not as keen about doing our duty in organising the make-things-inconvenient activity as we are about putting together facts and principles and 'pledges' and what not with a view to produce a formidable argument. Our apathy in this respect has been amply 'rewarded'! Humiliations have been continuously 'vouchsafed' to us! Political gurus have laid down that 'constitutional' activity does not mean an activity of mere argument; it includes another activity, that of the so-called 'Passive Remedy' (or Satyágraha). We have assimilated this lesson, but only intellectually. That is not sufficient. Mere intellectual assent to the highest truths of Religion does not bring us Liberation—the ultimate Goal of life. Even so, such an assent will ever fail to lift us out of the humiliating circumstances imposed by temporal authorities."

Comments on the hunger-strike of interned Bengalis.
Mahrátta (5), 16th Dec.

13. " The A. B. Patrika learns that the hunger-strike was started by the 20 political prisoners in the Alipore jail on the 1st instant. Since we wrote last on this painful subject, we have had to read news about this affair, which cannot but make any ordinary mortal shiver with indignation. The hunger-strikers were sent away on the 6th instant to other jails inside and outside Bengal, and it was understood that they were to receive no mercy. Whatever the charges against these detenus, it is now too late in the day to expect people to acquiesce in such a treatment of prisoners who have not had the opportunity of clearing their character before a regular tribunal. It has been semi-officially announced that 'the strikers themselves assert that they have no ground for complaint regarding their treatment by the prison authorities, or in respect of food, clothing, etc., with which they have been provided, but have adopted the strike solely as a protest against their incarceration.' Unfortunately, the relations between Government and the people are so strained, and the distrust of the people by the authorities evinced in numberless ways had made the people, in their turn, so much suspicious (a reaction strictly in accordance with the laws of Mind), that the announcement has failed utterly to convince the public that the detenus have in truth no complaints to make in respect of food, clothing, etc., etc., and that their strike was a protest against their incarceration itself......... In such a case the only way to reassure the public is to forthwith appoint a Committee of Enquiry with a personnel that can be fully trusted by the people to discharge its duties fully and faithfully. Government have not taken this step. But they have been prompt in removing the prisoners to various places possibly that the latter may be cowed down and learn, in their severe isolation, to submit 'loyally' to any treatment that the prison officials might think fit to mete out to them! Whatever the effect on the prisoners of this unsympathetic conduct of the authorities, the public will not fail to count it as one important argument against the continuance of a system of rule under which the authorities can play with the feelings of the people in a most cruel manner."

Kesari (106), 11th Dec.

14. The Kesari says that the idea of passive resistance is Âryan and that it was very prevalent in ancient India. It further remarks:—It almost disappeared in India under British rule but now and then there were instances of passive resistance, though lessons were included in school readers giving such a virtuous principle a hideous aspect, with the intention of rooting it out from the country. The example in South Africa of Mr. Gandhi gave the idea a new life and it appears that there is a desire now to resort to it generally. The decison of the inhabitants of Karjat harassed by the tyrannical house-tax raised by the Notified Area Committee is a fresh instance. We now understand that political prisoners in Alipore jail (Calcutta) are on a hunger-strike because of their solitary confinement though persons detained under Regulation III of 1818 cannot be put under solitary confinement. Irish Sinn Feinners have adopted it and the death of their leader Mr. Ash is reported. It would be good if the Bengal officials will not wait for such an end in connection with the political prisoners. What harm would be there, if due precautions are taken and the detenus are treated in such a way that their lives are not endangered, till the Ronaldshay Committee begins its inquiry? He who will be adjudged guilty by the Commission will openly suffer capital punishment. Why harass him now and make him a hero of passive resistance?

Comments on Sir R. Tagore's letter to a friend in England about interned persons in Bengal.
New Times (7), 10th Dec.

15. "The Pioneer is particularly annoyed with the Poet for 'the letter written to a friend in England by Sir Rabindranath Tagore describing the purely imaginary horrors suffered by interned persons in Bengal'! Are the 'horrors' 'purely imaginary'? About a thousand persons not having the fame and friends of Annie Besant or Mohamed Ali or Shaukat Ali or Arundale or Wadia are undergoing internment at this moment: are their sufferings purely imaginary? Was the suicide of the Bengali student interned—Suchi Chandra Das Gupta—'imaginary'?......... Is it in the 'interests of discipline' to intern a youth and seek thus to crush his human instinct of communication with fellow-students? Is this internment in 'his father's house'—as communique issued by the Political Department puts it—much different from solitary confinement, of a kind which must tell on every young man, the very breath of whose life is social intercourse with his comrades? Is it a good commentary on the policy of internment that a promising young man should feel so depressed as to commit suicide? Is it in accord with England's indictment of Germany and its appeal to the civilized world for a higher standard of right and justice? Is it right to 'intern' men simply because they do not think as you do? Sir Rabindranath's letter should rend the veil which hides to-day the disgraceful situation from the English people. Not even Anglo-Indians can honestly accuse him of anti-English bias; he has, when occasion has required it, spoken frankly even about his own countrymen."

Government and Lala Lajpatrai's book.
Gujarâti (17), 9th Dec.; Praja Bandhu (28), 9th Dec.; Kaira Vartamân (67), 12th Dec.

16. Referring to the book entitled Young India, written by Lala Lajpatrai, which was recently proscribed by Government, the Gujarâti remarks:—The central idea underlying the whole book is that the people of India have become worthless and cowardly as a result of the present bureaucratic administration of the country. But that has not only made the authorities in England scent in it sedition and incitement to commit offences but Sir George Cave has declared in Parliament that Lala Lajpatrai had close relations with German agents, that there were reasons to believe that he had received monies from Germany and that the book was written with a view to help Germany by creating difficulties in India. The present times are such that feeling could be excited, and the law resorted to, against anyone on the ground of his helping Germany. It is the good fortune of India that it has not struck any authority in this country to suppress the Home Rule and Moslem Leagues and the Indian National Congress on the pretext that they carry on agitation for swarájya in order to help Germany by creating difficulties against the administration in India; otherwise the Press Act and the Defence of India Act and the regulation of 1818 are ready to hand! Even if Lala Lajpatrai has, on being bribed by Germany, resolved to incite the commission of violent crime in India for the purpose of helping Germany the Indians would be the last persons to help him. But can the mind of a patriot like Lala Lajpatrai be so very much diseased? Before believing that, there should be proofs, and if they are not published there would be no wonder if the people were to think that they exist only in the imagination of Sir George Cave. [The Praja Bandhu remarks that the facts that the crime of sedition with which Lala Lajpatrai has been charged behind his back has not been proved and that the police have searched the office of the London branch of the Indian Home Rule League, for confiscating the copies of Young India written by Lajpatrai, before he has been allowed the opportunity of defending himself, are matters calculated to create disappointment. It observes that the fact that Government do not intend to prosecute, on the charge of sedition, either Lajpatrai or the firm which published Young India demonstrates the hollowness of that charge. The Kaira Vartamán reproduces the above remarks of the Praja Bandhu.]

Comments on Mr. Karimbhoy A. Peerbhoy's evidence before the Industrial Commission.

Hindusthán (21), 8th Dec.; Rást Goftár (31), 9th Dec.

17. The Hindusthán publishes a lengthy account of an interview with Mr. Karimbhoy Adamji Peerbhoy in connection with the subject-matter of the evidence he gave before the Indian Industrial Commission in Bombay. In the course of the interview Mr. Karimbhoy is reported to have said that from the specimen of tents manufactured at the Cawnpore Mills at the rate of Rs. 480 each he could say that a tent of that sort was not worth more than Rs. 250 and that, regard being had to the orders for about 35,000 tents received by the three Cawnpore Mills owned by Englishmen, it could be said that about 70 to 80 lakhs of rupees have been paid to these mills unnecessarily from the public coffers. Apart from the question of tents Mr. Karimbhoy is further reported to have said with regret that according to the estimate of his firm more than a crore of rupees have been wasted from the public treasury during the last three years and a half in the purchase of leather and leather articles. [The Rást Goftár expresses its disapprobation of the attitude adopted by Sir Thomas Holland towards Mr. Karimbhoy when the latter appeared to give his evidence before the Industrial Commission, and opines that his refusal to go deep into the charges made by Mr. Karimbhoy could not have added to the prestige of the Commission of which he was the President. It refers to Sir Thomas's directions to the press reporters not to publish Mr. Karimbhoy's evidence which contained allegations against Government officials, and expresses its inability to comprehend how evidence given during the course of a public inquiry be treated as a confidential matter and how suggestions could be made and threats held out for suppressing it. The paper hopes that Government will promptly institute an inquiry into the accusations brought by Mr. Karimbhoy, as has been promised by Sir Thomas Holland.]

Indian industries are neglected because the interests of the rulers and the ruled are not identical.

Shri Venkateshwar (80), 13th Dec.

18. Dwelling upon the necessity of developing indigenous industries and attributing the present poor condition of India to lack of industrial organisation and also to the absence of any support from Government, such as is given in other flourishing countries, the Shri Venkateshwar contrasts the condition of India with that of Japan and observes:—India, however, in spite of its ancient civilisation, has, after coming under the protection of the British people having a new civilisation, already lost her innumerable profitable industries. On account of the present difficulties of importing foreign cloth in India, arising from the war, the time has come to-day for the men and women of this country to go naked. In a country where salt was manufactured in mountain-high heaps merely by the boiling of sea water, in that very land of Bharat on account of the importation of foreign salt having become difficult the poeple of Eastern Bengal, stricken with the dearth of salt, have been looting shops and markets. All this result is due only to the fact that the interests of the rulers and ruled in India, in spite their both being civilised, are not identical.

Comments on the prohibition of Mr. Horniman's proposed address to the students of the College of Agriculture, Poona.
Young India (14), 12th Dec.

19. "A more typical illustration of bureaucratic ferocity it is difficult to imagine than the mandate placing an embargo on Mr. Horniman's lecture to the students of the Poona Agricultural College.......... We are not surprised that officials should be afraid of a students' gathering being addressed by Mr. Horniman. What strikes us as extraordinary in this connection is that the Local Government should have slept until the eleventh hour, when it was too late for making other arrangements. We presume they were specially spurred to action by some of Mr. Horniman's recent successes. Nothing has been more amusing, though discreditable, in the history of the administration of this Province than the persistent and pertinacious attempts that have been made to crush Mr. Horniman, who emerges from each one triumphant and bearing aloft the torch of freedom."

Shri Venkateshwar (80), 12th Dec.

20. Commenting upon the Government order prohibiting the proposed arrangement according to which Mr. B. G. Horniman was to deliver an address to the students of the Agricultural College, Poona, on the occasion of the annual gathering of that College, the Shri Venkateshwar remarks:—The moment the authorities at Bombay heard about the arrangement, orders were issued for saving the innocent students from that dreadful bugbear Horniman. Well done! These gentlemen should be congratulated in an unequivocal manner on this interference on their part, because they have really saved the Empire by preventing Mr. Horniman's voice from falling on the ears of students. When it was declared in the Legislative Council, the other day, on behalf of Government that orders were already issued allowing Principals of Colleges discretion in the matter of permitting their students to attend political meetings, how is it that the discretion of the Principal of the Poona Agricultural College was interfered with by Government?

Comments on the debate on the various resolutions in the Bombay Legislative Council.
Kesari (106), 11th Dec.

21. A special feature of the last Council was that it continued its sessions for five days which is rarely the case. But it is necessary to increase the number of meetings and the number of days of every meeting in view of increasing work and we hope the desirable change will be introduced in the regime of Lord Willingdon. The enactment of Mr. Patel's Primary Education Bill will make the last sessions a memorable one. Three days were devoted to its discussion. During the other two days 18 out of 48 resolutions were disposed of. In many cases Government officials said that the question was being considered and resolutions numbering 12 were withdrawn in this way. Of the two resolutions that were actually passed none is important. The resolutions rejected by the Council were really important and their fate will excite regret and sorrow amongst the people. The rejection of the Honourable Mr. Patel's jury resolution even now means a declaration that we are not living in A. D. 1917, but in some century B. C. The obstinacy of the Bombay Government is somewhat extraordinary in this respect. In the United Provinces and Bengal, such a resolution is easily passed and in Madras it is even enforced. Why should the Bombay Government then be so much afraid of it? Are the residents of other Provinces only reasonable, educated and virtuous and is the Bombay Presidency excepting some three or four districts full of cruel beasts of prey? His Excellency advises us to move slowly. Even though half a century has elapsed since the introduction of the Jury System in some districts and since the establishment of the High Court, are we still in a hurry if other districts demand trial by Jury? Will anybody tell us why Government show partiality in allowing a murder case to be tried by jury in Belgaum and refusing the concession in Sátára and on what grounds they continue the system? His Excellency says that it is not possible to pass the resolution without any inquiry by a Committee. But no body prevented Government from holding the inquiry during the last 30 years. The excuse of an inquiry is suggested only after the resolution is moved! The attitude of Government is so extraordinary and haughty in this respect that it is better not to discuss it! It will be a credit to Government if they will grant the right to-day willingly. Otherwise we shall have it of right when the new Councils will be formed; why should we then beseech them? But what becomes of the wisdom and generosity of Government in that case?

Young India (14), 12th Dec.

22. Under the heading "Bureaucratic Cant" Young India writes:—"The value of many a useful discussion of Government policy in regard to public questions has been greatly marred in the past by the bogey of political motives which Government and their supporters have consistently attributed to their opponents. Nothing could be more unfortunate in this respect than the manner in which the Government of Bombay received the plea of Mr. Patel and his colleagues for the extension of the jury system in this Presidency. If Government had placed themselves in a spirit of uncompromising opposition to the proposal of Mr. Patel, we could understand their action. But the tactics adopted, of discrediting it as a political move, cannot but be regarded as reprehensible, especially on the part of a Government which has professed in season and out of season an unquenchable love for progress, albeit gradual and reasonable. Indeed after more than half a century of slow and steady experiment, it cannot be seriously contended even by a 'Government in their senses' that Mr. Patel's proposal was either 'impracticable' or 'revolutionary'. The question before the Council was plainly whether Government were prepared to extend the system or shelve the proposal. To this, Lord Willingdon has given an answer and the country ought to know at least now how far professions of sympathy with progress on the part of the Local Government are likely to go in practice. The whole discussion reveals the state of mind in which officialdom exists in matters of this kind and ought to bring home to people the utter futility of expecting the bureaucracy to adjust itself to new conditions and circumstances. The whole discussion on this important question tended to be unreal, which was not certainly improved by Lord Willingdon's amazing ignorance of the identity of Sir Richard Garth, Chief Justice of Bengal for a decade and a Privy Councillor to boot. It revealed, however, the unmistakable hostility of the bureaucrats and their henchman to the meanest concession of reform."

Indian Social Reformer (3), 16th Dec.

23. "The official speeches in the debate which recently took place in the Bombay Legislative Council on a resolution to extend trial by jury in this Presidency, betray a regrettable indifference to any but the most immediate aspect of the institution. In the course of our comments on the action of the Local Government restricting the scope of trial by jury in the Belgaum District two years ago, we quoted the opinion of an eminent American lawyer (cited with appreciation by Grote in his History of Greece) that an important advantage of the jury system was 'that it diffuses the most valuable information amongst every rank of citizens; it is a school of which every jury empanelled is a separate class, where the dictates of the law and the consequences of disobedience to them, are practically taught.' The eminent lawyer goes on to point out that trial without jury has a distinctly injurious effect on the public mind. It will, he says, 'by degrees accustom the people to a spectacle which they ought never to behold—a single man, determining the fact, applying the law, and disposing at his will of the life, liberty and reputation of a citizen'. Considerations like these used to play a large part in British Indian statesmanship, but the motto of our present-day administrators seems to be: 'Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.' No wonder that, without a foundation in sound theory, policy tends to shilt with every change of Governor or Member of Council, and that Government itself becomes less and less of a steadying influence on the public mind."

Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 13th Dec, Eng. cols.

24. "The jury system, it is notorious, has not been an unqualified success, so far as the mere administration of justice is concerned, either here or in England.......... The Advocate-General who, by his extensive experience of the behaviour of juries in Bombay, was peculiarly in a position to form an opinun, did not seem satisfied with his experience of Bombay juries. We think his opinion is entitled to respect. We agree that the proper standpoint to consider the question from is whether the interests of justice demand an extension of the jury system.......... But at the same time the question cannot be altogether detachad from its political aspect. It must be considered in both its political and practical aspects, and a satisfactory solution would be possible only by striking the balance of general advantage to the people. As a political institution, the right of trial by jury is invaluable and indispensable in a popular constitution. No more effective safeguard against the encroachments of authority and the privileged classes has been devised.......... Although in India to-day there are no assailants of the peoples' liberties of the type that existed in England in the 17th century, there are other menaces to be reckoned with. The officials as a class are not in sympathy with the people's aspirations. The majority of judges all over the country belong to the official class, share their prejudices, and are strictly accountable to and removable by the executive.......... Then there is the police; and in many places and in many cases the people require to be protected against the undue zeal or malice of these petty tyrants.......... Again, so far as India is concerned, while we are yet on the threshold of self-government, the system must be retained and extended, as a most useful training for discharging the functions of self-government.......... We have no doubt that with proper safeguards the system can be extended to all the parts of the Presidency with advantage."

Bombay Samáchár (60), 11th Dec.

25. The question of trial by jury has close connection with the high prestige of British justice, and the acceptance of the resolution would have added to that prestige. The system is not new to the Bombay Presidency. It has been in existence for many years in Thána, Surat, Poona and other districts, and in view of the success with which it has worked there, the demand for its extension to other parts of the Presidency can hardly be considered to be excessive. On the contrary the public have found several cases ending in deplorable results in districts which do not enjoy the previlege, rendering an appeal to the High Court necessary. Instances have occurred in places where cases are tried with the assistance of assessors in which on a reference to the High Court by the Lower Court in the event of the latter differing from the verdict of the assessors, the High Court has concurred with the assessors' decision, and this serves sufficiently to show that the Lower Courts require to be strengthened by the introduction of the jury system. It is, therefore, desirable that the principle should be extended especially when public opinion is keenly in favour of it. One objection that is raised against the extension is regarding the non-availability of educated persons in sufficient numbers for appointment as jurors, but it is hardly tenable in view of the awakening that is seen among the people in respect of education. Another objection that is raised is that based on the averseness of some classes of Indians against capital punishment. But this objection is not applicable only to Indians. Even in civilized countries such persons are numerous, but the jury system has not been abolished in those countries on that ground.

Mahrátta (5), 16th Dec.

26. "Even in democratically governed countries, the natural guardians of students do not hand over their wards to the exclusive care of Government Departments. Not a single British parent would tolerate for a moment the idea of his son being prevented from attending a meeting to which he (the parent) sees no objection. The schools and colleges in Britain will have all to be shut down for want of students within a week of the promulgation of a 'Risley circular'. But whatever the British parents may or may not allow, our case is ours, a unique case......... Stuffed with 'shamefully distorted' past history and severely segregated from all contact with the revealing and vivifying utterances of the most representative public men of the day, our younger generation will without doubt grow into just the sort of men who have succeeded in defeating Mr. Manmohandas, and making themselves the laughing stock of the very Britishers who describe their experience at Oxford and elsewhere with their tongues in their cheeks. One very strange argument was used by His Excellency Lord Willingdon. His Excellency said:—'I have already had an opportunity of expressing my views on this particular matter to the students of the Honourable Mr. Paranjpe and as they did not disapprove of my views I take it they must have approved of them.' His Excellency must know that open disapproval of his views by the students of Principal Paranjpe, especially when their Principal is what he is, would be a very 'bold' action. It is not improbable that these students may yet make up their minds to speak out their views. Since His Exellency has now openly said that he takes it that they have approved of his views, it is just possible that the students who are very strongly opposed to these views (and such, we know, there are) may take up again the idea of getting their similarly minded (but not so bold) fellow-students to put their signatures to a memorial praying for the revocation of the Circular. But even if the students do not take this step (which, in our opinion, they ought to take now that they are publicly represented as approving views which they cannot approve), their silence will be a proof of their weakness, or the weakness of their guardians and not any indication of their agreement with His Excellency......... Will parents and guardians submit to this treatment?......... Schools and colleges are built, equipped and managed with money coming from the people's pockets. 'We will take your money for running schools, but you shall not send your children to these schools unless you give us exclusive authority to make or mar their lives as we please.' That is the plain meaning of the students' circular."

Kesari (106), 11th Dec.; Karnátak Vaibhav (82), 11th Dec.

27. Discussing the Honourable Mr. Manmohandas Ramji's resolution about students and politics, the Kesari says that the Bombay Government is not prepared to put any trust in the conductors of schools, and it holds that the discretion of Principals has been encroached upon by Government. It complains that the explanation of Government that the circular applies only to political meetings has not been conveyed to Government schools and that the Head Master of the Dhulia School has not been asked to explain why he prohibited students from attending Mr. Shastri's lecture on free and compulsory education. It adds:—Government often say that they have no objection to any lectures being delivered in Colleges themselves by persons invited by the Principals, but Mr. Horniman, editor of the Bombay Chronicle, though first invited by Dr. Mann was asked not to lecture. Will the Honourable Sir M. B. Chaubal or other officials inform us as to what has become of the discretion of the Principal in this case? Has an official like Dr. Mann no common sense to decide about lectures to be delivered to his students? What of others, if this is the condition of Dr. Mann? Let the reader decide for himself how far sympathy for students' welfare and how far a vindictive feeling not to allow students to listen to any words of advice from persons obnoxious to Government, had to do with the circular in question. [The Karnátak Vaibhav remarks :—The comparison made by Sir M. B. Chaubal between theft and Home Rule is ridiculous. The remarks passed by His Excellency on patriots indirectly and specially on Mr. Jamnadas are improper and unjust. Will the officials who encourage girls and boys to appear on the stage in connection with war fund and "our day" celebrations, have any idea of their wasted time? Is it possible for any other Government than that of unfortunate India to argue that the time of students will be wasted, and that it will have baneful effects on their minds, if the students listen to the discussions conducted by noble and most loyal patriots about the welfare of their country? We have not yet forgotten the attempts made by the late Emperor Edward to awaken patriotism in the tender minds of small children in England. What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. Is there any arrangement in our curriculum to inculcate patriotism in the minds of our boys and girls? Do Government know the opinions of guardians about this matter? We suggest to the guardians to tell Government their frank opinion.]

28. Dnyán Prakásh (37), 13th Dec.; Prakásh (114), 12th Dec.; Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 14th Dec.

At the last Legislative Council meeting the Honourable Mr. Manmohandas Ramji endeavoured to show that the orders of Government prohibiting students from attending political meetings were injudicious. No one, however, can say that he was entirely successful in his object. He did not avail himself of the excellent opportunity of ascertaining the reasons which led to the revival of the Risley circular and to the insertion of fresh restrictions into it. It is needless to point out how Government can effectively meet the argument that students have the same rights of citizenship as other people and that, therefore, they have every right to take part in political meetings and generally to associate themselves with politics. Mr. Manmohandas' line of argument was so queer that he was opposed even by the non-official members of the Council. In introducing his resolution Mr. Manmohandas aimed at removing the stigma on the Home Rule League put upon it by its specific mention in the circular. His unreasonable and excessive zeal, however, in pleading the cause of the students only resulted in making the stain deeper. The official members openly expressed their disapproval of the Home Rule movement which was at first merely implied in the circular. Mr. Manmohandas is himself responsible for this result and we do not think any Home Ruler will congratulate him on bringing forward his motion in the Council. [The Prakásh writes :—The authorities have been straining every nerve to keep the students aloof from politics since the Indians began to think of their political uplift. There is no doubt that the Nagpur students had legitimate cause for going on strike. It would not be surprising if the authorities resort to methods injurious to the nation so long as the present system of irresponsible administration continues. The Jám-e-Jamshed condemns the resolution inasmuch as it recommends the removal of all control even over schoolboys along with students attending colleges. It, however, favours the removal of restraints in the matter of college students attending public meetings and supports its contention on the ground of their age, experience and mature judgment. The paper endorses the views expressed by the Honourable Mr. Paranjpye in this connection and expresses gratification at the remarks made by His Excellency Lord Willingdon declaring willingness on the part of Government to allow discretionary powers to the principals of colleges in connection with this subject.]

29. Prajá Mitra and Pársi (29), 10th Dec., Eng. cols.

"We should have liked to see the interesting debate in the Bombay Council on the beggar question result in something more promising and practical than a mere committee of non-official members. We quite appreciate the difficulties of Government, and their hesitation to associate themselves directly with a matter of such complexity. But we feel that they might with advantage be less squeamish and solicitious about the superstitions and susceptibilities of the people, than they are used to. The people have long since outgrown the times and the temper in which useful administrative measures and Government's motives were liable to be misunderstood, on the score of interference with the customs and beliefs of the people. And Government had better take note of this fact......... The bulk of the people are more practical and less fanatical than is still believed in various quarters. Even if it were otherwise, we do not see why necessary and salutary reforms should be perpetually put off out of an exaggerated respect for unreasonable sentiments.......... The people all over the country know and feel that, whatever the shortcomings of the present system of Government, it deeply respects the beliefs and the religious observances of the people. There is little chance now of official acts being misunderstood on this score. We think, therefore, that it is time to initiate a stronger and more courageous policy in the matter of social reform."

Jam-e-Jamshed (24), 11th Dec.; Bombay Samáchár (60), 13th Dec.

30. Commenting upon the motion of the Honourable Mr. Pheroze Sethna on the evil of professional beggars, the Jam-é-Jamshed says that any satisfactory solution of the problem is very difficult on account of the prevailing religious beliefs and customs. Persons who can be classed as beggars and living on the charity of the people exist in the Muhammadan, Hindu and other communities whose religious sentiments are so strong that they consider it a religious virtue to give alms. If they were prevented from begging, it would create dissatisfaction among the orthodox people. The solution of the question is also impossible from the financial point of view as it involves the expenditure of an enormous sum annually which cannot be met, as stated by the Honourable Mr. Curtis, from Provincial revenues or by Municipal taxation. [The Bombay Samáchár endorses the view of the Honourable Mr. Curtis to the effect that the introduction of the obligation to obtain a license to beg would be an interference with ancient customs, and opines that the suggestion made by Honourable Mr. Patel to provide industrial homes for certain classes of beggars is proper.]

Karnátak Vaibhav (82), 11th Dec.

31. The Honourable Mr. Bhurgri has laid the rayats in Sind under a great obligation by getting a Committee appointed to inquire into the Sarbarai question. The trouble undergone by the rayats when officials visit their villages excites great indignation, and the system prevails everywhere. We do not know why our Honourable Members do not ask for the appointment of a Committee for our part of the Presidency also. Government servants on small pay have to tour and their pay and allowances do not suffice for their expenses and they are compelled to get money by other means. It is well known that village officers compel rayats to serve and also to lend their carts, when big officials go on a tour. We suggest, therefore, that the Committee to be appointed should not inquire only about Sind but also conduct a full inquiry into the question throughout the Presidency.

Sandesh (116), 9th Dec.

32. The last Legislative Council meeting could not get through even half the amount of work on the agenda, although it discussed several important questions. This clearly shows that the Council should meet more often during the year and that each meeting should be spread over a larger number of days. This reform has now become imperative and should be introduced at once. In the alternative Government should accept the Honourable Mr. Kamat's suggestion to hold Divisional Darbars. Unfortunately his motion which would have facilitated the work of the Council was defeated. It is most undesirable that a considerable time of the Council should be taken up by the discussion of minor questions. We would also urge upon the notice of the non-official members the need for closer co-operation. The spectacle of one non-official member opposing another is most unedifying.

Comments on His Excellency the Governor's speech at the Agricultural Conference at Poona.

Bombay Samáchár (60), 13th Dec.

33. The Bombay Samáchár regards the speech delivered by His Excellency the Governor at the recent session of the Agricultural Conference as Poona as highly illuminative in the matter of the development of agriculture and allied industries. It greatly commends the advice given by His Excellency to the agricultural experts to create a body of men who can instruct the class of agriculturists in this country to bring about the best possible results at the minimum of cost. It believes that as long as the agriculturists are not enabled to put into practice agricultural inventions, with beneficial results, those inventions are of no material value. The paper also emphasises the importance of promoting the spread of agricultural knowledge and accordingly suggests the circulation, among the cultivating classes, of agricultural literature, throwing light upon useful inventions, written in the different vernaculars of the country. It further supports the views expressed by His Excellency in favour of employing scientific methods for the better nurture and improvement of the breed of agriculturel cattle and, dwelling upon the present difficulties of the agriculturists in the direction of grazing their cattle, suggests that Government should accord them increased facilities for the purpose by throwing open to them grazing grounds and forests free of charge.

Comments on the present situation in Russia.

Gujaráti (17), 9th Dec.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 11th Dec.

34. In connection with the present situation of Russia in the war, the Gujaráti remarks:—It cannot be said whether the present Russian muddle will end in peace. However, peace in the near future is not likely because the interests of Germany lie in enabling herself to retain conquered territories by increasing the present chaos in Russia. The Russians are not alive to the fact that Germany is not likely to relinquish Poland, Lithuania and Courland, nor to the fact that she would not allow Russia to retain Armenia which the latter has conquered from Turkey. The shortage of men to fight against Germany that has been caused by Russia going out of the war cannot be supplied from any other quarter except India. If, accordingly, peace is not concluded the war might extend to the year 1919 because it appears that it will be the end of 1918 before America will have made thorough preparations. But it is necessary for the British Empire to make a stand till that time at any sacrifice. Preparations, therefore, should at once be made for recruiting in India additional armies on a large scale for reinforcing the French and British troops in France. [Dwelling upon the perfidy of Russia implied in her intention to conclude a separate peace, the Praja Mitra and Pársi refers to the announcement made by the Russian Maximalists repudiating the liability of Russia to repay her foreign debts. It attributes this to the instigation of the enemy and regards it as an indirect way of making Russia declare war against the Allies. The paper also regards it as a practical fruit of the remonstrance recently addressed by the Russian Foreign Minister to the American and French attachés and speculates if it cannot be a step preliminary to some other deceit of a graver type in the future.]

Comments on the demand of security from the Bombay Chronicle.

Young India (14), 12th Dec.; Rást Goftár* (31), 16th Dec., Eng. cols.

35. "The news of the decision of the Chief Presidency Magistrate to demand security from Mr. Horniman as printer and publisher of The Bombay Chronicle, which comes too late for full comment in this issue, will be received with indignation throughout the Western Presidency, and in fact, the whole country. One would have thought that the much-vaunted desire to preserve an atmosphere of peace and calm at this juncture would have at least shamed those responsible for this latest assault on public liberty into waiting to deliver their blow until Mr. Montagu has left India." [The Rást Goftár remarks:—"The Press Act has not been much in evidence in the Bombay Presidency, because there are very few papers whose tone is objectionable, and the temper of the present Bombay Government also is excellent. It is a pity that recourse should be had to the Press Act during Mr. Montagu's visit to India, and particularly in view of his approaching visit to Bombay. We cannot of course say to what particular writings in the Bombay Chronicle exception has been taken, for these are only known when the security is forfeited."]

Some defects in the working of the Bombay Police Courts.
Hindusthán (21), 8th Dec.

36. Animadverting upon some defects in the working of the courts of the Presidency Magistrates in Bombay, the Hindusthán makes suggestions for the remedying of those defects. It refers to the excessive enthusiasm on the part of some Magistrates in bringing about a compromise between the parties and to the pressure they bring to bear upon complainants to compound their cases. It remarks that such a practice on the part of Magistrates is likely to result in miscarriage of justice. To remedy this state of things the paper suggests that Magistrates other than the Chief Presidency Magistrate should not be allowed even indirectly to hint at compromising a case unless with the previous permission of the latter, and similarly the Chief Presidency Magistrate also should, in cases tried by him, obtain permission from the Chief Justice of the Bombay High Court. It also suggests that, since according to the present procedure in the case of conviction for minor offences the party convicted can go to the High Court only in revision, which it regards as a method of relief of no practical value, the Chief Presidency Magistrate should be empowered to hear appeals from the judgments of other Magistrates in such cases and that he should be given no other original work. The paper further goes on to refer to the practice recently adopted by some Magistrates, for artificially curtailing work, of striking off the roll those cases in which the complainant or his pleader is not present just at the time the Court commences its work for the day. It maintains that Magistrates are paid for hearing and disposing of cases and not for so readily striking them out.

Comments on the recent Government Press Note on the constitution of Excise Advisory Committees.
Praja Bandhu (28), 9th Dec., Eng. cols.; Kaiser-i-Hind (25), 9th Dec.

37. "We welcome the gradual change in the views of the authorities in connection with the constitution of the above committees as reflected in a Press Note issued by the Revenue Department, Bombay Government, during this week......... The consensus of indigenous public opinion, however, is that such committees should consist of a majority of non-official members for the very obvious reason that being more in touch with the public at large they are in a better position than their official colleagues to decide such matters as come up before the committee. Notwithstanding this, we welcome as stated already this improvement, and shall await with interest the result thereof in due course." [The Kaisar-i-Hind makes similar remarks and adds that such committees will be of no practical use so long as the official president can override their recommendations. It suggests that where the Collector and the Committee disagree the question should be referred for final decision to the Commissioner of Excise.]

Kesari (106), 11th Dec.

38. It is an old demand of the popular party that there should be a non-official majority in the Abkari Committees and that these should be established where they did not exist before. But Government have not yet granted it. Government have slightly changed the constitution of the Committees. The number of officials and non-officials is to be equal and if the President likes he may appoint a non-official but he should be from the classes that do not regard drinking as a sin There is no doubt that he will vote against the total abstinence movement. Under the new rules the Bombay Government have not given to the non-officials a clear majority and have empowered the President to create a Bhasmasur (name of demon) who would oppose the suggestions of the advocates of temperance. This is what goes by the name of statesmanship!

Difficulties of rayats in the Kárwár District.
Kánara Vritt (35), 5th Dec.

39. Last year at about this time about a dozen wild elephants from Mysore destroyed much of the crops in Basolli and Kirtigaddi villages of Kumta Taluka (district Kárwár). People are naturally panic-stricken as a herd of about 15 elephants has entered the taluka and is attempting to destroy crops. It is said that they gathered the crops in a hurry, before they were fully ripe. They hold no licenses for fire-arms and they try to frighten the elephants by fire-works. We understand that these attempts have proved fruitless and that crops have been partly destroyed. Are people able to protect their crops from such dangerous wild elephants? Who but Government can protect them? Though the Assistant Collector for the Division had personally satisfied himself about the destruction of crops last year, he referred the rayats to their landlords, when asked for remission. When the landlords were not given remission, will they give remission to the rayats? Last year 1,000 mooras of paddy crops were washed away in Venkatapur near Bhátkal (district Kárwár) by a tidal wave. Government themselves know what remission they have granted in this case. When is the remission to be granted if not in such a case? Our rayats on the Mysore frontier have crossed the frontier and are living happily in Mysore. We understand that they have gone to Mysore because of the forest privileges they enjoy there. We hope the officials will take proper steps and not allow the idea that they do not care for the rayats even in their difficulties, to take root in the minds of the latter.

Alleged failure of crops in the Kaira District.
Hindusthán (21), 12th Dec.

40. Referring to the failure of crops in Kaira District, the Hindusthán says:—Generally the Government officers assume the agriculturists to be contumacious in the matter of paying assessment and ascribe their harshness to this circumstance. To collect Government revenue is the duty of the officials, but at the same time the condition of the cultivator should also be taken into consideration. The competence of an officer should not be gauged by the amount of revenue he collects. The agriculturists allege that over seventy-five per cent. of their crops have failed. In the event of failure of crops Government generally call for a report from their subordinate officers and base their decision on it; but we request Government to be pleased to appoint two persons, one, an experienced officer from the Secretariat and another a non-official member of the Legislative Council to see for themselves the condition of crops during the current year and to inquire whether the demand made by the agriculturists is genuine.

A complaint against the regulation for the issue of firewood permits.
Kánara Vritt (35), 5th Dec.

41. The Kánara Vritt objects to the recent measures taken by the Forest Department to stop the issue of firewood permits to rayats residing within 7 or 8 miles of any place containing a Depôt, and observes that these measures would prove prejudicial to the growth of the sugarcane industry in Kánara and even to the subsistence of the poor rayat. It further remarks:—The Forest Department has been busy depriving poor people of the many forest privileges which they have been enjoying from time immemorial and this new restriction upon the right of rayats to collect firewood from neighbouring jungles for the preparation of jagri, will in the long run entirely stop the indigenous preparation of jagri and necessitate its importation from outside. We hope that the Revenue authorities will now protect the people from the reactionary policy of the Forest Department as they did on former occasions. We advise the rayats to shake off their silence and place their grievances before the district authorities.

LEGISLATION.

Comments on the passing of the Honourable Mr. Patel's Compulsory Education Act.

Kesari (106), 11th Dec.; Dnyán Prakásh (37), 12th Dec.; Karnátak Vaibhav (82), 11th Dec.

42. Referring to the passing of Mr. Patel's Primary Education Bill, the Kesari congratulates the Bombay Government and His Excellency Lord Willingdon and says that it would have been better if such a Bill had been passed in the Imperial Legislative Council. It doubts whether the Provincial Governments can bear the increased expenditure on primary education if they themselves have to shoulder the burden. In its opinion, the Bill does not clearly provide for the share to be borne by the Provincial Government, in case some Municipalities decide to introduce compulsory primary education in their area. It wants all these points to be made clear, and remarks that unless the Imperial Government show their sympathy in action, Mr. Patel's Bill will not be of much use. It further adds:—Mr. Gokhale's Bill was applicable to District Local Boards also, but in one respect Mr. Patel's Act is better than the former because it is not necessary under the latter measure to have 33 per cent. of the school going population in schools before the introduction of compulsory education. The age-limit has been raised to 11 and education has been made free as well as compulsory. Provision has been made to apply the Act to girls as well as boys. But people should not be misled. Nobody is responsible for seeing the Act enforced and until that is done, it cannot be said that the principle of compulsion has been really introduced. Mr. Patel's measure is in a way a test and the Municipalities of the Bombay Presidency should take up the work at once. They should not take back now; we have fortunately got an opportunity to set an example to the whole of India. If we lose this opportunity, we need not hope for better days. [The Dnyán Prakásh, writes in a similar strain but objects to the change made by the Council in section 11 regarding the employment of children. It further suggests that instead of contract grants, Government should be ready to bear a fixed proportion of expenditure. The Karnátak Vaibhav writes:—Government should declare what portion of the expenditure they will bear, war or no war. Otherwise it will be very difficult for our Municipalities, already in a poor condition, to introduce compulsory education. Government can raise objections stating that the Municipalities have no money, no good teachers, etc. But we hope they will view the question sympathetically and that they will set the Municipalities on the way to progress.]

Islámic Mail (141), 10th Dec., Urdu Edition.

43. Referring to the rejection of some amendments to the Primary Education Bill proposed by the Muhammadan Members of the Bombay Legislative Council, the Islámic Mail says that it is essential that Muhammadan students should be taught through the medium of Urdu, there being no books on Islam in Marathi or Gujarati, that it is proper that the Managing Committees of Schools should be partly composed of Musalman members, and that Moslem girls of eleven years observivng the purdah should not be compelled to go to school. It holds that amendments embodying the foregoing provisions were lost because the Hindu Members in the Council are swayed by religious (racial ?) prejudices, and makes it an argument for opposing the grant of Home Rule to India because it is fraught with danger to the welfare of Indian Musalmans.

EDUCATION.

How the backward class students are prevented from entering the Training Colleges.

Jágaruk (102), 7th Dec.

44. It is the duty of every lover of his country to encourage the backward classes to acquire education, but instead of giving special facilities to students of the backward classes several difficulties have been created in their path. One of these is the rule that a candidate obtaining not less than 45 per cent. of the marks should be considered eligible to appear at the entrance examination of the Training Colleges. Our benign Government desires that this rule shuld not be made applicable to the backward classes. But the subordinate educational authorities interpret the term 'backward classes' to mean only the untouchable classes and the Muhammadans and thus exclude the other non-Brahmin communities from the benefit of this rule. Our interests would not have been thus ignored if we had any representatives in the Legislative Council.

MUNICIPALITIES.

Comments on the alleged appallingly insanitary condition of Hyderabad (Sind) and the total failure of the Municipal Committee of Management.

Sind Journal (10), 29th Nov. and 6th Dec.

45. "The wail of misery that is heard in the town of Hyderabad owing to the stark insanitary conditions prevailing there must have reached the ears of the Bombay Government also, but as yet no practical steps have been taken to awaken the official Committee of Management to a due sense of their responsibility in the matter.......... The laxity of supervision by the former Health Officer and the Sanitary staff has resulted in the town being converted into a vast sink of filth. The sickness among scavengers has also contributed to the deplorable condition of the town. But neither the Committee of Managament nor the Executive of the Committee seem to realize their terrible responsibility in allowing things to drift for so many days. The result has been the appalling insanitary condition of the town which assails the ears and eyes of passers-by almost at every step. The high mortality among the towns-people is an alarming sign of the havoc which the insanitary state of the town is working upon the human constitution.......... The long list of public grievances which the Sindvási has been publishing from day to day leaves no room for doubt that the Committee of Management is an utter failure.......... The state of Hyderabad demands a thorough investigation by a competent authority to lay bare the defects and drawbacks of the present regime. [In the subsequent issue the paper writes :—" The public feeling has so much been roused by the failure of the Committee of Management to provide for even the ordinary comforts and amenities of life that several speakers (at the public meeting held at the Holmstead Hall on the 30th November) suggested the non-payment of taxes and filing of civil and criminal cases against the Committee of Management as a remedy. While the people have been smarting so keenly, the Bombay Government has refused the Honourable Mr. Bhurgri permission to move his resolution for the restoration of the Hyderabad Municipality in the Legislative Council of which he had given notice on the ostensible ground that the matter was not of 'general public interest'. We cannot comprehend the mystery as to why the resolution, 'to provide at as early a date as possible a street ambulance service for Bombay for the conveyance of injured persons to hospitals' which is included in the printed agenda of the current session of the Council is of general public interest, while the resolution for the restoration of the Hyderabad Municipality, on which depends the well-being of over seventy thousand unoffending citizens, should not be deemed as such. The Committee of Management has so far proved to be merely a punitive body, and may we not hope that the Bombay Government would, in view of the representations from the citizens and rate-payers, be pleased to restore the Municipal franchise to the city which has already suffered much, even though the period of three years' sentence has yet to run its course."

NATIVE STATES.

Comments on the formation of Cutch-Káthiáwár political association in Bombay.

Hindusthán (21), 13th Dec.; Bombay Samáchár (60), 15th Dec.; Indian Loyalist (23), 13th Dec.; Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 13th Dec.

46. Referring to the Cutch-Káthiáwár Popular Assembly that has been started in Bombay recently, the Hindusthán remarks that it is the rulers of the Native States in Cutch and Káthiáwár that will reap the greatest benefit from the introduction of democratic institutions in the States, which is one of the objects of the Assembly. It observes that the party next to profit from such a change is the British Government and that the party benefiting next to the British Government will be the subjects of those States themselves. In view of the great probability of the constitution in British India being influnced in a very large measure by democratic principles in the near future, the paper remarks that the rulers of Native States in India cannot afford to maintain within their territories institutions of bygone days without their acting as so many drags upon the civic progress of their people. It advises the Native Chiefs of Cutch and Káthiáwár to look upon the promoters of the present movement with a kindly eye for the sake of their own and their successors' best interests. [The Bombay Samáchár welcomes the formation of the Assembly and, expressing sympathy with its objects, remarks that if this body is cautious enough in making its progress it will bring great benefit to the people of Káthiáwár. Commending the action of those who set on foot the present movement, the Indian Loyalist hopes that if these persons carry on their activities in a peaceful and moderate manner their legitimate demands are sure to be recognised by the British Government as well as the Native Chiefs. It wishes the latter to remember that a State exists not for the glorification of its ruler but that it exists for the welfare and the industrial, educational and economic advancement of its people.* The Jám-e-Jamshed apprehends that it is likely that the leaders of the new association might incur the displeasure of some narrow-minded Indian Chiefs. It hopes that these rulers will not hastily condemn the promoters of the Assembly and prematurely regard its existence as unwelcome.]

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 21st December 1917.

---

*Reported in advance.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 51 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 22nd December 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

Agrarian matters: Failure of crops in Gujarát 26

Bombay Legislative Council:

- Comments on the Honourable Mr. Manmohandas Ramji's resolution regarding the students' circular issued by the Bombay Government 23
- Comments on the Honourable Mr. Patel's Jury resolution . . . . 21—22

British rule:

- Alleged intention of Government to have the Defence of India Act permanently on the Statute Book of India 11
- Alleged unchecked sports of Bureaucracy in India 9
- Appeal to Government on behalf of Arjunlal Shethi interned at Vellore. 12
- Appeal to Government to stop landlords in Bombay from raising rents. 15
- Comments on the Agricultural Board Conference at Poona 14
- Government should conduct an inquiry into the allegations of Lala Harkishenlal before the Industrial Commission at Láhore . . . 13
- Suggestion for remedying the evil of Sarbarai 16
- What India has to suffer because of the fetish of prestige . . . 10

Excise: Comments on the Press Note regarding licensing of liquor-shops . 24

Indian Political Reforms:

- Alleged favoritism of the Madras and Bombay Governments in selecting deputations to wait upon Mr. Montagu 6
- Comments on the rejection of the address of the Presidency Social Reform Association 7
- Complaint about the treatment given to Mr. Montagu during his Indian tour . . . . 2—5
- Government are not willing to part with real power 1
- Why the backward classes do not support the Swarájya movement . 8

Public Service: Alleged waste of public money on the language examination of temporary I.M.S. and other officers 25

War:

- Comments on Lord Lansdowne's letter regarding peace in the Daily Telegraph 19
- The Allies are responsible for the defection of Russia 18
- The present outlook of the — 17
- What Japan will do if Russia repudiates its financial obligations. 20

LEGISLATION—

Comments on the Income Tax Bill 27

EDUCATION—

Complaint that fellows from the Karnátak are not nominated 28

Second Grade Arts College at Surat 29

H 411—a CCN

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

Government are not willing to part with real power.

Kesari (106), 18th Dec.

1. It is but natural that the Secretary of State should feel rather tired of receiving deputations and granting interviews. How long is the same thing to be done? What he heard at Delhi and Calcutta, he will have to listen to in Madras and Bombay. Many will ask for swarájya. Few will say that even something less than the Congress-League scheme will do. Scarcely any will be found who will say that everything is all right and that nothing need be given. If Mr. Montagu thinks that he will non-plus our leaders in personal interviews and elicit from them the admission that swarájya is not wanted, it is a vain desire. As the Congress-League scheme is a temporary and provisional scheme containing our irreducible minimum of demands nobody will contend that no objections can be raised against it. The scheme is only an indication. Its details can be changed but its central principle of granting political power to the people will never change. Government are welcome to adopt any scheme whereby they intend to grant political power. People are hungry for political power not for political schemes. These answers are possible to the Congress Scheme framed by our famous leaders and approved by the Congress:—(1) We shall grant Swarájya in accordance with the scheme (2) We shall grant Swarájya in consonance with our own scheme, (3) We shall not grant the powers asked for. It will not do to give the third answer now; people will become discontented. The first answer will make the people happy and they will help the Government in all ways. If the second answer is given, the people will remain quiet till the Government scheme is produced and discussed. It is quite necessary that the scheme should be forthwith produced. Though people do not think that Government will grant whatever thay ask, yet Government also have not got strength to impose their will and Mr. Montagu is consequently in India. Many people suppose that the fate of Swarájya depends on the merits of the scheme. If Government are feeling any difficulty it is because they are unwilling to part with their powers, not because they cannot frame any scheme. We know it is difficult to draft a scheme but we know also that Government want a scheme whereby they will not have to part with real power but it will be thought that something is given. If Government determine to give what the people ask for, there is not the least difficulty of a scheme. Our Government are not willing to produce their scheme or accept ours. They do not want to appoint a Commission, the findings of which will be unquestioningly accepted. They want to pick holes in the Congress-League Scheme and to exhibit their surprise and distrust as to how it can be introduced. No danger is to be feared, if Government adopt the Congress-League Scheme. Real desire to grant power is necessary; if Government do not feel any such desire, we have no other way but agitate so strenuously as to create such a desire in Government.

Complaint about the treatment given to Mr. Montagu during his Indian tour.

Young India (14), 19th Dec.

2. "No Purda lady belonging to the most conservative Indian family could have been more jealously screened from the public gaze, or consigned to a more rigorous social segregation than has fallen to the lot of Mr. Montagu. And why? The phenomenon is uncommon enough to merit attention even as a freak of bureaucratic orthodoxy, but unhappily it is not possible to dismiss it as such. Indications on the contrary point to a less fortuitous and more serious explanation. As Mrs. Besant has pointed out, unless appearances are deceptive, the reception of Mr. Montagu to which we have referred is part of a policy. It is a policy at once unjust and unwise. It is a policy, moreover, which the Indian public must clearly and unhesitatingly condemn—for it is directed as much against them as against the Secretary of State—and which the leaders of the community should lose no further time in seeking to have rectified......... Apart from grounds of public policy, it is the simple fact that ever since the time when Mr. Montagu so brilliantly acquitted himself as the worthy lieutenant of Lord Morley, he has won a distinct place in the affection and gratitude of all thinking Indians, and they would be false to their own traditions and instincts if they omitted to make it clear that there is a true Indian welcome for a courageous and sympathetic friend of India from the heart of India—even though its expression and demonstration should so far have been repressed by the amazing ineptitude of the powers that be. The practical point is to make the omission good, while there is yet time. Bombay has a special responsibility in this matter.......... At Delhi he was the inmate of a tent in the grounds of Viceregal Lodge, his suite being similarly lodged alongside, and so far as his public appearances were concerned he was throughout made to play second fiddle, as the Allahabad Leader put it, 'almost obtrusively and to such an extent as to have evoked audible comment from members of the deputations.' In Calcutta Mr. Montagu was made to take the back seat even to Lord Ronaldshay, and His Excellency of Bengal must have felt vastly pleased with himself.......... Apart from the graciousness of these proceedings, however, what of their propriety ? In due time, no doubt, the matter will be canvassed. Meanwhile from their point of view, and in so far as they are concerned, the Indian public must assert themselves, must express the feelings they entertain for Mr. Montagu, and must insist upon according him a fitting national reception. Let Bombay undo its 'poisonous precedent' by one worthier of her, of her public life and patriotism, and shame the devil."

Hindusthán (21), 16th Dec., Eng. cols.

3. "The feeling of disappointment engendered by the bureaucratic treatment of the Moslem deputation has not in any way been relieved by the repetition of aggressiveness in regard to other deputations. In various parts of the country Mr. Montagu's Ushers have refused to receive important and really representative deputations because, forsooth, they are pledged to the support of the Congress-League Scheme. It is, indeed, not difficult to guess why this is so. With the facts before us, we are of opinion that the officials have hitherto given the Imperial Government and its accredited representatives to understand that the Congress-League Scheme embodies no more than the opinions of an infinitesimally small section of educated people, whose interests are not the same as those of the large majority of people. If Mr. Montagu had his own way during his sojourn in this country, the chances are that he would come to a conclusion far different from the one which he has been enjoined to accept as the only one possible in the circumstances. In order to prevent such a consummation of course, the officials have taken the 'wise' step of spoon-feeding him in respect of Indian affairs. .... We are sorry for the petulant exhibitions of bureaucratic narrowmindedness. But if Mr. Montagu is thereby convinced of the hopless inadequacy of bureaucratic government to the present times, we should be amply rewarded."

Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 17th Dec., Eng. cols.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 21st Dec.; Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 21st Dec.

4. "There has been, from the first, a murmur of dissatisfaction at the programme of Mr. Montagu's movements laid down by the authorities. The murmur is now getting very audible, as Mr. Montagu moves from place to place, without any opportunity being granted to the people of a free and informal interchange of views and greetings with him.......... We think it speaks volumes for Mr. Montagu's modest and unassuming character, that he is content to be thus moved from place to place like a puppet........ And this bald and silent progress is in curious contrast with the noise, pomp, and circumstance, that usually attend the tours of Governors and Lieutenant-Governors of Indian Provinces.......... For aught that the Indian public knows, Mr. Montagu might have stayed at Whitehall and read the memorials of the various deputations there, and the Government of India might have forwarded their comments along with the addresses. The whole attitude of the officials in the matter of Mr. Montagu's visit appears to us to be exceedingly narrow, and calculated to cause quite unnecessary bitterness." [The paper in a subsequent issue remarks :—It is unfortunate that the authorities have not deemed fit to afford an opportunity to the nation to give a suitable welcome to the special representative of the crown bringing a message of good-will and peace from His Majesty for India. The nation considers it its duty to express its gratitude to the Right Honourable Mr. Montagu for coming, and through him to His Majesty for sending him, to this country with a mission which he has been entrusted to perform with a view to satisfying the national aspiration, and its only wish is that it should be allowed to discharge this duty. We venture to say with feelings of sorrow that the policy adopted is neither British nor consistent with the motto of sympathy and confidence set forth by His Majesty. The Jám-e-Jamshed remarks that though the nation is very anxious to express its gratitude to the Imperial Government for their generosity in sending their representive in Mr. Montagu, official arrangements in regard to his movements are such that it can not fulfil its cherished desires. It regrets the denial of such a privilege and adds that the policy adopted has caused deep sorrow and keen disappointment. It appeals on behalf of the Bombay public to His Excellency Lord Willingdon to make an alteration in the programme of the Secretary of State's arrival in Bombay so as to give him a public reception. It says that if the appeal is responded to the people of Bombay will be highly gratified.]

Rást Goftár (31), 16th Dec.; Gujaráti Punch (19), 16th Dec.

5. Has the Secretary of State come to this country simply to receive personally memorials of Indian reform demands? If that was his only important mission, it could have been accomplished by him in his office in London. The object of inviting him to this country and his accepting the invitation can only be that he should become acquainted with the habits of living, ambitions and feelings of the Indian nation, its loyalty and ideals, its literacy and skill, its intellectual power and its fitness for self-government and place the information before the British Government and the British nation after satisfying himself as to the facts. But how will this important mission be fulfilled by going to three or four cities of the country and putting in his pocket addresses of demands from certain associations? [The Gujaráti Punch speaks in a somewhat similar strain and inquires whether the policy adopted would prove beneficial.]

Alleged favouritism of the Madras and Bombay Governments in selecting deputations to wait upon Mr. Montagu.

Kesari (106), 11th Dec.; Dnyán Prakásh (37), 20th Dec.

6. The Kesari remarks that the bureaucratic officials did not give an opportunity to the people to welcome Mr. Montagu and that he is treated as an ordinary guest. In its opinion, the proper thing was to consult Mr. Montagu and decide according to his opinion about interviews and deputations. It thinks that the bureaucratic officials must have carried their point obstinately in refusing an interview to Mr. Mahomed Ali and rejecting the address of the Moslem League. It further remarks:—Many associations in Madras were not allowed to present their addresses. Is it not clear injustice and favouritism to allow non-Brahmin Nairite Associations and to refuse the Madras Presidency Association under the leadership of Diwan Bahadur Keshav Pillay? It is quite reprehensible that all the powers have been appropriated by local officials and that Mr. Montagu is treated like a lion in a cage or like a purdanashin lady. If he is not to have even this much freedom, he could have asked for the addresses to be sent to London. Why did the Viceroy press him so much to come over to India? But the Viceroy never invited Mr. Montagu. He invited Mr. Chamberlain but Mr. Montagu came. This attempt is probably being made to somehow dispose of the matter. [The Dnyán Prakásh says:—We regret that our local Government also has shown favouritism like the Madras Government which first decided not to allow non-Brahmin Associations supporting the Congress-League scheme to see the Secretary of State. Nobody thought Lord Willingdon's Government would follow the unpraiseworthy attempt of the Madras Government to support the Nairites. The All-India Maratha Association of Belgaum has not been allowed by the Bombay Government to present an address. At first it was contended that the address was not received in time but afterwards it was said that the Secretary of State had no time. One is likely to feel a suspicion that the officials of the Bombay Government have rejected the address led by the desire of the Madras Government to show that the non-Brahmins in general do not approve of the Congress-League Scheme. We do not think that the head of the Government or his Executive Councillors want to show any such discrimination. This Association supports the Congress-League Scheme and condemns communal elections. All may not approve of their views. But the Secretary of State is not here to listen to particular views but to all views. The rejection of a non-Brahmin address supporting the Congress-League Scheme on any ground cannot be supported. We hope the Bombay Government will correct their mistake without waiting for an agitation like the Madras Government."]

Comments on the rejection of the address of the Presidency Social Reform Association.

Subodh Patrika (43), 16th Dec.

7. The Honourable Mr. Basu's appointment on the India Council was universally hailed with satisfaction as he is well-acquainted with the aspirations of the people. Also the decision that he should accompany Mr. Montagu during his tour in this country led to the expectation that the Secretary of State would benefit by his experience. We confess, however, that we have been totally disappointed in one respect. The Social Reform Association of Bombay has been informed that its address could not be accepted. This institution is well-known to Mr. Basu and he recognises the importance of social reform. Why was then this respectable institution thus insulted? Until people are assured that Mr. Basu tried his level best on behalf of this institution they will want to know why he did not take the necessary steps to secure the acceptance of the Association's address.

Why the backward classes do not support the swarájya movement.

Dnyán Prakásh (37), 15th Dec.

8. Mr. A. B. Latthe writes in the Dnyán Prakásh:—The non-Brahmins do not support the swarájya movement because they are afraid that it will lead, if successful, to the dominance of the advanced classes. A few years ago the Extremists aimed at obtaining 'unadulterated' swarájya and that too immediately. The Moderates disapproved of that course as they thought it would not conduce to the welfare of the country even if it were practicable. Their disapproval, however, was not sufficiently pronounced as they had never devoted any thought to the social condition of the backward classes. The only course open to these classes, therefore, was to oppose all those who were striking at the root of the British power which guaranteed equal opportunities to all in social and religious matters. The war has completely changed the whole situation and the need for granting more rights to Indians has now become imperative. It is no longer to the interests of any community to sit quiet and throw the responsibility of safeguarding its interests upon the British Government. There is one glaring defect in the Congress scheme of swarájya which aims at securing the internal administration of the country while leaving its defence to others. Some people do not recognise that it is unwise to resort to dishonest methods even in politics. As there are recruiters who collect men for the army by fraudulently obtaining their thumb impressions, so there is no lack of persons who do not scruple to secure the assent of ignorant men to the scheme of swarájya by similar methods. Hundreds of men will be found in the Belgaum District alone who have thus assented to the scheme of swarájya without knowing what they have subscribed to. The English may have impoverished and emasculated the country but the advanced classes have dehumanised the masses. No one says that the English are here simply to look after our welfare. England is not fighting for Belgium but she is fighting because the independence of Belgium will serve also her selfish interests. Although British dominance is considerably detrimental to the economic and social progress of the country, the lower classes acquiesce in it because it at least assures them the treatment of human beings. We know the faults of British rule. But we are equally aware of the more numerous faults of the upper classes. The acceptance of British domination is the price the country has to pay to overcome the tyranny of the advanced classes.

Alleged unchecked sports of bureaucracy in India.
Kesari (106), 18th Dec.

9. The situation in England must have been a hundred times more delicate than in India. But still the Defence of the Realm Act is enforced oftener and more severely here than in England. Why is there this inverse ratio? The answer lies in the irresponsible autocratic administration in India and Swarájya and the independent atmosphere in England. In this country therefore the bureaucracy can issue at its sweet will any orders it likes. But if there is any such attempt in England, the authorities are taken to task severely and they have to apologise. A long-standing and influential paper like the Hindu of Madras is censored before it is allowed to circulate in Burma. The Behar correspondent of the Amrit Bázár Pátrika and the Bengalee is at once interned. The Editor of Al-Hind of Delhi is at once arrested and prosecuted under the Defence of India Act and he is even refused bail. A notice is issued to the Bombay Chronicle all of a sudden to furnish a security of Rs. 2,000. The bureaucracy sports in this manner not once, nor twice but hundreds of times in this country. No body can check it.

What India has to suffer because of the fetish of prestige.
Sánj Vartamán (32), 17th Dec., Eng. cols.

10. "It may safely be admitted that perhaps in no other country in the world—excepting Germany—so much oblation is paid to the fetish of Prestige, as it is in India......... What injustice is not committed for the sake of prestige, what arrogance we have to put up with on behalf of this mischievous fetish, what insane absurdities we have to listen to when an official clothed in brief authority gives utterance to absurd obiter dicta, what insults we have to pocket, how much of our self-respect is lost or immolated at the altar of Prestige, how undignified our position is and humiliating too, when our sages and savants, hoary with age and profound in wisdom, have to listen tamely to the foolish prattle of a beardless official who ignorant of the very alpha and omega of the subject, with the pretentious look of a Solomon, preaches and advises those whose little fingers know more of the subject than his whole body. Yes, in India and in all countries where the rule of bureaucracy prevails, we have to suffer and to bend our knees to this harrowing fetish of Prestige."

Alleged intention of Government to have the Defence of India Act permanently on the Statute Book of India.
Kesari (106), 18th Dec.

11. Referring to the Committee appointed to inquire into cases of detenus in Bengal, the Kesari says anybody can see what the conclusions of the Committee will be, judging from the terms of reference, and remarks that Government need not take the trouble of appointing the Committee and burdening the rayats with thousands of rupees and that the farce of the Committee is not necessary. It holds that the bureaucracy was quite satisfied when it acquired the weapon of the Defence of India Act under which no inquiry is needed and there is no trouble of proving its case needed. This Committee was appointed in its opinion to find out a way to enact the Defence of India Act as a permanent measure, as it is now to end with the war. It further remarks:—The officials must show that the movement of conspiracy is spread all over the country and if the Committee also comes to the same decision Government can introduce the Bill. If the Committee further decides that the evidence in such cases cannot be tested by cross-examination, the necessity of the new Bill will be proved. The last question about laws necessary to put down these conspiracies will be solved if the Committee says they should be of the type of the Defence of India Act. The Committee is not for the release of the young men arrested on suspicion and rotting in prison but to have permanently in the hands of Government the powerful weapon of the Defence of India Act. How far our inference is true will be proved by the recommendations of the Committee. The elected Councillors should be prepared to counteract the game of bureaucracy from now.

Appeal to Government on behalf of Arjunlal Sethi interned at Vellore.
Jain Mitra (79), 20th Dec.

12. From the recent transference of Pundit Arjunlal Sethi from the Jaipur jail to one at Vellore in the Presidency of Madras the Jain Mitra infers that he must have been interned at Jaipur at the instance of the British Government and not in pursuance of any orders from the Maharaja of Jaipur. It writes:—The question now is why Government are undermining his health by allowing him to rot in prison without any trial. Like other interned persons Sethi has not been interned under the provisions of the Defence of India Act, because that Act was passed after he had been interned. It appears that he was interned on the suspicions of the Criminal Investigation Department, but within British territories no individual should be made to suffer hardships, on mere suspicion, for more than three months. After that period he must either be convicted or released. Will Lord Chelmsford and the Right Honourable Mr. Montagu, representatives of our kind King-Emperor George, listen to the prayer of the Jain community and relieve him soon from this terrible affliction?

Government should conduct an enquiry into the allegations of Lala Harkishenlal before the Industrial Commission at Lahore.

Dnyán Prakásh (37), 20th Dec.; Kesari (106), 18th Dec.

13. Referring to Mr. Karimbhoy's evidence in Bombay before the Industrial Commission about Government contracts and Lala Harkishenlal's evidence in Lahore about the alleged part taken by European Banks in bringing about the failure of Indian Banks, the Dnyán Prakásh says that the Commission should have inquired fully into the matter. It holds that it was not beyond the powers of the Commission as it has been appointed to inquire into circumstances harmful and obstructive to Indian industries. The evasion of cross-examination, it continues, had a very bad effect on the minds of the people. It adds:—If the allegation of Lala Harkishenlal that the Government officials also assisted European Banks is true, everyone will stongly condemn the responsible officials. It is essential that Government should conduct an inquiry as the Commission has not done its work. [The Kesari writes in a similar strain and says that Government do not care for Indian industries and that it is not possible for new industries to thrive in these days of competition, if Government neglect them.]

Comments on the Agricultural Board Conference at Poona.

Dnyán Prakásh (37), 19th Dec.

14. His Excellency Lord Willingdon takes a keen interest in agriculture and his speech, therefore, at the last Agricultural Conference was marked by genuine sympathy for the agriculturists. In other countries when it is once decided to carry out a reform in some public work the questions of scientific research, popular instruction and provision for the necessary funds are simultaneously taken up for consideration. It is not so in this country. The principal characteristic of all our schemes is the delay in giving effect to them. A couple of generations do not suffice in this country to bring into force a reform which hardly requires a year or two in other countries. Although the needs of agriculture have been discussed several times no effort was ever made to supply them immediately. We do not of course suggest that no progress whatever has been made in this direction. We are constrained to say, however, that the progress made is only a drop in the ocean compared to the numerous investigations and the number of appointments of fat-salaried officials. We agree with Mr. Pillay that Government will not be faced with the necessity of opening agricultural schools for two more generations if they wait for all the agriculturists to demand them. Indeed a question like this is to be settled in accordance with the wishes of the educated classes. If the principle that education was not to be imparted to an ignorant person until he asked for it had been universally accepted from the beginning an educated man would have been a rara avis in this wide world!

Appeal to Government to stop landlords in Bombay from raising rents.

Hindusthán (21), 19th Dec.

15. Strongly condemning the great enhancement of rents by house-owners in Bombay at the present critical time when it has become hard for the majority of the people, especially lower and middle classes, to live, the Hindusthán remarks that landlords seem to have left no course for their tenants but to choose either to leave the city or to commit suicide or die of starvation. High prices of articles are perhaps irremediable as supplies are scarce owing to want of steamers and rolling stock and other railway materials. But why should the house owners vie with each other to raise rents? Some of them have now made it their business to raise them every three or four months. If they will be allowed to enhance rents in this fashion unchecked the result will certainly be that a day will come when middle-class men will be compelled to send away their families home and there would be a further increase in the population of infamous women. Steps have accordingly become necessary on the part of Government to remedy the situation, the chief and easiest being that they should issue without delay an order prohibiting house owners to demand from tenants more rent than what it was a year ago and to force any one to vacate unless he has been proved a bad character. Government have powers vested in them under laws specially enacted to enforce such a prohibition as a war measure.

Suggestions for remedying the evil of Sarbarai.
Indu Prakásh (40), 22nd Dec.

16. Commenting on the Sarbarai question, the Indu Prakásh says that the practice of entertaining official and non-official guests in villages is an ancient one but the cow should not be milked till it bleeds. It further adds :—There are now many touring departments and the expenditure incurred in making arrangements for them is very great. Government and the people try their best to lessen the exactions of Sarbarai but it is all in vain. As long as the officials have the power to do evil to the people, these things will go on. No one is puritan enough to refuse things, if he can have them free. Government give these officials travelling allowance, mileage, etc., but their desire to exact things from the villagers is not lessened very much. Government should order the village officers to note down the actual expenses and make a grant. The real remedy would be to have permanent settlement and to hand over village questions to village punchayats and Divisional Council, which will lessen evidently the necessity of tours.

The present outlook of the war.
New Times (7), 18th Dec.

17. Under the heading "The international outlook", the New Times writes :—"A writer in the Daily News says :—'Though the temper of the country was never more firm in regard to the object of the war, its mind is disquieted by the conduct of the war'. Sir William Robertson Nicoll has already spoken boldly and levelled his attack againt the Cabinet ; and the Globe and the Morning Post have criticised the conduct of the War under the ministry of Lloyd George. Mr. Lovat Fraser, well-known to the Indian public, has a long article in the Daily Mail, in the course of which he says :—'We are weary of discussion about war aims and what we mean to do to Prussia some day, and what is to happen to Poland ten years hence and things of that sort . . . . We have spent five thousand Million pounds. We are a practical race. We want those in authority to stop ladling rhetorical pap and to give us an account of their stewardship. We want no more fine phrases, but a clear and practical statement of the existing situation and of the current possibilities of the war.' The international situation is one which, as Mr. Lovat Fraser rightly points out, calls 'not only for making the ultimate issue doubly sure but for shortening the process'. Russia seems no longer able to stand the strain of the war. In Italy the war has been changed into one of national defence. Germany has been swallowing one kingdom after another every year ; Belgium was taken in 1914 ; Serbia succumbed in 1915 ; Roumania was ravaged in 1916 ; and Russia's withdrawal from the war has given Germany an opportunity to attack Italy in 1917. As an Italian journal points out : 'henceforth it is no longer a question of a foot more or less of territory but of Italy's fighting efficiency.' And, strange enough, the Central Powers have, through all the fluctuations of war, maintained a startling solidarity ; the submairne is still at work and Germany has apparently not yet reached the point of economic exhaustion. On the other hand, it must be remembered, that the Empire's resources are rich, England's naval power is unshattered by the submarine campaign and the entry of the United States into the war is an event fraught with a great future. England and France and India and the Colonies have fought heroically, and the death of the brave sons of these nations will for a long time illumine the records of history and be remembered as a precious part of the heritage of man. But it seems the World-Peace for which many hearts in many lands cry out to-day is still afar. Chaos has wrecked the world from end to end ; and it seems to us the two hopeful signs of the world's future are the growing aspiration for Peace and the daily deepening Vision of National Freedom."

The Allies are responsible for the defection of Russia.

Young India (14), 19th Dec.

18. "Bewildering as the recent conduct of the Russian democracy may appear, there is reason to think that the Allies have themselves to thank for it. As if the sudden unchaining of the forces of reaction was not sufficient to produce anrachy in Russia, a prolonged compaign, we are told by an English contemporary, in important sections of the Allied press against the Russian democracy, of such incidents as the openly expressed approval of a military conspiracy against the Revolution, the prime mover in which is still being praised in the Allied press, the official reception and the journalistic exploitation of General Gourko, who was exiled from Russia because two days after the ex-Tsar abdicated he wrote to him expressing the hope that he would return to the throne and hinting at an organisation to effect that end, must have contributed equally powerfully to make the Russian democracy keenly suspicious of Allied intentions. The contradictions and inconsistencies among British ministers, too, seem to have had their share. It is now a matter of common knowledge that the Russian democracy demanded as early as June last for an Allied war aims conference and after four months' needless delay they were promised such a conference at Paris by Mr. Lloyd George, whose statement on this subject left absolutely no room for doubt. But this promise was somehow repudiated by Mr. Bonar Law, who, in reply to a question in the House of Commons, stated that the conference would not concern itself with war aims. Considering that the Russian democracy had attached much importance to this conference, the change of front displayed at the eleventh hour must have come to them as a great surprise. In view of this, therefore, the conduct of the Russian democracy, however regrettable from the point of view of the commonweal of all the Allied States, cannot be surprising in the least."

Comments on Lord Lansdowne's letter regarding peace in the Daily Telegraph.

Sind Observer (12), 4th Dec.

19. "We fail to see that his Lordship's views deserve the condemnation which is being poured upon it by the Times and other leading journals.......... Lord Lansdowne has formed a very correct estimate of the method in which the military caste in Germany are keeping the people together.......... Do the Allies desire the annihilation of Germany as a great Power? We do not think there is any responsible statesman who asserts that they do. Moreover, looking to the military situation, we do not believe it is possible that the Allies would succeed in the endeavour, and we are of opinion that it would be highly impolitic of them to attempt it. We will defeat Germany and her Allies and obtain the peace we are fighting for but that is a very different object to removing Germany from the list of first class Powers. Even if we could crush her to that extent we consider such a step would be exceedingly unwise. Do the Allies seek to impose on the German people a form of Government they do not desire? The very principles which we are defending answer that question in the negative......... If war weariness dominates the people of Germany we think it is for the Allies to encourage their inclination towards peace by frankly informing them of our war aims, and combating the efforts of the Kaiser's party to maintain them in a state of desperation which obliges them to continue the war as the only hope of escaping destruction. Parading the vast preparations which America is making and reiterating our determination to see the business through is very good in its way, but that is exactly what the German Government is making capital of. The Kaiser's minions point to us as a bloodthirsty league which they must overthrow or perish, because no intermediate course by way of an honourable peace is possible. We cannot aid in prolonging the slaughter of these dupes. With our great resources it is folly for Germany to continue the struggle, but the leaders are inveterate gamblers and have made up their minds to fight on hoping to win by a tremendous success on one front or the other. Should the Allies refuse to enlighten the German people?"

What Japan will do if Russia repudiates its financial obligations.

Bombay Samáchár (60), 19th Dec.

20. Referring to the overtures of the Russian Maximalists to the Allies to join them in concluding peace with the enemy the Bombay Samáchár regrets the shamelessness of such a proposal. It then alludes to the repudiation of their liability as regards foreign loans raised by the former Russian Government and remarks:—Since the European Powers have been occupied in the war they will not be able at present to recover their loans but Japan is not likely to sit quiet. The present European war has wrought an extraordinary improvement in the economic, industrial and political condition of Japan. Moreover, the Japanese people have greatly added to the strength of their army and their navy. Sooner or later Japan will demand territorial security from Russia and Russia will have no other alternative but to give such a security.

Comments on the Honourable Mr. Patel's Jury resolution.

Karnátak Vaibhav (82), 18th Dec.; Chandrodaya (34), 17th Dec.; Shubhodaya (89), 14th Dec.

21. Commenting upon the Honourable Mr. Patel's Jury resolution the Karntak Vaibhav says:—Men who are in love with the exercise of autocratic powers are not willing to part with the smallest of their powers to others. They fully believe that others however long they may be educated are not fit to enjoy these powers. Our Government also are in the same position. They are much exercised over the grant of even small powers. It is the duty of Government to entrust the people with more powers as they become more educated. Are our people who are under British rule for the last hundred years still unfit for the Jury system? Is this creditable to the British system of administration? Are the inhabitants of Ahmedabad and Surat much more educated than those of other districts? Why is trial by Jury going on in these districts smoothly? Those who say that it is a new right and that it should be introduced cautiously do not know anything of our caste and village punchayats. The discussion in the Legislative Council strengthens the idea that without swarájya, such small reforms cannot be introduced. It only shows how weak is our Council. [The Chandrodaya remarks:—The resolution failed because of the most strenuous and illiberal opposition by Government. The Honourable Mr. Lawrence in the course of the debate showed that he did not know whether the sessions cases were conducted in the Vernacular or English. If the Honourable Sir M. B. Chaubal could not answer properly the Honourable Mr. Patel, he should have kept quiet. It is not at all creditable to him to make a speech insulting to the Honourable members. The Shubhodaya says:—The Honourable Sir M. B. Chaubal attacked the Honourable Mr. Patel knowingly and absurdly.]

Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 18th Dec.; Gujaráti Punch (19), 16th Dec.

22. Endorsing the views expressed by the Honourable Mr. Patel in regard to the splendid success with which the Jury System has worked in the Presidency, in support of his resolution, the Jám-e-Jamshed says:—It cannot be disputed that the success of the system depends upon the proper selection of jurors, but we think, in view of the progress the Presidency has made during the last three decades, to say that competent jurors are not obtainable is rather an exaggeration. If care is taken to select educated men for the jury in every district, there would be no difficulty in securing such jurors in all the principal towns of the different districts. It is no wonder that as the present method of the preparation of jury lists is very perfunctory it should result in a choice of persons as jurors who cannot discharge their responsible duty satisfactorily. It is, therefore, desirable that the work of the preparation of lists should be delegated not to Police officers but to responsible and experienced officials. [The Gujarát Punch opines that the Honourable Mr. Patel was fully successful in making out his case in support of his resolution for the extension of the Jury system and expresses astonishment at the opposition to it of some of the official members. It refuses to accept the contention of the Honourable Sir M. B. Chaubal that a district should have a sufficent number of educated persons prior to the introduction of the system in it and remarks that when the municipal Government was introduced in districts, its introduction was not made subject to this condition. It adds that the plea put forward by His Excellency for not accepting the resolution without full inquiry into the success or failure of the working of the system is flimsy and evasive and holds that Government have made a grave blunder in rejecting it.]

Comments on the Honourable Mr. Manmohandas Ramji's resolution regarding the students' circular issued by the Bombay Government.
Gujaráti (17), 16th Dec.

23. Referring to the resolution brought by the Honourable Mr. Manmohandas Ramji in the recent session of the Bombay Legislative Council urging Government to revoke their circular prohibiting students from attending public meetings, and adversely commenting upon the said circular, the Gujaráti remarks :—Are Indian students so very weak-minded that they would neglect their studies and would be led astray unless rules of discipline are rigidly enforced upon them ? Is it just that the whole student-world in India should be punished in that manner only because a very small number out of hundreds of thousands may have gone astray? When liberal-minded Englishmen in the past commenced the system of imparting education in India through the medium of the English language they entertained no apprehension about students attending discussions on political subjects ; but when adverse criticisms were made by educated youths against the actions of the present-day authorities, the latter began to see imperfection in the method of education and a want of discipline in schools and colleges, and as a result, steps were taken to keep the whole student class aloof from the currents of public life in their country ! And what is the effect of such measures ? If a student is detected while attending a public meeting he is placed on the black list of Government throughout his life and wherever he goes he has to live under the surveillance of the Criminal Investigation Department. He is never free from his condition as a suspect and his life is thereby rendered bitter as wormwood. Teachers are also made something like creatures of the Criminal Investigation Department. They have to supervise the actions of students from a political point of view and to disclose to Government the names of offending students and to punish them. The result is that students, on that account, learn to hate their teachers. Instead of a student becoming honest, courageous and straightforward he becomes a deceitful dissembler. Who will say that such a relation between the teacher and taught will benefit the cause of education ? [The paper winds up the article by raising a doubt if principals of colleges will, even if they are allowed discretion in the matter of permitting their students to attend public meetings, dare to go against the wishes of the head of the Educational Department.]

Comments on the Press Note regarding licensing of liquor shops.
Sánj Vartamán (32), 17th and 18th Dec.; Bombay Samáchár (60), 19th Dec.; Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 19th Dec.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 18th Dec.; Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 22nd Dec.

24. Commenting upon the Press Note recently issued by the Bombay Government declaring that the licenses for selling country liquor in the Bombay Presidency would be put up to public auction and the present fixed-fee system would be abolished after the 1st of April 1918, the Sánj Vartamán remarks that the present decision on the part of Government will not only be received with regret by the present licensees but it will not find favour with the general public. While recognising whole-heartedly the necessity of removing the evil of corruption that has been prevalent long since among the Abkári officials, it fears that the proposed auction system will, instead of removing that evil as anticipated by Government, accentuate it by attracting ignorant speculators to the liquor trade. In the subsequent issue the paper requests Government not to extend the auction system to toddy licenses. It opines that such an extension will, besides making toddy dearer, encourage adulteration. The Bombay Samáchár, while commending the decision of Government to utilise any increase in revenue that may result from the reintroduction of the auction system, towards educational and sanitary purposes, suggests that, instead of adopting that old system which has proved to be a failure, Government should appoint a small committee composed of officials, public leaders and representatives of liquor licensees to inquire into the question and recommend a middle course. The Jám-e-Jamshed regards the decision contained in the Government Press Note as one calculated to cause disappointment not only to liquor licensees but to the public. Is it justifiable, it inquires, to introduce a system ruinous to the interests of the licensees because of corruption on the part of Excise Inspectors? It doubts if the auction system would check that evil. The paper also enquires how it is that Government do not impose similar restrictions on the traffic in foreign liquor. The Praja Mitra and Pársi also joins in the general chorus of disapproval of the proposed system of auctioning licenses. It suggests that in order to remove the defects associated with both the fixed-fee system and the auction system, Government should take up the whole liquor traffic, including both the manufacture and sale of liquor in their own hands. [Over the signature of "Daruvala" the Jám-e-Jamshed publishes in its issue of the 22nd December a letter in which the writer suggests a change in the present inspecting staff of the Excise Department, rather than the reintroduction of the old objectionable system of putting up liquor licenses to auction, for the purpose of doing away with corruption among Abkari officials. He further writes that instead of dealing with corrupt officers departmentally they should be prosecuted criminally in order to set an example to other officers similarly inclined. The writer inquires why Government are so very severe upon liquor licensees in spite of their liberal contributions amounting to lakhs of rupees towards the War Fund.]

Alleged waste of public money on the language examination of temporary I. M. S. and other officers.
Sind Observer (12), 7th Dec.

25. "Recently about forty temporary Lieutenants in the Indian Medical Service appeared at Karáchi for an examination in Baluchi. What advantage to Government is to be gained by the knowledge of this language by temporary officers of the medical department, and how the grant of rewards from public funds for passing the test is justified in their case, it is difficult to imagine. These officers are here to-day and miles away to-morrow, and even in Karáchi Baluchi is scarcely spoken. Surely there is some audit authority to put a stop to this needless expenditure of public money, all of which will have to be recouped from the tax-payer. If the rules as they stand permit of every person holding a temporary Commission appearing for an examination, the passing of which entitles him to a reward, they should be altered, and oblige him to show how the earning of such a reward will be of utility to Government."

Failure of crops in Gujarát.
Gujaráti (17), 16th Dec.

26. Referring to the failure of crops in Gujarát on account of heavy rains during the concluding portion of the last monsoon and also referring to the alleged practice of the local authorities to postpone taking relief measures till people actually begin to feel the effects of starvation, the Gujaráti observes:—What have the authorities done towards preserving the sanitary well-being of the people in spite of the facts that plague has been working havoc in Gujarát and Káthiáwár, that people are fleeing from cities and villages and that some villages have been depleted of three-fourths of their population? Have Government, the protecting guardians of the agriculturists, made mention in the slightest degree, of their unfortunate condition in Gujarát and Káthiáwár, during the session of their Legislative Council that was held last week? On the contrary the work of collecting subscriptions for various funds has been going on merrily in the districts as if people were prospering. Accordingly, at places where the authorities seem to be indifferent towards the task of protecting the lives of the people, it is the duty of the latter to hold public meetings at many places and obtain redress of their grievance by insistently and powerfully ventilating their miserable condition. [The paper then goes on to refer to the petition recently addressed to the Bombay Government by the people of Nadiád, praying for at least a partial remission of land revenue this year in the Kaira District and advises the people to approach the Collector of that district with a request to postpone its collection till Government send their reply to the said petition.]

LEGISLATION.

Comments on the Income Tax Bill.
Bombay Samáchár (60), 11th Dec.

27. Discussing some of the important provisions of the Income Tax Bill, the Bombay Samáchár remarks that though some of the new clauses are useful, yet no provision seems to have been made in it to meet the longstanding grievances of the people. It regards the present system of the examination of accounts by inspectors and examiners as objectionable and observes that the demand of merchants that their appeals in the matter of the assessment of incomes should be heard by law courts has gone unheeded. The system, it says, causes a good deal of unnecessary inconvenience to merchants as Assistant and Deputy Collectors are touring officers. It would be better to transfer the power of hearing appeals to judicial officers so that the merchants may be saved the trouble of running after the touring officials. It doubts whether the contemplated changes in clause 3 requiring all income of religious and charitable institutions, except that portion of it which is actually used for religious and charitable purposes, to be brought under the operation of the Act, would be acceptable to the people.

EDUCATION.

Complaint that Fellows from the Karnátak are not nominated.
Chandrodaya (34), 17th Dec.

28. Replying to the interpellation of the Honourable Mr. Belvi about the number of Fellows nominated by the Chancellor from the Karnátak during the last 12 years, to the University Senate, Government replied that three were appointed out of whom two are from Native States and one from Poona now living in Southern Division. It means that the Chancellor has not appointed during the last 12 years a single Fellow knowing Kánarese or whose mother-tongue is Kánarese. Can it be said that representatives of the whole of the Bombay Presidency are in the Senate, if men from Bombay and Poona, Sángli and Kolhápur are in it? Is it not necessary to have representatives from the Karnátak in the Senate?

Second Grade Arts College at Surat.
Indu Prakásh (40), 20th Dec.

29. The Indu Prakásh welcomes the permission given by the Bombay University to the Sarvajanik Education Society of Surat to open an Arts College there and remarks:—Do the numerous objections raised by the University to grant the necessary permission betoken the zeal of that body for the spread of education? It may perhaps be right to stipulate that the College should start only the 'First Year' and the Inter classes. But why is the College required to admit only a certain number of students in each class? It is also undesirable to withhold permission to open a College until the promoters are able to collect the prescribed sum. Men who are responsible for an undertaking of this kind can safely be trusted to find the necessary means for conducting the institution.

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 27th December 1917.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL.] [No. 52 of 1917.

Report on Indian Papers

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

For the Week ending 29th December 1917.

District Magistrates and Political Agents are requested to send to Secretary, Special Department, information as to any local complaint which appears to them to call for notice, explaining whether the facts are as stated; what action, if any, is being taken; and, if the facts alleged are incorrect, what is believed to be the origin of the report and what the correct facts are.

CONTENTS.

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—

British rule:

- Alleged abuses in the bestowal of honours in British India . . . 11
- Comments on the alleged omission of a paragraph in praise of Dr. Mann from Sir Claude Hill's address before the Agricultural Conference. 10
- Comments on the prohibition of two Punjab Muhammadan Barristers from landing at Zanzibar 13
- If the Ali Brothers are released after the date of the commencement of the Moslem League session, the release will not evoke the slightest feeling of gratitude in the people 8
- The bureaucracy and the caste system 9
- The relations between rulers of Native States and Political officers . 12

Excise: Protest against the proposed reintroduction of the system of auctioning liquor-shop licenses . . . . 27 & 28

Indian National Congress:

- Comments on Mrs. Besant's presidential address at the Calcutta National Congress . . . . 18—21
- Comments on the reasons given by His Excellency the Governor of Bengal for not attending the National Congress 23
- The duty of the National Congress in connection with the Reform question 22

Indian Political reforms:

- An appeal to Marathas not to carry on an anti-Brahmin movement . 5
- Comments on the Deccan Rayats' Association's address to the Secretary of State 3
- Comments on the deputation of Musalmans of the Bombay Presidency received by the Secretary of State 2
- Mr. Montagu in Bombay 6
- Mr. Montagu should be allowed to have a hearty send-off from the people of India 7
- Protest against the rejection of certain addresses to the Secretary of State 4
- What will be the result of ignoring the demands of the Congress-League scheme 1

Postal and Telegraph Department: Alleged grievance of the Telegraph signallers at the Konkan ports 30

PARAGRAPHS.

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION—concluded.

Press Act ;

Comments on the demand of security from the Bombay Chronicle . 24
Comments on the forfeiture of the security of the New Era newspaper . 25
Public Service : Comments on the appointment of Mr. Chitre as Acting Chief Judge of the Small Causes Court, Bombay 26
Revenue matters : Protest against the orders of the Commissioner, S. D., directing boundary stones of certain lands to be replaced by wooden posts 29
Viceroy : Comments on His Excellency the Viceroy's speech at the Madras Foodstuffs Exhibition . . . . 14 & 15
War : The present situation in the — . . . . 16 & 17

POLITICS AND THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.

What will be the result of ignoring the demands of the Congress-League scheme.

Mahrátta (5), 23rd Dec.

1. "Whatever the Anglo-Indians, official and unofficial, may say as to the contentment of the masses of India, facts cannot be changed by false assertions. Howsoever loudly it may be affirmed that the masses in India do not recognise the educated classes as their leaders, the fact remains that they are recognised as such....... The Government of any country rests primarily not on the support of the ignorant masses, but on the support of the enlightened classes. It is suicidal to ignore this elementary truth. It is because the educated classes in India have, for one reason or another, never seriously thought of working against the Indo-British Connection that that connection has never been seriously threatened. The present movement for Responsible Self-Government has its origin not in any desire to end or loosen this connection, but in the desire to strengthen and make it as permanent as it is given for human arrangements to be. As such this movement deserves to be blessed and not to be cursed by responsible Imperialists of sound minds. It is in the interest of the Empire to put a summary end to the policy of distrust which has been mother to the endless brood of most unhappy measures which rule India with a recklessness that defies comparison.......... Why do we fear that the call of the Empire may not move British statesmen to go as far as they ought to in regard to the reconstruction of our Government? There are several reasons. The announcement of August 20th last is very halting and indicates that the draftsmen have unreasonable faith in the bureaucrat on the spot and are prepared to trust him largely in the matter 'judging of the time and measure of each advance' towards the goal of India. Mr. Montagu who came out to India to ascertain the views and sentiments of the people, has not had fair opportunities to form a correct notion of the volume and depth of the popular feeling against bureaucratic governance of the country.......... Naturally views which directly and indirectly support more or less the Anglo-Indian desire to give Indians as small a share as possible in the management of their affairs, have been dinned into the ears of Mr. Montagu very much oftener than they were entitled to be heard, considering the number and 'quality' of the holders of these views.......... The pressure of the organised bureaucrats, the noise of the Anglo-Indian exploiters of Indian resources, the inspired or ignorant, but much boomed 'slow pace' cry of the handful of reactionaries from our own camp, are all bound to have their effect on Mr. Montagu and his colleagues. Then there is the Sydenham clique in England......... Is it not likely that in the circumstances briefly described above, the call of the Empire may be lost upon the men at the helm and after all the fuss and ferment re 'Substantial Steps,' India may be asked to content herself with a poor fraction of the minimum, namely the Congress-League Scheme? What will be the effect of this possible result of all our agitation? For one thing it is clear that agitation on a much more extended scale than has been thought of hitherto and of a bitterness absent from the present one will be organised in this country. Secondly, the next war that may be forced on the British Empire by the ambitions of its foes will find India in no mood to respond enthusiastically to the call of the Empire. Discontent and its unhappy brood will increase from day to day and who may foretell what all this may end in?"

Comments on the deputation of Musalmans of the Bombay Presidency received by the Secretary of State.

Sánj Vartamán (32), 25th Dec.; Akhbár-e-Islám (57), 27th Dec.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 27th Dec.

2. Referring to the Musalman deputation which is to wait on the Secretary of State under the leadership of Sardar Syed El Edroos, the Sánj Vartamán says that the memorial which the Honourable Sardar and others will submit and the views the deputation will express cannot at all be regarded as those of the Musalmans of the Presidency as it has received no authority from them, inasmuch as the latter were not even consulted in the matter. It adds that the deputation is self-appointed and its members neither command any influence nor have they any status in the community. Referring to the anti-Congress and anti-Home Rule League views of the Honourable Sardar the paper observes that this move on his part is to please Government with a view to winning honours, and remarks:—If he would not advocate the bureaucratic rule and defend it, who would nominate him on the Council? [Note—The Honourable Sardar Syed El Edroos is an elected member of the Council.] [The Akhbár-e-Islám remarks that those who have raised a protest against the present action of the Honourable Syed Ali El Edroos ought to have, in support of that protest, sent a telegram to the Secretary of State for India, through His Excellency the Viceroy, requesting the former to take a note that the memorial which was going to be presented to him under the leadership of the Honourable Syed Edroos on behalf of the Muhammadans of the Bombay Presidency was not a duly accredited memorial inasmuch as the Muhammadans of the Presidency were not consulted in the matter. The paper believes that if some such step were taken by those who have raised the protest it would serve the Honourable Syed as a good lesson in the future for his present arbitrary conduct. The Praja Mitra and Pársi also publishes a letter from a Moslem correspondent from Surat, strongly deprecating the action of the Honourable Syed Edroos in securing from some unsophisticated Muhammadans of Surat their signatures upon the memorial without letting them know the exact nature of its contents. Does the Syed Saheb, inquires the writer, expect by his present move to belittle the importance of the act of least a lakh of Muhammadans of the Bombay Presidency who have put their signatures to the joint Congress-League Scheme? The correspondent regrets that a leader of the Moslem community and its representative on the Legislative Council like the Honourable Syed should have thought of misleading the community in that manner.]

Comments on the Deccan Rayats' Association's address to the Secretary of State.

Sandesh (116), 23rd Dec.; Jágaruk (102), 28th Dec.

3. Commenting upon the Deccan Rayats' Association's address to Mr. Montagu, the Sandesh writes:—Mr. Montagu will certainly laugh in his sleeve to hear the opinions of this Association. It demands that 50 per cent. of the appointments in the Civil Service should be given to Indians, out of which half the number should be reserved for the backward classes. The Association's demand, however, does not stop here. It asks that if all the posts reserved for the backward classes cannot be filled up, then the vacancies should be given to Europeans but not to their Indian brethren! We can only observe that this policy is absolutely suicidal. [The Jágaruk on the other hand supports the Association's address and says that the conflicting interests of the several classes in India cannot be ignored while considering the question of reforms, adding that whoever tries to overlook the "Indian Ulster question" will not fail to come to grief.]

Protest against the rejection of certain addresses to the Secretary of State.

Kesari (106), 25th Dec.

4. The Bombay Government has surpassed the Madras Government in rejecting addresses to the Viceroy and the Secretary of State. The Madras Government had to withdraw their orders so far as the Madras Presidency Association and the Andhra Parishad were concerned because of the determination shown by the local leaders. But as the Bombay Government did not publish their programme in advance and as Bombay is not unfortunately so united and determined as Madras, the bureaucracy has omitted many important institutions really representing public opinion and has allowed the deputations of self-constituted leaders with a handful of followers, at its sweet will. The discreditable partiality of Bombay officials is clearly shown by the rejection of the deputation of the All-India Maratha Conference of Belgaum and by the trick resorted to in rejecting it. The Central Provinces officials were more high-handed than the Bombay officials and they rejected the Provincial Moslem League address. It is said that they informed some institutions to send only particular delegates! The penchant which the bureaucracy has acquired for nominating members to the Legislative Council, it wants to introduce also in the case of public institutions. But what can the bureaucracy do? It is about to lose altogether the right of nominating members to the Legislative Council. Just as a sinking man catches at a straw, the bureaucracy wants somehow to catch hold of insignificant fellows and draw out from them anti-Home Rule statements.

An appeal to Marathas not to carry on an anti-Brahmin movement.
Kesari (106), 25th Dec.

5. Mr. Dhondo Amritrao Shete, Patil of Shirval, writes to the Kesari deprecating the anti-Brahmin movement and he remarks that if anything has ruined the Marathas it is their love of liquor, and he holds that Brahmins have agitated to wean them from this vice. He thinks that the agitation carried on by Brahmins for the introduction of free and compulsory education, for the repeal of the Watan Act, for the grant of commissions and for the celebration of the Shivaji festival was for the benefit of non-Brahmins and that it did not evidence any hatred against them. We say we are the descendants of Shivaji, he continues, and should we not, therefore, observe his vow of "Protection of cows and Brahmins"? He advises the Marathas not to oppose the demand of swarājya and asks them not to quarrel amongst themselves, because as a matter of fact Government is not yet prepared to grant swarājya, just like the Bania who is not willing to give full measure.

Mr. Montagu in Bombay.
Young India (14), 26th Dec.

6. "Mr. Montagu arrives in Bombay today (Monday) in the normal course of things, and we offer him on behalf of the city a cordial welcome......... The fiat has already gone forth that the gates of the Victoria Terminus are to be 'barred, banged and bolted' in the face of the public between 6-30 and 9-30 this morning! Only the 'chosen' few of the 'little tin gods' here may be present on the platform to receive him and prepare him for the ordeal of deputationising and interviewing which is to commence almost the moment he sets his feet within the sacred grounds of the Government House. While Mr. Montagu will miss the rousing cheers and warm reception which Bombay alone knows how to accord to its honoured guests it goes without saying that for the first time in our civic annals a great personage—decidedly greater than our bureaucrats and autocrats —will be hustled privately into Government House lest the inquisitive gaze of the public should fall on him. It is needless to recapitulate that 'jealousy, incredible jealousy' is alone responsible for this sad episode in the civic record of Bombay. We feel, however, assured that Mr. Montagu has now fully realised the helplessness of the people of this country under the terrestrial providence of a relentless and unrelenting officialdom, and that the lack of outward manifestations of public rejoicing at his visit is not so much due to want of reciprocal good-will on the part of the people as to the unhappy dispensation of the bureaucracy. We hope he will, therefore, take the will for the deed, and overlooking the absence of external evidences of pomp and splendour, regard it all as in the course of the day's work. We trust also that it will convince him all the more of the extremely narrow and clannish spirit of that bureaucracy, which interposes itself as a solid wall of resistance between the Indian people and the noble, generous instincts of the British Government and the people of England."

Mr. Montagu should be allowed to have a hearty send-off from the people of India.
Mahrātta (5), 30th Dec.

*7. "Will it be too much to hope that before his final departure, Mr. Montagu may be allowed to have a hearty send-off by the people of India? We think it is worth while approaching the Government of India on the subject. The executives of the Congress and the Moslem League, the Premier National Bodies in the country, may take it upon themselves to make a final request to Government to allow the Indian people as a whole to meet Mr. Montagu in a public meeting at Bombay, where he may be presented with an address making fitting reference to his mission in India and expressing the Nation's thankfulness for the work he has already done. It should be supplemented by a fair statement of the pressing grievances of the hour which the addresses so far presented have not been allowed to ventilate....... If this ventilation is allowed, then the plea of 'want of time' which has been urged as a reason for restricting the number of addresses and censoring their contents will be accepted by the people as an honest one....... The Indian people desire through their representatives to place their grievances directly before the Secretary of State with the hope and expectation that their Sovereign and his Cabinet may learn the truth and take such measures as may be deemed necessary. To prevent them from doing so is to deny them the exercise of an ancient right which they have freely exercised for thousands of years in pre-British times. The people cannot take such a denial lying down. The Indian authorities may look upon their treatment of the Alis' Release Deputation as a small matter. But herein they are grossly mistaken. The people cannot sleep over the matter, though the authorities may not give another thought to it. There is an apparent lull in the atmosphere now. But that is only the proverbial precursor of a great storm. We appeal to the Government of India to consult Mr. Montagu and to announce by a special communiqué that the Secretary of State will gladly meet the people in a public meeting, say, at Bombay, on a certain date to receive such an address as they are eager to present to him on the eve of his departure to England. Such a communiqué presently issued will go a long way to soothe and pacify the people, who are at present justly indignant over the several indignities which officialdom has subjected them to, perhaps quite unconsciously!"

If the Ali Brothers are released after the date of commencement of the Moslem League session, the release will not evoke the slightest feeling of gratitude in the people.
Mahrátta (5), 30th Dec.

8. Commenting upon the All-India Ladies' Deputation to the Viceroy and Secretary of State, the Mahrátta remarks:—"One notable incident occurred while the members of the Deputation were being introduced to the Secretary of State. Mrs. Hasrat Mohani, wife of the famous internee of Aligarh, while being introduced to the Secretary of State, asked him to release the Muslim and other internees just as Sinn Feiners as were given amnesty in Ireland. She also gave him a copy of the New Era to read an article dealing with the question of the Muslim internees. This copy happens to be that of the 8th December which has been forfeited to Government owing to the article headed 'Musalmans and Mr. Montagu.'......... Has the action of Mrs. Hasrat produced any effect on Mr. Montagu, beyond that of surprising him agreeably (or disagreeably?)? While we write this (Wednesday), a voice, very feeble yet one that we would fain believe, speaks from within our bosom that we may yet hear of the release of Mr. Muhammad Ali and Mr. Shaukat Ali, before the 30th instant on which day the sittings of the All-India Moslem League are to commence at Calcutta. If the Ali Brothers are released by the 30th instant Mr. Montagu will be considered to have scored a grand victory agaist the bureaucracy. If the wished for release comes about Mr. Montagu will raise great hopes in the people of this country as regards his future efforts in connection with the reconstruction of Indian Government, for in the release, belated though it be, the people will recognise a happy assertion of the 'liberal' principles which Mr. Montagu is supposed to be a champion of. If the Ali Brothers remain interned on Sunday next—then their release after that date whenever it may come, either before or after the departure Mr. Montagu from the Indian shores, will fail to evoke the slightest feeling of gratitude in the people who will have made up their minds about Mr. Montagu's 'principles' and about what to expect of such a man."

The bureaucracy and the caste system.
Indian Social Reformer (3), 30th Dec.

9. "Two years ago the Maharaja of Darbhanga stumped the country on a mission on behalf of varnashrama dharma, the socio-religious system based on the division of castes, which he confounded with the sanatana dharma, which may be called the ethical basis of Hinduism. He did another thing. He had drawn up a prayer, or rather proposed to draw up one, invoking blessings on the King-Emperor, and this proposal was placed as the first item on the agenda of the meetings which he addressed. This had all the appearance of an audacious bid for an alliance between the bureaucracy and the caste system, and the Bombay Government fell into the trap. They sent down their Indian member to the meeting held at Madhav Baug with instructions to state that they had seen the resolution and approved of it. This was, of course, the resolution regarding the proposed prayer, but the populace does not make nice distinctions, and as the Maharaja himself was at the time a member of the Behar Government, though in mufti, the impression created was most unfortunate. Either the Government have realised their mistake or the Maharaja does not think it worth while to continue his mission, as for some time past we have heard nothing further about this varnashrama dharma and prayer for the King-Emperor scheme. It does not seem to be dead, however. In his Convocation address to the Punjab University Sir Michael O'Dwyer took occasion to enlarge on caste as a means of reform. Considering that, in the experience of every practical reformer, caste has been and is the greatest obstacle to social reforms, His Honour's juxtaposition of the two sounds as pardoxical as 'hot ice'.......... The beneficial results which His Honour attributed to caste in the Punjab have nothing to do with the institution, and his encomiums on this ancient institution were forced and irrelevant. There as elsewhere caste is a dividing influence, and your bureaucrat has an instinctive affection for lines of cleavage. (The Germans are emphasising the difference of interests between the Flemings and the Waloons who together form the Belgian nation.) Those of our friends who, from fear of caste, wish the bureaucracy to be perpetuated, might take a lesson from His Honour's observations."

Comments on the alleged omission of a paragraph in praise of Dr. Mann from Sir Claude Hill's address before the Agricultural Conference.
Kesari (106), 25th Dec.

10. Once a person incurs the wrath of the bureaucracy, he is persistently pursued whether he is white or black and whether he is a Government servant or an independent person. Sir Claude Hill who had come down for the Poona Agricultural Conference had made an honourable mention of Dr. Mann in his speech to be delivered at the Conference. But when he heard of the invitation given to Mr. Horniman by Dr. Mann to lecture at his College, he omitted the paragraph in praise of Dr. Mann. Two days before his work was satisfactory, but it became at once unsatisfactory and the bureaucracy thus punished Dr. Mann by omitting to praise him. But Dr. Mann is not an official to cringe, tempted by such praise, and he will care very little either for recommendation or condemnation at the hands of a person like the Honourable Sir Claude Hill.

Alleged abuses in the bestowal of honours in British India.
Young India (14), 26th Dec.

11. Commenting on the debate in the House of Lords on abuses in connection with the bestowal of honours, Young India writes :—" It is clear that in our day honours are as surely a commodity as when James I invented the baronetcy as a means to fill the Royal purse. Such differences as there are between purchase now and then are on the whole creditable to James, for at least he admitted that his baronetcies where for sale whereas Ministers and Whips have not hesitated to traduce the name of Public Service by making it a cloak for the sale and purchase of titles of honour. Such is the pointed language which the Manchester Guardian has used to describe the somewhat shady transactions in the distribution of honours that take place with a tiresome periodicity in the annals of the British nation. The severely cynical reflection is the result of the amazing disclosures that were made during a debate in the House of Lords. The debate was raised by Lord Loreburn, who once again called attention to the abuses connected with the bestowal of honours.......... Compared with what is happening in this country, the evil in England is less open to censure and infinitely smaller.......... Instead of serving as an incentive to the public for rendering honourable and voluntary public service, the system of conferring honours has degenerated into a regular department in which titles are bartered not for money but for other considerations. Reactionary officials employ it with no small amount of success to defeat and circumvent popular opinion. Notoriously incompetent officials or private individuals of mediocre talents are all marked out in quick succession for the bestowal of titles of honour. Unfortunately it is not hard to find men in any country who can be induced to sacrifice public interests for the sake of their own aggrandisement.......... We could give numerous instances in which the only claim to recognition in the public eye appears to be the palpable disservice rendered by the patentee to the popular cause.......... The feeling in respect of the evil practice that has grown up with the growth of the Party system was accute even in such an unregenerate assembly as the House of Lords. So much so that it was very rightly felt that if no check was imposed, it would lead to the suffocating and withering of the vaunted public life of England. When that is the case at the very fountain-head of democracy, it is small wonder, that a Government dominated by a bureaucracy, struggling with all its might and main against the resurging tide of nationalism and all that it connotes, should use a weapon, at once so tempting to the vanity of unprincipled and unscrupulous men and so delicate, to deploy some of the vital elements that go to constitute the public life of the country against itself. Having regard to the alarming extent to which the practice has spread, it is not too early to make a bold stand against the system and prevent its further swamping our public life by its poisonous influences. It is for the public to destory this corrupting evil in our public life."

The relations between rulers of Native States and Political officers.

Young India (14), 26th Dec.

12. "We drew attention on a previous occasion to the sinister attempt which is going on in certain quarters to mix up the Native States in the constitutional struggle that is taking place in British India.......... It is not difficult, of course, to perceive the game they are up to, though they have tried to cloak their purpose with pious intentions of showing adequate recognition of the magnificent loyalty and devotion of the Ruling Princes and Chiefs and their subjects to the paramount power. Nothing can be more foolish than for these people to imagine that either the Native Princes or the people of India would be deceived by so alluring a thought as that the already confused problem of reform in British India should be made still more confused by the needless dragging in of Native States into a consideration of domestic Indian Political problems.......... Few people in British India are able to realise the humiliations, restrictions and indignities which those unfortunate rulers have daily to undergo at the hands of the Political officers. It is a misnomer to call the system which is responsible for the infliction of 'dangerous officials' on them, as the 'Political' Department. The department and its servants are anything but politic in their dealings. On the contrary, the system which had its origin in 'a policy of mistrust', at a time when the state of India under the British was practically unsettled, has gradually degenerated into a department of 'espionage' .... It has helped to kill all initiative and enterprise in the rulers and tended to act as a drag on their progressive tendencies, always looking with suspicion and mistrust on their beneficient policies and intentions, discouraging all generous impulses and noble desires. Even the biggest or the most influential of the States are not free from the 'haughty, impolitic, impertinent, ironical' providences of the junior subaltern or the 'middle-aged, middle-class colonel' or lieutenant-colonel......... If the critics of the Congress-League scheme are sincere in their professions for upholding the status and dignity of the Native Princes and Chiefs and showing an adequate recognition of their magnificent rally to the Empire in this titanic struggle they cannot do better than exert themselves for obtaining for the Princes and and Chiefs a welcome release from the tiresome and oftentimes tyrannical enslavement to the Political Department. If any change for the betterment of the rulers is to be successful, it is very essential that this antiquated system of 'espionage' should be swept away. And until that is done, all talk of the rulers as being 'our allies' must seem to sober minds as a futile form of political hypocrisy."

Comments on the prohibition of two Punjábi Muhammadan Barristers from landing at Zanzibar.

Kesari (106), 25th Dec.

13. Here in India a discussion is proceeding about the form and measure of swarájya to be given to us and India has already been given a place by the side of the self-governing Dominions in the Imperial Conference. But still the stamp of 'undesirability' has not been removed from the brow of Indians. Two Barristers from the Punjáb, Messrs. Ghulam Rasool and Mirza Badruddin, went to Zanzibar, to practice there. But the British authorities held them to be 'undesirable aliens' and did not allow them to land. Their passports are all in order; is it not surprising therefore that they were not allowed to land at Zanzibar? Is it not a wonder that the situation that prevailed when patriot Gandhi went to South Africa in 1896 should not have changed after the lapse of 21 years and after the great war? We shall know how far the angle of vision has really changed after we learn the result of the telegrams sent to the Viceroy and the Secretary of State by the Punjáb Moslem League and the Punjáb Bar Association in the matter.

Comments on His Excellency the Viceroy's speech at the Madras Foodstuffs Exhibition.

Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 24th Dec.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 24th and 25th Dec., Eng. cols.; Bombay Samáchár (60), 26th Dec.

14. Commenting upon the speech of His Excellency the Viceroy at Madras at the opening ceremony of the Madras Food Exhibition the Jám-e-Jamshed observes:—Though Lord Chelmsford characterized as an unfortunate blunder the line of policy taken by the British Government in checking the attempt made by the Madras Government some years ago to foster indigenous industries, it deserved to be condemned in more severe terms than the phraseology used, from the national point of view. Had the attempt received the required support from that Government, the country would have prospered and Indians and Indian factories availing themselves of the ready opportunity offered by the war to expand their trade, could not only have manufactured articles required for domestic consumption but contributed a considerable share in the supply of war materials and brought in foreign wealth, apart from the fact that it would have made Great Britain independent of foreign countries for its supplies of Stores. We, however, receive with satisfaction the pronouncement that the British and Imperial Governments have revised their opinion on most subjects as others have done and that accordingly the former Government have recognized their duty of fostering Indian industries to the best of their ability. Though the recognition has been late, we appreciate it and the authorities, we hope, will act up to it. [The Praja Mitra and Pársi takes the statement in His Excellency's speech regarding the old laissez faire policy as demonstrating his solicitude for the development of Indian industries and emphasising the importance of the utterance regards it as valuable in regard to the economic progress of India, and says that the nation would ever be grateful for the decision. It agrees with His Hxcellency that agriculture is the greatest industry of India and will occupy a front rank in future too. It opines that in its development lies not only the interest of India but that of the Empire as well. In a subseqent issue the Praja Mitra makes similar remarks in its English columns. The Bombay Samáchár also expresses similar views and welcomes His Excellency's announcement as gratifying to the Indian public.]

Gujaráti (17), 30th Dec., Eng. cols.; Indian Social Reformer (3), 30th Dec.

15. "Though it is no use deploring what has happened in the past, we are not sure that there will not be a relapse after the cessation of the war and that it will be possible for Government to maintain a strictly impartial attitude as between the interests of Indian and British industries after the heavy strain imposed by the exigencies of war has ceased. We therefore wish to raise a note of warning in time. At the same time it is very gratifying to find that His Excellency the Viceroy, who declared himself in favour of the industrial development of the country in one of his speeches immediately after his appointment as Viceroy, has still kept up his enthusiasm and attaches very great importance to the economic regeneration of India.......... 'Many of us', said His Excellency, 'have during these last three terrible years revised our opinions on most subjects, and in this matter of industrial enterprise I doubt if there are any now who would not say that it is the bounden duty of the State to foster industrial enterprise to the utmost of its ability. Personally, I put the matter of industrial development in the forefront of my policy.' This is a most gratifying declaration and we congratulate His Excellency on the wisdom, courage and candour he has displayed in thus avowing his views." [The Indian Social Reformer writes :—"A review of the administrative measures adopted by the Government of India brings out the fact that, after a good deal of delay, caused by ridicule and opposition, the Indian view has almost uniformly prevailed in many matters. The latest example is the declaration of His Excellency the Viceroy, in the course of his speech in declaring open the great Exibition of Indian-made articles in Madras, that the policy of laissez faire in industrial matters is dead. This is the second institution, if we may so call it, connected with the Indian administration whose death it has been Lord Chelmsford's lot to announce, the first being the Indian Volunteer system. We hope it will not be the last. Indian opinion has never reconciled itself to the Manchester doctrine of unrestricted competition as the best policy to adopt with reference to the industries of a country and, though we are not without anxiety as to the policy which will take the place of the old laissez faire, we are glad that there will henceforth be one economic dogma the less for Indian industrialists to contend with."]

The present situation in the War.
Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 27th Dec.; Eng. cols.

16. "Italy has made a notable rally, and although there is still cause for considerable anxiety, the grave danger of the plains of Italy being overrun by German and Austrain hordes has been stayed for the present. But the complete cessation of fighting on the eastern front intensifies the problem that the Allies will have to solve. Time will soon show the number of German divisions which, released from the eastern front, will be sent to the western and Italian fronts. Meanwhile, the armistice has not only put a stop to the fighting in the east, but has opened commercial relations which will be utilised to the utmost by the Germans. Thus there will be a fresh source of supplies which will indefinitely put off the economic exhaustion of Germany. The task before the Allies is far more serious than it was at the commencement of the war, for they have not only to fight their own battle and the battle of the small States, but also the battle of the largest though at present the weakest State in Europe. If Germany retains permanent possession of the territory in Europe which she has acquired by force, the object of the Allies will be never achieved. The complete defeat of the Central Powers can alone bring about the restoration of European territory seized by Germany. Is such a defeat anywhere yet in sight?"

Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 28th Dec.

17. Referring to the orders recently issued, one after another, by the Russian authorities for disbanding their troops, prohibiting further manufacture of munitions and permitting the formation, under their own officers, of divisions from the enemy troops that had once surrendered, and that too just near the Russian capital, the Praja Mitra and Pársi is inclined to consider these Russian authorities to be a set of veritable madmen. It believes that by their present actions they have entirely placed themselves at the tender mercies of the enemy and doubts if they would ever be able to extricate themselves from his clutches. Practically speaking, observes the paper, Russia, which was once a mighty empire, has sunk to the level of a dependent or tributary state of the enemy.'

Comments on Mrs. Besant's presidential address at the Calcutta National Congress.
Sanj Vartamán (32), 26th Dec.; Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 27th Dec.; Hindusthán (21), 26th Dec.; Jám-e-Jamshed (24), 27th Dec.; Bombay Samáchár (60), 28th Dec.

18. Commenting upon the presidential address delivered by Mrs. Annie Besant at the recent session of the Indian National Congress, the Sanj Vartamán characterises it as a very spirited and highly intellectual pronouncement. It remarks that Mrs. Besant has, in the course of her speech, declared in clear terms and in an independent manner the desires of the Indian people on the subject of Swarájya. The paper observes :—Mrs. Besant has, in the course of her address, taken a review of the points in which the Indian administration has failed to give satisfaction to the people and has fully demonstrated that the grave defects which have come to be associated with the present administration will not be removed until a system of government which is responsible to the people is established. [While commending Mrs. Besant's address the Praja Mitra and Pársi fears that the tone of her speech will not be palatable to the official class. It remarks that she has justified her selection as President of the recent session of the Congress by the graphic manner in which she has described the condition of India and has expounded the needs and aspirations of the Indian people. While regarding some of her demands as rather hasty, the paper expresses its belief that in the carrying into effect of some of the reforms suggested by her lies the interest not only of India but of the whole British Empire. The Hindusthán regards Mrs. Besant's speech as very valuable and remarks that it has adequately proved not only the justice and propriety of India's demand for Swarájya but also that the people of India have attained fitness for its enjoyment. While characterising Mrs. Besant's speech as a very learned pronouncement, the Jám-e-Jamshed does not believe that all the views she has expressed in her speech will be unreservedly endorsed by the Moderate party. It remarks that the Presidential address is something like an echo of the views of the Nationalists and that it reflects the programme of the Tilakite school. The paper observes that the picture delineated by Mrs. Besant of India's present awakening in various directions, though pleasant to look at, is rather overdrawn. The Bombay Samáchár refers to a remark made by Mrs. Besant during her address to the effect that if Government failed to give satisfaction to India on the present occasion by the introduction of suitable administrative reforms they should be prepared for a more vigorous agitation from the people in that direction, and regrets that such a statement should have been made by the President of an influential body like the Indian National Congress. It wishes that the method suggested by Mrs. Besant for more effectively attacking the problem of utilising the man-power of India for the purposes of the war might receive sympathetic attention from Government.]

Indian Social Reformer (3), 30th Dec.

*19. "The address which Mrs. Besant delivered from the presidential chair of the thirty-second Indian National Congress was well worthy of the occasion. It is a comprehensive statement of the case for Indian constitutional reform, transfused by a passionate love of liberty and hatred of wrong. There is of course nothing new in the address. All the main points of its argument have been repeated many times before by other publicists and by Mrs. Besant herself. That the present administrative system has fallen very much behind the requirements of the time, is evident to any one who approaches the question with an unbiassed mind. The appalling illiteracy of the population, after a century of British rule, is of itself a most damaging proof of the lack of vision in that system. Even the claim to have ensured peace and order should be taken with some qualification in the face of such an occurrence as the disgraceful and brutal riots in Arrah during the last Mohurrum. Lord Carmichael truly said the other day that discontent is growing in India among people of almost every class. The rate of mortality in the country continues to be high. The Government policy in regard to liquor has utterly failed of its avowed object, the decrease of consumption. Social legislation has been permanently relegated to the back ground, while repressive measures have been adopted in quick succession during recent years.......... Reform, it is as true as it is trite to say, should begin at the bottom. But whatever might have been the case in ancient India, to-day it is not the village community but the Secretary of State with the Governments in India who is the top and also the bottom of the administration. We must begin, therefore, by reforming him and them: the rest will follow as a matter of course. The idea of artificially reproducing the ancient vallage as the unit of future self-government, at a time when railways, motor cars, posts and telegraphs cry out against the very idea of isolation, is chimerical. We may as well think of calling back the dead to life."

Sandesh (116), 27th Dec.; Dnyán Prakásh (37), 27th Dec.; Indu Prakásh (40), 28th Dec.

20. Mrs. Besant's speech as President of the Indian National Congress is remarkably graceful. It gives inspiration to the young and food for serious thought to the old. It has the power of compelling statisticians to revise their theories, and it reflects the noble and lofty sentiments of the Indians. It alludes with pride to India's share in the war and vividly depicts the evil consequences resulting from foreign control over the internal administration of the country. Mrs. Besant has made it plain that she is not prepared to accept anything short of the scheme of swardjya outlined by the Congress and the Moslem League. She has made it equally plain that the nation will carry on the agitation with redoubled vigour until the demands of the Congress are fully satisfied. Her speech is indeed an unfailing weapon refuting the arguments of our adversaries. [The Dnydn Prakdsh also writes in praise of the speech as a forceful utterance and remarks:—We trust our leaders will now act up to Mrs. Besant's suggestion to send a deputation to England. It is quite necessary that some of our leaders should carry on the swardjya movement in England immediately after Mr. Montagu's return there. The Indu Prakdsh writes in a similar strain.]

Jdgaruk (102), 28th Dec.

21. Mrs. Besant's message to her blind followers would lead one to suppose that the British regime has become far more oppressive than the Peshwas' rule when the swords of the Pindaris harried the innocent rayats. It is most reprehensible that a woman who has absolutely no connection with India and who but eight years back did not hesitate to decry the Indian leaders should indulge in such misleading statements. Mrs. Besant avers that the different classes are not so sharply divided in India as they are in England where a rich man living in his mansion keeps severely aloof from an humble individual occupying a cottage. Any one who has the least regard for truth will admit that this assertion is positively mischievous. This woman is bent upon upholding the cause of the Brahmins and is pledged, therefore, to support the caste system which is an article of faith with them. She is not so dull as not to understand that the caste distinctions dehumanise millions of people of the backward classes; but what does she care for these things when her sole object is to gain cheap notoriety?

The duty of the National Congress in connection with the Reform question.

Kesari (106), 25th Dec.

22. The Kesari says that the question of swardjya has become a settled fact from the popular point of view. It holds that all Indians except a handful of Anglo-Indians and a few communities misled and instigated by them have supported the Congress-League Scheme. It further adds:—The responsibility of settling the future lines of work lies with the Congress and the nation is watching how it will be met. From the Government point of view also the grant of swardjya has become a settled fact by the declaration of 20th August 1917. However angry bureaucrats in England like Lord Sydenham, greedy of power, may get, whatever selfish Shylocks like Sir Hugh Bray may cry, however much the self-constituted leaders of the backward classes who glory in the contemptible title of "Ulsterites'', may struggle, the British ministry cannot treat the August Proclamation as a "scrap of paper". It is impossible as well as beyond the powers of the British ministers to throw away what has been deemed desirable for the convenience of the Indian administration and the security of the British Empire because of the threats of a handful of roughs. The Congress can now concentrate its attention only on the resolution of swardjya instead of passing various resolutions on many topics. When the Congress met at Lucknow, the intentions of Government could not in any way be foreseen and the representatives of the Congress asked for a small instalment of the rights of swardjya. Government say that they will grant responsible Government step by step. We understand that the Subjects Committee of the Calcutta Congress has decided to ask that the Provincial Executive Councils should be responsible to the Provincial Legislative Councils and that things should continue as they are in the Imperial Legislative Council. We know a hue and cry will be raised against this proposal by Anglo-Indians and their creatures. But we have nothing to do with them. We have only to take into consideration the views of Parliament and the British electors. Mr. Baptista writes to us that the idea of swardjya by compartments is considered to be strange by the British people. We hope, however, that the Subjects Committee will consider all the pros and cons.

Otherwise it will be best to stick to our old scheme. But what arrangements are we giving to make to see that Mr. Montagu will take up the Bill of swarájya after he goes to England? What steps should we take to protect the scheme from the bites of black serpents lying in wait like Lord Sydenham? Is it not the chief and prime duty of the Congress to solve these questions satisfactorily? The real fight for swarájya will take place in England and our enemies in the disguise of friends have made their complete arrangements there by establishing the Indo-British Association. Should we not make arrangements for a campaign in England to meet their contrivance successfully? Agitation in India should not cease till we get our rights according to the Congress-League Scheme and we should maintain a deputation in England permanently till the Bill is finally passed.

Comments on the reasons given by His Excellency the Governor of Bengal for not attending the National Congress.
Praja Mitra and Pársi (29), 29th Dec.

23. The Praja Mitra and Pársi cannot accept as satisfactory the reasons given by His Excellency the Viceroy and the Secretary of State for India as well as by Lord Ronaldshay, Governor of Bengal, for their not being able to attend the recent session of the Indian National Congress. It remarks that by a slight change in their programme the two first-named authorities could easily have obviated their difficulty. The paper traces the real clue to their denial in the reason assigned by the Governor of Bengal, who stated that his attendance at the Congress session might lead other parties to believe that Government were partially inclined to one side. It regards such a reason as untenable and tries to show that it is inconsistent by a reference to the presence of the Viceroy and the Secretary of State at the Bengal Club and the Byculla Club, which are both political bodies representing the views only of the Anglo-Indians. The paper has no objection to their knowing at first hand the views of the latter, but it remarks that by their refraining to attend the Congress session or taking part in any entertainment given by the Indians they have rather created an invidious distinction. It adds that their present action does not save their attitude from appearing one-sided to the outside world.

Comments on the demand of security from the Bombay Chronicle.
Kesari (106), 25th Dec.

24. If anybody had an idea that the repressive sports of bureaucracy would be suspended at least while Mr. Montagu was present in India, he must have been soon disillusioned. Repression seems to be particularly on the increase during the current week. The bureaucracy is not satisfied with discourteously prohibiting the lecture of Mr. Horniman at the Agricultural College. The declaration of the Chronicle had to be changed nearly five times, since it began its publication. Will the Magistrate tell us how he was inspired to take security from Mr. Horniman, though it was never before demanded from the Chronicle? The law however comes to the rescue of the Magistrate. Reasons are not to be given for demanding security but for not taking it. When a declaration is however made and security is not asked for, the law means that the Magistrate becomes functus officio and Government only can demand it. We do not wish to comment further on the case as it is sub judice. But it only shows in how many ways a person has to bear persecution once the bureaucracy turns its evil eye on him.

Comments on the forfeiture of the security of the New Era newspaper.
Kesari (106), 25th Dec.

25. The Press Act claimed suddenly the New Era of Lucknow as a victim this week. The paper was the fruit of the awakening of Lucknow last year when the Congress-League met there. Its independence and specially its advocacy of the cause of the Ali Brothers could not be tolerated and its security of Rs. 2,000 was at once forfeited. The Editor has decided to stop its publication and Mr. Mahomed is going to start another paper. However cruelly the Press Act be enforced, the days are gone when opinions would be changed or concealed under its fear. Nowadays a paper is continued though it may be repeatedly mulcted and persecuted by the bureaucracy and if it is not possible to continue it, a new journal is started. The pastime of the bureaucracy of claiming papers as its victims will be stopped when two papers are started in place of one discontinued. It is doubtful, however, whether the present uncontrolled powers of the bureaucracy will continue long unchecked. Clear signs are visible now that the irresponsible power of the bureaucracy has not a long life before it.

Comments on the appointment of Mr. Chitre as Acting Chief Judge of the Small Causes Court, Bombay.

Kaiser-i-Hind (25), 23rd Dec.

26. Commenting upon the appointment of Mr. Chitre as Acting Chief Judge of the Small Causes Court the Kaiser-i-Hind remarks:—The means devised in the Secretariat, which should be called nothing less than manoeuvres to re-appoint Mr. Chitre, require to be protested against in most severe terms. We do not wish to enter into details as to the competency of Mr. Chitre, but we cannot help mentioning for the sake of bare justice that he does not possess long and valuable experience essential for the determination of intricate commercial questions which the Second Judge, Mr. Jhaveri, has. The Government may, if they see the necessity, appoint Mr. Chitre as an additional sixth Judge, but to re-appoint him, in spite of his having enjoyed the favour of the authorities for an year, as Acting Chief Judge and to overlook the claims of Mr. Jhaveri, is tantament to violation of the law recently amended and is disgraceful not only to a learned Judge entitled to the post but also to the dignity and traditions of the Small Causes Court. If the authorities will thus adopt the practice of extending favours to outsiders, passing over the claims of rightful claimants, how would they maintain their prestige as an honest and impartial administration?

Protest against the proposed reintroduction of the system of auctioning liquor-shop licenses.

Kesari (106), 25th Dec.

27. Commenting on the Press Note on the disposal of the right of vend of country liquor, the Kesari says that the fixed-fee system was never popular because it created a new race of watandars though watandars of other sorts had been almost destroyed. It does not also support the auction-system now proposed to be introduced. It says that it would have been better if Government had openly stated that they wanted to introduce the auction-system because of the increased revenue it might yield. It further remarks:—The public at large should have been consulted before the system once condemned was introduced. But what need do the autocratic officials feel for doing so? The scheme of extracting more money from the people by addicting them to drink is always very reprehensible. Whatever attempts may be made to give it an attractive form, people cannot but turn away from it in disgust. Government say that any additional receipts that may be realised will be spent on education and sanitation. But we do not think even a mad man will consent to such increased expenditure of money derived from making people drink more. This is but an empty assurance because Government have reserved their right of increasing the still-head duty and the proceeds therefrom will not be devoted to education or sanitation. The maximum selling-price could have been abolished without introducing the auction-system. The short measures of the shopkeepers will never become full, so long as they are the favourites of Government. We are not prepared to believe that Government have no power to punish severely deceitful shopkeepers and to prevent bribery. There would have been no difficulty in fixing fees in the absence of maximum selling-price. Government know what extra expenses the shopokeeper will have to bear per gallon and at what price he can afford to sell. We have to infer that Government entertain a desire to re-introduce the auction-system and fill their coffers. Since the war began Russia, France and America have been freed from the vice of drinking. Is it not a wonder that the auction-system which will encourage drinking is again introduced in unfortunate India? We have to keep quiet because we are helpless as against autocratic power.

Gujarát Mitra (18), 23rd Dec.

28. Commenting on the Press Note regarding the proposed sale of liquor shops by auction, the Gujarát Mitra remarks that it is incomprehensible how the Government will achieve the end in view by reviving the old practice of putting licenses to auction which has proved unsatisfactory in its working. It says that the auction sale will bring competition into operation in which very high bids will be made, as has been seen in Surat, the natural consequence whereof would be that licensees will try to make up the high sums paid by them by resorting to dishonest practices. The paper observes that relieving the Excise Inspecting staff of their present duty of preventing the licensees from giving short measure or charging rates higher than the scheduled ones will entail hardship on the consumers. It observes that Government will not succeed in remedying the evil of corruption which they intend to do, as the licensees, it asserts, will not remain free from seeking the favour of Excise officers because they understand very well that the latter can harass them one way or the other, if they wish to do, in view of the powers which still rest with those officers in connection with the prevention of adulteration of liquor.

Protest against the orders of the Commissioner, S. D., directing boundary stones of certain lands to be replaced by wooden posts.

Kánara Vritt (35), 19th Dec.

29. The Kánara Vritt complains of the circular issued by the Commissioner of the Southern Division requiring that the boundary stones of Gajani lands should be replaced by wooden posts 6 feet high and 8 inches in diameter. It further remarks:—Gajani lands are always washed by sea water and boundary stones last long. Government themselves erected wooden posts round Narnapur Gajani lands near Sanikatta (Kárwár) about 15 years ago and not one of them can be seen now. The wooden material used for sluice gates at Sanikatta is rotten and the life of such posts cannot be longer than three years. A Gajani land requires from 500 to 1,000 posts and every post costs Rs. 8. The present stones have remained intact since the survey settlement. Government should not persist in their attitude but should reconsider the matter.

Alleged grievance of the Telegraph signallers at the Konkan ports.

Satyashodhak (117), 23rd Dec.

30. The Telegraph signallers at places on the sea-coast such as Murud, Harnai, Ratnágiri, &c., are required to exercise extra vigilance on account of the war and have also to pass their nights in the telegraph offices. They are not, however, paid any additional remuneration for this trouble. As there is no immediate prospect of their getting any relief in their work, we trust the Postal authorities will look into their grievance and sanction an axtra allowance for them.

M. K. SHAIKH,
Oriental Translator to Government.

Office of the Oriental Translator to Government,
P. W. Secretariat, Bombay, 4th January 1918.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

H 414—4 CON